EVIDENCE

OTTAWA, Wednesday, September 30, 1998

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred Bill C-37, to amend the Judges Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, met this day at 3:37 p.m. to give consideration to the bill.

Senator Lorna Milne (Chairman) in the Chair.

[English]

The Chairman: We have before us Mr. David Scott, the author of the 1995 Commission on Judges' Salaries and Benefits.

We await your comments with some interest, Mr. Scott.

Mr. David Scott, Chair, 1995 Commission on Judges' Salaries and Benefits: I wish to reaffirm that I am one of the authors of this report. The other two authors are Michel Vennat, a distinguished lawyer with Stikeman Elliot in Montreal, and Barbara Rae, a very distinguished businesswoman from Vancouver. Ms Rae was an enormous resource for us, because she brought her background in personnel management to the job without the baggage of a connection to the judiciary. Since I have spent all of my life in the courts, I have a certain amount of baggage about the judiciary.

[Translation]

Senator Beaudoin: Your report is very interesting. I have a question about page 28 of your report, where you recommend that the Judges Act provide for the payment of a lifetime annuity to a common law spouse under legally applicable circumstances. I don't have any trouble with the whole question of paying out pensions, because that comes under section 100 of the Constitution. Everything is fine from that point of view.

When it comes to common law spouses, what do you mean by, "we recommend that the Judges Act allow for payments to a common law spouse, under legally applicable circumstances."

[English]

Does this refer to provincial law or to federal law? What do you mean by that?

Mr. Scott: We mean legal situations in which a person qualifies as a common-law spouse, which assumes a certain period of cohabitation. Our intent was not to define any circumstances in particular, but rather to take common-law spouses who had established rights in accordance with provincial law in all of the provinces, and to carry that forward for the benefit of the common-law spouses of judges.

Senator Beaudoin: Some of my colleagues will return to the issue of a common-law spouse.

Senator Murray: It is assumed that both parties to the common-law union are legally free to marry; that is to say, not married to someone else.

TÉMOIGNAGES

OTTAWA, le mercredi 30 septembre 1998

Le comité sénatorial permanent des affaires juridiques et constitutionnelles, auquel a été renvoyé le projet de loi C-37, modifiant la Loi sur les juges et d'autres lois en conséquence, se réunit aujourd'hui à 15 h 37 pour l'étude du projet de loi.

Le sénateur Lorna Milne (présidente) occupe le fauteuil.

[Traduction]

La présidente: Notre témoin est M. David Scott, président de la commission de 1995 sur le traitement et les avantages des juges.

Nous sommes impatients d'entendre vos remarques, monsieur Scott.

M. David Scott, président, Commission de 1995 sur le traitement et les avantages des juges: Je tiens à réaffirmer que je suis l'un des auteurs de ce rapport. Les deux autres auteurs sont Michel Vennat, éminent avocat chez Stikeman Elliot à Montréal, et Barbara Rae, très réputée femme d'affaires de Vancouver. La contribution de Mme Rae nous a été précieuse, car elle nous a fait profiter de son expérience en matière de gestion du personnel sans le moindre rapport avec la magistrature. Étant donné que, personnellement, j'ai passé toute ma vie dans les tribunaux, il m'est difficile d'être complètement détaché de ce monde.

[Français]

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Votre rapport est très intéressant. Ma question concerne la page 28 de votre rapport où vous recommandez que la Loi sur les juges prévoit le versement au conjoint de fait, dans les circonstances légalement applicables, d'une rente viagère de conjoint survivant. Je n'ai pas de difficulté avec la question du paiement des pensions parce que cela tombe sous l'article 100 de la Constitution. Tout est parfait sur ce plan.

Pour les conjoints de fait, que voulez-vous dire par la phrase: «nous recommandons que la Loi sur les juges prévoit le versement au conjoint de fait, dans les circonstances légalement applicables.»

[Traduction]

S'agit-il de la législation provinciale ou fédérale? Qu'entendez-vous par là?

M. Scott: Il s'agit de situations juridiques où une personne est considérée comme un conjoint de fait, ce qui suppose une certaine période de cohabitation. Nous n'avions pas l'intention de définir certains cas précis, mais plutôt d'appliquer aux conjoints de fait des juges les règles concernant les conjoints de fait ayant établi des droits conformément aux lois provinciales dans toutes les provinces.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Certains de mes collègues reviendront à la question du conjoint de fait.

Le sénateur Murray: On parle du principe que les deux conjoints d'une union libre sont légalement libres de se marier; autrement dit, ils ne sont pas mariés à une autre personne.

Mr. Scott: Let me begin by saying that I am not a family law lawyer. However, I do not think that the definition of a common-law spouse assumes freedom to marry. If I understand your question, you are saying that if the person is already married, he or she is incapable of being a common-law spouse.

Senator Murray: Well, he or she is certainly incapable or legally marrying someone else.

Mr. Scott: I could be quite wrong, but I do not think that precludes someone from being a common-law spouse. In my understanding such a person can qualify as a common-law spouse.

Senator Beaudoin: Let us return to the first question on the commission. I do not have any problem with the commission as such. Whether we like it or not, the fact is that the Supreme Court has already said that, in order to protect judicial independence, we need an organization such as the commission. I know that Mr. Justice La Forest is dissenting on this, but the majority of the court is of the opinion that to have judicial independence we need a commission such as this one.

What is your opinion on this? I understand that the report is not binding on the legislative and the executive branches, but that if Parliament or the government disagrees, they must justify themselves, and even in court if necessary.

Did you study that problem for your report?

Mr. Scott: Senator, as a result of reading some of the debates which were held here, the only thing that alarmed me somewhat was the suggestion from some witnesses that the triennial commission system works fine and that we should stick with it.

My colleagues and I were in complete agreement that the triennial commission system not only did not work well, but that it did not work at all. It might have looked very appealing, but nothing ever happened. We felt very strongly that it became, as we said in our report, a mechanism that allowed the government of the day to do nothing about the judges, because doing something about the judges is a very unpopular thing.

The discussion that we are now having is most unique. Previously, no one wanted to do anything for the judges because people believe that judges were well looked after. That is, they have tenure and pensions and everything else, so there is no reason no bother with them. Politically, it is very unappetizing to be preoccupied with judges.

When we were appointed and began our work, we read what had happened before. Every previous commission had said that the system did not work. The government not take up any of the meaningful ideas for reform in terms of issues such as pay and allowances, nor did it take up any of the suggestions for reforming the triennial commission system. The thrust of our report is that this must be fixed.

M. Scott: Permettez-moi de dire d'entrée de jeu que je ne suis pas avocat spécialisé en droit de la famille. Toutefois, je ne pense pas que la définition d'un conjoint de fait suppose la liberté de se marier. Si je comprends bien votre question, vous dites que si la personne est déjà mariée, il lui est impossible d'être un conjoint de fait.

Le sénateur Murray: Il ou elle n'est absolument pas en mesure de se marier légalement avec quelqu'un d'autre.

M. Scott: Je me trompe peut-être, mais je ne pense pas que cela empêche qui que ce soit d'être un conjoint de fait. D'après mon interprétation, cette personne peut tout à fait être considérée comme un conjoint de fait.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Revenons-en à la première question sur la commission. Je n'ai rien à redire à l'existence de celle-ci. Que nous le voulions ou non, il n'en demeure pas moins que la Cour suprême a déjà statué que pour protéger l'indépendance de la magistrature, il nous faut une institution comme la commission. Je sais que le juge La Forest a exprimé une opinion divergente sur ce point, mais la majorité des juges de la cour sont d'avis que cette commission est nécessaire pour garantir l'indépendance judiciaire.

Qu'en pensez-vous? Sauf erreur, le rapport n'est pas obligatoire pour les appareils législatif et exécutif, mais si le Parlement ou le gouvernement ne sont pas d'accord, ils doivent fournir une justification, au besoin devant un tribunal.

Avez-vous étudié le problème pour votre rapport?

M. Scott: Sénateur, après avoir lu la transcription de certaines de vos délibérations, la seule chose qui m'ait quelque peu inquiété, ça a été d'entendre certains témoins déclarer que le système de la commission triennale est satisfaisant et qu'il ne faut rien y changer.

Mes collègues et moi étions parfaitement d'accord pour dire que le système de la commission triennale est non seulement imparfait, mais qu'il est carrément inutile. Cela paraît peut-être très attrayant à première vue, mais rien ne s'est jamais passé. Nous étions fermement convaincus que, comme nous l'affirmons dans notre rapport, c'est devenu un simple mécanisme qui permet au gouvernement de l'heure de ne rien faire au sujet des juges, car prendre des mesures à l'égard des juges est une initiative très peu populaire.

Le débat actuel est presque unique en son genre. Auparavant, personne ne voulait rien faire pour les juges croyait qu'ils étaient très bien lotis. Étant donné qu'ils ont un emploi garanti, droit à pension, et cetera, il n'y a aucune raison de s'occuper d'eux. Sur le plan politique, ce n'est pas très bien vu de se préoccuper des juges.

Lorsque notre commission a été nommée et que nous avons débuté nos travaux, nous avons lu ce qui s'était produit auparavant. Toutes les commissions précédentes avaient déclaré que le système ne fonctionnait pas. Le gouvernement n'a donné suite à aucune des idées intéressantes de réforme dans les domaines comme la rémunération et les indemnités, pas plus qu'il n'a retenu les propositions de remaniement du système de Luckily, the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the P.E.I. case came along at the same time. We certainly were not anticipating that, nor would we have developed any such notion, although I would defend it. We felt that the government should be forced to react to the views of the triennial commission. Further, we felt that it should be forced to table a bill; that the government should be forced to do something in order to legitimize the process of inviting citizens to take part in this lengthy study and then allowing it to drift off before a committee and disappear.

The most important thing to me is for this committee and anyone charged with responsibility to recognize that the triennial commission system does not work.

As I understand it, the bill does not provide for what the commission suggested, which was a requirement to table the bill — and I understand that that may be an unrealistic expectation — but that the government will have to respond in some way. Therefore we now have this overlay from the court, and the whole process will be subject to judicial review and the test will be rationality.

I confess that I read the very impressive statements before you from the law professors. I am not nearly as alarmed about it as they are. Constitutional substance aside, I believe that a test of rationality for a commission report such as this one will be a very easy threshold for the government of the day to meet. If it cannot meet rationality, then, constitutional imperatives aside, what is wrong with the notion that the court advanced?

As a member of this commission, I believe that something must be done to fix this problem. The bill goes a certain way to fixing it. The Supreme Court overlay is another question.

Senator Beaudoin: I understand your point of view, and I have great respect for it. The question is, what happens if the government does not like it? A strong majority of the court said that the executive and the legislative branches must justify their points of view. At the end, if there is what in French is called une impasse, then the court may rule on the basis of rationality.

Mr. Scott: Should the government be told that it has to give reasons? The judges do not like to be told that they have to give reasons, so for the judges to tell Parliament that they have to give reasons may be a bit offensive.

The bottom line is that it is a rationality test, and I am not nearly as alarmed about that as others are.

Senator Joyal: We have tried to understand the fundamental changes to the principle of our Constitution stemming from this proposal in Bill C-37. To put the issue simply, section 100 of the Constitution vested the responsibility to ensure appropriate compensation for judges in the Parliament of Canada. The triennial commission did not produce a satisfactory result in a reasonable period of time. It seems to us that, in the judges' commission triennale. L'idée principale de notre rapport c'est qu'il faut changer ce système.

Heureusement, la Cour suprême du Canada a rendu en même temps sa décision dans l'affaire de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard. Ce fut une vraie surprise pour nous, car nous n'avions pas envisagé une telle chose, même si elle me paraît tout à fait justifiable. À notre avis, le gouvernement devrait être obligé de réagir aux opinions exprimées par la commission triennale. En outre, nous avons estimé qu'il devrait être obligé de déposer un projet de loi et de faire quelque chose pour légitimer le processus de consultation des Canadiens dans le cadre de cette étude prolongée, pour que ce projet de loi ne soit pas simplement renvoyé par un comité et qu'il disparaisse de la circulation.

Ce qui importe le plus à mes yeux, c'est que ce comité et tous ceux qui seront responsables du processus, reconnaissent que le système de commission triennale n'est pas satisfaisant.

D'après ce que je sais, le projet de loi ne prévoit pas ce qu'a proposé la commission, à savoir une exigence pour déposer le projet de loi — et je pense que c'est peut-être une attente peu réaliste — mais le gouvernement devra répondre d'une façon ou d'une autre. C'est pourquoi à la suite de la décision du tribunal, tout le processus fera l'objet d'une révision judiciaire et le critère sera la rationalité.

Je dois avouer que j'ai lu les témoignages très impressionnants fournis par des professeurs de droit devant votre comité. Je ne suis pas aussi inquiet qu'eux. Mis à part l'aspect constitutionnel, un critère de rationalité pour un rapport de commission comme celui-ci sera à mon avis un seuil très facile à atteindre pour le gouvernement du jour. S'il est impossible de remplir ce critère, mises à part toutes les exigences constitutionnelles, qu'y a-t-il de mal avec l'idée avancée par le tribunal?

En tant que membre de cette commission, je crois qu'il faut faire quelque chose pour résoudre le problème. Le projet de loi y contribue en partie. La décision de la Cour suprême et ce qu'elle implique sont une autre question.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Je comprends votre point de vue que je respecte vivement. Toutefois, que se passe-t-il si le gouvernement n'est pas d'accord? La grande majorité des juges de la Cour suprême ont déclaré que les appareils exécutif et législatif devraient justifier leur opinion. En fin de compte, si on en arrive à ce qu'on appelle une impasse, la cour pourra trancher en fonction de la rationalité.

M. Scott: Faut-il dire au gouvernement qu'il doit indiquer ses motifs? Les juges n'aiment pas qu'on leur dise qu'ils doivent fournir des motifs, et il est donc un peu choquant que les juges disent au Parlement de le faire.

En un mot, il s'agit d'un critère de rationalité et cela ne m'affole pas autant que d'autres.

Le sénateur Joyal: Nous avons essayé de comprendre les modifications fondamentales au principe de la Constitution découlant de cette proposition dans le projet de loi C-37. En un mot, aux termes de l'article 100 de la Constitution, c'est au Parlement du Canada qu'il incombe de faire en sorte que les juges obtiennent une rémunération adéquate. La commission triennale n'a pas fourni un résultat satisfaisant au cours d'un délai opinions, we ought to go to the other extreme whereby Parliament abandons its responsibility to have the final say in the vote for the appropriation to pay the salaries. In my opinion this is wrong. It is one thing to say that Parliament filibustered, but to amend the system by including a time frame within it so that there is an end result, either in the affirmative or in the negative, is the proper way to manage Parliament's responsibility. I can understand that and I think a reasonable citizen can understand that.

What goes beyond common sense is that the commission has no parameters to decide what constitutes a proper increase. The bill contains no criteria that defines the scope of the commission to decide upon what is a fair increase for whatever reasons they think are just. The other problem is that if the government does not give effect to the recommendations of the House of Commons or the Senate committee, or its own financial policies criteria, then the court might decide that there is litigation and the government must justify its decision in the court. We are both judges and parties in a decision like that. That is where the fine-tuning of the solution that is proposed to us must be investigated.

You have spent a lot of time with learned peoples to study the compensation for judges. Is it the same way in other countries — that is, do the judges have the last word on their pay increase and must the governments in those countries abide by commission reports because they do not have the capacity to say "No"? In Canada, the government civil service and the armed forces, among others, have had their salaries frozen. Judges are like other people; they make an effort. I am not against an increase in salaries at all. In fact, judges are underpaid in my opinion. However, in order not to go to the other extreme, we must protect the principles in the new system that we are putting into place. Can we not find a middle balance compared to what existed before, which did not produce a satisfactory result for the learned justices? Can we go the other way? There might be another way to fine-tune this.

Mr. Scott: The way you divide it out is the way to divide it. The decision of the court that the judges will have the last word on their salaries is one question; the whole question of the government having to meet a rationality test as proposed by the court is another question.

As far as the commission is concerned and the analysis of what is appropriate compensation, this has a historical base. Before 1981, there was no independent assessment of any kind. The triennial commission was established by statute as the basis of getting some independent input for Parliament about what is appropriate. Criteria for that would not be a good idea. How would you establish it? Would there be limits? No. The commission — that is, assuming that it is appropriately selected in terms of make-up — should be able to free-wheel in terms of what they think should happen. They then make a report. Up to that point, we have an appropriate historical basis for doing this.

raisonnable. Il nous semble que, de l'avis des juges, nous devrions en arriver à l'autre extrême, à savoir que le Parlement renonce à sa responsabilité d'avoir le dernier mot en votant les crédits nécessaires au paiement des traitements. C'est mal, à mon avis. C'est une chose de dire que le Parlement a fait de l'obstruction, mais si l'on veut que le Parlement assume comme il se doit sa responsabilité, il faut modifier le système en prévoyant un délai au bout duquel il faut en arriver à un résultat, qu'il soit positif ou négatif. Je peux le comprendre et je pense que tout citoyen raisonnable peut le comprendre également.

Ce qui échappe à l'entendement, c'est que la commission n'ait aucun paramètre pour décider de ce que représente une juste augmentation. Le projet de loi ne renferme aucun critère définissant la marge de manoeuvre dont dispose la commission pour décider de ce qui constitue une augmentation raisonnable, quelles que soient les raisons qu'elle trouve justes. Notre problème, c'est que si le gouvernement ne donne pas suite aux recommandations du comité de la Chambre des communes ou du Sénat, ni même aux critères de ses propres politiques financières, le tribunal pourra décider qu'il y a litige et le gouvernement devra justifier sa décision devant le tribunal. Nous serons donc à la fois juge et partie dans ce genre de cause. C'est pourquoi il faut trouver une façon de perfectionner la solution qui nous est proposée.

Vous avez passé beaucoup de temps aux côtés de personnes érudites à étudier la rémunération des juges. En va-t-il de même dans d'autres pays — c'est-à-dire, les juges ont-ils le dernier mot quant à leur augmentation de traitement et les gouvernements des pays en question doivent-ils respecter les rapports des commissions parce qu'il leur est impossible de dire «non»? Au Canada, la fonction publique et les forces armées, entre autres, se sont vu imposer un gel des salaires. Les juges sont comme les autres: ils font un effort. Je ne m'oppose pas à l'idée d'une augmentation de traitement. En fait, les juges sont même sous-payés à mon avis. Toutefois, pour ne pas en arriver à l'autre extrême, il faut protéger les principes dans le nouveau système que nous mettons en place. Ne peut-on pas trouver un juste milieu par rapport au système précédent, qui n'a pas donné de résultats satisfaisants pour nos érudits juges? Peut-on opter pour l'autre solution? Il y a peut-être une autre façon d'améliorer le système.

M. Scott: La distinction que vous faites est la bonne. La décision du tribunal selon laquelle les juges doivent avoir le dernier mot quant à leur traitement est une question; le fait que le gouvernement doive remplir un critère de rationalité comme le propose le tribunal en est une autre.

Pour ce qui est de la commission et de l'analyse qui constitue une rémunération, il y a des antécédents. Avant 1981, il n'existait aucune évaluation indépendante. La commission triennale a été créée en vertu de la loi en vue de donner au Parlement un avis indépendant sur ce qui constituait une juste rémunération. Se fonder sur des critères ne serait pas une bonne idée. Comment procéder? Faudrait-il fixer des plafonds? Non. La commission — c'est-à-dire, à supposer que les membres qui la composent soient bien choisis — devrait avoir les coudées franches quant aux solutions qu'elle propose. Elle doit ensuite présenter un rapport. Jusque-là, il y a des antécédents à cette façon de procéder.

What happens next? In our brief, we say that instead of nothing happening, something must happen.

Senator Moore: Within a set time-frame?

Mr. Scott: Yes. Otherwise, it is a screen of some design. Something must happen.

I accept the proposition that under the Constitution, Parliament will decide. Parliament should have the last word. We are talking about the mechanism for ensuring that something happens. This bill, which does not go as far as we hoped it would, says that within a fixed period of time government must react with a position statement. The court is saying that they must give reasons and the court will have this judicial review power. Whether or not people find that desirable is an interesting question. The court has spoken, so what happens next?

The task here is to fix on the nature of the commission, its make-up and its jurisdiction. It is important that that not get lost in the minds of some who are outraged about what the judges are doing to the vehicle of this judgment. I am more interested in what happens down the road and having a workable, practical commission that does the job.

Senator Joyal: I totally agree with you, as do some of my colleagues around the table, when you talk about a time-frame and trying to establish some kind of compelling agenda so that we arrive at the end of that process to have it resolved. That is a common understanding.

I have a slight reservation about your statement that you do not want criteria. Even the Supreme Court of Canada said that the commission should have some criteria. The judgment of the majority of the court was that the body must convene if a fixed period of time has elapsed since its last report in order to consider the inadequacy of judges' salaries in light of the cost of living and other relevant factors. Even the Supreme Court of Canada has recognized that there must be some factors.

We cannot abandon to a commission the overall open-ended door to say, "Let us discuss whether or not we must increase judges' salaries." Perhaps judges in Australia had an increase last year. Our judges may say, "We work as hard as them, so we should have the same increase." There must be some criteria. Treasury Board negotiates with the union and they have criteria. The Government of Quebec will open negotiations with teachers, with unions, and with all the other services. They have some criteria such as equity, pay, and a lot of other principles that they want to implement.

It does not hurt my sense of democracy or fairness with judges if the commission is bound to follow specific criteria rather than offering us a general report that judges are nice people who are learned and forego part of their freedom to live in society because they are seen as symbols of rectitude, and so on. We all know that.

Que se passe-t-il ensuite? Dans notre mémoire, nous disons que quelque chose doit se produire, et qu'il ne faut pas en rester là.

Le sénateur Moore: Dans un certain délai?

M. Scott: Oui. Autrement, ce n'est que de la théorie. Il faut que quelque chose se produise.

J'accepte le postulat selon lequel aux termes de la Constitution, c'est au Parlement qu'il revient de décider. Le Parlement devrait avoir le dernier mot. Nous parlons du mécanisme qui garantit que quelque chose se passe. Le projet de loi, qui ne va pas aussi loin que nous l'espérions, stipule que dans un délai fixe, le gouvernement doit réagir par un énoncé de principe. Le tribunal affirme que le gouvernement doit justifier sa décision et que le tribunal aura ce pouvoir de révision judiciaire. Il serait intéressant de savoir si les gens estiment que c'est souhaitable. Le tribunal s'est prononcé, et que va-t-il se passer maintenant?

Il s'agit maintenant de prendre une décision quant à la nature de la commission, à sa composition et à son champ de compétence. Il importe que ceux qui sont choqués par l'attitude des juges ne perdent pas cela de vue. Ce qui m'intéresse davantage, c'est ce qui se passera ensuite et la garantie que nous aurons une commission pratique et en mesure de faire son travail.

Le sénateur Joyal: Je suis tout à fait d'accord avec vous, tout comme certains de mes collègues autour de la table, quand vous parlez de délai et de l'adoption d'une sorte d'échéancier obligatoire, de sorte qu'une solution soit atteinte lorsque le délai est écoulé. Tout le monde est d'accord.

J'ai une petite réserve quant à votre déclaration selon laquelle il ne faut pas adopter de critères. Même la Cour suprême du Canada a déclaré que la commission devrait se fixer certains critères. La majorité des juges se sont dits d'avis que l'organisme devait se réunir si un certain délai s'était écoulé depuis son dernier rapport afin d'étudier l'insuffisance du traitement des juges en tenant compte du coût de la vie et d'autres facteurs pertinents. Même la Cour suprême du Canada a admis qu'il doit exister certains facteurs.

On ne peut pas laisser ainsi toute liberté à une commission en disant «discutons pour voir s'il faut ou non augmenter le traitement des juges». Les juges de l'Australie ont peut-être eu une augmentation de traitement l'an dernier. Les nôtres diront peut-être: «Nous travaillons aussi fort qu'eux, et nous avons donc droit à la même augmentation.» Il faut qu'il existe des critères. Le Conseil du Trésor négocie avec le syndicat et il y a des critères. Le gouvernement du Québec va entreprendre des négociations avec les enseignants, les syndicats et tous les autres services. Il se fondera sur des critères comme l'équité, la rémunération, et une foule d'autres principes qu'il souhaite mettre en vigueur.

À mon sens, il n'est ni antidémocratique ni injuste envers les juges d'exiger que la commission respecte des critères précis, au lieu de nous présenter un rapport général en disant que les juges sont des gens très bien qui sont érudits et qui renoncent à une partie de leur liberté de vie au sein de la société parce qu'ils sont considérés comme des symboles de droiture, et cetera. Nous le savons tous.

Let us frame the mandate of the commission so that Parliament has a fair perception that those people are not just looking for any kind of increase — especially if we bound them to have a result at the end of the road. It is one thing to have everything on one side and nothing on the other side. I think it is a fair balance of the two. Even the court has recognized that.

Mr. Scott: I am not disagreeing with you. I am not saying that the commission should function arbitrarily. I am not sure how much needs to be said. The court said, “and other relevant criteria.” Will we now statutorily define the criteria? These previous triennial commissions — and let us exclude ours for the moment — followed the same process, namely, analyzing what salaries were in the private sector, what they were in the practising bar, and what they were in the government. They were then compared, as were the cost-of-living increases. That is the relevant criteria.

If you talk about hard criteria, such as whether the judges' salaries should be measured against the salaries of civil servants, our American friends are in the process of trying to disengage that right now. There is a kind of lock-step arrangement there and they are trying to eliminate it. I am not saying that there should not be any criteria, but once you start down the road of developing criteria, you may create a monster. These commissions should take into account all the relevant factors — certainly not irrelevant factors or arbitrary factors. You would not confine it to cost-of-living increases, although it would be a logical thing to consider. I am not sure what the relevant criteria would be.

Senator Joyal: When you did your report, you followed a certain number of criteria. What are they?

Mr. Scott: Those were exactly the criteria that anyone would use to complete this task. No one provided us with criteria. The criteria were: what the judges are making now, what they made previously, what they are making elsewhere, what groups comparable to them are making, and the judges' situation. The problem of what to consider was not a large one. The process of determining what to consider was important, but we were not stuck on it.

We were stuck on the question of whether we should be bound by some public service compensation level. That has been a traditional debate in these commissions. However, that aside, I do not think there was much problem deciding what to consider.

Senator Bryden: It is my understanding that under the bill the recommendation of government, based on the commission's report, will be presented to Parliament and enacted by Parliament. Is that correct?

Mr. Scott: Yes.

Senator Bryden: It is also my understanding that there are at least two places where the court now says clearly that it can intervene. First, it can intervene if the commission itself, like any other administrative tribunal, is alleged to have gone outside its jurisdiction. In such a case, it can quash the decision reached by Façonnons le mandat de la commission pour que le Parlement ait l'impression que ces personnes ne sont pas simplement à la recherche d'une augmentation quelconque — surtout si nous exigeons qu'elle fournisse un résultat à la fin du processus. C'est une chose d'avoir tout d'un côté et rien de l'autre. À mon avis, cela représente un juste équilibre entre les deux et même la Cour suprême l'a admis.

M. Scott: Je ne suis pas en désaccord avec vous. Je ne prétends pas que la commission doive fonctionner de façon arbitraire. Je ne sais pas s'il faut être très précis. Le tribunal a dit: «et les autres critères pertinents». Faudra-t-il désormais définir les critères dans la loi? Les commissions triennales précédentes — et oublions la nôtre pour l'instant — ont suivi le même processus, c'est-à-dire qu'elles se sont penchées sur les niveaux de traitement dans le secteur privé, parmi les membres du barreau, et au gouvernement. Puis elles ont fait des comparaisons en tenant compte de la hausse du coût de la vie. Voilà le critère pertinent.

Si vous parlez de critères stricts, par exemple savoir si le traitement des juges doit être évalué par rapport à celui des fonctionnaires, nos amis américains sont justement en train de laisser tomber ce système. Ils appliquent un régime de rémunération par échelon et essaient de le supprimer. Je ne dis pas qu'il ne devrait y avoir aucun critère, mais lorsqu'on commence à élaborer des critères, on risque de créer un monstre. Ces commissions devraient tenir compte de tous les facteurs pertinents — et évidemment pas de facteurs futiles ou arbitraires. Il ne faut pas qu'elles se limitent aux hausses du coût de la vie, même si cela paraît logique à première vue. Je ne sais pas quel devrait être le critère pertinent.

Le sénateur Joyal: Lorsque vous avez rédigé votre rapport, vous vous êtes fondés sur un certain nombre de critères. Lesquels?

M. Scott: C'étaient exactement les critères que l'on utiliserait pour faire ce genre de travail. Personne ne nous a fourni de critères. Nous avons tenu compte du niveau de rémunération actuel des juges, de leur rémunération antérieure, de la rémunération des juges dans d'autres pays, de celle de groupes comparables aux juges et de la situation des juges. La question à prendre en ligne de compte ne posait pas de problème. Le processus de détermination des questions à étudier était important, mais il n'y avait rien de définitif pour nous.

Ce qui nous tenait à coeur, c'était de savoir s'il fallait nous en tenir à un niveau de rémunération en vigueur dans la fonction publique. Cela a toujours été un sujet de discussion traditionnel au sein de ces commissions. Cela mis à part, il n'a pas été trop difficile de choisir les questions à étudier.

Le sénateur Bryden: Sauf erreur, aux termes du projet de loi, la recommandation du gouvernement, fondée sur le rapport de la commission, sera présentée au Parlement et adoptée par ce dernier. Est-ce exact?

M. Scott: Oui.

Le sénateur Bryden: Si je ne m'abuse, il y a au moins deux cas où le tribunal affirme clairement qu'il peut intervenir. Tout d'abord, il peut le faire si la commission proprement dite, à l'instar de tout autre tribunal administratif, est accusée d'avoir outrepassé son champ de compétence. Dans ce cas-là, le tribunal the commission. The court probably cannot substitute its own position, but it can ask the commission to take the matter up again. That is the normal administrative law procedure.

The courts appear to be taking the position that, if the government acts on the commission's report and someone says that the government has made an irrational decision, that person can make an application to the court for a judicial review of the government's decision. That review could, in a proper case, allow for the quashing of that decision. Is that true?

