JUDICIAL COMPENSATION AND BENEFITS COMMISSION

BOOK OF EXHIBITS AND DOCUMENTS

of the

CANADIAN SUPERIOR COURTS JUDGES ASSOCIATION and the

CANADIAN JUDICIAL COUNCIL

December 20, 2024

Pierre Bienvenu, Ad. E.
Jean-Michel Boudreau
Étienne Morin-Lévesque
IMK LLP / s.e.n.c.r.l.

	QUADRENNIAL COMMISSION AND PARLIAMENTARY PROCEEDINGS
34.	Proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, Issue No 32, 1st Sess, 36th Parl, September 30, 1998
35.	Proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, Issue No 37, 1st Sess, 36th Parl, October 22, 1998
36.	Submissions of the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association and the Canadian Judicial Council dated December 15, 2003
37.	Evidence of Mr. E. Cherniak, QC to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Human Rights (Meeting No. 24, October 24, 2006), 39th Parliament, 1st Session
38.	Submissions of the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association and the Canadian Judicial Council dated December 14, 2007
39.	Reply Submissions of the Government of Canada, dated January 29, 2008
40.	Supplementary Reply Submissions of the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association and the Canadian Judicial Council dated February 12, 2008
41.	Submissions of the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association and the Canadian Judicial Council dated December 20, 2011
42.	Submission of the Government of Canada to the Levitt Commission, December 23, 2011 (excerpt)
43.	Submissions of the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association and the Canadian Judicial Council dated February 29, 2016
44.	Reply Submission of the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association and the Canadian Judicial Council dated March 29, 2016
45.	Submissions of the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association and the Canadian Judicial Council dated March 29, 2021
46.	Submissions of the Government of Canada, March 29, 2021
47.	Expert Report of Peter Gorham, Compensation Review of Federally Appointed Judges, March 26, 2021 (Tab 4 of the Government's Book of Documents, March 29, 2021)
48.	Appointment Demographics provided by the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs, with Summary, judicial appointments April 1, 2015 to October 23, 2020 (Tab 19 of the Joint Book of Documents, Volume II to the Turcotte Commission dated March 29, 2021)

49.	Submissions of the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association and the Canadian Judicial Council dated April 6, 2023
50.	House of Commons, Standing Committee on Justice and Human Rights, Evidence, No. 99, 1st Sess., 44th Parl., March 21, 2024
	TRIENNIAL COMMISSIONS REPORTS
51.	Report and Recommendations of Commission on Judge's Salaries and Benefits, October 6, 1983 (Lang Report)
52.	Report and Recommendations of the 1986 Commission on Judges' Salaries and Benefits, February 27, 1987 (Guthrie Report)
53.	Report and Recommendations of the 1989 Commission on Judges' Salaries and Benefits, March 5, 1990 (Courtois Report)
54.	Report and Recommendations of the 1992 Commission on Judges' Salaries and Benefits, March 31, 1993 (Crawford Report)
55.	Report and Recommendations of the 1995 Commission on Judges' Salaries and Benefits, September 30, 1996 (Scott Report)
	LAWS AND REGULATIONS
56.	Court of King's Bench Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. C-31
57.	Court of King's Bench Act, CCSM c C280
58.	Courts of Justice Act, CQLR c T-16
59.	Judicature Act, RSNB 1973, c J-2
60.	Judicature Act, RSNL 1990, c J-4
61.	Judicature Act, RSNS 1989, c 240
62.	Supreme Court Act, RSBC 1996, c 443
63.	The King's Bench Act, SS 2023, c 28 6
	NEWSPAPERS ARTICLES AND PRESS RELEASES
64.	Canadian Judicial Council, The Canadian Judicial Council publishes new Ethical Principles for Judges, June 9, 2021
65.	Louis-Samuel Perron, Entrevue avec la juge en chef de la Cour supérieure : « Tout tient avec du duct tape », La Presse, December 6, 2022

66.	Cristin Schmitz, “Top judges decry Ottawa’s appointment delays; application vetting defunct in B.C.”, Law360 Canada, May 9, 2023
67.	Daniel Leblanc, La Cour supérieure dépend de « miracles » au quotidien pour gérer la pénurie de juges, Radio-Canada, May 10 2023
68.	Darren Major, “New justice minister appoints more than a dozen judges in effort to address vacancies”, CBC, Aug 28, 2023
69.	Louise Dickson, “Provincial court judges get 28.4 % raise over four years”, Victoria Times Colonist, December 29, 2023.
70.	Remarks by the Right Honourable Richard Wagner, P.C. Chief Justice of Canada, June 3, 2024
71.	CPAC, Chief Justice Wagner Provides Update on Work of Supreme Court (June 3, 2024)
72.	Peter Zimonjic.“Ottawa making progress on judicial appointments but threats to rule of law remain, says chief justice”, CBC News, June 3, 2024
	ECONOMIC OUTLOOK – HISTORICAL
73.	Department of Finance Canada, ‘The Fiscal Monitor’, January to March 2006
74.	Statistics Canada, Catalogue # 13016 X, Economic accounts key indicators, Canada
75.	Department of Finance Canada, ‘Fiscal Reference Tables’, October 2011 REPORTS
76.	Advisory Committee on Senior Level Retention and Compensation, Third Report: Dec 2000
77.	L.C. Burns, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Profile of family law cases in Canada, 2019/2020
78.	Law Society of Saskatchewan, 2023 Annual Report
79.	Supreme Court of British Columbia, Annual Report (2023)
80.	British Columbia Judicial Compensation Commission 2022 Report, April 28, 2023
81. (a)	British Columbia Judicial Compensation Commission 2022 Report, Legislative Assembly Outcome
82.	Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association, 2023 CSCJA Member Research Report, November 2023

83.	The Advocates' Society, A Call for Action on Delay in the Civil Justice System (2023)
84.	ZSA, Private Practice Lawyer Salary Guide (June 2024)
85.	Robert Half Legal, Legal Salary Guide 2025
86.	Department of Finance, 2024 Fall Economic Statement
	VARIA
87.	The Honourable Chief Justice Lamer, "Remarks by the Rt. Honourable Antonio Lamer, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, to the Council of the Canadian Bar Association Annual Meeting" (20 August 1994)
88.	Canadian Judicial Council. Statement of Principles on Self-represented Litigants and Accused Persons, September 2006
89.	Canadian Judicial Council, Ethical Principles for Judges (2021)
90.	The Advocates Society, Letter to The Honourable David Lametti, P.C., M.P., Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada re: Judicial Vacancies and Access to Justice in Canada, December 12, 2022
91.	Federation of Ontario Law Associations, Letter to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice, February 13, 2023
92.	Canadian Bar Association, Letter to the Prime Minister, May 24, 2023
93.	Appendix A to the Letter of Agreement between Statistics Canada and the Department of Justice (June 19, 2024), Detailed Work Description
94.	Office of the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs Canada, Demographic statistics on diversity in the judiciary (October 29, 2019 – October 28, 2024)

STATEMENT OF CHIEF JUSTICE MORAWETZ

I, the undersigned, Geoffrey B. Morawetz, Chief Justice of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice (the "Court"), with an office located in Toronto, Ontario, make the following declaration:

1. I was appointed to the Court in 2005.

2. I was appointed Chief Justice of the Court in 2019.

3. The purpose of this statement is to provide evidence to assist the Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission (the "Commission") in its extant inquiry into the adequacy of the salaries and other amounts payable under the Judges Act.

4. More specifically, this statement will address the importance of maintaining a bench composed of judges with diverse experience, with strong representation of appointees from private practice, and the challenges in recruiting qualified candidates from private practice.

A. Importance of a Bench Composed of Judges with Diverse Experience, Including a Significant Contingent of Appointees from Private Practice

5. A judiciary composed of judges with diverse professional experiences is essential to preserve the efficacy of the Court. Within this diversity, it is important that a significant contingent of appointees come from private practice, as they bring a unique expertise that is increasingly essential to addressing the growing complexity of modern litigation.

6. Historically, the majority of judicial appointments have come from private practice. However, the proportion of lawyers appointed from private practice has steadily declined during the last 20 years.

7. As Chief Justice, while acknowledging that the Court is one of general jurisdiction, I can attest to the benefits of judges with the specialized knowledge and practical experience gained in private practice, within a bench composed of judges with diverse professional experiences.

8. Over recent years, I have observed a significant rise in the complexity of cases that come before Canada's superior courts.

9. Judges with a private practice background often bring extensive experience in specialized areas of law that represent an important proportion of superior courts' caseload, such as commercial litigation and family law.

10. This expertise is beneficial to meet the demands of increasingly complex legal proceedings, which call for a growing level of judicial specialization. For instance:

    a. In commercial law cases, judges must address intricate issues related to oppression, securities, corporate reorganizations and insolvency. A strong background in these areas is an important asset to respond to the needs of the litigants, especially for managing complex restructuring and insolvency proceedings, which involve high stakes and multiple stakeholders.

    b. Family law cases increasingly require judges to handle complex valuations of family held corporations and navigate cases involving intimate partner violence.

    c. The adjudication of First Nations claims often involves extensive historical records and demands cultural sensitivity and a deep understanding of Indigenous traditions.

    d. The number of class actions has risen, and they frequently raise issues that cross over into corporate insolvency. Such cases require judges adept at managing multi-party litigation and steering complex procedural dynamics.

    e. Estates litigation raises challenging issues such as valuations of closely held corporations, elder abuse claims, and intricate trust disputes. While in 2005, only one judge in Toronto presided over estate cases two or three days a week, today, four judges are assigned to Estates cases full time.

11. Given the nature of the cases that come before Canada's superior courts, it is key for the superior court bench to include a strong contingent of private sector practitioners with expertise and experience to handle these cases efficiently.

12. The 30-month trial deadline imposed by the Supreme Court in R v Jordan, and its attendant consequence on the allocation of judicial resources has a domino effect on civil cases. The resulting demands on superior courts underscore the benefits provided by a superior court bench that can count on an important proportion of judges with the specialized expertise and experience found among lawyers from private practice.

13. Canadians are fortunate to have a federally appointed judiciary composed of judges of a high calibre who strive to maintain the highest standards of judicial decision-making, ensuring that justice is delivered fairly and efficiently while upholding the rule of law. A judiciary with diverse professional backgrounds, that includes a significant contingent of appointees from private practice, is essential for Canada's superior courts to remain a first-class institution capable of meeting the evolving needs of society.

B. Difficulty in Recruiting Candidates from Private Practice

14. An increasing number of qualified private practitioners no longer view a judicial appointment, considering its attendant responsibilities and benefits, as attractive in light of the resulting significant reduction in income.

15. To be clear, I am not questioning the quality of recent appointments to the bench, nor am I suggesting that exceptional candidates cannot come from various legal backgrounds.

16. However, I am concerned about the diminishing pool of outstanding candidates from private practice, and even more so those from metropolitan areas or larger firms.

17. As Chief Justice of the Court, I frequently try to convince outstanding lawyers to consider applying for judicial appointment to fill judicial vacancies. Due to the confidential nature of this process, I am not in a position to provide specific examples of this recruiting activity.

18. What I can attest to is that, despite best efforts, I have often found myself unable to persuade qualified potential candidates to apply for judicial appointments. A routinely cited reason for this lack of interest is the combination of the heavy workload of superior court judges and the perceived lack of commensurate pay for that work.

19. This is an important issue as our Court has grappled with a significant number of judicial vacancies in the past four years, in a context where an increasing number of judges are inclined to retire before reaching the mandatory retirement age.

20. From exchanges within the Canadian Judicial Council, I know that this challenge exists in other areas of the country, particularly in urban centres.

21. In particular, many potential qualified candidates are aware of, and cite, the significant workload, travel demands, loss of autonomy, lack of administrative support, and increased public scrutiny imposed on federally appointed judges as reasons not to consider applying for judicial appointment. When these factors are considered alongside the significant resulting reduction in income, many candidates have expressed a lack of interest in seeking appointment.

22. In my experience, these issues are less pronounced amongst public sector lawyers and academics, who generally receive a pay increase upon appointment.

23. While it has always been the case that lawyers from private practice accept a reduction in income when appointed to the bench, this reduction has become more significant, as is clear from my discussions and similar discussions my colleagues at the Canadian Judicial Council have had with potential candidates.

Signed electronically this 20th day of December 2024

Geoffrey B. Morawetz, C.J.

D. E. Hyatt Litigation Economics Inc.

116 Sherwood Avenue
Toronto, ON M4P 2A7

December 19, 2024

Mr. Jean-Michel Boudreau and Mr. Étienne Morin-Lévesque
IMK s.e.n.c.r.l./LLP
Place Alexis Nihon, Tour 2
3500, boulevard De. Maisonneuve Ouest
Montréal (Québec)
H3Z 3C1

Dear Counsel,

Re: Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission

I enclose my report in this matter.

Yours truly,

Douglas E. Hyatt
Professor Emeritus

James E. Pesando
In Memoriam
(1946 to 2021)

Douglas E. Hyatt
(416) 576 - 4712
doug.hyatt@rotman.utoronto.ca

Elizabeth M. Gjata (Park)
(647) 207 - 3967
eliz.park@utoronto.ca

December 19, 2024

A Report in the Matter of the Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission

Prepared for Mr. Jean-Michel Boudreau and Mr. Étienne Morin-Lévesque

of IMK s.e.n.c.r.l./LLP

by

D.E. Hyatt Litigation Economics Inc*

* Professor Douglas E. Hyatt

I am a Professor Emeritus in the Joseph L. Rotman School of Management and the Centre for Industrial Relations, both of the University of Toronto. I was the Academic Director of Professional MBA Programs at the Rotman School of Management and was the Associate Chair of Economics for Management Studies in the Division of Management at the University of Toronto at Scarborough. I have a B.A. degree (economics), an M.A. degree (economics), and a Ph.D. (industrial relations), all from the University of Toronto.

I have been asked to provide my opinion on the following:

1. "The overall economic and current financial position of the federal government" in light of the letters from the Assistant Deputy Minister – Economic Policy Branch dated May 23 and November 29, 2024; and

2. Economic data regarding the increase in costs of living (particularly regarding the housing market) in Canadian Metropolitan Areas.

I have relied on my general knowledge of economics and economic statistics. I have also consulted or reviewed the following:

1. Letter of Ms. Julie Turcotte, Assistant Deputy Minister, Economic Policy Branch, Department of Finance, dated May 23, 2024;

2. Letter of Ms. Julie Turcotte, Associate Assistant Deputy Minister, Economic Policy Branch, Department of Finance, dated November 29, 2024;

3. Government of Canada, Budget 2024 Fairness for Every Generation;

4. Department of Finance Canada, 2024 Fall Economic Statement;

5. PEAP Memo 2024-8, Policy and Economic Analysis Program (PEAP), Rotman School of Management, University of Toronto dated November 4, 2024;

6. Statistics Canada, Employee Wages by Occupation, Annual, Table number 14-10-041701, https://www150.statcan.gc.ca/t1/tbl1/en/tv.action?pid=1410041701;

7. Consumer Price Index for Canada, Statistics Canada CANSIM series number V41690973;

8. Statistics Canada. Table 18-10-0003-01 Inter-city indexes of price differentials of consumer goods and services, annual;

9. Statistics Canada, Inter-city indexes of price differentials, of consumer goods and services 2020, Methodology. Inter-city indexes of price differentials, of consumer goods and services 2020; and

10. Statistics Canada, “Shelter in the Canadian CPI: An overview, 2023 update”, catalogue no. 62F0014M, December 19, 2023; and

11. Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission, Report and Recommendations, August 30, 2021.

I organize my report into two sections.

I THE GOVERNMENT’S ECONOMIC AND FISCAL PROJECTIONS
II RELATIVE COSTS OF LIVING IN CANADIAN METROPOLITAN AREAS

I THE GOVERNMENT’S ECONOMIC AND FISCAL PROJECTIONS

1. The May 23, 2024, and November 29, 2024, letters of Julie Turcotte set out the Government of Canada’s projections for inflation as measured by the Consumer Price Index, industrial aggregate wage growth and the Government of Canada’s budget deficit. The time horizon for the projections is 2024 to 2028.

2. The Government also provides projections for growth in real Gross Domestic Product (GDP), the broadest measure of economic activity, as set out in the 2024 Budget. The Government appears to base its GDP forecast on the consensus (i.e., average) forecasts of 12 financial sector and academic organizations.

3. The Policy and Economic Analysis Program (PEAP) at the Rotman School of Management, University of Toronto, is a highly respected, independent economic forecasting group (and is one of the forecasters included in the Government’s consensus forecast). PEAP is one of the very few forecasters to project economic conditions over longer periods into the future. Further, PEAP regularly revises their forecasts to reflect new data, policy changes, interest rate revisions, and supply and demand shocks. The following compares the consensus/Government GDP forecasts with those of the more contemporary PEAP forecast (November 4, 2024).

Year	Consensus/ Gov’t	PEAP
2024	0.7%	1.1%
2025	1.9%	1.7%
2026	2.2%	2.0%
2027	2.1%	1.9%
2028	2.0%	2.0%

4. Over the forecast period, the average projected growth in real GDP is 1.7 percent per the Government of Canada and 1.9 percent per PEAP. I emphasize that the PEAP forecasts reflect more current information compared to the consensus forecasts relied upon by the Government.

5. Over the 2024 to 2028 period, the Government of Canada projects that the IAI will increase at an average annual rate of 3.0 percent. PEAP's IAI growth forecast is modestly more optimistic, at 3.1 percent per year.

6. With respect to the Government's fiscal position, as expressed in the two letters of Ms. Turcotte, the Department of Finance at the time of the spring 2024 budget projected budgetary deficits of 1.4 percent of GDP for the 2023-24 fiscal year, declining steadily to 0.6 percent of GDP by 2028-29. In the recent 2024 Fall Economic Statement, the budget deficit for 2023-2024 has been revised to 2.1 percent of GDP, declining to 0.8 percent of GDP by 2028-2029. Taking account of more recent information with respect to a larger than expected Federal deficit early in the year and reduced short-term interest rates, PEAP projects a deficit of 2.0 percent of GDP in 2024, declining thereafter to 1.2 percent in 2029 (i.e., double that of the Government's May 2024 projection). The Government's revised budget deficit forecast now more closely aligns with the PEAP forecast and as the PEAP projections suggest, the Government's revised budget deficit can be expected to have little impact on the key measures of economic activity – GDP growth and IAI growth.

7. The previous Quadrennial Commission was confronted with greater than typical uncertainty as to the future direction of the economy and fiscal position of the Government, attributable to the COVID-19 pandemic. At this time, it is evident that, based upon the assessment of the Department of Finance, economic conditions have largely coalesced around traditional longer-term trends.

II INFLATION AND RELATIVE COSTS OF LIVING IN CANADIAN METROPOLITAN AREAS

General Price and Shelter Inflation

8. Table 1 presents data on the growth of consumer prices, as measured by the Consumer Price Index (CPI), over the period 2019 to 2023.[1]

   8.1 Shown in Table 1 is the total percentage change in prices from 2019 to 2023 period, and the average annual percentage increase, for "All Items" and "Shelter". Shelter is further disaggregated into "Rented Accommodation" and "Owned Accommodation". The CPI data are presented for all of Canada and for each of 16 cities.

9. Between 2019 and 2023, the all-items CPI for Canada increased by 15.5 percent. The corresponding compound (average) annual rate of growth in the all-items CPI for Canada was 3.7 percent per year.

10. The average annual growth rate of prices was faster than the national average in Charlottetown and Summerside (4.4%), Halifax (4.0%), Québec City (3.8%), Montreal, Québec (4.2%), Ottawa-Gatineau (4.0%) and Calgary (3.8%). The all-prices index increased at a rate slower than the national average in the other cities.

11. Shelter prices, which include both rented accommodation and owned accommodation increased by 19.4% (4.5% per year) in Canada between 2019 and 2023. The price of rented accommodation grew at 3.6% per year, while the price of owned accommodation grew more rapidly at 4.8% per year.

12. The price of rented accommodation grew fastest in Charlottetown/Summerside (6.2% per year).

13. In all but five of the cities shown in Table 1, the price of owned accommodation grew more rapidly than the price of rented accommodation. In Ottawa-Gatineau, the average annual increase in the price of owned accommodation was 8.5% per year, in contrast to the price of rented accommodation, which grew at a much slower 2.6% annual pace.

[1] In addition to shelter, the all-items index includes: food; household operations, furniture and equipment; clothing and footwear; transportation; health and personal care; recreation, education and reading; and, alcoholic beverages, tobacco products and recreational cannabis.

14. The combined price of water, fuel and electricity, relevant to all forms of accommodation, grew at a pace of 5.0% per year across all of Canada during the 2019 to 2023 period. Edmonton and Calgary experienced the steepest annual rates of increase at 8.7% and 7.4%, respectively.

Relative Costs of Living

15. The data in Table 1 show how prices have grown within cities between 2019 and 2003, however, they offer no insight into the relative cost of living between cities. That is, between 2019 and 2023, the growth in the price of owned accommodation might have been more rapid in City A than in City B, the actual price of owned accommodation in City A may be less than the price of owned accommodation City B. Alternatively stated, the data in Table 1 provide no information on the relative prices of goods and services across Canadian cities.

16. Statistics Canada produces data that do provide some insight into the relative prices (price differentials) for consumer goods and services across 14 Canadian cities.[2]

17. Table 2 presents data on price differentials across Canadian cities for "All-Items" (more accurately, all goods and services that are sufficiently comparable across jurisdictions) and, separately, for "Shelter" (which is also included in the all-items index), for the years 2015 to 2019.[3] I note that 2019 is the most recent year of data for this series.

18. The index value across all jurisdictions, in a given year, is set equal to 100. The index values for each of the cities, in each year, is to be compared to 100. For example, in 2019, the all-items index value for Toronto was 107. The interpretation is that prices of all goods and services included in the comparable basket were 7 percent higher in Toronto than the average across all cities. Alternatively stated, a basket of comparable goods or services that cost $100, on average, across all cities, cost $107 in Toronto. In Winnipeg, the comparable basket would have cost $93.

    18.1 A useful feature of index numbers is that they allow for direct comparison between cities. For example, in 2019, the same basket of goods and services was [107 ÷ 93 =] 15 percent more expensive in Toronto than in Winnipeg.

[2] Statistics Canada. Table 18-10-0003-01 Inter-city indexes of price differentials of consumer goods and services, annual. Data for Iqaluit is collected but not reported.
[3] These data must be interpreted with caution because the prices of only a limited number of goods and services can be compared across jurisdictions.

19. Table 2 also shows that in 2019, Montreal was the lowest shelter cost city (shelter costs are 82% of the average across all cities), while Toronto was the highest shelter cost jurisdiction (114% of average), apart from Yellowknife (129% of average). Shelter costs in Toronto were [114 ÷ 82 =] 39 percent higher than corresponding shelter costs in Montreal.

Douglas E. Hyatt

Table 1

Annual Rates of Consumer Price Growth For Canada and Cities:
All-Items and Shelter, 2019 to 2023

	All Items	Shelter			Water/Fuel /Electricity
		All Shelter	Rented Accomm.	Owned Accomm.
All Canada:
Increase 2019 to 2023	15.5%	19.4%	15.0%	20.5%	21.4%
Compound annual growth rate	3.7%	4.5%	3.6%	4.8%	5.0%
St. John's NFLD
Increase 2019 to 2023	13.9%	15.3%	17.4%	11.0%	22.2%
Compound annual growth rate	3.3%	3.6%	4.1%	2.7%	5.1%
Charlottetown and Summerside, PEI
Increase 2019 to 2023	18.6%	25.5%	27.3%	19.0%	32.8%
Compound annual growth rate	4.4%	5.8%	6.2%	4.4%	7.3%
Halifax, Nova Scotia
Increase 2019 to 2023	16.8%	21.6%	25.5%	17.5%	25.3%
Compound annual growth rate	4.0%	5.0%	5.9%	4.1%	5.8%
Saint John, New Brunswick
Increase 2019 to 2023	15.6%	16.3%	16.6%	15.5%	16.8%
Compound annual growth rate	3.7%	3.8%	3.9%	3.7%	4.0%
Québec, Québec
Increase 2019 to 2023	16.2%	17.2%	11.5%	21.5%	8.8%
Compound annual growth rate	3.8%	4.0%	2.8%	5.0%	2.1%
Montréal, Québec
Increase 2019 to 2023	17.4%	23.3%	15.5%	30.6%	9.2%
Compound annual growth rate	4.1%	5.4%	3.7%	6.9%	2.2%
Ottawa-Gatineau, Ontario part,
Increase 2019 to 2023	17.1%	27.5%	10.6%	38.6%	22.2%
Compound annual growth rate	4.0%	6.3%	2.6%	8.5%	5.1%

Table 1, cont'd …

	All Items	Shelter			Water/Fuel /Electricity
		All Shelter	Rented Accomm.	Owned Accomm.
Toronto, Ontario
Increase 2019 to 2023	14.5%	18.0%	15.9%	18.4%	20.6%
Compound annual growth rate	3.4%	4.2%	3.8%	4.3%	4.8%
Thunder Bay, Ontario
Increase 2019 to 2023	13.9%	17.5%	18.2%	16.9%	18.6%
Compound annual growth rate	3.3%	4.1%	4.3%	4.0%	4.4%
Winnipeg, Manitoba
Increase 2019 to 2023	16.1%	20.0%	13.3%	23.4%	18.5%
Compound annual growth rate	3.8%	4.7%	3.2%	5.4%	4.3%
Regina, Saskatchewan
Increase 2019 to 2023	14.3%	13.0%	8.2%	11.9%	21.3%
Compound annual growth rate	3.4%	3.1%	2.0%	2.8%	4.9%
Saskatoon, Saskatchewan
Increase 2019 to 2023	14.7%	15.2%	9.3%	15.6%	22.6%
Compound annual growth rate	3.5%	3.6%	2.2%	3.7%	5.2%
Edmonton, Alberta
Increase 2019 to 2023	13.8%	15.9%	7.6%	11.8%	39.4%
Compound annual growth rate	3.3%	3.8%	1.8%	2.8%	8.7%
Calgary, Alberta
Increase 2019 to 2023	16.1%	23.1%	14.3%	23.2%	33.1%
Compound annual growth rate	3.8%	5.3%	3.4%	5.4%	7.4%
Vancouver, British Columbia
Increase 2019 to 2023	14.9%	20.2%	16.9%	21.5%	18.3%
Compound annual growth rate	3.5%	4.7%	4.0%	5.0%	4.3%
Victoria, British Columbia
Increase 2019 to 2023	14.9%	20.3%	18.2%	22.6%	13.1%
Compound annual growth rate	3.5%	4.7%	4.3%	5.2%	3.1%

Table 2

Inter-City Indexes of Price Differentials, of Consumer Goods and Services, 2015 - 2019

Geography		2015	2016	2017	2018	2019
		Index, combined city average=100
St. John's, Newfoundland and Labrador	All-items	98	98	96	95	96
	Shelter	91	86	82	83	87
Charlottetown and Summerside, Prince Edward Island	All-items	95	95	94	95	95
	Shelter	82	79	77	78	85
Halifax, Nova Scotia	All-items	101	100	98	98	98
	Shelter	98	92	89	89	89
Saint John, New Brunswick	All-items	95	93	92	91	92
	Shelter	77	69	70	71	74
Montréal, Quebec	All-items	94	92	92	93	93
	Shelter	85	78	80	81	82
Ottawa-Gatineau, Ontario part, Ontario/Quebec	All-items	103	103	102	102	101
	Shelter	108	106	101	100	99
Toronto, Ontario	All-items	109	108	110	109	107
	Shelter	119	117	118	118	114
Winnipeg, Manitoba	All-items	95	95	94	93	93
	Shelter	89	88	85	84	85
Regina, Saskatchewan	All-items	99	100	96	97	101
	Shelter	100	102	91	92	105
Calgary, Alberta	All-items	..	103	100	101	101
	Shelter	..	109	104	103	104
Edmonton, Alberta	All-items	101	100	97	99	100
	Shelter	111	104	98	101	107
Vancouver, British Columbia	All-items	104	102	103	104	104
	Shelter	114	109	112	112	105
Whitehorse, Yukon	All-items	..	..	103	100	102
	Shelter	..	..	99	96	103
Yellowknife, Northwest Territories	All-items	..	..	112	110	112
	Shelter	..	..	127	124	129
Iqaluit, Nunavut	All-items	..	..	..	..	..
	Shelter	..	..	..	..	..

EXHIBIT A

CURRICULUM VITAE

December 2024

A. BIOGRAPHICAL INFORMATION

NAME: Douglas Edward Hyatt

OFFICE ADDRESS:

Joseph L. Rotman School of Management
University of Toronto
105 St. George Street
Toronto, Ontario.
Canada. M5S 3E6

TELEPHONE:
Office: (416) 576-4712

E-MAIL: doug.hyatt@rotman.utoronto.ca

CITIZENSHIP: Canadian

B. PROFESSIONAL ACTIVITIES

DEGREES:

Ph.D., 1992, University of Toronto, Industrial Relations.
M.A., 1987, University of Toronto, Economics.
B.A., 1984, University of Toronto, Economics.
Ph.D. Thesis: "Issues in the Compensation of Injured Workers: Returns to Risk, Work Incentives and Accommodation."

Ph.D. Supervisor: Dr. Morley Gunderson

PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYMENT

July 2021 to present:	Professor Emeritus, Rotman School of Management and Centre for Industrial Relations, University of Toronto.
July 2006 to June 2021:	Professor, Rotman School of Management and Centre for Industrial Relations, University of Toronto.
October 2009 to present:	Academic Director (Rotman), Master of Science in Business Research and Doctor of Business Administration Program, Henley Business School, University of Reading.
August 2015 to June 2018:	Academic Director, Professional MBA Programs (Morning and Evening MBA, Executive MBA and OMNIUM Global Executive MBA), Rotman School of Management, University of Toronto.

July 2013 to June 2017:	Member, Academic Board of Governing Counsel, University of Toronto.
July 2002 to June 2006:	Professor, Rotman School of Management, Centre for Industrial Relations, University of Toronto and Division of Management, University of Toronto at Scarborough.
July 2001 to June 2004:	Associate Chair, Division of Management, University of Toronto at Scarborough.
July 2002:	Visiting Professor, Department of Management, University of Melbourne.
July 1997 to June 2002:	Associate Professor, Division of Management, Scarborough College, Rotman School of Management, and Centre for Industrial Relations, University of Toronto.
July 2000 to June 2001:	Visiting Associate Professor, School of Health Administration and Policy, College of Business, Arizona State University.
September 1997 to June 2000:	Senior Scientist, Institute for Work and Health.
January 1998 to December 1998:	Director of Research, Royal Commission on Workers' Compensation in British Columbia.
September 1995 to September 1997:	Scientist and Coordinator of Networks of Centres of Excellence program (HEAL*Net*), Institute for Work and Health.
September 1995 to June 1997:	Visiting Professor, Centre for Industrial Relations, University of Toronto.
August 1992 to June 1997:	Assistant Professor, Department of Economics and Industrial Relations Program, University of Wisconsin - Milwaukee.
April 1995 to August 1995:	Research Coordinator, Ontario Royal Commission on Workers' Compensation.
July 1994 to June 1995:	Visiting Assistant Professor, Centre for Industrial Relations, University of Toronto.
June 1989 to July 1992:	Economist, Ontario Workers' Compensation Board.
May 1991 to December 1991:	Instructor, Industrial Relations, University of Toronto.
January 1988 to March 1989:	Instructor, Personnel Association of Ontario.
October 1986 to September 1988:	Economist, Ontario Ministry of Treasury and Economics.

ACADEMIC HONOURS

Executive MBA Program, Professor of the Year:	EMBA 20 (2003), EMBA 21 (2004), EMBA 22 (2004), EMBA 23 (2005), EMBA 24 (2005), EMBA 25 (2006), EMBA 26 (2006), EMBA 27 (2007), EMBA 28 (2008), EMBA 29 (2009), EMBA 30 (2010), EMBA 31 (2011), EMBA 32 (2012), EMBA 33 (2013), EMBA 34 (2014), EMBA 35 (2015)
Global Executive MBA Program, Professor of the Year:	OMNIUM 2 (2006),OMNIUM 3 (2007), OMNIUM 4 (2008), OMNIUM 5 (2010), OMNIUM 8 (2013), OMNIUM 9 (2014), OMNIUM 10 (2015), OMNIUM 15 (2020)
Rotman School of Management Excellence in Teaching Award:	2003; 2004; 2005; 2006; 2007; 2008; 2009; 2010; 2011; 2012; 2013; 2014; 2015; 2016; 2017; 2018

2016:	University of Toronto, The Morley Gunderson Prize for Outstanding Professional Achievement
2006:	Roger Martin and Nancy Lang Award for Excellence in Teaching, Rotman School of Management, University of Toronto.
2001-2002:	Plumptre Faculty Research Award
1989-1992:	Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council Doctoral Fellowship
1990-1991:	Meredith Fellowship in Workers' Compensation
1988-1989:	Ontario Graduate Scholarship

PROFESSIONAL AFFILIATIONS AND RELATED ACTIVITIES

Research Associate:	Institute for Policy Analysis, University of Toronto
Member of:	The American Economic Association The Canadian Economics Association
Member of:	Ontario Workplace Safety and Insurance Board, President's Actuarial Advisory Committee, 2011 to 2023
Advisor to:	Ontario Rules of Civil Procedure Rule 53 Subcommittee.

RESEARCH GRANTS

Ontario Ministry of Labour. Research Opportunities Program (2014 – 2016). "A Survey of Factors Affecting Safety Performance in the ICI Construction Sector." (With Brenda McCabe).

"Assessment of the Human and Economic Burden of Workplace Cancer." Multisector Team Grants in Prevention Research, Canadian Cancer Society, 2012-2016, $998,872, co-investigator.

Workplace Safety and Insurance Board Research Advisory Council (2003-2005). "Attitudes and Incident Causal Modeling for Construction." (With Brenda McCabe, Catherine Loughlin, and Susan Tighe). $252,000.

Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada (2003-2006). "An Analysis of the Production of Quality in Child Care." $45,055.

Department of Health and Human Services (1999). "Work-Related Musculoskeletal Disorders: Evaluating Interventions Among Office Workers." (With Donald Cole, Sheilah Hogg-Johnson and Harry Shannon) $400,000 US.

Child Care Visions, Human Resources Development Canada (1997). "A Policy-Evaluation Model of the Child Care Sector." (With Gordon Cleveland, Morley Gunderson and Michael Krashinsky) $275,000.

Institute for Work and Health (1997). "Administrative Issues in Workers' Compensation." (With Morley Gunderson) $21,800.

Donner Foundation (1996). "New Perspectives on Workers' Compensation Policy in Ontario." (With Morley Gunderson) $125,000.

W.E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research (1996). "Pay at Risk: Increasing Compensation Risks for Workers in the United States and Canada." (With John Turner, Robert Friedland and Sophie Korczyk) $36,625 US.

Human Resources Development Canada (1995). "Demand and Supply Side Child Care Subsidies." (With Gordon Cleveland) $13,000.

Human Resources Development Canada (1995). "Child Care, Lone Parents, Social Assistance and the Employment Decision." (With Gordon Cleveland) $30,000.

Human Resources Development Canada (1994). "An Assessment of the Impact of Child Care Cost, Availability and Quality on Mothers' Employment." (With Gordon Cleveland) $25,000.

Graduate School Research Committee Award Program, University of Wisconsin - Milwaukee (1993-1994). "Labor Market Outcomes of Vocational Rehabilitation." $8,365 US.

Health and Welfare Canada (Child Care Initiatives Fund) (1992). "Child Care 2000." (With Gordon Cleveland) $325,412.

Statistics Canada (1991). "A Policy Simulation Model of the Child Care Choices of Working Mothers in Ontario." (With Gordon Cleveland) $75,000.

C. PUBLICATIONS AND WORK-IN-PROGRESS

(a) Refereed Journal Publications

"How Can Conflicts with Supervisors or Coworkers Affect Construction Workers' Safety Performance on Site? Two Cross-Sectional Studies in North America." Buildings, 2024, 14, 1245, published in the special issue, The Impact of Organizational and Individual Factors on Construction Safety, and on-line at: https://doi.org/10.3390/buildings14051245 (with Y. Chen, A. Shahi, A. Hanna and M. Safa).

"Correlations Between Interpersonal Conflicts at Work and Construction Safety Performance: Two Ontario Cross-Sectional Studies." Proceedings of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineering 2019 Annual Conference, 2019, CON5-1 to CON5-8, (with Y. Chen and B. McCabe).

"Benchmarking Construction Safety Performance at a Global Level: A Case Study of US, Canada and New Zealand." Proceedings of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineering 2019 Annual Conference, 2019, CON11-1 to CON11-8, (with Y. Chen A. Shahi, B. McCabe, A Hanna, Mahdi Safa, and Majeed Safa).

"A Resilience Safety Climate Model Predicting Construction Safety Performance." Safety Science, 2018 109 (November), 434-445 (with Y. Chen and B. McCabe).

"Impact of Individual Resilience and Safety Climate on Safety Performance and Psychological Distress of Construction Workers: A Case Study of the Ontario Construction Industry." Journal of Safety Research, No. 61 (2017), 167-176 (with Y. Chen and B. McCabe).

"The Relationship Between Individual Resilience, Interpersonal Conflicts at Work, Safety Performance and Stresses of Construction Workers." Journal of Construction Engineering and Management, 2017, 143(8) (with Y. Chen, and B. McCabe).

"Demographic and Indication-Specific Variables Have Limited Association with Social Network Engagement: Evidence from 24,954 Members of 4 Health Care Support Groups." Journal of Medical Internet Research, 2017, 19(2): e40 (with T. Van Mierlo, X. Li, and A. Ching).

"Safety Performance in the Construction Industry: A Quasi-Longitudinal Study." Journal of Construction Engineering and Management, 2017, 143(4) (with B. McCabe, E. Alderman, Y. Chen and A. Shahi).

"Behavioral Economics, Wearable Devices, and Cooperative Games: Results from a Population-based Intervention to Increase Physical Activity." Journal of Medical Internet Research: Serious Games, 2016 |vol. 4, issue 1 | e1 (with T. Van Mierlo, A. Ching, R. Fournier and R. Dembo).

"Employing the Gini Coefficient to Measure Participation Inequality in Treatment Focused Digital Health Social Networks." Network Modeling Analysis in Health Informatics and Bioinformatics, 2016, 5:32, DOI 10.1007/s13721-016-0140-7 (with T. Van Mierlo, and A. Ching).

"Mapping Power Distributions in Digital Health Networks: Methods, Interpretations and, Practical Implications." Journal of Medical Internet Research, 2015; 17(6):e160, with T. Van Mierlo and A. Ching.

"Wearables, Gamified Group Challenges and Behavioral Incentives: A Preliminary Study of An Engagement Program to Increase Physical Activity." iProc, 2015; 1(1):e1 (with T. Van Mierlo, A. Ching, R. Fournier and R. Dembo).

"Managing the supply of physicians' services through intelligent incentives." Canadian Medical Association Journal 184:E77-E80 (January 10, 2012, published ahead of print November 28, 2011) (with B. Golden and R Hannam).

"Consequences of the Performance Appraisal Experience." Personnel Review, 39, No. 3 (2010), 375-396 (with M. Brown and J. Benson).

"Workplace Violence and the Duration of Workers' Compensation Claims." Relations Industrielles/ Industrial Relations, 63, No. 1 (2008), 57-84 (with M. Campolieti and J. Goldenberg).

"Determinants of Stress in Medical Practice: Evidence from Ontario." Relations Industrielles/ Industrial Relations, 62, No. 2 (2007), 226-257 (with M. Campolieti and B. Kralj).

"Experience Rating, Work Injuries and Benefit Costs: Some New Evidence." Relations Industrielles/ Industrial Relations, 61, No. 1 (2006), 118-145 (with M. Campolieti and T. Thomason).

"Further Evidence for Interpreting the "Monday Effect" in Workers' Compensation." Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 59, No. 3 (2006), 438-450 (with M. Campolieti).

"Strike Incidence and Strike Duration: Some New Evidence from Ontario." Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 58, No. 4 (2005), 610-630, (with M. Campolieti and R. Hebdon).

"Child Care Subsidies, Welfare Reforms and Lone Mothers." Industrial Relations, 42, No. 2, (2003), 251-269, (with G. Cleveland).

"Symposium: The Effect of Work-Family Policies on Employees and Employers." Industrial Relations, 42, No. 2, (2003), 139-144, (with R. Drago).

"Union Impacts in Low-Wage Services: Evidence From Canadian Child Care." Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 56, No. 2 (2003), 295-305, (with G. Cleveland and M. Gunderson).

"Child Care Workers' Wages: New Evidence on Returns to Education, Experience, Job Tenure and Auspice." Journal of Population Economics, 15, No. 3 (2002), 575-597, (with G. Cleveland).

"Workplace Risks and Wages: Canadian Evidence from Alternative Models." Canadian Journal of Economics, 34, No. 2 (2001), 377-395, (with M. Gunderson).

"The Impact of Representation (and Other Factors) on Employee-Initiated Workers' Compensation Appeals." Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 53, No. 4 (July 2000), 665-683, (with B. Kralj).

"Privatization of Workers' Compensation: Will the Cure Kill the Patient?" International Journal of Law and Psychiatry, 22, No. 5-6 (1999), 547-565, (with M. Gunderson).

"Implications of Small Bargaining Units and Independent Unions for Bargaining Disputes: A Look into the Future?" Relations industrielles/Industrial Relations, 54, No. 3 (Summer 1999), 503-526, (with R. Hebdon and M. Mazerolle).

"Free Trade, Global Markets, and Alternative Work Arrangements." Proceedings of the 51st Annual Meetings of the Industrial Relations Research Association (refereed papers in labor economics), 1999, 152-160, (with K. Roberts).

"The Effects of Industrial Relations Factors on Health and Safety Conflict." Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 51, No. 4 (July 1998), 579-593, (with R. Hebdon).

"Do Employees Actually Bear the Risk in Defined Benefit Pension Plans?" Canadian Labour and Employment Law Journal, 5, No. 1, (1997), 125-138, (with J.E. Pesando).

"Do Injured Workers Pay for Reasonable Accommodation?" Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 50, No. 1, (October 1996), 92-104, (with M. Gunderson).

"Work Disincentives of Workers' Compensation Permanent Partial Disability Benefits: Evidence for Canada." Canadian Journal of Economics, 29, No. 2 (May 1996), 289-308.

"Collective Bargaining in the Public Sector: Comment." American Economic Review, 86, No. 1 (March 1996), 315-326 (with M. Gunderson and R. Hebdon).

"The Distribution of Investment Risk in Defined Benefit Pension Plans: A Reconsideration." Relations industrielles/Industrial Relations, 51, No. 1 (Winter 1996), 136-157 (with J. Pesando).

"Child Care Costs and the Employment Decision of Women: Evidence for Canada." Canadian Journal of Economics, 29, No. 1 (February 1996), 132-151 (with G. Cleveland and M. Gunderson).

"On the Edge: Single Mothers' Employment and Child Care Arrangements for Young Children." Canadian Journal of Research in Early Childhood Education. Special Issue on Child Care, 5, No. 1, (February 1996), 13-25 (with G. Cleveland).

"Workplace Innovation in the Public Sector: The Case of the Office of the Ontario Registrar General." Journal of Collective Negotiations in the Public Sector, 25, No. 1 (1996), 63-81 (with R. Hebdon).

"Reasonable Accommodation Requirements Under Workers' Compensation in Ontario." Relations industrielles/Industrial Relations, 50, No. 2, (Spring 1995), 341-360 (with M. Gunderson and D. Law).

"The Impact of Workers' Compensation Experience Rating on Employer Appeals Activity." Industrial Relations, 34, No. 1, (January 1995), 95-106 (with B. Kralj).

"Determinants of Child Care Choice: A Comparison of Results for Ontario and Quebec." Canadian Journal of Regional Science, 16, No. 1 (1993), 53-67 (with G. Cleveland).

"Determinants of Fertility in Urban and Rural Kenya: Estimates and a Simulation of the Impact of Education Policy." Environment and Planning A, 25 (1993), 371-382 (with W. Milne).

"Re-Employment and Accommodation of Injured Workers under Ontario's Workers' Compensation Act." Journal of Individual Employment Rights, 1, No. 3 (1992), 253-262.

"Early Retirement Pensions and Employee Turnover: An Application of the Option Value Approach." Research in Labor Economics, 13 (1992), 321-337 (with J. Pesando and M. Gunderson).

"Wage-Pension Trade-Offs in Collective Agreements." Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 46, No. 1 (October 1992), 146-160 (with M. Gunderson and J. Pesando).

"Countercyclical Fertility in Canada: Some Empirical Results." Canadian Studies in Population, 18, No. 1 (1991), 1-16 (with W. Milne).

"Can Public Policy Affect Fertility?" Canadian Public Policy, 17, No. 1 (March 1991), 77-85 (with W. Milne).

(b) Refereed Monographs

"New Evidence about Child Care in Canada: Use Patterns, Affordability and Quality." Choices, Institute for Research on Public Policy (IRPP), 4, No. 12 (October 2008), (with G. Cleveland, B. Forer, C. Japel and M. Krashinsky).

"Pay Differences between the Government and Private Sectors: Labour Force Survey and Census Estimates." CPRN Discussion Paper No. W|10, February 2000, (with Morley Gunderson and Craig Riddell).

"Subsidizing Child Care for Low-Income Families: A Good Bargain for Canadian Governments?" Choices, Institute for Research on Public Policy (IRPP), 4, No. 2 (May 1998), (with Gordon Cleveland).

"Using the NLSCY to Study the Effects of Child Care on Child Development." Research Paper T-97-6E, Applied Research Branch, Strategic Policy, Human Resources Development Canada, September 1997 (with G. Cleveland). Also available in French as Research Paper T-97-6F.

"Subsidies to Consumers or Subsidies to Providers: How Should Governments Provide Child Care Assistance?" Research Paper R-97-7E, Applied Research Branch, Strategic Policy, Human Resources Development Canada, May 1997 (with G. Cleveland). Also available in French as Research Paper R-97-7F.

"Child Care, Social Assistance and Work: Lone Mothers with Preschool Children." Working Paper W-96-2E, Applied Research Branch, Strategic Policy, Human Resources Development Canada, March 1996 (with G. Cleveland).

(c) Edited Volumes and Special Journal Issues

Symposium: The Effect of Work-Family Policies on Employees and Employers. Industrial Relations, Volume 42, No. 2 (April 2003).

Workers' Compensation: Foundations for Reform. (Toronto, Ont.: University of Toronto Press), 2000 (with M. Gunderson).

New Approaches to Disability in the Workplace. Industrial Relations Research Association, (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press for the IRRA), 1998 (with J.F. Burton Jr. and T. Thomason).

Public Sector Employment in a Time of Transition. Industrial Relations Research Association, (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press for the IRRA), 1996, (with D. Belman and M. Gunderson).

(d) Chapters in Books

"Consequences of the Performance Appraisal Experience." In New Perspectives in Employee Engagement in Human Resources. (Bingley, United Kingdom: Emerald Gems Series, Emerald Group Publishing Limited) 2015, (with M. Brown).

"Does Vocational Rehabilitation Have Much Impact on Helping People Return to Work." In D. Taras and K. Williams-Whitt (eds.) Perspectives on Disability and Accommodation. (Victoria, B.C.: National Institute of Disability Management and Research), 2011, 225-244, (with M. Campolieti).

"Strikes and Dispute Resolution." In M. Gunderson, A. Ponak and D. Taras (eds.), Union-Management Relations in Canada, sixth edition. (Don Mills, Ontario: Addison-Wesley Publishers Limited), 2009, 322-360, (with M. Gunderson, and R. Hebdon).

"Union Impact on Compensation, Productivity, and Management of the Organization." In M. Gunderson, A. Ponak and D. Taras (eds.), Union-Management Relations in Canada, sixth edition. (Don Mills, Ontario: Addison-Wesley Publishers Limited), 2009, 383-402, (with M. Gunderson).

"Employer-Based Health Insurance: A Way for the Future?" In C. Flood, M. Stabile and C. Tuohy (eds.), Exploring Social Insurance: Can a Dose of Europe Cure Canadian Health Care Finance. (Montreal, Que.: McGill-Queen's University Press) 2008, 91-113, (with M. Gunderson).

"The Comparison of Private Insurers and Public Insurers in Workers' compensation Systems." In M. Shinada (ed.), Workers' compensation and Moral Hazard. Law and Economic Analysis of Workers' Compensation Insurance in North America. Kyoto: Horitsu Bunkasha Publishers, 2006. (with M. Gunderson)

"Workers' Compensation and Return-to-Work." In M. Shinada (ed.), Workers' compensation and Moral Hazard. Law and Economic Analysis of Workers' Compensation Insurance in North America. Kyoto: Horitsu Bunkasha Publishers, 2006. (with M. Gunderson)

"Mandatory Retirement: Not as Simple as it Seems." In C.T. Gillin, D. MacGregor and T. Klassen (eds.), Time's Up! Mandatory Retirement in Canada. (Toronto: James Lorimer and Company Ltd. for the Canadian Association of University Teachers), chapter 8, 2005. (with M. Gunderson).

"Issues in Workers' Compensation Appeals System Reform." In K. Roberts, J.F. Burton, Jr. and M. Bodah (eds.), Workplace Injuries and Diseases: Prevention and Compensation – Essays in Honor of Terry Thomason. (Kalamazoo: W.E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research), 2005, 117-140.

"Strikes and Dispute Resolution." In M. Gunderson, A. Ponak and D. Taras (eds.), Union-Management Relations in Canada, fifth edition. (Don Mills, Ontario: Addison-Wesley Publishers Limited), 2004, 332-370, (with M. Gunderson, R. Hebdon and A. Ponak).

"Union Impact on Compensation, Productivity, and Management of the Organization." In M. Gunderson, A. Ponak and D. Taras (eds.), Union-Management Relations in Canada, fifth edition. (Don Mills, Ontario: Addison-Wesley Publishers Limited), 2004, 394-413, (with M. Gunderson).

"Health and Coverage at Risk." In J. Turner (ed.), Pay at Risk: Compensation and Employment Risk in the United States and Canada. (Kalamazoo: W.E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research), 2001, 83-114, (with R. Friedland, L. Summer and S. Korczyk).

"Risk Shifting in Workers' Compensation." In J. Turner (ed.), Pay at Risk: Compensation and Employment Risk in the United States and Canada. (Kalamazoo: W.E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research), 2001, 161-190.

"Issues in the Professionalization of Child Care." In G. Cleveland and M. Krashinsky (eds.), Our Children's Future: Child Care Policy in Canada. (Toronto: University of Toronto Press), 2001, 394-396.

"Public Pension Plans in the United States and Canada." In W. Alpert and S. Woodbury (eds.), Employee Benefits and Labor Markets in Canada and the United States. (Kalamazoo, MI: The Upjohn Institute), 2000, 381-411, (with M. Gunderson and J.E. Pesando).

"Strikes and Dispute Resolution." In M. Gunderson, A. Ponak and D. Taras (eds.), Union-Management Relations in Canada, fourth edition. (Don Mills, Ontario: Addison-Wesley Publishers Limited), 2000, 314-358, (with M. Gunderson and A. Ponak).

"Union Impact on Compensation, Productivity, and Management of the Organization." In M. Gunderson, A. Ponak and D. Taras (eds.), Union-Management Relations in Canada, fourth edition. (Don Mills, Ontario: Addison-Wesley Publishers Limited), 2000, 385-413, (with M. Gunderson).

"Foundations for Workers' Compensation Reform: Overview and Summary." In M. Gunderson and D. Hyatt (eds.), Workers' Compensation: Foundations for Reform. (Toronto, Ont.: University of Toronto Press), 2000, 3-26, (with M. Gunderson).

"Unfunded Liabilities Under Workers' Compensation." In M. Gunderson and D. Hyatt (eds.), Workers' Compensation: Foundations for Reform. (Toronto, Ont.: University of Toronto Press), 2000, 162-186, (with M. Gunderson).

"Should Work Injury Compensation Continue to Imbibe at the Tort Bar?" In M. Gunderson and D. Hyatt (eds.), Workers' Compensation: Foundations for Reform. (Toronto, Ont.: University of Toronto Press), 2000, 327-360, (with D. Law).

.

"Workforce and Workplace Changes: Implications for Injuries and Compensation." In T. Sullivan (ed.), Injury and the New World of Work. (Vancouver, B.C.: UBC Press), 2000, 46-68, (with M. Gunderson).

"Disability in the Workplace." (With Terry Thomason and John F. Burton Jr.). In T. Thomason, D. Hyatt and J. Burton Jr. (eds.), New Approaches to Disability in the Workplace. Industrial Relations Research Association, (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press for the IRRA), 1998, 1-37, (with T. Thomason and K. Roberts).

"Disputes and Dispute Resolution in Workers' Compensation." (With Terry Thomason and Karen Roberts). In T. Thomason, D. Hyatt and J. Burton Jr. (eds.), New Approaches to Disability in the Workplace. Industrial Relations Research Association, (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press for the IRRA), 1998, 269-297, (with T. Thomason and K. Roberts).

"Labour Adjustment Policy and Health: Considerations for a Changing World." In Determinants of Health: Settings and Issues. (St.-Foy, Que.: Les Editions MultiMondes for the National Forum on Health), 1998 (with T. Sullivan, O. Uneke, J. Lavis, and J. O'Grady). Also available in French.

"Intergenerational Considerations of Workers' Compensation Unfunded Liabilities." In Miles Corak (ed.), Government Finances and Generational Equity. Statistics Canada Catalogue no. 68-513-XPB. (Ottawa: Minister of Industry), 1998 (with M. Gunderson). Also available in French.

"Workers' Compensation Costs in Canada: 1961-1993." In M. Abbott, C. Beach and R. Chaykowski (eds.), Transition and Structural Change in the North American Labour Market. (Kingston: Industrial Relations Centre and John Deutch Institute, Queen's University distributed by IRC Press), 1997, 235-255, (with T. Thomason).

"Public Sector Employment Relations in Transition." In D. Belman, M. Gunderson and D. Hyatt (eds.), Public Sector Employment in a Time of Transition. Industrial Relations Research Association, (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press for the IRRA), 1996, (with D. Belman and M. Gunderson).

"Canadian Public Sector Employment Relations in Transition." In D. Belman, M. Gunderson and D. Hyatt (eds.), Public Sector Employment Relations in a Time of Transition. Industrial Relations Research Association, (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press for the IRRA), 1996, (with M. Gunderson).

"The Effect of Free Trade on Contingent Work in Michigan." In Karen Roberts and Mark I. Wilson (eds.), Policy Choices: Free Trade Among NAFTA Nations. (East Lansing, MI: Michigan State University Press), 1996, 235-260, (with K. Roberts and P. Dorman).

"The Evolution of Workers' Compensation Costs in Canada." In John F. Burton, Jr. (ed.), 1996 Workers' Compensation Yearbook. (Horsham, PA: LRP Publications), 1995, I-39 to I-48, (with T. Thomason).

"Alternative Methods for Modeling Regional Industrial Activity: Short Run Versus Long Run." In M. Popov (ed.), The Issues of Elaboration and Implementation of Regional Development Programs under the Transition to a Market Economy. (Donetsk, Ukraine: Donetsk Polytechnical Institute), 1995, 48-52. (Text in Russian).

"Union Impact on Compensation, Productivity, and Management of the Organization." In M. Gunderson and A. Ponak (eds.), Union-Management Relations in Canada, third edition. (Don Mills, Ontario: Addison-Wesley Publishers Limited), 1995, 311-337, (with M. Gunderson).

"Strikes and Dispute Resolution." In M. Gunderson and A. Ponak (eds.), Union-Management Relations in Canada, third edition. (Don Mills, Ontario: Addison-Wesley Publishers Limited), 1995, 373-411, (with M. Gunderson and A. Ponak).

"Re-Employment and Accommodation Requirements under Workers' Compensation." In T. Thomason and R. Chaykowski (eds.), Research in Canadian Workers' Compensation. (Kingston: Queen's University IRC Press), 1995, 141-157, (with M. Gunderson and D. Law).

"Measuring the Impact of Vocational Rehabilitation on the Probability of Post-Injury Return to Work." In T. Thomason and R. Chaykowski (eds.), Research in Canadian Workers' Compensation. (Kingston: Queen's University IRC Press), 1995, 158-180, (with R. Allingham).

(e) Conference Proceedings

"Safety and Age: a Longitudinal Study of Ontario Construction Workers" Proceedings of the Construction Research Congress, 2016, DOI: 10.1061/9780784479827.294, (with Y. Chen, and B. McCabe).

"Data collection framework for construction safety research." Proc., CSCE International Construction Specialty Conference, 2015, Paper 101, (with Y. Chen, E. Alderman and B. McCabe).

"Safety Impacts of a Mobile Labour Force", 4th Construction Specialty Conference, Proceedings of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineering 2013 Annual Conference, (with B. McCabe).

"Employment Equity in Canada and the United States." Proceedings of the 54th Annual Meeting of the Industrial Relations Research Association, 2002, 146-153 (with M. Gunderson and S. Slinn).

"Contingent Work: The Role of the Market, Collective Bargaining and Legislation." Proceedings of the 53rd Annual Meeting of the Industrial Relations Research Association, 2001, 99-107 (with M. Gunderson).

"Child Care Choice for Pre-School Children of Employed Mothers in Ontario, Quebec and Alberta in 1988." Proceedings of the 29th Conference of the Canadian Industrial Relations Association, 1993, 355-366 (with G. Cleveland).

"Projections of the Effect of Government Child Care Policy on Parents Choice of Child Care Arrangements." Proceedings From the Child Care Policy Research Symposium, (Toronto: Child Care Resource and Research Unit), 1993 (with G. Cleveland).

"Workers' Compensation Costs and Competitiveness: Issues and Inter-Jurisdictional Comparisons." Proceedings of the 28th Conference of the Canadian Industrial Relations Association, 1992, 421-429 (with B. Kralj).

"Employer Appeals of Workers' Compensation Board Decisions: The Impact of Experience Rating." Proceedings of the 27th Conference of the Canadian Industrial Relations Association, 1991, 329-337 (with B. Kralj).

(f) Book Reviews

Labour Relations and Health Reform. A Comparative Study of Five Jurisdictions. Edited by Kurt Wetzel. Relations Industrielles/ Industrial Relations, 62, No. 4, 2007), 781-783.

Adequacy of Earnings Replacement in Workers' Compensation Programs. Edited by H. Allan Hunt. Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 59, No. 1 (2005), 160-161

(g) Non-Refereed Publications

"Safety in the Ontario Construction Industry." Building Ontario, Winter 2007/2008, 10-11 (with B. McCabe, C. Loughlin, and S. Tighe).

"Strategies for Engendering Healthy Workplaces." Economic Issues Note, Economic Analysis and Evaluation Division, Health Canada, July 2004, 1-9 (with B. Shapansky, J. Bourgeois, P. De Civita, and M. Gunderson).

"Economics and RSI/WMSD: Coming to Grips with Economic Causes, Costs and Efficiency." (With Donald C. Cole and Sandra Sinclair), 1998, Institute for Work and Health Working Paper.

"New Approaches the Disability in the Workplace." Labor Law Journal, 49, No. 7, 1998, 1175-1187 (with T. Thomason and J. Burton, Jr.).

"Assessing Federal Child Care Policy: Does the Arrow Reach its Target?" Policy Options, 17, No. 1, (January-February 1997), 20-24 (with G. Cleveland).

"The Evolution of Workers' Compensation Costs in Canada." Workers' Compensation Monitor, 9, No. 1, (May-June 1996), 4-13 (with T. Thomason).

(h) Reports to Governments, Commissions and Task Forces

"Feasibility Study To Develop a Tool to Assist in Projecting Insurable Earnings and Employment." (Ontario) Workplace Safety and Insurance Board, November 2014 (39 pages).

"An Overview of the Financial Impact of the Canadian Music Industry." Report to the Ontario Media Development Corporation (OMDC), May 2008 (report released June 6, 2008) (95 pages).

"An Economic Perspective on the Current and Future Role of Nonprofit Provision of Early Learning and Child Care Services in Canada." Final report to Human Resources and Skills Development Canada. (With G. Cleveland, B. Forer, C. Japel and M. Krashinsky), March 1, 2007 (83 pages).

"Attitudes and Incident Modeling for Construction Safety." A report to the Research Advisory Council of the Ontario Workplace Safety and Insurance Board (WSIB). (With B. McCabe, C. Loughlin and S. Tighe), July 2006.

"Canadian Commercial Radio Broadcasting: Historical Financial Performance and Projections." Paper prepared for L'Association quebecois de l'industrie du disque, du spectacle et de la video (ADISQ) and the Canadian Independent Record Production Association (CIRPA) for the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission's Review of Commercial Radio Policy. (With Paul Audley), May 16, 2006 (40 pages).

"A Proposal to Revise the CRTC's Canadian Talent Development Policy for Canadian Commercial Radio Broadcasters." Paper prepared for L'Association quebecois de l'industrie du disque, du spectacle et de la video (ADISQ) for the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission's Review of Commercial Radio Policy. (With Paul Audley), May 16, 2006 (30 pages).

"Economic Incentives: Strategies for Engendering Healthy Workplaces." A Report to Health Canada. (With M. Gunderson), March 2002.

"Issues in Workers' Compensation for 2001." A Report to the Workers' Compensation Board of Manitoba. January 2001.

"Final Report of the Child Care Policy-Evaluation Model Project." A Report to Child Care Visions, Human Resources Development Canada. (With G. Cleveland, M. Gunderson and M. Krashinsky), March 2001.

"Some Benefit Considerations in Workers' Compensation." A Report to the Royal Commission on Workers' Compensation in British Columbia. (With M. Gunderson), June 1998.

"Waiting Periods and Direct Payments in Workers' Compensation." A Report to the Royal Commission on Workers' Compensation in British Columbia. (With M. Gunderson), June 1998.

"Evidence on the Efficacy of Experience Rating in British Columbia." A Report to the Royal Commission on Workers' Compensation in British Columbia. (With T. Thomason), May 1998.

"Subsidies to Consumers or Subsidies to Providers: How Should Governments Provide Child Care Assistance?" A Report to the Applied Research Branch of the Social Policy Group of Human Resources Development Canada. (With G. Cleveland), March 1996.

"The Cost of Doing Nothing: Why an Active Labour Adjustment Strategy Makes Sense in Ontario's Health Sector." A Report to the Ontario Health Sector Training and Adjustment Program. (With M. Gunderson), February 1996.

"Final Report of the Child Care 2000 Project." A Report to Human Resources Development Canada (the Child Care Initiatives Fund). (With G. Cleveland), August 1995.

"The Alberta Child Care Demand Model." A Report to Human Resources Development Canada (the Child Care Initiatives Fund). (With G. Cleveland), July 1995.

"The Quebec Child Care Demand Model." A Report to Human Resources Development Canada (the Child Care Initiatives Fund). (With G. Cleveland), July 1995.
"Baseline Study for Canada." A Report to the Employment Department, Government of England. (With M. Gunderson), May 1995.

"Child Care, Social Assistance and Work: Single Parents with Preschool Children." A Report to Human Resources Development Canada. (With G. Cleveland), April 1995.

"An Assessment of the Impact of Child Care Cost, Availability and Quality on Mothers' Employment: Final Report." A Report to Human Resources Development Canada. (With G. Cleveland), November 1994.
"An Assessment of the Impact of Child Care Cost, Availability and Quality on Mothers' Employment: An Interim Report." A Report to Human Resources Development Canada. (With G. Cleveland), March 1994.

"The Ontario Child Care Demand Model: Final Report." A Report to Statistics Canada. (With G. Cleveland), August 1993.

"What is Success in Employment Equity? A Regression-Based Analysis of Factors Influencing the Representation of Designated Groups in Varying Employment Situations." A Report to Employment and Immigration Canada. (With E. Harvey), May 1992.

"Results of Estimation of Child Care Demand Model." A Report to Statistics Canada. (With G. Cleveland), September 1991.

"Modeling Child Care Demand Using the 1988 National Child Care Survey." A Report to Statistics Canada. (With G. Cleveland), June 1991.

"Collective Bargaining, Hours of Work and Overtime: A Report to the Ontario Task Force on Hours of Work and Overtime." (With E. Swimmer and M. Gunderson) Queen's Printer, 1988.

(i) Copyright Tariff Reports

CMRRA/SODRAC Inc. – Online Music Services 2008-2010.

CMRRA/SODRAC Inc. - Multi-Channel Subscription Radio Services, 2006-2009.

Access Copyright Reprographic Reproductions in Canada by Educational Institutions, 2005-2009.
CMRRA/SODRAC (CSI) On-Line Music Services, 2005-2007.

NRCC Background Music Tariff 3, 2003-2009.

CMRRA/SODRAC Pay Audio Services Tariff 4.

SOCAN/NRCC Commercial Radio Tariff 1.A, 2003-2007.

(j) Other Manuscripts

"Know Your ABCs: An academic's guide to successfully advancing innovative ideas from Academia to Business to Commercialization." With A. Ali and J. Grant, January 31, 2020.

"The Role of MNEs as Intermediates for Canadian Imports?" (With W. Hejazi and A. Ciologariu), July 2020.

"The Ties that Bind: When Do Affiliates Break with their Parent?" (With W. Hejazi and A. Ciologariu), October 2019.

PATENT APPLICATION

“Risk Stratification and Scoring for Non-Adherence in Digital Subjects.” USA Patent Application No. 62/315,352. With T. van Mierlo, A.T.T. Ching and R. Fournier.

RESEARCH IN PROGRESS

“Illuminating Puzzles in International Trade Using Highly-Disaggregated Customs Brokerage Data.”

“Determinants of Life Insurance Coverage.”

“Construction Safety Practices.”

CONFERENCE PAPERS AND OTHER PRESENTATIONS

“Individual Factors' Impact on Construction Safety Performance: Observations from US and Canada Sites.” With Y. Chen, B. McCabe and J. Wang. To be presented at The Construction Institute of America and American Society of Civil Engineers joint meetings, Virginia Tech, and published in refereed proceedings.

"The Role of MNEs as Intermediates for Canadian Imports.” With W. Hejazi and A. Ciologariu. To be presented at the 80th Annual Meetings of the Academy of Management, Vancouver, British Columbia, August 7-11, 2020.

"The Role of MNEs as Intermediates for Canadian Imports.” With W. Hejazi and A. Ciologariu. Presented at the Annual Conference of the Academy of International Business, Miami, Florida (presented on-line), July 6, 2020.

“The Role of U.S. Multinationals in Intermediating Trade with the MENA Region.” With W. Hejazi and A. Ciologariu, was to be presented at the ISA International Conference, 2020, Ifrane, Morocco, June 23-25, 2020 (postponed due to pandemic).

"The Ties that Bind: When Do Affiliates Break with their Parent?" With W. Hejazi and A. Ciologariu. Meetings of the Academy of International Business – U.S. West Chapter, San Diego State University, San Diego, California, February 28, 2020 (Competitive session).

"The Ties that Bind: When Do Affiliates Break with their Parent?" With W. Hejazi and A. Ciologariu. Annual Conference of the Academy of International Business – U.S. Northeast, Rutgers University, New Brunswick, New Jersey, October 11-12, 2019.

“Correlations Between Interpersonal Conflicts at Work and Construction Safety Performance: Two Ontario Cross-Sectional Studies.” With Y. Chen and B. McCabe 2019 Canadian Society for Civil Engineering Conference, Montreal, Qc., June 12-15, 2019.

“Benchmarking Construction Safety Performance at a Global Level: A Case Study of US, Canada and New Zealand." With Y. Chen, A. Shahi, B. McCabe, A. Hanna, Mahdi Safa and Majeed Safa. 2019 Canadian Society for Civil Engineering Conference, Montreal, Qc., June 12-15, 2019.

"A Belief Network Model of Resilient Safety Climate in the Construction Industry." With Y. Chen and B. McCabe. 2017 Canadian Society for Civil Engineering Conference, Vancouver, B.C., June 1, 2017. Winner of the Best Paper Award.

"Leveraging Econometric Theory to Detect Adherence Patterns in Digital Health Social Networks." With T. Van Mierlo and A. Ching. Stanford Medical School, September 17, 2016.

"Safety and Age: a Longitudinal Study of Ontario Construction Workers." With Y. Chen and B. McCabe. 2016 Construction Research Congress, San Juan, Puerto Rico, May 31 to June 2, 2016.

"Wearables, Gamified Group Challenges and Behavioral Incentives: A Preliminary Study of an Engagement Program to Increase Physical Activity." With T. Van Mierlo, A. Ching, R. Fournier and R. Dembo. Partners HealthCare Connected Health. Boston MA, October 2015.

"Shopping Malls and Digital Health Networks: Predicting Patterns of Use." With T. Van Mierlo and A. Ching. Presented at Stanford Medical School, September 26, 2015.

"Data Collection Framework for Construction Safety Research." With Y. Chen, E. Alderman and B. McCabe. Presented at the 5th International/11th Construction Specialty Conference, Vancouver British Columbia, June 9, 2015.

"A Venture Capital Perspective on Intellectual Property." presented at IPgentsia, University of Waterloo Office of Research, April 2, 2008.

"Some Implication of Demographic Change for the Economics of Media." Ryerson University, September 12, 2007.

"Employer-Based Health Insurance: A Way for the Future?" (with M. Gunderson) presented at the Social Insurance for Health Care: Legal and Political Considerations conference, School of Public Policy and Governance, University of Toronto. November 9, 2006.

"Does Vocational Rehabilitation Have Much Impact on Helping People Return to Work." (with M. Campolieti), presented at the Accommodating Disability in the Workplace: Research, Policy and Practice, co-sponsored by the Institute for Advanced Policy Research, the Industrial Relations Research Group at the University of Calgary, the Workers Compensation Board of Alberta, and the Faculty of Management at the University of Alberta, Calgary, Alberta, June 14, 2006.

"Comments on Einhorn and McKie." Digital Copyright Reform in Canada: An International Perspective. Toronto, Ontario. March 3, 2006.

"Pricing Issues Facing Music Publishers and Recording Companies." Digital Music Summit, Toronto, Ontario. March 1, 2006.

"History and Economic Perspectives on Current Issues in Workers' Compensation Reform in Canada." Presentation to the Ministry of Health, Labor and Welfare, Government of Japan, Tokyo, Japan, August 10, 2004.

"Issues in Workers' Compensation Appeals System Reform," presented at Workers' Compensation: Current and Emerging Issues, A Conference in Memory of Terry Thomason, University of Rhode Island, Kingston Rhode Island, March 27, 2004.

“Dysfunctional Aspects of Performance Appraisal,” (with M. Brown and J. Benson), presented at the meetings of the Canadian Industrial Relations Association, Halifax, Nova Scotia, June 1, 2003.

“The Recipe for Good Quality Early Childhood Care and Education: Do We Know the Key Ingredients?” (with G. Cleveland), presented at the meetings of the Canadian Economics Association, Ottawa, Ontario, May 31, 2003.

“Lessons from Some "Contingent Workers" who Sought Union Certification,” (with S. Slinn), presented at the meetings of the Industrial Relations Research Association, Atlanta, GA, January 6, 2002.

“Employment Equity in Canada and the U.S.” (with M. Gunderson and S. Slinn), presented at the meetings of the Industrial Relations Research Association, Atlanta, GA, January 5, 2002.

“Strike Duration: Theory and Evidence,” (with R. Hebdon), presented at the meetings of the Canadian Industrial Relations Association, Laval Quebec, May 27,2001.

“Contingent Work: The Role of the Market, Collective Bargaining and Legislation,” (with M. Gunderson), presented at the meetings of the Industrial Relations Research Association, New Orleans, LA, January 5, 2001.

“Simulating the Effects of Child Care Policy in Canada,” presented at the meetings of the Canadian Employment Research Forum, Vancouver, British Columbia, June 1, 2000.

“Should Experience Rating Be Abolished,” Invited speaker, Canadian Bar Association – Ontario Workers’ Compensation Group. February 9, 2000.

“Does the Child Care Labor Market Work? Provocative Evidence From Canada,” presented at the Institute for the Study of Labor (IZA) conference, The Economics of Childcare, Bonn, Germany, November 15, 1999.

“Intergenerational Considerations of Workers’ Compensation Unfunded Liabilities in Ontario,” presented at the meetings of the Workers’ Compensation Research Group, Toronto, Ontario, June 6, 1999.

“Working with Young Children: Comments,” presented at the Good Child Care Symposium, Toronto, Ontario, May 30, 1999.

“Translating Cancer Epidemiology Findings into Workplace Policy,” presented at the meetings of the Canadian Society for Epidemiology and Biostatistics, Vancouver, BC, May 6, 1999 (invited speaker).

“Free Trade, Global Markets and Alternative Work Arrangements: Canada versus the United States”, (with K. Roberts), presented at the meetings of the Industrial Relations Research Association, New York, NY, January 5, 1999.

“Disputes and Dispute Resolution in Social Security and Workers’ Compensation,” (with T. Thomason and K. Roberts), presented at the meetings of the Industrial Relations Research Association, Chicago, IL, January 5, 1998.

“Inter-Generational Considerations of Workers' Compensation Unfunded Liabilities,” (with M. Gunderson), presented at the Statistics Canada/Human Resources Development Canada conference, Inter-Generational Equity in Canada, Ottawa, Ontario, February 20, 1997.

“Economics and RSI/WMSD: Coming to Grips with Economic Causes, Costs and Efficiency,” (with D. Cole and

S. Sinclair), presented at the Ontario Physiotherapy Association Internal Symposium on Global Rehabilitation Trends, Toronto, Ontario, January 17, 1997.

"Public Pensions, Age and Gender: A U.S. Canada Comparison," (with M. Gunderson and J. Pesando), presented at the meetings of the American Economic Association, San Francisco, CA, January 6, 1996.

"Canadian Public Sector Employment Relations in Transition," (with M. Gunderson), presented at the meetings of the Industrial Relations Research Association, San Francisco, CA, January 6, 1996.

"Free Trade, Global Markets and Alternative Work Arrangements: Canada Versus the United States," (with Karen Roberts), presented at the Biennial Conference of the Association of Canadian Studies in the United States, Seattle, Washington, November 18, 1995.

"Child Care and Work Decisions of Lone Parent Mothers," (with G. Cleveland), presented at the meetings of the Canadian Economics Association, Montreal, Quebec, June 1995.

"Legal Structure, Dispute Resolution and Compensation in the Canadian Public Sector," presented at the World Congress of the International Industrial Relations Association, Washington, D.C., June 1, 1995.

"Post-Injury Labour Market Outcomes of Workers' Compensation Recipients," (with T. Thomason), presented at the Transition and Structural Change in the North American Labour Market conference, Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, May 26, 1995.

"The Effect of Economic Integration on Contingent Work," (with K. Roberts and P. Dorman) presented at the Free Trade Among Nations: NAFTA Implications for Michigan conference, East Lansing Michigan, November 14, 1994.

"Public Pension Plans in the United States and Canada," (with M. Gunderson and J.E. Pesando) presented at the Upjohn Institute Project on Employee Benefits, Labor Costs and Labor Markets in Canada and the United States conference, Kalamazoo, Michigan, November 4, 1994.

"Workplace Restructuring in the Public Sector," (with R. Hebdon), presented at the Collective Bargaining Group conference, Toronto, Ontario, October 15, 1994.

"Does Child Care Policy Matter?" (with G. Cleveland), presented at the Canadian Law and Economics Association Conference, Toronto, Ontario, October 1, 1994.

"Optimum Child Care Choice and Mother's Labour Force Participation: A Nested Logit Analysis," (with G. Cleveland), presented at the meetings of the Canadian Economics Association, Calgary, Alberta, June 10, 1994.

"Child Care Choice and Labour Force Participation of Mothers: A Canadian Regional Perspective," (with G. Cleveland) presented at a joint session of the Canadian Economics Association and the Canadian Regional Science Association, Calgary, Alberta, June 10, 1994.

"Determinants of Child Care Choice: A Comparison of Results for Ontario and Quebec," (with G. Cleveland), presented at the Pacific Regional Science Association Meetings, Whistler, B.C., July 13, 1993.

"Alternative Methods for Modeling Regional Industrial Activity: Short Run Versus Long Run," presented at the conference, The Issues of Elaboration and Implementation of Regional Development Programs under the Transition to a Market Economy, Donetsk Polytechnical Institute, Donetsk, Ukraine, May 19, 1993.

“Measuring the Impact of Vocational Rehabilitation on the Probability of Post-Injury Return to Work,” (with R. Allingham) presented at the conference, Challenges to Workers' Compensation in Canada, Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, April 29, 1993.

“Re-Employment and Accommodation Requirements Under Workers' Compensation,” (with M. Gunderson and D. Law) presented at the conference, Challenges to Workers' Compensation in Canada, Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, April 29, 1993.

“Child Care Use Patterns of the Pre-School Children of Employed Single Mothers,” (with G. Cleveland) presented at a joint session of the Canadian Economics Association and the Canadian Industrial Relations Association, Charlottetown, P.E.I., June 6, 1992.

“Child Care Choice for Pre-School Children of Employed Mothers in Ontario, Alberta and Quebec,” (with G. Cleveland) presented at a joint session of the Canadian Economics Association and the Canadian Industrial Relations Association, Charlottetown, P.E.I., June 6, 1992.

“The Distribution of Investment Risk in Defined Benefit Pension Plans: A Re-Examination,” (with J. Pesando) presented at the Current Pension Policy Issues conference, Centre for Pension and Retirement Research, Miami University, Miami, Ohio, March 27-8, 1992.

“Workers' Compensation Costs and Competitiveness: Issues and Inter-Jurisdictional Comparisons,” (with B. Kralj) presented at the meetings of the Canadian Industrial Relations Association, Kingston, Ontario, June 4, 1991.

“Projections of the Effect of Government Child Care Policy on Parents Choice of Child Care Arrangements,” (with G. Cleveland) presented at the meetings of the Canadian Society for the Study of Education, Kingston, Ontario, June 3, 1991.

“The Effect of Price on Choice of Child Care Arrangements,” (with G. Cleveland) presented at the meetings of the Canadian Economics Association, Kingston Ontario, June 3, 1991.

“The School to Labour Force Transition: Preliminary Results for Columbia,” (with L. Kumaranayake) presented at the meetings of the Canadian Economics Association, Kingston Ontario, June 2, 1991.

“Labour Force Participation and Earnings of Men and Women in Kenya,” (with W. Milne) presented at the meetings of the Canadian Economics Association, Kingston Ontario, June 2, 1991.

“Urban and Rural Fertility Differentials in Kenya: An Econometric Analysis Using Micro Data,” (with W. Milne) presented at the meetings of the North American Regional Science Association, Boston Mass. November 10, 1990.

“Employer Appeals of Workers' Compensation Board Decisions: The Impact of Experience Rating,” (with B. Kralj) presented at the meetings of the Canadian Industrial Relations Association, University of Victoria, Victoria B.C., June 4, 1990.

“The Impact of Early Retirement Pensions on Employee Turnover: Evidence from The Ontario Public Service,” (with J. Pesando and M. Gunderson) presented at the meetings of the Canadian Economics Association, University of Victoria, Victoria B.C., June 3, 1990.

“Estimating the Impact of Desired Family Size on Fertility Behaviour: Preliminary Results for Kenya,” (with W. Milne) presented at the meetings of the Canadian Economics Association, Laval University, Quebec City, Quebec, June 4, 1989.

"Time Series Estimation of Fertility: Public Policy and the Opportunity Cost of Children," (with W. Milne) presented at a joint session of the Canadian Economics Association and the Canadian Population Association, McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario, June 5, 1987.

Policy and Economic Analysis Program
ROTMAN SCHOOL OF MANAGEMENT / UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO
105 St. George Street, Toronto, ON M5S 3E6
Tel: (416) 978-4182

EXHIBIT B

PEAP Memo 2024-8 November 4, 2024

Subject: Updated Forecast for Canada, New Forecast for Ontario – Not a Long Shelf Life

Attached is an updated economic forecast for Canada, and a new forecast for Ontario, based on the 2024 2nd quarter economic accounts released by the Ontario Ministry of Finance, as well as subsequent monthly data releases. This forecast remains very much a work in progress. However, given that new historical annual numbers for Canada and Ontario will be released by Statistics Canada later this week, which will be inconsistent with the quarterly numbers upon which our FOCUS models are based, we are releasing this "best we can do at this time" forecast. Admittedly, given this data issue, and the significant number of uncertainties currently swirling, this forecast almost certainly will have a very short shelf life.

Before discussing the forecast numbers, we will first lay out the challenges/uncertainties we are facing in attempting to producing a consistent and sensible economic forecast. First, the international situation remains very unstable. The situation in the Middle East could change dramatically at any moment. The outcome of tomorrow's U.S. election, whenever it is eventually decided, is too close to call. But frankly even if we could call it, we do not really have a good sense of what the outcome means for Canada, particularly if the Republican candidate is the victor. Weaponized uncertainty may be the order of the day for the next four years from south of the border. Or not. Our forecast, as is usually the case for our forecasts of the international situation, is that the U.S. and the world will "muddle through".

The second big challenge in preparing this forecast has been attempting to implement the recently announced immigration and non-permanent resident reduction targets. We had previously assumed that the reductions would take place over a longer period than the newly announced targets suggest. While these new targets are, to our mind, extremely aggressive, we are taking the government at its word. This is clearly viewed by the federal government as politically important and even if this government does fall, it is hard to see the one that might replace it as any less motivated. We are facing two problems in implementing the announced changes. First, within our population projection program getting the age/sex mix of the massive changes to the non-permanent residents "right". Second, once we are happy with the population numbers, we have to translate them into population numbers used in Statistics Canada's Labour Force Survey (LFS), which are used in the FOCUS models. In its latest LFS release in early October, Statistics Canada highlighted a timing issue in how non-permanent residents are included in the LFS population count versus the "true" population numbers. Stats Can recognizes the problem, but do not appear as yet appear to have a solution, which may or may not come when historical revisions of the LFS occur in late January 2025. We are still working on our new population projection, so the numbers included in this forecast are subject to significant revision, particularly for Ontario.

The third challenge is more a head's up and a data implementation issue which will impact the quarterly pattern of growth on the income side of GDP (particularly the net operating surplus of corporations (YNOS) which acts as a residual in the income side of the model). The federal government has announced that they will send more than $2.5 billion to about 600,000 Canadian businesses in December. The payments will return a portion of the carbon price revenue from 2019-20 through 2023-24 to small businesses in jurisdictions where the federal fuel charge applies. It appears that Statistics Canada will probably treat this as subsidy to business, but it is unclear if it will be applied across the quarters/years it was collected or just all be returned in 2024Q4. Given the challenges Stats Can has in opening up previous years for revision, we are assuming federal business subsidies will surge (by $10 billion, given the number has to be annualized for the FOCUS models) in the 4th quarter, then fall back. This, all else being equal, would have a negative impact on the income side of GDP as subsidies are included as a negative (if it is treated as a transfer to business it would not impact GDP – the joy of income and expenditure accounting) in measuring GDP. But because the income and expenditure sides of nominal GDP need to be the same, this negative is made up for an increase in YNOS. For any PEAP members who use our forecast for YNOS as a proxy for corporate profit growth, beware!

Fourth on the challenge front, we have had to make an assumption on what happens to the household savings rate in capturing the quarterly impact of the (to our minds at least) ill-advised, but one assumes expected to be politically popular, Ontario $200 rebate coming in early 2025. The policy has an announced cost of a sizeable $3 billion ($12 billion in 2025Q1 in our annualized FOCUS models), which we have implemented as a non-taxable provincial transfer to households. To somewhat smooth over the quarterly impact of transfer, we have increased the household savings rate, particularly in Ontario, from what it otherwise would have expected to have been in the quarter. We admit the impact could be very different from the response that we have assumed.

The final challenge is the 4th quarter "Taylor Swift" effect. We have assumed some modest impact on international services trade, but given our lack of knowledge of the phenomenon have not done much else. There is already some anecdotal evidence that hospitality rates are being impacted in Toronto and Vancouver. We expect the aggregate impact on Canada and Ontario to be muted, but of course we could just be out of touch.