Mr. Scott: Yes. My understanding is that the theme of the judgment is that the rationality test is tied to undermining independence. In other words, the basis for going this route is the question of preserving independence. I do agree with what you have said, however.

Senator Bryden: I do not want to bring in "the ubiquitous reasonable man," which is where the rationality test takes us, but I would like to go one step further.

The commission makes its recommendation, which is accepted by the government. The government drafts a bill and presents it to Parliament. Parliament debates the bill and rejects it. On the independence test under the Constitution, is it possible for an application to be made to a judge to quash the act of Parliament because it is in violation of the Constitution Act, which gives independence to judges?

Mr. Scott: Forgive me, because I am the furthest thing from a parliamentarian. If Parliament rejects the bill, however, is there an act of Parliament at all?

Senator Bryden: Let me just vary the question a bit. Let us say that the act of Parliament is passed, but it grants the judges only $1.

The concern that some of us have is that, after documents such as the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, Parliament has been allowed to keep very few real parliamentary rights vis-à-vis the courts. The time when Parliament was supreme went out the window with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Parliament has always jealously guarded its right to appropriate taxes — the citizens' dollars.

That is what is troubling a number of us. Are the courts now saying, under the guise of protecting the independence of the judiciary, that the judiciary can override decisions made at the parliamentary level, and say that a particular judgment is irrational and interferes with the constitutional independence of the judiciary?

Mr. Scott: I believe that is what is being said. I will come to the reasons for that in a moment. If the government tables a bill that is not highly recommended by the commission, and the bill becomes law, it is my understanding that the case is saying that the courts, on judicial review, can intervene. That is a bit of a misnomer in terms of judicial review, because it would be questioning the constitutionality of a statute. However, that is the way the court would intervene. It would be confronted with this statute, and it would be exactly the same if the government proposed that the recommendations be followed and Parliament peut casser la décision de la commission. Il ne peut sans doute pas imposer sa propre décision à la place, mais il peut demander à la commission de se pencher à nouveau sur la question. C'est la procédure normale en droit administratif.

Le tribunal semble partir du principe que, si le gouvernement donne suite au rapport de la commission et que quelqu'un déclare qu'il a pris une décision illogique, cette personne peut demander au tribunal de procéder à une révision judiciaire de la décision du gouvernement. Cette révision pourrait, selon le cas, permettre l'annulation de cette décision. Est-ce bien vrai?

M. Scott: Oui. D'après mon interprétation, le principe de la décision est que le critère de rationalité est lié à l'empiètement sur l'indépendance. Autrement dit, si l'on agit de cette façon, c'est pour préserver l'indépendance de la magistrature. Je suis toutefois d'accord avec ce que vous avez dit.

Le sénateur Bryden: Je ne veux pas faire intervenir le critère de «la personne raisonnable omniprésente», sur lequel débouche le critère de la rationalité, mais j'aimerais aller un peu plus loin.

La commission formule ses recommandations qui sont acceptées par le gouvernement. Ce dernier rédige un projet de loi et le présente au Parlement. Ce dernier débat du projet de loi et le rejette. En fonction du critère de l'indépendance prévu dans la Constitution, est-il possible de demander à un juge d'annuler la loi du Parlement parce qu'elle enfreint la Loi constitutionnelle, laquelle garantit l'indépendance des juges?

M. Scott: Pardonnez-moi, car je ne connais rien au régime parlementaire. Si le Parlement rejette le projet de loi, toutefois, y a-t-il une loi du Parlement?

Le sénateur Bryden: Permettez-moi de reformuler la question. Disons que la loi du Parlement est adoptée, mais elle accorde aux juges seulement 1 $.

Ce qui inquiète certains d'entre nous c'est que, après l'adoption de documents comme la Charte des droits et libertés, le Parlement a été autorisé à conserver très peu de droits parlementaires réels par rapport aux tribunaux. L'entrée en vigueur de la Charte des droits et libertés a marqué la fin de la suprématie du Parlement. Ce dernier a toujours protégé jalousement son droit à l'égard des impôts et taxes — les deniers publics.

C'est ce qui préoccupe un certain nombre d'entre nous. Les tribunaux affirment-ils maintenant, sous prétexte de protéger l'indépendance de la magistrature, que les décisions des juges peuvent l'emporter sur celles du Parlement, et qu'une décision particulière est illogique et entrave l'indépendance constitutionnelle de la magistrature?

M. Scott: Je crois que c'est ce qui se dit. Je vais vous expliquer pourquoi dans un instant. Si le gouvernement dépose un projet de loi qui n'est pas chaleureusement recommandé par la commission, et que le projet prend force de loi, sauf erreur, il est dit que les tribunaux peuvent intervenir au moyen d'une révision judiciaire. En fait, c'est un euphémisme car cela reviendrait à mettre en cause la constitutionnalité d'une loi. Toutefois, c'est de cette façon que le tribunal interviendrait. Il serait confronté à cette loi et il en irait exactement de même si le gouvernement proposait de donner suite aux recommandations et que le Parlement rejetait cette rejected it. I believe that you have analyzed that correctly. I may have this wrong, but that is my reading of it.

What happens if Parliament passes a bill which is deliberately drafted with a view to controlling the behaviour of judges by attacking them economically? What happens if the commission says that the judges have not had a pay raise for 40 years and they are on the poverty lines, yet Parliament attempts to further reduce their salaries? What mechanism do we have to deal with that?

Senator Bryden: The answer to your question is that you would get another Parliament. In a democracy, the final arbiter used to be the people who elected the parliamentarians and if the parliamentarians acted that ridiculously, the parliamentarians got voted out of office.

I hope I am not over-simplifying this, but the concern is that, in addition to all the other powers that now reside in the Supreme Court, we will now give the justices the power to tax. That is, they will be in a position to reject Parliament's decision that the people of Canada cannot afford to do a certain thing, even though it was recommended by the commission and by the government, and to increase the amount of money allocated for judges. We can go through this whole process and have the court say that the result is not acceptable.

Do the justices then fix the amount, or do they do the normal thing, which is to say, "Go back and try again"?

Mr. Scott: I think they say, "Go back and try again."

Senator Bryden: That is of real concern to many of us who grew up believing that Parliament had some power.

Mr. Scott: I understand that, and I suppose it depends upon one's point of view. I look at it entirely from the point of view of the independence of the judiciary. To take a far-fetched example, if a Parliament duly elected by the citizenry concluded that the judiciary was out of control and that therefore Parliament would undermine it economically, it would be modest comfort only to know that the Governor General might not sign the bill into law, or that we could have an election. Presumably, by this time Parliament is uttering the will of the people.

I understand what you are saying. I understand the concern.

I would be very surprised if the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, and their numbers who supported this notion, contemplated it extending as far as you have described it.

Senator Bryden: I am sure they did not. We are here to try to make sure that we understand all the implications of what is being stated here.

It bothers me as an individual that this is the only time in 130 years that, to preserve the independence of our judiciary, the Supreme Court is requesting the right to review. It was never required before. Why is it necessary, all of a sudden, at this stage?

proposition. Je pense que votre analyse est bonne. Je me trompe peut-être, mais c'est mon interprétation de la question.

Que se passe-t-il si le Parlement adopte un projet de loi délibérément rédigé dans le but de contrôler le comportement des juges en les attaquant sur le plan économique? Que se passe-t-il si la commission déclare que les juges n'ont pas eu d'augmentation depuis 40 ans et qu'ils vivent au seuil de la pauvreté, et que pourtant le Parlement essaie de réduire encore leur traitement? Quel mécanisme existe-t-il pour résoudre ce problème?

Le sénateur Bryden: La réponse à votre question, c'est qu'il y aurait un autre Parlement. En démocratie, c'est la population chargée d'élire les parlementaires qui est l'arbitre en dernier recours et, si les parlementaires agissaient de façon aussi ridicule, ils seraient remplacés aux prochaines élections.

J'espère ne pas m'exprimer de façon trop simpliste, mais ce qu'il est à craindre c'est que, outre tous les autres pouvoirs dont jouit actuellement la Cour suprême, nous donnions désormais aux juges le pouvoir de percevoir des impôts. Autrement dit, ils seront en mesure de rejeter la décision du Parlement selon laquelle les Canadiens n'ont pas les moyens de faire telle ou telle chose, même si cela a été recommandé par la commission et par le gouvernement, et d'accroître la rémunération des juges. Il peut arriver que, une fois le processus terminé, le tribunal décide que le résultat est inadmissible.

Les juges vont-ils alors fixer le montant de leur rémunération, ou feront-ils ce qu'il est normal de faire, à savoir déclarer: «Remettez-vous au travail»?

M. Scott: Je pense que c'est ce qu'ils diront.

Le sénateur Bryden: Cela inquiète vivement bon nombre d'entre nous qui ont grandi dans la conviction que le Parlement détenait certains pouvoirs.

M. Scott: Je comprends bien, et je suppose que tout dépend du point de vue de chacun. J'aborde la question sous l'angle de l'indépendance de la magistrature. Pour prendre un exemple tiré par les cheveux, si un Parlement élu en bonne et due forme par les électeurs concluait que les magistrats agissent de façon débridée et qu'il décidait de leur nuire sur le plan économique, il serait réconfortant de savoir que le Gouverneur général pourra refuser de donner force de loi au projet de loi ou que l'on pourra avoir des élections. Sans doute que cette fois-là le Parlement exprimera la volonté du peuple.

Je comprends ce que vous voulez dire. Je comprends votre préoccupation.

Je serais très surpris que les juges de la Cour suprême du Canada, et les autres qui ont appuyé cette idée, aient envisagé de pousser les choses aussi loin que ce que vous nous dites.

Le sénateur Bryden: Je suis sûr qu'ils ne l'ont pas fait. Notre rôle, c'est de faire en sorte que l'on comprenne bien toutes les répercussions de ces déclarations.

À titre personnel, je suis préoccupé de voir que, pour la première fois en 130 ans, pour préserver l'indépendance de la magistrature, la Cour suprême demande le droit d'examen. Elle ne l'a jamais fait auparavant. Pourquoi est-ce soudain nécessaire à ce stade?

The Chairman: To follow up in the same area, if the court quashed a bill of this nature, they would not then have the power to tax, because what would stand at that point would be the previous bill, would it not?

Senator Bryden: Quashing it means that we must try it again.

Mr. Scott: It means that the existing regime would continue.

Senator Bryden: It is an indirect ability, because they could go back and say, "Add another 10 and another 10 until we get something that is acceptable."

If the judges rule and say that they will quash the bill for Constitutional reasons, does the notwithstanding clause then come into effect, or is there no ability for it to operate in that situation?

Mr. Scott: No, it does not come into effect in that situation.

Senator Murray: The process that is provided for in this bill is that the commission submits its report and the Minister of Justice is obliged to table it in each of the Houses of Parliament within 10 days, effectively. The report must then be referred to this committee, to the Senate, and to our counterparts in the House of Commons. They have 90 sitting days to report their findings. It then says that "the Minister of Justice shall respond to a report within six months after receiving it."

Are we certain that the obligation is there is for the Minister of Justice to respond to the commission's report or to the parliamentary committee? If you look at the marginal notes on page 4 there is "Report by Committee," "Definition of 'sitting day'," and then "Response to report." I ask the question because it is quite normal under the rules in the House of Commons that the government is obliged to respond to reports of parliamentary committees within a certain period of time. We do not have a similar rule in the Senate.

I am not aware that ministers or the government are obliged by statute to respond to reports of other commissions, although they may be obliged to do so.

Mr. Scott: The intent is that the minister respond to the report of the commission. Whether that is regarded by senators as desirable or otherwise, I believe that is the intent. That is because we, and a succession of commissions before us, were of the view that the government should be required to respond rather than simply say nothing. That is my understanding, but I could be wrong.

Senator Murray: We should probably ask the minister.

The Chairman: That is a good question to ask the representatives of the department when they return here.

Mr. Scott: I think that is correct.

Senator Beaudoin: In the same line as the one taken by Senator Bryden, is it true that if the government is resisting the commission's recommendation, the government may have to justify its stand? If I understand the bill correctly, it means that the La présidente: Dans la même veine, si le tribunal annulait un projet de loi de ce genre, les juges n'auraient pas de pouvoir en matière d'imposition puisque les mesures législatives en vigueur seraient celles de la loi précédente, n'est-ce pas?

Le sénateur Bryden: Annuler le projet de loi signifie qu'il nous faut essayer à nouveau.

M. Scott: Cela signifie que le régime actuel restera en vigueur.

Le sénateur Bryden: Ils disposent indirectement de ce pouvoir car ils pourraient revenir à la charge en disant «Ajoutez encore 10 et 10 encore jusqu'à ce que nous obtenions un montant acceptable.»

Si les juges tranchent et déclarent qu'ils vont annuler le projet de loi pour des raisons constitutionnelles, la clause dérogatoire prend-elle alors effet ou est-il impossible qu'elle s'applique en l'occurrence?

M. Scott: Non, elle ne s'applique pas dans ces cas-là.

Le sénateur Murray: En vertu du processus prévu dans le projet de loi, la commission présente son rapport et le ministre de la Justice est obligé de le déposer devant les deux Chambres du Parlement dans les 10 jours. Le rapport doit ensuite être renvoyé à notre comité, au Sénat et à nos homologues de la Chambre des communes. Les comités ont 90 jours ouvrables pour présenter le rapport de leurs conclusions. Il est dit ensuite que «le ministre de la Justice donne suite au rapport au plus tard six mois après l'avoir reçu».

Sommes-nous certains que le ministre de la Justice a l'obligation de donner suite au rapport de la commission ou au comité parlementaire? Si vous examinez les notes en marge de la page 4, elles mentionnent «Étude en comité et rapport», «Définition de "jour de séance"» et «Suivi». Je pose la question parce que le Règlement de la Chambre des communes oblige le gouvernement à répondre aux rapports des comités parlementaires dans un certain délai. Nous n'avons pas la même règle au Sénat.

À ma connaissance, les ministres ou le gouvernement ne sont pas tenus, par la loi, de donner suite aux rapports des autres commissions, même s'ils peuvent être tenus de le faire.

M. Scott: Cette disposition vise à faire en sorte que le ministre donne suite au rapport de la commission. Que les sénateurs jugent cela souhaitable ou non, je crois que c'est le but recherché. C'est parce que, comme diverses commissions qui nous ont précédés, nous estimions que le gouvernement devrait être tenu de donner suite au lieu de se contenter de ne rien dire. C'est ainsi que j'ai compris les choses, mais je me trompe peut-être.

Le sénateur Murray: Nous devrions sans doute poser la question à la ministre.

La présidente: C'est une bonne question à poser aux représentants du ministère lorsqu'ils reviendront.

M. Scott: En effet.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Dans le même esprit que la question du sénateur Bryden, est-il vrai que, si le gouvernement s'oppose à la recommandation de la commission, il peut avoir à se justifier? Si j'ai bien compris le projet de loi, cela veut dire que le fardeau burden of evidence is on the shoulders of the legislated branch of the state. It is not often that we have that, but it is there. The court ruled on this in the provincial court judges reference.

However, the court may intervene only if it is not rational. That is the way I read the statute. It does not mean — and I would object strongly to this — that the court itself would fix the salaries. That would be quite unacceptable. I cannot see how we can go that far.

What is your understanding of this? In other words, the court may say: Your refusal is not rational. That means you must try again.

Mr. Scott: That is correct.

Senator Beaudoin: That does not mean more, which is quite something.

Mr. Scott: As Senator Beaudoin says, it is quite something.

Senator Beaudoin: At least the power of the court is on the irrationality, not on the question of taxation or things of that sort. I know it is close.

Mr. Scott: Rightly or wrongly, it is on rationality as measured by the undermining of independence. It is not economic rationality or some other rationality. I could be wrong, but that is the way I read the judgment. The court is concerned only with the issue of independence, so the rationality is at issue.

Senator Beaudoin: What was raised by Senator Bryden is that the last word is given to a court in a court case.

Mr. Scott: Yes, but it is not given to them to fix their salaries.

Senator Beaudoin: It is not to fix the salaries, so it means to try it again?

Mr. Scott: That is correct.

Senator Beaudoin: The court was not unanimous, but they do not need to be unanimous on this. There was a strong majority to that effect in the court.

Mr. Scott: That is correct.

Senator Beaudoin: We cannot go further than that on that precise question. We may like it or dislike it, but the fact is that there is already one advisory opinion of the court that says that the mechanism of a commission is good. We must abide by the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

I cannot see how we may use the notwithstanding clause in this because it is not a Charter case. It is a basic principle of the Canadian Constitution that is judicial independence. This is a difficult debate. The legislative area and the judiciary have been separate in Canada for 300 years. It is one of the basic principles of our Constitution. However, in a case like this it is a bit technical. I am glad that we must solve an interesting question like that.

de la preuve incombe au pouvoir législatif. Ce n'est pas souvent le cas, mais c'est ce qui est prévu ici. La Cour suprême s'est prononcée sur cette question dans le renvoi des juges de la Cour provinciale.

Néanmoins, la cour ne peut intervenir que si la décision n'est pas rationnelle. C'est ainsi que je comprends la loi. Cela ne veut pas dire — et je m'y opposerais énergiquement — que la cour fixerait elle-même la rémunération. Ce serait tout à fait inacceptable. Je ne vois pas comment nous pourrions aller aussi loin.

Comment comprenez-vous la situation? Autrement dit, la cour pourrait dire: votre refus n'est pas rationnel. Cela veut dire qu'il faut réexaminer votre position.

M. Scott: C'est exact.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Cela ne veut pas dire plus, ce qui est déjà quelque chose.

M. Scott: Comme le dit le sénateur Beaudoin, c'est déjà quelque chose.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Au moins, le pouvoir du tribunal porte sur le fait que la décision est irrationnelle et non pas sur la question de l'imposition, ce genre de choses. Je sais que la nuance est mince.

M. Scott: À tort ou à raison, il détermine si la décision est rationnelle ou non en fonction de la mesure dans laquelle l'indépendance des juges se trouve limitée. La décision n'a pas à être rationnelle sur le plan économique ou autre. Je me trompe peut-être, mais c'est ainsi que je comprends le jugement. La cour se préoccupe uniquement de la question de l'indépendance et c'est sur ce plan que la décision doit être rationnelle.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Le sénateur Bryden a fait valoir que le tribunal avait le dernier mot.

M. Scott: Oui, mais ce n'est pas lui qui fixe la rémunération.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Il ne fixe pas la rémunération, mais il demande que l'on réexamine le dossier?

M. Scott: C'est exact.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Les juges de la Cour suprême n'étaient pas unanimes, mais l'unanimité n'est pas nécessaire. Il y avait une forte majorité.

M. Scott: En effet.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Nous ne pouvons pas aller plus loin sur cette question précise. Que cela nous plaise ou non, le fait est que la Cour suprême s'est déjà prononcée en faveur du mécanisme que représente la commission. Nous devons nous conformer à cette décision.

Je ne vois pas comment nous pourrions invoquer la clause dérogatoire étant donné que la Charte n'est pas en cause. Il s'agit là d'un principe fondamental de la Constitution canadienne, celui de l'indépendance de la magistrature. C'est un débat complexe. Le pouvoir législatif et le pouvoir judiciaire sont séparés au Canada depuis 300 ans. C'est un des principes fondamentaux de notre Constitution. Néanmoins, dans un cas comme celui-ci, le problème est quelque peu technique. Je me réjouis que nous ayons à résoudre une question aussi intéressante.

Senator Sparrow: Let us say that there were no recommendations in the report that the status quo be maintained. What would happen then?

You suggested that that report must go to Parliament. If there was a status quo, you suggest that it still must go to Parliament with no changes. If they did in some way or other go to the house, the judge would determine whether Parliament had made an irrational decision.

Could the irrational decision have been made by the commission? That recommendation had gone, and now the government — Parliament — backed that decision, and it was irrational in both cases? Does the court still decide that the commission was irrational, as well as Parliament? If in fact there was no report, could that be considered an irrational decision because there was no recommendation for any changes?

Mr. Scott: I think that Senator Bryden's point is the correct one. If the commission exceeds its jurisdiction by irrationality, if that is possible, then judicial review would lie anyway.

My sense of the rationality here at issue is the government's response to the commission's report rather than the commission's report itself. In other words, the point of the independent commission is that it will be an independent adviser to government, and the concern is that governments are arbitrarily ignoring it. If the commission itself, by its methodology or what it says, is demonstrably irrational or lacks in jurisdiction or whatever, I believe that judicial review would lie anyway, whatever this case provides.

The irrationality or rationality is in the government's reaction to the commission's report. That is what I understand the Supreme Court of Canada is dealing with in the P.E.I. case.

Senator Sparrow: But if both decisions were irrational, in the opinion of a judge, what then?

Mr. Scott: I suppose that if the commission's decision were irrational to a level which merited judicial review, that would be the first step. Obviously, if the judges were challenging it, the first step is to either be supporting the commission's decision or attacking it. This is all premised on the proposition, as I appreciate it, that this independent commission will make a rational recommendation that will be arbitrarily rejected by government.

Senator Pépin: According to clause 45, a judge who is in receipt of an annuity can leave his pension to his common law spouse whom he has lived with for at least one year. Some people have pointed out to us that in most provinces, the requirement is three year's cohabitation. Could you explain this to us?

[English]

Mr. Scott: I have read what has been said to your committee about this. Certainly, three years is the provincial standard in many jurisdictions. I am not an expert in this area so I will be of no use to you. However, my understanding is that this is an expression of the regime in place in other areas. However, I have

Le sénateur Sparrow: Disons que le rapport ne recommande pas de maintenir le statu quo. Que se passerait-il alors?

Vous dites que ce rapport doit être soumis au Parlement. Si le statu quo est maintenu, vous dites qu'il faut quand même le soumettre au Parlement sans proposer de changement. Si c'est le cas, le juge établirait si le Parlement a pris une décision irrationnelle.

Cette décision irrationnelle pourrait-elle avoir été prise par la commission? La recommandation a été faite et maintenant le gouvernement et le Parlement l'appuient et, dans les deux cas, on a agi de façon irrationnelle. Le tribunal estimera-t-il que la commission a pris une décision irrationnelle, de même que le Parlement? S'il n'y a pas eu de rapport, peut-on considérer que cette décision est irrationnelle étant donné qu'aucun changement n'a été recommandé?

M. Scott: Je pense que le sénateur Bryden a raison. Si la commission outrepassé son mandat en prenant une décision irrationnelle, il y aurait de toute façon un examen judiciaire.

Ce dont il faut tenir compte ici, selon moi, c'est de la réponse du gouvernement au rapport de la commission plutôt que du rapport de la commission comme tel. Autrement dit, la commission indépendante doit agir comme conseiller indépendant auprès du gouvernement et l'on craint ici que ce dernier décide arbitrairement de ne pas en tenir compte. Si la commission se montre irrationnelle, par sa méthodologie ou par ses propos ou encore parce qu'elle outrepassé son champ de compétence, je crois que la révision judiciaire aura lieu de toute façon.

Ce qu'il y aura de rationnel ou d'irrationnel, ce sera la réaction du gouvernement au rapport de la commission. Si je comprends bien, c'est dans cet esprit que la Cour suprême du Canada a abordé la cause de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard.

Le sénateur Sparrow: Mais si le juge estime que les deux décisions sont irrationnelles, que se passe-t-il?

M. Scott: Si la décision de la commission est irrationnelle au point de justifier un examen judiciaire, ce sera la première étape. Bien entendu, si les juges la contestent, il s'agit d'abord d'appuyer ou de réfuter la décision de la commission. Tout cela part du principe que cette commission indépendante va faire une recommandation rationnelle que le gouvernement rejettera arbitrairement.

Le sénateur Pépin: L'article 45 indique que les juges pensionnés peuvent laisser leur pension à leur conjoint de fait avec lequel ils ont cohabité depuis au moins un an. Des personnes ont attiré notre attention sur le fait que dans les régimes de la plupart des provinces, on parle d'une période de trois ans. Pouvez-vous nous éclairer à ce sujet?

[Traduction]

M. Scott: J'ai lu ce qui a été dit à votre comité à ce sujet. Trois ans représentent sans doute la norme dans de nombreuses provinces. Comme je ne suis pas expert en la matière, je ne peux pas vous éclairer. Néanmoins, si j'ai bien compris, cela reflète le régime en place ailleurs. J'ignore toutefois si cela s'éloigne ou no idea whether this is a departure or whether this is an expression of the statutory regime in place in the provinces. I am just not on top of this. My recollection was that it was three years, but obviously this one-year provision is defensible based on the survivors' benefits, which do not apply to judges. I am sorry that I am of no help.

Senator Beaudoin: Someone said that this bill is harmonizing the situation of judges with that of people in other areas of the public service, such as the RCMP.

The Chairman: I believe that it is harmonizing it with the public service.

Senator Beaudoin: Yes, and even members of Parliament.

The Chairman: Yes. We will hear from another witness who is knowledgeable in this area. We can ask the question again then.

Senator Joyal: Did you study how other common-law systems comparable to Canada deal with this issue of judges' compensation to protect the principle of the judiciary's independence?

Mr. Scott: We did. While walking here from my office, I was wondering where our research papers had gone. They have all gone back to the judicial affairs centre and I will see if I can find them.

We did a study of that. As I am sure you have been told, in some Australian states they have negative resolution. I believe they have that in New South Wales. In others, they have commissions that have powers to recommend only. I could not list them for you, but the one most aggressively favourable to the judges is the negative resolution system, which is in place in New South Wales, Australia. The report is tabled and if there is no bill rejecting it, it becomes law.

Senator Joyal: Do you know the system in the U.K. generally?

Mr. Scott: I cannot recollect it. We did a study of that, but I cannot now remember what we learned. I will find out and send it up to the clerk.

Senator Joyal: I should like to come back to the question of rationality. As you realize, it is something that bothers us a lot. You say that the test would be rationality in reference with the maintenance of independency of the judiciary.

Let us take an example that we have experienced in the last years. We were in a difficult economic situation in terms of budgetary issues in Canada and the government decided to institute freezes all over the place. The judges were frozen, too, in terms of compensation.

Let us imagine that some time in the future the same situation arises and the government once again institutes freezes. The commission studies the workload of the judges and concludes that their workload has increased and they request a 2 per cent increase, which seems reasonable in a difficult time. However, the committees of the House of Commons and the Senate recommend against the commission's request, as does the Minister of Justice.

non du régime en place au niveau provincial. Je ne suis pas très au courant. Si je me souviens bien, c'était trois ans, mais cette disposition qui prévoit un an est certainement défendable pour ce qui est de la prestation de survivant, qui ne s'appliquait pas aux juges. Je regrette de ne pas pouvoir vous aider.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Quelqu'un a dit que ce projet de loi harmonisait la situation des juges avec celle des employés d'autres secteurs de la fonction publique comme la GRC.

La présidente: Je crois qu'elle l'harmonise avec la fonction publique.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Oui, et même les parlementaires.

La présidente: Oui. Nous allons entendre un autre témoin qui connaît bien ce domaine. Nous pourrions poser cette question.

Le sénateur Joyal: Avez-vous étudié la façon dont d'autres systèmes de common law comparables à celui du Canada abordent la question de la rémunération des juges pour protéger l'indépendance de la magistrature?

M. Scott: Nous l'avons fait. En venant ici, je me demandais où étaient passés nos documents de recherche. Ils ont tous été envoyés au Centre des affaires judiciaires et je vais voir si je peux les trouver.

Nous avons étudié la question. Comme on vous l'a dit certainement, certains États australiens ont la procédure de résolution négative. Je crois que c'est le cas en Nouvelle-Galles du Sud. Dans d'autres États, il y a des commissions qui ont seulement un pouvoir de recommandation. Je ne peux pas vous les énumérer, mais l'une des formules les plus en faveur des juges est la procédure de résolution négative qui existe en Nouvelle-Galles du Sud. Le rapport est déposé et si aucun projet de loi ne le rejette, il obtient force de loi.

Le sénateur Joyal: Connaissez-vous de façon générale le système en place au Royaume-Uni?

M. Scott: Je ne m'en souviens pas. Nous en avons fait une étude, mais je ne me souviens pas de ce que nous avons appris. Je vais vérifier et envoyer ces renseignements à la greffière.

Le sénateur Joyal: Je voudrais en revenir à la question de la rationalité. Comme vous le savez, cela nous ennuie parfois beaucoup. Vous dites que le critère de rationalité vise au maintien de l'indépendance de la magistrature.

Prenons un cas que nous avons connu ces dernières années. Nous avons connu une situation économique difficile au Canada et le gouvernement a alors décidé d'imposer un gel des prix et des salaires. La rémunération des juges a également été gelée.

Imaginons qu'un jour, la même chose se reproduit et que le gouvernement recourt de nouveau à ce genre de mesure. La commission étudiera la charge de travail des juges et, estimant qu'elle a augmenté, elle demandera une augmentation de 2 p. 100, ce qui semble raisonnable. Toutefois, le comité de la Chambre des communes et du Sénat se prononcera contre la recommandation de la commission, de même que le ministre de la Justice.

In such a context, where everyone is hit, where, in your opinion, does the maintenance of the rationality principle in relation to the independency of the judiciary stand?

Mr. Scott: A freeze across the board is rational. However, the judges did not always think that. It is very interesting what the Chief Justice said in the P.E.I. case. He said that a freeze across the board, although effectively a reduction, would be defensible.

The judges did not always think that. They did not like to be aligned with the executive branch of government, so they did not like to be swept in with other public servants. In respect of this last freeze, there was a lot of criticism on the part of the judges.

I read in the judgment that the chief justice acknowledges that an across-the-board freeze, where everyone bears the burden, would be rational. I regard that as an advance in judicial thinking. It would be rational, but the question is: What would be irrational? I am not sure of the answer to that question. I suppose that is part of the troubling nature of the problem, because what would be irrational in the face of what is perceived in society as unwarranted judicial activism is a massive reduction in compensation affecting only judges. The judges might regard that as an obvious attempt to undermine their independence and to control their behaviour.

Cases such as the one in P.E.I. have involved efforts include some independence problem associated with salaries. It arose from the fact that the executive branch set the salaries for judges, and the judges had no say whatsoever in the matter. There is always an effort to get the hook of independence into the question. That is why it is not just rationality per se, but rationality as tested by the stability of the independence of the judiciary.

Senator Joyal: On the same basis of your answer, a judge would recognize that when an effort is requested from everyone, it ought to be borne fairly by the judiciary, too. They are part of society as such.

Why are people so reluctant to have the criteria that the commission would follow mirror the criteria that Treasury Board follows when putting forward proposals that are within the framework of the government purse? Essentially, that is what Treasury Board must do when putting together a proposal for the unions. It would seem to be in accordance with the capacity of the taxpayers to pay at this point in time.

Mr. Scott: Perhaps I am pushing this point too far. I am not saying that there should not be any criteria, but at a certain point the criteria become developed enough that you do not need an independent commission. That is, you need only apply the criteria. You could say that the remuneration for the judiciary should be measured by the salaries of deputy ministers or by the incomes or benefits received by deputy ministers. That is the end of it.

I believe in the notion that for the judiciary, who are independent of government, there should be some mechanism for determining what is appropriate in terms of compensation.

Dans ce genre de situation, où tout le monde est touché, que fait-on, selon vous, du principe de la rationalité en ce qui concerne l'indépendance de la magistrature?

M. Scott: Un gel général des salaires est rationnel. Néanmoins, les juges n'ont pas toujours été de cet avis. Ce que le juge en chef a déclaré dans l'affaire de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard est très intéressant. Il a dit qu'un gel général serait défendable, même si cela revenait à une réduction de salaire.

Les juges n'ont pas toujours eu cette opinion. Ils ne voulaient pas s'aligner sur le pouvoir exécutif pas plus que sur les autres fonctionnaires. Le dernier gel a été largement critiqué par les juges.

D'après le jugement, le juge en chef reconnaît qu'un gel général qui amènerait tout le monde à faire sa part, serait rationnel. Je considère que c'est là un progrès. Ce serait rationnel, mais la question à se poser est la suivante: qu'est-ce qui serait irrationnel? Je ne suis pas certain de la réponse à cette question. C'est ce qui contribue au problème étant donné qu'une décision qui serait irrationnelle aux yeux de la société serait une baisse de salaire massive qui ne toucherait que les juges. Les juges pourraient voir là une tentative évidente de saper leur indépendance ou de contrôler leur comportement.

Des affaires comme celle de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard ont soulevé le problème de l'indépendance. Cela vient du fait que le pouvoir exécutif établit la rémunération des juges tandis que ces derniers n'ont pas voix au chapitre. On cherche toujours à mettre sur le tapis la question de l'indépendance. Voilà pourquoi ce n'est pas la question de la rationalité comme telle qui se pose. Cette rationalité est établie en fonction de la mesure où l'indépendance de la magistrature est maintenue.

Le sénateur Joyal: Pour aller dans le même sens que votre réponse, un juge reconnaîtrait que si l'on demande à tout le monde de faire sa part, la magistrature devrait faire un effort elle aussi. Elle fait partie de la société.

Pourquoi hésite-t-on tellement à demander à la commission de suivre les mêmes critères que le Conseil du Trésor lorsqu'elle présente une proposition qui fait appel aux deniers publics? C'est ce que doit faire le Conseil du Trésor lorsqu'il présente une proposition aux syndicats. Cela tiendrait compte de la capacité de payer des contribuables.

M. Scott: Je vais peut-être trop loin, mais je ne dis pas qu'on peut se passer totalement de critères. Toutefois, à un moment donné, les critères sont suffisamment développés pour qu'il ne soit pas nécessaire d'avoir une commission indépendante. Autrement dit, il vous suffit d'appliquer des critères. Vous pourriez dire que la rémunération des juges doit s'aligner sur celle des sous-ministres ou encore le salaire ou les avantages sociaux des sous-ministres et cela n'ira pas plus loin.

Je crois que la magistrature étant indépendante du gouvernement, il faudrait un mécanisme pour déterminer la rémunération qui convient.

I am not saying that we do not need criteria. What I am saying is that we need to determine the nature of the criteria. Will we consider the benefits received by deputy ministers? If so, at what levels? If you get to that point, then you do not need an independent commission, do you?

Senator Joyal: In the United States they have criteria, and they fix the level of compensation to avoid that kind of discretionary involvement of elected people, thereby protecting the independence of the judiciary.

When you put forward some criteria, is that not a way to contain the independence of the judiciary? In that situation you apply the criteria and then there is no discussion.

Mr. Scott: Except for the fact that such a solution presumes that criteria provide the complete answer. There is some judgment in here somewhere, and where there is judgment there is an opportunity to lobby for the judgment to go one way or the other. The way we get into this area is that judges cannot lobby; therefore, you must have an independent commission.

In the United States, there is an enormous boon from removing the link between judges' salaries and bureaucrats' salaries. That is not entirely the work of the judiciary. There is a feeling that the judiciary, as a separate branch of government, should be dealt with separately. The criteria change from time to time, depending upon the attractions of the bench. About four years ago, it was much more attractive to consider an appointment to the bench than it is now. People flocked to be appointed to the bench over the last 10 years. Before that, they did not do so, and they certainly are not doing so now.

You are trying to develop a system that matches what is available outside the judiciary in order to attract the right people. I would not favour simply establishing a set of criteria that says that judges will be treated like a certain group of people with all the same criteria. If you do that, you do not need an independent commission.

Senator Joyal: You said that there is a movement in the United States to deregulate the compensation mechanism for judges. Is that not a way for those people who fight for judicial activism to submit judges to the appreciation of discretionary compensation decisions?

Mr. Scott: The first group pushing for the removal of such a linkage is the judges. They feel that their situation and the need to attract the right people to the judiciary will not be addressed by putting them into a category with federal public servants and that, since they are a separate branch of government, they should be dealt with separately. The motives of others is another question, but that is a hot topic in the U.S. now.

Senator Joyal: I understand your point. Besides the cost of living index, the economic growth of Canada, and the objective that the government is pursuing in its budgetary policy involving salaries, you add the criteria of putting enough money on the table so that there will be enough candidates interested in the profession.

Mr. Scott: Yes, the right candidates.

Je ne dis pas que les critères sont inutiles. Je dis seulement qu'il faut déterminer la nature de ces critères. Allons-nous tenir compte des avantages sociaux qu'obtiennent les sous-ministres? Si c'est le cas, à quels niveaux? Si vous en arrivez là, vous n'avez pas besoin de commission indépendante, n'est-ce pas?

Le sénateur Joyal: Aux États-Unis, il y a des critères et l'on fixe le niveau de rémunération afin d'éviter l'intervention discrétionnaire des élus et protéger ainsi l'indépendance de la magistrature.

Lorsque vous proposez des critères, n'est-ce pas une façon de limiter l'indépendance de la magistrature? Vous appliquez alors les critères et il n'y a pas de discussion.

M. Scott: Si ce n'est que cette solution part du principe que les critères suffisent à eux seuls. Il y a un certain jugement à porter et il est donc possible d'exercer des pressions dans un sens ou dans l'autre. Comme les juges ne peuvent pas exercer des pressions, il faut une commission indépendante.

Aux États-Unis, il y a tout un mouvement pour la suppression du lien entre la rémunération des juges et celle des bureaucrates. La magistrature n'en est pas seule responsable. On estime que la magistrature étant une branche distincte du gouvernement, elle doit être traitée séparément. Les critères changent de temps à autre, selon l'attrait que représentent ces nominations. Il y a quatre ans environ, une nomination à la magistrature était beaucoup plus attrayante que ce n'est le cas maintenant. Un tas de gens souhaitaient se faire nommer juge ces 10 dernières années. Cela présentait beaucoup moins d'attrait avant cela et en tout cas maintenant.

Nous essayons de mettre au point un système de rémunération comparable à ce qui est offert à l'extérieur afin d'attirer des gens compétents. Je ne serais pas en faveur de l'établissement d'une série de critères disant que les juges seront traités comme tel autre groupe de personnes présentant les mêmes critères. Si vous le faites, vous n'avez pas besoin d'une commission indépendante.

Le sénateur Joyal: Vous dites qu'il y a, aux États-Unis, un mouvement en faveur de la déréglementation de la rémunération des juges. N'est-ce pas, pour ceux qui se battent pour l'activisme judiciaire, une façon de soumettre les juges à des décisions discrétionnaires concernant leur rémunération?

M. Scott: Les premiers à demander l'élimination de ces liens sont les juges. Ils estiment qu'on ne répondra pas à leur situation et à la nécessité d'attirer des gens compétents en les associant aux fonctionnaires fédéraux et que, la magistrature étant une branche distincte du gouvernement, elle devrait être traitée comme telle. Quant à ce qui motive les autres, c'est une autre question, mais cela suscite actuellement la controverse aux États-Unis.

Le sénateur Joyal: Je comprends ce que vous dites. En dehors de l'indice du coût de la vie, de la croissance économique du Canada et des objectifs de la politique budgétaire du gouvernement, ce qui comprend les salaires, vous voulez qu'on offre suffisamment d'argent aux juges afin qu'il y ait suffisamment de candidats qui s'intéressent à la profession.

M. Scott: Oui, les bons candidats.

Senator Joyal: In other words, we must make the package attractive enough to attract those we want to have, and not those who are looking for another job because they feel they are underpaid. Is that what you have in mind?

Mr. Scott: Yes.

The Chairman: I am rather surprised, Mr. Scott, to hear you say that this is not a position that people are avidly seeking. Most members of Parliament would be surprised to hear that, too.

Mr. Scott: But are they the right people? That is the question. From sea to sea, we have had a tremendous judiciary in this country. In my province of Ontario, the Court of Appeal has always had the top lawyers in the profession. This is not true in other countries. In other countries, the judiciary is frequently made up of people who have been appointed to the bench early in their lives. There is a completely different atmosphere in the judiciary. I make no apology for pushing hard for the idea that there should be enough independence in the effort to assess what judges should be paid to attract the right people. The right people are not necessarily Bay Street people, but people from communities across the country. We need to have the top people in the judiciary.

Senator Lawson: On the issue of criteria, I agree with Mr. Scott. I think it would be a serious mistake to try to have fixed criteria. I heard Senator Joyal say that the Treasury Board has some criteria, and I am sure that the executive board does. Every union does, but it is floating, flexible criteria that works on each individual occasion. You keep the ones which work, and if they do not work next time, you change them to meet the changing circumstances.

I have been involved in negotiations for over 40 years and I have learned that it is impossible to have fixed, rigid criteria. One or two criteria are obvious, such as the cost of living, but you simply cannot work within a strict framework.

Those parties with bargaining rights have flexible criteria. To attempt to apply it in this situation would be impossible. I agree with you that there is no point in having a commission if you are to have rigid criteria. Rather, it should be binding arbitration or binding conciliation, as it was in the old days: Fix it and leave it, with no appeal.

Mr. Scott: I do not think that a lot of people genuinely believe that there is a problem in attracting the right people to the bench. However, in reality, the opposite is true. We have some of the most wonderful people on the bench. Yet, every once in a while you get a rush of people who want to be judges and you see a hint of the other side of the coin, which is very unappealing. You see people who want to be judges because they perceive it to be easier work and because they are attracted by the pension, et cetera. Those people we positively do not want. They end up losing their spirit for it in no time at all, and the result is a disaster.

However, taking the point about the criteria, we do always have to be measuring how we compensate our judges against that body of people from which we are drawing to ensure that we are

Le sénateur Joyal: Autrement dit, il faut rendre les conditions de rémunération suffisamment attrayantes pour attirer les personnes que nous voulons avoir, et non pas celles qui recherchent un autre emploi parce qu'elles estiment être sous-payées. Est-ce bien ce que vous voulez dire?

M. Scott: Oui.

La présidente: Je m'étonne, monsieur Scott, de vous entendre dire que ce n'est pas un poste très convoité. La plupart des parlementaires seront également étonnés de l'entendre.

M. Scott: Mais s'agit-il des bonnes personnes? Tout est là. Nous avons, d'un bout à l'autre du pays, une magistrature extrêmement compétente au Canada. Dans ma province, l'Ontario, la Cour d'appel a toujours eu les meilleurs avocats de la profession. Ce n'est pas vrai dans d'autres pays. Ailleurs, la magistrature est souvent composée de gens qui ont été nommés très jeunes. L'atmosphère y est totalement différente. Je n'hésite pas à faire valoir que le processus de détermination du salaire versé aux juges pour attirer des gens compétents doit être suffisamment indépendant. Les bonnes personnes ne seront pas nécessairement des gens de Bay Street, mais plutôt des gens des divers coins du pays. Notre magistrature doit être composée des meilleurs éléments.

Le sénateur Lawson: Pour ce qui est des critères, je suis d'accord avec M. Scott. Ce serait une grave erreur, selon moi, que d'avoir des critères fixes. Le sénateur Joyal dit que le Conseil du Trésor applique certains critères et je suis certain que le comité de direction aussi. Chaque syndicat a des critères souples s'appliquant à chaque circonstance. Vous conservez ceux qui donnent de bons résultats et, s'ils laissent à désirer la prochaine fois, vous les modifiez pour tenir compte de l'évolution des circonstances.

J'ai participé à des négociations pendant plus de 40 ans et j'ai appris qu'il était impossible d'avoir des critères fixes et rigides. Certains critères sont évidents tels que le coût de la vie, mais il n'est pas possible d'avoir des paramètres très stricts.

Les parties qui ont le droit de négocier ont des critères souples. Il serait impossible de chercher à les appliquer dans ce genre de situation. Je conviens avec vous qu'il ne sert à rien d'avoir une commission si vous avez des critères rigides. Il faudrait plutôt recourir à l'arbitrage ou à la conciliation obligatoire, comme dans l'ancien temps. La décision est sans appel.

M. Scott: Je ne pense pas que beaucoup de gens croient vraiment qu'il soit difficile d'attirer des gens compétents dans les rangs de la magistrature. C'est plutôt le contraire. Nous avons des gens exceptionnels dans la magistrature. Néanmoins, vous avez parfois des gens qui veulent devenir juges et vous voyez alors l'autre côté de la médaille, qui n'est pas très beau à voir. Certaines personnes veulent devenir juges parce qu'elles pensent que ce sera un travail plus facile ou parce qu'elles sont attirées par la pension et le reste. Nous ne voulons certainement pas de ces gens-là. Ils perdent très rapidement leur enthousiasme et le résultat est désastreux.

Néanmoins, pour ce qui est des critères, il faudra toujours mesurer la façon dont nous rémunérons nos juges en faisant une comparaison avec le secteur dans lequel nous les recrutons afin competitive. We obviously do not pay anything like the incomes that are given up, but we must pay enough to ensure that it will not be such an enormous step down that people will not do it.

Senator Bryden: It is interesting that the tremendous courts that we all know and have practised before have all come about without this type of protection. I do not know why we have to go further with it at this particular time. There was an old saying in law school that A students make professors, B students make judges, and C students make money.

As you know, the fact that a given lawyer is making $500,000 a year doing estates and commercial law in no way indicates that he is better than the carefully practising lawyer, even an independent practitioner, who is eking out enough to pay his secretary and his overhead and clear $80,000 or $100,000.

Mr. Scott: That is so.

Senator Bryden: I should like to go back to the issue of criteria or guidelines. Senator Lawson and I have both been in the labour business for a long time. The ability to go to economic warfare is in some instances removed in the public interest. For example, firefighters and sometimes police have the right to strike removed from them and replaced by arbitration.

In most statutes that make arbitration the final decision-maker, there are criteria laid out. If there are not criteria, you cannot take into account the employers' ability to pay. Therefore, the fact that the Province of Prince Edward Island could not afford to pay a 25 per cent increase would not be a factor that an arbitrator could take into consideration. Now they must because it is on the list. In other words, in your deliberations you must take the following into account.

There are criteria for the commissions in many provinces already. The Provinces of Ontario, British Columbia, Alberta, Quebec and Prince Edward Island have them. The act of Prince Edward Island, for example, includes as criteria the need to provide fair and reasonable compensation to judges, the management board policy and other relevant considerations respecting judges' expenses, any changes in the cost of living, the need to attract excellent candidates, the prevailing economic conditions in the province and the overall state of the provincial economy, and the salaries and benefits paid to other provincial court judges in other Canadian jurisdictions. I do not see it here, but it says probably "and any other relevant criteria," but under the ejusdem generis rule you do not get too far away from that sort of stuff.

New Zealand's statute includes very interesting criteria. They are: the need to achieve and maintain fair relativity with the levels of remuneration received elsewhere; the need to be fair, both to the persons or group of persons whose remuneration is being determined, and to the taxpayer or ratepayer; and the need to recruit and maintain competent persons. Those are criteria which the commission must take into account.

d'être concurrentiels. Nous ne payons évidemment pas de salaires comparables aux revenus auxquels les juges doivent renoncer, mais nous devons payer une rémunération suffisante pour que le sacrifice ne soit pas énorme au point d'être dissuasif.

Le sénateur Bryden: Il est intéressant de constater que les merveilleux tribunaux que nous connaissons tous ont été établis sans ce genre de protection. Je ne vois pas pourquoi nous devrions aller plus loin pour le moment. Selon un vieil adage qui avait cours à la faculté de droit, les étudiants qui ont des A deviennent professeurs, ceux qui ont des B deviennent juges et ceux qui ont des C gagnent beaucoup d'argent.

Comme vous le savez, ce n'est pas parce qu'un avocat gagne 500 000 $ par an en droit immobilier et commercial qu'il est plus compétent que l'avocat prudent qui gagne juste assez pour payer sa secrétaire et ses frais généraux et empocher 80 000 $ ou 100 000 $.

M. Scott: En effet.

Le sénateur Bryden: Je voudrais en revenir à la question des critères ou des lignes directrices. Le sénateur Lawson et moi-même avons travaillé dans le milieu syndical pendant longtemps. Le droit de défendre ses intérêts économiques vous est parfois supprimé dans l'intérêt public. Par exemple, dans le cas des pompiers et parfois des policiers, le droit de grève a été remplacé par l'arbitrage.

La plupart des lois qui imposent l'arbitrage énoncent certains critères. S'il n'y a pas de critères, vous ne pouvez pas tenir compte de la capacité de payer de l'employeur. Par conséquent, le fait que la province de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard ne pourrait pas se permettre de payer une augmentation de 25 p. 100 n'est pas un facteur dont un arbitre pourrait tenir compte. Il doit maintenant le faire car c'est sur la liste. Autrement dit, c'est une chose dont vous devez tenir compte.

Les commissions d'un grand nombre de provinces ont déjà des critères à appliquer. L'Ontario, la Colombie-Britannique, l'Alberta, le Québec et l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard en ont. La loi de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, par exemple, prévoit la nécessité de payer aux juges une rémunération juste et raisonnable et contient également des critères visant la politique du conseil de gestion et d'autres éléments concernant les dépenses des juges, des changements dans le coût de la vie, la nécessité d'attirer d'excellents candidats, la situation économique dans la province et l'état général de l'économie provinciale ainsi que les salaires et avantages sociaux versés à d'autres juges de la Cour provinciale dans d'autres provinces canadiennes. Ce n'est pas précisé ici, mais cela fait sans doute partie de «tout autre critère pertinent». Néanmoins, conformément à la règle ejusdem generis, on ne doit pas trop s'éloigner de ce genre de critères.

La loi néo-zélandaise comprend des critères très intéressants. Ce sont la nécessité d'assurer un niveau de rémunération assez comparable aux autres; la nécessité d'être équitable envers les personnes dont on détermine la rémunération et envers le contribuable ainsi que la nécessité de recruter et de retenir des personnes compétentes. Tels sont les critères dont la commission doit tenir compte.

Mr. Scott: I started this by sounding as if I do not agree with Senator Joyal on this. I am saying that those are as obvious as they can be. It is not as though they are very earth shattering. While you were speaking, I wrote: "What would the criteria be? What others are being paid, what is being paid elsewhere, what is the cost of living, what is needed to attract the right candidates, and what is the state of the economy."

Senator Bryden: Then put it in the statute.

Mr. Scott: I have no problem with that, but once you go beyond that the problems arise.

Senator Bryden: The commission is to be comprised of three people — one nominated by the judiciary, one nominated by the Minister of Justice of Canada, and a third, who will be the chairman, agreed upon by the first two.

As Senator Lawson and I know, in the real world people sometimes cannot agree on who the third person will be. There is no provision in the bill for what happens in that circumstance.

I asked the minister what would happen in such a case and her response was that the first two people chosen would be fired and the process would start all over.

I presume that if one party — presumably the government — wanted to stonewall the process, it simply would not agree to the chair.

Mr. Scott: That is interesting because most arbitration statutes provide that in the event of a deadlock you apply to a judge — which would be inappropriate in this case.

Senator Bryden: That is my next point. To break a deadlock you apply to a judge, and the judge would have some degree of interest in who is appointed as chair. That is odd.

Mr. Scott: It is odd. The minister may be right. The minister could tell the two persons who were appointed that if they cannot agree within 10 days, their appointment will be revoked and two will be found who can agree.

Senator Bryden: The minister does not have the power to do that under the statute. They would just have to come to some agreement.

If the judiciary continued to quash recommendations of the government to Parliament, or if they had the ability to quash or find ultra vires under the Constitution a decision of Parliament, I assume that the status quo would remain in place until a change was finally effected through legislation. Therefore, it is not particularly in their interest to be totally unreasonable.

Senator Moore: They can still change the legislation.

Senator Bryden: That is right, but I am a little concerned in that this whole issue basically grew out of judicial disobedience in P.E.I., where the provincial court judges took the position that they could not handle these cases because they were biased.

M. Scott: J'ai commencé en donnant l'impression que je n'étais pas d'accord avec le sénateur Joyal sur ce point. Je dis seulement que ce sont des critères évidents. Cela n'a rien de bien nouveau. Pendant que vous parliez, j'ai écrit: «Quels seraient les critères? Ce que les autres touchent, ce qui est payé ailleurs, le coût de la vie, le montant requis pour attirer des candidats compétents et l'état de l'économie.»

Le sénateur Bryden: Alors inscrivez-le dans la loi.

M. Scott: Je n'y vois pas d'objection, mais si vous allez plus loin, cela soulève des problèmes.

Le sénateur Bryden: La commission doit être composée de trois personnes. La première sera nommée par la magistrature, la deuxième par le ministre de la Justice du Canada et la troisième, qui assumera la présidence, sera nommée avec l'accord des deux premières.

Le sénateur Lawson et moi-même savons que, dans la vraie vie, les gens ne sont pas toujours d'accord sur le choix de la troisième personne. Le projet de loi ne contient aucune disposition en pareille circonstance.

J'ai demandé à la ministre ce qui se passerait en pareil cas et elle m'a répondu que les deux premières choisies seraient congédiées et que le processus recommencerait à zéro.

Si l'une des parties — en principe le gouvernement — voulait saboter le processus, il lui suffirait de ne pas être d'accord sur le choix du président.

M. Scott: C'est intéressant, car la plupart des lois sur l'arbitrage portent qu'en cas d'impasse, vous vous adressez à un juge — ce qui ne conviendrait pas dans ce cas.

Le sénateur Bryden: J'y arrive. Pour rompre une impasse vous faites appel à un juge et ce dernier sera intéressé au choix de la personne nommée à la présidence. C'est curieux.

M. Scott: En effet. La ministre a peut-être raison. Elle pourrait dire aux deux personnes qui ont été nommées que si elles n'arrivent pas à se mettre d'accord dans les 10 jours, leur nomination sera révoquée et elles seront remplacées par deux autres personnes qui pourront s'entendre.

Le sénateur Bryden: La loi ne confère pas ce pouvoir au ministre. Il faudrait simplement que les deux personnes s'entendent.

Si la magistrature continuait à s'opposer aux recommandations du gouvernement ou si elle pouvait déclarer une décision du Parlement ultra vires en vertu de la Constitution, je suppose que le statu quo serait maintenu jusqu'à ce qu'un changement soit finalement effectué en légiférant. Les juges n'ont donc pas intérêt à se montrer parfaitement déraisonnables.

Le sénateur Moore: Ils peuvent quand même modifier la loi.

Le sénateur Bryden: C'est exact, mais ce qui m'inquiète un peu c'est que toute cette question découle de la désobéissance de la magistrature à l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard où les juges de la Cour provinciale ont estimé qu'ils ne pouvaient pas se pencher sur ces causes parce qu'ils manquaient d'objectivité.

They were biased because the person who paid them was either reducing their pay or was not prepared to increase it. Therefore, in any case where you had the Crown, Regina, against Joe Blow, the judge might very well be prejudiced against Regina and let the guy off. To my mind, that is judicial disobedience, like civil disobedience. Finally, it bubbled up and the issue arrived here.

We are back at the arena of Senator Lawson and myself: Who has the most power? Parliament has the ability to refuse to pass the legislation, and the judges have the ability to say that, if that is true, they will not hear any cases. Somehow we have to be sure to avoid those circumstances.

About the question of criteria, there are some criteria already established by the courts. One of them we have not discussed because it does not happen very often. To my knowledge, it has happened only in one case at the inferior level.

In the case of provincial judges, the Supreme Court declared a reduction of salaries as invalid, as ultra vires. It forced the government to reimburse the judges.

When we read the question of independence of judges, we must take into account the fact that, in that case, we were concerned with the real problem because there were some reductions of judges at the provincial level.

I do not know in which constitution this is found but I remember having read a constitution that makes it impossible to reduce the salary of a judge. It is unconstitutional right at the beginning. There is no such thing in our country, but I guess we may infer from that that if there is a reduction, that is at least strike two for the government because it seems, prima facie, to go against the principle of the independence of the judiciary. What do you think?

Mr. Scott: I have two points on that. It is interesting that, in the P.E.I. case, the court concluded that an across-the-board freeze is, theoretically, a reduction. Because the cost of living is increasing, it is a reduction.

In the Beauregard case, the argument was that, after the judge's appointment, a change in the law requiring contributory pensions was a reduction. Chief Justice Dickson concluded that it was a reduction but it was a legitimate reduction. That case came from the Quebec Court of Appeal. There had been a bill in the house and, literally weeks after the judge's appointment, the law was proclaimed to the effect that judges, who before had free pensions, now had to make contributions. He interpreted that, not surprisingly, as a form of reduction of his salary. He sued Her Majesty and it went through to the Federal Court. He was successful at every level until the Supreme Court divided and he lost.

The court concluded — and this was really the beginning in Chief Justice Dickson's notion of across-the-board, even-handed treatment. The conclusion was that everybody contributes to his or En effet, leur employeur s'apprêtait à réduire leur traitement, ou n'était pas disposé à l'augmenter. En conséquence, dans toutes les affaires plaidées par la Couronne, le juge risquait d'avoir un préjugé favorable à l'adversaire de la Couronne et de lui donner gain de cause. À mon avis, on peut parler ici de désobéissance judiciaire comme on parle de désobéissance civile. Finalement, la situation a continué à mitonner, et voilà où on en est rendu.

Je suis dans la même situation que le sénateur Lawson: qui a le gros bout du bâton? Le Parlement a la possibilité de refuser d'adopter le projet de loi, et les juges ont la possibilité de dire que si tout cela est vrai, ils refuseront de juger. Quoi qu'il en soit, il faut absolument éviter les circonstances de ce genre.

Sur la question des critères, les tribunaux en ont déjà fixé un certain nombre. Il y en a un dont nous n'avons pas parlé, car il n'est pas appliqué très souvent. À ma connaissance, il n'a été appliqué qu'une fois par une juridiction inférieure.

Dans le cas des juges provinciaux, la Cour suprême a déclaré que toute réduction de salaire était invalide et qu'elle outrepassait les pouvoirs de l'exécutif. La cour a obligé le gouvernement à rembourser les juges.

En ce qui concerne l'indépendance des juges, il faut tenir compte du fait qu'en l'occurrence, nous nous sommes intéressés au véritable problème, car les salaires des juges ont subi des réductions au niveau provincial.

Je ne me souviens plus de quelle partie de la Constitution il s'agit, mais j'ai vu un jour une disposition qui interdit de réduire le salaire d'un juge. D'emblée c'est une mesure anticonstitutionnelle. C'est impossible dans notre pays, mais il faut en déduire qu'en termes de réduction, le gouvernement sera automatiquement condamné car de toute évidence, une telle réduction va à l'encontre du principe de l'indépendance de la magistrature. Qu'en pensez-vous?

M. Scott: J'ai deux choses à dire à ce sujet. On remarque avec intérêt que dans l'arrêt concernant l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, la cour a considéré qu'un gel de salaire équivaut théoriquement à une réduction. À cause de l'augmentation du coût de la vie, c'est une réduction de salaire.

Dans l'arrêt Beauregard, on a considéré qu'après la nomination d'un juge, tout changement législatif qui impose un régime de pensions contributif équivaut à une réduction de salaire. Le juge en chef Dickson a considéré qu'il s'agissait d'une réduction, mais d'une réduction légitime. C'est un arrêt de la Cour d'appel du Québec. L'Assemblée nationale avait adopté un projet de loi et quelques semaines après la nomination d'un juge, le gouvernement a promulgué une loi prévoyant que les juges, qui bénéficiaient antérieurement des régimes de pension gratuits, devaient désormais verser des contributions. Naturellement, le juge a interprété cette mesure comme une forme de réduction de salaire. Il a poursuivi la Couronne jusqu'en cour fédérale. Il a obtenu gain de cause à tous les niveaux, jusqu'à ce que la Cour suprême se prononce sur division et lui donne tort.

La cour a considéré — et c'était là le premier argument du juge en chef Dickson, qui a parlé de traitement uniforme — que tout le monde contribuait à son régime de pension et qu'il n'y avait her pension so why should not judges contribute to theirs? They found there was nothing unconstitutional.

The argument was a constitutional one — that salaries must be fixed and provided and that it is inappropriate to reduce them. It was rejected. A reduction without more is not necessarily, in contemporary terms, evidence of anything.

Senator Beaudoin: There may be a case where it might be justified.

Mr. Scott: It might be justifiable. I think it is the juxtaposition. In an interesting example, a bill was discussed in Arizona where, on the one hand, there was a lot of talk about judges being out of control — which is the way it develops — while, coincidentally, over here, there was a discussion about the level of their income being too high. If these things are discussed at the same time, it gives you pause and it is troubling. That is the kind of thing where a reduction may be seen.

Senator Fraser: Almost identical to that, I have been sitting here brooding about how this would play out in practice. I am really troubled by the notion of giving a profession the right to, effectively, control its own pay when its salaries are paid out of public money.