Our near-term forecast for Canada is similar to the one we produced in late September. However, given the expected lower population numbers over the next couple of years (really only kicking in during 2025) we now expect GDP growth in Canada to be somewhat weaker than previously expected from 2025-2029. The only way to get stronger GDP growth will be to see a surge in labour productivity, which we do not foresee on an extended basis. Of course, given the very different labour market than we were previously expected, it is indeed possible. But we have reached a state where we will believe it when we see it. The forecast for Canadian GDP growth remains at 1.1% (as in September) in 2024 and but is now only 1.7% in 2025, 2.0% in 2026, 1.9% in 2027 and 2.0% in 2028 and 2029 (vs 1.8%, 2.3%, 2.2%, 2.0%, 2.3%, respectively, in September) in 2025. By 2029, the level of real GDP is seen to be roughly 1% lower than in our September memo. Remember though that our population forecast remains very much a work in progress so these numbers could change significantly when we finish all of our work on this.

The first estimate for Ontario economic growth for 2024Q2, at 0.3%, came in exactly at the rate we were forecasting in August. The success ends there. We badly overestimated household consumption growth (it actually fell) but underestimated export weakness. We expect third quarter growth to slightly strengthen as employment growth has remained strong. Solid household consumption growth and business investment spending are seen to mitigate continued weakness in net trade.

We see a very similar growth path for both Ontario and Canada as-a-whole for the next few quarters, although some components of growth are seen to be somewhat different. Household consumption growth is supported by continued expected employment growth although higher interest rates continue to impact. We continue to expect that business investment will grow, albeit somewhat modestly. Announced policies from all levels of government should encourage growth in housing investment but with less demand pressure given announced international migrant restrictions.

The quarterly pattern of growth yields an annual growth rate for Ontario real GDP of 1.4% in 2024, slightly higher than the 1.3% we forecast in August, and higher than the whole country (1.1%). After 2024, Ontario growth is seen to slightly surpass national growth in 2025 (1.8% vs 1.7%) but slightly trail it in 2026 (1.9% vs 2.0%). For 2027 through 2029 Ontario GDP growth is expected to match or surpass national growth. Ontario CPI inflation is expected to fall from 3.8% in 2023 to 2.4% in 2024, 1.8% in both 2025 and 1.9% in 2026, and then 2.0% thereafter. After the near term, annual employment growth is seen to be somewhat weaker relative to our August forecast, as assumed population restrictions impact. The unemployment rate is expected to average over 7% from the latter half of 2024 through the middle of 2026, before falling to average 6.0% in 2029. As in the national forecast but with a slightly greater effect, by 2029 the level of Ontario real GDP is lower (1.1%) than in our previous provincial forecast. Given the very preliminary nature of our new Ontario population forecast, and how it has been translated to the population as captured by the Labour Force Survey, we caution that this forecast is subject to significant revision.

For further information please contact Steve Murphy (steve.murphy@rotman.utoronto.ca) or Peter Dungan (416-978-4182 or pdungan@rotman.utoronto.ca).

FOCUS Model - Policy and Economic Analysis Program
CANADA: Base Forecast - November 4, 2024

		History	Forecast												History	Forecast
Summary of Forecast	2024:1	2024:2	2024:3	2024:4	2025:1	2025:2	2025:3	2025:4	2026:1	2026:2	2026:3	2026:4	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2026	2027	2028	2029
Real Gross Domestic Product (Chained $17 Bill)	2366.4	2378.9	2385.8	2395.5	2406.4	2413.2	2425.5	2440.4	2453.1	2464.2	2475.8	2487.9	2240.9	2326.5	2355.6	2381.6	2421.4	2470.2	2518.4	2567.5	2619.0
Real Gross Domestic Product (%ch)	0.4	0.5	0.3	0.4	0.5	0.3	0.5	0.6	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	5.3	3.8	1.2	1.1	1.7	2.0	1.9	2.0	2.0
Expenditure by Households	0.9	0.2	0.5	0.5	0.7	0.3	0.6	0.4	0.4	0.5	0.5	0.4	5.2	5.1	1.7	2.0	2.1	1.8	1.8	2.3	2.4
Expenditure by NPISH	1.9	0.1	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.8	0.5	0.5	0.4	0.6	0.4	0.4	1.4	3.8	1.3	4.1	2.1	1.9	1.7	1.7	1.6
Expenditure by Governments	0.6	1.8	0.1	0.5	0.5	0.4	0.4	0.4	0.4	0.3	0.3	0.3	4.8	3.2	1.9	2.5	2.0	1.5	1.4	1.4	1.4
Investment Expenditure	0.5	0.5	0.3	0.9	0.9	0.8	0.8	0.8	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	11.2	-3.5	-4.8	-0.5	3.1	3.0	2.6	2.4	2.4
Residential Structures	0.0	-1.9	0.7	0.9	0.9	0.9	0.9	0.9	0.8	0.8	0.8	0.7	14.6	-12.1	-10.3	-0.4	2.8	3.3	2.9	2.8	2.6
Non-Residential Structures	0.9	0.5	0.7	0.9	0.8	0.8	0.7	0.7	0.6	0.6	0.6	0.6	5.2	6.7	2.6	-2.2	3.1	2.6	2.2	2.1	2.1
Machinery and Equipment	0.0	6.5	-1.4	1.0	1.0	1.0	0.9	0.9	0.8	0.8	0.8	0.8	14.0	-0.3	-6.4	0.1	4.1	3.5	2.6	2.1	2.1
Intellectual Property	1.8	0.3	0.7	0.8	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.6	0.6	0.6	0.6	10.8	6.0	0.3	2.4	2.8	2.5	2.3	2.2	2.2
Exports	0.5	-0.4	0.0	0.7	0.6	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.6	0.6	0.6	0.6	2.7	3.2	5.4	0.7	2.0	2.6	2.5	2.4	2.4
Imports	0.0	-0.1	0.0	0.7	0.6	0.5	0.5	0.4	0.6	0.8	0.7	0.6	8.1	7.6	0.9	0.6	1.8	2.4	2.3	2.8	2.8
Inventory - Non-Farm (Chained $17 Bill)	28.4	24.0	20.0	14.0	8.0	2.0	-1.0	0.5	2.0	3.0	4.0	5.0	10.9	50.4	39.8	21.6	2.4	3.5	5.1	5.1	5.2
Inventory - Farm (Chained $17 Bill)	-2.3	0.8	0.8	0.9	1.0	1.0	1.0	1.0	1.0	1.0	1.0	1.0	-6.4	5.3	-0.4	0.0	1.0	1.0	1.0	1.1	1.1
Residual Error (Chained $17 Bill)	1.4	2.2	2.0	1.8	1.5	1.2	1.0	0.8	0.5	0.2	0.0	0.0	0.4	0.6	0.4	1.8	1.1	0.2	0.0	0.0	0.0
Gross Domestic Product ($ Bill)	2954.6	3005.4	3026.0	3052.5	3080.4	3102.2	3131.0	3163.0	3193.8	3222.9	3252.4	3282.7	2517.1	2813.3	2892.1	3009.6	3119.2	3237.9	3362.2	3496.7	3639.7
Gross Domestic Product (%ch)	0.1	1.7	0.7	0.9	0.9	0.7	0.9	1.0	1.0	0.9	0.9	0.9	13.4	11.8	2.8	4.1	3.6	3.8	3.8	4.0	4.1
Implicit Price Deflator for GDP (%ch)	-0.4	1.2	0.4	0.5	0.5	0.4	0.4	0.4	0.4	0.5	0.4	0.4	7.7	7.7	1.5	2.9	1.9	1.8	1.9	2.0	2.0
Real GDP per Capita (%ch)	-0.2	-0.1	-0.3	0.0	0.2	0.4	0.5	0.7	0.6	0.5	0.5	0.5	4.7	2.1	-1.5	-1.8	0.8	2.3	1.8	1.1	1.1
Unemployment Rate	5.9	6.3	6.5	6.8	7.0	7.0	7.0	6.9	6.8	6.7	6.5	6.4	7.5	5.3	5.4	6.4	7.0	6.6	6.2	5.8	5.8
Employment (%ch)	0.4	0.6	0.2	0.3	0.1	0.2	0.2	0.1	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2	5.0	4.0	2.4	1.7	0.9	0.7	0.9	0.9	1.0
Labour Force (%ch)	0.5	1.0	0.4	0.7	0.3	0.2	0.1	0.0	0.0	0.1	0.1	0.1	2.5	1.5	2.6	2.7	1.6	0.3	0.4	0.6	0.9
Participation Rate (%)	65.3	65.4	65.0	65.0	65.0	65.0	65.0	65.1	65.1	65.1	65.2	65.2	65.4	65.5	65.6	65.2	65.0	65.2	65.2	65.2	65.2
3-Month Treasury Bill Rate (%)	5.0	4.8	4.2	3.4	3.0	3.0	3.0	3.0	3.0	3.0	3.0	3.0	0.1	2.3	4.8	4.3	3.0	3.0	3.0	3.0	3.0
10-Year Gov't of Canada Bond Rate (%)	3.4	3.7	3.1	3.2	3.2	3.3	3.3	3.4	3.6	3.7	3.9	4.0	1.4	2.8	3.3	3.4	3.3	3.8	4.2	4.3	4.3
Inflation Rate - CPI (%)	0.3	0.6	0.5	0.3	0.4	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.6	0.5	0.5	3.4	6.8	3.9	2.3	1.8	1.9	2.0	2.0	2.0
Annual Wage per Employee - Pvt (%ch)	1.6	0.9	0.6	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.8	0.8	0.8	0.8	4.6	5.8	4.0	3.6	2.9	3.0	3.0	3.0	3.0
Real Ann Wage per Emp - Pvt (%ch)	1.3	0.3	0.2	0.4	0.3	0.2	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.2	0.3	0.3	1.2	-0.9	0.1	1.2	1.1	1.0	1.0	1.0	1.0
Labour Productivity (%ch)	0.1	-0.1	0.1	0.1	0.3	0.1	0.4	0.5	0.4	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3	-0.1	-1.1	-0.6	0.8	1.3	1.0	1.0	1.0
Exchange Rate (US $/Cdn $)	0.741	0.731	0.733	0.720	0.718	0.725	0.730	0.738	0.745	0.752	0.760	0.767	0.798	0.768	0.741	0.731	0.727	0.756	0.780	0.784	0.784
Terms of Trade (%ch)	-1.4	-0.1	0.1	0.2	0.1	-0.1	0.0	-0.1	-0.1	0.0	0.0	0.0	13.4	4.7	-6.0	-0.8	0.2	-0.2	0.0	0.3	0.4
Balance on Current Account ($ Bill)	-21.5	-33.9	-34.8	-34.0	-35.0	-36.0	-37.0	-38.0	-40.8	-45.0	-47.5	-48.7	0.4	-10.3	-21.0	-31.0	-36.5	-45.5	-45.8	-47.7	-49.9
Consolidated Government Balance ($ Bill)	-143.3	-41.8	-32.8	-33.8	-27.4	-20.2	-25.9	-28.5	-23.1	-27.4	-34.8	-37.9	-73.5	3.1	-16.6	-62.9	-25.5	-30.8	-34.8	-31.6	-28.0
Federal Gov't Balance (NA Basis) ($ Bill)	-151.7	-24.5	-28.4	-33.9	-24.6	-27.8	-32.8	-34.8	-32.5	-36.1	-41.8	-43.8	-80.3	-14.6	-20.3	-59.6	-30.0	-38.6	-43.0	-42.7	-42.2
Federal Balance as % of GDP	-5.1	-0.8	-0.9	-1.1	-0.8	-0.9	-1.0	-1.1	-1.0	-1.1	-1.3	-1.3	-3.2	-0.5	-0.7	-2.0	-1.0	-1.2	-1.3	-1.2	-1.2
Ratio: Federal Debt to GDP (%)	31.9	31.5	31.6	31.6	31.5	31.5	31.5	31.4	31.4	31.4	31.4	31.4	33.8	31.2	30.9	31.6	31.5	31.4	31.5	31.5	31.4
Prov'l Gov't Balance (NA Basis) ($ Bill)	-33.6	-35.9	-25.3	-23.1	-34.8	-26.7	-29.7	-32.0	-32.6	-35.2	-38.7	-39.7	-22.7	-6.7	-32.3	-29.5	-30.8	-36.5	-38.8	-37.5	-36.1
Household Savings Rate (%)	6.7	7.2	6.7	6.6	6.6	6.2	6.2	6.2	5.9	5.7	5.7	5.6	10.5	5.4	5.5	6.8	6.3	5.7	5.6	5.5	5.4
Real Household Disposable Income (%ch)	1.2	0.5	0.4	0.7	1.1	0.3	1.0	0.8	0.4	0.7	0.8	0.7	0.5	-0.1	1.9	3.3	2.8	2.6	2.7	2.8	2.6
Net Operating Surplus - Corporations (%ch)	-10.0	3.6	-0.3	2.6	-3.7	-0.7	0.9	2.1	0.2	0.8	0.8	0.9	33.2	14.7	-17.4	-3.6	-0.7	3.3	3.0	3.8	4.1
U.S. Real GDP Growth (%)	0.4	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.6	0.6	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	6.1	2.5	2.9	2.8	2.6	2.2	2.1	2.0	2.0
U.S. Inflation (GDP Deflator) (%)	0.7	0.6	0.4	0.4	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	4.6	7.1	3.6	2.4	2.0	2.1	2.1	2.1	2.1
U.S. 3-Month Treasury Bill Rate (%)	5.2	5.2	5.0	4.4	4.0	3.8	3.5	3.3	3.0	3.0	3.0	3.0	0.0	2.0	5.1	5.0	3.6	3.0	3.0	3.0	3.0
U.S. 10-Year Gov't Bond Rate (%)	4.2	4.4	3.9	4.1	4.1	4.1	4.1	4.1	4.2	4.2	4.3	4.3	1.4	3.0	4.0	4.2	4.1	4.2	4.3	4.3	4.3
U.S. Unemployment Rate (%)	3.8	4.0	4.2	4.2	4.3	4.2	4.1	4.0	4.0	4.0	4.0	4.0	5.4	3.6	3.6	4.0	4.2	4.0	4.0	4.0	4.0

Percentage changes are period to period

Policy and Economic Analysis Program
ONTARIO: Base Forecast - November 4, 2024

		History	Forecast												History	Forecast
Summary of Forecast	2024:1	2024:2	2024:3	2024:4	2025:1	2025:2	2025:3	2025:4	2026:1	2026:2	2026:3	2026:4	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2026	2027	2028	2029
Real Provincial Product (Chained $17 Bill)	929.1	932.0	935.5	940.3	946.3	947.2	951.8	957.4	962.4	966.4	970.6	975.0	875.0	909.1	921.7	934.2	950.7	968.6	987.4	1007.9	1031.5
Real Provincial Product (%ch)	0.7	0.3	0.4	0.5	0.6	0.1	0.5	0.6	0.5	0.4	0.4	0.5	5.4	3.9	1.4	1.4	1.8	1.9	1.9	2.1	2.3
Expenditure by Households	1.3	-0.2	1.0	0.8	1.2	-0.1	0.4	0.4	0.3	0.3	0.4	0.4	4.6	7.1	1.7	2.4	2.5	1.3	1.9	2.5	2.8
Current Expenditure by NPISH	0.8	0.1	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.8	0.5	0.5	0.4	0.6	0.4	0.4	0.5	3.9	2.6	1.6	2.1	1.9	1.7	1.7	1.6
Capital Expenditure by NPISH	-0.5	0.8	0.7	0.5	0.6	1.1	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.7	0.3	0.3	6.3	-5.5	-6.4	2.2	2.7	1.8	1.5	1.6	1.7
Current Expenditure by Governments	0.7	2.0	0.3	0.5	0.5	0.4	0.4	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3	5.5	3.5	4.2	3.3	2.2	1.3	1.3	1.3	1.4
Capital Expenditure by Governments	-0.3	2.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.6	0.6	0.6	0.6	-2.2	3.5	3.5	3.5	3.3	2.6	2.4	2.4	2.4
Investment Expenditure	0.3	-0.1	0.5	0.9	0.9	0.9	0.9	0.9	0.8	0.8	0.8	0.8	11.6	-9.2	-5.1	-0.8	3.2	3.3	2.9	2.7	2.6
Residential Structures	-0.2	-2.4	0.7	0.8	1.0	1.0	1.0	0.9	0.9	0.9	0.9	0.8	13.9	-16.9	-6.9	-2.4	2.8	3.7	3.3	3.0	2.8
Non-Residential Structures	1.1	0.6	0.8	1.0	0.9	0.8	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	-0.1	1.2	3.7	-0.6	3.3	2.9	2.5	2.4	2.4
Machinery and Equipment	-0.6	5.4	-0.7	1.1	1.1	1.0	0.9	0.9	0.8	0.8	0.8	0.8	18.8	-3.6	-13.4	0.6	4.4	3.5	2.8	2.4	2.4
Intellectual Property	2.1	0.3	0.7	0.9	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.6	0.6	0.6	0.6	11.5	4.6	-0.2	3.0	2.9	2.6	2.5	2.5	2.5
Exports	1.5	-1.4	-0.7	0.8	0.5	0.5	0.6	0.6	0.6	0.7	0.6	0.6	3.5	4.1	4.6	-0.6	1.2	2.5	2.1	2.2	2.5
Imports	-0.2	-0.5	-0.3	0.6	0.6	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.6	0.7	0.6	0.6	6.3	5.2	2.8	-0.6	1.5	2.4	2.2	2.6	2.6
Inventory - Non-Farm (Chained $17 Bill)	12.2	12.5	10.0	6.8	3.2	0.8	-0.4	0.2	0.8	1.2	1.6	2.0	3.4	18.4	18.2	10.4	0.9	1.4	2.0	2.1	2.1
Inventory - Farm (Chained $17 Bill)	-0.6	0.1	0.1	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.0	-0.3	-0.1	0.0	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2
Residual Error (Chained $17 Bill)	-0.2	2.0	1.8	1.5	1.2	1.0	0.8	0.5	0.2	0.0	0.0	0.0	1.0	0.6	0.3	1.3	0.9	0.1	0.0	0.0	0.0
Real GDP - Canada (%ch)	0.4	0.5	0.3	0.4	0.5	0.3	0.5	0.6	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	5.3	3.8	1.2	1.1	1.7	2.0	1.9	2.0	2.0
Provincial Product ($ Bill)	1122.7	1139.9	1149.4	1160.3	1172.8	1179.7	1190.8	1203.5	1215.7	1226.9	1238.4	1250.1	960.2	1048.3	1093.5	1143.1	1186.7	1232.8	1282.1	1335.6	1395.3
Provincial Product (%ch)	0.8	1.5	0.8	0.9	1.1	0.6	0.9	1.1	1.0	0.9	0.9	0.9	9.8	9.2	4.3	4.5	3.8	3.9	4.0	4.2	4.5
Implicit Price Deflator for GDP (%ch)	0.1	1.2	0.5	0.4	0.4	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.5	4.3	5.1	2.9	3.1	2.0	2.0	2.0	2.1	2.1
Real GDP per Capita (%ch)	-0.1	-0.3	-0.2	0.2	0.5	0.2	0.5	0.7	0.6	0.5	0.5	0.5	4.7	2.0	-1.6	-1.7	1.0	2.2	1.8	1.1	1.4
Unemployment Rate	6.5	6.9	6.9	7.2	7.4	7.4	7.3	7.2	7.1	7.0	6.9	6.8	8.1	5.6	5.7	6.9	7.3	6.9	6.5	6.2	6.0
Employment (%ch)	0.2	1.0	0.7	0.5	0.1	0.2	0.2	0.1	0.1	0.2	0.2	0.2	5.2	4.6	2.4	1.7	1.3	0.6	0.9	1.0	1.3
Employment ('000)	7951	8032	8086	8128	8137	8151	8165	8172	8183	8198	8214	8232	7396	7734	7916	8049	8156	8207	8282	8364	8474
Labour Force (%ch)	0.5	1.4	0.8	0.8	0.4	0.2	0.1	0.0	0.0	0.1	0.1	0.1	3.3	1.8	2.4	2.9	1.9	0.2	0.4	0.6	1.1
Participation Rate (%)	64.9	65.2	65.0	64.9	64.9	65.0	65.0	65.1	65.1	65.2	65.2	65.2	65.2	65.5	65.5	65.0	65.0	65.2	65.3	65.2	65.3
Population (%ch)	0.8	0.6	0.6	0.3	0.2	-0.1	-0.1	-0.1	-0.1	-0.1	0.0	-0.1	0.6	1.9	3.1	3.1	0.7	-0.3	0.2	0.9	1.0
Population ('000)	15944	16034	16124	16178	16206	16188	16179	16169	16156	16139	16132	16123	14840	15117	15581	16070	16185	16138	16164	16311	16471
Source Population (%ch)	1.0	1.0	1.0	0.8	0.4	0.2	0.0	-0.1	-0.1	0.0	0.0	0.0	1.0	1.4	2.3	3.8	1.9	-0.1	0.3	0.7	1.1
Inflation Rate - CPI (%)	0.1	1.5	0.3	-0.1	0.2	1.4	0.3	0.0	0.2	1.4	0.3	0.0	3.5	6.8	3.8	2.4	1.8	1.9	2.0	2.0	2.0
Annual Wage per Employee (%ch)	1.2	0.9	0.6	0.6	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	0.7	4.2	4.4	4.1	3.8	2.8	3.0	3.0	3.0	3.0
Labour Productivity (%ch)	0.5	-0.7	-0.3	0.0	0.5	-0.1	0.3	0.5	0.4	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2	-0.7	-1.0	-0.3	0.4	1.3	1.0	1.1	1.0
Household Savings Rate (%)	4.0	4.9	4.5	4.3	5.0	3.9	4.1	4.1	3.9	3.9	3.9	3.9	11.0	3.2	3.5	4.5	4.3	3.9	3.7	3.6	3.5
Real Household Disposable Income (%ch)	1.2	0.6	0.9	0.9	2.3	-0.8	1.0	0.7	0.5	0.6	0.8	0.6	0.1	-1.1	2.3	3.3	3.6	2.4	2.6	2.8	3.0
Net Operating Surplus - Corporations (%ch)	-8.6	3.3	-1.2	3.5	-3.0	-1.5	1.8	3.4	0.4	0.9	0.6	1.1	5.5	-5.9	-12.8	-1.6	0.4	4.8	3.7	4.4	5.1

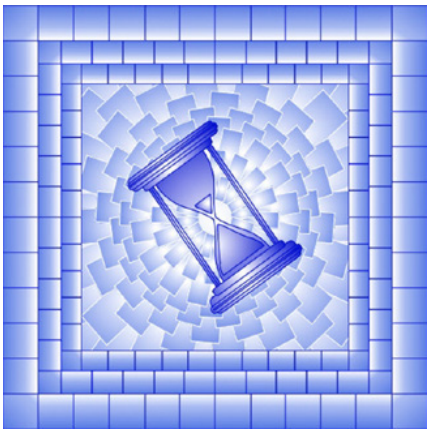
Percentage changes are period to period

EXHIBIT C

Catalogue no. 62F0014M
ISSN 1706-7723
ISBN 978-0-660-68984-5

Prices Analytical Series

Shelter in the Canadian CPI: An overview, 2023 update



by Rebecca Lehto

Release date: December 19, 2023

Statistics Canada Statistique Canada

Canada

How to obtain more information

For information about this product or the wide range of services and data available from Statistics Canada, visit our website, www.statcan.gc.ca.

You can also contact us by Email at infostats@statcan.gc.ca

Telephone, from Monday to Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., at the following numbers:

- Statistical Information Service 1-800-263-1136
- National telecommunications device for the hearing impaired 1-800-363-7629
- Fax line 1-514-283-9350

Standards of service to the public

Statistics Canada is committed to serving its clients in a prompt, reliable and courteous manner. To this end, Statistics Canada has developed standards of service that its employees observe. To obtain a copy of these service standards, please contact Statistics Canada toll-free at 1-800-263-1136. The service standards are also published on www.statcan.gc.ca under "Contact us" > "Standards of service to the public."

Note of appreciation

Canada owes the success of its statistical system to a long-standing partnership between Statistics Canada, the citizens of Canada, its businesses, governments and other institutions. Accurate and timely statistical information could not be produced without their continued co-operation and goodwill.

Published by authority of the Minister responsible for Statistics Canada

An HTML version is also available.

Cette publication est aussi disponible en français.

Shelter in the Canadian CPI: An overview, 2023 update

by Rebecca Lehto

The Canadian Consumer Price Index (CPI) is an indicator that measures price change experienced by Canadian consumers by comparing, through time, the cost of a fixed basket of goods and services. This fixed basket contains goods and services that typical households purchase over a specified period of time. Prices for goods and services across the country are collected on a monthly basis.[1] These collected prices are used to calculate price indices and produce the CPI according to international standards and methods, which are regularly updated and reviewed by price statistics experts.

The CPI basket of goods and services is organized into eight major components: food; shelter; household operations, furnishings and equipment; clothing and footwear; transportation; health and personal care; recreation, education and reading; and alcoholic beverages, tobacco products, and recreational cannabis.

Shelter has the largest basket weight of the eight major components in the CPI. As shown in Table 1 below, it accounts for nearly one-third of the total expenditures on goods and services in the CPI basket. Rented accommodation and owned accommodation are the most important components of the shelter index.

This article attempts to clarify concepts and practices related to the construction of the shelter component of the Canadian CPI and discuss precautions to be taken when making comparisons to other measures of housing prices.

Table 1
Relative shares of shelter and its subcomponents in the 2022 CPI basket

Components	Relative share in the CPI basket of goods and services[1] percent
Shelter	28.34
Rented accommodation	7.03
Owned accommodation	17.96
Water, fuel and electricity	3.35

1. Weights at basket link month prices.
Source: Statistics Canada, Table 18-10-0007-01 Basket Weights of the Consumer Price Index.

Basket weights

The CPI includes all goods and services in scope for all Canadian consumers, whether they own their homes or not. Each of these goods and services is assigned a relative importance (or weight) in the CPI, which is determined by actual expenditures of Canadian consumers across the country.

The shelter index is a weighted average of sub-indexes representing price changes associated with shelter-related expenditure categories. Basket weights are derived primarily using consumer expenditures from the national Household Final Consumption Expenditure (HFCE) series, in addition to data from the Survey of Household Spending (SHS). Alternative sources of data, including external measures of housing prices, are also used at more detailed levels for some CPI components, such as the homeowners' replacement cost index and the other owned accommodation expenses index. More information on the CPI basket weights can be found in the following paper: An Analysis of the 2023 Consumer Price Index Basket Update, Based on 2022 Expenditures. Detailed weights for shelter sub-indexes can be found in Table 18-10-0007-01.

Rented accommodation

The largest weighted component in the CPI's measure of rented accommodation is the rent index, which has a 2022 basket weight of 6.79% of the entire CPI basket.

1. Some goods and services are on an intermittent basis (quarterly, semi-annual, etc).

Rent data are collected using a supplementary questionnaire included in the Labour Force Survey (LFS). Each month, the LFS contacts roughly 56,000 households to gather information on the Canadian workforce. Households in sample are surveyed for a period of 6 months and one-sixth of the sample is replaced every month. The dwellings are followed (not the households), so the tenants might change during the survey period. Approximately one-quarter of the selected households (approximately 12,500 units) rent their dwelling and can therefore be considered for the calculation of the CPI rent index. Subsidized dwellings, retirement homes and units used for business purposes are excluded from the rent sample. After taking into consideration all exclusions and non-responses, approximately 8,000 units can be used in the CPI rent index calculations each month.

Starting with the January 2019 CPI, the Canadian rent index is calculated using a characteristics approach hedonic methodology. This is a type of statistical modelling that decomposes the variables being measured, in this case the rental price, into its contributing characteristics. The hedonic model is a log-linear regression in which the explanatory variables include observed dwelling characteristics such as services included, age of dwelling, number of bedrooms, dwelling type and locational characteristics captured by postal codes.

The regression specification is as follows:

$$y^* = \beta_0 + \beta_1 services + \beta_2 age + \beta_3 bedrooms + \beta_4 dwelling + \beta_5 FSA + \in$$

where:

y^* is the log of observed rent,

$services$ represents whether the rent cost includes furniture, a washing machine, a refrigerator, cable or heat, age represents the age of the building,

$bedrooms$ represents the number of bedrooms,

$dwelling$ represents the type of the building, and

FSA (forward sortation area) is a vector of dummies defined from the first three digits of the postal codes.

The intercept (β_0) represents the baseline observation that all others are compared to, which is a studio in a high-rise apartment that is over 40 years old with no included services, in FSA C1A, which is the most sampled FSA in the LFS data.

More information on the hedonic model and aggregation methodology can be found in the paper on the New approach for estimating the rent component of the Consumer Price Index.

The CPI rent index takes into account both new and existing rental leases, as it is designed to measure changes in rental costs incurred by all renting Canadians. This means that the CPI rent component includes rent paid by new tenants who take over a unit, existing tenants who renew their lease and existing tenants that are in the middle of their lease. In the case of a new tenancy arrangement, the current market price is reflected. When a tenant renews an existing lease, they might be living in a rent-controlled unit. When a tenant is in the middle of the lease, there is usually no change from one month to the next. As a result, the rent index reflects what Canadians actually report paying.

Price changes in the rent component of the CPI are often compared with changes in average rent prices from other data sources, which may show different results. These other rent price statistics may be different because of differences in methodologies used. For example, they do not take into account quality changes in the stock of rental units, often resulting from renovations or new units having entered the market, leading to a difference in price. Moreover, some comparison data correspond to advertised rental costs for vacant units. Research shows that large rental price increases occur when a new tenant takes over a unit. Unlike new tenants that typically face market prices, tenants renewing a lease are often protected by government regulations restricting the extent of rent increases. As a result, rental cost indicators based on advertised prices for vacant units may overestimate average rental costs faced by all renters.

Owned accommodation

This section will discuss approaches to measuring owned accommodation, as well as the approach used by the Canadian CPI.

Approaches to measuring owned accommodation

Determining what "owned accommodation" measures and how it is measured is one of the most complex and challenging issues faced by national statistical agencies when developing consumer price indices.

There is no clear consensus regarding the best methodology for measuring price change for owned accommodation. However, there are a number of internationally recognized approaches:[2] payment, net acquisition, rental equivalence, user cost, and simply excluding owned accommodation from the CPI. As to which approach should be used, the suitability of an approach depends on the main purpose of a country's CPI (indexation, deflation of expenditures or incomes, monitoring monetary policies), as well as data availability and the characteristics of the housing market. Depending on these factors, statistical agencies adopt a version of one of these approaches to measure price change in owned accommodation.

The payment approach is based on the assumption that owned accommodation services correspond exactly to the actual payments made by homeowners such as mortgage interest payments and operating expenses like maintenance and repairs and homeowners' insurance. An advantage of this approach is that it reflects actual transaction costs, and not imputed costs. Some economists argue that the payment approach is not fully consistent with cost-of-living indexing since it ignores replacement cost. The payment approach is considered to be appropriate for a CPI that is primarily used for indexing monetary incomes. Currently, the Republic of Ireland uses this approach.

The net acquisition approach treats owner-occupied dwellings like all other durable goods in the CPI. It includes the consumable part (the structure) of the house and excludes the asset part (the land) from the CPI. In this approach, dwelling purchase costs are only attributed to the acquisition period, even though the useful life of the dwelling spans well beyond this period. As a result, net dwelling purchases in the reference year would be used as the expenditure weight for owned accommodation. Since the net acquisition approach does not take into account the stream of services generated by owned accommodation, or the ongoing costs of owning a home, across time, it is less favoured for a CPI that is used primarily for indexation. Currently, Australia and Finland use this approach.

The rental equivalence approach estimates the cost of services derived from an owner-occupied dwelling to be the same as the cost of services from a similar dwelling on the rental market. Since this cost does not correspond to any financial transaction, it must be imputed using the rent paid by tenants for similar accommodations. It is assumed that services generated by owned dwellings and rented dwellings are the same. In this case, the asset component to owning a home is not included. This approach may not be suitable where the rental market is small or not well established, the type of housing available for rent differs from that owned by households (e.g., condominiums versus single-family homes), or the rental market is affected by rent controls. Given that this approach does not directly reflect changes in house prices on the CPI, it has limited usefulness for monitoring monetary policy. However, it is beneficial for a CPI that is primarily used for indexation. Currently, United States, Mexico, United Kingdom, Germany, Japan and South Africa use this approach.

The user cost approach estimates the cost of owned accommodation services as the costs of owning and occupying a dwelling. It includes interest costs (mortgage interest and/or opportunity cost associated with funds that are attached to the dwelling that could have otherwise earned interest), replacement costs and other operating costs such as maintenance and repairs, property taxes and homeowners' insurance premiums. The user cost approach also includes the expected capital gain, which is simply the expected change in the price of the dwelling over the observation period. This anticipated capital gain is challenging to measure and can create volatility in the index and is the reason this approach is not widely used. Currently, Sweden and Iceland use a variation of this approach.

2. The four approaches that have gained recognition are highlighted in paragraphs 11.87-11.145, p. 246-254 of the International Monetary Fund's Update of the Consumer Price Index Manual.

Owned accommodation in the Canadian CPI

Given all the options and data sources available and considering the structure and composition of the housing market in Canada, the owned accommodation index in the official Canadian CPI is based on a variant of the user cost approach, measuring changes in the cost of using a fixed stock of dwellings. The CPI does not include the purchase of property because it is not considered a consumer good. Instead, an owned dwelling is considered a capital good, which is an asset. Although the purchase price of a house is not directly included, changes in the housing market are reflected through the majority of owned accommodation components. Furthermore, the capital gain and the opportunity cost associated with capital invested in the dwelling are excluded, since they are considered investments rather than consumer goods. This approach is most suitable for the Canadian CPI, due to data availability and the combined uses of the index, such as indexation and contract escalation as well as a tool for setting and monitoring economic policy.

Nearly all elements of the owned accommodation index in the official Canadian CPI represent monetary payments and would therefore be covered by the payment approach. These include mortgage interest costs, property taxes, homeowners' insurance premiums, maintenance and repairs, and other owned accommodation expenses. The only exception is that the Canadian CPI includes a measure of homeowners' replacement cost, which represents essential expenditures to replace the loss of value due to normal depreciation of the dwelling.

The owned accommodation index of the Canadian CPI covers six essential components:

1. Mortgage interest cost
2. Homeowners' replacement cost
3. Property taxes and other special charges
4. Homeowners' home and mortgage insurance
5. Homeowners' maintenance and repairs
6. Other owned accommodation expenses

Mortgage interest cost

The mortgage interest cost index estimates the impact of price changes on the amount of mortgage interest owed by the target population on their mortgage balance. It is the product of two components: a component estimating the impact of changing house prices and another measuring the impact of changes in interest rates. When house prices increase, the amount of the loan required to finance the purchase of a dwelling increases, which results in a corresponding increase in the interest cost, provided that the interest rate is constant. On the other hand, an increase in mortgage interest rates, with the mortgage balance remaining constant, also results in an increase in the interest amount owed.

Consequently, the monthly mortgage interest cost index, $M_{t/t-1}$, is defined as a product of two monthly indices:

$$M_{t/t-1} = H_{t/t-1} \times I_{t/t-1}$$

where:

$H_{t/t-1}$ is an index that estimates the effect of changes in dwelling prices between t and $t-1$ on the amount of principal outstanding, assuming a fixed stock of mortgaged dwellings and constant conditions of their financing, and

$I_{t/t-1}$ is an index that estimates the effect of changes in interest rates between t and $t-1$ on the amount of mortgage interest owed, assuming a fixed amount of principal outstanding.

Since the total value of houses purchased during a given period is always a small proportion of the total stock of dwellings with mortgages, the total amount of mortgage interest owed each month continues to reflect the impact of past changes in house prices for a very long period. The house prices that enter into the estimation of the mortgage interest cost index each month represent the weighted average house price of the previous 25 years. The weights reflect the distribution of mortgage balances by mortgage vintage, such that older mortgages have a relatively lower weight. This is because newer mortgages generally have a higher principal owing than older mortgages. Past mortgage interest rates also continue to be reflected in the current month index, because new interest rates only affect the index through mortgages newly initiated or renegotiated. These are generally a rather small proportion of the stock of existing mortgages. The following sections examine these two components of the mortgage interest cost model in greater detail.

The House sub-index

The House sub-index ($H_{t/t-1}$) compares weighted average housing prices over 300 months between the current and previous period, making the assumption that a standard mortgage is amortized over 25 years (300 months) at a fixed rate.

As of the release of the February 2021 CPI, prices for both new and resale housing are incorporated into the model for the previous 25 years. Prior to the February 2021 CPI, the model used only the New Housing Price Index (NHPI) as a measure of the change in residential housing prices. The NHPI measures the change over time in builders' selling prices of newly built houses (single/semi-detached and row) in 27 census metropolitan areas (CMAs).

With the March 2022 CPI release, the Canadian Real Estate Association (CREA) MLS Home Price Index (HPI) replaced Statistics Canada's Resale Residential Property Price Index (RRPPI) as the source for resale data. Resale housing prices are now incorporated into the mortgage interest cost model, along with the NHPI, for six CMAs: Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Calgary, Vancouver and Victoria. For the remaining 21 CMAs, the NHPI is the indicator used for housing prices. Research is under way to evaluate adding resale housing prices for additional cities.

For the CMAs that include resale data, monthly NHPI and Resale House Price Index (RHPI) data are combined using a weighted average prior to entering the House sub-index calculation. In general, the RHPI is allocated a weight of approximately three-fourths, with the remaining one-fourth assigned to the NHPI. The weights represent the value share of new and resale properties and are updated annually.

To construct the 300-month history required by the mortgage interest cost model, published data from the CREA's MLS HPI are supplemented by data from the Teranet-National Bank House Price Index.

The sub-index $H_{t/t-1}$ can therefore be written as follows:

$$H_{t/t-1} = \frac{\sum_{g=1}^{300}(\alpha NHPI_{t+1-g}(1-\beta\omega_{RHPI}) + \beta RHPI_{t+1-g}(1-\alpha\omega_{NHPI}))(\gamma_g \times \varphi_g)}{\sum_{g=1}^{300}(\alpha NHPI_{t-g}(1-\beta\omega_{RHPI}) + \beta RHPI_{t-g}(1-\alpha\omega_{NHPI}))(\gamma_g \times \varphi_g)}$$

where:

α and β represent dummy variables indicating whether data is available for $NHPI$ and $RHPI$ respectively for a given city or geographical region,

$NHPI_{t+1-g}$ and $NHPI_{t-g}$ represent the New Housing Price Index (NHPI) respectively for month $t+1-g$ and month $t-g$, $RHPI_{t+1-g}$ and $RHPI_{t-g}$ represent the Canadian Real Estate Association (CREA) MLS Home Price Index (HPI) or Teranet-National Bank House Price Index for month $t+1-g$ and month $t-g$, ω_{NHPI} and ω_{RHPI} represent the annual weights associated with the value share of new and resale properties respectively, where $\omega_{NHPI} + \omega_{RHPI} = 1$, γ_g represents the proportion of principal that remains to be paid on a mortgage initiated g months ago. This proportion is based on a standard mortgage amortized over 300 months at a fixed interest rate, and φ_g is the proportion of households that hold a mortgage initiated g months ago. This information is taken from the SHS and would be the only data coming from that survey. It is approximated as of the date on which the household moved into the dwelling.

The Interest sub-index

The Interest sub-index ($I_{t/t-1}$) employs A4 data collected monthly by the Bank of Canada to measure changes in interest rates. This dataset provides the amounts of new mortgage loans as well as the corresponding interest rates for the country's nine largest banks. In addition to allowing for monthly updates of mortgage loans by term, this information covers a broad spectrum of interest rates, including variable rates and a variety of term fixed rates.

Estimation for index $I_{t/t-1}$ relies on a standardized function of the amounts of residential mortgage interests charged by banks, A_t, defined as follows:

$$A_t = \sum_{j=1}^{9}\left[\left(B_j - L_{j,t}\right)\times r_{j,t-1}^{eff}\right] + \sum_{j=1}^{9}\left(L_{j,t}\times r_{j,t}\right)$$

where:

B_j is the balance of mortgage loans for bank j. The amount B_j is obtained from the Bank of Canada's A4 database. The balance of mortgage loans B_j remains fixed throughout the period of the CPI basket to ensure that changes in A_t are solely the result of changes in interest rates and in the distribution of mortgage loans by term, $L_{j,t}$ represents the amount of new loans issued by bank j in month t. It is obtained from the Bank of Canada's A4 database,

$r_{j,t-1}^{eff}$ is the effective interest rate in the previous month $(t-1)$, for bank j. It is calculated by establishing the ratio between the interest amount for the previous month and the loan balance, and

$r_{j,t}$ indicates the interest rate negotiated by bank j for its new mortgage loans. This information is also obtained from the Bank of Canada's A4 data.

Thus, the index $I_{t/t-1}$, which measures the impact of changes in mortgage interest rates on interest amounts between t and $t-1$, can be calculated as follows:

$$I_{t/t-1} = \frac{A_t}{A_{t-1}}$$

Homeowners' replacement cost

Since the owned accommodation index in the Canadian CPI seeks specifically to reflect the costs of using owned accommodation, the measure includes a "replacement cost" (or depreciation) component.

The replacement cost index measures the portion of the housing stock that is consumed, during a given period, that owners did not replace through maintenance and repairs. Homeowners' replacement cost differs from other owned accommodation components in the CPI because it is not an out-of-pocket expense.

Since depreciation is not an actual payment, but rather a conceptual expense, it must be derived. It corresponds to the hypothetical amount required to replace the portion of the stock of owned accommodation used each year by the target population. The basket weight is derived from data extracted from the SHS, in which respondents are asked how much they would expect to receive for their house if they were to sell it. It is also derived from external measures of housing prices up to the current basket reference year, which are captured by the CREA, as well as the change in owner occupied dwelling units collected from the Census and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation's Starts and Completions Survey. This amount is multiplied by a ''house/property'' ratio to obtain an estimate of the value of the house, excluding the land, to which a depreciation rate of 1.5% is applied.

For monthly price movements associated with replacement cost, a version of the NHPI which excludes price changes associated with the land (the 'house only' index) is used.