Senator Lawson: That is what MPs do.

Senator Fraser: MPs must go back to the public, which is why they get in such a dither every time they have to think about a pay increase. Judges do not.

I was comforted by the observation of the chairman that, if we are talking about salary increases, when a judge says no to a bill, he does not get any increase at all. He is stuck with the status quo. However, when it comes to reduction, I seriously wonder because then, if a judge says no to the bill, he does not get a pay-cut. He gets to keep what he has.

I have enormous respect for judges but it seems to me that some of their wisdom — and the pension case you cited is one example — goes out the window when their own interests are at stake. There was a situation in Montreal a few years ago where judges were actually arguing that, in order to preserve their judicial independence, they had to continue to have indoor parking spots, free, near the elevator.

Mr. Scott: Surely there must be more to the argument than that.

Senator Fraser: No, they were busy persons and did not want to have to walk the length of the garage nor pay for the space.

You have outlined a couple of interesting elements that suggest that, ultimately, the judiciary has come a long way, such as Justice Lamer's reference to an across-the-board freeze being fair, in particular.

I am trying to find out whether, in our present state, we could reasonably assume that, faced with cuts across the board, affecting everybody, in the situation of deflation or of dire budgetary stringency where government needs to reduce pay for everyone, the courts would sit still for that or stonewall.

aucune raison pour que les juges ne contribuent pas au leur. Une telle mesure n'a rien d'inconstitutionnel.

L'argumentation portait sur la constitution: les salaires doivent être fixes et ne peuvent être réduits. L'argument a été rejeté. Dans le contexte contemporain, une simple réduction ne prouve rien.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Il peut arriver qu'elle soit justifiée.

M. Scott: Elle peut être justifiée. On essaye de juxtaposer deux notions. Dans un autre exemple intéressant, on a présenté en Arizona un projet de loi à un moment où, d'une part, on parlait beaucoup des juges qui échappaient à tout contrôle — c'est ce qui se passe là-bas — et où, parallèlement, on disait aussi que les revenus des juges étaient trop élevés. Quand des sujets de cette nature font simultanément l'objet d'un débat public, la situation prête à confusion. On peut alors parler d'une véritable réduction.

Le sénateur Fraser: Dans le même ordre d'idées, j'étais en train de me demander ce que cela pouvait donner en pratique. Je trouve gênant de conférer à une profession le droit de déterminer sa propre rémunération, alors même que les salaires de ses membres proviennent du Trésor public.

Le sénateur Lawson: C'est pourtant ce que font les députés.

Le sénateur Fraser: Les députés doivent s'exposer à l'opinion publique, et c'est pourquoi ils sont si nerveux à chaque fois qu'ils envisagent d'augmenter leur rémunération. Ce n'est pas le cas des juges.

J'ai bien apprécié la remarque de la présidente, qui a dit que lorsqu'il est question d'une augmentation de salaire, si un juge s'oppose à un projet de loi, il n'obtient aucune augmentation. Il conserve le même salaire. Mais lorsqu'il est question d'une réduction, j'ai des doutes, car si un juge s'oppose au projet de loi, il évite une réduction de salaire. Il conserve ses acquis.

J'ai beaucoup de respect pour les juges, mais il me semble qu'une partie de leur sagesse — par exemple dans le cas des pensions que vous avez cité — s'envole en fumée lorsqu'il est question de leur propre intérêt. Il y a quelques années, à Montréal, les juges ont prétendu que pour préserver leur indépendance, il fallait continuer de leur accorder gratuitement des places dans un stationnement intérieur, à proximité de l'ascenseur.

M. Scott: Cela ne devait pas être leur seul argument.

Le sénateur Fraser: Non, ils ont dit qu'ils étaient très occupés et qu'ils ne voulaient pas avoir tout un stationnement à traverser, et qu'ils n'accepteraient pas de frais de stationnement.

Vous avez présenté divers facteurs intéressants qui semblent indiquer qu'en définitive, l'opinion de la magistrature a déjà évolué considérablement, par exemple lorsque le juge Lamer reconnaît qu'un gel de salaire n'est pas injuste.

J'aimerais savoir si les tribunaux resteraient sans bouger dans un contexte de déflation ou de difficulté budgétaire grave qui obligerait le gouvernement à réduire tous les salaires.

Mr. Scott: I am confident that they would sit still now. I do not know that they would have done so 10 years ago.

Senator Fraser: You think we have come that far?

Mr. Scott: Yes, I do.

Senator Fraser: You think we can read that into Justice Lamer's comments?

Mr. Scott: Yes. I do not have the language at hand, but he virtually says that. If you have an across-the-board treatment that affects everyone based on economic conditions, of course the judges would be required to accept it. It seems self-evident.

Senator Fraser: Of course, but parking spots near the elevator also seems self-evident to me.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Scott, for your help. You have kept the ball in our court.

Our next witness, Madame Lucie Laliberté, is a lawyer who has been doing research on women and pensions over the past 13 years. Her practice is focussed on family law. She is also the president of the Organization of Spouses of Military Members and has presented briefs on their behalf to the Government of the Province of Ontario, the House of Commons and the Senate Finance Committee. Ms Laliberté asked to appear before this committee because many of the proposed amendments in Bill C-37 are similar to those that she did research on for Bill C-35 and she thought that her experience would be of value to the committee, and the steering committee agreed.

Madame Laliberté, the floor is yours.

Ms Lucie Laliberté, Lawyer, Gahrns & Laliberté: I should like to raise one preliminary matter that arose from my discussions with the clerk before being allowed to appear here. I raised the issue that there is litigation on this matter before the courts at this time, and the clerk of the committee expressed some concern about that. For that reason I would like some direction.

I propose not to deal with the substance or the merits of the case, but it does relate specifically to the definition of "survivor benefit." I will keep my remarks limited to those issues that are raised in the case and also relate them to the issues that I found under Bill C-57.

Senator Beaudoin: Legally speaking, I do not see a big problem with this, if you are simply giving us the information you have in mind. As a committee of the Senate we have the right to hear witnesses. I understand your concern, but if you are prudent in your presentation, I do not see any problem.

Ms Laliberté: My concern was with the fact that the way it was presented to me, I might have declined to appear or I might have limited my presentation. I am a lawyer, so I worked my way around that. I appreciate your comments.

I will be speaking only to the issues relating to pension division and death benefits, including the survivor benefits in Bill C-57. I propose to start with a brief general comparison of the main provisions of the public service plans. The ones I am most

M. Scott: Je suis sûr qu'ils resteraient sans bouger aujourd'hui, alors que les choses auraient peut-être été différentes il y a 10 ans.

Le sénateur Fraser: Pensez-vous qu'on ait progressé à ce point?

M. Scott: Oui.

Le sénateur Fraser: Pensez-vous qu'on puisse interpréter en ce sens les commentaires du juge Lamer?

M. Scott: Oui, je n'ai pas son arrêt par-devers moi, mais c'est presque ce qu'il a dit. Lorsqu'une décision générale fondée sur le contexte économique a des conséquences pour tout le monde, les juges sont obligés de l'accepter. C'est l'évidence même.

Le sénateur Fraser: Bien sûr, mais les places de stationnement près de l'ascenseur me semblent aussi évidentes.

La présidente: Merci de votre aide, monsieur Scott. Vous avez gardé la balle de notre côté.

Notre témoin suivant, Mme Lucie Laliberté, est avocate; elle se consacre depuis plus de 13 ans à des recherches sur les femmes et la retraite. Elle est spécialisée en droit de la famille. Elle est également présidente de l'Organization of Spouses of Military Members, qu'elle a représentée auprès du gouvernement de l'Ontario, de la Chambre des communes et du comité sénatorial des finances. Mme Laliberté a demandé à comparaître devant notre comité parce que de nombreux amendements concernant le projet de loi C-37 sont semblables à des amendements concernant le projet de loi C-35 qu'elle a étudiés et elle a pensé que son expérience pouvait intéresser le comité; notre comité directeur lui a donné raison.

Madame Laliberté, vous avez la parole.

Mme Lucie Laliberté, avocate, Gahrns & Laliberté: Je voudrais soulever tout d'abord une question préliminaire dont j'ai parlé avec la greffière avant d'être autorisée à comparaître devant vous. J'ai signalé que cette question est actuellement devant les tribunaux et la greffière du comité s'en est inquiétée. Voilà pourquoi j'aimerais avoir votre avis.

Je me propose de ne traiter ni du fond, ni du bien-fondé de la question, mais tout porte spécifiquement sur la définition de la «prestation au survivant». Je limiterai mon propos aux questions soulevées dans cette affaire, dans le contexte des éléments découverts lors de l'étude du projet de loi C-57.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Sur le plan juridique, il ne devrait pas y avoir de problème si vous nous faites simplement part de l'information que vous avez à l'esprit. En tant que membres d'un comité sénatorial, nous avons le droit d'entendre des témoins. Je comprends vos craintes, mais si vous faites preuve de prudence dans votre exposé, il ne devrait pas y avoir de problème.

Mme Laliberté: Ce que je craignais, c'est que compte tenu de la façon dont l'invitation avait été présentée, je pouvais refuser de comparaître ou décider de limiter mon exposé. Je suis avocate, et j'ai donc résolu la difficulté. Je vous remercie de vos remarques.

Je ne vais parler que des questions concernant la division de la pension et des prestations de décès, y compris des prestations au survivant telles qu'elles apparaissent dans le projet de loi C-57. Je commencerai par comparer brièvement les principales dispositions

JUDGES ACT

Hon. Don Boudria (for the Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of, and concurrence in, amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-37, an act to amend the Judges Act and to make consequential amendments to other acts.

Ms. Eleni Bakopanos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada, Lib.): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-37, an act to amend the Judges Act, has come back to this House with amendments from the other House. The Senate and the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs gave serious consideration to all aspects of this important bill and heard from a number of witnesses who contributed a range of perspectives on certain issues of concern to the Senate.

On behalf of the government and the Minister of Justice I want to commend the senators for their diligent review of the issues. Here is an example of the necessity of having a Senate to review House legislation. According to this government the Senate did an excellent job.

The key elements of Bill C-37 were passed by the Senate, including important improvements to the judicial compensation and benefits commission process, necessary increases to current judicial salaries after years of salary freezes and a major expansion of unified family courts in Canada.

However, the Senate proposed and passed two substantive changes to Bill C-37 that relate to the definition of surviving spouse and the mandate of the new judicial compensation and benefits commission. The government is prepared to support these amendments for the following reasons.

With respect to survivor benefits, the Senate did not pass the provision in the bill relating to the change in definition of surviving spouse to include common law spouses. The Scott commission recommended that survivors' annuities be extended to common law spouses "where legally appropriate".

• (1005)

However, the commission did not systematically review all of the ramifications of extending the entitlement to survivors' annuities. It was these ramifications that gave rise to concern and debate at Senate committee.

I want to point out that no one disagrees with extending the benefit to common law spouses. Rather, the issue that caused some public debate and a lot of debate in the Senate is the method by which this recognition is implemented.

[Translation]

In accepting the recommendation made by the Scott commission, the government had to consider its impact on specific cases, including the formula to be used when there are two surviving spouses.

In the public service sector, the solution chosen is to divide the pension between the two surviving spouses. This is the approach taken in the public service pension plan and in the pension plan for members of Parliament and senators. We felt this was a reasonable solution which ensured consistency with other federal pension plans.

[English]

However, before the Senate committee there was much discussion and disagreement on what was the best approach to be used in this case.

After due consideration the Senate committee did not feel that all of the issues had been sufficiently resolved and recommended that the new judicial compensation and benefits commission take a fresh look at the issue of judicial pensions and their treatment after marriage breakdown.

The Senate also heard arguments which suggested that the federal government has no constitutional authority to legislate over survivors' annuities.

It is important to indicate that the government's concurrence in this amendment is not to be taken as agreement with such a suggestion. The federal government does have the clear authority to deal with pension matters, including matters ancillary to the creation and administration of those pensions. We do not accept the argument that the government is acting outside of its jurisdiction on this matter.

[Translation]

However, in light of the concerns expressed, we accept that it would be useful to have the new judicial compensation and benefits commission look at possible solutions for the specific case where there are two surviving spouses.

The purpose of this commission is to remove the political element in determining the benefits and compensation to be paid to judges. The commission will hear the opinions of a number of experts in pension plans and family law, and those of other concerned parties, before making recommendations on a formula for surviving spouses that is fair and consistent with the general practices in the area of pensions.

[English]

The Senate also gave very careful consideration to and ultimately approved the new commission process in Bill C-37. However, the Senate was of the view that the process would be further strengthened by the inclusion of certain express statutory criteria that would help define and clarify the scope of the mandate of the new judicial compensation and benefits commission.

The Senate amendment will provide, in the statute, for objective criteria that the commission must consider in reaching its recommendations.

[Translation]

The objective criteria cited were the following: the state of Canada's economy, including the cost of living, as well as the government's overall economic and financial situation; the role played by the financial security of judges in maintaining judicial independence; the need to recruit the best candidates for the bench; and any other objective factor it deems pertinent.

• (1010)

[English]

As a matter of practice, the mandate letters of prior triennial commissions have always specified express objective criteria that should be considered.

For the government and the minister there was never any doubt that this practice would continue. However, putting these criteria into the statute will make it clear to everyone that objective criteria will continue to be used in coming to recommendations on judicial compensation.

This amendment will, therefore, reinforce the objective nature of the mandate of the new judicial compensation and benefits commission.

[Translation]

The Senate also proposed a number of technical amendments regarding the wording of provisions in the bill, which do not change its content but which clarify the original intention of the bill. The government also supports these amendments.

In conclusion, the government is in favour of these amendments to Bill C-37. Eliminating the definition of surviving spouse will allow the new commission to examine all the options for recognizing common-law spouses and to make recommendations for a fair and logical approach in cases where there are two surviving spouses.

The inclusion of obligatory criteria will help to clarify the mandate of the new judicial compensation and benefits commission and, as a result, will enhance the credibility and independence of this commission.

[English]

Bill C-37 will strengthen what is already one of the best judicial systems in the world. The improvements to the judicial compensation process will ensure continued public confidence in the independence of our judiciary.

The bill provides reasonable and fair compensation for our judges consistent with the important role they play in protecting the key values in our democratic society.

Increased judicial resources for unified family courts combined with provincial commitment of support services will improve the way our courts respond to families and children in crisis. The increase in the number of court of appeal judges will improve access to justice generally.

This bill will both enhance the independence of our courts and improve access to justice. These are goals which I am sure all Canadians support.

Mr. Chuck Cadman (Surrey North, Ref.): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to debate the government's concurrence motion on Senate amendments to Bill C-37.

For the record, this is the second occasion I have had the opportunity to state Reform's opposition to this bill. This is a bill which grants judges an unprecedented salary increase of 8.3% and establishes a judicial compensation and benefits commission.

The official opposition is grateful for the amendment put forward by our colleague from Crowfoot. We are grateful that it was supported and passed in this House during report stage of Bill C-37.

The Reform amendment ensures that every four years the Standing Committee on Justice and Human Rights has the opportunity to review the report of the commission on judges' salaries and benefits. This task will not be left solely to the Minister of Justice as originally contemplated by the government.

However, this amendment has not swayed our opposition to the bill. It has simply made it more palatable. The Reform Party still stands firmly opposed to Bill C-37.

As stated repeatedly in this House during all stages of the bill, other public servants and Canadians in general have not been afforded the same wage increase as that granted to the judges by Bill C-37. At a time when Canadian incomes continue to decline we cannot support such an unprecedented hike in salary.

According to a June 10 Ottawa Citizen article, family incomes are still dropping and as a result Canadians need to stretch the family budget to keep a roof over their heads. While housing costs eased during the first half of the decade, family income declined even more. That nudged a proportion of Canadians who spend at least 30% of their income on shelter to one in four households, or almost 2.8 million households. These findings, released by Statistics Canada, were derived from the 1996 census.

Another Citizen article, published on the same date, revealed that more and more two-parent families had both parents in the workforce in 1996, while at the same time the number of children left at home was increasing.

• (1015)

Statistics Canada reported that the overall lower income among Canadians in 1996 was the reason both parents were being forced into the labour market. Stats Canada has also reported that the majority of Canadian children, 4.8 million under the age of 15, lived in two parent families in 1996. Of those children 60% had both parents in the workforce, up from 43% in 1981.

In light of this information regarding the income of Canadians, in good conscience the Reform Party cannot support the bill. In the same vein we cannot support the government's concurrence in the Senate amendments.

I recognize the thorough job the Senate did in reviewing the bill and the substantive amendments put forward by the upper house. In particular I single out Liberal Senator Anne Cools for her diligent efforts in revealing the inadequacies of the bill.

Senator Cools rightfully exposed the fact that Bill C-37 effectively allows judges to set their own salaries and perks. In doing so it sets up the possibility of there being a showdown between parliament and the judiciary because it allows judges to appeal parliament's decision regarding a recommended salary increase in the courts. Essentially judges could have the final say over whether parliamentarians are giving them a sufficient raise.

Although former judicial pay commissioner David Scott has said that it is unlikely judges would be setting their own salaries, he has not ruled out the possibility of the judiciary challenging parliament's response to the commission's recommendations.

The judiciary would have to prove, however, in a court that the refusal to increase salaries or a decision to lower them was motivated by a wish to diminish the independence of judges. Mr. Scott said that even if the judges won in such a case the court could only declare parliament's motion on the issue void, which may result in a stalemate.

As pointed out by the Liberal senator this will:

—deprive Canadians of their undoubted constitutional right to the representative assembly's control over the public purse in respect of judicial salaries.

Clearly control of the public purse rests with parliament and not with the judiciary. Section 100 of the 1867 Constitution Act states in part:

The salaries, allowances and pensions of the judges... shall be fixed and provided by the Parliament of Canada.

Clause 6 of Bill C-37 potentially abolishes the true parliamentary role in the fixing of judges salaries. We must obviously question why the Minister of Justice has bestowed such potentially wielding powers on the judiciary in Bill C-37.

One can only surmise, and again I use the thoughts and words of Senator Cools when she said:

The real intent (of Bill C-37) is to remove parliament from the process.... There is a problem in that certain particular judges seem to crave a closeness to certain individuals in the Department of Justice and are trying to cling, closer and closer, to the executive rather than to parliament. In other words, honourable senators, what is happening here is that 200 years of history are being turned on their head, and we are being told in this judgment that, quite frankly, judges prefer their fate to be in the hands of the executive rather than in the hands of parliament. It is a most curious and interesting subject matter.

I will turn specifically to the amendments put forward by the Senate. Amendments 1, 5, 6, 7 and 8 delete all the clauses referring to two spouses. Bill C-37, as originally drafted by the Department of Justice, created a legal right for a judge to have two spouses. The two spouses clause was meant to deal with a circumstance in which a married judge separates from his or her partner, moves into a common law relationship with another person and then dies. Once law, it would allow a judge to have both spouses, married and common law, eligible for the lucrative pension payouts and divide the money between them when the judge dies.

Additionally the common law spouse would collect the one time payout of one-sixth of the judge's annual salary at the time of death.

Former Supreme Court Justice Willard Estey has said that these particular Bill C-37 amendments would give his former colleagues on the bench the right to a kind of home-made harem. It would, Estey said:

—effectively create two separate sets of family law—one for judges and one for everyone else.

It has been well established that situations such as the one contemplated in Bill C-37 are rare. One therefore must question why such a clause was put in Bill C-37. Critics have suggested that this clause was tailor made for Chief Justice LeSage who is separated from his wife and has resided for about one year with Judge Lang. If Chief Justice LeSage were to die, the new amendment would allow both Judge Lang and Mrs. LeSage to qualify as his surviving spouses and share his pension.

• (1020)

As pointed out earlier, Senator Cools, as well as many others, have surmised that Bill C-37 appears tailored to fit particular individuals. Senator Cools said:

We have a situation in the country where certain individuals have access to the legislative writing machine. That is bothersome.

This certainly is not the first time the government has tailor made legislation. Previous amendments to the Judges Act introduced during the last parliament under Bill C-42 set out terms in which Canadian judges could participate in international activities, although it was never explicitly admitted by the government—it was no secret—that those amendments to the Judges Act arose due to the appointment of Madam Justice Louise Arbour to the United Nations as prosecutor for the War Crimes Commission.

I commend the Senate and support those amendments eliminating this tailor made clause of Bill C-37, clauses which, as stated by Senator Cools, “script their sins into the laws of the nation”.

We do not support, however, Amendment No. 3 which adds subclauses to clause 6 of Bill C-37. Clause 6 establishes the judicial compensation and benefits commission. These subclauses effectively expand the powers of the commission, powers which were not contemplated or countenanced in the original bill. Specifically we take issue with section (1.1)(a) which reads:

In conducting its inquiry, the commission shall consider (a) the prevailing economic conditions in Canada, including the cost of living, and the overall economic and current financial position of the federal government.

What exactly does this mean? How expansive are the powers of the commission? Does the reference to the current financial position of the federal government mean the commission will have the power to call the Minister of Finance before it to question him on our financial status? If such powers are vested with the commission, it is setting a dangerous precedent, a precedent the official opposition cannot support.

During his appearance before the Senate committee reviewing Bill C-37 former commission chairman David Scott clearly questioned statutorily defining criteria as proposed by the Senate. In fact Mr. Scott went so far as to say:

I am not sure what the relevant criteria would be.... I am not saying that there should not be any criteria, but once you start down the road of developing criteria, you may create a monster.

Clearly the Senate's amendment goes against the advice of the former commissioner.

As stated earlier, the official opposition does not support the government's concurrence motion. Nor do we support any expansion of the commission's powers, powers which were not originally contemplated by the government and the House.

A decision of the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island forced the federal government to establish a judicial compensation commission. Bill C-37, as originally introduced, meets that legal obligation. Senate Amendment No. 3 is therefore unnecessary.

I caution the government's wisdom in accepting all the Senate amendments, particularly given the expanded powers of the commission which may involve additional time and travel for their inquiries, time and travel which may cost additional expenditure of funds that were not originally contemplated by the royal recommendation of Bill C-37. I am not emphatically stating that there is a violation. I am simply raising a flag for the record.

In closing, I reiterate the Reform Party's position. We stand opposed to Senate Amendment No. 3. We stand opposed to the outrageous salary increase for judges at a time when financial pressures on Canadian families continue to increase as their quality of life decreases.

It is incredible that we sit in this place in consideration of a windfall increase in pay for judges while in my home province of British Columbia public safety is being put at risk through reduced law enforcement due to the gutting of RCMP budgets.

In my constituency a police car which sustains more than $4,000 damage is parked because there is no money to get it repaired. There is not enough money to replace worn tires on patrol cars, putting both police and public at risk. Store owners fear loss of business as customers run a gauntlet of crack cocaine dealers because police lack the money and resources to deal effectively with them.

We stand opposed to the concurrence motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Marceau (Charlesbourg, BQ): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill C-37, as amended by the Senate.

It is often said that what is clearly understood can be clearly expressed. With this in mind, let me outline the Bloc Québécois' position. We oppose Bill C-37. However, while the amendments put forward by our brave colleagues in the Senate are a step in the right direction, we think many more amendments would be required and much more work would have to be done on this bill before the Bloc Québécois could consider supporting it.

• (1025)

On October 22, the Senate made eight amendments to the bill. We are opposed to the principle of raising federal judges' salaries by approximately 13%, which is unacceptable to us in the Bloc Quebecois, and that is why we oppose the bill.

On the other hand, we are in favour of establishing the Judicial Benefits and Compensation Commission. We are also in favour of the Senate amendments for the following reasons: a number of these amendments would bring the French and English versions of the bill more in line with one another, while one other amendment clarifies the mandate of the commission being established by the federal government.

This amendment explicitly sets out what we believe was the implicit mandate of the Judicial Benefits and Compensation Commission. In our view, these explicit criteria are positive and fair.

For the Bloc Quebecois, the most crucial of these amendments is the one deleting clause 1 of Bill C-37. Clause 1 defines the term "surviving spouse" and, for constitutional reasons, we are opposed to the inclusion of surviving spouses in Bill C-37.

In this respect, we support the explanation given to the committee by Professor Jamie Cameron of Osgoode Hall. According to Professor Cameron, while it is the responsibility of the federal government to set benefits for federally appointed judges, the provinces have a similar responsibility with respect to matrimonial property and the division of assets in an estate.

Pensions are included in matrimonial property under family and estate distribution law. This raises the question of whether the federal government has jurisdiction to legislate the division of estate assets by defining the expression "surviving spouse" and with all the rights accorded subsequently in the bill according to the definition of "surviving spouse".

According to Ms. Cameron, and the Bloc Quebecois completely supports this position, the federal government is encroaching on provincial jurisdiction over matrimonial and estate property.

Accordingly, we support the amendments eliminating clause 1, which defines "surviving spouse" and the clauses pertaining to the rights of surviving spouses.

The purpose of the bill is to amend the Judges Act in order to increase judges' salaries and to change the criteria governing pension plan eligibility. The bill also establishes the Judicial Benefits and Compensation Commission.

Finally, the bill provides for more judges in appeal and unified family courts. The bill is the Liberal government's response to the 1995 triennial commission on judges' salaries and benefits, also known as the Scott commission.

In 1981, Parliament provided for the creation of independent commissions with a mandate to confirm that the pay and benefits of judges were sufficient in view of the importance of judicial independence and the unique role given judges by the Canadian Constitution.

On September 18, 1997, in a reference regarding the remuneration of provincial court justices in Prince Edward Island, which pertained to the independence and impartiality of these justices, the Supreme Court stressed the importance of these independent commissions, which establish a vital link between two government powers: the executive and the judicial. The court also pointed out the constitutional obligation to set magistrates' salaries.

The commission's recommendations are not binding on the government, but the court judgment requires a reasonable and public justification to be provided if the recommendations are rejected, before a court of law if necessary.

The 1995 Scott Commission I have already referred to recommended a progressive 8.3% increase, and the Liberal government accepted that recommendation in its bill by proposing 4.1% yearly for two years.

Moreover, in determining what was reasonable, the Scott Commission acknowledged that a complex and broad range of factors needed to be taken into consideration in determining the appropriate pay level, including the need of pay levels capable of attracting and retaining the most qualified candidates for the office of judge.

The report is based on the relationship between judges' salaries and those of lawyers in private practice, since this is the source of most candidates for the office of judge.

Section 25 of the Judges Act calls for annual adjustments to judges' salaries based on the increase in the industrial aggregate, up to a maximum of seven per cent.

Judges' salaries were frozen between December 1992 and March 31, 1997, under the Public Service Compensation Restraint Act.

Our objection to the Scott report is that it is based solely on federal economic activity indicators, and not on the economic sectors most heavily affected since the 1993 cuts. In our opinion, the most fundamental question is whether we should be putting books back into the schools and beds back into the hospitals, or raising the salaries of high court judges already earning $155,800. These are hardly starvation wages, after all.

To sum up the Bloc Quebecois' position on Bill C-37, we think that the Liberal government has already achieved its zero deficit, but we all know it did so on the backs of the provinces, unemployed workers and the most disadvantaged members of our society.

The Minister of Justice may well want to reward judges by increasing their salaries, but she would do better to persuade her colleague, the Minister of Finance, to compensate the provinces for the cuts to health, welfare and post-secondary education transfer payments.

The Bloc Québécois puts other priorities ahead of raising judges' salaries. None of us is in any doubt that judges work hard, but they are far from the only ones doing so.

It is for these reasons that the Bloc Québécois is opposed to the principle of increasing judges' salaries. We are in favour of creating an independent commission, but we cannot go along with this lapse in solidarity and vision in an economic context where the provinces have borne the brunt of the federal government's fight to eliminate the deficit.

Naturally, we have heard the government's arguments that the most competent lawyers must be attracted to the bench, and we fully agree. But judges too are members of society, and as such must take part in the collective effort. Even though the federal deficit has been eliminated, the $500 billion debt is still hanging over our heads.

Instead of increasing judges' salaries, the government could have given the money to the provinces to buy hospital beds and to help the most disadvantaged members of our society.

The supplementary estimates tabled last Wednesday also indicate that the Canadian unity group at Justice, one of whose responsibilities is the reference to the Supreme Court, is costing Canadian and Quebec taxpayers $700,000. Again, this money could have paid for many hospital beds and many meals on the tables of the most disadvantaged members of our society.

Today, therefore, I am calling on the Minister of Justice to withdraw her bill and to use the money instead to compensate the provinces for the unjust cuts they have suffered since this Liberal government took office.

[English]

Mr. Peter Mancini (Sydney—Victoria, NDP): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address the Senate amendments to Bill C-37.

I reviewed some of the comments that I made on behalf of my party some time ago when this bill was first introduced. I compared this piece of legislation to a recipe that my grandfather brought to this country from Italy some time ago. I said that as much as my grandfather would try to pass that recipe onto his children, when he would taste the sauce he would say "You got a little bit of it right and whole lot of it wrong". I said that this bill was very similar to that sauce.

The Senate has added a dash a salt but nothing particularly to improve the flavour of this legislation. What remains tragic is that with this legislation there was an opportunity for the government to address some fundamental issues.

I will pick up on the comments of my colleague from Charlebourg. He talked about cutbacks in the provinces. He talked about hospital beds. He talked about the kinds of things that matter to Canadians at a time when this government is determined that we should give judges a substantial increase in their salaries.

I am not going to talk so much about hospital beds. I am going to talk about the justice system and where those funds might be funnelled at a time of increasing demands on the courts, at a time when we are looking at a role for victims to play in the courts, at a time when crown prosecutors who have to enforce the laws are finding their hands tied because of lack of resources, and at a time when the RCMP and law enforcement agencies are finding their budgets slashed.

When we are determining how the very sparse funds have to be divided up, increasing the judges' salary at this point in time when this country has other problems is perhaps not the wisest and most judicial, if you will, use of funds.

I sit on the custody and access committee. One complaint we have heard continually is that when there is a dispute in family law it cannot be resolved for months because of the backlog in cases. There is a lack of legal aid availability for parties who are seeking to bring their matters before the court. There is a lack of court clerks. There is a lack of all kinds of necessary instruments to bring matters to court and to have them resolved quickly. When matters are not resolved quickly before the courts, it results in increased tension between the parties. The parties take matters into their own hands and there is increased concern.

These funds might have been better spent in improving the justice system in the provinces. That is in the family law courts. Let us look at the criminal courts.

More and more powers are being delegated to provincial court judges with fewer and fewer resources. Again this means longer waiting times for court hearings. It does no good for the accused, who lives under a cloud of suspicion while waiting for his or her day in court. It does no good for the victim, who waits for months and months in a system he or she never asked to end up in the first place.

The cuts to the provinces have resulted in increased waiting times in both the criminal and family courts.

Also, as has been raised by this side of the House, the RCMP training centre out west is being closed down. I am meeting with a group of people in my own riding next Monday when the House is down. Seniors in my riding have been told that when they press an alarm, it will only be responded to if the person pressing the alarm can guarantee that there is a break and enter.

Government Orders

I practised criminal law for some time. It was a rare occasion when one could say to the criminal breaking into the home "Hold on for a minute while I call the police to confirm that you are here. Would you take the phone and let the RCMP know that there is a reason for them to come". I do not blame the RCMP officers for this. The reality is that they do not have the resources to respond unless they can be sure there is a crime taking place. At the same time that this is happening, we are increasing the wages for some of the wealthiest people in this country. I again question whether that is the best use of resources.

There was also a golden opportunity, which I have spoken to the Minister of Justice about, to review the method of appointment of judges. The parliamentary secretary has said in support of some of the Senate amendments that the criteria in terms of determining judicial compensation ought to be accepted and it is something the government looks favourably on. I would suggest we ought to revamp the criteria for the appointment of judges before we revamp the criteria for increasing their salaries and determining whether they ought to get it.

This country has some very good judges. I do not want to diminish that for a moment. The late Justice Dickson was an example of a fine judge. He moved this country forward in his position as a supreme court justice. There are hundreds of good judges in this country.

Every now and then we hear about an appointment to the court that is simply a patronage appointment. It is well known certainly on the east coast and in the province I come from that part of how one gets to the judiciary is to make the right contributions to the parties in power.

• (1040)

Just this summer there was an appointment of a judge to the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia. Prior to her being a judge, she started her career as a lawyer and a keen organizer for the Liberal Party. The reward for that was an appointment to the public utility board in Nova Scotia which paid some $75,000 a year up until the age of 75. This was a pretty nice plum and everybody thought she was satisfied with that. As it turned out, she was a classmate of the Minister of Justice, I think the year behind. She was not too happy on the utility board and found herself appointed to the supreme court. That appointment met with considerable criticism in the province. It was not the only one.

That is unfair to the judges who legitimately serve this country well, who achieve their appointment on merit. We need to have a discussion about this. I have indicated to the Minister of Justice that there ought to be a subcommittee of the justice committee that can explore and ensure a fair method of the appointment of the judiciary. Citizens look to the judiciary in some ways to set the moral standards of the country. They look to parliamentarians. They look to people in authority.

This is a time when we are talking about youth crime and young offenders who appear before judges. It is very difficult to present to them the argument that the society we want them to participate in is one that is fair and just if some of the very people they appear before received their positions on the bench not because of their understanding of criminal, family or contract law, but because of their connections to particular parties. This was a missed opportunity.

Some of the amendments that were put forward by members of the justice committee from the Reform Party and the Bloc party were good. It is too bad that the government could not have supported them. It did support one of those amendments. The amendment put forward by the Bloc which had to do with the actual pay increase would have been well received. It is too bad that the government did not choose to accept that in the same way it accepted the amendments from the Senate.

Mr. Mark Muise (West Nova, PC): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the House today to speak on the Senate amendments to Bill C-37, an act to amend the Judges Act and other consequential acts.

It is nice to see the upper chamber bringing forth amendments that we believe will only benefit this bill. This is further proof that the other place continues to play a vital role in Canadian politics. It is also proof that although the Liberal government likes to ram bills through with little consultation, it does not always work.

Nevertheless, our party is encouraged by the provisions contained in Bill C-37. These amendments will improve the independence, the objectivity and the effectiveness of the salary and benefits commission process.

Clause 6 of the proposed amendments will for the most part strengthen the judiciary. For example, the need to attract outstanding candidates to the judiciary will not only enhance the credibility of the judiciary but it will also enhance the process.

The Progressive Conservative Party is encouraged by the provisions which make the appointments less bureaucratic and more democratic.

This commission will consist of three people, of which one will be appointed by the Minister of Justice. The other would be appointed or nominated if you will, by the judiciary, while the chair would be named by the two previously mentioned.

I stand by my remarks from last March when I first spoke on this bill. I believed then as I do now that a better, more accountable way of appointing people to this committee would be to enable the Standing Committee on Justice and Human Rights to nominate a member to sit on the commission. Such a process would not only improve the transparency, but it would also eliminate some of the patronage that goes on during these appointments.

As for the deletion of section 45 of the act, the joint and survivor provisions, it will rightfully entitle the respective provincial governments to handle the salary and benefits situation as it relates to spouses according to the province in which the judge respectfully works.

An example of this is in Quebec where common law marriages are not recognized. Should Quebec judges be penalized for working in Quebec? No, they certainly should not be. This amendment will ensure equality for all judges right across the country as it relates to their place of work and residency.

By keeping central control in the confines of the provincial government, we believe it is more practical to apply a case by case process as it pertains to individual judges. Narrowing the scope eliminates the possibility for difficulty and confusion down the road. This legislation has invoked a great deal of passion and provocative commentary within the House, and to some extent a great deal of righteous indignation on the part of some.

It is important to focus on the role of judges and the important tasks they are charged to perform. We have previously debated the important question of the separation of power in society. My party strongly believes judicial independence is the cornerstone of our democracy. There is no question that we as parliamentarians may not always agree with a court's decision, but it is our job to respect and uphold the system in place for the good of the country and the citizens we represent.

However, it cannot be stated strongly enough or with enough emotion the importance of having our judges remain independent of the elected body. We as parliamentarians are elected as opposed to appointed judges. A balance needs to be struck to eliminate the practice of governments, in particular majority governments, using heavy handed measures the judiciary is called to investigate.

My party is comfortable supporting the amendments brought forth today because they give guidelines to the commission that will ultimately strengthen the judiciary and present guidelines for the way salaries are set. Furthermore, we believe in an independent commission setting the judges' salaries. The provisions regarding spousal pension benefits are nothing but beneficial to the law and the process. Therefore I would ask that the other parties here today agree to the amendments brought forth.

The Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 45, the vote is deferred until Monday, November 16 at the ordinary time of adjournment.

FIRST NATIONS LAND MANAGEMENT ACT

The House resumed from November 5 consideration of the motion that Bill C-49, an act providing for the ratification and the bringing into effect of the framework agreement on first nation land management, be read the second time and referred to a committee; and of the amendment.

Mr. Roy Bailey (Souris—Moose Mountain, Ref.): Mr. Speaker, I will continue my delivery from yesterday. I was discussing some of the many injustices that have taken place in the past. I will deal specifically with the land claims agreement in Saskatchewan and how it continues to fail daily in terms of the obligation of this government. It drives the wedge, a feeling of inequality, between rural Saskatchewan and this government. I am talking about a debt owed by this government to the rural areas of Saskatchewan.

Let us go back 10 years.

A promise was made to the rural governments of Saskatchewan that when the natives would acquire Indian land, the RMs would be paid 22.5 times the assessment for the land taken out of the assessment role.

In other words, the deal was that they would get 22.5 years of taxes in lieu of services they provided. When this government came into power, it changed this so that the rural municipalities of Saskatchewan get a mere 5 years taxes.

That is an injustice. The debt owed to the RMs is owed by the government and the people of Canada. It is a national debt.

EVIDENCE

OTTAWA, Thursday, October 22, 1998

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred Bill C-37, to amend the Judges Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, met this day at 11:05 a.m. to give consideration to the bill.

Senator Lorna Milne (Chairman) in the Chair.

[English]

The Chairman: This meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs is now in session. We will proceed to clause-by-clause consideration of Bill C-37, to amend the Judges Act and to make consequential amendments to other acts.

Senator Moore: Honourable senators, I move that the committee complete clause-by-clause consideration of Bill C-37.

Senator Cools: Before we move to clause-by-clause consideration, I wish to raise a question of privilege.

Senator Grafstein: To be fair, Senator Cools did declare her intention in advance of the motion. I would hope that Senator Moore could withhold his motion so that Senator Cools has an opportunity to make her statement.

The Chairman: That is quite right.

Senator Cools, the floor is yours.

Senator Cools: Thank you for your consideration. In any event, it has always been my understanding that questions of privilege take precedence.

We had an interesting situation yesterday where, as a committee, we engaged in some unusual methodology. In hearing from Department of Justice officials, certain senators indicated their intention to bring forward motions. The content and intent of the motions were worthy. However, I questioned the procedural technique that was being used. I have never really encountered a situation where there is a public discussion between department officials and members about their intentions to bring certain motions.

I will agree with the motions when they are actually brought forth.

Yesterday, we had a discussion, without the motion, to discuss the subject matter being before us. Those questions were raised briefly and not as sufficiently as I would have liked because I did not want to resort to the technique of formally making a point of order or any more strenuous procedural technique. I thought the appeal to common sense and to our customs would have prevailed.

My concern about the techniques used yesterday has been heightened. Information has come into my possession that many of the interested judges — those who would be affected by these provisions — have known for quite some time that these clauses — what I have learned to call the “spousal clauses” — will be deleted.

TÉMOIGNAGES

OTTAWA, le jeudi 22 octobre 1998

Le comité sénatorial permanent des affaires juridiques et constitutionnelles, auquel a été renvoyé le projet de loi C-37, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les juges et d'autres lois en conséquence, se réunit aujourd'hui à 11 h 05 pour en étudier la teneur.

Le sénateur Lorna Milne (présidente) occupe le fauteuil.

[Traduction]

La présidente: Je déclare ouverte cette séance du comité sénatorial permanent des affaires juridiques et constitutionnelles. Nous procéderons à l'étude article par article du projet de loi C-37, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les juges et d'autres lois en conséquence.

Le sénateur Moore: Honorables sénateurs, je propose que le comité procède à l'étude article par article du projet de loi C-37.

Le sénateur Cools: Avant de passer à l'étude article par article, j'aimerais soulever une question de privilège.

Le sénateur Grafstein: En toute justice, le sénateur Cools avait fait part de son intention avant le dépôt de la motion. J'espère que le sénateur Moore peut différer sa motion de manière à ce que le sénateur Cools puisse faire sa déclaration.

La présidente: C'est tout à fait juste.

Sénateur Cools, vous avez la parole.

Le sénateur Cools: Merci. De toute façon, j'ai toujours cru que les questions de privilège avaient préséance.

Il s'est passé quelque chose d'intéressant hier alors qu'à ce comité, nous avons fait quelque chose d'inhabituel. Lors de l'audition de hauts fonctionnaires du ministère de la Justice, certains sénateurs ont manifesté leur intention de déposer des motions dont le contenu et l'intention étaient louables. Cependant, je mets en doute la façon de procéder. Il ne m'est jamais arrivé d'assister à un débat public entre des hauts fonctionnaires du ministère et des membres d'un comité au sujet de leur intention de déposer certaines motions.

J'appuierai les motions lorsqu'elles seront bel et bien déposées.

Hier, nous avons parlé, sans la motion, de discuter du sujet du projet de loi qui nous a été confié. Ces questions ont été soulevées brièvement et pas autant que je l'aurais voulu parce que je ne n'ai pas voulu en venir à formuler officiellement une objection ou à recourir à une procédure beaucoup plus ardue. J'ai cru que l'appel à notre sens commun et à nos coutumes aurait prévalu.

Mon inquiétude au sujet des méthodes employées hier s'est accrue. Selon les renseignements dont je dispose, bon nombre des juges intéressés — ceux qui seraient visés par ces dispositions — savaient depuis un certain temps que ces articles — ce que j'appelle maintenant les «dispositions relatives au conjoint» — seront supprimées.

As far as I am concerned, when one has had a political victory, one never does complain. I am pleased that reason, common sense, and judiciousness have prevailed and that certain individuals have recognized that these clauses were indeed very questionable and suspicious, not to mention embarrassing, and that they were sadly in need of amendment. I am also pleased that, after several weeks of effort, the minister has finally conceded that something was very wrong and that she herself was prepared to accept changes, mainly the deletion of those clauses from Bill C-37.

However, having said that, I believe that some "impropriety", and perhaps that is not the appropriate word, but a less-than-parliamentary occurrence has taken place. That, I believe, should be brought to the attention of members of this committee. To me, it is most distressing and vexing that certain interested judges and other interested parties will have information about the deletion or amendment of these clauses far in advance of the members of the Senate themselves knowing, or far in advance of any formal, procedural, or parliamentary activity to implement those wishes.

As I said before, this is not the first time that I have worked on committees and encountered this situation. For example, last year before our committee reached its clause-by-clause consideration of Bill C-41, certain persons at the Department of Justice, or whoever, had already put certain information into the public domain.

Let me be clear so no one would, for a moment, suggest that I am opposed to freedom of the press: I am a great believer in freedom of the press. My concern is that this information has been made available to interested judges and that there are currently separation agreements, and whatever other agreements being entered into, based on information which certain people have received. I find that very questionable.

It seems to me that, if we are doing proper and judicious work, which we have been doing, the formal process of Parliament should be allowed to function without the unnecessary, inconvenient or inappropriate release of information to interested individuals. This question is usually raised quite publicly when the Minister of Finance is preparing a budget.

I raise this as a question of privilege. I believe that there has been an impropriety, that there has been a breach, and that it is indeed unfortunate that information is out and available before senators have been informed, or before any senator has moved a motion in this committee to basically delete those clauses.

An additional consideration is that, frequently in committee and in the chamber, I raise the issue of constant, ongoing, persistent, and insistent contact between certain persons, whomever they may be, at the Department of Justice and certain judges of this land. I find it extremely disturbing and unhelpful that this information is in the hands of certain parties prior to it being in my hands.

To that extent, I consider this to be a very serious breach of my privileges here. As I said before, I support the minister's agreement to these amendments and I would have appreciated it À ce que je sache, quand quelqu'un remporte une victoire politique, il ne se plaint jamais. Je suis heureuse que la raison, le sens commun et la sagesse aient prévalu et que certaines personnes aient reconnu que ces dispositions étaient très discutables et très contestables, pour ne pas dire embarrassantes, et qu'elles avaient grandement besoin d'être modifiées. Je me réjouis aussi de voir que, après plusieurs semaines d'efforts, la ministre a finalement admis que quelque chose n'allait pas et qu'elle était prête à accepter des changements, plus particulièrement le retrait de ces articles du projet de loi C-37.

Cependant, cela dit, je crois qu'une «irrégularité», et ce n'est peut-être pas le mot qui convient, un événement moins que parlementaire s'est produit et devrait, selon moi, être signalé aux membres de ce comité. Quant à moi, je trouve très frustrant que certains juges et autres parties intéressées seront mis au courant du retrait de ces dispositions ou d'amendements qui pourraient y être apportés, et ce bien avant que le Sénat ou toute activité officielle, procédurale ou parlementaire s'en charge.

Comme je l'ai déjà dit, ce n'est pas la première fois qu'une telle situation se présente à un comité auquel je siège. Par exemple, l'année dernière, avant que notre comité entreprenne l'étude article par article du projet de loi C-41, certaines personnes du ministère de la Justice ou qui vous voulez avaient déjà divulgué certains renseignements.

Je veux bien me faire comprendre afin que personne ne laisse entendre le moindre que je m'oppose à la liberté de presse en laquelle je crois fermement. Ce qui me laisse perplexe, c'est que cette information a été mise à la disposition des juges intéressés et qu'il y a à l'heure actuelle des ententes en matière de séparation et quelque autre entente conclue, qui sont basées sur l'information que certaines personnes ont obtenue. Je trouve cela très suspect.

Il me semble que, si nous accomplissons judicieusement notre travail, ce que nous avons fait, le processus parlementaire officiel ne devrait pas être entravé par la diffusion inutile, inopportune ou inappropriée d'information à des personnes intéressées. Cette question est habituellement soulevée assez publiquement lorsque le ministre des Finances prépare un budget.

Je soulève ce point en tant que question de privilège. Je crois qu'une irrégularité a été commise, qu'il y a eu un manquement et qu'il est en fait malheureux que de l'information soit diffusée avant que les sénateurs soient mis au courant ou avant qu'un sénateur propose une motion à ce comité portant pour ainsi dire retrait de ces dispositions.

En outre, il m'est arrivé fréquemment, en comité et à la Chambre, de soulever la question des contacts constants, permanents, persistants et insistants entre certaines personnes, peu importe de qui il peut s'agir, du ministère de la Justice et certains juges de ce pays. Je trouve tout à fait inquiétant et peu utile que cette information soit divulguée à certaines parties avant de m'être transmise.

Je considère qu'il s'agit d'une grave atteinte à mon privilège. Je le répète, je suis d'accord avec la ministre qui appuie ces amendements et j'aurais apprécié que les sénateurs aient l'honneur had senators had the honour and the privilege of hearing this first, before the information was released into certain secretive circles.

Other persons may wish to speak to this point of privilege.

The Chairman: Before I open up the floor to discussion, Senator Cools, I should point out that this committee does not have the power to rule on a matter of privilege. If the committee so wishes, it must be reported to the Senate for decision.

I should also point out to you that, historically, the manner of proceeding in this committee has been to allow all members of the committee to know what was coming down the pike.

I think Senator Beaudoin will bear me out on this. I know that a similar situation happened when he was chair of this committee and I was sitting in as a member. This has been the custom of this committee, and I think we should proceed on those same grounds.

Senator Cools: That is not my question. My question is not on what you did yesterday. I accepted what you did yesterday. The question of privilege, the breach that I perceive, is the fact that other persons in this land, namely certain judges, are in possession of what we were to do as senators prior to any senator making statements about this in this committee and prior to senators having an opportunity to move motions to that effect. That is my concern, and I think it would behoove this committee to try to discover who has been making this information available to the judges of this land.

I am pleased that there has been progress made regarding these clauses but, frankly, I think we should have a chance to vote on it, or at least let the system move ahead.

The Chairman: We are about to have a chance to vote on it.

Senator Joyal: Following the statement made by Senator Cools, and since yesterday I was the member of the committee who notified my colleagues of my intention to move some amendments, I would like to bring a point of clarification. I would like to make a formal statement that I never, directly or indirectly, consulted any member of the bench, at any level, to get their opinion or reaction on my intention to move forward with any amendments and I never asked anyone in my office to do so.

I would like that point to be very clear on the record. If Senator Cools' statements happen to be true, it is certainly not because I was in any way part of an initiative that would have made my intentions known by any judge in this land.

The Chairman: I would further add — if I may, Senator Cools — that I want it made absolutely clear that any amendments that may be proposed today are not being proposed by the Minister of Justice. They are the Liberal senators' amendments.

Senator Cools: I accept that and I approve. I would like to be clear here. It was never my intention to question Senator's integrity in any form or fashion. I have known him for a long time. He is a man of outstanding character.

et le privilège d'être mis au courant avant que l'information soit diffusée dans certains cercles secrets.

Quelqu'un d'autre a peut-être quelque chose à dire au sujet de cette question de privilège.

La présidente: Avant de céder la parole à d'autres sénateurs, sénatrice Cools, je dois vous dire que ce comité n'est pas autorisé à se prononcer sur des questions de privilège. S'il veut le faire, il doit faire rapport au Sénat afin qu'il prenne une décision.

Je dois aussi vous dire que ce comité a toujours eu comme principe de permettre à tous ses membres de savoir ce qui va se passer.

Je crois que le sénateur Beaudoin confirmera ce qui suit. Je sais qu'une situation similaire s'est présentée lorsqu'il présidait ce comité et que j'y siégeais comme membre. Telle a été la pratique à ce comité et je crois que nous devrions poursuivre dans la même veine.

Le sénateur Cools: Ce n'est pas ce qui me préoccupe. Je m'interroge au sujet de ce que nous avons fait hier. J'ai accepté ce que vous avez fait hier. La question de privilège, l'infraction que je perçois, a à voir avec le fait que d'autres personnes dans ce pays, à savoir certains juges, ont été mises au courant de ce que nous nous apprêtions à faire en tant que sénateurs avant qu'un sénateur fasse une déclaration à ce sujet à ce comité et avant que les sénateurs aient l'occasion de proposer des motions à cet effet. C'est à ce sujet que je m'interroge et je crois qu'il incombe à ce comité d'essayer de déterminer qui a diffusé cette information aux juges de ce pays.

Je suis heureuse que des progrès aient été faits en ce qui concerne ces articles mais, en toute franchise, je crois que nous devrions avoir la chance de voter sur la question ou du moins de laisser le système suivre son cours.

La présidente: Nous sommes sur le point de voter sur ces motions.

Le sénateur Joyal: Pour faire suite à la déclaration du sénateur Cools et comme c'est moi qui ai informé hier mes collègues de mon intention de présenter certains amendements, j'aimerais éclaircir un point. J'aimerais dire officiellement que je n'ai jamais, directement ou indirectement, consulté un juge de quelque niveau que ce soit pour savoir ce qu'il pensait de mon intention de proposer des amendements. Je n'ai jamais non plus demandé à personne de mon bureau de le faire.

J'aimerais que ma déclaration soit consignée au compte rendu. Si les déclarations du sénateur Cools devaient s'avérer juste, ce n'est assurément pas parce que j'ai participé de quelque manière à une initiative qui aurait permis de révéler mes intentions à un juge de ce pays.

La présidente: J'ajouterais — si vous le permettez, sénateur — que je tiens à ce qu'il soit absolument clair qu'aucun des amendements qui seront proposés aujourd'hui n'émane du ministre de la Justice. Ils sont présentés par les sénateurs libéraux.

Le sénateur Cools: Je l'accepte et j'approuve. J'aimerais me faire bien comprendre. Mon intention n'a jamais été de remettre en question l'intégrité du sénateur d'aucune façon que ce soit. Je le connais depuis longtemps. C'est un homme remarquable.

The information that I was referring to is obviously being exchanged between certain individuals at the Department of Justice and other persons across this land. I do not believe that members of this committee divulged the information. Let me be clear, so that no one thinks I was questioning that point.

Madam Chair, you have said that you cannot rule on a question of privilege. I know the rules concerning this well. However, this committee can resolve to take some action to investigate the matter in order to discover how this sort of information has been received by certain people. Perhaps the minister could come here to explain or perhaps we could recall the departmental officials to explain. I believe there is something here that commands attention.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Cools. However, for this committee to proceed in such a manner, we would need an order to do so from the Senate.

Senator Cools: In that case, since I cannot move a motion on this committee to that effect, I would urge the chairman or a member of this committee to put forward a motion asking the Senate to study the matter.

Senator Grafstein: Since I am a voting member of the committee, perhaps I could suggest to Senator Cools that a question of privilege, first and foremost, must arise and be stated at the first possible moment. In other words, if somebody's privileges are impinged, the rules state that the senator whose privileges one believes are impinged or interfered with must raise the issue. I assume that is why Senator Cools has raised it here.

Having said that, since Senator Cools believes that this is a matter of her privileges being encroached upon — and, ultimately, it might affect others — the appropriate way to deal with this matter that she is contesting is for the committee to take note of it. I assume we have already done so because it is noted on the record. If the senator wishes to pursue it, she should do so before the full chamber at the appropriate time, which would be today. I have not looked at the questions myself, but I am always sensitive to the privileges of senators. I assume that is the appropriate practice, but I look to Senator Beaudoin and others who may be more familiar with the rules. I am having difficulty with Senator Cools' position that a privilege has been breached because she is a non-voting member of the committee. I am not sure how the privilege is breached. Unless I am told otherwise, I conclude that this is a matter for the full chamber.

I would ask Senator Beaudoin for his comments and then we can move on.

Senator Beaudoin: If a person wishes to raise a point of privilege, then he or she must be a member of the committee. If no member of the committee wishes to do so, then that is the end of it. Of course, the matter may be raised in the Senate. However, if no voting member of this committee wishes to raise the point, then I do not see how we can deal with it.

Senator Cools: That is rubbish!

Les renseignements dont je parlais ont manifestement été échangés entre des gens du ministère de la Justice et d'autres personnes dans tout le pays. Je ne crois pas que les membres de ce comité ont divulgué les renseignements. Je tiens à ce que ce soit clair, parce que je ne veux pas qu'on pense que c'est ce que je remettais en question.

Madame la présidente, vous avez dit que vous ne pouvez pas vous prononcer sur une question de privilège. Je connais très bien les règles à ce sujet. Quoi qu'il en soit, le comité peut décider d'examiner la question pour découvrir comment certaines personnes ont pu être en possession de ce genre de renseignements. Peut-être que le ministre pourrait venir nous l'expliquer, ou que des fonctionnaires du ministère pourraient revenir nous rencontrer pour le faire. À mon avis, des mesures s'imposent.

La présidente: Merci, sénateur. Cependant, le comité doit, pour procéder ainsi, en recevoir l'ordre du Sénat.

Le sénateur Cools: Dans ce cas, puisque je ne peux pas présenter de motion en ce sens, j'exhorte la présidente ou un membre du comité à proposer qu'on demande au Sénat d'étudier la question.

Le sénateur Grafstein: À titre de membre votant de ce comité, je pourrais peut-être signaler au sénateur Cools qu'une question de privilège doit d'abord et avant tout être soulevée et énoncée à la première occasion possible. Autrement dit, si les privilèges de quelqu'un sont lésés, la règle veut que ce soit le sénateur dont les privilèges auraient été lésés ou restreints qui soulève la question. Je suppose que c'est pourquoi le sénateur Cools nous a fait part du problème ici.

Cela dit, étant donné que le sénateur Cools a des raisons de croire que cette question porte atteinte à ses privilèges — et pourrait bien porter préjudice à d'autres personnes —, la manière appropriée pour le comité de traiter le problème qu'elle soulève est d'en prendre note. Je présume que nous l'avons déjà fait, puisque c'est inscrit au compte rendu. Si le sénateur tient à approfondir la question, elle devrait le faire devant l'ensemble des sénateurs au moment opportun, soit aujourd'hui même. Je ne me suis pas penché là-dessus, mais je suis toujours sensible aux privilèges des sénateurs. Je présume que c'est ainsi que se font les choses, mais je me fie au sénateur Beaudoin et à d'autres, qui connaissent peut-être mieux les règles que moi. J'ai quelque difficulté à comprendre le point de vue du sénateur Cools selon lequel un privilège a été enfreint parce qu'elle n'est pas un membre votant du comité. Je ne vois pas très bien en quoi cela porte atteinte à ses privilèges. À moins d'avis contraire, j'en conclus que cette question relève de l'ensemble des sénateurs.

J'inviterais le sénateur Beaudoin à faire des commentaires, puis nous pourrions poursuivre.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Pour soulever une question de privilège, il faut être membre du comité. Si aucun membre du comité ne veut le faire, c'est fini. Bien sûr, la question peut être soulevée au Sénat. Cependant, si aucun membre votant du comité ne veut soulever la question, je ne vois pas comment nous pourrions en traiter.

Le sénateur Cools: Foutaise!

The Chairman: No. Order!

Senator Nolin: We do not accept "rubbish." If we are to decide on this, I want to hear all the evidence or I do not want to discuss it. I do not think we have the mandate to discuss it. It is your privilege to raise this matter in the chamber and to table all the evidence you have. You will have to produce something. You are accusing a lot of people without mentioning names and I do not wish to be part of that. It is your right to do so in the chamber, but do not do it here.

Senator Cools: I would like to respond to that.

Senator Beaudoin: One cannot call an explanation of our rules "rubbish."

Senator Nolin: No, you cannot.

The Chairman: Order. I agree with Senator Beaudoin's comments. I would hope that the senator would retract the word "rubbish."

Senator Cools: The word "rubbish" was an aside. It was not intended to be a formal statement.

Senator Balfour: Earlier you insisted on being on the record.

Senator Cools: Perhaps I should repeat that it was never my intention, in any way, to impugn the integrity of any individual member of this committee. If my use of a particular word as an aside was inappropriate, I will apologize. That is not a problem. Magnanimity comes very easily to me.

In response to the substance of what was said, I should like to say that the rule of "earliest opportunity" does not apply here. It is only applied when the Senate Speaker's role is being invoked in what we call a prima facie case in the chamber. It is only invoked in that instance and then, prima facie, that response is whether or not the Speaker of the Senate chooses to give priority over all other debate. This subject matter is becoming increasingly not only arcane but also unknown to the majority of senators.

The fact of the matter is that Senate privileges are not "my" privileges. Senators hold them collectively. It is my understanding that it is our duty to uphold the rules at all times. Those rules provide that senators must request information in a certain way. One of those ways, honourable senators, is to introduce a motion in the house. One cannot simply demand information.

What I am introducing here is a sense of discussion —

The Chairman: Senator Cools, I have the chair!

Senator Cools: You certainly do.

The Chairman: I believe that this subject has been explored in great depth. At this point, we will proceed to clause-by-clause consideration of Bill C-37.

It has been moved by Senator Moore that the committee complete clause-by-clause consideration of Bill C-37. Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Carried.

La présidente: Non. À l'ordre!

Le sénateur Nolin: Nous n'acceptons pas ici les termes comme «foutaise». Si nous devons prendre une décision à ce sujet, je tiens à entendre tous les faits, sinon je ne veux plus en entendre parler. Je ne crois pas que nous sommes mandatés pour discuter de ça. Vous avez le droit de soulever cette question au Sénat et de présenter toutes les preuves que vous avez. Il vous faudra en produire. Vous accusez des tas de gens sans donner de nom et je ne tiens pas à être mêlé à ça. Vous avez droit d'en parler au Sénat, mais pas ici.

Le sénateur Cools: J'aimerais répondre à ça.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Personne ne peut qualifier de «foutaise» une explication de nos règlements.

Le sénateur Nolin: Non, personne.

La présidente: À l'ordre. Je suis d'accord avec le sénateur Beaudoin. J'espère que le sénateur voudra bien retirer le mot «foutaise».

Le sénateur Cools: C'était un aparté. Ça ne se voulait pas une déclaration officielle.

Le sénateur Balfour: Vous avez pourtant insisté plus tôt pour que votre intervention soit consignée au compte rendu.