Property taxes and other special charges

The property tax index measures changes through time in the amount of taxes levied on a constant sample of owner-occupied dwellings in selected municipalities. This sample of property taxes paid, obtained from municipal offices, is used to obtain an estimate of the average property taxes by city. These average values, which are a function of municipal and provincial tax rates and residential property values, are entered as prices in the current and previous periods' unit value index calculation. Changes in property taxes and related special charges are reflected once a year, in the October reference month of the CPI.

Homeowners' home and mortgage insurance

The homeowners' home and mortgage insurance price index calculates pure price changes in the cost of insuring a home and its contents against loss, using prices for a broad range of consumer profiles extracted from an alternative data source. Prices for these policies are determined based on the value of the structure being insured and the factors that affect the risk of a loss, such as the location of the home.

Homeowners' maintenance and repairs

The homeowners' maintenance and repairs index measures price changes for material and labour costs in relation to the home. This includes materials such as paint, flooring, carpet, stain, drywall compound, furnace filters, shingles, driveway sealant, caulking and lumber, as well as the labour costs associated with these materials like roofing and painting labour. Data sources for these sub- indexes include price data collected from retailers and the Construction Union Wage Rate Index.

Other owned accommodation expenses

Commissions on the sale of real estate are included in the other owned accommodation expenses price index. Data sources for the sub-indexes in this category include the NHPI and CREA's MLS HPI.

The owned accommodation index and other measures of residential housing prices

The owned accommodation index is often the subject of discussion, as to whether it properly reflects the impact of changes in dwelling prices on the overall inflation level. More specifically, it is compared to data on the selling prices of homes, and it is sometimes argued that housing inflation is under-estimated in the CPI.

However, the owned accommodation component of the official Canadian CPI was not specifically designed to be an indicator of housing price inflation nor housing affordability. Alternative approaches for measuring housing inflation and affordability are available in a number of Statistics Canada products, including the housing statistics portal, indicators of household wealth and affordability, and distributions of household economic accounts.

The treatment of owned accommodation in the Canadian CPI serves well in quantifying the rise in price of owning and occupying a dwelling. In particular, it is meant to measure the impact of price changes on a selection of costs specific to homeowners to determine changes in the cost of using a stock of dwellings.

While the cost of purchasing a home is not directly included in the CPI, several components of the ongoing consumer costs of home ownership are influenced by prices in the housing market, so they are included indirectly. The following are a few examples of how changes in housing prices are reflected in the owned accommodation index:

- An increase in the price of newly built homes across the country is reflected in the homeowners' replacement cost index, as the amount of money that would be required to maintain the market value of a home on an existing piece of land would also increase.
- A rise in housing prices contributes to higher mortgage interest costs when consumers initiate a mortgage.

- An increase in home prices impacts the commissions on the sale of real estate, which are included in the other owned accommodation expenses index.
- Higher home prices increase property values, which factor into the calculation of the property taxes and other special charges index and the homeowners' home and mortgage insurance index.

There are a number of other measures available, from both Statistics Canada and external sources, that measure the cost or price of housing. A description and intended use of these indicators are available in Table 2 below.

Table 2
Indexes measuring residential housing prices

Index name	Source	Frequency and availability	Description	Intended use
Consumer Price Index: owned accommodation index	Statistics Canada, Table 18-10-0004-01	Monthly, national data starting January 1949, sub-national and city level data starting January 1971	The CPI is an indicator of the change in consumer prices. It measures price change by comparing through time the cost of a fixed basket of consumer goods and services. The owned accommodation index is based on a variant of the user cost approach to measure the price change arising from the ongoing costs of homeownership.	To provide insight into overall economic conditions and is used for indexation and contract escalation. The owned accommodation index in the CPI is used to measure the impact of price changes on a selection of costs specific to homeowners in order to provide an indicator of price-induced changes in the costs of owning and occupying a dwelling.
New Housing Price Index (NHPI)	Statistics Canada, Table: 10-10-0205-01	Monthly, starting January 1981 for 27 CMAs	This survey measures changes over time in the contractors' selling prices of new residential houses, where detailed specifications pertaining to each house remain the same between two consecutive months. It includes the following dwelling types: new single homes, semi-detached homes and townhomes. The survey also collects contractors' estimates of the current value (evaluated at market price) of the land. These estimates are independently indexed to provide the published series for land. The current value of the structure is also independently indexed and is presented as the house series.	To monitor price trends in the construction sector for new homes.
Building Construction Price Index (BCPI)	Statistics Canada, Table 18-10-0135-01	Quarterly, starting 2017 Q1 for 11 CMAs	This survey measures change over time in contractors' prices to construct residential structures including a single detached house, a townhouse, a high rise apartment building and a low rise apartment building. The contractor's price reflects the value of all materials, labour, equipment, overhead and profit to construct a new building. It excludes value added taxes and any costs for land, land assembly, building design, land development and real estate fees.	To evaluate the impact of price changes on capital expenditures related to housing construction.

Table 2
Indexes measuring residential housing prices

Index name	Source	Frequency and availability	Description	Intended use
Canadian Real Estate Association's (CREA) MLS Home Price Index (HPI)	External to Statistics Canada	Monthly, available starting January 2005 for 61 areas	The index is produced using transactional data for home sales, available through MLS Systems at participating Canadian Real Estate Boards and Associations. The index is calculated using a hybrid modeling approach that merges the Repeat-sales and hedonic price approaches.	To measure price trends in local real estate markets, primarily for resale home sales.
Teranet–National Bank House Price Index	External to Statistics Canada	Monthly, earliest series starts June 1990, 11 cities	The index is calculated by applying a Repeat-sales approach to property records from public land registries. Only homes that have been sold twice can be incorporated into the model.	To measure price trends in local real estate markets for resale home sales.

Sources: Statistics Canada, Consumer Price Index, New Housing Price Index and Building Construction Price Index.
Canadian Real Estate Association MLS Home Price Index.
Teranet-National Bank House Price Index.

Value of the Judicial Annuity

Prepared for the Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission

December 20, 2024

Table of Contents

Pierre Bienvenu, AD. E.
Senior Counsel
IMK s.e.n.c.r.l/LLP
3500 Boul de Maisonneuve Ouest
Montreal QC H3Z 3C1

December 20, 2024

Value of the Judicial Annuity

Dear M^{e} Bienvenu,

We have been engaged by IMK LLP (“IMK”) in your capacity as counsel to the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association and the Canadian Judicial Council (the “Judiciary”) in connection with the inquiry of the seventh Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission (the “Commission”), which commenced on October 11, 2024.

The analysis contained in this report focuses on estimating the value of the annuity of federally appointed judges. We have estimated the value of the judicial annuity to be 28% of a judges’ annual salary. Information about our methodology and the underlying assumptions used to derive the estimate are summarized in this report.

We are available to answer any questions you may have on the information contained in our report.

Yours sincerely

Ernst & Young LLP

Carol Wong
Partner*

* Carol Wong is a limited partner of Ernst & Young LP, which provides services to Ernst & Young LLP

Introduction

EY has been engaged by IMK to assist in their representation of the Judiciary during the inquiry of the Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission. This report has been prepared for IMK. The purpose of this report is to perform an analysis and present results related to the value of the judicial annuity.

We understand that as an expert, we are to provide an opinion that is independent, objective and related to matters within our area of expertise. We are Fellows of the Canadian Institute of Actuaries and of the Society of Actuaries and have experience in pension actuarial calculations.

- Carol Wong has been a Fellow of the Canadian Institute of Actuaries since 2012, with over 17 years of pension industry experience. She is an actuary practicing primarily in the area of pension plans. Carol has served as the lead actuary for various pension plans, providing consulting services on the ongoing maintenance and operations of pension plans. This includes advising plan sponsors in plan governance, regulatory compliance, administration and funding of pension plans. Since 2012, Carol has been involved in the valuation of pension plans as a signing actuary and led her team in overseeing and completing actuarial valuations and financial projections for pension plans.
- Sze-King Fong has over 9 years of relevant pension industry experience and has been a Fellow of the Canadian Institute of Actuaries since 2021. She has assisted in the preparation and review of pension valuations for regulatory and funding purposes, as well as for financial reporting purposes. She provided consulting services on pension plan administration and actuarial valuation and estimation.

The intended users of this report are IMK, the Commission, and the various parties appearing before the Commission. The report should not be provided to any party who is not an intended user. The results and analysis within this report should not be relied upon by any party other than an intended user.

Pursuant to the Judges Act, the Commission is to inquire into the adequacy of judicial compensation. For the purposes of this inquiry, IMK has requested that we estimate the value of the judicial annuity of federally appointed judges. We have determined this value based on our understanding of the judicial annuity provisions, as summarized in Appendix A. We have also established a set of our "best-estimate" assumptions used to determine the value of the judicial annuity, which are summarized in Appendix B.

To prepare this report, IMK provided us with information and data from various sources, as shown in Appendix C. Overall, the data provided is sufficient and reliable for the purposes of this report.

Judicial Annuity

Federally appointed judges are entitled to an annuity at retirement equal to two-thirds of their final year salary. The benefits may be reduced based on their age and service (time held in office) at the time of their retirement. The judicial annuity and contributions are established under the Judges Act. Key provisions of the judicial annuity benefit are summarized in Appendix A.

Judges are required to contribute to the judicial annuity during their time in office. A judge's contribution rate is 7% of salary if not eligible for an unreduced annuity, but reduces to 1% of salary after they become eligible for full benefit.

We understand that, when comparing the total compensation of federally appointed judges with the total compensation of lawyers in private practice, prior Commissions have deemed it appropriate to consider the value of the judicial annuity. You have therefore asked us to estimate the value of the judicial annuity as a proportion of judges' salaries for the period from 2019 to 2023.

Annuity Value for Prior Commissions

In the context of the last Commission (sixth Commission), the parties ultimately agreed to value the judicial annuity at 34.1% of the judicial salary, in order to compare total judicial compensation with the compensation of lawyers in the private sector.

For that Commission, the Government's expert, Mr. Gorham, originally opined that the judicial annuity should be valued at 37.84%. In arriving at this value, he included the value of the disability benefit, an approach that had never been adopted by prior Commissions and which was objected to by the Judiciary. The expert for the Judiciary, Mr. Newell, stated that the value of the judicial annuity, without including the disability benefit, was 34.1 % of the judicial salary, a value that was ultimately retained for the purposes of the sixth Commission. The set of assumptions used by Mr. Newell to determine the 34.1% figure are summarized in Appendix B.

We further observed that it is usual for experts for different Commissions to arrive at different conclusions regarding the value of the judicial annuity. For instance, in the context of the fifth Commission, Mr. Newell valued the judicial annuity at 30.6%, while the Government's expert valued it at 32.0%.

As detailed below, changes in assumptions, which stem from different prevailing economic conditions for our reference period, justify a lower valuation of the judicial pension (28%) than the one accepted for the purposes of the last Commission.

Assumptions and Methodology

In general, we have followed a similar methodology as the one adopted by the experts in the prior Commission (without the disability benefit), where we estimated, over a range of ages of judicial appointment, a benefit value of the judicial annuity over a judge's career. The benefit values of the judicial annuity are then weighted based on historical data of the ages of judicial appointment to derive the benefit value of the judicial annuity.

For the purposes of the analysis performed in this report, there is no prescribed method for developing actuarial assumptions. There may be more than one set of reasonable actuarial assumptions for the purposes of determining an actuarial value of the judicial annuity. In our opinion, the assumption-setting approach discussed in Mr. Newell's Report is reasonable and we have followed a similar approach. For the current Commission, we have determined a set of "best-estimates" based on current conditions and updated information available, as detailed in Appendix B. An actuary's best-estimate assumption refers to a realistic and unbiased prediction of future events or outcomes based on available data and professional judgment.

Where it is reasonable to do so, it is appropriate to refer to the set of assumptions used in the Office of the Chief Actuary's (the "OCA") Reports, given the OCA's expertise and access to data to assess appropriate assumptions for the plan members. The OCA is an independent actuarial centre of excellence of the Government of Canada that provides regular actuarial reports and studies on the various pension plans sponsored by the Government of Canada, including the Pension Plan for Federally Appointed Judges (i.e. the judicial annuity). As of the last Commission, the most recent actuarial valuation report conducted by the OCA was as at March 31, 2019 (the "2019 OCA Report"). In line with industry standards of performing actuarial valuations for pension plans at least triennially, the OCA prepared an actuarial valuation as at March 31, 2022 (the "2022 OCA Report").

At the time of the last Commission, Mr. Newell referenced the 2019 OCA Report when setting certain best-estimate assumptions. Given the OCA's access to relevant data and actuarial expertise, it is reasonable to reference the OCA Report in establishing certain best estimate demographic assumptions. Mr. Newell deviated from the 2019 OCA Report where he felt there was a reasonable best-estimate assumption.

Since the 2019 OCA Report, the OCA updated several actuarial assumptions in their valuation as summarized in the 2022 OCA Report. Our estimate of the value of judicial annuity utilizes certain assumptions from the 2022 OCA Report in addition to EY's best estimate assumptions. Highlighted below are assumptions that changed since the prior Commission:

	EY best estimate assumptions for the current Commission	Mr. Newell's best estimate assumptions for the prior Commission
Economic assumptions:
Interest rate	6.0%	5.0%
Demographic assumptions:
Gender	55% male, 45% female (based on the headcount data of female and male judges provided in the 2022 OCA Actuarial Report)	60% male, 40% female (source unknown)
Retirement	As per the 2022 OCA Actuarial Report	As per the 2019 OCA Actuarial Report
Surviving spouse	As per the 2022 OCA Actuarial Report, as determined at the judge's retirement	Judges assumed to be 85% married at retirement (source unknown)

Interest rate (discount rate)

The terms "interest rate" and "discount rate" are often used interchangeably when discussing the time value of money because they both relate to the concept of valuing money at different points in time.

The interest rate used to account for the time value of money represents the rate of return over the investment's lifetime. Investors can choose from various portfolios based on their risk tolerance. Consider two judges who will receive the same judicial annuity upon retirement. Assuming all other factors are equal, the amount of money needed to fund these annuities would be the same at retirement. However, the time available for the funds to be set aside and earn interest varies depending on the judge's age at appointment. A judge appointed at a younger age has a longer period for the investments to grow compared to a judge appointed at an older age. Therefore, the funds for the younger judge are discounted over a longer period.

It is reasonable to assume that a judge, considering the age at which individuals are appointed, should behave as a relatively prudent investor, and therefore would invest in a balanced portfolio of fixed income and equities. Since the last Commission, return expectations have increased.

A discount rate of 5.0% was used at the last Commission. This represented a reasonable expected rate of return, amongst a range of reasonable assumptions, for a balanced portfolio as of 2019. To develop a reasonable assumption range for the current Commission, we have analyzed the change in bond yields since the last Commission as a proxy for a change in expected return on fixed income assets. In addition, we have estimated the expected return on equities at the current Commission by loading a reasonable equity risk premium onto a risk-free rate.

Fixed income portion of a balanced portfolio
Below is a summary of various bond yield rates as at January 1, 2020 and January 1, 2024:

	January 1, 2020	January 1, 2024	Change
Government of Canada long-term bonds[1]	1.45%	3.27%	1.82%
Government of Canada mid-term bonds[2]	1.32%	3.32%	2.00%
Canadian investment grade bonds[3]	2.77%	4.83%	2.06%

Since the last Commission, bond yields have increased by approximately 2%. With these higher yields, it is reasonable to expect that the return on the fixed income portion of a balanced portfolio would also increase.

Equity portion of a balanced portfolio
To develop a reasonable increase in the expected return on the equity portion of a balanced portfolio, we have referenced a range of equity risk premium of 2.5% to 5%[4] that is generally accepted in the industry. Using a risk-free rate represented by yield on long-term Canadian government bonds as of January 1, 2024, we estimate that the expected return on the equity portion of a balanced portfolio is 5.8% - 8.3%.

Expected return of a balanced portfolio
Given the increase in the risk-free rate and fixed income returns since January 1, 2020, it would be reasonable to posit an increase of up to 2.0% from the discount rate of 5.0% at the last Commission.

Based on market conditions as of January 1, 2024, the range of expected returns of a balanced portfolio is shown below:

	Allocation	Expected return
Equity returns	60%	5.8% - 8.3%
Bond returns	40%	4.8%
Balanced portfolio		5.4% - 6.9%

The updated discount rate of 6.0% used in our report is a reasonable long-term view of expected returns of a balanced portfolio, reflecting the market conditions as of January 1, 2024.

[1] Government of Canada benchmark bond yields – long term (V122544)
[2] Government of Canada benchmark bond yields – 7 year (V122542)
[3] S&P Canada Investment Grade Corporate Bond Index
[4] Revisiting the Equity Risk Premium by the CFA Institute Research Foundation, 2023

In our field of work, which involves reviewing actuarial assumptions used in valuations of pension liabilities and costs, we often evaluate the expected return on assets assumptions set by Canadian actuaries within the pension context. For plans invested in a balanced portfolio, a 6.0% return on assets assumption falls within the range of assumptions established by pension actuaries as of January 1, 2024. Additionally, we have compared this rate using our internally developed analyses to establish a reasonable range of expected future return on assets assumptions. These analyses are also utilized in our assessments of clients' assumptions used to report pension plan obligations on their financial statements.

In our opinion, a 6.0% discount rate is a reasonable assumption for the purposes of determining the present value of the future judicial annuity payments. The same discount rate is also applied to determine the present value of future contributions and judicial salaries. This approach in setting the assumption is reasonable and in line with the assumption-setting approach used at the last Commission.

Overall, the use of an updated discount rate resulted in an approximate 7% decrease in the benefit value of the judicial annuity since the last Commission.

Commentary on other assumption changes since last Commission

In our opinion, all assumptions selected for our estimates of the judicial annuity are reasonable long-term assumptions. These assumptions are detailed in Appendix B.

Retirement assumption

The OCA analyzed the experience during the inter-valuation period (i.e. 31 March 2019 to 31 March 2022) and assessed whether assumptions should be updated to reflect recent experience. It is common for actuaries to update assumptions based on recent membership experience or a refreshed outlook on expected member behaviour or business plans. The OCA updated assumptions, including the retirement assumption, based on a review of the plan's experience during the inter-valuation period. We have relied on this updated retirement assumption in our calculations.

Gender and Surviving spouse assumptions

- Gender: Our best-estimate assumption is based on the membership data of judges in office in the 2022 OCA Report. This updated assumption (55% male, 45% female) reflects the recent data which indicates that more female judges are being appointed.
- Spouse assumption: In the last Commission, the survivor benefit related to the judicial annuity was based on spousal assumptions at the time of the judge's retirement – this approach is in line with our interpretation of the judicial annuity provisions. As such, for the proportion of judges assumed to be married at retirement, we have referenced the OCA assumption based on the sample ages disclosed in the 2022 OCA Report.

In aggregate, the use of these updated demographic assumptions resulted in an approximate 1% increase in the benefit value of the judicial annuity since the last Commission.

In our opinion, the set of best-estimate assumptions outlined in Appendix B are appropriate for the purposes of estimating a value of the judicial annuity as a percentage of a judge's annual salary.

The Annual Value of the Judicial Annuity

Overall results
The benefit value of the judicial annuity, net of judges' contributions, is estimated to be 28% of salary each year from appointment to retirement.

Background
In the pension industry, the value of retirement benefits earned by members of a retirement plan in a given year is commonly expressed as a level average percent of members' salary each year. In other words, an actuarial methodology is used to estimate the amount that needs to be set aside each year to fund a stream of annuity payments at a future date. Consequently, in this exercise, our estimation of the annual value of the judicial annuity is represented as a percentage of judges' salary, rather than as a dollar value, to remove current salary level as a factor.

Beginning from a judge's appointment, funds (expressed as a percentage of judicial salary) are set aside and invested so that the future value of funds at retirement will be sufficient to fund the judge's annuity. The methodology described below considers the present values of a judge's future annuity payments, contributions, and salary to estimate the cost of funding a judge's annuity evenly over their entire working life. Since the annual value of the judicial annuity depends on a judge's age at appointment, our estimate reflects judges' age at judicial appointment, based on actual historical data from January 1, 1997 to March 31, 2024.

This approach is reasonable and consistent with the approach taken in the prior Commission.

Methodology
Similar to the approach taken in the prior Commission and as described in Mr. Newell's Report, we calculate the annual value of the judicial annuity as follows:

$$\text{Benefit Value}_{\text{Age x}} = [\text{PVFBen}_{\text{Age x}} - \text{PVFCont}_{\text{Age x}}]/\text{PVFSal}_{\text{Age x}}, \text{ where}$$

$\text{PVFBen}_{\text{Age x}}$ is the actuarial present value of the expected future Judicial Annuity benefit as of the date of judicial appointment, for a judge appointed at age x,

$\text{PVFCont}_{\text{Age x}}$ is the actuarial present value of the judge's expected future contributions into the judicial annuity as of the date of judicial appointment, for a judge appointed at age x, $\text{PVFSal}_{\text{Age x}}$ is the actuarial present value of the judge's expected future salary as of the date of judicial appointment, for a judge appointed at age x.

The judicial annuity's benefit value at each appointment age is calculated as the total actuarial present value of the benefits provided by the judicial annuity, reduced by the total actuarial present value of the contributions required to be made by a judge, then dividing the resulting value by the actuarial present value of the judge's salary during their judicial appointment.

For the purposes of this calculation, we have used a calculation date of January 1, 2024. That is, our calculation of the benefit value of the judicial annuity, estimated to be 28% of salary, is determined with information available and market conditions at January 1, 2024.

1. $\text{PVFBen}_{\text{Age x}}$
   It should be noted that disability benefits have been excluded from the calculation, which is in line with the approach taken by prior Commissions.

   A population of 30 representative judges was established, with age of appointment ranging from 40 to 69. For each representative judge, an expected future benefit is derived from a projection of the annuity benefits accrued as a straight-line average year-over-year, as determined from the age of appointment until their expected retirement. For judges appointed at younger ages (for example, age 40), their future benefit would be distributed over a longer period of time, resulting in a lower annual value than a judge appointed at a later age.

2. PVFCont$_{Age\ x}$
   This is calculated using a similar approach as the one used to calculate the PVFBen$_{Age\ x}$. The present value of contributions is calculated for each representative judge, with age of appointment ranging from 40 to 69, over the course of the judge's judicial appointment. A judge's contribution rate is 7% of salary if not eligible for an unreduced annuity, but reduces to 1% of salary after they become eligible for full benefit.

3. PVFSal$_{Age\ x}$
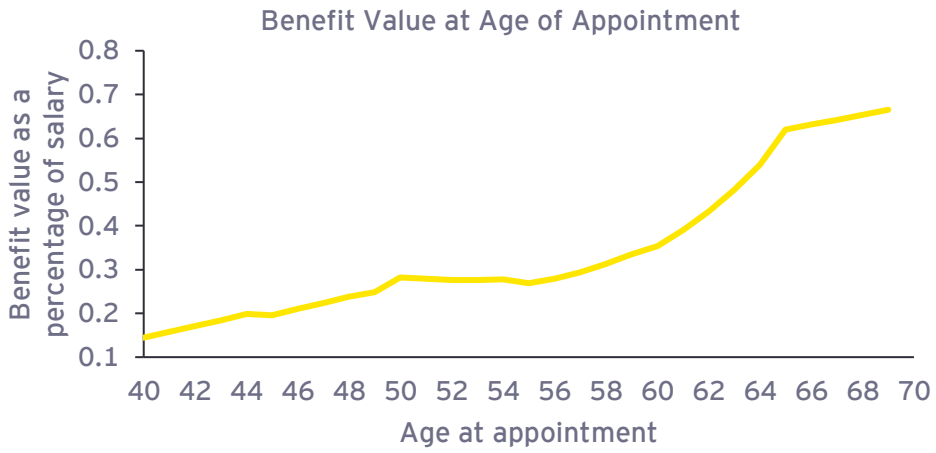
   The present value of salary is calculated for each representative judge based on the salary increase assumption in Appendix B, with age of appointment ranging from 40 to 69, over the course of the judge's judicial appointment.

The benefit value at each age of judicial appointment is determined based on the formula above. Finally, to ensure that the benefit value is reflective of the actual ages at appointment, we applied weights to the benefit value at each age of appointment (ages 40 to 69) based on historical data, as further explained below. See Table A for weightings.

Assumptions
As noted in the prior section, the benefit value for each age of judicial appointment is based on a set of actuarial assumptions, as summarized in Appendix B. These assumptions represent our best-estimate assumptions based on current market conditions and information available. The key assumption, discount rate, is set with reference to an expected rate of return of a typical balanced portfolio of investments.

Benefit Value$_{Age\ x}$
The chart below illustrates the Benefit Value$_{Age\ x}$ at each age of appointment from age 40 to 69.



Referencing historical ages of judicial appointments
The actual value of a particular judge's annuity will vary individually based on each judge's demographics (e.g., age, date of retirement, spousal status, gender, etc.).

To provide a representative annual value of judicial annuity for the purposes of this report, we referenced historical appointments and applied weights based on these data points. Since the annual value of the judicial annuity is an average over a judge's career, the age of appointment is a critical component. By weighting the annual value of judicial annuity on the historical number of judges appointed at each age, we ensure the result reflects overall ages of judicial appointment.

Appointment age data from January 1, 1997 to March 31, 2024 was incorporated to have a sufficiently large sample size for the analysis. The prior Commission referenced appointment age data from January 1, 1997 to October 23, 2020. For this report, the appointment age data is based on: (1) the table provided in Appendix C of the Mr. Newell's Report for judicial appointment ages from January 1, 1997 to October 23, 2020, and (2) more recent data provided during the current inquiry for judicial appointment ages from October 24, 2020 to March 31, 2024.

The following table illustrates judicial appointments by age from January 1, 1997 to March 31, 2024. We applied weights to the benefit value at each age of judicial appointment (ages 40 to 69) based on this historical data.

Table A: Headcount at age of appointments from January 1, 1997 to March 31, 2024
Age at appointment	Number of appointments	Age at appointment	Number of appointments
40 and below	10	55	86
41	17	56	86
42	16	57	74
43	37	58	64
44	53	59	53
45	72	60	53
46	78	61	38
47	87	62	18
48	82	63	24
49	88	64	16
50	91	65	13
51	109	66	3
52	100	67	6
53	102	68	1
54	98	69	0
		Total	1,575

Results

Based on the methodology described above, assumptions outlined in Appendix B, and our understanding of the judicial annuity provisions as outlined in Appendix A, we have estimated the value of the judicial annuity to be 28% of a judges' annual salary.

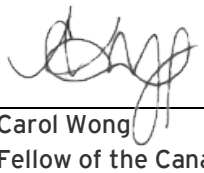
We understand that, when comparing the total compensation of federally appointed judges (including the value of judicial annuity) with the total compensation of lawyers in private practice, the current Commission will use a reference period that includes years 2019 to 2023. Our calculations, as of January 1, 2024, provide a point-in-time estimate. While results may vary with changing market conditions and updated data, this estimate is reasonable for the current Commission. Although different benefit values could theoretically be determined for each year from 2019 to 2024, doing so is impractical and would not significantly alter the conclusion. We believe the judicial annuity value is a reasonable estimate for the Commission's purposes.

December 20, 2024

Statement of Actuarial Opinion

In our opinion:

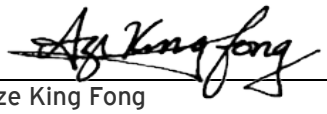
- The data provided is sufficient and reliable for the purposes of this report;
- The assumptions, in aggregate, are appropriate for the purposes of this report;
- The methods employed are appropriate for the purposes of this report; and
- The report has been prepared in accordance with accepted actuarial practice in Canada.



December 20, 2024

Carol Wong
Fellow of the Canadian Institute of Actuaries
Fellow of the Society of Actuaries

Date



December 20, 2024

Sze King Fong
Fellow of the Canadian Institute of Actuaries
Fellow of the Society of Actuaries

Date

Appendix A Summary of Judicial Annuity Benefits

Contributions	7% of salary if not eligible for an unreduced pension, and 1% of salary thereafter
Full benefit	Two-thirds of judge's final year salary
Full benefit eligibility	1. Age 75 with at least 10 years of service, 2. 80 points (sum of age and service) with at least 15 years of service, 3. For a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, at least 10 years of service, or 4. Permanent disability
Reduced benefit	1. Age 75 with less than 10 years of service: Pro rata of full benefit by years of service 2. At least age 55 with 10 or more years of service: a. Age 60 to 74: pro rata of full benefit by years of service based on the number of years to reach 80 points b. Prior to age 60: benefit is further reduced from (a) by 5% per year prior to age 60
Termination	Refund of judge's contributions with interest. Interest is based on the specified rate applied under the Income Tax Act on refunds of overpayments of tax
Death before retirement	Surviving spouse: a. A lump sum equal to one-sixth of salary, plus b. an annuity equal to one-third of the judge's final year salary If the judge has no surviving spouse, the lump sum is paid to the estate or succession of the judge. Eligible dependent child: receives an annuity equal to 20% of the surviving spouse annuity (subject to reduction if there are more than 4 eligible children in the same family), if there is no surviving spouse, the amount is doubled.
Death after retirement	Surviving spouse annuity equal to 50% of the amount payable to the judge will continue for the surviving spouse's lifetime
Refund of contributions	If both the judge and their spouse should die prior to receiving a total benefit of at least the judge's contributions with interest, the remaining difference is paid as a lump sum
Indexation	Adjusted based on 12-month average Consumer Price Index ("CPI") as of 30 September of the previous year, but cannot be negative (i.e., the annuity will not be reduced should CPI change be negative)

Appendix B Actuarial Assumptions

There are no prescribed assumptions that must be used to determine the value of the judicial annuity. Actuarial assumptions are set with reference to available data, industry practice, and guidance/standards from the Canadian Institute of Actuaries.

As the Pension Plan is unfunded (i.e., pay-as-you-go plan), there are no legislative requirements to guide the development of the discount rate assumption. As noted in prior sections, EY's best estimate discount rate has been set with reference to the expected return on assets.

Commentary on assumptions that deviate from the 2022 OCA Report

We note that a long-term discount rate of 4.0% is used in the OCA Actuarial Report, but it is selected to satisfy the requirements of the Public Sector Accounting Standards ("PSAS"), which are meant to determine a value of these benefits as a liability of the Government of Canada, to be disclosed in the Public Accounts (government's financial reporting). Under PSAS, the discount rate is set as the Government's expected cost of borrowing, which is based on Government bond yields – the Government can borrow monies by issuing bonds and the interest/yields on such bonds would constitute the Government's cost of borrowing. As the OCA's assumption setting approach is specific to the Government's financial reporting (accounting purposes) requirements, the assumption-setting basis used by the OCA to determine the discount rate would not be relevant to determining the value of the judicial annuity for the purposes of establishing fair compensation for the judges. Instead, it is more appropriate to set the discount rate by referencing the expected long term return on a balanced portfolio, in which a relatively prudent investor would invest. Further, this approach for setting the discount rate assumption is consistent with what was done for the prior Commission.

The salary increase and inflation rates are based on our long-term best estimate expectations. While they may differ from the 2022 OCA Report, they are within the reasonable range of actuarial assumptions used for this purpose. Further, these assumptions are consistent with those from the prior Commission.

Commentary on assumptions that are the same as the 2022 OCA Report

Demographic assumptions (e.g., gender, retirement, death, and spousal assumptions) used to determine the Judicial Annuity value are based on the assumptions used in the 2022 OCA Actuarial Report, except where indicated otherwise. Given the Office of the Chief Actuary's access to data and their expertise, these assumptions would be representative of the overall long-term demographic expectations of the judges.

Below is a summary of EY's best-estimate assumptions for the current Commission. For reference, we have also outlined the best-estimate assumptions from the 2019 Newell Report from the prior Commission.

	EY best estimate assumptions for the current Commission	Mr. Newell's best estimate assumptions for the prior Commission
Interest rate	6.0%	5.0%
Salary increase	2.5%	2.5%
Inflation rate/post-retirement indexation	2.0%	2.0%

	EY best estimate assumptions for the current Commission	Mr. Newell's best estimate assumptions for the prior Commission
Gender	55% male, 45% female based on the headcount data of female and male judges provided in the OCA Actuarial Report	60% male, 40% female
Retirement	Varies by age and service per the sample rates provided in the 2022 OCA Actuarial Report	Varies by age and service per the sample rates provided in the 2019 OCA Actuarial Report
Disability	Nil	Nil
Non-vested termination	Nil	Nil
Death	Canadian Pensioner Mortality Table (Combined) with CPM-B mortality improvement scale, adjusted by 74% for males and 92% for females for judges and unadjusted for surviving spouses. No pre-retirement death is assumed.	Canadian Pensioner Mortality Table (Combined) with CPM-B mortality improvement scale, adjusted by 74% for males and 92% for females for judges and unadjusted for surviving spouses. No pre-retirement death is assumed.
Surviving spouse	Varies by age and gender per the sample rates provided in the OCA Actuarial Report[5], as determined at the judge's retirement	Judges assumed to be 85% married at retirement; male spouses assumed to be 3 years older than female spouse

[5] The OCA Actuarial report references the age at member death for the surviving spouse assumptions. Based on our interpretation of the judicial annuity provisions, our understanding is that the eligible surviving spouse is determined at the date of retirement for the judge, rather than at their date of death.

Appendix C Documents Referenced

The following documents were provided to EY to support our analysis:

1. Excel file "2024-12-17-IMK Tables-CFJA 6b_Revised_QUAD Appointments without elevations (2020/04/01 to 2024/03/31) - Clean"

   This Excel file contains data on the number of judicial appointments by age from April 1, 2020, to March 31, 2024.

The following documents were referenced by EY to conduct the analysis:

1. Guide for Candidates, Office of the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs Canada, September 2022 (https://www.fja-cmf.gc.ca/appointments-nominations/guideCandidates-eng.html)
2. "Compensation Review of Federally Appointed Judges – Department of Justice regarding the 2020 Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission" by JDM Actuarial, March 26, 2021
3. "Report and Recommendations Submitted to the Minister of Justice of Canada" by the Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission, August 30, 2021
4. "Joint Reply Submission of the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association and the Canadian Judicial Council" for the Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission, April 30, 2021
5. "Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission – Value of the Judicial Annuity – Review of Gorham Report" by Dean Newell, April 29, 2021
6. Actuarial Report on the Pension Plan for the Federally Appointed Judges as at March 31, 2022 (https://www.osfi-bsif.gc.ca/en/oca/actuarial-reports/pension-plan-federally-appointed-judges-31-march-2022)
7. Actuarial Report on the Pension Plan for the Federally Appointed Judges as at March 31, 2019 (https://www.osfi-bsif.gc.ca/en/oca/actuarial-reports/pension-plan-federally-appointed-judges-31-march-2019)
8. Judges Act, as amended to June 20, 2024
9. Bank of Canada Canadian bond yields: 10-year lookup, long-term V122544 and 7 year V122542 (https://www.bankofcanada.ca/rates/interest-rates/lookup-bond-yields/)
10. S&P Canada Investment Grade Corporate Bond Index (https://www.spglobal.com/spdji/en/indices/fixed-income/sp-canada-investment-grade-corporate-bond-index/)
11. Revisiting the Equity Risk Premium by the CFA Institute Research Foundation, 2023 (https://rpc.cfainstitute.org/sites/default/files/-/media/documents/article/rf-brief/Revisiting-the-Equity-Risk-Premium.pdf)

Appendix D Curriculum Vitae

Carol Wong, FSA, FCIA

PARTNER
Toronto

EDUCATION

Bachelor of Mathematics, Actuarial Science from the University of Waterloo (2007)

Fellow of the Society of Actuaries (2012) and the Canadian Institute of Actuaries (2012)

Carol Wong is a Partner in EY's People Advisory Services Rewards practice in Toronto, Canada. She has over 17 years of pension industry experience.

Carol advises clients on a wide range of HR and pension issues, whether in the context of mergers and acquisitions, financial reporting, or as part of on-going advisory services. She helps clients identify key financial risks and exposure areas relating to pension and benefits plans, HR policies, incentive programs. She leads a team of actuaries to deliver solutions to Canadian and multinational companies, governments and public sector entities, private equity firms and others.

Prior to joining EY, Carol worked at an actuarial consulting firm where she was a consultant advising on plan design, funding, accounting and administration.

Experience

- Advised pension committees and executives on the strategy and execution, ongoing maintenance and operations of pension plans. Advised plan sponsors on pension policy, pension reform, de-risking and plan sustainability.
- Conducted numerous reviews of risks and controls of pension plans. These reviews included assessments of risks in plan governance, administration, funding, accounting, reporting, member communication, benefit calculation and regulatory compliance.
- Served as the lead actuary for various pension plans, and led her team in fulfilling plan sponsors' regulatory filing requirements. This includes the valuation of pension plan and benefit plan obligations. She also has extensive experience in overseeing financial projections for pension and advised pension committees and executives on the strategy and execution, ongoing maintenance and operations of pension plans.
- Extensive experience in the review of financial reporting of pension and benefit plan obligations; she has advised on a diverse range of pension issues for purposes of financial reporting under various accounting standards.
- M&A diligence and integration, supporting clients by identifying and measuring HR risks and costs related to compensation, severance, pensions and retirement programs, and employee benefits for transactions. She identified key financial risks and exposure areas relating to HR policies, pension and benefits plans, incentive programs, and advised on purchase price adjustments, and advised clients on the cash and balance sheet implications of carving out an entity or of acquiring a target company.

Sze-King Fong, FSA, FCIA

SENIOR MANAGER
Toronto

EDUCATION

Bachelor of Mathematics, Double Major in Actuarial Sciences and Statistics from the University of Waterloo (2015)

Bachelor of Business Administration, Major in Insurance and Risk Management and Minor in Economics from Wilfrid Laurier University (2015)

Fellow of the Society of Actuaries (2020) and the Canadian Institute of Actuaries (2021)

Sze-King Fong is an actuarial senior manager in EY's Reward practice in Toronto, Canada with over 9 years of experience in the pension industry. Her primary focus is in the following areas:

- Pension and benefits plans financial statement audit and internal audit;
- Funding and accounting valuations of pension and benefit liabilities of company-sponsored plans;
- Consulting services for the maintenance and operation of retirement benefit plans; and
- M&A due diligence of employee benefit programs.
- Experienced in human resources consulting roles with demonstrated knowledge of pension plan valuation, implementation and ongoing administration.

Experience

Prior to joining EY, Sze-King worked at an actuarial consulting firm advising on funding, accounting and administration with expertise in special projects such as annuity purchase and bulk lump sum campaigns. At EY, she continues to provide actuarial consulting services to pension plan sponsors, including funding and accounting valuations and ongoing administration.

Sze-King has been involved in providing actuarial support to EY audit teams, including assisting with auditing pension and benefit plan financial statements, assessment of actuarial assumptions, accounting mechanics / methodologies, testing actuarial liabilities of pension benefits as part of the audit procedures and the accounting for special events.

She has experience with preparing and reviewing accounting valuations and disclosures for pension and benefit plans under various accounting standards.

She has experience with defined benefit pension plans of varying sizes and is a part of the core group of consultants serving EY's audit practice for actuarial subject matter expertise.

EY | Building a better working world

EY exists to build a better working world, helping to create long-term value for clients, people and society and build trust in the capital markets.

Enabled by data and technology, diverse EY teams in over 150 countries provide trust through assurance and help clients grow, transform and operate.

Working across assurance, consulting, law, strategy, tax and transactions, EY teams ask better questions to find new answers for the complex issues facing our world today.

ey.com/ca

Report on Private Sector Compensation

Prepared for the Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission

20 December 2024

Table of Contents

20 December 2024

Me Jean-Michel Boudreau
IMK LLP

3500, boulevard De Maisonneuve Ouest

Montreal QC H3Z 3C1

Report on Private Sector Compensation

Dear Me Boudreau,

We have been engaged by IMK LLP ("IMK"), in your capacity as counsel to the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association and the Canadian Judicial Council (the "Judiciary") in connection with the inquiry of the seventh Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission (the "Commission"), which commenced on October 11, 2024.

The analysis contained in this report focuses on analyzing multiple data sources to ascertain the income levels of unincorporated and incorporated self-employed lawyers in private practice. Our analysis shows that there is a significant gap between the salary of puisne judges relative to the income of self-employed lawyers in private practice.

Information about our methodology and the data sources used in our analysis are summarized in this report.

We are available to answer any questions you may have on the information contained in this report. Yours sincerely,

Ernst & Young LLP

Uros Karadzic Partner*

Marvin Reyes Compensation Consulting Leader

* Uros Karadzic is a limited partner of Ernst & Young LP, which provides services to Ernst & Young LLP

1. INTRODUCTION AND CONTEXT

EY has been engaged by IMK in connection with their representation of the Judiciary during the inquiry of the Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission. This report has been prepared for IMK. The purpose of this report is to perform an analysis of multiple data sources in order to compare judicial compensation with that of self-employed lawyers in private practice.

We understand that as experts, we are to provide an opinion that is independent, objective, and related to matters within our areas of expertise. We are Fellows of the Canadian Institute of Actuaries and of the Society of Actuaries as well as compensation and total rewards consultants and have experience in compensation reviews for organizations across many industries.

- Uros Karadzic has been a Fellow of the Canadian Institute of Actuaries since 2006. As the leader of EY's Reward practice, Uros has advised companies, governments, private partnerships and professional bodies on a diverse range of pension and compensation issues. A pension actuary leader with over 25 years of industry experience, Uros leads a diverse team of actuaries, lawyers practicing in tax, pension and employment law, and compensation professionals. Uros has advised clients on compensation matters, both executive and broad-based.
- Marvin Reyes brings a wealth of expertise in data analysis and strategic comparisons within the compensation sector. His specialization lies in analyzing compensation data to uncover trends, disparities, and opportunities for optimization. By leveraging advanced analytical tools and methodologies, he provides insightful and informed recommendations that help organizations align their compensation strategies with industry standards and best practices. His strategic approach ensures that compensation packages are competitive, equitable, and aligned with organizational goals, ultimately driving employee satisfaction and retention.

The intended users of this report are IMK, the Commission, and the various parties appearing before the Commission. The report should not be provided to any party who is not an intended user. The results and analysis within this report should not be relied upon by any party other than an intended user.

To prepare this report, IMK provided us with information and data from various sources, as shown in Appendix IV. Overall, the data provided is sufficient and reliable for the purposes of this report.