Le sénateur Cools: Je devrais peut-être répéter que je n'ai jamais eu la moindre intention de mettre en doute l'intégrité d'aucun membre de ce comité. Si l'expression que j'ai utilisée en aparté n'était pas convenable, je m'en excuse. Ce n'est pas là qu'est le problème. Je sais me montrer magnanime.

Pour en revenir à ce qui a été dit, j'aimerais souligner que la règle de la «première occasion» ne s'applique pas ici. Elle ne s'applique que lorsque le Président du Sénat doit déterminer si la question paraît fondée à première vue. Ce n'est que dans ce cas que cette règle peut être invoquée et le Président peut, à première vue, décider de donner ou non la priorité à cette question sur toutes les autres. Cette règle devient de plus en plus obscure et même ignorée pour la majorité des sénateurs.

Le fait est que les privilèges du Sénat ne sont pas uniquement les miens. Ils sont ceux de tous les sénateurs. D'après moi, nous avons le devoir d'observer les règles tout le temps. Ces règles prévoient que les sénateurs doivent suivre une certaine procédure pour obtenir des renseignements. Ils peuvent notamment les obtenir par voie de motion au Sénat. On ne peut pas tout simplement les exiger.

Ce que je suggère ici est une discussion...

Le président: Sénateur, c'est moi qui occupe le fauteuil!

Le sénateur Cools: Ça ne fait pas de doute.

La présidente: Il me semble que cette question a été amplement approfondie. Nous allons maintenant passer à l'étude détaillée du projet de loi C-37.

Le sénateur Moore propose que le comité procède à l'étude article par article du projet de loi C-37. Êtes-vous d'accord?

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Adopté.

Shall clause 1 carry? At this point, I should point out that the normal procedure, if we want to delete a clause, is to vote "No, it shall not carry."

Senator Beaudoin: Yes, when the clause is called.

The Chairman: The clause is now called. Shall clause 1 carry?

Senator Beaudoin: No.

Senator Nolin: No.

The Chairman: I declare the motion negatived.

Senator Cools: Usually when we move clause by clause, there is opportunity for discussion first.

The Chairman: Senator Cools, there was no offer for discussion on this one and the motion has been negatived.

Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: All those opposed? Carried.

Shall clause 3 carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: All those opposed? Carried.

Senator Cools: I was under the impression that when we move a clause we do it formally by motion. It takes more than to say, "Shall this carry? Carried." It seems to me that an individual moved it. I move that.

The Chairman: It has been moved by Senator Moore that we should go to clause-by-clause consideration of the bill, and that is what we are doing.

Senator Cools: I think the proper way to proceed is for Senator Moore to say, "I move that this clause carry" when we get to each clause. It should then be seconded. Otherwise, the bill is not properly voted on.

The Chairman: This is the format that we have traditionally been following in the committee.

Senator Beaudoin: When we have an omnibus motion, such as that moved by Senator Moore, we do not repeat ourselves 25 times.

Senator Nolin: It implies we are moving each and every clause.

Senator Beaudoin: That is right. It is up to the chair to call each clause separately but not each motion separately.

The Chairman: Precisely, and that is what I am doing.

We have now carried clause 3.

Shall clause 4 carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Carried.

Shall clause 5 carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Carried.

Est-ce que l'article 1 est adopté? Il convient de souligner que, selon la procédure, si nous voulons supprimer un article il faut voter «non, il n'est pas adopté».

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Oui, lorsqu'il est mis aux voix.

La présidente: L'article est maintenant mis aux voix. Est-ce que l'article 1 est adopté?

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Non.

Le sénateur Nolin: Non.

La présidente: Je déclare la motion rejetée.

Le sénateur Cools: Normalement, quand on fait une étude article par article, on peut d'abord discuter.

La présidente: Sénateur, personne n'a proposé de discuter de cet article, et la motion a été rejetée.

Est-ce que l'article 2 est adopté?

Des voix: Oui.

La présidente: Qui est contre? Adopté.

Est-ce que l'article 3 est adopté?

Des voix: Oui.

La présidente: Qui est contre? Adopté.

Le sénateur Cools: J'avais l'impression que, pour proposer un article, il fallait le faire formellement au moyen d'une motion. Ça devrait être plus que «est-ce que c'est adopté? Adopté». Il me semble que quelqu'un doit le proposer. C'est ce que je voudrais.

La présidente: Le sénateur Moore a proposé que nous fassions l'étude article par article du projet de loi, et c'est ce que nous faisons.

Le sénateur Cools: Je crois que pour faire les choses comme il se doit, le sénateur Moore devrait dire «je propose l'adoption de cet article» pour chaque article. Quelqu'un doit ensuite appuyer sa proposition. Autrement, le vote sur le projet de loi n'est pas fait selon les règles.

La présidente: Notre comité a toujours procédé de cette façon.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Lorsqu'une motion générale, comme celle du sénateur Moore, est présentée nous ne nous répétons pas 25 fois de suite.

Le sénateur Nolin: Ça sous-entend que nous proposons chacun des articles.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: C'est exact. Il incombe à la présidente de mettre chaque article aux voix, mais pas chaque motion.

La présidente: Précisément, et c'est ce que je fais.

Nous avons donc adopté l'article 3.

Est-ce que l'article 4 est adopté?

Des voix: Oui.

La présidente: Adopté.

Est-ce que l'article 5 est adopté?

Des voix: Oui.

La présidente: Adopté.

Shall clause 6 carry?

Senator Joyal: Honourable senators, on clause 6, I move the following amendment. Members of the committee have copies in English in French.

That Bill C-37 be amended, in clause 6,

(a) on page 3, by adding the following after line 7:

“(1.1) In conducting its inquiry, the commission shall consider

(a) the prevailing economic conditions in Canada, including the cost of living, and the overall economic and current financial position of the federal government;

(b) the role of financial security of the judiciary in ensuring judicial independence;

(c) the need to attract outstanding candidates to the judiciary; and

(d) any other objective measure that the Commission considers relevant.”; and

(b) on page 4, by replacing line 14 with the following:

“a report of the Commission within six months after receiving it.”

[Translation]

In French, “Que le projet de loi C-37 soit modifié,

a) à la page 3, par adjonction, après la ligne 9, de ce qui suit:

«(1.1) La commission fait son examen en tenant compte des facteurs suivants:

a) l'état de l'économie au Canada, y compris le coût de la vie ainsi que la situation économique et financière globale du gouvernement;

b) le rôle de la sécurité financière des juges dans la préservation de l'indépendance judiciaire;

c) le besoin de recruter les meilleurs candidats pour la magistrature;

d) tout autre facteur qu'elle considère pertinent.”;

[English]

Of course, the rest of the article follows.

Senator Nolin: I have a subamendment. I do not have it in writing because I thought it would be included in the amendment just read. In the French version, section 26, or clause 6 of the bill, paragraph 1 —

[Translation]

The French version contains a reference to “juges fédéraux” in line 2, whereas the English version makes no mention whatsoever of federal judges. Federal judges do not exist in the legislation. The only reference is to judges. In my subamendment, I propose that the reference to “juges fédéraux” in clause 6, paragraph 1,

Est-ce que l'article 6 est adopté?

Le sénateur Joyal: Honorables sénateurs, à propos de l'article 6, j'ai un amendement à proposer. Les membres du comité ont reçu copie en anglais et en français de l'amendement.

Que le projet de loi C-37 soit modifié, à l'article 6,

a) à la page 3, par adjonction, après la ligne 9, de ce qui suit:

«(1.1) La Commission fait son examen en tenant compte des facteurs suivants:

a) l'état de l'économie au Canada, y compris le coût de la vie ainsi que la situation économique et financière globale du gouvernement;

b) le rôle de la sécurité financière des juges dans la préservation de l'indépendance judiciaire;

c) le besoin de recruter les meilleurs candidats pour la magistrature;

d) tout autre facteur qu'elle considère pertinent.»;

b) à la page 4, par substitution à la ligne 13, de ce qui suit:

«(7) Le ministre donne suite au rapport de la Commission au.»

[Français]

En français, que l'article 6 soit modifié:

a) à la page 3, par adjonction, après la ligne 9, de ce qui suit:

«(1.1) La commission fait son examen en tenant compte des facteurs suivants:

a) l'état de l'économie au Canada, y compris le coût de la vie ainsi que la situation économique et financière globale du gouvernement;

b) le rôle de la sécurité financière des juges dans la préservation de l'indépendance judiciaire;

c) le besoin de recruter les meilleurs candidats pour la magistrature;

d) tout autre facteur qu'elle considère pertinent.»;

[Traduction]

Bien entendu, le reste de l'article reste tel quel.

Le sénateur Nolin: J'aimerais proposer un sous-amendement. Je ne l'ai pas par écrit, parce que je croyais qu'il ferait partie de l'amendement qui vient d'être lu. Dans la version française, à l'article 26, ou à l'article 6 du projet de loi, au paragraphe 1...

[Français]

Dans la version française, on fait référence aux juges fédéraux à la deuxième ligne alors que dans la version anglaise, il n'y a aucune mention des juges fédéraux. Dans la loi, les juges fédéraux n'existent pas. Il existe des juges, point. Mon sous-amendement est de rayer du projet de loi C-37, article 6, line 2 of the French version of Bill C-37 be deleted. Unfortunately, I do not have this subamendment in writing.

[English]

Senator Beaudoin: I support that.

The Chairman: We are discussing this, Senator Cools, and I will give you an opportunity to speak.

Senator Joyal: I have no objection to including the proposed subamendment to the amendment which I have just read. Senator Nolin is right, there is no such qualification of judges in the English version of the bill. If we maintain "judges fédéraux," it could lead to confusion that we are dealing only with members of the Federal Court and not the other courts. That is certainly not the intention of the bill. We are dealing with the salary of all the judges appointed by the federal government, not only the Federal Court judges, but the Superior Court judges, the Court of Appeal judges, and so forth. The point raised by Senator Nolin is appropriate. It will not change the scope of the bill.

Senator Nolin: If we are on the discussion part of our consideration, in English, you have the word "Judicial" in the name of the commission. That word is not used in the French version.

Senator Grafstein: What word do they use in French?

Senator Nolin: In the name of the commission, there is no word like "judiciaire."

Senator Joyal: It is "Commission d'examen de la rémunération".

Senator Nolin: All of our judges are federal, first.

Senator Joyal: There is no doubt that if we maintain "judges fédéraux" in the French version, it could lead to some confusion in the interpretation of the mandate of the commission.

Senator Beaudoin: There is another reason. Both texts are equal according to law and the Constitution, and I think that is a major reason to eliminate the redundant word. We are talking about judges appointed by federal authority, but the expression "judges fédéraux" is not the best translation.

The Chairman: Our clerk is writing madly here. Senator Cools?

Senator Cools: I would submit to this committee, in particular to Senator Joyal and to the Liberal senators here, that this amendment has not received substantial and sufficient discussion in the Liberal Senate caucus. I would ask Senator Joyal if he would impose a limitation on himself, difficult as it would be, and that is to consider submitting this proposed amendment to our caucus and then —

Senator Beaudoin: On a point of order.

Senator Cools: I have not finished my remarks, but that is quite all right.

Senator Beaudoin: We are sitting in committee. What is going on in your caucus or in our caucus is immaterial.

clause 6, paragraphe 1, à la deuxième ligne, les mots «des juges fédéraux» uniquement dans la version française. Malheureusement, je ne l'ai pas par écrit.

[Traduction]

Le sénateur Beaudoin: J'appuie cette proposition.

Le président: Nous allons en discuter, sénateur Cools, et vous pourrez prendre la parole.

Le sénateur Joyal: Je ne vois pas d'objection à incorporer le sous-amendement proposé à l'amendement que je viens de lire. Le sénateur Nolin a raison, la version anglaise de la loi ne qualifie pas les juges. Si nous conservons l'expression «juges fédéraux», ça pourrait prêter à confusion et donner à penser que nous ne parlons que des membres du tribunal fédéral et pas de ceux des autres tribunaux. Ce n'est certainement pas l'intention du projet de loi. Nous traitons des salaires de tous les juges désignés par le gouvernement fédéral, pas seulement de ceux des juges fédéraux, mais des juges du tribunal supérieur, de la Cour d'appel, et cetera. L'intervention du sénateur Nolin est donc pertinente. Ça ne changera pas la portée du projet de loi.

Le sénateur Nolin: Puisque nous discutons de ça, en anglais, il y a le terme «judicial» dans le titre de la commission. Il n'y a rien de tel dans la version française du titre.

Le sénateur Grafstein: Quel est le terme utilisé en français?

Le sénateur Nolin: On n'emploie pas, dans le titre de la commission, le mot «judiciaire».

Le sénateur Joyal: C'est la Commission d'examen de la rémunération.

Le sénateur Nolin: Tous les juges sont fédéraux, en premier lieu.

Le sénateur Joyal: Il n'y a pas de doute que si nous conservons les mots «juges fédéraux» dans la version française, ça pourrait porter à confusion dans l'interprétation du mandat de la commission.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Il y a une autre raison. En vertu de la loi et de la Constitution, les deux textes sont égaux, et je crois que c'est une raison suffisante pour éliminer les mots inutiles. Nous parlons des juges désignés par le pouvoir fédéral, mais l'expression «juges fédéraux» n'est pas la meilleure traduction qui soit.

La présidente: Le greffier écrit à toute vitesse. Sénateur Cools?

Le sénateur Cools: Je voudrais signaler au comité, en particulier au sénateur Joyal et aux sénateurs libéraux ici présents, que le caucus libéral du Sénat n'a pas eu l'occasion de discuter suffisamment de cet amendement. Je demanderai donc au sénateur Joyal de freiner son élan, aussi difficile que ça puisse être, et d'envisager de soumettre l'amendement qu'il propose à notre caucus, et puis...

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Comme rappel au Règlement.

Le sénateur Cools: Je n'ai pas fini de parler, mais c'est exactement où je veux en venir.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Nous siégeons à un comité, ce qui se passe dans votre caucus ou dans le nôtre importe peu.

The Chairman: I am not accepting that as a point of order, but I am accepting it as a valid point on this.

Senator Cools: My statement was cut off midstream. I was asking Senator Joyal to delay by a day or two, prior to proposing his amendment, so that this matter could be properly canvassed by the Liberal Senate caucus. I do not believe that I asked anything that was out of order. It is a very curious situation where the gentlemen across here are raising this as a potential point of order. I think I understand why. That is quite acceptable, because life unfolds as it does. I was making an appeal to Senator Joyal, since it is his amendment.

As I see it, it is not the government senators' amendment, because it has not been placed before us by the government sponsor of the bill. Thus, I must conclude that it is a personal amendment being moved by Senator Joyal. There is a big difference. Our government sponsors usually do certain things. If Senator Joyal wishes to comply with my request, I would submit, Senator Beaudoin, that it is no business of yours. I was putting it to Senator Joyal.

Senator Beaudoin: And my business is to point out that we are in committee. This committee does not need to know what is going on in your caucus or in my caucus.

Senator Cools: I am trying to ask a member whether he will consider delaying making a motion, and that is usually done at the point in time when that motion is made. I would like to hear Senator Joyal's response.

The Chairman: Order. Senator Joyal has heard your request. I do not believe that the caucus of any side of the Senate should be brought into discussions in this committee. It is up to Senator Joyal to decide whether he will agree to postpone these discussions, for whatever reason. Senator Cools, you did not have the floor.

Senator Joyal: Madam Chairman, we are now engaged in the process of voting on the proposed legislation clause by clause. I have suggested that we move forward, as that is our agenda for today. If there is any need for further discussion among certain members of this committee, that discussion will proceed outside the sitting this morning.

The Chairman: We shall proceed on the suggestions that have been made by Senator Nolin and Senator Joyal that Bill C-37 be amended, in the French version, by deleting, in clause 6 on page 3, line 4, the phrase "des juges fédéraux".

Senator Fraser: No, just the word "fédéraux".

Senator Joyal: That is right because the Judges Act defines which judges are covered by the Judges Act. Since it is an amendment to the Judges Act, the definition that is applied in that section is already contained in the Judges Act. Therefore, we should not create confusion. I feel that we should maintain the definition currently in the Judges Act. That is probably the most compelling argument in support of Senator Nolin's argument.

La présidente: Je n'accepte pas votre intervention comme un rappel au Règlement, mais j'admets que c'est un argument valable.

Le sénateur Cools: J'ai été interrompue dans ma lancée. Je demandais au sénateur Joyal de remettre sa proposition d'un jour ou deux afin de permettre au caucus libéral du Sénat de l'examiner de manière appropriée. Je ne pense pas demander l'impossible. Il est très curieux que ces messieurs, en face de moi, interprètent ça comme un éventuel rappel au Règlement. Je crois comprendre pourquoi. Ça se comprend très bien, parce que la vie suit son cours. Je m'adressais au sénateur Joyal, parce qu'il s'agit de son amendement.

Que je sache, cet amendement n'a pas été proposé par les sénateurs du parti ministériel, parce qu'il n'a pas été proposé par le parrain du projet de loi. J'en conclus donc qu'il s'agit d'un amendement que propose personnellement le sénateur Joyal. C'est très différent. Les parrains du parti ministériel procèdent généralement d'une certaine manière. Si le sénateur Joyal veut bien se plier à ma demande, je soutiendrais, sénateur Beaudoin, que ça ne vous regarde pas. C'est au sénateur Joyal que je m'adressais.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Ça me regarde, cependant, de souligner que nous sommes en comité. Ce comité n'a nullement besoin de savoir ce qui se passe dans votre caucus ou dans le mien.

Le sénateur Cools: J'essaie de demander à un membre du comité s'il veut bien envisager de reporter le dépôt d'une motion, et ce genre de requête se fait généralement lorsque la motion est présentée. J'aimerais entendre la réponse du sénateur Joyal.

La présidente: À l'ordre. Le sénateur Joyal a entendu votre requête. Je ne crois pas que le caucus ou n'importe quel parti représenté au Sénat devrait être mêlé aux discussions de ce comité. Il incombe au sénateur Joyal de décider s'il veut ou non reporter ces discussions, pour une raison ou une autre. Sénateur Cools, je ne vous avais pas donné la parole.

Le sénateur Joyal: Madame la présidente, nous avons entrepris l'adoption article par article du projet de loi à l'étude. Je suggère que nous poursuivions, puisque c'est l'objet de notre rencontre d'aujourd'hui. Si certains membres du comité veulent continuer de discuter, ils devraient le faire en dehors de la séance de ce matin.

La présidente: Nous revenons aux propositions du sénateur Nolin et du sénateur Joyal qui ont demandé d'amender la version française du projet de loi C-37, à l'article 6, de la page 3, ligne 4, en supprimant les mots «des juges fédéraux».

Le sénateur Fraser: Non, seulement le mot «fédéraux».

Le sénateur Joyal: C'est exact, parce que la Loi sur les juges définit les juges qu'elle vise. Étant donné qu'il s'agit d'une modification de la Loi sur les juges, la définition qui s'applique à cet article figure déjà dans la Loi sur les juges. Par conséquent, nous ne devons pas semer la confusion. Je crois que nous devons nous en tenir à la définition qui figure dans la Loi sur les juges. C'est probablement l'argument qui donne le plus de poids à la proposition du sénateur Nolin.

[Translation]

Senator Fraser: Still with respect to the translation, point (d) in the English version refers to "any other objective measure", while the French version refers to "de tout autre facteur". Should the word "objectif" be added to the French version or does the word "facteur" imply objectivity?

[English]

Senator Joyal: That is a very important point. Would Senator Fraser care to explain why she raised it?

Senator Fraser: I suggest that we insert the word "objectif" after the word "facteur".

Senator Beaudoin: Two words or just one?

Senator Fraser: Just one.

[Translation]

Senator Beaudoin: How would the amendment read then?

Senator Fraser: Right now, it reads "tout autre facteur qu'elle considère pertinent". I am proposing that it to be amended to read "tout autre facteur objectif qu'elle considère pertinent".

[English]

Senator Joyal: In the English version we say "any other objective measure". There is a qualification in English which does not exist in the French version.

[Translation]

Senator Nolin: "Objectif" is used as an adjective rather than as a noun. It would be inserted after the word "facteur".

[English]

The Chairman: Before we continue with amending clause 6, perhaps we should decide whether we will vote on the amendment to clause 1, in the French version, to delete the word "fédéraux".

Our researcher has something of interest to say on this.

Ms Nancy Holmes, Researcher: I should like to bring it to the attention of senators before they vote, that section 26 of the Judges Act does not use the reference "des juges fédéraux" with regard to establishing the commission.

Senator Beaudoin: What did they use?

Ms Holmes: They did not. They said:

[Translation]

"Chargé d'examiner si les traitements et autres prestations prévues à la présente loi".

[English]

It continues in the same.

The Chairman: So the entire phrase is not there.

[Français]

Le sénateur Fraser: Toujours au niveau de la traduction, dans l'amendement d), en anglais on parle de «any other objective measure», et en français, il est écrit: «de tout autre facteur». Est-ce qu'on devrait insérer le mot «objectif» dans la version française ou est-ce que le mot «facteur» est lui-même un mot qui implique l'objectivité?

[Traduction]

Le sénateur Joyal: C'est certainement très important. Est-ce que le sénateur Fraser veut bien expliquer pourquoi elle a soulevé cette question?

Le sénateur Fraser: Je suggère que nous ajoutions le terme «objectif» après le terme «facteur».

Le sénateur Fraser: Seulement un.

[Français]

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Comment cela se lirait-il?

Le sénateur Fraser: Présentement, nous avons: «tout autre facteur qu'elle considère pertinent». Je suggère que l'on devrait l'amender pour «tout autre facteur objectif qu'elle considère pertinent».

[Traduction]

Le sénateur Joyal: Dans la version anglaise, nous disons «any other objective measure». L'anglais comporte donc une qualification qui n'est pas dans la version française.

[Français]

Le sénateur Nolin: Le mot «objectif» est utilisé comme adjectif plutôt que comme nom. Alors on ajoute le mot «objectif» après le mot «facteur».

[Traduction]

La présidente: Avant de poursuivre avec l'amendement de l'article 6, nous pourrions peut-être décider si nous allons mettre aux voix l'amendement de l'article 1, qui vise à supprimer le terme «fédéraux» dans la version française.

Notre attachée de recherche à quelque chose à dire là-dessus.

Mme Nancy Holmes, attachée de recherche: J'aimerais signaler aux sénateurs, avant qu'ils passent au vote, que l'article 26 de la Loi modifiant la Loi sur les juges ne contient pas de référence à «des juges fédéraux», en ce qui a trait à la mise sur pied de la commission.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Que dit-on?

Mme Holmes: On n'y fait pas référence. On dit:

[Français]

[Traduction]

Et ça continue ainsi.

La présidente: Donc, on ne retrouve pas ces mots.

Senator Nolin: The act refers to the appointment of commissioners without naming the commission. Now we will have a name for that commission. In the English version of the name we have the word "judicial". In the French version we have "juges fédéraux". I am suggesting that we leave out the word "fédéraux". All our judges are "fédéraux".

The Chairman: At this point, I will put the question on the first amendment to clause 6, which is that Bill C-37 be amended, in the French version, by deleting, in clause 6 on page 3, line 4, the word "fédéraux". Will all those in favour of the amendment so indicate.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Will all those opposed so indicate.

The amendment is carried.

We shall move to the second amendment.

Senator Grafstein: May I ask a question of Senator Joyal on the substance of the drafting? I have no difficulty with the principles. I just query the placement of "(a)" as opposed to "(b)". One of the fundamental principles and one of our concerns is the principle of judicial independence. I wondered whether "(b)" should be "(a)" and "(a)" should be "(b)". I raise this in the context that general principles should follow with specifics, as opposed to specific and then general. The key principle here is to sustain the principle of judicial independence.

Having said that, I then look at the wording of "(b)". While I think I understand the principle, to which I do not object, I wonder whether we could redraft it slightly. Just to illustrate my point, instead of using the phrase, "the role of financial security of the judiciary in ensuring judicial independence", I would suggest we start with, "to ensure judicial independence, the role of financial security of the judiciary." I would make that the first principle that describes what we are doing here. We are really trying to establish an objective standard for judicial independence, yet political accountability. Those are the two principles.

I am not suggesting that we make that change. I am only asking Senator Joyal, who has looked at this longer than I have, to tell me if that meets with his view. If it does not, I will not move it as an amendment.

Senator Joyal: Madam Chair, we all know that one of the fundamental principles is, of course, the independence of the judiciary from the legislative and the executive. Those principles are at the root of our parliamentary and constitutional system. To maintain the separation of the three powers, there are elements that the independence of the judiciary should be asserting. One of them, of course, is security of tenure. The second one is financial security. It is important that those elements be stated when we are dealing with compensation of the judiciary.

I personally have no opposition to the suggestion put forward by Senator Grafstein, as such. However, since we are addressing only one aspect of the independence of the judicial system, which is financial security — we are not dealing with security of tenure in this bill — I suggest that, in bringing forward the importance of Le sénateur Nolin: La loi fait référence à la nomination des commissaires sans nommer la commission. Cette commission aura un nom. Dans son nom en anglais, on retrouve le mot «judicial». Dans son nom en français, il est question des «juges fédéraux». Je propose qu'on enlève le mot «fédéraux». Tous nos juges sont «fédéraux».

La présidente: Je vais maintenant mettre aux voix le premier amendement de l'article 6 du projet de loi qui propose que le projet de loi C-37 soit modifié, dans sa version française, par suppression, à la ligne 4, du mot «fédéraux». Que tous ceux qui sont en faveur de l'amendement se manifestent.

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Que tous ceux qui sont contre se manifestent.

L'amendement est adopté.

Nous passons au deuxième amendement.

Le sénateur Grafstein: Puis-je poser une question au sénateur Joyal sur la façon dont l'amendement a été rédigé? Je ne mets pas en question les principes de l'amendement. Je m'interroge seulement sur l'ordre des alinéas a) et b). Un des principes fondamentaux qui nous préoccupent est celui de l'indépendance judiciaire. Je me demande si l'on ne devrait pas inverser l'ordre des alinéas b) et a), étant donné que les principes généraux doivent être énoncés avant les particularités et non l'inverse. Ce qui compte ici, c'est de confirmer le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire.

Cela dit, je me demande si on ne pourrait pas modifier légèrement la formulation de l'alinéa b) même si j'en comprends le principe et que je ne m'y oppose pas. Au lieu d'écrire «le rôle de la sécurité financière des juges dans la préservation de l'indépendance judiciaire», je proposerais d'inverser l'ordre des mots pour commencer par «dans la préservation de l'indépendance judiciaire, le rôle de la sécurité financière des juges». J'aimerais qu'on énonce en premier le principe que nous voulons assurer. Ce que nous voulons vraiment faire ici c'est établir un critère objectif d'indépendance judiciaire, sans négliger la responsabilité politique. Ce sont les deux principes à garantir.

Je ne suis pas en train de proposer ce changement. Je veux simplement demander au sénateur Joyal, qui a étudié la question plus à fond que moi, si mon point de vue concorde avec le sien. S'il ne concorde pas, je ne proposerai pas l'amendement.

Le sénateur Joyal: Madame la présidente, nous savons tous que l'indépendance du pouvoir judiciaire par rapport au pouvoir législatif et au pouvoir exécutif est un principe fondamental. Ce principe est à la base de notre régime parlementaire et constitutionnel. Pour assurer la séparation des trois pouvoirs, il y a des éléments que l'indépendance judiciaire doit affirmer, dont bien sûr la sécurité du mandat. Il y a aussi la sécurité financière. Il est important de mentionner ces éléments quand on parle de la rémunération des juges.

Je n'ai personnellement rien contre la proposition faite par le sénateur Grafstein. Cependant, comme il n'est question ici que d'un aspect de l'indépendance du système judiciaire, à savoir la sécurité financière — étant donné qu'il n'est pas question de la sécurité du mandat dans ce projet de loi — je pense qu'en the financial security to the commission, as it is an essential element of their work, we not deal with the overall elements of the independence of the judiciary.

That, of course, involves security of tenure and so on. That is why it was phrased that way. Otherwise, we would need to enumerate the three elements that have been traditionally considered as the guarantees of judicial independence.

This is the best way we could find to state the principles which you just stated yourself and which are, in fact, at the root of any work of the commission. The commission works within the context of the independence of the judicial system and, in that context, it has a specific role to ensure that financial security is confirmed through the recommendation and the study that it makes. It gives the overall context in which the commission must work to prevent the discussion of the questions which were raised in the Supreme Court of Canada in the P.E.I. Reference case, which is: How do you define "financial security" versus "judicial independence"?

Of course, it brings forward the overall capacity of the commission to maintain a balance between that principle and the other prevailing economic conditions and so forth. In other words, there is not only the economic set of elements. There are also sets of elements which deal with the very structure of the independence of the judicial system, which, for instance, do not exist in compensation boards for the public service. The public service is not separated from the administration of the government, but the judicial system is totally separated from the administration of the government. It is important to state that principle when we are formally establishing a commission that has the responsibility to define how the element of financial security will be guaranteed in that context. That is why it is stated that way. I agree there are two ways to state the overall objective of the work of the commission, but I feel that the way it is stated now meets Senator Grafstein's preoccupation.

Senator Balfour: I do not wish to quibble over words with Senator Grafstein, but if I had been drafting the text, I think I would have stated "the necessity for" or "the need for" rather than "the role of", because that is what we are talking about. In order to have judicial independence, it is necessary that judges have financial security. We are not talking about a role; we are talking about a need.

The Chairman: I must say this clause has been the subject of a great deal of debate.

Senator Balfour: And I was not present for that.

Senator Joyal: I agree with Senator Balfour and Senator Grafstein. I should say, in a candid way, that the dictionary is full of words. That is the magic of language. Certainly we can state an objective and use a certain number of words to describe it without changing the very nature of what we want to say. My honourable colleagues will understand that I tried to draft a text which would meet the very point I was making in my remarks, that is, to be sure that this text is in conformity with our constitutional tradition soulignant à la commission l'importance de la sécurité financière des juges dans l'exécution de leur travail, nous n'avons pas à traiter de tous les éléments qui assurent l'indépendance judiciaire.

Parmi ces éléments, on retrouve la sécurité du mandat évidemment. C'est pourquoi l'amendement a été formulé de cette façon. Autrement, il faudrait énumérer les trois éléments qui sont normalement censés garantir l'indépendance judiciaire.