The prior Commissions' reports on the adequacy of judicial salaries in Canada utilized multiple data sources, including national figures to determine the income of unincorporated self-employed lawyers in private practice. The Turcotte Commission highlighted the necessity of incorporating data on the incomes of self-employed lawyers practicing through a professional law corporation to provide a more accurate view of self-employed lawyers' income levels. In this report, EY analyses that additional data for incorporated lawyers, in addition to the data on unincorporated self-employed lawyers used by prior Commissions.

This report is structured as follows. It begins by providing details into the various data sources utilized, including insights from the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) and Statistics Canada (StatsCan) on private sector lawyers, both unincorporated and incorporated, which are instrumental in assessing income levels and trends. Following this, the report outlines the market best practice for benchmarking of compensation, focusing on specific age groups to ensure relevance and accuracy. It also discusses the establishment of a minimum income threshold, which serves as a baseline for competitive salary determination. By integrating these elements, the report presents a detailed comparison of current judicial salary levels with those of self-employed lawyers in private practice, both incorporated and unincorporated.

2. DATA SOURCES REGARDING THE INCOME OF SELF-EMPLOYED LAWYERS

EY was provided with various data sources. We received comprehensive data on the income of unincorporated and incorporated self-employed lawyers from both CRA and StatsCan, spanning several years, across Canada and Census Metropolitan Areas (CMAs). The CRA and StatsCan data include various metrics, age groups, and income filters. EY has conducted detailed analyses, with the support from experienced tax professionals, to identify the most appropriate data sources for our evaluation and inform the findings and conclusions set out in this report.

The data provided regarding the income of self-employed lawyers is segmented into various categories, with the rationale for each segmentation choice further elaborated in Section 3:

Geography:

- Description: The data is segmented into two geographies, all of Canada and Census Metropolitan Areas (CMAs) across Canada.
- Relevance: This geographical segmentation allows for an analysis of regional income disparities and trends, which informs our understanding of the economic landscape in which self-employed lawyers operate.

Salary Cut Offs:

- Description: The data includes various salary cut-off filters. For the reasons set out later in this report, our analysis will focus on data filtered with the $90,00 income cutoff (see Section 3.1: Low-income Cutoff).
- Relevance: This information is necessary for filtering earnings data so that it focuses on lawyers in the pool that are potential candidates to the judiciary.

Target Positioning:

- Description: The data is based on different target positions (deciles) within the legal profession. Our Analysis will focus on the metric of 75th percentile (see Section 3.2: Appropriate Percentile), as was done for prior Commissions.
- Relevance: The 75th percentile is consistent with the goal of attracting outstanding candidates to the judiciary.

Age Groups:

- Description: The data is divided into different age groups. Our Analysis will focus on the age group of 44-56 (see Section 3.3: Age Range Filter).
- Relevance: The 44-56 age group continues to be the range from which the majority of appointments are made. In our view, the alternative approach – age-weighing – presents too many flaws to be the relevant age filter.

2.1 SUMMARY OF THE DATA PROVIDED

The various datasets provided to EY offer a comprehensive view of the professional earnings landscape within the legal profession in Canada. By analyzing the data received from the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) and Statistics Canada (StatsCan), and along with the various demographic and positional cuts, we can derive a well-informed and equitable compensation comparator regarding the income of self-employed lawyers in private practice in Canada.

Below is a summary table of the data sources received, their descriptions and the data referenced for each source if applicable.

Table 0: Received Data Sources Summary

Received Data Sources	Description	Data Reference
Judicial Salary	▸ Historic judicial annual salary from 2004 to 2024	▸ Section 2.2 Judicial Salary
CRA: Unincorporated Self-Employed Lawyers	▸ Individual-level net professional income data for unincorporated self-employed lawyers across Canada and in the top 10 Census Metropolitan Areas*. ▸ Includes data filtered with income threshold of $90,000. ▸ Presents data for certain age groups, in particular the 35-69 and 44-56 age groups. ▸ Includes key metric of 75th percentile.	▸ Section 2.3.1 Analysis of CRA Data on Self-employed Lawyers
CRA: Legal Corporations	▸ Dataset derived from T2 filings for corporations with NAICS Code 541110 (Offices of Lawyers). ▸ Net income for legal corporations across Canada. ▸ Includes data filtered with income threshold of $90,000. ▸ Includes key metric of 75th percentile for age group 35-69.	▸ Appendix I Summary of Unused Data Sources
StatsCan: Incorporated and Unincorporated Partner Income	▸ Unincorporated Partner income data across Canada and in the top 10 Census Metropolitan Areas. ▸ Partnership income data across Canada and in the top 10 Census Metropolitan Areas. ▸ Includes data filtered with income threshold of $90,000. ▸ Includes key metric of 75th percentile.	▸ Appendix I Summary of Unused Data Sources
	▸ Incorporated Partner income data across Canada and in the top 10 Census Metropolitan Areas. Includes data filtered with income threshold of $90,000. Includes key metric of 75th percentile.	▸ Section 2.4.1 Analysis of StatsCan Data on Incorporated Lawyers
StatsCan: Legal Corporations	▸ Dataset derived from T2 filings for corporations with NAICS Code 541110 (Offices of Lawyers) across Canada and in the top 10 Census Metropolitan Areas. ▸ Includes data filtered with income threshold of $90,000. ▸ Includes age filters of 44-56 and 35-69 and key metric of 75th percentile.	▸ Appendix I Summary of Unused Data Sources

2.2 Judicial Salary

The following table illustrates the yearly salary of puisne judges from 2019 through 2024[1].

Table 1: Salary of Puisne Judges from 2019 to 2024

Year	Judicial Salary	IAI Adjustment
2019	$329,900	**--
2020	$338,800	2.7%
2021	$361,100	6.6%
2022	$372,200	3.1%
2023	$383,700	3.1%
2024	$396,700	3.4%

As shown in Table 1, the yearly IAI adjustment to judicial salaries has averaged 3%, except for 2021, which was affected by the pandemic and where salaries were adjusted by 6.6%.

[1] The amount of the judicial salary in 2019 was provided to EY in the file titled "Joint-Submission-of-the-CSCJA-and-CJC-March-29-2021." Salaries from 2020 to 2024 were sourced from the Guide for Candidates of the Office of the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs.

2.3 UNINCORPORATED LAWYERS

2.3.1 ANALYSIS OF CRA DATA ON SELF-EMPLOYED LAWYERS

Canada Revenue Agency: Net Professional Income of Unincorporated Self-Employed Lawyers

- Description: The dataset includes net income information for unincorporated self-employed lawyers. It includes data with a filter for $90,000 low-income threshold.
- The CRA self-employed lawyer data is filtered for individuals aged 35-69 with NAICS code 541110, excluding those from abroad, with zero gross/net incomes, employment income over 50% of net professional/business incomes, social/employment assistance claims, and Canada Pension Plan/Quebec Pension Plan amounts exceeding net professional/business incomes or 50% of total incomes[2].

Data Sourcing and Validation

- The data is sourced from tax filings submitted by individuals. It is 100% self-reported by taxpayers. To ensure the accuracy of the data and identify discrepancies, CRA conducts audits and other verification processes to ensure tax slip information prepared by third parties, such as T5013 partnership information returns, has been accurately self-reported by the taxpayer.

Relevant Data Source File Received:

All Canada: The "net90k_prov_20tiles_5age" series data (2019-2023) provides net income data above $90,000 for self-employed individuals across Canada. Key data includes the "count" and "75th percentile" for the age groups 35-69 and 44-56.

The following tables summarize the key data received from the CRA on unincorporated self-employed lawyers:

Table 2A: CRA – Unincorporated Self-Employed Lawyers, Age Group 44-56 – ALL CANADA

Year	Count (N)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income
2019	3,760	$513,305
2020	3,490	$579,035
2021	3,550	$613,130
2022	3,220	$569,330
2023	2,980	$589,445
Average	3,400	$572,849

[2] Excel file "net90k_prov_20tiles_5age_2019a" by Canada Revenue Agency.

Table 2B: CRA – Unincorporated Self-Employed Lawyers, Age Group 35-69 – ALL CANADA

Year	Count (N)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income
2019	9,370	$420,535
2020	8,950	$464,150
2021	9,180	$496,690
2022	8,530	$464,140
2023	7,990	$462,835
Average	8,804	$461,670

- Top CMAs: The "net90k_cma_10tiles_5age" series data (2019-2023) provides net income data above $90,000 for self-employed individuals in the top 10 Census Metropolitan Areas. Key data includes the "count" and "75th percentile" for the age groups 35-69 and 44-56.

The following table summarizes data for the Top 10 CMAs received from the CRA on unincorporated self-employed lawyers.

Table 3A: CRA – Unincorporated Self-Employed Lawyers, Age Group 44-56 – TOP CMAs

Year	Count (N)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income
2019	3,020	$579,000
2020	2,830	$652,880
2021	2,860	$695,430
2022	2,600	$651,475
2023	2,400	$648,800
Average	2,742	$645,517

Table 3B: CRA – Unincorporated Self-Employed Lawyers, Age Group 35-69 – TOP CMAs

Year	Count (N)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income
2019	7,320	$474,025
2020	7,060	$519,265
2021	7,190	$555,655
2022	6,710	$514,485
2023	6,260	$519,020
Average	6,908	$516,490

Advantages of Using This Data Source for Unincorporated Lawyer Net Income:

- Past Commissions have used the CRA self-employed net income as a basis for determining the adequacy of the salaries and other amounts payable under the Judges Act. Therefore, using this dataset for unincorporated self-employed lawyers would provide a consistent foundation for fair year-to-year comparisons of income increases or decreases of such unincorporated lawyers.

- The CRA dataset includes age filters, offering a more detailed breakdown of net income for self-employed lawyers, in addition to providing data from 2019 to 2023. This allows for a more accurate and precise analysis (outlined in section 4.1 of this report).

2.3.2 CONCLUSION ON DATA ON UNINCORPORATED LAWYERS

Opinion: EY was provided with data on the income of unincorporated self-employed lawyers from both CRA and StatsCan. In line with the practice of past Commissions, we have chosen to use CRA data on self-employed lawyers' net income as the sole source for the analysis of unincorporated lawyers.

2.4 INCORPORATED LAWYERS

For the first time, data on incorporated lawyers has been provided to the Commission, offering a view of the earnings of lawyers who practice through professional law corporations (PLCs). The relevant data included in EY's analysis is sourced from Statistics Canada (StatsCan). The data encompasses various types of reported income across different datasets, including T5013 partnership tax returns.

- T5013 forms detail partnership earnings received by partners in a legal partnership including incorporated lawyers and represent the most accurate and independent source of professional income as it does not capture ancillary income and strictly focuses on income that is earned as a practicing legal professional.

To have a complete picture of compensation received by the full spectrum of self-employed lawyers, it is necessary to include incorporated lawyers into our analysis. It is common practice for higher-earning lawyers to incorporate a professional law corporation to better manage their income and expenses. Advised by tax specialists, these lawyers can take advantage of various tax planning strategies, such as income splitting, deferring income, and accessing the small business deduction. This allows them to optimize their tax liabilities and retain more earnings within the corporation.

2.4.1 ANALYSIS OF STATSCAN DATA ON INCORPORATED LAWYERS

Statistics Canada: Income of Incorporated Partners in a Legal Partnership

- Description: This dataset includes the income of partners practicing through professional corporations, classified under the North American Industry Classification System (NAICS) code 541110, which pertains to Offices of Lawyers[3].
- This data is crucial to arrive at credible, reliable, up-to-date and relevant figures regarding the income of self-employed lawyers, including those practicing through a professional law corporation.

Data Sourcing and Validation

- Data is provided from the Economic Analysis Division (EAD) of Statistics Canada, who sources data from various income tax filings, including T1, T2, and T5013 forms, as well as associated schedules. This data is compiled and merged manually to focus on professional law corporations (PLCs) under NAICS code 541110 - Offices of lawyers. The EAD utilizes the Canadian Employer-Employee Dynamics Database (CEEDD) and the National Account Longitudinal Microdata File (NALMF) to consolidate firm-level data which is maintained by EAD to provide matched data between employees and employers in Canada, ensuring comprehensive and accurate information. Before releasing final results, appropriate record linkage approval is obtained to validate the data[4].

Relevant Data Source File Received:

- All Canada: The "partners_cma_2018_2022_NEW" - "corporations_canada_90k_ni", provides incorporated partner net income share across Canada, including information on partner count and 75th percentile net income above $90,000 for the entire reported population from 2019 to 2022.

[3] Word document "DoJ Quad 2024 notes" by Economic Analysis Division, Statistics Canada, June 2024.
[4] Letter of Agreement, file"6-44800-6728-2425_Quadrennial Commission_LOA_NEW_Signed_Stats Can and Justice", Statistics of Canada.

Table 4: StatsCan – Incorporated Partners – All Canada

Year	Count (N)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income
2019	6,000	$723,000
2020	6,240	$803,000
2021	6,590	$891,000
2022	7,050	$830,000
Average	6,470	$811,750

- Top CMAs: The "partners_cma_2018_2022_NEW" - "corporationsl_top_cma_90k_ni" provides incorporated partner net income share in the top 10 Census Metropolitan Areas in Canada, including information on partner count and 75th percentile net income above $90,000 for the entire reported population from 2019 to 2022.
    - The data from StatsCan on partners in top CMAs is relevant but it is not a reliable source to derive a helpful comparator to judicial salaries, because much of the data was suppressed by StatsCan for confidentiality reasons. In particular, the spreadsheet contains no data for 6 of the top CMAs (Calgary, Edmonton, Halifax, KCWH, Montreal and Quebec City).

Advantages of Using this Data Source for Incorporated Lawyers

- The StatsCan data provides robust information on partnership data. Partnership data is a true representation of the partnership income earned by the law professionals as the amount on the T5013 slip indicates their share of income directly from practicing legal activities. The T5013 slip is to a partner of a partnership what a T4 is to an employee of a corporation. Due to this, net partnership income share is considered the best representation of the actual income of partners/lawyers.
- The StatsCan data provided more insight into employees earning over $90,000, which is the minimum income cut-off used in the analysis.

2.4.2 CONCLUSION ON DATA OF INCORPORATED LAWYERS

Opinion: Based on our analysis, the assessment of incorporated lawyers' net income should primarily rely on StatsCan partnership data rather than on CRA or StatsCan legal corporation data derived from T2 filings[5].

StatsCan data on partnerships offers a more accurate and comprehensive representation of incorporated lawyer income, as it truly reflects the income earned by incorporated legal professionals. In particular, of the incorporated and unincorporated partner income data captured in the "partners_cma_2018_2022_NEW" file, EY recommends focusing on the corporation's data only.

[5] See Appendix I, for our assessment of unused data sources.

2.5 CONCLUSION ON ALL SELF-EMPLOYED LAWYERS DATA SOURCES

Opinion: Use data from both the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) and Statistics Canada (StatsCan) to compare with judicial salary. We believe that unincorporated self-employed lawyers from the CRA database remains a fundamental data source, but we will also include incorporated lawyers from the StatsCan database in the analysis.

3 SELECTION OF APPROPRIATE DATA FILTERS

This section examines which filters should be applied to the chosen data sources in order to derive the most accurate private sector income comparator.

3.1 LOW-INCOME CUTOFF

Minimum Income Threshold Determination

In the 2021 Quadrennial Commission Report, it was noted that the $60,000 per annum low-income cutoff, established by the McLennan Commission in 2004, had remained unchanged. The report states that the Consumer Price Index (CPI) was used to determine this threshold, aligning it with the indexing of Canadian personal income tax brackets[6]. To determine an appropriate minimum net income threshold for the current year analysis, two different sources of wage increases were used:

1. Consumer Price Index (CPI): The CPI measures the average change in prices paid by consumers for a standard basket of goods and services, including food, clothing, shelter, and transportation. It is a key indicator of inflation, reflecting the cost of living and economic health[7]. This source of data was utilized in the last report to help in determining a minimum income threshold value.

2. Industrial Aggregate Increase (IAI): The IAI measures the number of working Canadians and their average weekly earnings. Earnings are tracked and the Industrial Aggregate is updated monthly. The Industrial Aggregate can be considered as similar to the CPI except the CPI tracks prices of items that are typically purchased by Canadian consumers whereas the Industrial Aggregate tracks the number of workers in Canada and their earnings. This source of data was utilized in the last report to help in determining a minimum income threshold value.

Table 5: Calculated CPI and Income Threshold up to 2023[8]

Year	CPI%	Income Threshold
--	--	$80,000
2020	1.9%	$81,559
2021	0.7%	$82,144
2022	3.4%	$84,933
2023	6.8%	$90,711

The CPI rates in the table above are calculated based on the weekly earnings of all employees, as provided by Statistics Canada, under the category of "All-items". The calculation is based on the 12-month average of the calendar year prior to the year of judicial salary increase. For example, the CPI of 6.8% effective April 1, 2023, is calculated using the change from the average monthly value during January 2021 to December 2021 to the average monthly value during January 2022 to December 2022.

[6] judicial Compensation and Benefit Commission, Report and Recommendations Page 52
[7] Statistics Canada - Consumer Price Index (CPI)
[8] Statistics Canada, Consumer Price Index, monthly, not seasonally adjusted (Table: 18-10-0004-01)

Table 6: Calculated IAI and Income Threshold up to 2023[9]

Year	IAI%	Income Threshold
--	--	$80,000
2020	2.7%	$82,158
2021	6.6%	$87,566
2022	3.1%	$90,258
2023	3.1%	$93,046

The IAI rates in the table above are calculated based on the weekly earnings of all employees, as provided by Statistics Canada, under the category of "Industrial Aggregate excluding unclassified businesses" for the group "All employees, including overtime". The calculation is based on the 12-month average of the calendar year prior to the year of judicial salary increase. For example, the IAI of 3.1% effective April 1, 2023, is calculated using the change from the average monthly value during January 2021 to December 2021 to the average monthly value during January 2022 to December 2022. However, due to rounding, numbers may be slightly different from above by 0.1% - 0.2%.

Opinion: Based on the analysis in Tables 5 and 6, the income threshold should be increased from $80,000 to $90,000, which reflects CPI and IAI increases over the relevant period.

[9] The IAI rates are sourced from Statistics Canada, Average weekly earnings by industry, monthly, unadjusted for seasonality (Table: 14-10-0203-01) for the group "All employees, including overtime"

3.2 APPROPRIATE PERCENTILE

We understand that past Commissions have used compensation data from the private sector at the 75th percentile in order to establish a comparison with judicial salaries.

The question of establishing fair and competitive compensation is faced by all organizations, regardless of sector or type of work. There are established market practices and principles that organizations use to guide this process. These leading practices are relevant, and should be considered, when determining competitive compensation levels for judges in Canada.

Market compensation benchmarking principles apply similarly to both government and public sector entities, as well as private sector entities, by ensuring that compensation packages are competitive and aligned with market.

If positions have certain requirements or skillsets that are niche in the market, making it more challenging to attract and retain talent, target positioning should be in the higher quartile of the market.

Organizations will utilize select market percentiles that help determine competitive compensation levels, aligned to their compensation philosophy, and address attraction/retention challenges and the niche skillset required.

- 75th percentile and above – this is where organizations will target in the market for specific jobs where highly qualified talent with specialized and niche skillsets are required, low source of good talent, attraction/retention issues, skills premium etc.

- 90th percentile and above – this is where organizations will target where it is extremely difficult to attract talent to a specific position for a number of reasons, and pay is the key driver to bring talent to the role.

The talent pool of qualified judicial candidates is well defined and is composed of highly qualified lawyers. If compensation is not competitive to attract lawyers from the private sector and/or private practice law firms, highly qualified and highly performing individuals may elect not to apply for a judicial position.

For judges, there is also no opportunity to provide incentive compensation such as performance bonuses, requiring the base salary to be sufficiently competitive to attract and retain high quality talent.

Further, IMK has informed us that the Commission, in its inquiry, must consider the need to attract "outstanding candidates" to the judiciary, a category of applicants that was defined by an earlier Commission as "the best and brightest".

Opinion: The 75th percentile of the market or higher represents an appropriate data point to reflect the talent pool of qualified candidates for the judiciary.

3.3 AGE RANGE FILTER

In his report submitted to the previous Commission (Turcotte), the Government's expert, Mr. Gorham, favored an age-weighted approach to estimate compensation in private practice. He put forth a method whereby he assigned a different weight to each of the seven age groups represented in the CRA data. We understand that prior Commissions had instead applied a strict age filter to the CRA data, focusing on the 44 to 56 age group.

Mr. Gorham argued that, while a large number of judicial appointees come from the 44-56 age range, younger and older appointees should not be excluded. The previous Commission ultimately adopted the age-weighted approach presented by Mr. Gorham, instead of the 44-56 age filter.

While an age-weighted approach could yield precise results with granular data, in our opinion, considering the very coarse data on age distribution provided by the CRA, an age-weighted approach is not appropriate under the circumstances because it assigns too much weight to the salaries of younger lawyers.

Generally speaking, the weighted average approach is a statistically valid method and is often preferred over a straight average, when considering different datasets with a different number of records. However, in order to properly apply such a method here, we would need the salary (value), and number of appointees (weight), for every single age. Only then would the age-weighted approach yield correct results. In other words, age-weighting of self-employed lawyer income would require income data for each and every age from 35 to 69, to align with how the data is provided in terms of the numbers of appointees at each age. This would yield 35 data points, one for each age (35 through 69). This method would allow the income for each age to be weighted based on the actual number of appointees corresponding to that age.

However, the income data provided is grouped into broader age groups rather than by individual years. The age-weighted approach accepted by the Turcotte Commission relied on income data from seven age groups: 35-43, 44-47, 48-51, 52-55, 56-59, 60-63, and 64-69.

Table 7A: Age at Appointment to Federal Judiciary 2011 to 2020[10]

Age	Number Appointed 1 Apr 2011 to 23 Oct 2020	Percentage Appointed 1 Apr 2011 to 23 Oct 2020
35	--	--
36	--	--
37	1	0.2%
38	--	--
39	--	--
40	3	0.5%
41	5	0.8%
42	4	0.7%
43	13	2.2%
44	19	3.2%
45	26	4.3%
46	30	5.0%
47	32	5.4%
48	26	4.3%
49	36	6.0%
50	29	4.8%
51	42	7.0%
52	36	6.0%
53	39	6.5%
54	32	5.4%
55	37	6.2%
56	37	6.2%
57	24	4.0%
58	26	4.3%
59	20	3.3%
60	23	3.8%
61	16	2.7%
62	8	1.3%
63	10	1.7%
64	8	1.3%
65	8	1.3%
66	3	0.5%
67	4	0.7%
68	1	0.2%
69	--	--
70	--	--
Total	598	100%

[10] Gorham Report of Compensation Review of Federally Appointed Judges, Page 78-79

Table 7B: Age at Appointment to Federal Judiciary 2011 to 2020 – Seven Bands[11]

	Number Appointed	Percentage Appointed
Age	1 Apr 2011 to 23 Oct 2020	1 Apr 2011 to 23 Oct 2020
35-43	26	4.3%
44-47	107	17.9%
48-51	133	22.2%
52-55	144	24.1%
56-59	107	17.9%
60-63	57	9.5%
64-69	24	4.0%
Total of Appointments of all ages	598	100%

Table 7C: Age at Appointment to Federal Judiciary 2011 to 2020 – Broad Bands[12]

	Number Appointed	Percentage Appointed
Age	1 Apr 2011 to 23 Oct 2020	1 Apr 2011 to 23 Oct 2020
35-46	101	16.9%
47-54	272	45.5%
55-69	225	37.6%
44-56	421	70.4%
35-69	598	100.0%

The mismatch between the number of values and weights (35 vs 7) necessarily creates distortions.

Taking the example of the first age group (35-43) in Table 7B, there are a total of nine distinct ages in that group (35, 36, …, 42, 43), but all ages composing that category are equally weighted relative to each other. In practice, however, the number of nominations varies significantly across these ages. As illustrated in Table 7A above, from 2011 to 2020, there was only 1 nomination at age 37 compared to 13 nominations at age 43 (none at 35). Despite this, the age-weighted approach gives the exact same weight to the income for lawyers aged 35 and for those aged 43. To be correct, the weight given to the income of those aged 37 should be 13 times less than the weight of the income of those aged 43, and the income of lawyers aged 35 should receive no weight at all.

A similar bias is created with the last age group (64-69). While there were 8 nominations at age 64, there was only 1 at age 68 (none at 69). This time, income at age 68 is overweighted within that group. The same phenomenon is skewing the results for age group 60-63.

In sum, the weighted average approach as applied in the prior Commission produces a compensation comparator that is unduly weighed down by over-representation of younger lawyers, who earn less given that they are earlier in their careers. By utilizing the weighted average approach, a higher weight is placed on the younger age range where very few judicial candidates come from, leading to compensation values that are understated.

[11] Gorham Report of Compensation Review of Federally Appointed Judges, Page 78-79
[12] Gorham Report of Compensation Review of Federally Appointed Judges, Page 78-79

Based on recent data, the average age of appointed judges was approximately 52 years of age[13]. This, in combination with the minimum 10 years as a lawyer required to be considered as a candidate, supports the need to focus on the most relevant age range vs. a broader age range.

As illustrated in Table 7C above, historical data from 2011 to 2020 indicates that the age bracket of 44-56 includes 421 appointees, which constitutes 70% of the total appointees.

The table below displays the headcount of judges by age of appointment from 2020 to 2024[14].

Table 7D: Headcount at age of appointments from 1 April 2020 to 31 March 2024

Age at appointment	Number of Appointments
40 and below	3
41 to 45	29
46 to 50	67
51 to 55	86
56 to 60	69
61 to 65	16
Over 65	0
Total	270

By focusing on the 44-56 age range to establish the private sector comparator, the approach becomes more targeted and effective compared to taking a weighted average across different age groups. This approach avoids the distortion that can occur when a significant count in a smaller, less representative age group is included, ensuring that income data reflects the most relevant and impactful segment of candidates.

Opinion: The main focus should be given to the age range of 44-56, which is around the age when qualified candidates typically get appointed to be a judge (see Table 7C). By focusing on this age range, it eliminates potential outliers at the bottom and top of the judicial candidate pool and focuses on the age range where most candidates typically get appointed.

[13] Gorham Report of Compensation Review of Federally Appointed Judges, Page 77
[14] Data sourced from Tables derived from Appointment Demographics provided by the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs.

4 COMPARISON WITH JUDICIAL SALARY

4.1 FINAL COMPARATOR FOR UNINCORPORATED LAWYERS

The CRA data provided includes the net income of unincorporated self-employed lawyers from 2019 to 2023. The tables below present the compensation levels of unincorporated self-employed lawyers aged 44-56 in Canada nationwide and in the top Census Metropolitan Areas (CMAs). It compares their compensation at the 75th percentile to judicial salaries.

A trend analysis has been conducted to predict the growth of unincorporated lawyer income for 2024. For this analysis, we applied a linear regression which estimates the growth of the net income of unincorporated self-employed lawyers for 2024 based on the market data from 2019 to 2023. The findings from this trend analysis offer insights into the expected income trajectory.

Table 8A: Unincorporated Lawyer Net Income vs Judicial Salary for Age Group 44-56 – ALL CANADA

Year	Judicial Salary	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income	Difference between Judicial Salary and the P75 Net Income
			$	%
2019	$329,900	$513,305	-$183,405	-36%
2020	$338,800	$579,035	-$240,235	-41%
2021	$361,100	$613,130	-$252,030	-41%
2022	$372,200	$569,330	-$197,130	-35%
2023	$383,700	$589,445	-$205,745	-35%
2024	$396,700	$615,622	-$218,922	-36%

Table 8B: Unincorporated Lawyer Net Income vs Judicial Salary (with Annuity) for Age Group 44-56 – ALL CANADA

Year	Judicial Salary (with Annuity Valuation of 28%)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income	Difference between Judicial Salary and the P75 Net Income
			$	%
2019	$422,272	$513,305	-$91,033	-18%
2020	$433,664	$579,035	-$145,371	-25%
2021	$462,208	$613,130	-$150,922	-25%
2022	$476,416	$569,330	-$92,914	-16%
2023	$491,136	$589,445	-$98,309	-17%
2024	$507,776	$615,622	-$107,846	-18%

Observations:

- Judicial Salary with Annuity vs. 75th Percentile Net Income:
  - Including the judicial annuity valuation, the judicial salary is well below the 75th percentile net income of self-employed lawyers, with differences ranging from $91,033 to $150,922 between 2019 and 2023. For example, in 2019, the judicial salary was 82% of the 75th percentile net income for self-employed lawyers, which was $513,305.
  - Trend analysis predicts that for 2024, the judicial salary is likely to be 82% of the 75th percentile net income, which means $107,846 below the 75th percentile net income.

- Summary: The net income for unincorporated self-employed lawyers, across Canada, and in the age group of 44-56, reveals a significant gap with judicial salaries. The trend analysis suggests that this gap will remain, indicating a $107,846 net income difference in 2024.

Table 9A: Unincorporated Lawyer Net Income vs Judicial Salary for Age Group 44-56 – TOP CMAs

Year	Judicial Salary	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income	Difference between Judicial Salary and the P75 Net Income
			$	%
2019	$329,900	$579,000	-$249,100	-43%
2020	$338,800	$652,880	-$314,080	-48%
2021	$361,100	$695,430	-$334,330	-48%
2022	$372,200	$651,475	-$279,275	-43%
2023	$383,700	$648,800	-$265,100	-41%
2024	$396,700	$686,976	-$290,276	-42%

Table 9B: Unincorporated Lawyer Net Income vs Judicial Salary (with Annuity) for Age Group 44-56 – TOP CMAs

Year	Judicial Salary (with Annuity Valuation of 28%)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income	Difference between Judicial Salary and the P75 Net Income
			$	%
2019	$422,272	$579,000	-$156,728	-27%
2020	$433,664	$652,880	-$219,216	-34%
2021	$462,208	$695,430	-$233,222	-34%
2022	$476,416	$651,475	-$175,059	-27%
2023	$491,136	$648,800	-$157,664	-24%
2024	$507,776	$686,976	-$179,200	-26%

Observations:

- Judicial Salary with Annuity vs. 75th Percentile Net Income:
  - Including the judicial annuity valuation, the judicial salary is well below the 75th percentile net income of unincorporated self-employed lawyers, with differences ranging from $156,728 to $233,222 between 2019 and 2023. For example, in 2019, the judicial salary was 73% of the 75th percentile net income for unincorporated lawyers, which was $579,000.
  - Trend analysis predicts that for 2024, the judicial salary is likely to be 74% of the 75th percentile net income, which means $179,200 below the 75th percentile net income.

- Summary: Following a similar pattern of analysis for all Canada, with larger variances and differences across years, the net income for unincorporated self-employed lawyers in CMA's in Canada, and in the age group of 44-56, reveals a significant gap with judicial salaries. The trend analysis suggests that this gap will remain, indicating a $179,200 income difference in 2024.

4.2 FINAL COMPARATOR FOR INCORPORATED LAWYERS

The StatsCan data provided includes the net income of incorporated partners from 2019 to 2022. EY has estimated the net income for incorporated lawyers in Canada nationwide and in the top Census Metropolitan Areas (CMAs) in Canada. The tables below present the estimated net income for incorporated partners at the 75th percentile for lawyers aged 44-56, which is the age group most representative of judicial appointees.

While the StatsCan partnership data is not refined by age, EY calculated an age ratio and income ratio with reference from the unincorporated self-employed CRA data, and applied these ratios to the StatsCan data to serve as a proxy for the net income of incorporated partners in the 44-56 age group.

Below we show the steps to derive the count of private sector lawyers within the age range of 44-56 and their 75th percentile net income for year 2019 in Table 10A:

1. Determine Age Ratio:
    - Calculate the proportion of unincorporated self-employed lawyers in the 44-56 age group (3,760) relative to the entire reported population (9,370) across Canada.
    - Age Ratio: (3,760 / 9,370) = 40%
2. Determine Income Ratio:
    - Calculate the income ratio by dividing the 75th percentile income of the 44-56 age group ($513,305) by the 75th percentile net income of the entire reported population ($420,535).
    - Income Ratio: ($513,305 / $420,535) = 122%
3. Apply Ratios to Corporation Counts and Partners' 75th Percentile Net Income:
    - Multiply the corporation counts (N) across all ages by the age ratio.
    - Count: 6,000 x 40% = 2,400
    - Multiply the partners' 75th percentile net income across all ages by the income ratio.
    - 75th Percentile Net Income: $723,000 x 122% = $882,060

Additionally, a trend analysis has been conducted to predict the growth of the net income of partners practicing through professional corporations for 2023 and 2024. For this analysis, we applied a linear regression which estimates the growth of partner net income for 2023 and 2024, based on the market data from 2019 to 2022. The findings from this trend analysis offer insights into the expected income trajectory.

Table 10A: Incorporated Partners Estimated Net Income for Age Group 44-56 - ALL CANADA

Year	Judicial Salary	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income	Difference between Judicial Salary and the P75 Net Income
			$	%
2019	$329,900	$882,060	-$552,160	-63%
2020	$338,800	$1,003,750	-$664,950	-66%
2021	$361,100	$1,095,930	-$734,830	-67%
2022	$372,200	$1,020,900	-$648,700	-64%
2023	$383,700	$1,127,835	-$744,135	-66%
2024	$396,700	$1,178,705	-$782,005	-66%

Table 10B: Incorporated Partners Estimated Net Income vs Judicial Salary (with Annuity) for Age Group 44-56 – All CANADA

Year	Judicial Salary (with Annuity Valuation of 28%)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income	Difference between Judicial Salary and the P75 Net Income
			$	%
2019	$422,272	$882,060	-$459,788	-52%
2020	$433,664	$1,003,750	-$570,086	-57%
2021	$462,208	$1,095,930	-$633,722	-58%
2022	$476,416	$1,020,900	-$544,484	-53%
2023	$491,136	$1,127,835	-$636,699	-56%
2024	$507,776	$1,178,705	-$670,929	-57%

Observations:

- Judicial Salary with Annuity vs. 75th Percentile Partner Net Income:
  - Including the judicial annuity valuation, the judicial salary is well below the 75th percentile net income of incorporated lawyers, with differences ranging from $459,788 to $633,722 between 2019 and 2022. For example, in 2019, the judicial salary was 48% of the 75th percentile net income for incorporated self-employed lawyers, which was $882,060.
  - Trend analysis predicts that for 2023 and 2024, the judicial salary would be 43% to 44% of the 75th percentile net income, indicating that the judicial salary is likely to be $636,699 below the 75th percentile net income of incorporated lawyers in 2023 and $670,929 below the 75th percentile net income in 2024.

- Summary: The net income for incorporated lawyers across Canada reveals a gap between judicial salaries and the incomes of incorporated partners at the 75th percentile. The trend analysis suggests that this gap will remain, growing towards a $670,929 income difference in 2024. In other words, the income of incorporated lawyers in Canada, at the relevant age and percentile, is more than double the salary of judges, even including the judicial annuity.

4.3 FINAL COMPARATOR FOR ALL PRIVATE PRACTICE LAWYERS

Combination of CRA Unincorporated Lawyers Data and StatsCan Incorporated Lawyers Data

The tables below present the combination of CRA and StatsCan data based on Tables 8A&B, and 10A&B. For the analysis, we focused on self-employed lawyers (both unincorporated and incorporated) across Canada and in the top Census Metropolitan Areas (CMAs), within the 44-56 age group. EY was provided with CRA data covering the years 2019-2023 and StatsCan data covering the years 2019-2022.

A detailed trend analysis was conducted to examine historical income data and make informed predictions about income growth for 2023 and 2024. For this analysis, we applied a linear regression which estimates the growth of net income, for incorporated (2023 and 2024) and unincorporated lawyers (2024 only), based on the market data from prior years. The findings from this trend analysis offer insights into the expected income trajectory.

We have also adopted the methodology of weighted average when combining the two datasets. Weighted average is a calculation that assigns varying degrees of importance to the numbers in a particular data set. A weighted average can be more accurate than a simple average in which all numbers in a data set are assigned an identical weight. In a weighted average, each data point value is multiplied by the assigned weight, which is then summed and divided by the total number of data points[15].

Table 11A: Net Income for Age Group 44-56 vs Judicial Salary – Weighted Average for Unincorporated and Incorporated – ALL CANADA

Year	Judicial Salary	Count (N)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income	Difference between Judicial Salary and the P75 Net Income
				$	%
2019	$329,900	6,160	$656,976	-$327,076	-50%
2020	$338,800	5,924	$753,538	-$414,738	-55%
2021	$361,100	6,120	$815,874	-$454,774	-56%
2022	$372,200	5,899	$774,408	-$402,208	-52%
2023	$383,700	--	$853,857	-$470,157	-55%
2024	$396,700	--	$895,321	-$498,621	-56%

Note: As the StatsCan data only covers the years 2019 to 2022, the trend analysis for 2023 and 2024 is based on the combined data from 2019 to 2022.

[15] Taking Table 10 as an example, to calculate the weighted average of the 75th percentile value of $656,976 in 2019, EY used the 2019 75th percentile of net income of $513,305 multiplied by the incumbent count (N) of 3,760 (Table 8A: Self-Employed Lawyer Net Income vs Judicial Salary for Age Group 44-56 – ALL CANADA) and summed it with the 2019 75th percentile of net income of $882,060 multiplied by the incumbent count (N) of 2400 (Table 10A: Incorporated Partners Estimated Net Income for Age Group 44-56 (By Corporations) - ALL CANADA). This value was then divided by the sum of the two incumbent counts to determine the weighted average value.

Table 11B: Net Income for Age Group 44-56 vs Judicial Salary (with Annuity) – Weighted Average for Unincorporated and Incorporated – ALL CANADA

Year	Judicial Salary (with Annuity Valuation of 28%)	Count (N)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income	Difference between Judicial Salary and the P75 Net Income
				$	%
2019	$422,272	6,160	$656,976	-$234,704	-36%
2020	$433,664	5,924	$753,538	-$319,874	-42%
2021	$462,208	6,120	$815,874	-$353,666	-43%
2022	$476,416	5,899	$774,408	-$297,992	-38%
2023	$491,136	--	$853,857	-$362,721	-42%
2024	$507,776	--	$895,321	-$387,545	-43%

Note: As the StatsCan data only covers the years 2019 to 2022, the trend analysis for 2023 and 2024 is based on the combined data from 2019 to 2022.

Observations:

- Judicial Salary with Annuity vs. 75th Percentile Net Income:
  - Including the judicial annuity valuation, the judicial salary is well below the 75th percentile net income of self-employed lawyers, with differences ranging from $234,704 to $353,666 between 2019 and 2022. For example, in 2019, the judicial salary was 64% of the 75th percentile net income for self-employed lawyers, which was $656,976.
  - Trend analysis predicts that for 2023 and 2024, the judicial salary would be 57% to 58% of the 75th percentile net income, indicating that the judicial salary is likely to be $362,721 below the 75th percentile net income in 2023 and $387,545 below the 75th percentile net income in 2024.

- Summary: The net income for private practice lawyers, across Canada, and in the age group of 44-56, reveals a gap between judicial salaries and the incomes of legal professionals at the 75th percentile. The trend analysis suggests that this gap will remain, growing towards a $387,545 income difference in 2024.

5 CONCLUSION

EY completed a comprehensive review to understand the current landscape of self-employed lawyers' salaries in Canada.

Based on the data reviewed, EY has determined that there is a significant disparity between the market pay levels and the current judicial salary. The table below illustrates the gap of the current judicial salary, with and without the annuity valuation, relative to the 75th percentile net income from the combined CRA and StatsCan datasets, for all of Canada.

Table 12A: Weighted Average Net Income of Unincorporated (CRA) and Incorporated (StatsCan) Self-Employed Lawyers vs Judicial Salary for Age Group 44-56 – All CANADA 2022

Year	Judicial Salary	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income	Difference between Judicial Salary and the P75 Net Income
			$	%
2022	$372,200	$774,408	-$402,208	-52%

Table 12B: Weighted Average Net Income of Unincorporated (CRA) and Incorporated (StatsCan) Self-Employed Lawyers vs Judicial Salary (with Annuity) for Age Group 44-56 – All CANADA 2022

Year	Judicial Salary (with Annuity Valuation of 28%)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income	Difference between Judicial Salary and the P75 Net Income
			$	%
2022	$476,416	$774,408	-$297,992	-38%

Referencing the combined data in Tables 11A and 11B, the analysis indicates that market compensation levels for the 75th percentile (upper quartile) for 2022 is $774,408 and the income difference from judicial salary to this data point is $402,208 and from judicial salary (including the annuity valuation) to this data point is $297,992.

The trend analysis indicates that without adjustments, the gap between judicial salaries and market pay levels will continue to widen. This widening gap could impact the attractiveness of judicial positions, making it more challenging to hire outstanding candidates.

6 APPENDICES

6.1 APPENDIX I: SUMMARY OF UNUSED DATA SOURCES

EY has conducted a thorough review of the datasets provided to determine which datasets are useful for determining the income of self-employed lawyers and which are not. Below is a list of datasets that we have decided not to use in our analysis, along with the rationale for their exclusion.

Canada Revenue Agency: Corporations with NAICS Code 541110

The CRA data on legal corporations provides insights into T2 partnership income of corporations with NAICS code 541110 (as cross-referenced with the tax form T5013). For this dataset, EY primarily focused on tables B and D. Out of the six tables, only tables B, D, and F apply the income threshold of $90,000. In section 3.1, we elaborate further on why an accurate analysis requires considering only incomes above $90,000. Among these three tables, table F specifies that it does not include matching partnerships, which is not relevant for our purposes. Our objective with this dataset was to find data that could serve as a proxy for incorporated self-employed lawyers. Therefore, EY conducted a primary analysis of table B and D below.

Relevant Data Source Files Received:

- All Canada: The "QUADCOMM T2 Province NAICS Threshold Breakdown_Final" - "All Corporations with NAICS Code 541110, Net Non-Farming Income Amounts Above $90,000" (Cell AM & AR) dataset provides corporation-level partnership income data across Canada in the "total" rows of the documents, which includes information on partner count and 75th percentile net income above $90,000 for the entire reported population (age group 35-69) from 2019 to 2022[16]. The Cell AM & AR data are more relevant compared to other columns. The key reason is that the population of PLCs is overinclusive, as shareholders of the corporations are not necessarily lawyers. This means it encompasses a broader range of entities than necessary for our analysis, as explained in more detail below. Such over inclusiveness can dilute the specificity and accuracy of the data, making it less useful for targeted insights. Therefore, the AM & AR columns of T2 Partnership are the most relevant as they specifically target partnership income.

[16] Excel file "QUADCOMM T2 Province NAICS Threshold Breakdown_Final" by Canada Revenue Agency.

Table 13A: CRA – Table B – Incorporated Partners – All CANADA

Year	Count (N)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income
2019	3,480	$891,000
2020	3,920	$925,000
2021	4,310	$1,031,000
2022	4,300	$1,008,000
Average	4,003	$963,750

- All Canada: The "QUADCOMM T2 Province NAICS Threshold Breakdown_Final" - " Corporations with NAICS Code 541110 that Have a Matching Partnership, Net Non-Farming Income Amount Above $90,000" (Cell AM & AR) dataset also provides corporation-level net income data across Canada in the "total" rows of the document, which includes information on partner count and 75th percentile net income above $90,000 for the entire reported population (age group 35-69) from 2019 to 2022. The potential discrepancy between the data points in these two tables (B and D) may be attributed to Table D's requirement for a valid Business Number (BN) number for partnership filings. In addition, in Table D, the data for several provinces is missing, presumably for confidentiality reasons.

Table 13B: CRA – Table D – Incorporated Partners – All CANADA (Matching Partnership)

Year	Count (N)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income
2019	3,160	$904,000
2020	3,540	$940,000
2021	3,910	$1,051,000
2022	3,920	$1,032,000
Average	3,633	$981,750

EY did not utilize the data summarized in Tables 13A and 13B above, due the following disadvantages:

Disadvantages of Using This Data Source for Incorporated Lawyer Net Income:

- The T2 dataset includes a wide range of corporations, such as legal corporations with other investments in partnership structures (which report both income amounts in the same box), legal corporations that are not part of a partnership but are picking up partnership investment income. Many of these are not relevant to our assessment of the of the private sector comparator. As we are interested only in individuals that practice through a corporation, as opposed to various corporate structures that have the 541110 NAICS code, the T2 dataset is overinclusive and contains many irrelevant corporations. It therefore does not constitute a suitable dataset for our purposes (unless the data is cross-referenced with other information).

- Regarding the dataset itself, there are inconsistencies that further compromise its reliability. As shown above, there is a discrepancy in the T2 partnership data between the two tables, even though both tables have the same criteria for net non-farming income and the $90,000 cut-off, and both targeted columns refer to partnerships. However, the count in Table 13A is 3,480 and in Table 13B is 3,160 for 2019. The inconsistency here raises concerns. In Table 13A, the partnership data is problematic because the Partnership Income from Schedule 1 on the T2 does not require detailed information about the partnership itself, only the number. This means we cannot be certain that the income is derived from professional legal activities. On the other hand, Table 13B may not capture all partnership data, as it requires a valid BN number for inclusion. This discrepancy highlights the potential noise, errors, or biases in CRA data, which could create confusion and undermine the accuracy of the analysis. Due to the inconsistencies reported above, we have concluded that this would not be a reliable source to reference.

Statistics Canada: Unincorporated Partners of Legal Partnerships:

The StatsCan data provides partnership (T5013) information under the NAICS code 541110 (Offices of Lawyers), which includes the net partnership income share of unincorporated self-employed lawyers across Canada and the CMAs[17].

Relevant Data Source File Received:

- All Canada: The "partners_cma_2018_2022_NEW" - "individual_canada_90k_ni" dataset provides individual-level net income for unincorporated lawyers receiving partnership income. Data is provided across Canada and includes information on partner count and 75th percentile net income above $90,000 for the entire reported population from 2019 to 2022.

Table 14A: StatsCan – Unincorporated Partner Net Income – All CANADA

Year	Count (N)	75th Percentile (P75) Net Income
2019	8,760	$467,000
2020	8,590	$512,000
2021	8,520	$558,000
2022	8,300	$516,000
Average	8,543	$513,250

We did not utilize this data in our analysis, due the following disadvantages:

Disadvantages of Using This Data Source for Unincorporated Lawyer Net Income

- StatsCan data for unincorporated self-employed lawyers includes only partner income data. This means that the data is underinclusive compared to the traditional dataset from the CRA on self-employed lawyers used by prior Commissions, which includes all unincorporated self-employed lawyers, whether they are partners at a firm or not. In light of this, we have opted to use the broader CRA dataset on unincorporated self-employed lawyers.

- In addition, the StatsCan data on partner income could undervalue total compensation, as it does not capture the full spectrum of income sources for unincorporated lawyers, such as consulting fee of freelance legal work that is not earned through practicing in a partnership.

- The CMA data was mostly suppressed for confidentiality reasons.

[17] Word document "DoJ Quad 2024 notes" by Economic Analysis Division, Statistics Canada, June 2024.

Statistics Canada: Legal Corporations with NAICS Code 541110

The StatsCan dataset provides data on legal corporations' (T2) with the NAICS code 541110 (Offices of Lawyers), including net income with a low income threshold of $90,000 across Canada and in the top 10 Census Metropolitan Areas[18].

Relevant Data Source File Received:

- All Canada: The "plc_owners_Canada_90k_2018_2021" - "age_35_69_above90k_ni" and "age_44_56_above90_Canada_ni" datasets provide corporation-level net income data, including corporations' count and 75th percentile net income above $90,000 for the population aged 35-69 and 44-56 based on PLC owners' age from 2019 to 2021 across Canada.

- Top CMAs: The "plc_owners_cma_90k_2018_2021" - "age_35_69_above90k_ni" and "age_44_56_above90_Canada_ni" datasets provide corporation-level net income data, including corporations' count and 75th percentile net income above $90,000 for the population aged 35-69 and 44-56 based on PLC owners' age from 2019 to 2021, in the top 10 Census Metropolitan Areas.

Disadvantages of Using This Data Source for Incorporated Self-Employed Lawyer Income

- This dataset is overinclusive because it includes all corporations with NAICS code 541110, even those where some of the shareholders are potentially not lawyers, thereby diluting the specificity and relevance of the data for our assessment. It is also overinclusive because it includes entire law firms that operate as corporations (rather than LLPs), instead of only incorporated self-employed lawyers.

- This dataset does not contain the key data point that would allow us to determine the total compensation of incorporated self-employed lawyers, as it only contains the net income of the corporation, not the gross income. When considering a single incorporated lawyer, the net income of the PLC is not representative of total compensation for that lawyer, as the lawyer will in most cases pay themself a portion of the income as salary, thereby reducing the net income declared on the corporations' T2. For an incorporated partner of a law firm, the determination of compensation requires insight into earnings flowing into the corporation, that is, the PLC's gross income.

  For a law firm with multiple owners operating as a corporation, the total net income of the entire firm does not provide insight into the compensation of individual lawyers.

  In both cases, the dataset does not allow us to isolate the total income of an incorporated self-employed lawyer.

- The dataset does not include data for the year 2022.

[18] Word document "DoJ Quad 2024 notes" by Economic Analysis Division, Statistics Canada, June 2024.

6.2 APPENDIX II: TERMS AND DEFINITIONS

Terms	Definitions
Number of Incumbents	The total count of individuals currently holding a specific position or job title.
Base Salary	The fixed amount of money that an employee receives from their employer as compensation for their work, excluding any additional bonuses, benefits, or other forms of compensation.
Target Short-term Incentive (STI)	The predetermined amount or percentage of an employee's compensation that is set aside as a bonus or incentive for achieving specific short-term performance goals.
Target Total Compensation	The total amount of compensation that an employee is targeted to receive, including base salary, bonuses, incentives, and any other forms of compensation.
Net Income	The amount of money that remains after all expenses, taxes, and costs have been subtracted from total revenue. It represents the profit of a company or individual after all financial obligations have been met.
The 75th Percentile (P75)	A statistical measure that indicates the value below which 75% of the data points in a data set fall.
As a % of the P75	This metric represents a given value (such as a salary or income) as a percentage of the 75th percentile value within a specific dataset. It is calculated by dividing the given value by the 75th percentile value and multiplying the result by 100.
Variance	The degree of variation or fluctuation in compensation levels for a specific job or position within the market, indicating how much salaries can differ from the market P75.

6.3 APPENDIX III: REFERENCES

The following Resources were referenced by EY to support the analysis:

1. "Compensation Review of Federally Appointed Judges – Department of Justice regarding the 2020 Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission" by JDM Actuarial Expert Services Inc., 26 March 2021.
2. Tables derived from Appointment Demographics provided by the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs.
3. "Statistics Reports" by Federation of Law Societies of Canada.
4. "Labour Force Survey" by Statistics Canada.
5. "Consumer Price Index (CPI)" by Statistics Canada. Surveys and statistical programs - Consumer Price Index (CPI).
6. "Consumer Price Index, monthly, not seasonally adjusted - Table: 18-10-0004-01" by Statistics Canada, Consumer Price Index, monthly, not seasonally adjusted.
7. "Average weekly earnings by industry, monthly, unadjusted for seasonality - Table: 14-10-0203-01" by Statistics Canada. Average weekly earnings by industry, monthly, unadjusted for seasonality.
8. Report of the Sixth Quadrennial Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission, dated August 30, 2021 (Turcotte Commission Report).
9. Joint Submissions of the CSJA and CJC, March 29, 2021.
10. "Guide for Candidates" of the Office of the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs.
11. Reports requested from the CRA by one or both parties.
12. Reports requested from the CRA on Professional Legal Corporations.
13. Reports requested from the Statistics Canada on Professional Legal Corporations.
14. Letter of Agreement with Statistics Canada, with effective date June 19, 2024.
15. "DoJ Quad 2024 notes" from Statistics Canada, June 2024.

EY | Building a better working world

EY exists to build a better working world, helping to create long-term value for clients, people and society and build trust in the capital markets.

Enabled by data and technology, diverse EY teams in over 150 countries provide trust through assurance and help clients grow, transform and operate.

Working across assurance, consulting, law,

ey.com/ca

QUEEN'S BENCH FOR SASKATCHEWAN

Citation: 2018 SKQB 50

Date: 2018 02 06
Docket: QBG 3 of 2017
Judicial Centre: Yorkton

BETWEEN:

SANDRA BARBOUR

APPLICANT

- and -

TOWN OF ITUNA

RESPONDENT

Counsel:

C. Mervin Ozirny — for the applicant
David Kreklewich — for the respondent

JUDGMENT — ELSON J.
February 6, 2018

INTRODUCTION

[1] This is an originating application for an order, pursuant to s. 358(1)(a) of The Municipalities Act, SS 2005, c M-36.1 [Act], quashing Resolution 163/2016 passed by the council of the Town of Ituna [Town]. The primary grounds for the application assert that the Town acted contrary to ss. 137(1) and 140 of the Act. The alternative grounds are that the Town acted contrary to the terms of its own resolution in the manner that it issued the call for tenders.

[2] For the reasons that follow, I have decided to allow the application. That said, and as reflected in my reasons, this decision is based on an analysis that differs from that presented by the applicant's counsel. In my view, the unlawfulness of the Town's conduct does not pertain to s. 137(1) of the Act. Rather it is founded on its failure to submit a resolution to the electors that accorded with the petitioners' request, as directed by s. 136(1) of the Act. In this respect, I find the Town's failure to be more serious than counsel's submission suggested. Although the failure could arguably justify the quashing of resolutions that preceded Resolution 163/2016, I have concluded that I must limit my decision to the specific relief sought in the application.

[3] Also, before proceeding further with this decision, I must extend my apologies to counsel and both parties for the delay in completing this decision. Certain of the issues raised in this case have not been addressed directly in earlier jurisprudence. As grateful as I was for the submissions of counsel, I determined that this case required more, and somewhat different, analysis than was presented to the court. This took more time than I had anticipated.

[4] Further, and as counsel are likely aware, there have been judicial vacancies on this Court that have gone unfilled for an extended period. Coupled with the greater urgency to try criminal matters in a timely way, the judicial vacancies have resulted in the "perfect storm" of triple booked court rooms and cancellation of allotted judgment writing time. Under such circumstances, the justices of this Court are doing the best they can with the limited resources available. I thank the parties and counsel for their patience.

FACTS

[5] The court received four affidavits in this matter, including one from the applicant and one from Alvin Garchinski, who served as mayor of the Town from October 2012 to October 2016. The court also received affidavits from two other deponents. For reasons disclosed later in this judgment, I have not considered those affidavits in assessing the merits of this application. The facts referenced in this judgment are drawn from the two affidavits I have considered, as well as the appended exhibits.

[6] The relevant events surround the Town's acquisition of the former government owned liquor store at 24-1st Street N.E. in Ituna, and the potential use of that property. The Saskatchewan Liquor and Gaming Authority [SLGA] had closed the store some time before the summer of 2014. In August of that year, the SLGA asked the Town whether it would be interested in purchasing the parcel of property on where the former store stood.

[7] The Town considered the offer, including SLGA's statement that the property had an appraised value of $148,000.00. Eventually, the Town offered to purchase the property for $10,151.32 an offer that SLGA accepted. The date of the offer and acceptance were not disclosed in the evidence before me. That said, the court received minutes of the Town council meeting of March 31, 2015. At that meeting, council passed a resolution approving the purchase of the property for the price reflected in the accepted offer. The recorded vote for the resolution listed seven votes in favour of the resolution and one opposed. Mayor Garchinski was the sole dissenting vote.

[8] After the acquisition of the liquor store property, the Town council had to address the use to which it would be put. At its meeting of July 14, 2015, council considered two resolutions. The first resolution was for the Town to put the former liquor store property up for sale by tender to be advertised in local newspapers. This resolution was defeated by a recorded vote of two votes in favour and four votes opposed.

[9] Following the defeat of this resolution, and at the same meeting, the Town council passed a resolution to invite the board of the Ituna branch of the Parkland Regional Library to its workshop meeting of July 28, 2015 "to discuss the feasibility of the local Library Board turning its attention to relocation of the library and what requirements would be needed."

[10] I digress from the narrative at this point to describe the circumstances of the Ituna and District Library [Ituna Library]. The Ituna Library is a branch of the Parkland Regional Library [PRL], which is established pursuant to the provisions of The Public Libraries Act, 1996, SS 1996, c P-39.2. The affidavit evidence disclosed that the Ituna Library serves the residents of four municipalities: the Town; the Rural Municipality of Ituna Bon Accord, No. 246 (which surrounds the Town); the Rural Municipality of Tullymet No. 216; and the Village of Hubbard. In the summer of 2015, the branch was located in a building owned by the Town and the surrounding rural municipality.

[11] Presumably, the workshop meeting of July 28, 2015 took place. However, there are no minutes of that meeting before me, nor is there any evidence in the affidavit of matters that were discussed at the meeting.

[12] On August 11, 2015, the issue came back before the Town council. At that time, council passed Resolution 189/2015 by which it decided to contact the PRL and advise it that the Town required it to move the Ituna Library from its present location to the former liquor store property and that the move be carried out as soon as physically possible. According to Mayor Garchinski's affidavit, the board of the PRL had not initiated any contact with the Town about a possible move.

[13] The passage of Resolution 189/2015 prompted a group of electors to collect signatures for a petition to request a referendum on the matter. The petition requested that the following specific question be put to the electors in the referendum:

> Should the Ituna Town Council rescind its motion to relocate the Ituna Local Library and tender the former Ituna Liquor Store for sale?

[14] The petitioners submitted the completed petition to the Town office some time before the council's workshop meeting on September 22, 2015. Council was informed of the petition at that meeting. The minutes of this meeting, mistakenly recorded as having occurred on September 24, 2015, shows that the Town administrator advised council that the petition was sufficient. The minutes also reflect that, when reporting to the meeting, the Town administrator commented on the wording of the petition. As recorded in the minutes, the comment reads "Even Though (sic) the wording of the petition is not similar to the actual resolution the intent is there." According to the minutes, the discussion about the petition ended with a reference to the upcoming meeting of council, scheduled for October 13, 2015.

[15] As it turned out, the Town council did not formally address the petition until its regular meeting of November 17, 2015. At that meeting, council passed three resolutions providing for a referendum to be held on February 10, 2016. Resolution 284/2015 specifically set out the resolution to be submitted to the electors in the referendum. It read as follows:

> Do you want the Town of Ituna to retain ownership of the former Liquor store and move the Parkland Regional Library Ituna Branch to that location?

[16] At this point, it should be noted that there is no record in the evidence that any elector, including the applicant, objected to the wording of the submitted resolution. One of the affidavits that I have otherwise not considered referenced an unreported decision of Megaw J. in 2015. The deponent said that the application my colleague heard was "regarding the referendum question…". This evidence is misleading. I have read the decision in Pringle v Town of Ituna, unreported, October 30, 2015. That application, brought with the wrong procedure, was for an injunction to restrain access and relocation of the Ituna Library to the former liquor store property until after the referendum. Megaw J. did not opine on the lawfulness, or not, of the submitted resolution. In fact, the submitted resolution was not even drafted by the time this application was heard.

[17] The referendum was held, as scheduled, on February 10, 2016. The results of the referendum vote were 101 votes for the "yes" answer and 114 votes for the "no" answer. One ballot was rejected.

[18] Following the referendum, the Town council passed Resolution 84/2016 at its regular meeting of March 15, 2016. By that resolution, council moved, without a recorded vote, to tender the former liquor store property. The resolution was carried, without a recorded vote.

[19] Although not specifically referenced in the minutes of the meeting, the applicant, who attended the meeting, described some of the debate among council members pertaining to Resolution 84/2016. Specifically, she deposed that some council members raised concerns about as to how much potential bidders might offer. Despite this, there is no evidence of any decision made by council regarding the amount it might be inclined to accept. The applicant also deposes to some discussion, among council members, about the opportunity to re-tender in the event the submitted bids were "really low."

[20] Following the March meeting, the call for tenders was advertised. According to Mayor Garchinski's affidavit, the call for tenders was advertised in the Melville Advance newspaper and publicized on both the Town's website and its Facebook page. The tender notice, which was exhibited in the material, stipulated a deadline of June 15, 2016. It further stipulated that the Town reserved the right, at its sole discretion, to accept or reject in whole or in part, any or all bid proposals. It further stipulated that the highest or any tender will not necessarily be accepted and the bidder must provide in their proposal the intent for use of the building.

[21] After the close of tenders, the Town council met at its next regular meeting on June 21, 2016. The minutes for that meeting disclose that the Town had received three bids. One bid, in the amount of $35,000.00, described a plan to purchase the building for use as a professional office building. The second bid, in the amount of $30,019.59, set out a proposal to use the building as a private liquor store. The third bid, in the amount of $30,000.00, described a plan to move the bidder's plumbing and heating business to the location. It also contemplated the prospect of renting space for the library if the space was adequate.

[22] The applicant also attended this meeting, and described, in her affidavit, the debate among members of council. Specifically, the applicant deposes that, prior to the opening of the bids, one councillor asked what council's plans were for relocating the Ituna Library to the former liquor store. The applicant then deposed that, after the tenders were opened, the discussion among councillors suggested that the bids were too low, and that the focus of council's discussion remained centred on relocating the Ituna Library to the former liquor store property. She further deposed that one councillor stated that whichever bidder won the tender should be prepared to sign a long-term lease with the Ituna Library. Finally, the applicant deposed that there was no discussion about re-tendering the sale of the property.

[23] Following the discussion, the Town council passed Resolution 141/2016, without a recorded vote. By this resolution, council agreed that the Town should interview the bidders in order to determine "exactly what they had in mind for the liquor store building."

[24] The Town council held a special meeting on July 6, 2016. At this meeting, council dealt with two resolutions pertaining to the former liquor store property. In Resolution 163/2016, council passed a motion rejecting all tenders received for the former liquor store property. The preface for the resolution stipulated that "no suitable tenders were received". Resolution 163/2016 passed with a recorded vote of four votes in favour and two votes against. Mayor Garchinski was one of the two council members to vote against the resolution.

[25] Despite the passage of Resolution 163/2016, the Town council then addressed Resolution 164/2016 which was to award the sale of the former liquor store property to the highest bidder on the understanding that full payment was to be made within 15 working days. This resolution was defeated, with a recorded vote of two votes in favour (including Mayor Garchinski) and four votes against.

[26] At council's regular meeting of July 19, 2016, council addressed only one resolution relating to the liquor store property. In Resolution 178/2016, council carried a resolution to instruct the Ituna Library to begin to move to the former liquor store building as soon as possible.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Relevant Provisions of the Act

[27] There are a number of provisions of the Act that, to varying degrees, are pertinent to this application. I do not propose to recite all of them. In my view, the most relevant provisions are ss. 358, 3, 136, 137 and 140. These provisions, in the order referenced, read as follows:

> 358(1) Subject to subsections (2) and (3), any voter of a municipality , any owner or occupant of property or a business within the municipality or the minister may apply to the court to quash a bylaw or resolution in whole or in part on the basis that:
>
> (a) the bylaw or resolution is illegal in substance or form;
>
> (b) the proceedings before the passing of the bylaw or resolution do not comply with this or any other Act; or

(c) the manner of passing the bylaw or resolution does not comply with this or any other enactment.

(2) An application pursuant to this section must be made to the court within six months after the bylaw or resolution is passed.

(3) No application may be made pursuant to this section to quash a bylaw described in section 167.

(4) A judge of the court may require an applicant to provide security for costs in an amount and manner established by the judge.

(5) A judge of the court may quash the bylaw or resolution in whole or in part and may award costs for or against the municipality and determine the scale of costs.

(6) If no application is made pursuant to subsection (1), the bylaw or resolution is binding, notwithstanding any lack of substance or form in the bylaw or resolution, in the proceedings before its passing or in the time or manner of its passing.

…

3(1) This Act recognizes that municipalities, as local governments:

(a) are a responsible and accountable level of government within their jurisdiction, being created and empowered by the Province of Saskatchewan; and

(b) are subject to provincial laws and to certain limits and restrictions in the provincial interest as set out in this and other Acts.

(2) Having regard to the principles mentioned in subsection (1), the purposes of this Act are the following:

(a) to provide the legal structure and framework within which municipalities must govern themselves and make the decisions that they consider appropriate and in the best interests of their residents;

(b) to provide municipalities with the powers, duties and functions necessary to fulfil their purposes;

(c) to provide municipalities with the flexibility to respond to the existing and future needs of their residents in creative and innovative ways;

(d) to ensure that, in achieving these objectives, municipalities are accountable to the people who elect them and are responsible for encouraging and enabling public participation in the governance process.

…

136(1) If the administrator reports to council that a petition for a referendum is sufficient, the council shall take any steps that it considers necessary to submit to the voters a bylaw or resolution in accordance with the request of the petitioners.

(2) The council shall submit the bylaw or resolution to the voters:

(a) before the end of the year in which the petition is filed, if the petition is filed with the administrator:

(i) on or before July 1 in the year in which a general election is held pursuant to section 10 of The Local Government Election Act, 2015; or

(ii) in the case of a resort village, on or before March 1 in the year in which a general election is held pursuant to section 10 of The Local Government Election Act, 2015; or

(b) within nine months after the petition is filed, if the petition is filed with the administrator at any time other than the time mentioned in clause (a).

(3) Repealed. 2011, c.9, s.67.

(4) The wording of the draft bylaw or resolution as it will appear on the ballot must be set by council at least eight weeks before the vote.

(5) A council is not required to submit a bylaw or resolution to a referendum if the council passes a bylaw or resolution that accords with the bylaw or resolution requested in the petition before the referendum would otherwise have to be conducted.

(6) If a referendum is conducted on a bylaw or resolution, the council may refuse to receive any further petition on the same or a similar subject filed within three years after the date of the vote.

137(1) If a proposed bylaw or resolution is approved by a vote at a referendum by a majority of the persons voting whose ballots are not > rejected, the council shall pass the bylaw or resolution at the first meeting following the vote.

>
> (2) If a majority of the persons voting at a referendum do not approve the proposed resolution or bylaw, the council is not required to pass the proposed resolution or bylaw, but the council may pass the proposed resolution or bylaw if it chooses to do so.
>
> …
>
> 140(1) Subject to subsection (3), a bylaw or resolution that a council was required to pass as a result of a vote of the voters may be amended or repealed only if:
>
> > (a) a vote of the voters is held on the proposed amendment or repeal and the majority of the persons voting whose ballots are not rejected vote in favour of the proposed amendment or repeal;
> >
> > (b) three years have passed from the date that the bylaw or resolution was passed and public notice is given of the proposed amendment or repeal; or
> >
> > (c) amendment or repeal is necessary to avert an imminent danger to the health or safety of the residents of the municipality
>
> (2) Public notice required by clause (1)(b) must be given at least 21 days before the proposed amendment or repeal.
>
> (3) A bylaw or resolution that a council was required to pass as a result of a vote of the voters may be amended if the amendment does not affect the substance of the bylaw or resolution

An Illegal Bylaw or Resolution

[28] The applicant's motion expressly engages s. 358(1)(a) of the Act. Under this provision, the court has the jurisdiction to quash a bylaw or resolution on the basis of it being illegal due to any lack of substance or form. The term "illegal" is not expressly defined in the Act. The absence of an express definition raises two questions. Firstly, what is the nature of the court's jurisdiction under s. 358(1)(a)? Secondly, in the exercise of that jurisdiction, what is the standard of review the court must apply in assessing the legality, or not, of Resolution 163/2016?

[29] In London (City)v RSJ Holdings Inc., 2007 SCC 29, [2007] 2 SCR 588 [RSJ Holdings], the Supreme Court of Canada addressed the question of illegality in its interpretation of a similar provision of the Ontario statute. In doing so, the court provided helpful guidance on both questions.

[30] The analysis in RSJ Holdings is assisted by an understanding of the background facts. The applicant in that case was a developer who had purchased residential property in London, Ontario, with the intention of demolishing the existing building and constructing four individual units in its place. In order to serve this purpose, the developer submitted a site plan to the city, along with applications for both a demolition permit and a building permit. The city eventually held closed-door meetings during which it was recommended that a land use study be undertaken and that the city council approve an interim bylaw to freeze all development in the area, which included where the developer's property was located. The interim bylaw was then passed by city council in a subsequent open session.

[31] The developer applied for an order quashing the interim bylaw on the grounds of illegality, asserting that the city had not complied with the open meeting requirements set out in the Municipal Act, 2001, SO 2001, c 25. At first instance, the motions court's jurisdiction to address the interim bylaw was set out in s. 273 of the same statute, which is the relative equivalent of s. 358 of the Act in Saskatchewan. The applicable Ontario provision, at the time in question, read as follows:

> 273. (1) Upon the application of any person, the Superior Court of Justice may quash a by-law of a municipality in whole or in part for illegality.

[32] The Supreme Court of Canada, speaking through the judgment of Charron J., agreed with the developer that the city had breached the open meeting requirements of the statute. As a consequence, she concluded that the test for illegality had been met. In arriving at this conclusion, Charron J. described the discretionary nature of the court's jurisdiction at para. 39:

> 39 The power to quash a by-law for illegality contained in s. 273(1) of the Municipal Act, 2001 is discretionary. Of course, in exercising its discretion, the court cannot act in an arbitrary manner. The discretion must be exercised judicially and in accordance with established principles of law. Hence, when there is a total absence of jurisdiction, a court acting judicially will quash the by-law. In other cases, a number of factors may inform the court's exercise of discretion including, the nature of the by-law in question, the seriousness of the illegality committed, its consequences, delay, and mootness.

[33] As for the standard of review, Charron J. rejected the city's argument that the court's review, under s. 273(1) should be guided by the principle of deference. In this respect, she said the following, at para 37:

> 37…. Nonetheless, the City argues that the overarching principle which should govern the court on a s. 273 review of a municipal by-law is one of deference. While this approach may be appropriate on a review of the merits of a municipal decision, in my view, the City's argument is misguided here. Municipalities are creatures of statute and can only act within the powers conferred on them by the provincial legislature: Shell Canada Products Ltd. v. Vancouver (City), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 231 at p. 273. On the question of "illegality" which is central to a s. 273 review, municipalities do not possess any greater institutional expertise than the courts — "[t]he test on jurisdiction and questions of law is correctness": Nanaimo (City) v. Rascal Trucking Ltd., 2000 SCC 13, [2000] 1 S.C.R. 342 at para. 29.

[34] In Hughes v Eston (Town), 2008 SKQB 26, 309 Sask R 167 [Hughes] Mills J. considered the analysis from RSJ Holdings, and applied it when considering the nature of this Court's jurisdiction under s. 358(1)(a). In Hughes, the applicant argued that the municipality had passed a resolution that was illegal in that it was based on the municipality's breach of contract and/or bias. Although Mills J. concluded that the evidence before him did not conclusively support either basis for the application, he made some helpful comments on the application of s. 358(1)(a). In his view, if there was conclusive evidence of breach of contract, it would have been open to the court to find illegality on that basis, even without evidence of bad faith in the municipality's conduct. He concluded that the term "illegality" was broad enough to include a breach of contract.

[35] Even so, Mills J. went on to say that, where illegality is found on such a basis, the analysis from RSJ Holdings does not necessarily lead to a quashing of the challenged resolution. Basing his comments on such a hypothetical situation, Mills J. said the following, at para. 26:

> 26 …. The court is to exercise its discretion in a judicial manner, and although a breach of contract has occurred and an illegal resolution therefore passed, the resolution need not be quashed. For example when determining the issue identified by the Supreme Court as to the seriousness of the illegal action, a resolution passed in bad faith for the purpose of eliminating contractual obligations would be more serious and more likely to be quashed than a technical breach of contract or a breach of contract occurring because of a legitimate disagreement as to its contents. In the latter cases, it is possible that the resolution may be quashed, but it is not as likely to easily flow, and the issue would have to be balanced in relation to the other matters identified by the court for consideration.

The Petition and Referendum Process

[36] At the hearing of this matter, both parties addressed the Town's decision to submit a resolution to the electors that differed from the wording of the petition's request. As earlier mentioned, no one sought judicial review of the Town's decision to frame the submitted resolution as it did. Even so, the applicant contends that the difference between the petition's request and the submitted resolution reflects badly on the Town, and illustrates its desire to proceed with its earlier agenda, irrespective of the voters' wishes. It is contended that this is a factor the court can and should consider in measuring the lack of good faith in the Town's actions.

[37] On the other hand, the Town argues that the change in wording was entirely within its discretion. Further, it contends that the resolution put to the electors was not inconsistent with the petition's request.

[38] Processes for municipalities to receive and act upon public petitions, in one form or other, have been part of the statutory fabric of municipal law in Canada for many years. In Saskatchewan, the statutory rules for the receipt of petitions and the conduct of referenda are set out in Part VI of the Act, pertaining to public accountability. Within Part VI, ss. 131 to 140 specifically pertain to referenda. Of these provisions, s. 131 authorizes a municipal council, on its own initiative, to submit any proposed bylaw or resolution, or alternative proposed bylaws or resolutions, to the voters in a referendum. Sections 132 to 136 specifically govern situations where voters petition for a referendum on a bylaw or resolution, subject to certain exceptions set out in s. 136(1). Sections 137 to 140 apply to all referenda, whether initiated by petition or the municipal council, itself.

[39] In my view, there are two provisions of Part VI that deserve particular attention. These provision are s. 136, particularly s. 136(1), and s. 137. In the submissions and briefs received, little attention was given to the possible interpretation of either provision. In its brief, the Town argued that s. 137(2) justified the Town's decision to act as it did, but otherwise ignored the implication of s. 137 in the interpretation of s. 136(1).

[40] Section 136 governs the responsibility of a municipality's council once a submitted petition is found to be sufficient. Specifically, s. 136(1) obliges the council to "take any steps that it considers necessary" to arrange a referendum on a bylaw or resolution "in accordance with the request of the petitioners." In the construction of s. 136(1), the question arises as to how much liberty a municipality has in the modifying a request put forward by petitioners in a valid and sufficient petition.

[41] Section 137 sets out the obligations and rights of a municipality's council when a bylaw or resolution is addressed in a referendum, whether that referendum is prompted by petition or the council's own initiative. Where the majority of electors approve the proposed bylaw or resolution, s. 137(1) obliges the council to pass the approved bylaw or resolution at the first meeting following the vote. Where the majority of electors do not approve the proposed bylaw or resolution, s. 137(2) gives council the choice either to ignore the proposed bylaw or resolution, or to pass it.

[42] As illustrated later in this judgment, the prevailing approach to the interpretation of statutes is aided by a consideration of the statute's purpose. In the present case, s. 3 of the Act expressly sets out the statute's principles and purposes. Of particular significance to this case is the purpose articulated in s. 3(2)(d), which is to provide for public accountability in a municipality's decision-making. In this respect, the Act's purpose is twofold. First, it is to ensure that municipalities are accountable to its electors. Second, it is to ensure that municipalities "are responsible for encouraging and enabling public participation in the governance process."

[43] The accountability purpose reflected in s. 3 of the Act in not new. Well before its enactment in the current statute, the Supreme Court of Canada addressed the purpose of petition and plebiscite/referendum provisions in municipal governance statutes. In Cholod v Baker, [1976] 2 SCR 484 (WL) [Cholod], petitioners had presented a properly qualified petition to the council for the City of Regina. In it, the petitioners sought a plebiscite on the question as to whether a bylaw authorizing the construction of a new city hall should be repealed, and that the city proceed to renovate its existing premises. When the matter came before council, the petition was simply received and filed, with no further action taken. The applicant sought an order of mandamus to compel the city to proceed with a submission to the voters in accordance with the scheme, then set out in ss. 138 and 139 of The Urban Municipality Act, SS 1970, c 78 (rep).

[44] At first instance, and before the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal [[1975] 5 WWR 482 (Sask CA)], the request for mandamus was denied on the grounds that the petition and plebiscite provisions were not intended to give the electors the ability to control the lawful activities of the council. In particular, the Court of Appeal concluded that the provisions could not be used for the purpose of repealing validly enacted bylaws.

[45] The Supreme Court of Canada disagreed. The appeal was allowed and mandamus issued. In the view of Ritchie J, the scope of the legislation was broad enough to include petitions for the repeal of a bylaw. In describing the purpose of the statutory provisions, which I believe are thematically similar to ss. 136 and 137 of the Act in this case, Ritchie J. said the following at para. 16:

> 16. I am, on the contrary, of opinion that the provisions of ss. 138 and 139 (1) are expressly designed to provide the machinery for ensuring that the voters of the city shall be afforded a controlling voice in determining whether or not a bylaw which has been made the subject of a petition under s. 138 shall be enacted or not.

[46] The purpose articulated in the Cholod decision has been incorporated in the interpretation of similar legislation in other cases. Included in the list are three cases from Alberta, O'Callaghan v City of Edmonton (1978), 6 Alta LR (2d) 307 (Alta Dist Ct); Edmonton (City)v Ewasiuk (1979), 23 AR 225 (Alta CA) [Ewasiuk]; and Brown v Calgary (City) (1980), 110 DLR (3d) 465 (Alta CA).

Interpretation of s. 136(1) of the Act

[47] I now turn to the interpretation of s. 136(1) of the Act. In particular, it is necessary to address the question whether the Town acted lawfully when it submitted a resolution to the electors that differed from the petitioners' request.

[48] The prevailing approach to statutory interpretation is often described as the purposive approach, formulated by Elmer Driedger in Construction of Statutes, 2d ed (Toronto:Butterworths,1983). This approach was described by the Supreme Court of Canada in Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd.

(Re), [1998] 1 SCR 27, and then restated, with more analysis, in Bell ExpressVu Ltd. Partnership v Rex, 2002 SCC 42, [2002] 2 SCR 559 [Bell ExpressVu]. In Bell ExpressVu, Iacobucci J. described the approach as follows:

> 26 In Elmer Driedger's definitive formulation, found at p. 87 of his Construction of Statutes (2nd ed. 1983):
>
> > Today there is only one principle or approach, namely, the words of an Act are to be read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament.
>
> Driedger's modern approach has been repeatedly cited by this Court as the preferred approach to statutory interpretation across a wide range of interpretive settings: see, for example, Stubart Investments Ltd. v. R., [1984] 1 S.C.R. 536 at p. 578, per Estey J.; Québec (Communauté urbaine) c. Notre-Dame de Bonsecours (Corp.), [1994] 3 S.C.R. 3 at p. 17; Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd., Re, [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27 at para. 21; R. v. Gladue, [1999] 1 S.C.R. 688 at para. 25; R. v. Araujo, 2000 SCC 65 at para 26, [2000] 2 S.C.R. 992; R. v. Sharpe, 2001 SCC 2 at para 33, [2001] 1 S.C.R. 45 per McLachlin C.J.; Chieu v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship & Immigration), 2002 SCC 3 at para. 27. I note as well that, in the federal legislative context, this Court's preferred approach is buttressed by s. 12 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, which provides that every enactment "is deemed remedial, and shall be given such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as best ensures the attainment of its objects".
>
> 27 The preferred approach recognizes the important role that context must inevitably play when a court construes the written words of a statute: as Professor John Willis incisively noted in his seminal article "Statute Interpretation in a Nutshell" (1938), 16 Can. Bar Rev. 1, at p. 6, "words, like people, take their colour from their surroundings". This being the case, where the provision under consideration is found in an Act that is itself a component of a larger statutory scheme, the surroundings that colour the words and the scheme of the Act are more expansive. In such an instance, the application of Driedger's principle gives rise to what was described in R. v. Ulybel Enterprises Ltd., 2001 SCC 56 at para. 52, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 867, as "the principle of interpretation that presumes a > harmony, coherence, and consistency between statutes dealing with the same subject matter". (See also Murphy v. Welsh, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 1069 [a.k.a. Stoddard v. Watson], at p. 1079; Pointe-Claire (Ville) c. S.E.P.B., Local 57, [1997] 1 S.C.R. 1015 at para. 61, per Lamer C.J.)

[49] In keeping with the above approach, is noteworthy that s. 10 of The Interpretation Act, 1995, SS 1995, c I-11.2 is identical to its federal counterpart referenced by Iacobucci J.

[50] Applying the preferred approach to the interpretation of s. 136(1), the court must first consider the words of the provision in their grammatical and ordinary sense. Under s. 136(1), once a petition for a bylaw or resolution is found to be sufficient, the relevant municipal council is obliged to "take any steps that it considers necessary" to submit a bylaw or resolution that is "in accordance with the request of the petitioners." In its ordinary sense, the word "accordance" is simply a modification of the word "accord," which, either as a verb or noun, signifies a form of agreement or conformity. While the phrase "take any steps that it considers necessary" affords the council certain flexibility in the drafting of a proposed bylaw or resolution, such flexibility is limited to wording that is "in accordance" with the petition's request.

[51] The House of Lords addressed the meaning of the words "in accordance" in a decision almost 120 years ago. Although the decision is certainly dated, I think its analysis remains applicable. In Thomas v Kelly, [1886-90] All ER Reprint 431 (HL), the applicable statute stipulated that the bill of sale was void if it was not "in accordance" with the form prescribed by the statute. Lord Macnaghten expressed the view that the bill of sale could not differ in a manner that was characteristic of the prescribed form. In this respect, he said the following, at p. 438:

> It has been held, and I think rightly, that s. 9 does not require a bill of sale to be a verbal and literal transcript of the statutory form. The words of the Act are "in accordance with the form" not "in the form." But then comes the question: When is an instrument which purports to be a bill of sale not in accordance with the statutory form? Possibly when it departs from the statutory form in anything which is not merely a matter of verbal difference. Certainly I would say when it departs from the statutory form in anything which is a characteristic of that form.

[52] The comments of Lord FitzGerald, at p. 436, reflect a similar sentiment:

> I do not think that the legislature intended by the words "in accordance" a literal conformity with the statutable form of the bill of sale. I adopt the view of Bowen L.J., that it is sufficient if the bill of sale is substantially in accordance with and does not the part from the prescribed form in any material respect.

[53] Although not addressed in the context of the statutory use of the phrase "in accordance", the foregoing comments were favourably referenced by Lamont J. in Rumely Co. v Registrar of Saskatoon Land Registration District (1911), 4 Sask LR 466 (Sask CA).

[54] When interpreting s. 136(1) in the context, scheme and purpose of the Act, I think it is particularly important to consider the other referendum provisions of the statute. In this respect, I find it notable that, when the matter is to be submitted to the electors of a municipality, the relevant provisions described the matter as presented or submitted in the form of a "draft" (s. 136(4)) or "proposed" (s. 137) bylaw or resolution. This takes on particular significance when one notes that s. 137 addresses the consequences of a referendum's result in the context of whether or not the proposed bylaw or resolution is "approved" or not.

[55] This context is instructive. In my view, s. 136(1) obliges a municipal council to draft a bylaw or resolution that does something more than simply address the subject matter of the petition's request. Rather, the drafted bylaw or resolution must accord with the proposal reflected in the petition's request. In this way, voters are properly being asked whether they approve, or not, the bylaw or resolution that the petitioners propose.

[56] Although the analysis was not precisely described in this way, I think that support for the above interpretation is found in the Alberta Court of Appeal's decision in Ewasiuk. In that judgment, Prowse J.A., speaking for the court, suggested that the Supreme Court judgment in Cholod stood for the authority that the subject matter of a proposed bylaw must be set with such clarity that the council, the petitioners and the court can identify with certainty the subject matter to be dealt with in the proposed bylaw.

[57] Turning this analysis to the present case, the request presented by petitioners is a complicated matter somewhat in that it contained two proposals, one for the rescission of Resolution 189/2015, and the other for the tender of the former liquor store property. Although related, each proposal could arguably stand alone as separate resolutions. Even so, the proposal clearly reflected in the petitioners' request was that the Town rescind Resolution 189/2015, and deal with the former liquor store property in a way that differed substantially from that resolution.

[58] Despite this clear proposal, the Town submitted a resolution that differed from the petitioners' request in three respects. Firstly, it reversed the order of the two proposals contained in the petitioners' request by putting the matter of the Town's continued ownership of the former liquor store property ahead of the decision to relocate the Ituna Library to that property. Secondly, the submitted resolution rephrased the request in such a way that those who supported the request would be obliged to vote against the submitted resolution. Thirdly, the submitted resolution did not expressly ask the voters to rescind, or not, the Town's decision to relocate the Ituna Library (Resolution 189/2015).