C'est la meilleure façon que nous avons trouvée pour énoncer les principes dont vous venez de parler vous-même et qui sont à la base de tous les travaux de la commission. La commission fonctionne dans le contexte de l'indépendance du système judiciaire et, dans ce contexte, elle a pour rôle précis de s'assurer que la sécurité financière des juges est confirmée dans les recommandations et les études qu'elle fait. C'est le contexte global dans lequel la commission doit travailler pour empêcher qu'on ait à se poser des questions comme celles qui ont été soulevées à la Cour suprême du Canada dans le Renvoi relatif aux juges de la Cour provinciale de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, à savoir comment définir la «sécurité financière» par rapport à l'«indépendance judiciaire».

Bien sûr, ça suppose que la commission est capable de tenir compte à la fois de ce principe et de l'état de l'économie et le reste. Autrement dit, il n'y a pas seulement les aspects économiques qui entrent en ligne de compte. Il y a aussi des aspects qui ont trait à la structure même du système judiciaire indépendant et qui n'existent pas dans le cas des commissions de rémunération de la fonction publique. Contrairement à la fonction publique, le système judiciaire est complètement distinct de l'administration gouvernementale. Il est important d'énoncer ce principe quand nous créons officiellement une commission qui est chargée de définir comment la sécurité financière des juges sera garantie dans ce contexte. C'est pourquoi on a formulé ainsi la disposition. Je conviens qu'il y a deux façons de formuler l'objectif général du mandat de la commission, mais j'estime que celle qui a été utilisée répond à la préoccupation du sénateur Grafstein.

Le sénateur Balfour: Ce n'est pas que je veuille pinailler sur le choix des mots avec le sénateur Grafstein, mais si j'avais rédigé ce texte, j'aurais employé les mots «nécessité» ou «besoin» plutôt que «rôle», parce que c'est ce dont nous parlons. Pour assurer l'indépendance judiciaire, il est nécessaire que les juges aient une sécurité financière. Nous ne parlons pas d'un rôle, mais d'un besoin.

La présidente: Je dois dire que cette disposition a fait l'objet d'un long débat.

Le sénateur Balfour: Auquel je n'ai pas assisté.

Le sénateur Joyal: Je suis d'accord avec le sénateur Balfour et le sénateur Grafstein. Je dois dire, bien honnêtement, qu'il y a plein de mots dans le dictionnaire. C'est la magie de la langue. Il est certain qu'on peut formuler un objectif de différentes façons sans changer l'essence même de ce que nous voulons dire. Mes collègues comprendront que j'ai essayé de rédiger un texte qui respecte ce que j'ai souligné, c'est-à-dire qui soit conforme à la tradition et aux obligations de notre Constitution sur la séparation and our constitutional obligations of separation of power. I was conscious of choosing the terms to be sure that they were acceptable in the context of our legal tradition.

At this point, while I know that those of us who are lawyers or who have discussed legal concepts can express principles in various ways, I would be tempted to maintain this one as it stands, taking into account the research and discussion I had with the legal adviser on the selection of these words.

I understand your point. It is part of the overall essential of judicial independence that we want to maintain through the capacity of the commission to ensure that judges have financial security.

Senator Beaudoin: I think we have discussed this ad nauseam, because it is only one point out of three in the Valenti case. I am ready to accept this as it is.

The Chairman: May I ask your opinions on point "(d)", Senator Joyal and others?

Senator Joyal: I would like to hear the opinion of my colleagues before I make my comments on that, Madam Chairman.

The Chairman: We are referring to the change suggested by Senator Fraser in the French version of "1.1(d)", that the word "objectif" be added after the word "facteur".

Senator Beaudoin: I have a problem with that. Look at this.

[Translation]

The French version reads "La Commission fait son examen en tenant compte des facteurs suivants", namely (a), (b), (c) and (d), "tout autre facteur qu'elle considère pertinent."

[English]

I think if we change any version, it should be the English version which states that the commission shall consider. There is no mention of the objective or the measure. It states, shall consider "(a), (b), (c), (d)" and any other objective measure. It has been translated as "tout autre facteur".

[Translation]

When you say "tout autre facteur", this implies objectivity.

Senator Joyal: No, not necessarily.

[English]

Senator Beaudoin: A factor is something that exists. It exists or it does not exist.

Senator Grafstein: That point is well taken. In the P.E.I. Reference case, one of the overlapping issues was the need for objective criteria. "Criteria" is better than "objective measures". I can bring a criterion to bear. I can say that I think everyone who has a certain colour of hair should be treated in a certain way. That, to my mind, is an arbitrary criterion. On the other hand, if I say judges who are disabled should be treated in a certain way, then I move from the arbitrary to the general. I think that "objectif" means those objective, non-arbitrary factors. We do not want the commission to say, "By the way, this was our des pouvoirs. Je me suis employé à choisir des mots qui allaient être acceptables sur le plan juridique.

Même si je sais que ceux d'entre nous qui sont avocats ou discutent de concepts juridiques peuvent exprimer des principes de différentes façons, je serais tenté de défendre la formulation que j'ai choisie compte tenu des recherches que j'ai faites et des discussions que j'ai eues avec un conseiller juridique sur le choix des mots.

Je comprends votre point de vue. Ça fait partie du principe général de l'indépendance de la magistrature que nous voulons maintenir en permettant à la commission de s'assurer que les juges ont une sécurité financière.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Je pense que nous avons discuté de cela ad nauseam parce que c'est seulement un des trois points traités dans l'affaire Valenti. Je suis prêt à accepter la disposition telle quelle.

La présidente: Puis-je vous demander votre avis sur l'alinéa d), sénateur Joyal et d'autres?

Le sénateur Joyal: J'aimerais d'abord entendre l'opinion de mes collègues avant de donner la mienne, madame la présidente.

La présidente: Je parle de la modification proposée par le sénateur Fraser à la version française de l'alinéa 1.1d) pour faire ajouter le mot «objectif» après le mot «facteur».

Le sénateur Beaudoin: J'y vois un problème. Regardez bien.

[Français]

[Traduction]

À mon avis, si on change l'une ou l'autre version, ce devrait être la version anglaise parce qu'il n'y est pas question de l'objectif ou de la mesure que la commission doit examiner. On dit que la commission examine a), b), c) et d), toute autre mesure objective. On a traduit ce passage par «tout autre facteur».

[Français]

Si vous dites tout autre facteur, le facteur est toujours objectif.

Le sénateur Joyal: Non, pas nécessairement.

[Traduction]

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Un facteur est quelque chose qui existe ou qui n'existe pas.

Le sénateur Grafstein: On en prend note. Dans le Renvoi relatif aux juges de la Cour provinciale de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, il est question de la nécessité d'avoir des critères objectifs. Le mot «critères» vaut mieux que les mots «objective measures» utilisés en anglais. Je peux établir un critère à prendre en considération. Je peux dire que tous ceux qui ont les cheveux d'une certaine couleur doivent être traités d'une certaine façon. D'après moi, c'est un critère arbitraire. En revanche, si je dis que les juges qui ont un handicap devraient être traités d'une certaine façon, je passe de l'arbitraire au général. Je pense que le mot thought.” If they have a thought, it must be a generally accepted criterion. It is almost like the notion of generally accepted accounting principles.

The Chairman: Before we go further, it may be of interest to you to note that, in the P.E.I. Reference case, they must make recommendations on judges’ remuneration by reference to objective criteria. This is where the reference comes from.

Senator Beaudoin: Objective criteria is much better. I think we should change it to that expression.

Senator Grafstein: How would that be translated in French?

The Chairman: Senator Nolin has the floor.

Senator Nolin: Of course, we can change the word “measure” to “criteria”, but the intent of Senator Fraser’s amendment was to add —

[Translation]

— if you look at the three first factors or criteria listed, clearly, they are all objective. There is no need to qualify them. However, in subparagraph 4, because they are no longer defined, these factors need to be qualified. The commission has the flexibility to choose on its own those measures or criteria that it deems necessary. These criteria should be objective. It is quite appropriate to insert the word “objective”, but only in subparagraph 4.

[English]

Senator Beaudoin: In the P.E.I. Reference case, they referred to objective criteria. That decision is also available in French. What does it say in French?

The Chairman: We do not have the French version of the P.E.I. Reference case here. We will try to get it off the Internet.

Senator Joyal: To continue on the point raised by Senator Nolin, I would remind you that the concept came from the P.E.I. Reference case. In my opinion, it was important. The basis of this amendment is that the mandate of the commission be circumscribed. The court clearly mentioned it had one element in mind when it stated that objective. In other words, it did not want to leave the commission with an open-ended mandate to make recommendations that could not be measured by objective criteria. That is my interpretation of the decision, and that is what I think we understand here.

When I was drafting the amendment, I thought it important that the word “objective” be maintained. It qualifies the various elements that the commission would take into consideration in making recommendations. I thought it was necessary to add a certain number of examples of criteria, such as the need to attract outstanding candidates to the judiciary. That idea came from the Scott commission. Honourable senators will remember that when Mr. Scott was here, he testified in that regard.

«objectif» qualifie les facteurs non arbitraires. Nous ne voulons pas que la commission exprime un avis sans y avoir vraiment réfléchi. L’avis qu’elle exprime doit être appuyé sur un critère généralement reconnu. C’est un peu comme les principes comptables généralement admis.

La présidente: Avant de poursuivre, il peut être intéressant de noter que, selon le Renvoi relatif aux juges de la Cour provinciale de l’Île-du-Prince-Édouard, la commission doit formuler des recommandations sur la rémunération des juges en s’appuyant sur des critères objectifs. C’est de là que viennent ces mots.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Les mots «objectives criteria» valent beaucoup mieux. Je pense que nous devrions les employer à la place.

Le sénateur Grafstein: Comment les traduirait-on en français?

La présidente: La parole est au sénateur Nolin.

Le sénateur Nolin: Évidemment, nous pourrions changer le mot «measure» par «criteria», mais le changement proposé par le sénateur Fraser visait à ajouter...

[Français]

... en français, le mot objectif. Si vous regardez l’énumération des trois premiers facteurs ou critères, ils sont de toute évidence objectifs. On n’a pas besoin de les qualifier à ce moment. Mais au quatrième alinéa, il faut absolument le préciser parce qu’ils ne sont plus définis à ce moment. On laisse la Commission libre de choisir elle-même les facteurs ou critères qu’elle jugera nécessaire afin de l’influencer. On veut bien que ces critères soient objectifs. Il est à propos d’ajouter le mot objectif uniquement au quatrième sous-alinéa.

[Traduction]

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Dans le Renvoi relatif aux juges de la Cour provinciale de l’Île-du-Prince-Édouard, il est question de critères objectifs. La décision a été traduite. Que dit-on en français?

La présidente: Nous n’avons pas la version française du renvoi ici. Nous essayerons de nous la procurer sur Internet.

Le sénateur Joyal: Pour revenir à ce que disait le sénateur Nolin, j’aimerais vous rappeler que ce concept vient du Renvoi relatif aux juges de la Cour provinciale de l’Île-du-Prince-Édouard. À mon avis, c’est important. L’amendement vise à circonscrire le mandat de la commission. La cour a bien indiqué l’intention qu’elle avait en énonçant cet objectif. Autrement dit, elle ne voulait pas que la commission puisse formuler des recommandations qui ne pourraient pas s’appuyer sur des critères objectifs. C’est ainsi que j’interprète la décision et c’est aussi ce que nous en pensons ici, je crois.

Quand j’ai rédigé l’amendement, j’ai jugé qu’il était important de conserver le mot «objectif». Il qualifie les divers éléments que la commission examinerait pour formuler ses recommandations. J’ai cru bon d’énoncer certains critères, comme le besoin de recruter les meilleurs candidats pour la magistrature. J’ai tiré cet exemple de ce qu’a produit la commission Scott. Mes collègues se rappelleront que M. Scott a parlé en ce sens quand il est venu témoigner devant nous.

As well, the prevailing economic conditions in Canada, including the cost of living, must be taken into account. It is mentioned in the P.E.I. Reference decision as an objective criterion. The overall economic and current financial position of the federal government is also an objective criterion.

If we are to allow the commission the capacity to do its work, then it must be able to consider other criteria, but in an objective manner. In other words, it must consider criteria that are justified, ones that are measured on objective grounds. That is why the word "objective" is so important.

I certainly support the suggestion of Senator Fraser in that regard; the word "criteria" is part of the sense of that amendment.

The Chairman: It is in the French version of the P.E.I. decision as well.

Senator Joyal: We agree that we must ensure that the English and French versions are as similar as possible.

The Chairman: We cannot change the wording after we have passed it. Therefore, we should have the exact wording before us before we vote.

We can come back to it later. We will leave the staff to worry about it.

We will move on to part "(b)" of clause 6, on page 4. Do you have a further amendment, Senator Joyal?

Senator Joyal: Yes, Madam Chairman. It is essentially a matter of clarification.

I move that Bill C-37 be amended at paragraph "(b)", on page 4, by replacing line 14 with the following:

"a report of the Commission within six months after receiving it."

The French amendment would read:

[Translation]

Paragraphe:

b) à la page 4, par substitution à la ligne 13, de ce qui suit:

"(7) Le ministre donne suite au rapport de la Commission au".

...within six months of receiving it. The six-month period remains in effect. We are talking here about the commission's report. This provision can be somewhat confusing, as it is not clear if we are talking about the commission's report or about Parliament's report.

Senator Beaudoin: Does the French version make no mention of this six-month period?

Senator Joyal: Yes, the text continues on line 14.

Senator Beaudoin: And that is where mention is made of the six-month period?

Il faut également tenir compte de l'état de l'économie au Canada, et notamment du coût de la vie. Dans la décision rendue dans le Renvoi relatif aux juges de la Cour provinciale de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, cet aspect est considéré comme un critère objectif. La situation économique et financière du gouvernement fédéral est aussi un critère objectif.

Pour pouvoir remplir son mandat, la commission doit pouvoir étudier d'autres critères, mais de façon objective. Autrement dit, elle doit examiner des critères qui sont justifiés, des critères qui peuvent être évalués sur une base objective. Voilà pourquoi le mot «objectif» est si important.

J'approuve tout à fait la proposition du sénateur Fraser à ce sujet; le mot «criteria» donne en partie son sens à cet amendement.

La présidente: Il est aussi employé dans la version française de la décision sur le renvoi de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard.

Le sénateur Joyal: Nous convenons qu'il faut nous assurer que les versions anglaise et française se ressemblent le plus possible.

La présidente: Nous ne pouvons pas changer le libellé après l'avoir adopté. Nous devons donc avoir le libellé exact avant de nous prononcer.

Nous pouvons y revenir plus tard. Nous laisserons le soin au personnel de s'en occuper.

Nous passons à la partie b) de l'article 6, à la page 4. Avez-vous un autre amendement, sénateur Joyal?

Le sénateur Joyal: Oui, madame la présidente. Il s'agit simplement d'un éclaircissement.

Je propose que le projet de loi C-37 soit modifié, à la page 4, par substitution à la ligne 14 de la version anglaise de ce qui suit:

«a report of the Commission within six months after receiving it.»

Voici le libellé de l'amendement en français:

[Français]

Paragraphe:

b) à la page 4, par substitution à la ligne 13, de ce qui suit:

« (7) Le ministre donne suite au rapport de la Commission au »

... plus tard six mois après l'avoir reçu. On maintient la période de six mois. C'est le rapport de la commission dont on parle. L'article peut porter à confusion si c'est le rapport de la commission ou le rapport du Parlement.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: C'est parce qu'en français, on ne parle pas du six mois?

Le sénateur Joyal: Oui, il y a un six mois. On continue avec le texte de la ligne 14.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Et là, il y a le six mois?

Senator Joyal: Precisely. The only thing added to the French version is "de la Commission" because it is not clear which report is being referred to. It is purely a technicality.

[English]

I think we all understand the point.

The Chairman: At this point, rather than voting on part "(b)," we will go back to part "(a)" because we now have the wording.

Because there are changes to both the English and French versions, we will have to vote on both versions. We will start with the English version. Senator Joyal, will you restate the amendment?

Senator Joyal: The amendment to paragraph "(d)" states:

"any other objective criteria that the Commission considers relevant.";

The Chairman: Shall the English version of clause 6, as further amended, carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Carried.

Rather than reading the entire clause, it has been moved by Senator Joyal that paragraph "(d)" read:

[Translation]

Tout autre critère objectif qu'elle considère pertinent.

Senator Beaudoin: Perfect.

[English]

Senator Nolin: In the introduction of "1.1" we have the word "facteur". We must change that to "critère". I want to ensure that we are talking about the same thing.

Senator Joyal: Personally, I would prefer "facteur" in both paragraph "1.1" and in subparagraph "(d)".

Senator Nolin: My point is to use the same wording in both places.

Senator Beaudoin: But what will we use?

Senator Joyal: We will use the word "facteur".

[Translation]

Senator Joyal: "Facteur."

Senator Nolin: The correct word is "facteur."

Senator Beaudoin: However, in point d), we would use "critère objectif"?

Senator Joyal: No, we would use "facteur" to maintain agreement with paragraph 1.1.

Senator Beaudoin: And what do we do with the English version?

[English]

The Chairman: What Senator Joyal is moving is to change his amendment to read, in part "(d)":

Le sénateur Joyal: Oui, exactement. Ce qu'on ajoute tout simplement dans la version française c'est «de la Commission» parce qu'on ne sait pas de quel rapport on parle. C'est purement une technicalité.

[Traduction]

Je crois que nous comprenons tous le point.

La présidente: Maintenant, plutôt que de voter à l'égard de la partie «b)», nous allons revenir à la partie «a)» vu que nous avons le libellé

Vu qu'il y a des changements et à la version anglaise et à la version française, il nous faudra voter sur les deux versions. Nous commençons par la version anglaise. Sénateur Joyal, auriez-vous l'obligeance de reformuler l'amendement?

Le sénateur Joyal: L'amendement proposé au paragraphe «d)» stipule:

«any other objective criteria that the Commission considers relevant.»;

La présidente: La version anglaise de l'article 6 modifié est-elle adoptée?

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Adoptée.

Plutôt que de lire l'article au complet, il est proposé par le sénateur Joyal que l'alinéa d) se lise comme suit:

[Français]

Tout autre critère objectif qu'elle considère pertinent.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: C'est parfait.

[Traduction]

Le sénateur Nolin: Dans l'introduction de «1.1», nous avons le mot «facteurs». Nous devons le remplacer par «critères». Je veux être sûr que nous parlons de la même chose.

Le sénateur Joyal: Personnellement, je préférerais «facteurs» tant au paragraphe «1.1» qu'à l'alinéa «d)».

Le sénateur Nolin: Ce que je veux, c'est qu'on utilise le même mot aux deux endroits.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Mais lequel utiliserons-nous?

Le sénateur Joyal: Nous utiliserons le mot «facteurs».

[Français]

Le sénateur Joyal: «facteur».

Le sénateur Nolin: Le vrai mot est «facteur ».

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Mais dans d) ce serait «critère objectif»?

Le sénateur Joyal: Non, «facteur», parce qu'on maintient la concordance avec le paragraphe (1.1).

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Et en anglais, qu'est-ce qu'on fait?

[Traduction]

La présidente: Ce que propose le sénateur Joyal, c'est de modifier son amendement pour que l'alinéa «d)» se lise comme suit:

[Translation]

Tout autre facteur objectif qu'elle considère pertinent.

[English]

All in favour?

Senator Beaudoin: If we leave the word "criteria" in, it is included in "facteur".

Senator Joyal: I totally agree with Senator Beaudoin that in the definition "criteria" is part of "facteur". To ensure that the concordance is maintained, we should include the word "facteur". One includes the other.

The Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: All those opposed?

Carried.

That clause 6 be further amended by substituting at line 14:

"a report of the Commission within six months after receiving it."

I am informed that the French works as well.

All those in favour of the amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: All those opposed?

Carried.

Shall clause 6, as amended, carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: All those opposed?

Carried.

Shall clause 7 carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: All those opposed?

Carried.

Shall clause 8 carry? All those in favour?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: I declare clause 8 carried.

Shall clause 9 carry? All those in favour?

Hon. Senators: No.

The Chairman: All those opposed?

I declare clause 9 negatived.

Shall clause 10 carry?

Hon. Senators: No.

The Chairman: I declare clause 10 negatived.

Shall clause 11 carry?

Hon. Senators: No.

The Chairman: I declare clause 11 negatived.

[Français]

Tout autre facteur objectif qu'elle considère pertinent.

[Traduction]

Tous ceux qui sont en faveur de l'amendement.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Le mot «facteur» traduit bien le mot «critère».

Le sénateur Joyal: Je suis tout à fait d'accord avec le sénateur Beaudoin. Pour assurer la concordance, nous devrions utiliser le mot «facteur», l'un incluant l'autre.

La présidente: Tous ceux qui sont en faveur de l'amendement?

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Tous ceux qui sont contre.

Adopté.

Que l'article 6 soit de nouveau modifié par substitution à la ligne 14 du texte anglais par ce qui suit:

«a report of the Commission within six months after receiving it.»

On m'informe que ça va aussi pour le texte français.

Tous ceux qui sont en faveur de l'amendement.

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Quels sont ceux qui sont contre?

Adopté.

L'article 6 modifié est-il adopté?

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Tous ceux qui sont contre?

Adopté.

L'article 7 est-il adopté?

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Tous ceux qui sont contre.

Adopté.

L'article 8 est-il adopté? Tous ceux qui sont pour?

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: L'article 8 est adopté.

L'article 9 est-il adopté? Tous ceux qui sont pour?

Des voix: Non.

La présidente: Tous ceux qui sont contre.

L'article 9 est rejeté.

L'article 10 est-il adopté?

Des voix: Non.

La présidente: L'article 10 est rejeté.

L'article 11 est-il adopté?

Des voix: Non.

La présidente: L'article 11 est rejeté.

There are no changes to clauses 12 to 20. Shall we consider them en masse?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Beaudoin: I wish to confirm one thing. Clause 12 refers to amending section 47. It mentions the word "enfant".

[Translation]

I trust it is not related to the question of the surviving spouse.

Senator Nolin: No, it has to do with the question of children.

Senator Beaudoin: Shall this clause carry?

[English]

Senator Beaudoin: My concerns have been addressed. I wanted to be sure.

The Chairman: Shall clauses 12 to 20 carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Opposed?

Carried.

Shall clause 21 carry?

Senator Joyal: Madam Chairman, taking into account that we have amended the previous clauses of the bill, I would like to move an amendment to ensure that we are consistent with the previous clauses of the bill. I would like to move that Bill C-37 be amended in clause 21, on page 13, by replacing lines 1 to 3 with the following:

"21. Sections 2, 3, 7 and 14 to 20 come into force on a day or"

[Translation]

In French, the amendment would read as follows:

Que le projet de loi C-37, à l'article 21, soit modifié, par substitution, aux lignes 3 à 5, page 13, de ce qui suit:

"21. Les articles 2, 3, 7, et 14 à 20 entrent en vigueur à la date".

And it goes on to say on line 6 "à la date fixée par décret".

Senator Nolin: The coming-into-force date is determined by an order of the Governor in Council. A question just occurred to me. I did not put any questions to the department's witnesses when they testified before the committee. Since the coming into force of these amendments affects remuneration, does this clause not put some power in the hands of the executive? Could this not be perceived as the executive branch exercising some control over remuneration? Why would the bill not come into force on the day it receives Royal Assent?

Senator Joyal: I would not venture to speak on behalf of the justice department or the Minister of Justice, but I do believe that some provisions have been put in place.

[English]

One of the main reasons this provision has been added is that there are elements in the bill which needed further consultation with the various levels of the judiciary. In particular, in Ontario, Aucun changement n'est proposé aux articles 12 à 20. Les membres acceptent-ils de les étudier en bloc?

Des voix: D'accord.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Je veux confirmer une chose. L'article 12 porte modification de l'article 7. On utilise le mot «enfant».

[Français]

J'espère que ce n'est pas relié au conjoint survivant.

Le sénateur Nolin: Non, c'est toute la question des enfants.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Adopté?

[Traduction]

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Mes craintes sont apaisées. Je voulais être sûr.

La présidente: Les articles 12 à 20 sont-ils adoptés?

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Tous ceux qui sont contre.

Adopté.

L'article 21 est-il adopté?

Le sénateur Joyal: Madame la présidente, étant donné que nous avons modifié ces articles du projet de loi, j'aimerais proposer un amendement qui en assurera la conformité avec les dispositions précédentes du projet de loi. J'aimerais proposer que le projet de loi C-37, à l'article 21, soit modifié par substitution, aux lignes 3 à 5, page 13, de ce qui suit.

«21. Sections 2, 3, 7 and 14 to 20 come into force on a day or»

[Français]

En français, l'amendement se lirait:

Que le projet de loi C-37, à l'article 21, soit modifié, par substitution, aux lignes 3 à 5, page 13, de ce qui suit:

Et le texte français se poursuit. C'est à la date fixée par décret, à la fin de la ligne six.

Le sénateur Nolin: Ce sera un décret du pouvoir exécutif. La question me vient à l'instant et je n'ai pas posé de questions aux témoins du ministère lorsqu'ils sont venus témoigner. Comme la mise en vigueur de ces amendements inclut la rémunération, est-ce qu'il n'y a pas, dans cet article de mise en vigueur, un pouvoir entre les mains du pouvoir exécutif? Cela ne pourrait-il pas être perçu comme un contrôle de la rémunération? Pourquoi le projet de loi ne viendrait-il pas en vigueur carrément au moment de sa sanction?

Le sénateur Joyal: Je pense qu'il y a des dispositions, enfin, je ne veux pas risquer de parler au nom du ministère de la Justice ou du ministre de la Justice, certainement pas.

[Traduction]

Cette disposition a été ajoutée en grande partie parce que le projet de loi comporte des éléments qui nécessitaient une consultation plus poussée avec divers paliers de l'appareil there are discussions about the establishment of the new judges of the family court, and so forth. That is why there are elements that require further discussion with other parties and the necessity of clause 21.

Normally legislation comes into force on the day of its Royal Assent. However, because of the particular elements in the bill with respect to the provincial court, the coming into effect of the bill is fixed by an order of the Governor in Council.

Senator Beaudoin: Having regard to the complexity of the statute, I do not think it detracts from the independence of the judiciary. I understand your point because if the executive branch chooses to delay, the judges may interpret that as going against the independence of the judges." However, in my opinion, this is purely technical, and I would not worry about it.

Senator Nolin: My concern relates to clause 5. As I see it, clause 5 is not included in here. Therefore, I can backtrack on my earlier comments. Clause 5 is the remuneration clause.

Senator Joyal: However, it is not included.

[Translation]

The amendments pertain to clauses 2,3,7, 14 and 20.

Senator Nolin: I withdraw my comments in that case.

[English]

The Chairman: If I may clarify, these technical amendments are being put in because, in conjunction with Ontario's Bill 79, which would rename certain courts of Ontario, clauses 2, 3 and 7 and the transitional provisions of Bill C-37 would make corresponding amendments to various pieces of legislation, including the Judges Act.

Senator Nolin: I would ask members of this committee to forget my previous comments. The Constitution gives that power to Parliament, not to the executive branch of the government.

Senator Beaudoin: It is the power of the purse.

Senator Joyal: It is important that we know which parts of the bill are subject to a decree of the Governor in Council, taking into account the principle of the separation of power, which we discussed this morning. We must be clear that what we are doing is in strict conformity with the separation of power.

The Chairman: The question then is on the amendment to clause 21. All those in favour of the amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: All those opposed?

Carried.

Shall clause 21, as amended, carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Carried.

Shall the title carry?

judiciaire. Plus particulièrement, en Ontario, il est question de l'installation des nouveaux juges du tribunal de la famille, et cetera. C'est la raison pour laquelle il s'y trouve des éléments qui nécessitent une discussion plus poussée avec d'autres parties et l'ajout de l'article 21.

D'habitude la loi entre en vigueur au moment de la sanction royale. Cependant, étant donné les éléments particuliers du projet de loi en ce qui concerne la cour provinciale, l'entrée en vigueur est fixée par décret.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: Étant donné la complexité de la loi, je ne crois pas qu'elle s'éloigne de l'indépendance du pouvoir judiciaire. Je comprends votre point étant donné que si le pouvoir exécutif choisit de reporter l'entrée en vigueur, les juges pourraient interpréter cela comme allant à l'encontre de leur indépendance. Cependant il s'agit selon moi d'une modification purement technique et je ne m'inquiéterais pas.

Le sénateur Nolin: Je m'interroge au sujet de l'article 5. De la façon dont je vois les choses, l'article 5 n'est pas inclus ici. Par conséquent, je peux retirer ce que j'ai dit. L'article 5 est celui où il est question du calcul du traitement.

Le sénateur Joyal: Cependant, il n'est pas inclus.

[Français]

Ce sont les article 2, 3, 7,14 et 20.

Le sénateur Nolin: Je retire mes commentaires.

[Traduction]

La présidente: Si je peux éclairer votre lanterne, ces amendements techniques sont présentés parce que, conjointement avec le projet de loi 79 de l'Ontario, qui renommerait certains tribunaux de l'Ontario, les articles 2, 3 et 7 de même que les dispositions transitoires du projet de loi C-37 apporterait des modifications qui s'imposent à diverses mesures législatives, y compris la Loi sur les juges.

Le sénateur Nolin: Je demande aux membres du comité d'oublier ce que j'ai dit. La Constitution donne ce pouvoir au Parlement et non à l'exécutif.

Le sénateur Beaudoin: C'est le pouvoir du Trésor public.

Le sénateur Joyal: Il est important que nous sachions quelles sont les parties du projet de loi qui sont assujetties à un décret, en tenant compte du principe de la séparation des pouvoirs dont nous avons discuté ce matin. Nous devons nous assurer de respecter la séparation des pouvoirs.

La présidente: La mise aux voix porte sur l'amendement proposé à l'article 21. Tous ceux qui sont en faveur de l'amendement?

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Quels sont ceux qui s'y opposent?

Adopté.

L'article 21 modifié est-il adopté?

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Adopté.

Le titre est-il adopté?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Carried.

Shall the bill, as amended, carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Carried.

Is it agreed that the clauses of the bill be renumbered appropriately?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Carried.

Shall I report the bill, as amended, to the Senate?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: That completes our agenda for today, honourable senators.

The committee adjourned.

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Adopté.

Le projet de loi modifié est-il adopté?

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Adopté.

Plaît-il aux membres du comité que les articles du projet de loi soient renumérotés correctement?

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Adopté.

Dois-je faire rapport du projet de loi modifié au Sénat?

Des voix: D'accord.

La présidente: Honorables sénateurs, nous avons épuisé notre ordre du jour.

La séance est levée.

Executive Summary

This report has been prepared by Anand Parsan and Jill Wagman, Principals at Eckler Ltd., acting as independent, impartial and fair experts, retained by the Department of Justice Canada in the context of the 2024 Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission (Quadrennial Commission) process. Anand and Jill were retained by the Department of Justice Canada to conduct an analysis on the compensation and pension benefits of federally appointed judges to assist the 2024 Quadrennial Commission in its inquiry. Anand and Jill have a combined 50 years of industry experience, and their biographies can be found in Appendix B.

We determined the value of the judicial annuity that is available to federally appointed judges upon retirement from the bench. Judicial salaries and the judicial annuity were also assessed by reviewing the compensation of comparable jobs in the market. Where available, salary, pension, and total compensation were analyzed for self-employed lawyers, federal Deputy Ministers, federal government agency appointees, Professional Law Corporations, Deans of law schools, and top corporate legal jobs.

This report presents the results of our review of the total compensation paid to those in comparable jobs and the current compensation of federally appointed judges. Observations and recommendations are provided to help guide the Quadrennial Commission in its inquiry into the compensation of federally appointed judges.

The total compensation package of federally appointed judges is difficult to compare to other jobs in the market given the generous pension plan (i.e. the judicial annuity). Self-employed lawyers continue to be a key comparator, however they do not receive any additional pension benefits, since any pensions will be self-funded out of their own income. Pension information for federal Deputy Ministers is available and a comparison is provided in this report.

As of April 1, 2024, the salary of a puisne federally appointed judge is $396,700. The average age of appointment between April 1, 2020 and March 31, 2024 for puisne judges is 51.85 years old, or 51.95 when including associate judges, where the Net Value of the judicial annuity is 44.1%. The total compensation for a puisne judge is therefore $571,645 when combining the base salary and the value of the judicial annuity. Below is a summary of how the salaries of federally appointed judges compare to each comparator job by salary and pensions where available.

If all comparator salaries excluding the Block Comparator are given an equal weighting, the median salary amongst the comparators is $357,138, the 75th percentile is $410,175, and the average is $370,563. The median total compensation is $460,920, the 75th percentile is $634,311, and the average is $486,068. We note that the salary for puisne judges is above the median and average of the comparator data and that the total compensation of puisne judges is close to the 75th percentile of the aggregate comparator data.

Introduction

This report has been prepared by Anand Parsan and Jill Wagman, Principals at Eckler Ltd., acting as independent and unbiased parties to the Department of Justice Canada, the Quadrennial Commission, and the various participants appearing before the Commission to make recommendations with regards to judicial compensation.

Subsection 26(2) of the Judges Act requires that the Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission (“Quadrennial Commission”) inquire into the adequacy of the compensation and benefits of federally appointed judges every four years. The 2024 Commission was statutorily required to begin its inquiry on June 1, 2024. Previous Quadrennial Commissions were established in 1999, 2003, 2007, 2011, 2016, and 2020.

The Commission consists of three members: one member nominated by the judiciary, one member nominated by the Minister of Justice, and a chair who is selected by the other two members. The Commission submits a report with recommendations to the Minister of Justice of Canada. The Government must respond to the report within four months of receiving it.⁵

The last Quadrennial Commission, the 2020 Commission, issued their report in August 2021. That Commission was appointed in June 2020 but postponed the start date of the inquiry to December 2020 based on the joint request of the Government and the judiciary. The prior report contained eight recommendations, all of which were accepted by the Government:⁶

- Recommendations 1-3 (salaries): Generally, the report recommended that judges’ salaries continue to be adjusted annually based on the Industrial Aggregate Index (IAI).
- Recommendations 4-7 (allowances): The report recommended an increase in incidental allowance from $5,000 to $7,500, an increase to maximum allowable representational allowance in line with the increase to cost of living, and the creation of a new medical assistance allowance for certain judges to cover reasonable medical travel expenses incurred when required to travel for non-elective medical or dental treatments.
- Recommendation 8 (data collection): The report recommended data collection methods to help the seventh Commission (the 2024 Quadrennial Commission) in its inquiry.

Eckler was retained by the Department of Justice Canada in July 2024 to conduct an analysis on the compensation and pension of federally appointed judges to assist the seventh Quadrennial Commission in their review. Salaries of federally appointed judges are specified in the Judges Act.⁷ As of April 1, 2024, for all superior courts (other than the Supreme Court of Canada), the puisne judge salary was $396,700 and the associate chief justice and chief justice salary was $435,000.

Approach

A compensation strategy defines the parameters and guidelines for executing a compensation program. The following key components of a strategy were considered in this assessment:

1. Target market
2. Target positioning
3. Pay elements/mix

The pay elements/mix are the different types of compensation that can make up a role's total compensation package. These can include salary, incentives, benefits, perquisites, and retirement plans. It is important to consider all parts of the compensation package when comparing between roles in order to ensure externally equitable observations are drawn. The total value of a compensation package can be similar between two roles, but the mix of the pay elements within the package can vary significantly.

One component of a total compensation program can be a retirement plan. While many organizations offer employer-sponsored retirement plans, a lot of Canadians need to plan for their retirement savings on their own. Most employer-sponsored retirement plans require annual contributions by both the employees and the employer, though some plans are entirely funded by the employer.⁸

The target market is made up of organizations or roles where you compete for talent. Education and experience requirements to become a judge were taken into consideration when determining appropriate comparator jobs. To become a federally appointed judge in Canada, generally ten years at the bar of a province or territory is required, or a combination of ten years at the bar and in the powers and duties of a judicial nature on a full-time basis in a position held pursuant to a law of Canada or of a province or territory.⁹

Self-employed lawyer data provided by the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) has been relied on heavily in the past as a key comparator for assessing the compensation of federally appointed judges. That said, the self-employed lawyer data was still analyzed, together with data for Deputy Ministers and government agency appointees provided by the Privy Council Office (PCO) and Professional Law Corporations provided by Statistics Canada, which aligns with previous reports. Additional data researched and examined for this report include data for law school professors and Deans from the Ontario Broader Public Sector Salary Disclosure, as well as top legal roles of corporations from the Economic Research Institute (ERI) database.

Research conducted found that there are not proper comparators for the judicial annuity (i.e. the judicial pension plan), as it allows members to go beyond some of the restrictions laid out in the Income Tax Act. Federal Deputy Minister compensation at the DM -3 level has been considered by past Commissions, and thus a comparison is provided. It was assumed that the non-pension benefits and allowances offered to judges is very comparable on a relative value basis to that offered to Deputy Ministers and Government Agency Appointees. Therefore, while other benefits and allowances were considered it would not have a material impact on the total pay package given that the relative values are similar among the various comparators, thus greater focus is placed on the value of the pension plan.

The target market positioning is the percentile of the peer group that an organization aims to pay. There are reasons that an organization may choose to pay at market, lag, or lead the market. To be market-competitive, organizations most commonly choose to target the median, or 50th percentile, of the target market. To recruit and retain exceptional individuals, we would consider a market lead positioning and target the 65th or 75th percentile.

The average age of appointment for judges is 51.95 from April 1, 2020, to March 31, 2024, and therefore the analysis of comparators may focus on that age group, where applicable. Many of the analyses are examined by location (Census Metropolitan Area), as approximately two-thirds of judges are in Ontario and Quebec. Other dimensions for analysis included salary exclusions, age exclusions, and pension, where data was available.

Judicial compensation was reviewed as of April 1, 2024, and an analysis of the demographics and geographics of active appointments was completed. Salaries as of April 1, 2024, were compared to April 1, 2020, salaries and over this period, salaries increased by 17% in total based on annual changes to the Industrial Aggregate (IA).

Demographics

Analysis of current judicial compensation included all federally appointed judges appointed before April 1, 2024, who are currently active (i.e., full workload and making contributions to their pension plan). There are over 900 judges that are active members of the pension plan and the province with the most active members is Ontario. The Census Metropolitan Area (CMA) with the most active members is Toronto.

Between 2019 and 2024, the salaries of federally appointed judges increased by a total of approximately 20% with an average annual increase of 3.8%. The table below shows the history of federally appointed judicial salaries over that time frame.

The Judges Act provides that judicial salaries are adjusted annually on the basis of the lesser of the percentage change in Statistics Canada's Industrial Aggregate Index or 7%. The Industrial Aggregate (IA) measures the number of working Canadians and their average weekly earnings, excluding some job types such as military. The Industrial Aggregate Index (IAI) expresses the rate of change of the IA over time. It is an index similar to the Consumer Price Index (CPI), which tracks the prices of items that are typically purchased by Canadian consumers.

Pension

For federally appointed judges, the judicial annuity is one of the best retirement plans in Canada, where judges contribute 7% of their income annually until they are eligible for an unreduced annuity, at which time their contributions reduce to 1% of their income annually.¹⁴ The federal government is responsible for the balance, which is paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The lifetime annuity is equal to two-thirds of the final year's earnings if the judge has met one of the three thresholds:

1. At least seventy-five years old and served at least ten years.
2. Served at least fifteen years and have a sum of age and years of service of at least eighty.
3. Served on the Supreme Court of Canada for at least ten years.

A reduced lifetime annuity is available at retirement before meeting these thresholds. The lifetime annuity is equal to two-thirds of the final year's earnings if a judge is permanently disabled while serving as a federal appointed judge with no minimum service requirement. A surviving spouse of a judge following their death before retirement receives income equal to one-third of the judge's salary. A surviving spouse of a judge following their death after retirement receives income equal to half of the annuity payable to the judge. The annuity is protected against inflation based on changes in the CPI in each year that it is payable.

Federally appointed judges are eligible to select supernumerary status if they have served at least fifteen years as a federally appointed judge and have a sum of age and years of service of at least eighty or are at least seventy years old with at least ten years of service as a federally appointed judge. Supernumerary status gives judges a reduced workload of approximately 50% while they continue to receive full compensation. Federally appointed judges can have supernumerary status for a maximum of ten years or until the age of seventy-five, whichever comes first. Supreme Court Judges are not eligible for supernumerary status.

Judges appointed before the age of fifty-five who can elect supernumerary status can also retire on a full unreduced retirement annuity. Judges appointed after the age of fifty-five become eligible for supernumerary status before becoming entitled to a full retirement annuity but can mature into a full annuity by continuing in service either full-time or in supernumerary status. Judges appointed at age 65 or older will never become eligible for supernumerary status.

The value of the judicial annuity benefit is summarized in the table below. The values are expressed as a percentage of annual pensionable earnings. The values in the table below are based on the assumptions disclosed in the 13th Actuarial Report on the Pension Plan for Federally Appointed Judges as at March 31, 2022¹⁵ and the data as at March 31, 2024 as provided by Department of Justice Canada.

Age Range	Average Cost of Pension Accruals	Average Member Contribution Rate	Net Value of Judicial Annuity
<35	n/a	n/a	n/a
35-43	37.6%	7.0%	30.6%
44-47	47.4%	7.0%	40.4%
48-51	51.1%	7.0%	44.1%
52-55	52.3%	7.0%	45.3%
56-59	54.4%	7.0%	47.4%

64-69	59.4%	4.0%	55.4%
>69	70.3%	3.9%	66.4%

The value of the judicial annuity does not consider the effects of income taxes. After retirement, the entire benefit paid by the judicial annuity is taxable each year it is paid.

Benefits and Allowances

Federally appointed judges receive health benefits similar to those provided to federal government employees.¹⁶ All costs related to health benefits of judges are paid for. Short-term disability and non-permanent long-term disability are provided to judges by a continuation of salary and permanent long-term disability is provided through the judicial annuity.

Federally appointed judges who are required to change their place of residence for their judicial duties are paid a removal allowance to cover major costs¹⁷ such as:

- Travelling expenses while looking for a new residence and while moving
- Transportation and storage of household effects
- Costs related to the sale of their former place of residence
- Costs related to cancelling a lease for their former place of residence
- Some interest charges on the mortgage of their new residence if they are higher than the interest charges on the mortgage of their former residence
- In some circumstances, the interest on short-term loans used to purchase a new place of residence pending the sale of their former residence
- For a reasonable period of time, the cost of maintaining their former residence while it is on the market

Other allowances include travel allowance, incidental allowance, conference allowance, and representational allowance.

Total Compensation

Total compensation for federally appointed judges can be looked at as the sum of their salary, Canada Pension Plan (CPP) contributions, the value of the judicial annuity, and the value of any other perquisites. It is assumed that the value of other perquisites is for the most part similar to the other comparators on a relative value basis and is therefore not considered in this report. Employer CPP contributions will be $4,056 in 2024 for everyone,¹⁸ or about 1% of the puisne judicial salary.

The average age of appointment is 51.85 years for puisne judges from April 1, 2020 to March 31, 2024. Therefore, we have used the Net Value of Judicial Annuity from the age range 48-51, which is 44.1% of puisne judges' salary, for the purpose of determining the total compensation of $571,645.

The table below shows the Total Compensation of federally appointed puisne judges grossed up by the Net Value of the judicial annuity weighted by age.

Analysis

Self-Employed Lawyers

May 2024 CRA data and statistics were provided for self-employed lawyers in Canada, excluding filers from abroad. The data set only included individuals between the ages of 35 and 69 under the NAICS code 541110 (office of lawyers). Net Professional Income in the analysis is defined as a self-employed lawyers' net earnings by consolidating net professional/business incomes plus employment incomes. This is their total compensation, as under the Income Tax Act, self-employed individuals are not permitted to sponsor or earn benefits under a registered pension plan.¹⁹ Health and other benefits are typically paid for out of their gross income and can be deducted as a business expense. Note that it is unclear if other incentives such as dividend income would significantly alter the results of the information provided by the CRA.

The files provided by the CRA were divided into two types, labeled 'a' and 'b'. The files labeled 'a' contained count, mean, standard deviation, median, and 75th percentile data of self-employed lawyer income. The files labeled 'b' provided either 10 or 20 tiles, which were used to approximate percentiles.

In sample 'a', there are 10 people missing from each of 2020 and 2021 in the provincial/territorial breakdown. In sample 'b', there are 10 too many people in 2021 and 10 too few people in 2022 in the provincial/territorial breakdown. It is assumed that this is due to rounding and not statistically significant.

In sample 'a', the number of self-employed lawyers has decreased by approximately 22% across Canada between 2019 and 2023. The CMAs with the largest decreases by percent were Montréal, Toronto, and Québec City. This decrease in the number of self-employed lawyers follows the trend observed in previous reports. The table below shows the number of self-employed lawyers by CMA for 2019 to 2023.

Using the statistical approximations provided by the CRA, percentiles were calculated using the provided methodology to be consistent with previous years. The aggregate data for all of Canada increased overall from 2019 to 2023, though there was a decrease between 2021 and 2022. Statistical approximations were also provided excluding all salaries less than $60,000 per year, less than $80,000 per year, and less than $90,000 per year. While excluding salary levels is not a common or recommended practice in market benchmarking exercises, the analyses in this report were done on all data cuts provided to be consistent with previous years' reports. Excluding lower salaries artificially inflates the data of all percentiles and reduces the sample size, especially in regions that already have a relatively low number of self-employed lawyers.

Peer groups are a central component of how pay programs are set and assessed. Ideally, a well-constructed peer group helps Boards establish appropriate pay levels and governance practices and demonstrates to interest holders how the program helps an organization compete for talent. However, inappropriate use of peer group comparisons can contribute to higher compensation.

When screening for potential peers, casting a broad net will ensure a robust data set. Many organizations try to “cherry pick” specific peers in a data set or use aspirational peers or set pay levels above the peer median based on the relative perceived worth of their staff. Organizations have also become adept at using peer comparisons to illustrate purported retention risks that necessitate additional compensation. These factors appear to have contributed to a feedback loop in the benchmarking process, with pay rising at a rate that has raised concerns for some interest holders.

While a perfect peer group may not exist for every organization, achieving a balance between direct comparators and a robust sample of the talent market is key.

With no salary exclusions, the median data increased by a total of 20.5% between 2019 and 2023, the data excluding salaries less than $60,000 increased by 11.7%, the data excluding salaries less than $80,000 increased by 10.3%, and the data excluding salaries less than $90,000 increased by 10.0%. The table below shows the median and 75th percentile as well as the estimated 60th, 70th, 80th, and 90th percentiles for all of Canada with no salary exclusions and the salary exclusion data cuts.

Note that the “All Canada” data in the below table is varies slightly from the “All Canada” data in the tables by CMA due to different sample sizes in the data provided.

The majority of federally appointed judges are appointed between the ages of 48 and 55. This is also approximately the same age range of the highest earning group of self-employed lawyers. While age is not a common parameter used in market benchmarking exercises in Canada, as it is not a good proxy for estimating experience and expertise, we have included salary data by age in the table below for completeness.

At median, the data for the 35-46 age group increased by a total of 28.2% between 2019 and 2023, the 47-54 age group increased by 18.9%, and the 55-69 age group increased by 14.2%. Analyses are provided on all three age ranges included in the CRA in the table below for 2019 to 2023.

For a self-employed lawyer to replicate the judicial annuity, they would need to make the maximum RRSP contributions annually and set aside other investment contributions beyond the RRSP maximum. The tax treatment of an RRSP is similar to that of the judicial annuity, but most other investments contributions are made after tax and investment income is taxable, with the exception of investment income in a Tax-Free Savings Account (TFSA).

The Net Value of judicial annuity ranges from 30-60% of pay, while RRSP limits are 18% of pay but with an annual dollar cap that results in any earnings above $175,333 (in 2024) not producing additional RRSP room. A TFSA has a current annual contribution limit of $7,000, but an individual's TFSA contribution room accumulates each year starting in 2009. Assuming the individual was over age 18 in 2009, this amounts to a total accumulated maximum of $95,000 in 2024 (assuming no prior contributions have been made). Therefore, the average annual amount that self-employed lawyers would have to save to replicate the judicial annuity would not be possible without using other strategies.

Deputy Ministers

Federal Deputy Minister data was provided by the PCO for 2018 to 2023. Though the sample size for Deputy Ministers is relatively small, past Quadrennial Commissions have used them as a public sector comparator for judges. Deputy Ministers are professional, non-partisan public servants. They provide expert advice and undertake the day-to-day management of a department on behalf of the Minister.²⁰

One key difference in compensation between Deputy Ministers and federally appointed judges is that Deputy Ministers are eligible for additional cash compensation in the form of at-risk pay/bonus. The table below shows the average salary, at-risk pay, and total cash (salary plus at-risk pay) for three levels of Deputy Ministers for 2018 to 2023.

Block Comparator and Deputy Minister DM-3 Total Compensation

The 2015 and 2020 Quadrennial Commission discussed using compensation of deputy ministers at the DM-3 level and their year-over-year increases as a reference for judicial compensation (the “Block Comparator”). The methodology used to calculate the Block Comparator in each year was to use the mid-point of the DM-3 base salary range plus half of the total possible at-risk pay. Total at-risk pay is the maximum amount that a deputy minister can earn based upon performance, which is 33% of base salary.

The table below has the Block Comparator for Deputy Ministers from 2018 to 2023 as of the beginning of each fiscal year.

Deputy Ministers (DM-3)	Salary Components				Block Comparator
	Fiscal Year	Mid-Point Base Salary	Maximum	Total At-Risk Pay	Half of Total At-Risk Pay	Mid-Point Salary + Half of Total At-Risk Pay

* The Performance awards for Deputy Ministers provides 33% of Base Salary the maximum At-Risk Pay for the highest evaluation (i.e. Surpassed). This was assumed in the 2020 Quadrennial Commission report.

Note that the Block Comparator ignores the pension plan and other forms of compensation available to deputy ministers.

Deputy Ministers receive pension benefits in addition to their cash compensation. CPP contributions are the same as federally appointed judges, but the value of the pension plan differs. To obtain a similar pension income as federally appointed judges, Deputy Ministers would need to work in the public service for approximately 35 years contributing to the Public Service Pension Plan.²¹ Deputy Ministers hired prior to January 1, 2013 must contribute 9.35% on the first $68,500 of income and 12.25% on income above $68,500.²² For illustrative purposes, the following table contrasts the benefits of the judicial annuity with the pension benefits for Deputy Ministers hired

It should be noted that the pension benefits for Deputy Ministers are provided from both a registered pension plan and a non-registered supplemental plan that together provide benefits near the maximum allowed by the CRA. Pension benefits in excess of those provided to Deputy Ministers are generally deemed by the CRA to be salary deferral arrangements, which attract adverse tax treatment. Even so, the pension benefits provided to federally appointed judges are significantly greater than those provided to Deputy Ministers as a percentage of earnings.

The value of the judicial annuity benefit components for judges' age group 48 to 51 is summarized in the table below. The values are expressed as a percentage of annual pensionable earnings.

Age Range	Disability Value	Pension Value Net of Puisse Judges' Contributions	Net Value of Judicial Annuity
48-51	5.6%	38.5%	44.1%

Block Comparator (DM-3) is the sum of mid-point salary for 2023-2024 ($333,300) and half of maximum At-Risk Pay (33% of base salary).

Similar to federally appointed judges, Deputy Ministers receive health and other benefits in addition to their cash compensation and pension benefit.

Government Agency Appointees

Data for government agency appointees was provided by the PCO for 2018 to 2024. The sample size for Government agency appointees is very small, so average actual salaries were not provided. While the salary levels below do not include at-risk pay, level GC-09 is eligible for at-risk pay of a maximum of 23.4%, which includes 6% for a surpassed performance bonus, and level GC-10 is eligible for at-risk pay of a maximum of 28.4%, which includes 8% for a surpassed performance bonus. Levels GCQ-09 and GCQ-10 are not eligible for at-risk pay.

For a provincial comparator, Crown Counsel for Government of British Columbia at the highest step has a salary of $251,188²⁵ effective April 1, 2024. This is comparable to the Government of Ontario Crown Counsel salary of $257,464 for 2023. Note that the Ontario “sunshine list” is released by the Government of Ontario annually and discloses the salaries of public sector employees.²⁶

Professional Law Corporations

Data for Professional Law Corporations (PLCs) is a new comparator for federally appointed judges. Data was provided by the Economic Analysis Division, Statistics Canada, for owners and two types of partners as of June 2024. Type 1 partners are individuals and type 2 partners are corporations.

The data received from Statistics Canada contains information on partnerships and associated individual and corporate partners as identified from T5013 forms obtained from the CRA. This data allowed us to clearly identify the number and type of partners in a partnership. There are nine different partner types, including individual, corporate, trust, foreign, domestic, etc. There was a discrepancy in partner counts due to confidentiality rules in the Statistics Canada tool.

The table below shows the median and 75th percentile income data for PLC owners from 2018 to 2021 by age group.

 The PLC Owner data age group used was 47-54 years old since the average age of appointment is 51.2 for judges.*

As noted in our analysis, the percentage of PLC owners with dividends in 2021 was 57.8-60.9% between all age groups. The counts for the income and dividend data provided for PLC owners does not match, so we have assumed those who did not report dividend income did not receive any dividends. The table below shows the averages of income, dividend, and the sum by age group for PLC owners from 2018 to 2021.

2021	$300,000	5,440	$162,000	3,280	$397,676

*The approximate average income including dividends was calculated by assuming the difference between the count of average income and count of dividend represent those who received $0 dividend.

In 2021, the approximate average income including dividends for PLC owners in the 47-54 age group was $456,442. Including judicial annuity, the total compensation for federally appointed puisne judges at the average age of 51.95 is $571,645 in 2024, which is 25.3% higher than the approximate average income including dividends for PLC owners. If we adjust judicial compensation to 2020, the total compensation is $570,511 or 25.0% higher than the approximate average income including dividends for PLC owners.

Professional Law Corporations – Additional Tax Components

Data was provided on November 4, 2024, by the Research and Statistics Division at CRA. The tax form data provided highlights the income of a professional Law Corporation. This data did not necessarily have the elements that would directly inform income of individual lawyers or partners at one of these corporations. For the corporate component, each of the elements fall in the following categories:

- Net Non-Farming Income – Corporation income tax return
- Taxes Assessed, Wages and Salaries, Partnership Income – Employee remittances
- Dividends – Certain Investment income paid
- Capital Gains – Dividends considers Capital Gains

The table below are All Corporations with NAICS Code 541110 at Any Net Non-Farming Income amount for all of Canada.

Law School Deans and Professors

Law school Deans and Professors are a new comparator for federally appointed judges. There are twenty law schools in Canada that teach the common law system and seven law schools that teach the civil law system. Note that the province of Quebec uses the civil law system for private law matters. The table below shows the 2023 total cash statistics for law school Deans in Ontario from the Ontario Broader Public Sector salary disclosure.³⁰

Position	Median	65th Percentile	75th Percentile	Average
Dean	$202,873	$224,686	$246,665	$211,077

For outside of Ontario, the Dean of the Law School at UBC’s Peter A. Allard School of Law salary for 2023-2024 is $402,816. However, the Dean of Law at University of Dalhousie’s Schulich School of Law salary for 2023-2024 is $169,384.

Data was collected and aggregated from the Statement of Compensation Required Pursuant to the Public Sector Compensation Disclosure Act for key law faculty sites across Canada. The table below shows statistics for full law professors that received compensation of $100,000 or more for 2023-2024 for each university, as well as the aggregate statistics for all universities in the comparator group. The data used for this analysis can be found in Appendix E.

Top Legal Roles

Data for top legal roles in corporations in Canada is new in this report. Data was pulled from the Economic Research Institute (ERI)³¹ for all of Canada and the same CMAs as previously analyzed. No other data parameters were applied (age, salary exclusions, etc.). The data is effective August 2024. Benefit and pension information is not available for this comparator. The data as provided by ERI is available in Appendix F.

When referring to Top Legal Roles, the position used was Top Legal Executive with the identification job number 114337 within the ERI database. These roles direct, oversee, and control legal activities to ensure their organization’s legal posture is developed and maintained. This includes establishing legal services and ensuring that the organization is protected from legal action. They have to keep fully informed on all legislation affecting the organization’s operations and new developments in corporate legal matters. An example of a position categorized as Top Legal Executive could be Director of Legal, Head of Legal, and Chief Legal Officer for companies with $500 million or more in revenue. The important distinction is these jobs are the highest level of a legal position in their respective companies.

Economic Research Institute (ERI) data is gathered from 3 sources: surveys that ERI conducts themselves, surveys purchased from other organizations, and reports from publicly traded organizations.

Observations

It is recommended that the All-Canada data cut be used in the Commission’s inquiry instead of looking at the specific salary exclusion data cuts or the age range data cuts. Using the data cuts excluding salary levels suggests that self-employed lawyers under a certain income level wouldn’t be considered for federal appointment. If that is indeed the case, it should be documented. If lower salaries are excluded from the analysis as outliers, the question arises as to whether salaries on the higher end should also be excluded? They may be outliers or just indicative of business success, instead of a true reflection of legal acumen required for a federally appointed judge.

If all comparator salaries excluding the Block Comparator are given an equal weighting, the median salary amongst the comparators is $357,138, the 75th percentile is $410,175, and the average is $370,563. The median total compensation is $460,920, the 75th percentile is $634,311, and the average is $486,068. We note that the salary for puisne judges as of April 1, 2024 is above the median and average of the comparator data and that the total compensation of puisne judges is close to the 75th percentile of the aggregate comparator data.

We observe that the IAI used to determine the annual salary increases for federally appointed judges can be negative (although not common) and is not necessary indicative of what the rest of the workforce will be receiving.

The value provided by the judicial annuity is well in excess of the pension benefits available to any comparator group discussed in this report. The Income Tax Act prescribes limits of a 2% accrual rate and the average of the three highest years of earnings, along with a specified dollar limit for registered pension plans in Canada, effectively limiting pensionable earnings to $180,500 in 2024. In contrast, federally appointed judges can receive an accrual rate as high as 6.67% per year and have a pension based on their final year of earnings alone, with no limits on the pensionable earnings. While highly compensated individuals may have supplemental, non-registered pension benefits in addition to a registered pension plan, CRA restricts such plans to only covering the portion of earnings above the limit for registered pension plans and generally does not allow for higher accrual rates or other additional benefits without being classified as a salary deferral arrangement and attracting adverse tax consequences.

Appendix A: Terms and Definitions

Compensation Elements

Salary Range Minimum – The minimum rate within the salary range, or the first step of a step structure, that is acceptable for a position, on an annual, full-time basis.

Job Rate / Range Mid-point – The salary an organization is prepared to pay for competent performance by a fully trained incumbent, on an annual, full-time basis. This is typically the mid-point of a salary range or the last step of a step structure.

Salary Range Maximum – The maximum rate within the salary range, or the last step of a step structure, that is acceptable for a position, on an annual, full-time basis.

Base Salary – The annualized amount paid for work performed on a regular, ongoing basis. Does not include variable bonus or incentive payments, sales commissions, shift premiums, or overtime payments.

Bonus/Incentive – Cash arrangements designed to reward an individual for performance/results achieved during a period of one year or less.

Total Cash – Base salary plus bonus.

RRSP – Registered Retirement Savings Plan; a retirement savings vehicle where contributions are tax deductible and investment returns are tax sheltered until withdrawn. Maximum contributions are 18% of pay, limited to a fixed dollar amount per year ($31,560 in 2024).

CPP – Canada Pension Plan; a defined benefit plan for all Canadian workers, traditionally covering a maximum of 25% of earnings up to the maximum CPP earnings ($68,500 in 2024). Expanded CPP benefits will eventually cover 33% of earnings up to a higher earnings limit (14% above prior maximum).

Accrual Rate – Rate at which pension benefits are earned for each year of contributory service, as a percentage of earnings.

Registered Pension Plan – Tax-sheltered retirement vehicle where contributions are tax-deductible and benefits are not taxed until benefits are paid.

Non-registered/Supplemental Plan – Retirement vehicle that provides benefits above the limits applicable to a registered pension plan that does not receive the same favourable tax treatment.