[59] These differences were significant. In particular, they underscore the importance of interpreting s. 136(1) in association with s. 137. By putting the submitted resolution to the electors in the manner that it did, it could be said that the Town effectively preserved the impact of Resolution 189/2015, irrespective of the referendum result. The explanation for this conclusion follows in the next paragraph.

[60] As worded, the resolution it submitted to the electors essentially called for an affirmation of the Town's decision in Resolution 189/2015. Accordingly, if the electors had voted "yes", they would simply have approved the Town's decision. Although s. 137(1) would require the Town to pass the resolution at its first meeting following the vote, such a formality would obviously not have been necessary as the decision voted on had already been made. On the other hand, with the majority of electors voting "no", as they did in this instance, it could legitimately be said that the electors did not approve the resolution presented to them. Under such circumstances, s. 137(2) would not require the Town council to do anything. As earlier mentioned, s. 137(2) stipulates that, where a proposed resolution is not approved by the electors, a council is not obliged to pass it, but can do so if it so chooses.

[61] In my view, the above scenario clearly illustrates that the Town was not at liberty, under s. 136(1), to submit a resolution to the electors that differed from the proposal that was clearly implicit in the petitioners' request. Rather, the Town was obliged to submit to the electors a resolution that called for the rescission of Resolution 189/2015 and the tender of the former liquor store property for sale. Through the passage of Resolution 284/2015, I am satisfied that the Town did not follow s. 136(1). In my view, an application to quash Resolution 284/2015, together with a related application for mandamus, should have been brought before the proposed resolution was submitted to the electors. Based on the above analysis, such an application would likely have been granted.

[62] Having found that the Town failed to observe the requirements of s. 136(1) when making its submission to the electors, I must now address the consequences, if any, that arise from that failure. The applicant's argument on the illegality of Resolution 163/2016 was premised on the assertion that the Town had failed to follow s. 137(1) and s. 140 of the Act after the electors voted as they did. For the reasons already explained, the premise behind the applicant's argument cannot stand because the electors did not approve any resolution in the 2016 referendum. Hence, s. 137(1) does not apply.

[63] Despite the faulty premise of the applicant's argument, two questions arise. The first question pertains to whether the Town's failure to follow s. 136(1) establishes the type of illegality contemplated by s. 358(1)(a). The second question, which depends on an affirmative answer to the first question, pertains to whether the so found illegality justifies a quashing of the challenged resolution.

[64] In my view, both questions must be answered in the affirmative. The Town's failure to meet its obligation under s. 136(1) was definitely unlawful. The impact of the Town's failure extended not only to Resolution 284/2015, but also to every resolution that the Town's council passed after the close of tenders, including the resolution challenged in this application.

[65] With respect to the second question, I am satisfied that the Town's failure was more than a technical breach of the law, as referenced in Hughes. Rather, it deprived the petitioners and the electors of the full opportunity, afforded by the Act, to test the proposal that was implicit in the petition's request. Instead of encouraging and enabling public participation in the governance process, the Town's actions served the exact opposite purpose.

[66] I am mindful of the applicant's comments, in her affidavit, about the attitude of certain council members following the referendum result. While obviously concerning to her, I am satisfied that there is no conclusive evidence of bad faith in the Town's decision to act as it did. That said, I am equally satisfied that a finding of bad faith is not necessary in order to conclude that the Town acted unlawfully.

[67] Given my findings in this case, I had considered the prospect of quashing more resolutions than the one challenged in this application. I have concluded that, given the form of the application before me, it would be wrong and perhaps even an error of jurisdiction for me to do so. Rather, I will confine my order to Resolution 163/2016.

Affidavits of Barbara Kuschak and Glen Kozak

[68] As for the two affidavits challenged by the applicant, I found both affidavits to be largely irrelevant. The affidavit of Barbara Kuschak almost exclusively devoted itself to her view about the desirability and suitability of the former liquor store property serving as the new location for the Ituna Library. In the context of this application, the wisdom, or not, of the Town's decision is not a relevant consideration in determining the legality of its actions. Accordingly, the entire affidavit is struck.

[69] The affidavit of Glen Kozak was not helpful, at all. There were portions of the affidavit that simply repeated the narrative from Mayor Garchinski's affidavit. More significantly, the portions of Mr. Kozak's affidavit that constituted an attack of the character of the applicant were both irrelevant and scandalous. Finally, I was very dismayed with the part of Mr. Kozak's affidavit that mischaracterized the decision of Megaw J. As Mr. Kozak's affidavit added nothing to this dispute, it must also be struck.

[70] As said by this Court many times in the past, counsel who prepare and submit affidavits in proceedings of this kind have a duty to ensure that care is taken not to present irrelevant, scandalous or misleading evidence. I am satisfied that, insofar as these two affidavits are concerned, counsel's duty was not properly observed.

CONCLUSION

[71] In the result, the application is granted. Resolution 163/2016 is quashed. Further, the affidavits of Barbara Kuschak and Glen Kozak are struck in their entirety.

[72] The applicant shall be awarded her costs in this application, for both the main application and the striking of the affidavits, fixed in the amount of $3,500.00, payable forthwith.

[73] I shall remain seized with this matter in the event there are any issues arising from either the operation or the effect of this decision, and the related order.

J.
R.W. ELSON

CITATION: Burton v. Docker, 2023 ONSC 1182
COURT FILE NO.: CV-19-00000117-0000
DATE: 2023-02-17

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE - ONTARIO

RE: Dawn-Marie Burton, Plaintiff

AND:

Vanessa Docker and James Docker, Defendants

BEFORE: Regional Senior Justice B. G. Thomas

COUNSEL: Mary-Anne C. Strong, Counsel for the Plaintiff
Catherine Costa, Counsel for the Defendants

HEARD: In writing.

ENDORSEMENT

[1] The defendants bring this motion to transfer the action from Guelph to London, claiming it is in the interests of justice. The plaintiff disputes the transfer.

Background

[2] This action arises out of a motor vehicle collision which occurred on April 27, 2017 in Guelph, Ontario. The plaintiff is 24 years of age and alleges she sustained serious and permanent injuries as a result of the negligence of the defendant, Vanessa Docker, who struck her vehicle in a rear-end collision. Her injuries have recently been labelled catastrophic by her accident benefit insurer.

[3] This action has been set down for trial in Guelph. A pre-trial conference has already occurred and notice of a trial date for the May to June, 2023 sittings has been provided by the Guelph Court. Jury selection is scheduled for April. The defendant here served the jury notice. The trial estimate is five weeks.

[4] The defendants now bring this motion for an order transferring the action from Guelph to London and to be heard together with an action between the plaintiff and her long-term disability insurer.

[5] The second action commenced in London by the plaintiff has Manulife as the defendant. It is a non-jury matter. Discoveries have just been completed. It has not been set down for trial. The plaintiff advises that issues in the London action include whether an application for benefits met the required timeframe. It will require interpretation of the contract of insurance and whether the plaintiff is "disabled" as defined by that contract. The contract in question is a group policy of insurance.

Analysis

[6] There is no doubt that the plaintiff has the prima facie right to choose a venue for the hearing of his action. See, for example, McDonald v. Dawson (1904), 8 O.L.R. 72, [1904] O.J. No. 42 (H.C.J.); J.G. Fitzgerald & Sons Ltd. v. Kapuskasing District High School Board, [1968] 1 O.R. 136 (S.C.O., Senior Master); and Paul's Hauling Ltd. v. Ontario (Minister of Transportation), 2011 ONSC 3970, 106 O.R. (3d) 590 (S.C.J.), at para. 13. The instant case is not one where there is some statute or rule that requires the hearing of this action to be held in a particular county, as contemplated by r. 13.1.01(1) of the Rules of Civil Procedure.

[7] As such, r. 13.1.01(2) applies, and the plaintiff was entitled to commence this proceeding at any court office in the Province of Ontario.

[8] To disrupt the plaintiff's choice, the defendant here needs to satisfy the Court that taking into account the factors in r. 13.1.02(2)(b)(i)-(ix), it is desirable in the interests of justice to transfer the action to London.

[9] Rule 13.1.02(2)(b) is set out below:

> (b) that a transfer is desirable in the interest of justice, having regard to,
>
> (i) where a substantial part of the events or omissions that gave rise to the claim occurred,
>
> (ii) where a substantial part of the damages were sustained,
>
> (iii) where the subject-matter of the proceeding is or was located,
>
> (iv) any local community's interest in the subject-matter of the proceeding,
>
> (v) the convenience of the parties, the witnesses and the court,
>
> (vi) whether there are counterclaims, crossclaims, or third or subsequent party claims,
>
> (vii) any advantages or disadvantages of a particular place with respect to securing the just, most expeditious and least expensive determination of the proceeding on its merits,
>
> (viii) whether judges and court facilities are available at the other county, and

(ix) any other relevant matter.

[10] The Court is to consider a holistic application of the factors outlined above, to the specific facts of the case. (Chatterson v. M&M Meat Shops Ltd., 2014 ONSC 1897 (Ont. Div. Ct.) para. 22.

[11] The defendants state that these actions need to be tried together. They suggest that they engage common issues and not joining them risks inconsistent verdicts. They further suggest that they will be prejudiced should the plaintiff's right to disability benefits in the London action not be determined at the same time as the trial of this action. For the reasons set out below, I reject that position and make the findings below on the basis of the material filed.

[12] The factors set out in r. 13.1.02(2)(b), (i), (ii) and (iii) do not favour the transfer. The cause of action, damages and subject matter are Guelph centric.

[13] This motor vehicle accident litigation will not attract "local community interest" as contemplated by r. 12.1.02(2)(b)(iv).

[14] The convenience of the parties and witnesses (r. 13.1.02(2) (b)(v)) do not favour a transfer:

(a) The plaintiff and her husband reside in Kitchener (closer to Guelph than London).

(b) The defendants reside in Oakville (closer to Guelph than London).

(c) While the plaintiff continues to have some treatment providers in London, the vast majority of the plaintiff's witnesses, including experts, work in the GTA. In the material filed, the plaintiff sets out 18 potential witnesses inclusive of experts. Four of those witnesses are from London.

(d) The material before me suggests that the defendant engineering expert and the defence orthopaedic surgeon are from the GTA.

(e) The plaintiff receives $310.91 per week in income replacement benefits. Her husband does not work. A five week trial in London will negatively impact the plaintiff financially.

[15] There are no counter-claims, cross-claims or third party claims to consider. (Rule 13.1.02(2)(b)(vi)).

[16] It is clear to me that to secure the most expeditious and least expensive trial of this action, it should remain in Guelph. (Rule 13.1.02(2)(b)(viii)). Transferring this five week jury trial to be tried with a non-jury trial that is not trial ready will significantly delay the trial.

[17] A transfer to London will then couple a non-jury contract dispute with a jury trial where the dynamics of the accident, liability and damages are in dispute. In all likelihood it turns a five week trial into a seven week trial.

[18] This action is on a trial list for this spring (2023) in Guelph. A seven week jury trial, even if ready for trial now, which it is not, would in all likelihood not be tried in London until 2025. As Regional Senior Justice, I am very aware of the demands on our London resources and our continuing judicial vacancies.

[19] It would not be in the interests of justice to cause such a delay.

[20] To be considered under this subsection, or perhaps r. 13.1.02(2)(b)(ix) as "any other relevant matter", I consider the terms of the Insurance Act. Section 267.8 allows for a credit for sums paid by Manulife in the London accident benefits action, or an assignment to the defendants here of any sums paid by Manulife after this action has been tried. (Section 267.8(12)).

[21] Any further delay in the trial of this action increases the deductible year by year for claims for non-pecuniary general damages.

[22] Finally, the plaintiff's claim for pre-trial income loss is limited to 70 percent of the loss. Any post-trial damages for lost income are compensable at 100 percent. (Section 267.5(1)).

Conclusion

[23] The advantage of a trial of these two very different actions together, although arising from the same motor vehicle accident, is far outweighed by the benefits of leaving it in Guelph.

[24] After holistically considering all the factors in the relevant rule, I am not satisfied that this action should be transferred and the defendant's motion is dismissed.

[25] I will receive written submissions regarding costs, limited to three typed pages, excluding the bill of costs as follows:

a) The plaintiff's submissions within 14 days of the release of these reasons.

b) The defendants' submissions within 7 days thereafter.

c) Any reply, 3 days after that.

[26] If no submissions are received on this schedule, there will be no order as to costs.

"Regional Senior Justice B. G. Thomas"

Regional Senior Justice B. G. Thomas

Date: February 17, 2023.

Attorney General of Canada Appellant/ Respondent on cross-appeal

v.

Terri Jean Bedford, Amy Lebovitch and Valerie Scott Respondents/Appellants on cross-appeal

- and -

Attorney General of Ontario Appellant/ Respondent on cross-appeal

v.

Terri Jean Bedford, Amy Lebovitch and Valerie Scott Respondents/Appellants on cross-appeal

and

Attorney General of Quebec, Pivot Legal Society, Downtown Eastside Sex Workers United Against Violence Society, PACE Society, Secretariat of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, British Columbia Civil Liberties Association, Evangelical Fellowship of Canada, Canadian HIV/AIDS Legal Network, British Columbia Centre for Excellence in HIV/AIDS, HIV & AIDS Legal Clinic Ontario, Canadian Association of Sexual Assault Centres, Native Women's Association of Canada, Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies, Action ontarienne contre la violence faite aux femmes, Concertation des luttes contre l'exploitation sexuelle, Regroupement québécois des Centres d'aide et de lutte contre les agressions à caractère

Procureur général du Canada Appelant/ Intimé au pourvoi incident

c.

Terri Jean Bedford, Amy Lebovitch et Valerie Scott Intimées/Appelantes au pourvoi incident

- et -

Procureur général de l'Ontario Appelant/ Intimé au pourvoi incident

c.

Terri Jean Bedford, Amy Lebovitch et Valerie Scott Intimées/Appelantes au pourvoi incident

et

Procureur général du Québec, Pivot Legal Society, Downtown Eastside Sex Workers United Against Violence Society, PACE Society, Secrétariat du Programme commun des Nations Unies sur le VIH/sida, Association des libertés civiles de la Colombie-Britannique, Alliance évangélique du Canada, Réseau juridique canadien VIH/sida, British Columbia Centre for Excellence in HIV/AIDS, HIV & AIDS Legal Clinic Ontario, Association canadienne des centres contre les agressions à caractère sexuel, Association des femmes autochtones du Canada, Association canadienne des Sociétés Elizabeth Fry, Action ontarienne contre la violence faite aux femmes, Concertation des luttes contre l'exploitation sexuelle, sexuel, Vancouver Rape Relief Society, Christian Legal Fellowship, Catholic Civil Rights League, REAL Women of Canada, David Asper Centre for Constitutional Rights, Simone de Beauvoir Institute, AWCEP Asian Women for Equality Society, operating as Asian Women Coalition Ending Prostitution and Aboriginal Legal Services of Toronto Inc. Interveners

Regroupement québécois des Centres d'aide et de lutte contre les agressions à caractère sexuel, Vancouver Rape Relief Society, Alliance des chrétiens en droit, Ligue catholique des droits de l'homme, REAL Women of Canada, David Asper Centre for Constitutional Rights, Institut Simone de Beauvoir, AWCEP Asian Women for Equality Society, exerçant ses activités sous le nom Asian Women Coalition Ending Prostitution et Aboriginal Legal Services of Toronto Inc. Intervenants

Indexed as: Canada (Attorney General) v. Bedford

2013 SCC 72

File No.: 34788.

2013: June 13; 2013: December 20.*

Present: McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell, Moldaver, Karakatsanis and Wagner JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Right to security of person — Freedom of expression — Criminal law — Prostitution — Common bawdy-house — Living on avails of prostitution — Communicating in public for purposes of prostitution — Prostitutes challenging constitutionality of prohibitions on bawdy-houses, living on avails of prostitution and communicating in public for purposes of prostitution under Criminal Code — Prostitutes alleging impugned provisions violate s. 7 security of the person rights by preventing implementation of safety measures that could protect them from violent clients — Prostitutes also alleging prohibition on communicating in public for purposes of prostitution infringes freedom of expression guarantee — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 2(b), 7 — Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, ss. 197(1), 210, 212(1)(j), 213(1)(c).

* A judgment was issued on January 17, 2014, amending para. 164 of both versions of the reasons. The amendments are included in these reasons.

Répertorié : Canada (Procureur général) c. Bedford

2013 CSC 72

N° du greffe : 34788.

2013 : 13 juin; 2013 : 20 décembre*.

Présents : La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges LeBel, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell, Moldaver, Karakatsanis et Wagner.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE L'ONTARIO

Droit constitutionnel — Charte des droits — Droit à la sécurité de la personne — Liberté d'expression — Droit criminel — Prostitution — Maisons de débauche — Proxénétisme — Communiquer en public à des fins de prostitution — Contestation par des prostituées des dispositions du Code criminel qui interdisent les maisons de débauche, le proxénétisme et la communication en public à des fins de prostitution — Allégation selon laquelle ces dispositions portent atteinte au droit à la sécurité de la personne garanti à l'art. 7 en empêchant les prostituées de prendre des mesures susceptibles de les protéger contre la violence de certains clients — Allégation supplémentaire suivant laquelle l'interdiction de communiquer en public à des fins de prostitution porte atteinte à la liberté d'expression garantie aux prostituées — Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 1, 2b), 7 — Code criminel, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-46, art. 197(1), 210, 212(1)j), 213(1)c).

* Un jugement a été rendu le 17 janvier 2014, modifiant le par. 164 des deux versions des motifs. Les modifications ont été incorporées dans les présents motifs.

Courts — Decisions — Stare decisis — Standard of review — Prostitutes challenging constitutionality of prohibitions on bawdy-houses, living on avails of prostitution and communicating in public for purposes of prostitution under Criminal Code — Under what circumstances application judge could revisit conclusions of Supreme Court of Canada in Prostitution Reference which upheld bawdy-house and communicating prohibitions — Degree of deference owed to application judge's findings on social and legislative facts.

B, L and S, current or former prostitutes, brought an application seeking declarations that three provisions of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, which criminalize various activities related to prostitution, infringe their rights under s. 7 of the Charter: s. 210 makes it an offence to keep or be in a bawdy-house; s. 212(1)(j) prohibits living on the avails of prostitution; and, s. 213(1)(c) prohibits communicating in public for the purposes of prostitution. They argued that these restrictions on prostitution put the safety and lives of prostitutes at risk, by preventing them from implementing certain safety measures — such as hiring security guards or "screening" potential clients — that could protect them from violence. B, L and S also alleged that s. 213(1)(c) infringes the freedom of expression guarantee under s. 2(b) of the Charter, and that none of the provisions are saved under s. 1.

The Ontario Superior Court of Justice granted the application, declaring, without suspension, that each of the impugned Criminal Code provisions violated the Charter and could not be saved by s. 1. The Ontario Court of Appeal agreed s. 210 was unconstitutional and struck the word "prostitution" from the definition of "common bawdy-house" as it applies to s. 210, however it suspended the declaration of invalidity for 12 months. The court declared that s. 212(1)(j) was an unjustifiable violation of s. 7, ordering the reading in of words to clarify that the prohibition on living on the avails of prostitution applies only to those who do so "in circumstances of exploitation". It further held the communicating prohibition under s. 213(1)(c) did not violate either s. 2(b) or s. 7. The Attorneys General appeal from the declaration that ss. 210 and 212(1)(j) of the Code are unconstitutional. B, L and S cross-appeal on the constitutionality of s. 213(1)(c) and in respect of the s. 210 remedy.

Tribunaux — Décisions — Stare decisis — Norme de contrôle — Contestation par des prostituées des dispositions du Code criminel qui interdisent les maisons de débauche, le proxénétisme et la communication en public à des fins de prostitution — À quelles conditions un juge de première instance peut-il réexaminer les conclusions de la Cour suprême du Canada dans le Renvoi sur la prostitution selon lesquelles les interdictions visant les maisons de débauche et la communication sont valides? — Degré de déférence que commandent les conclusions du juge de première instance sur des faits sociaux ou législatifs.

B, L et S — trois prostituées ou ex-prostituées — ont sollicité un jugement déclarant que trois dispositions du Code criminel, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-46, qui criminalisent diverses activités liées à la prostitution, portent atteinte au droit que leur garantit l'art. 7 de la Charte : l'art. 210 crée l'acte criminel de tenir une maison de débauche ou de s'y trouver; l'al. 212(1)j) interdit de vivre des produits de la prostitution d'autrui; l'al. 213(1)c) interdit la communication en public à des fins de prostitution. Elles font valoir que ces restrictions apportées à la prostitution compromettent la sécurité et la vie des prostituées en ce qu'elles les empêchent de prendre certaines mesures de protection contre les actes de violence, telles l'embauche d'un garde ou l'évaluation préalable du client. Elles ajoutent que l'al. 213(1)c) porte atteinte à la liberté d'expression garantie à l'al. 2*b*) de la Charte et qu'aucune des dispositions n'est sauvegardée par l'article premier.

La Cour supérieure de justice de l'Ontario a fait droit à la demande et déclaré, sans effet suspensif, que chacune des dispositions contestées du Code criminel porte atteinte à un droit ou à une liberté garantis par la Charte et ne peut être sauvegardée par application de l'article premier. La Cour d'appel de l'Ontario a convenu de l'inconstitutionnalité de l'art. 210 et radié le mot « prostitution » de la définition de « maison de débauche » applicable à cette disposition, mais elle a suspendu l'effet de la déclaration d'invalidité pendant 12 mois. Elle a statué que l'al. 212(1)j) constitue une atteinte injustifiable au droit garanti à l'art. 7 et ordonné d'interpréter la disposition de manière que l'interdiction vise seulement les personnes qui vivent de la prostitution d'autrui « dans des situations d'exploitation », comme si ces mots y étaient employés. Elle a par ailleurs estimé que l'interdiction de communiquer prévue à l'al. 213(1)c) n'est attentatoire ni à la liberté garantie par l'al. 2*b*), ni au droit que consacre l'art. 7. Les procureurs généraux se pourvoient contre la déclaration d'inconstitutionnalité de l'art. 210 et de l'al. 212(1)j) du Code. B, L et S se pourvoient de manière incidente relativement à la constitutionnalité de l'al. 213(1)c) et à la mesure prise pour remédier à l'inconstitutionnalité de l'art. 210.

Held: The appeals should be dismissed and the cross-appeal allowed. Section 210, as it relates to prostitution, and ss. 212(1)(j) and 213(1)(c) of the Criminal Code are declared to be inconsistent with the Charter. The word "prostitution" is struck from the definition of "common bawdy-house" in s. 197(1) of the Criminal Code as it applies to s. 210 only. The declaration of invalidity should be suspended for one year.

The three impugned provisions, primarily concerned with preventing public nuisance as well as the exploitation of prostitutes, do not pass Charter muster: they infringe the s. 7 rights of prostitutes by depriving them of security of the person in a manner that is not in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice. It is not necessary to determine whether this Court should depart from or revisit its conclusion in the Prostitution Reference that s. 213(1)(c) does not violate s. 2(b) since it is possible to resolve this case entirely on s. 7 grounds.

The common law principle of stare decisis is subordinate to the Constitution and cannot require a court to uphold a law which is unconstitutional. However, a lower court is not entitled to ignore binding precedent, and the threshold for revisiting a matter is not an easy one to reach. The threshold is met when a new legal issue is raised, or if there is a significant change in the circumstances or evidence. In this case, the application judge was entitled to rule on the new legal issues of whether the laws in question violated the security of the person interests under s. 7, as the majority decision of this Court in the Prostitution Reference was based on the s. 7 physical liberty interest alone. Furthermore, the principles of fundamental justice considered in the Prostitution Reference dealt with vagueness and the permissibility of indirect criminalization. The principles raised in this case — arbitrariness, overbreadth, and gross disproportionality — have, to a large extent, developed only in the last 20 years. The application judge was not, however, entitled to decide the question of whether the communication provision is a justified limit on freedom of expression. That issue was decided in the Prostitution Reference and was binding on her.

The application judge's findings on social and legislative facts are entitled to deference. The standard of review for findings of fact — whether adjudicative, Arrêt : Les pourvois sont rejetés, et le pourvoi incident est accueilli. L'article 210, en ce qui concerne la prostitution, et les al. 212(1)j) et 213(1)c) du Code criminel sont déclarés incompatibles avec la Charte. Le mot « prostitution » est supprimé de la définition de « maison de débauche » figurant au par. 197(1) du Code criminel pour les besoins de l'art. 210 uniquement. L'effet de la déclaration d'invalidité est suspendu pendant un an.

Les trois dispositions contestées, qui visent principalement à empêcher les nuisances publiques et l'exploitation des prostituées, ne résistent pas au contrôle constitutionnel. Elles portent atteinte au droit à la sécurité de la personne que l'art. 7 garantit aux prostituées, et ce, d'une manière non conforme aux principes de justice fondamentale. Point n'est besoin de déterminer si notre Cour devrait rompre avec la conclusion qu'elle a tirée dans le Renvoi sur la prostitution, à savoir que l'al. 213(1)c) ne porte pas atteinte à la liberté garantie à l'al. 2*b*), ou la réexaminer, puisqu'il est possible de trancher en l'espèce sur le fondement du seul art. 7.

La règle du stare decisis issue de la common law est subordonnée à la Constitution et ne saurait avoir pour effet d'obliger un tribunal à valider une loi inconstitutionnelle. Une juridiction inférieure ne peut toutefois pas faire abstraction d'un précédent qui fait autorité, et la barre est haute lorsqu'il s'agit d'en justifier le réexamen. Les conditions sont réunies lorsqu'une nouvelle question de droit se pose ou qu'il y a modification importante de la situation ou de la preuve. En l'espèce, la juge de première instance pouvait trancher la question nouvelle de savoir si les dispositions en cause portent atteinte ou non au droit à la sécurité de la personne garanti à l'art. 7 car, dans le Renvoi sur la prostitution, les juges majoritaires de la Cour statuent uniquement en fonction du droit à la liberté physique de la personne garanti par l'art. 7. Qui plus est, dans le Renvoi sur la prostitution, les principes de justice fondamentale sont examinés sous l'angle de l'imprécision de la criminalisation indirecte et de l'acceptabilité de celle-ci. En l'espèce, ce sont le caractère arbitraire, la portée trop grande et le caractère totalement disproportionné qui sont allégués, des notions qui ont en grande partie vu le jour au cours des 20 dernières années. La juge de première instance n'était cependant pas admise à trancher la question de savoir si la disposition sur la communication constitue une limitation justifiée de la liberté d'expression. Notre Cour s'était prononcée sur ce point dans le Renvoi sur la prostitution, et la juge était liée par cette décision.

Les conclusions tirées en première instance sur des faits sociaux ou législatifs commandent la déférence. La norme de contrôle applicable aux conclusions de fait — social, or legislative — remains palpable and overriding error.

The impugned laws negatively impact security of the person rights of prostitutes and thus engage s. 7. The proper standard of causation is a flexible "sufficient causal connection" standard, as correctly adopted by the application judge. The prohibitions all heighten the risks the applicants face in prostitution — itself a legal activity. They do not merely impose conditions on how prostitutes operate. They go a critical step further, by imposing dangerous conditions on prostitution; they prevent people engaged in a risky — but legal — activity from taking steps to protect themselves from the risks. That causal connection is not negated by the actions of third-party johns and pimps, or prostitutes' so-called choice to engage in prostitution. While some prostitutes may fit the description of persons who freely choose (or at one time chose) to engage in the risky economic activity of prostitution, many prostitutes have no meaningful choice but to do so. Moreover, it makes no difference that the conduct of pimps and johns is the immediate source of the harms suffered by prostitutes. The violence of a john does not diminish the role of the state in making a prostitute more vulnerable to that violence.

The applicants have also established that the deprivation of their security of the person is not in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice: principles that attempt to capture basic values underpinning our constitutional order. This case concerns the basic values against arbitrariness (where there is no connection between the effect and the object of the law), overbreadth (where the law goes too far and interferes with some conduct that bears no connection to its objective), and gross disproportionality (where the effect of the law is grossly disproportionate to the state's objective). These are three distinct principles, but overbreadth is related to arbitrariness, in that the question for both is whether there is no connection between the law's effect and its objective. All three principles compare the rights infringement caused by the law with the objective of the law, not with the law's effectiveness; they do not look to how well the law achieves its object, or to how much of the population the law benefits or is negatively impacted. The analysis is qualitative, not quantitative. The question under s. 7 is whether anyone's life, liberty or security of the person has been denied by a law that is inherently qu'elles portent sur les faits en litige, des faits sociaux ou des faits législatifs — demeure celle de l'erreur manifeste et dominante.

Les dispositions contestées ont un effet préjudiciable sur la sécurité des prostituées et mettent donc en jeu le droit garanti à l'art. 7. La norme qui convient est celle du « lien de causalité suffisant », appliquée avec souplesse, celle retenue à juste titre par la juge de première instance. Les interdictions augmentent tous les risques auxquels s'exposent les demanderesses lorsqu'elles se livrent à la prostitution, une activité qui est en soi légale. Elles ne font pas qu'encadrer la pratique de la prostitution. Elles franchissent un pas supplémentaire déterminant par l'imposition de conditions dangereuses à la pratique de la prostitution : elles empêchent des personnes qui se livrent à une activité risquée, mais légale, de prendre des mesures pour assurer leur propre protection. Le lien de causalité n'est pas rendu inexistant par les actes de tiers (clients et proxénètes) ou le prétendu choix des intéressées de se prostituer. Bien que certaines prostituées puissent correspondre au profil de celle qui choisit librement de se livrer à l'activité économique risquée qu'est la prostitution (ou qui a un jour fait ce choix), de nombreuses prostituées n'ont pas vraiment d'autre solution que la prostitution. De plus, le fait que le comportement des proxénètes et des clients soit la source immédiate des préjudices subis par les prostituées ne change rien. La violence d'un client ne diminue en rien la responsabilité de l'État qui rend une prostituée plus vulnérable à cette violence.

Les demanderesses ont également établi que l'atteinte à leur droit à la sécurité n'est pas conforme aux principes de justice fondamentale, lesquels sont censés intégrer les valeurs fondamentales qui sous-tendent notre ordre constitutionnel. Dans la présente affaire, les valeurs fondamentales qui nous intéressent s'opposent à l'arbitraire (absence de lien entre l'effet de la loi et son objet), à la portée excessive (la disposition va trop loin et empiète sur quelque comportement sans lien avec son objectif) et à la disproportion totale (l'effet de la disposition est totalement disproportionné à l'objectif de l'État). Il s'agit de trois notions distinctes, mais la portée excessive est liée au caractère arbitraire en ce que l'absence de lien entre l'effet de la disposition et son objectif est commune aux deux. Les trois notions supposent de comparer l'atteinte aux droits qui découle de la loi avec l'objectif de la loi, et non avec son efficacité; elles ne s'intéressent pas à la réalisation de l'objectif législatif ou au pourcentage de la population qui bénéficie de l'application de la loi ou qui en pâtit. L'analyse se veut qualitative, et non quantitative. La question que commande l'art. 7 est celle de savoir si une disposition législative intrinsèquement bad; a grossly disproportionate, overbroad, or arbitrary effect on one person is sufficient to establish a breach of s. 7.

Applying these principles to the impugned provisions, the negative impact of the bawdy-house prohibition (s. 210) on the applicants' security of the person is grossly disproportionate to its objective of preventing public nuisance. The harms to prostitutes identified by the courts below, such as being prevented from working in safer fixed indoor locations and from resorting to safe houses, are grossly disproportionate to the deterrence of community disruption. Parliament has the power to regulate against nuisances, but not at the cost of the health, safety and lives of prostitutes. Second, the purpose of the living on the avails of prostitution prohibition in s. 212(1)(j) is to target pimps and the parasitic, exploitative conduct in which they engage. The law, however, punishes everyone who lives on the avails of prostitution without distinguishing between those who exploit prostitutes and those who could increase the safety and security of prostitutes, for example, legitimate drivers, managers, or bodyguards. It also includes anyone involved in business with a prostitute, such as accountants or receptionists. In these ways, the law includes some conduct that bears no relation to its purpose of preventing the exploitation of prostitutes. The living on the avails provision is consequently overbroad. Third, the purpose of the communicating prohibition in s. 213(1)(c) is not to eliminate street prostitution for its own sake, but to take prostitution off the streets and out of public view in order to prevent the nuisances that street prostitution can cause. The provision's negative impact on the safety and lives of street prostitutes, who are prevented by the communicating prohibition from screening potential clients for intoxication and propensity to violence, is a grossly disproportionate response to the possibility of nuisance caused by street prostitution.

While the Attorneys General have not seriously argued that the laws, if found to infringe s. 7, can be justified under s. 1, some of their arguments under s. 7 are properly addressed at this stage of the analysis. In particular, they attempt to justify the living on the avails provision on the basis that it must be drafted broadly in order to capture all exploitative relationships. However, the law not only catches drivers and bodyguards, who may actually be pimps, but it also catches clearly non-exploitative relationships, such as receptionists or accountants who work mauvaise prive qui que ce soit du droit à la vie, à la liberté ou à la sécurité de sa personne; un effet totalement disproportionné, excessif ou arbitraire sur une seule personne suffit pour établir l'atteinte au droit garanti à l'art. 7.

Si l'on applique ces notions aux dispositions contestées, l'effet préjudiciable de l'interdiction des maisons de débauche (art. 210) sur le droit à la sécurité des demanderesses est totalement disproportionné à l'objectif de prévenir les nuisances publiques. Les préjudices subis par les prostituées selon les juridictions inférieures (p. ex. le fait de ne pouvoir travailler dans un lieu fixe, sûr et situé à l'intérieur, ni avoir recours à un refuge sûr) sont totalement disproportionnés à l'objectif de réprimer le désordre public. Le législateur a le pouvoir de réprimer les nuisances, mais pas au prix de la santé, de la sécurité et de la vie des prostituées. L'interdiction faite à l'al. 212(1)j) de vivre des produits de la prostitution d'autrui vise à réprimer le proxénétisme, ainsi que le parasitisme et l'exploitation qui y sont associés. Or, la disposition vise toute personne qui vit des produits de la prostitution d'autrui sans établir de distinction entre celui qui exploite une prostituée et celui qui peut accroître la sécurité d'une prostituée (tel le chauffeur, le gérant ou le garde du corps véritable). La disposition vise également toute personne qui fait affaire avec une prostituée, y compris un comptable ou un réceptionniste. Certains actes sans aucun rapport avec l'objectif de prévenir l'exploitation des prostituées tombent ainsi sous le coup de la loi. La disposition sur le proxénétisme a donc une portée excessive. L'alinéa 213(1)c), qui interdit la communication, vise non pas à éliminer la prostitution dans la rue comme telle, mais bien à sortir la prostitution de la rue et à la soustraire au regard du public afin d'empêcher les nuisances susceptibles d'en découler. Son effet préjudiciable sur le droit à la sécurité et à la vie des prostituées de la rue, du fait que ces dernières sont empêchées de communiquer avec leurs clients éventuels afin de déterminer s'ils sont intoxiqués ou enclins à la violence, est totalement disproportionné au risque de nuisance causée par la prostitution de la rue.

Même si les procureurs généraux ne prétendent pas sérieusement que, si elles sont jugées contraires à l'art. 7, les dispositions en cause peuvent être justifiées en vertu de l'article premier, certaines des thèses qu'ils défendent en fonction de l'art. 7 sont reprises à juste titre à cette étape de l'analyse. En particulier, ils tentent de justifier la disposition sur le proxénétisme par la nécessité d'un libellé général afin que tombent sous le coup de son application toutes les relations empreintes d'exploitation. Or, la disposition vise non seulement with prostitutes. The law is therefore not minimally impairing. Nor, at the final stage of the s. 1 inquiry, is the law's effect of preventing prostitutes from taking measures that would increase their safety, and possibly save their lives, outweighed by the law's positive effect of protecting prostitutes from exploitative relationships. The impugned laws are not saved by s. 1.

Concluding that each of the challenged provisions violates the Charter does not mean that Parliament is precluded from imposing limits on where and how prostitution may be conducted, as long as it does so in a way that does not infringe the constitutional rights of prostitutes. The regulation of prostitution is a complex and delicate matter. It will be for Parliament, should it choose to do so, to devise a new approach, reflecting different elements of the existing regime. Considering all the interests at stake, the declaration of invalidity should be suspended for one year.

Cases Cited

Referred to: Reference re ss. 193 and 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal Code (Man.), [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1123; Canada (Attorney General) v. PHS Community Services Society, 2011 SCC 44, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 134; R. v. Morgentaler, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 30; Canada v. Craig, 2012 SCC 43, [2012] 2 S.C.R. 489; Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235; RJR-MacDonald Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), [1995] 3 S.C.R. 199; R. v. Malmo-Levine, 2003 SCC 74, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 571; R. v. Spence, 2005 SCC 71, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 458; R. v. Abbey, 2009 ONCA 624, 97 O.R. (3d) 330; H.L. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2005 SCC 25, [2005] 1 S.C.R. 401; R. v. Pierce (1982), 37 O.R. (2d) 721; R. v. Worthington (1972), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 311; R. v. Downey, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 10; R. v. Grilo (1991), 2 O.R. (3d) 514; R. v. Barrow (2001), 54 O.R. (3d) 417; R. v. Head (1987), 59 C.R. (3d) 80; Blencoe v. British Columbia (Human Rights Commission), 2000 SCC 44, [2000] 2 S.C.R. 307; United States v. Burns, 2001 SCC 7, [2001] 1 S.C.R. 283; Suresh v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2002 SCC 1, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 3; Canada (Prime Minister) v. Khadr, 2010 SCC 3, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 44; Rodriguez v. British Columbia (Attorney General), [1993] 3 S.C.R. 519; New Brunswick (Minister of Health and Community Services) v. G. (J.), [1999] 3 S.C.R. 46; Re B.C. Motor Vehicle Act, [1985] 2 S.C.R.

le chauffeur ou le garde du corps, qui peut en réalité être un proxénète, mais aussi la personne qui entretient avec la prostituée des rapports manifestement dénués d'exploitation (p. ex. un réceptionniste ou un comptable). La disposition n'équivaut donc pas à une atteinte minimale. Pour les besoins du dernier volet de l'analyse fondée sur l'article premier, son effet bénéfique — protéger les prostituées contre l'exploitation — ne l'emporte pas non plus sur son effet qui empêche les prostituées de prendre des mesures pour accroître leur sécurité et, peut-être, leur sauver la vie. Les dispositions contestées ne sont pas sauvegardées par application de l'article premier.

La conclusion que les dispositions contestées portent atteinte à des droits garantis par la Charte ne dépouille pas le législateur du pouvoir de décider des lieux et des modalités de la prostitution, à condition qu'il exerce ce pouvoir sans porter atteinte aux droits constitutionnels des prostituées. L'encadrement de la prostitution est un sujet complexe et délicat. Il appartiendra au législateur, s'il le juge opportun, de concevoir une nouvelle approche qui intègre les différents éléments du régime actuel. Au vu de l'ensemble des intérêts en jeu, il convient de suspendre l'effet de la déclaration d'invalidité pendant un an.

Jurisprudence

Arrêts mentionnés : Renvoi relatif à l'art. 193 et à l'al. 195.1(1)c) du Code criminel (Man.), [1990] 1 R.C.S. 1123; Canada (Procureur général) c. PHS Community Services Society, 2011 CSC 44, [2011] 3 R.C.S. 134; R. c. Morgentaler, [1988] 1 R.C.S. 30; Canada c. Craig, 2012 CSC 43, [2012] 2 R.C.S. 489; Housen c. Nikolaisen, 2002 CSC 33, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 235; RJR-MacDonald Inc. c. Canada (Procureur général), [1995] 3 R.C.S. 199; R. c. Malmo-Levine, 2003 CSC 74, [2003] 3 R.C.S. 571; R. c. Spence, 2005 CSC 71, [2005] 3 R.C.S. 458; R. c. Abbey, 2009 ONCA 624, 97 O.R. (3d) 330; H.L. c. Canada (Procureur général), 2005 CSC 25, [2005] 1 R.C.S. 401; R. c. Pierce (1982), 37 O.R. (2d) 721; R. c. Worthington (1972), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 311; R. c. Downey, [1992] 2 R.C.S. 10; R. c. Grilo (1991), 2 O.R. (3d) 514; R. c. Barrow (2001), 54 O.R. (3d) 417; R. c. Head (1987), 59 C.R. (3d) 80; Blencoe c. Colombie-Britannique (Human Rights Commission), 2000 CSC 44, [2000] 2 R.C.S. 307; États-Unis c. Burns, 2001 CSC 7, [2001] 1 R.C.S. 283; Suresh c. Canada (Ministre de la Citoyenneté et de l'Immigration), 2002 CSC 1, [2002] 1 R.C.S. 3; Canada (Premier ministre) c. Khadr, 2010 CSC 3, [2010] 1 R.C.S. 44; Rodriguez c. Colombie-Britannique (Procureur général), [1993] 3 R.C.S. 519; Nouveau-Brunswick (Ministre de la Santé et des Services

486; Chaoulli v. Quebec (Attorney General), 2005 SCC 35, [2005] 1 S.C.R. 791; R. v. Heywood, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 761; R. v. Demers, 2004 SCC 46, [2004] 2 S.C.R. 489; R. v. Khawaja, 2012 SCC 69, [2012] 3 S.C.R. 555; R. v. S.S.C., 2008 BCCA 262, 257 B.C.A.C. 57; R. v. Clay, 2003 SCC 75, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 735; Rockert v. The Queen, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 704; R. v. Zundel, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 731; Shaw v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1962] A.C. 220; Schachter v. Canada, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 679.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 2(b), 7.
Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, ss. 197(1) "common bawdy-house", 210, 212(1)(j), 213(1)(c).
Criminal Code, S.C. 1953-54, c. 51, Part V, s. 182.
Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, r. 14.05(3)(g.1).

Authors Cited

Canada. House of Commons. Subcommittee on Solicitation Laws of the Standing Committee on Justice and Human Rights. The Challenge of Change: A Study of Canada's Criminal Prostitution Laws. Ottawa: Communication Canada, 2006.
Coke, Edward. The Third Part of the Institutes of the Laws of England: Concerning High Treason, and Other Pleas of the Crown and Criminal Causes. London: Clarke, 1817 (first published 1644).
Hogg, Peter W. "The Brilliant Career of Section 7 of the Charter" (2012), 58 S.C.L.R. (2d) 195.
Ontario. Inquiry into Pediatric Forensic Pathology in Ontario: Report, vol. 3, Policy and Recommendations, by Stephen T. Goudge. Toronto: Ministry of the Attorney General, 2008.
Rubin, Gerald. "The Nature, Use and Effect of Reference Cases in Canadian Constitutional Law" (1960), 6 McGill L.J. 168.
Stewart, Hamish. Fundamental Justice: Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2012.

APPEALS and CROSS-APPEAL from a judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal (Doherty, Rosenberg, Feldman, MacPherson and Cronk JJ.A.), 2012 ONCA 186, 109 O.R. (3d) 1, 290 O.A.C. 236, 346 D.L.R. (4th) 385, 282 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 256 C.R.R. (2d) 143, 91 C.R. (6th) 257, [2012] O.J. No. 1296 (QL), 2012 CarswellOnt 3557, affirming in part a decision of Himel J., 2010 ONSC 4264, 102 O.R.

communautaires) c. G. (J.), [1999] 3 R.C.S. 46; Renvoi sur la Motor Vehicle Act (C.-B.), [1985] 2 R.C.S. 486; Chaoulli c. Québec (Procureur général), 2005 CSC 35, [2005] 1 R.C.S. 791; R. c. Heywood, [1994] 3 R.C.S. 761; R. c. Demers, 2004 CSC 46, [2004] 2 R.C.S. 489; R. c. Khawaja, 2012 CSC 69, [2012] 3 R.C.S. 555; R. c. S.S.C., 2008 BCCA 262, 257 B.C.A.C. 57; R. c. Clay, 2003 CSC 75, [2003] 3 R.C.S. 735; Rockert c. La Reine, [1978] 2 R.C.S. 704; R. c. Zundel, [1992] 2 R.C.S. 731; Shaw c. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1962] A.C. 220; Schachter c. Canada, [1992] 2 R.C.S. 679.

Lois et règlements cités

Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 1, 2*b*), 7.
Code criminel, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-46, art. 197(1) « maison de débauche », 210, 212(1)j), 213(1)c).
Code criminel, S.C. 1953-1954, ch. 51, partie V, art. 182.
Règles de procédure civile, R.R.O. 1990, Règl. 194, règle 14.05(3)g.1).

Doctrine et autres documents cités

Canada. Chambre des communes. Sous-comité de l'examen des lois sur le racolage du Comité permanent de la justice et des droits de la personne. Le défi du changement : Étude des lois pénales en matière de prostitution au Canada. Ottawa : Communication Canada, 2006.
Coke, Edward. The Third Part of the Institutes of the Laws of England : Concerning High Treason, and Other Pleas of the Crown and Criminal Causes. London : Clarke, 1817 (first published 1644).
Hogg, Peter W. « The Brilliant Career of Section 7 of the Charter » (2012), 58 S.C.L.R. (2d) 195.
Ontario. Commission d'enquête sur la médecine légale pédiatrique en Ontario : Rapport, vol. 3, Politique et recommandations, par Stephen T. Goudge. Toronto : Ministère du Procureur général, 2008.
Rubin, Gerald. « The Nature, Use and Effect of Reference Cases in Canadian Constitutional Law » (1960), 6 R.D. McGill 168.
Stewart, Hamish. Fundamental Justice : Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Toronto : Irwin Law, 2012.

POURVOIS et POURVOI INCIDENT contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario (les juges Doherty, Rosenberg, Feldman, MacPherson et Cronk), 2012 ONCA 186, 109 O.R. (3d) 1, 290 O.A.C. 236, 346 D.L.R. (4th) 385, 282 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 256 C.R.R. (2d) 143, 91 C.R. (6th) 257, [2012] O.J. No. 1296 (QL), 2012 CarswellOnt 3557, qui a confirmé en partie une décision de la juge Himel, (3d) 321, 327 D.L.R. (4th) 52, 262 C.C.C. (3d) 129, 217 C.R.R. (2d) 1, 80 C.R. (6th) 256, [2010] O.J. No. 4057 (QL), 2010 CarswellOnt 7249. Appeals dismissed and cross-appeal allowed.

Michael H. Morris, Nancy Dennison and Gail Sinclair, for the appellant/respondent on cross-appeal the Attorney General of Canada.

Jamie C. Klukach, Christine Bartlett-Hughes and Megan Stephens, for the appellant/respondent on cross-appeal the Attorney General of Ontario.

Alan N. Young, Marlys A. Edwardh and Daniel Sheppard, for the respondents/appellants on cross-appeal.

Sylvain Leboeuf and Julie Dassylva, for the intervener the Attorney General of Quebec.

Katrina E. Pacey, Joseph J. Arvay, Q.C., Elin R. S. Sigurdson, Lisa C. Glowacki and M. Kathleen Kinch, for the interveners the Pivot Legal Society, the Downtown Eastside Sex Workers United Against Violence Society and the PACE Society.

Written submissions only by Michael A. Feder and Tammy Shoranick, for the intervener the Secretariat of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS.

Brent B. Olthuis, Megan Vis-Dunbar and Michael Sobkin, for the intervener the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association.

Georgialee A. Lang and Donald Hutchinson, for the intervener the Evangelical Fellowship of Canada.

Jonathan A. Shime, Megan Schwartzentruber and Renée Lang, for the interveners the Canadian HIV/AIDS Legal Network, the British Columbia Centre for Excellence in HIV/AIDS and the HIV & AIDS Legal Clinic Ontario.

Janine Benedet and Fay Faraday, for the interveners the Canadian Association of Sexual Assault Centres, the Native Women's Association of 2010 ONSC 4264, 102 O.R. (3d) 321, 327 D.L.R. (4th) 52, 262 C.C.C. (3d) 129, 217 C.R.R. (2d) 1, 80 C.R. (6th) 256, [2010] O.J. No. 4057 (QL), 2010 CarswellOnt 7249. Pourvois rejetés et pourvoi incident accueilli.

Michael H. Morris, Nancy Dennison et Gail Sinclair, pour l'appelant/intimé au pourvoi incident le procureur général du Canada.

Jamie C. Klukach, Christine Bartlett-Hughes et Megan Stephens, pour l'appelant/intimé au pourvoi incident le procureur général de l'Ontario.

Alan N. Young, Marlys A. Edwardh et Daniel Sheppard, pour les intimées/appelantes au pourvoi incident.

Sylvain Leboeuf et Julie Dassylva, pour l'intervenant le procureur général du Québec.

Katrina E. Pacey, Joseph J. Arvay, c.r., Elin R. S. Sigurdson, Lisa C. Glowacki et M. Kathleen Kinch, pour les intervenantes Pivot Legal Society, Downtown Eastside Sex Workers United Against Violence Society et PACE Society.

Argumentation écrite seulement par Michael A. Feder et Tammy Shoranick, pour l'intervenant le Secrétariat du Programme commun des Nations Unies sur le VIH/sida.

Brent B. Olthuis, Megan Vis-Dunbar et Michael Sobkin, pour l'intervenante l'Association des libertés civiles de la Colombie-Britannique.

Georgialee A. Lang et Donald Hutchinson, pour l'intervenante l'Alliance évangélique du Canada.

Jonathan A. Shime, Megan Schwartzentruber et Renée Lang, pour les intervenants le Réseau juridique canadien VIH/sida, British Columbia Centre for Excellence in HIV/AIDS et HIV & AIDS Legal Clinic Ontario.

Janine Benedet et Fay Faraday, pour les intervenants l'Association canadienne des centres contre les agressions à caractère sexuel, l'Association

Canada, the Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies, Action ontarienne contre la violence faite aux femmes, Concertation des luttes contre l'exploitation sexuelle, Regroupement québécois des Centres d'aide et de lutte contre les agressions à caractère sexuel and the Vancouver Rape Relief Society.

Robert W. Staley, Ranjan K. Agarwal and Amanda C. McLachlan, for the interveners the Christian Legal Fellowship, the Catholic Civil Rights League and REAL Women of Canada.

Joseph J. Arvay, Q.C., and Cheryl Milne, for the intervener the David Asper Centre for Constitutional Rights.

Walid Hijazi, for the intervener the Simone de Beauvoir Institute.

Gwendoline Allison, for the intervener the AWCEP Asian Women for Equality Society, operating as Asian Women Coalition Ending Prostitution.

Christa Big Canoe and Emily R. Hill, for the intervener Aboriginal Legal Services of Toronto Inc.

des femmes autochtones du Canada, l'Association canadienne des Sociétés Elizabeth Fry, l'Action ontarienne contre la violence faite aux femmes, la Concertation des luttes contre l'exploitation sexuelle, le Regroupement québécois des Centres d'aide et de lutte contre les agressions à caractère sexuel et Vancouver Rape Relief Society.

Robert W. Staley, Ranjan K. Agarwal et Amanda C. McLachlan, pour les intervenantes l'Alliance des chrétiens en droit, la Ligue catholique des droits de l'homme et REAL Women of Canada.

Joseph J. Arvay, c.r., et Cheryl Milne, pour l'intervenant David Asper Centre for Constitutional Rights.

Walid Hijazi, pour l'intervenant l'Institut Simone de Beauvoir.

Gwendoline Allison, pour l'intervenante AWCEP Asian Women for Equality Society, exerçant ses activités sous le nom Asian Women Coalition Ending Prostitution.

Christa Big Canoe et Emily R. Hill, pour l'intervenante Aboriginal Legal Services of Toronto Inc.

Table of contents

Table des matières

she did not report to the police out of fear of police scrutiny and the possibility of criminal charges.

[12] Presently, Ms. Lebovitch primarily works independently out of her home, where she takes various safety precautions, including: making sure client telephone calls are from unblocked numbers; not taking calls from clients who sound drunk, high, or in another manner undesirable; asking for expectations upfront; taking clients' full names and verifying them using directory assistance; getting referrals from regular clients; and calling a third party — her "safe call" — when the client arrives and before he leaves. Ms. Lebovitch fears being charged and convicted under the bawdy-house provisions and the consequent possibility of forfeiture of her home. She says that the fear of criminal charges has caused her to work on the street on occasion. She is also concerned that her partner will be charged with living on the avails of prostitution. She has never been charged with a criminal offence of any kind. Ms. Lebovitch volunteers as the spokesperson for Sex Professionals of Canada ("SPOC"), and she also records information from women calling to report "bad dates" — incidents that ended in violence or theft. Ms. Lebovitch stated that she enjoys her job and does not plan to leave it in the foreseeable future.

[13] Valerie Scott was born in Moncton, New Brunswick, in 1958. She is currently the executive director of SPOC, and she no longer works as a prostitute. In the past, she worked indoors, from her home or in hotel rooms; she also worked as a prostitute on the street, in massage parlours, and she ran a small escort business. She has never been charged with a criminal offence of any kind. When Ms. Scott worked from home, she would screen new clients by meeting them in public locations. She never experienced significant harm working from home. Around 1984, as awareness about HIV/AIDS increased, Ms. Scott was compelled to work as a street prostitute, since indoor clients felt entitled not to wear condoms. On the street, she was subjected to threats of violence, as well as verbal and physical abuse. Ms. Scott described some precautions street essentiellement attribuables à une mauvaise gestion. Elle n'a connu qu'un seul cas de violence digne de mention, qu'elle n'a toutefois pas dénoncé de crainte d'attirer l'attention de la police sur ses activités et d'être accusée au criminel.

[12] À l'heure actuelle, M^me^ Lebovitch se prostitue essentiellement chez elle, de manière autonome. Elle prend diverses précautions, dont s'assurer que le numéro de téléphone du client n'est pas masqué, refuser un client qui semble ivre, intoxiqué ou par ailleurs rebutant, s'enquérir au départ des attentes du client, lui demander son nom au complet et vérifier son identité à l'assistance annuaire, obtenir des références d'un client fiable et appeler un tiers — son « ange gardien » — à l'arrivée du client et peu avant qu'il ne parte. M^me^ Lebovitch craint d'être accusée et déclarée coupable de tenir une maison de débauche et que sa demeure soit confisquée en conséquence. Elle affirme que la peur d'être accusée au criminel l'a parfois amenée à travailler dans la rue. Elle craint également que son conjoint ne soit accusé de proxénétisme. Elle n'a jamais fait l'objet d'accusations au pénal. Elle est porte-parole bénévole de l'organisme Sex Professionals of Canada (« SPOC ») et consigne par ailleurs les incidents que lui signalent des prostituées victimes de violence ou de vol de la part de clients. M^me^ Lebovitch dit aimer son travail et n'entend pas en changer dans un avenir prévisible.

[13] Née en 1958 à Moncton, au Nouveau-Brunswick, Valerie Scott est actuellement directrice administrative de SPOC. Elle ne travaille plus comme prostituée, mais elle l'a fait, à l'intérieur, chez elle ou dans des chambres d'hôtel, dans la rue et dans des salons de massage. Elle a aussi dirigé une petite agence d'escortes. Elle n'a jamais été accusée de la moindre infraction criminelle. Lorsqu'elle travaillait chez elle, elle soumettait tout nouveau client à une évaluation préalable lors d'une rencontre dans un lieu public. Elle n'a alors jamais eu d'ennuis graves. Vers 1984, les craintes accrues suscitées par le VIH/SIDA l'ont amenée à travailler dans la rue car les clients qu'elle recevait chez elle se croyaient dispensés du port du condom. Dans la rue, elle a été l'objet de menaces de violence ainsi que d'agressions verbales et physiques. Elle fait prostitutes took prior to the enactment of the communicating law, including working in pairs or threes and having another prostitute visibly write down the client's licence plate number, so he would know he was traceable if something was to go wrong.

[14] Ms. Scott worked as an activist and, among other things, advocated against Bill C-49 (which included the current communicating provision). Ms. Scott stated that following the enactment of the communicating law, the Canadian Organization for the Rights of Prostitutes ("CORP") began receiving calls from women working in prostitution about the increased enforcement of the laws and the prevalence of bad dates. In response, Ms. Scott was involved in setting up a drop-in and phone centre for prostitutes in Toronto; within the first year, Ms. Scott spoke to approximately 250 prostitutes whose main concerns were client violence and legal matters arising from arrest. In 2000, Ms. Scott formed SPOC to revitalize and continue the work previously done by CORP. As the executive director of this organization, she testified before a Parliamentary Subcommittee on Solicitation Laws in 2005. Over the years, Ms. Scott estimates that she has spoken with approximately 1,500 women working in prostitution. If this challenge is successful, Ms. Scott would like to operate an indoor prostitution business. While she recognizes that clients may be dangerous in both outdoor and indoor locations, she would institute safety precautions such as checking identification of clients, making sure other people are close by during appointments to intervene if needed, and hiring a bodyguard.

[15] The three applicants applied pursuant to rule 14.05(3)(g.1) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, for an order that the provisions restricting prostitution are unconstitutional. The evidentiary record consists of over 25,000 pages of evidence in 88 volumes. The affidavit evidence was accompanied by a large volume of studies, reports, newspaper articles, legislation, Hansard and many état de certaines précautions que les prostituées de la rue prenaient avant l'adoption des dispositions interdisant la communication, dont le travail à deux ou à trois ou la prise ostensible du numéro de plaque du client par une autre prostituée afin que ce dernier sache qu'on pouvait le retracer si les choses tournaient mal.

[14] M^me^ Scott a été militante. Elle a notamment fait campagne contre le projet de loi C-49 (dont est issue la disposition actuelle interdisant la communication). Elle dit qu'après l'interdiction de la communication, la Canadian Organization for the Rights of Prostitutes (« CORP ») a commencé à recevoir des appels de prostituées qui constataient une répression policière accrue et un plus grand nombre d'incidents avec des clients. C'est pourquoi elle a participé à la mise sur pied à Toronto d'un centre d'aide aux prostituées dont les services étaient offerts sur place et au téléphone. Dès la première année, M^me^ Scott s'est entretenue avec environ 250 prostituées dont les principaux sujets de préoccupation étaient la violence des clients et les conséquences juridiques d'une arrestation. En 2000, elle a créé SPOC afin de donner une nouvelle impulsion au travail entrepris par la CORP. C'est à titre de directrice administrative de cet organisme qu'elle a témoigné en 2005 devant le Sous-comité parlementaire de l'examen des lois sur le racolage. Au fil des ans, elle se serait entretenue avec environ 1 500 femmes qui se livrent à la prostitution. Si les appelantes ont gain de cause, M^me^ Scott aimerait se mettre à son compte et offrir des services de prostitution à l'intérieur. Elle reconnaît qu'un client peut se révéler dangereux tant à l'intérieur qu'à l'extérieur, mais elle prendrait des précautions, comme la vérification de l'identité du client, la présence d'une autre personne à proximité qui puisse intervenir au besoin lors d'un rendez-vous et l'embauche d'un garde du corps.

[15] Les trois demanderesses ont demandé, sur le fondement de l'al. 14.05(3)g.1) des Règles de procédure civile, R.R.O. 1990, Règl. 194, que les dispositions qui limitent la prostitution soient déclarées inconstitutionnelles. Le dossier de preuve compte plus de 25 000 pages et 88 volumes. La preuve par affidavit s'accompagne d'une foule d'études, de rapports, d'articles de journaux, d'extraits de textes other documents. Some of the affiants were cross-examined.

II. Legislation

[16] The relevant legislation is as follows:

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

. . .

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

Criminal Code

197. (1) In this Part,

. . .

"common bawdy-house" means a place that is (a) kept or occupied, or

(b) resorted to by one or more persons for the purpose of prostitution or the practice of acts of indecency;

210. (1) Every one who keeps a common bawdy-house is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) Every one who de loi et des Débats de la Chambre des communes, et de nombreux autres documents. Certains déposants ont été contre-interrogés.

II. Dispositions législatives

[16] Les dispositions législatives applicables sont les suivantes :

Charte canadienne des droits et libertés

1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés garantit les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés. Ils ne peuvent être restreints que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

2. Chacun a les libertés fondamentales suivantes :

. . .

b) liberté de pensée, de croyance, d'opinion et d'expression, y compris la liberté de la presse et des autres moyens de communication;

7. Chacun a droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de sa personne; il ne peut être porté atteinte à ce droit qu'en conformité avec les principes de justice fondamentale.

Code criminel

197. (1) Les définitions qui suivent s'appliquent à la présente partie.

. . .

« maison de débauche » Local qui, selon le cas :

a) est tenu ou occupé;

b) est fréquenté par une ou plusieurs personnes, à des fins de prostitution ou pour la pratique d'actes d'indécence.

210. (1) Est coupable d'un acte criminel et passible d'un emprisonnement maximal de deux ans quiconque tient une maison de débauche.

(2) Est coupable d'une infraction punissable sur déclaration de culpabilité par procédure sommaire quiconque, selon le cas :

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

CITATION: Canada (Attorney General) v. Power, 2024 SCC 26

APPEAL HEARD: December 7, 2023
JUDGMENT RENDERED: July 19, 2024
DOCKET: 40241

BETWEEN:

Attorney General of Canada
Appellant

and

Joseph Power
Respondent

- and -

Attorney General of Ontario, Attorney General of Quebec, Attorney General of Nova Scotia, Attorney General of New Brunswick, Attorney General of Manitoba, Attorney General of British Columbia, Attorney General of Prince Edward Island, Attorney General of Saskatchewan, Attorney General of Alberta, Attorney General of Newfoundland and Labrador, Fisher River Cree Nation, Sioux Valley Dakota Nation, Manto Sipi Cree Nation, Lake Manitoba First Nation, Quebec Native Women Inc., Speaker of the Senate, David Asper Centre for Constitutional Rights, Canadian Civil Liberties Association, Canadian Constitution Foundation, Queen's Prison Law Clinic, John Howard Society of Canada, British Columbia Civil Liberties Association, West Coast Prison Justice Society and Speaker of the House of Commons
Interveners

CORAM: Wagner C.J. and Karakatsanis, Côté, Rowe, Martin, Kasirer, Jamal, O'Bonsawin and Moreau JJ.

JOINT REASONS FOR JUDGMENT: (paras. 1 to 119)	Wagner C.J. and Karakatsanis J. (Martin, O'Bonsawin and Moreau JJ. concurring)
REASONS DISSENTING IN PART: (paras. 120 to 253)	Jamal J. (Kasirer J. concurring)
DISSENTING REASONS: (paras. 254 to 383)	Rowe J. (Côté J. concurring)

Attorney General of Canada Appellant

v.

Joseph Power Respondent

and

Attorney General of Ontario,
Attorney General of Quebec,
Attorney General of Nova Scotia,
Attorney General of New Brunswick, Attorney General of Manitoba,
Attorney General of British Columbia,
Attorney General of Prince Edward Island,
Attorney General of Saskatchewan,
Attorney General of Alberta,
Attorney General of Newfoundland and Labrador,
Fisher River Cree Nation, Sioux Valley Dakota Nation,
Manto Sipi Cree Nation, Lake Manitoba First Nation,
Quebec Native Women Inc., Speaker of the Senate,
David Asper Centre for Constitutional Rights,
Canadian Civil Liberties Association,
Canadian Constitution Foundation, Queen's Prison Law Clinic,
John Howard Society of Canada,
British Columbia Civil Liberties Association, West Coast Prison Justice Society and
Speaker of the House of Commons Interveners

Indexed as: Canada (Attorney General) v. Power

2024 SCC 26

File No.: 40241.

2023: December 7; 2024: July 19.

Present: Wagner C.J. and Karakatsanis, Côté, Rowe, Martin, Kasirer, Jamal, O'Bonsawin and Moreau JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR NEW BRUNSWICK

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Remedy — Damages — Legislation enacted by Parliament later found unconstitutional — Plaintiff commencing action against Crown for damages for breach of Charter rights caused by enactment of legislation — Whether damages against Crown can ever be appropriate remedy under Charter for enactment of legislation later declared unconstitutional — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s. 24(1).

In 1996, P was convicted of two indictable offences. He was sentenced and served his time. After his release, P applied for a record suspension but his application was denied. At the time of his conviction, persons convicted of indictable offences could apply for a record suspension five years after their release. However, the transitional provisions of legislation enacted since then by Parliament retroactively rendered him permanently ineligible for a record suspension. The transitional provisions were declared unconstitutional by courts in other matters and Canada concedes that their retrospective application violates s. 11(h) and (i) of the Charter in a manner that cannot be justified by s. 1. P filed a notice of action seeking, inter alia, damages under s. 24(1) of the Charter against Canada for the breach of his rights caused by the enactment of the transitional provisions. In response to P's action, Canada brought a motion on a question of law, asking two questions:

1. Can the Crown, in its executive capacity, be held liable in damages for government officials and Ministers preparing and drafting a proposed Bill that was later enacted by Parliament, and subsequently declared invalid by a court pursuant to s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982?

2. Can the Crown, in its executive capacity, be held liable in damages for Parliament enacting a Bill into law, which legislation was later declared invalid by a court pursuant to s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982?

The motion judge answered "yes" to both questions, finding that the government was entitled to only a limited immunity from Charter damages for the enactment of unconstitutional legislation. The Court of Appeal dismissed Canada's appeal, agreeing with the motion judge that the government does not enjoy absolute immunity in exercising its legislative powers.

Held (Kasirer and Jamal JJ. dissenting in part and Côté and Rowe JJ. dissenting): The appeal should be dismissed.

Per Wagner C.J. and Karakatsanis, Martin, O'Bonsawin and Moreau JJ.: The questions should both be answered in the affirmative. The state is not entitled to an absolute immunity from liability for damages when it enacts unconstitutional legislation that infringes Charter rights. Rather, as the Court held in Mackin v. New Brunswick (Minister of Finance), 2002 SCC 13, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 405, the state may be liable for Charter damages if the legislation is clearly unconstitutional or was in bad faith or an abuse of power. An absolute immunity fails to properly reconcile the constitutional principles that protect legislative autonomy, such as parliamentary sovereignty and parliamentary privilege, and the principles that require the government be held accountable for infringing Charter rights, such as constitutionality and the rule of law. Each of these principles constitutes an essential part of Canada's constitutional law and they must all be respected to achieve an appropriate separation of powers. By shielding the government from liability in even the most egregious circumstances, absolute immunity would subvert the principles that demand government accountability.

Sections 32(1) and 24 of the Charter, along with s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, entrench the court's role in holding the government to account for Charter violations. Pursuant to s. 32(1), the federal and provincial legislatures are subject to Charter scrutiny. A declaration of invalidity under s. 52(1), the first and most important remedy when dealing with unconstitutional legislation, allows courts to protect Charter rights while respecting the distinct role of the legislature in Canada's constitutional order. As for s. 24(1), it provides a personal remedy in the sense that it is specific to the violation of the applicant's rights; it is a unique public law remedy against the state that should not be assimilated to the principles of private law remedies. An award of damages as a s. 24(1) remedy against the state for exceeding its legal powers has long been recognized as an important requirement of the rule of law. In Vancouver (City) v. Ward, 2010 SCC 27, [2010] 2 S.C.R. 28, the Court set out a four-step test for determining whether damages are an appropriate and just remedy: (1) whether a Charter right has been breached; (2) whether damages would fulfill one or more of the related functions of compensation, vindicating the right, or deterring future breaches; (3) whether the state has demonstrated that countervailing factors defeat the functional considerations that support a damage award and render damages inappropriate or unjust; and (4) the appropriate quantum of damages.

While there is a general presumption against combining remedies under ss. 24(1) and 52(1), there is no categorical restriction. The existence of an alternative remedy is a countervailing consideration under the Ward test; however, provided an award of Charter damages is not duplicative, the potential to combine declarations and damages must remain available in situations where a declaration would fail to satisfy the functional need for compensation, vindication or to meaningfully deter future breaches. While good governance concerns may defeat an award of damages, the mere suggestion that damages will have a chilling effect on government is not sufficient to defeat an applicant's functional entitlement to Charter damages established at steps one and two of the Ward test. Damages may promote good governance by encouraging constitutional compliance and deterring Charter breaches. Limited immunity for the state for the enactment of legislation subsequently declared unconstitutional is consistent with and best reconciles the constitutional principles underpinning both legislative autonomy and accountability: parliamentary sovereignty, the separation of powers, parliamentary privilege, the broad and purposive approach to rights and remedial provisions in the Charter, and constitutionalism and the rule of law.

First, the principle of parliamentary sovereignty must not be confused with parliamentary supremacy. Parliamentary sovereignty does not mean that Parliament is above the Constitution; rather, Parliament remains subject to the constraints and accountability mechanisms of the Constitution, including the Charter. The supremacy of the Constitution in relation to Parliament is well recognized in each application of s. 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982. Limited immunity does not impair Parliament's power to make and repeal laws within the confines of the Constitution.

Second, limited immunity is consistent with the separation of powers. The separation of powers does not mean that each branch works in isolation. The Court has never adopted a watertight system of separation but rather has always emphasized that each branch cannot exercise undue interference, which depends entirely on the circumstances and the constitutional principles engaged. Holding the legislature liable for Charter damages when it seriously misuses its legislative power does not constitute undue judicial interference in the legislative process. Rather, damages are an after-the-fact remedy for a Charter violation. However, respect for the legislative role requires a high threshold for liability for the enactment of unconstitutional legislation.

Third, courts can respect parliamentary privilege when applying the limited immunity threshold. Parliamentary privilege provides the legislature with the tools to execute its core functions. It operates by shielding some areas of legislative activity from external review: for example, parliamentary privilege gives members of the legislature the freedom of speech necessary to carry out their law-making power without fear of liability, and protects against the compellability of certain types of evidence, such as the testimony of sitting members of Parliament. The protection of these processes is fundamental to Canada's constitutional structure and the functioning of its democracy. Parliamentary privilege cannot be subordinated or diminished by other parts of the Constitution. But Charter damages for the enactment of unconstitutional legislation are not claimed against any individual members involved in the legislative process. The action is directly against the state. The basis for the state's liability for damages under s. 24(1) is the breach of the claimant's Charter right. The state's conduct within the legislative process is not an independent basis for liability but rather informs whether damages are an appropriate and just remedy for the breach caused by the enactment of the Charter-infringing law. The state's liability for unconstitutional legislation does not engage members' personal immunity for parliamentary speech. Nor does it interfere with Parliament's power to control its own debates and proceedings, or dictate how the legislative function is exercised. Parliamentary privilege must not be extended beyond the scope necessary to protect the legislature's core democratic functions. However, parliamentary privilege may prevent claimants from adducing certain types of evidence relating to the legislative process and hence limit a claimant's practical ability to satisfy the threshold in a given case. But this possibility does not foreclose the availability of such a cause of action in principle.

Fourth, an absolute immunity does not accommodate the principles recognized in the jurisprudence on constitutional remedies. It leaves little room for the principles that underpin legislative accountability — including the broad and purposive approach to rights and remedial provisions in the Charter, as well as constitutionalism and the rule of law. An absolute immunity would protect the government from any claim for damages for any unconstitutional legislation, no matter how egregious, and allow a narrow set of constitutional interests to dominate the analysis.

A high bar for immunity, set by the Court in Mackin, has been good law for over two decades. It has resulted neither in chilling good governance, nor in a floodgate of claims against the state for damages. Although the Court may depart from precedent where there is a compelling reason to do so, there are no compelling reasons to overrule Mackin. The Mackin qualified immunity threshold is assessed at step three of the Ward framework and can be restated as follows: the good governance defence will prevail unless the law was clearly unconstitutional, in bad faith or an abuse of power. If the threshold is not met, the balance of constitutional principles tilts in favour of state immunity. In such cases, the constitutional imperative that the government be afforded the autonomy to govern effectively will defeat the claim to damages.

Per Kasirer and Jamal JJ. (dissenting in part): The appeal should be allowed in part and the first question answered in the negative. The Crown enjoys an absolute immunity from damages under s. 24(1) of the Charter when preparing and drafting primary legislation later found to be unconstitutional. Such conduct is protected from judicial interference by established categories of parliamentary privilege, namely freedom of speech and control over parliamentary proceedings. The courts have no jurisdiction to review or assign liability for the exercise of these established categories of parliamentary privilege. The second question should be answered in the affirmative, but in a qualified manner: damages may only be available under s. 24(1) for harms flowing from "clearly unconstitutional" enactments. Mackin should be clarified to eliminate bad faith and abuse of power in enacting primary legislation as grounds for damages under s. 24(1) of the Charter, as they inevitably trench on established categories of parliamentary privilege. They would also strain the separation of powers by asking the courts to entertain non-justiciable questions. The Crown may, however, be liable in damages under s. 24(1) for harms flowing from "clearly unconstitutional" enactments. The clearly unconstitutional threshold is a nuanced standard that appropriately protects the autonomy of Parliament and the limited immunity necessary for legislators to carry out their work, while employing a purposive approach to s. 24(1) remedies to vindicate Charter rights.

The doctrine of parliamentary privilege refers to the sum of the privileges, powers, and immunities of the federal Houses of Parliament or provincial legislative assemblies, and of their individual members, that are necessary to their capacity to function as legislative bodies. Parliamentary privilege helps Canada's constitutional democracy maintain the fundamental separation of powers between the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of government, by shielding some areas of legislative activity from external review. Parliamentary privilege is part of the Constitution of Canada. Since one part of the Constitution cannot be abrogated or diminished by another part of the Constitution, actions or conduct protected by parliamentary privilege are not subject to the Charter. Once the existence of a category of parliamentary privilege is established, conduct or activities that are themselves an exercise of that privilege are not subject to review by the courts, even when such conduct or activities are alleged to violate the Charter. This means that such conduct or activities cannot be the basis of a Charter breach and cannot give rise to a Charter remedy such as damages under s. 24(1).

In the instant case, three uncontroversial points regarding the questions at issue guide the analysis. First, there is no debate that the questions, which inquire as to the Crown's liability in its executive capacity, refer to the liability of the Canadian government qua executive, to be distinguished from the legislature. Second, there is no debate that the Charter, including s. 24(1), applies to Parliament and the government of Canada, pursuant to s. 32(1)(a) of the Charter. Third, remedies under s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982 and s. 24(1) of the Charter can be combined. A remedy will be appropriate and just within the meaning of s. 24(1) when it furthers the general objectives of the Charter by compensating the plaintiff for any loss, vindicating rights, or deterring future breaches.

Both questions before the Court raise distinct parliamentary privilege considerations relating, in question 1, to the legislative process of preparing and drafting legislation, and in question 2, to the grounds on which legislation, once enacted, may be reviewed. Concerning the first question, the Crown cannot be liable for preparing and drafting legislation. Government officials and Ministers involved in preparing and drafting legislation enjoy the parliamentary privilege of freedom of speech for words or conduct connected to their legislative work. Whether the privilege applies is not determined by the nature of the relevant individual, but by the activities in which they are engaged and the necessity of those activities to core legislative functions. Robust legislative debate, which falls within the privilege over freedom of speech, is the lifeblood of Parliament's day-to-day business. Exposing the Crown, in its executive capacity, to liability in damages for the conduct of government officials and Ministers in preparing and drafting legislation would inevitably intrude upon this category of privilege.

As with the free speech privilege, exposing the Crown to liability for the words or conduct of government officials and Ministers in preparing and drafting legislation would unavoidably trench on the established privilege over the proceedings of Parliament. This privilege is broad: it includes everything said or done by a Member in the exercise of their functions as a Member in committees of either House, as well as everything said or done in either House in the transaction of parliamentary business. It also extends to matters taking place outside the houses of Parliament. The words and conduct of Members who are occupied in something closely and necessarily related to a proceeding in Parliament are accorded absolute privilege. It cannot reasonably be suggested that preparing and drafting legislation is not closely and necessarily related to proceedings in Parliament.

Parliamentary privilege is a threshold jurisdictional issue under the Ward framework regarding Charter damages under s. 24(1). If the existence of a recognized category of parliamentary privilege is proved, there can be no judicial review of the exercise of the privilege, even on Charter grounds. This conclusion is a direct consequence of the constitutional nature of parliamentary privilege and its status as a rule of curial jurisdiction. The privilege cannot be the subject of a judicial balancing as to whether countervailing good governance concerns at step three of Ward defeat the functional considerations that support a damages award and render damages inappropriate or unjust. Instead, the existence of the privilege means that the courts lack jurisdiction to undertake any further inquiry. In addition, the Crown in its executive capacity cannot be held liable for the work of Ministers and other government officials in preparing and drafting legislation because, in doing so, they act in a legislative rather than an executive capacity. Such conduct is not Crown conduct that can be attributed to the executive for which the Crown can be liable in an action brought under s. 23(1) of the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act.

With respect to the second question, if it is interpreted as relating to whether an enactment that violates the Charter can ever give rise to Charter damages under s. 24(1) after a bill has become law and the legislative process is complete, the answer is a qualified "yes". The limited immunity rule in Mackin should be modified to clarify that the Crown can be liable in damages for the breach of Charter rights caused by legislation only when the legislation is shown to have been "clearly unconstitutional" at the time it was enacted. There are compelling reasons to revisit Mackin. None of the authorities cited in Mackin support awarding Charter damages against the Crown for harms caused by unconstitutional primary legislation. The test enunciated in Mackin also conflicts with the doctrine of parliamentary privilege, as well as the separation of powers and principles of justiciability. None of these points was argued in Mackin, and the Court did not consider them in its reasons.

The bad faith and abuse of power thresholds in Mackin are inappropriate thresholds in respect of damages under s. 24(1) of the Charter for unconstitutional primary legislation because they conflict with the doctrine of parliamentary privilege and principles of justiciability, and strain the separation of powers. The doctrine of parliamentary privilege prevents courts from passing judgment on the process of enacting legislation. Scrutinizing legislation for evidence of bad faith or abuse of power, even once the law has already been enacted, would inevitably pull courts into judging the legislative process, which is beyond their jurisdiction. The courts cannot put Parliament "on trial".

In addition, inquiring into whether primary legislation was in bad faith and an abuse of power as standards for awarding Charter damages would threaten the separation of powers by requiring the courts to consider questions that are not justiciable. Justiciability refers to a set of judge-made rules, norms, and principles delineating the scope of judicial intervention in social, political, and economic life. A court may decline to answer a question on the ground of justiciability when doing so would take it beyond its proper constitutional role, or if the court cannot provide an answer within its area of expertise. Once legislation has been found to be unconstitutional, there is no legal yardstick to measure whether the legislation was in bad faith or involved an abuse of power. Asking whether the legislation is in bad faith or constitutes an abuse of power requires the court to pass judgment on the content of the legislation on grounds other than its constitutionality, which strays into evaluating the wisdom or policy of the law and is not the proper role of the courts. The appropriate use of Hansard as proof of historical context or purpose in statutory interpretation must be distinguished from its inappropriate use to prove that legislation is in bad faith. The former does not impugn the freedom of speech or the integrity of parliamentary proceedings; the latter does.

In the context of legislative enactments, absolute immunity overshoots what is required to protect parliamentary privilege and the separation of powers. These constitutional imperatives can be respected by a test that focuses on whether the enactment itself clearly violated established constitutional norms at the time it was enacted. A qualified or limited immunity preserves the courts' power under s. 24(1) to craft remedies that meaningfully vindicate Charter rights, while ensuring that effective government is not jeopardized by overbroad state liability that trenches on parliamentary privilege. To overcome the good governance concerns at step three of the Ward framework, a claimant must show that the legislation was clearly unconstitutional in the sense that the unconstitutionality was readily or obviously demonstrable at the time the legislation was enacted and could not be subject to any serious debate. Such a standard focuses on legislative outputs rather than legislative inputs, and on how the impugned legislation must be significantly wide of the constitutional mark before damages will be an appropriate and just remedy under s. 24(1) of the Charter. The clearly unconstitutional standard allows courts to consider whether legislation has an unconstitutional purpose as a factor in a damages assessment, and it is an appropriately high but not insurmountable bar for claimants to meet. If an enactment was clearly unconstitutional at the time of enactment, this should be readily or obviously demonstrable.

Per Côté and Rowe JJ. (dissenting): The appeal should be allowed and both questions answered in the negative. The preparation, drafting, and enactment of legislation necessarily implicates parliamentary privilege, which is fundamentally at odds with awarding damages against the Crown in the manner sought. Both parliamentary privilege and the Charter constitute components of the Constitution of Canada. Neither one subordinates the other. The Charter must, as a matter of constitutional law, be given effect in a manner that is compatible with parliamentary privilege. Parliamentary privilege is rooted in the earliest chapters of Canada's constitutional history, and reflects an inherited legacy of struggle between the Crown and Parliament in the United Kingdom, one that reaches back to Parliament's origins. The Court has a responsibility to preserve the inheritance of Canada's constitutional order. It should not be discarded, and parliamentary privilege should not be subordinated to s. 24(1) of the Charter. To do so would be to depart from precedent and to do so unwisely.

Canada's constitutional arrangements (aside from Aboriginal and treaty rights) consist of four written and unwritten components: the Constitution Acts of 1867 and 1982, constitutional conventions, Crown prerogative and parliamentary privilege. The unwritten components, including parliamentary privilege, fulfill a necessary role in Canada's constitutional order — they are no less part of the Constitution than are the two Constitution Acts. In addition, there are underlying (unwritten) principles that contribute to giving effect to Canada's constitutional arrangements. These principles are not themselves components of the Constitution; rather, they assist in interpreting the Constitution and arriving at answers to questions not otherwise provided for in the Constitution. They do not have a substantive policy content and cannot be the basis to challenge the validity of legislation. Norms expressed in the underlying/unwritten principles of constitutionalism and the rule of law do not constitute a basis to override parliamentary privilege, any more than they can constitute a basis to invalidate legislation. Parliamentary sovereignty and the separation of powers (plus constitutionalism and the rule of law) are underlying/unwritten principles that inform interpretation of the constituent components of the Constitution, but parliamentary privilege is different in that it is itself part of the Constitution. This distinction is fundamental.

The Constitution Act, 1867 established that parliamentary privilege, which was essential to the operation of the largely unwritten constitution of the United Kingdom, would also be part of Canada's Constitution; the preamble states that Canada will have a Constitution similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom.

Parliamentary privilege was also specifically dealt with in s. 18 of the Constitution Act, 1867, which provides that the privileges, immunities, and powers to be held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons, and by the members thereof respectively, shall be such as are from time to time defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada. Thus, parliamentary privilege was from the outset a component of Canada's Constitution and continues to be so today. Unwritten components of the Constitution — including parliamentary privilege — have continued to be given faithful effect because they continue to play a crucial role in Canada's constitutional order.

Chief among the functions of parliamentary privilege is that it ensures that Parliament and provincial legislatures are able to carry out their work effectively. The purpose of privilege is to recognize Parliament's exclusive jurisdiction to deal with complaints within its privileged sphere of activity. A two-step process applies when courts are confronted with a privilege claim. First, the court must assess whether the existence and scope of the claimed privilege have been authoritatively established. If so, then the court's inquiry stops. The second step, which is not relevant in the instant case given the established nature of the privileges in question, requires the court to assess the necessity of the privilege asserted.

Parliamentary privilege ensures that the legislature is safeguarded from interference by the other two branches of the state, the executive and the judiciary. Intervention by the executive or by the courts in the working of legislatures would inevitably create delays, disruption, uncertainties and costs which would hold up the nation's business and on that account would be unacceptable.

Parliamentary privilege also structures the dialogue between the courts and the legislature. By delineating the scope of what is open to review, this privilege ensures that legislatures are able to respond to decisions in which courts give meaning to the Constitution, and where necessary, invalidate legislation. The dialogical nature of constitutional development in Canada is reflected in the "second look" cases in which the Court has wrestled with what weight to afford Parliament's attempt to reformulate legislation in response to a decision under s. 52(1). Consistent in these cases is the principle that Parliament should not be discouraged from trying again to reformulate legislation so that it is consistent with the Charter.

Respect for the separation of powers — which has been repeatedly affirmed as a constitutional principle — precludes judicial scrutiny of the legislative process. Subordinating parliamentary privilege in order to impose s. 24(1) damages for the preparation, drafting, and enactment of legislation risks drawing the courts into a supervisory role over the legislative process.

In the instant case, the privileges invoked are the House's exclusive control over its proceedings, and the privilege related to freedom of speech. They are both well established, and are rooted in art. 9 of the Bill of Rights of 1689, which established that the freedom of speech and debates, or proceedings in Parliament, ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of Parliament. It has long been accepted that these privileges must be held absolutely and constitutionally if they are to be effective; the legislative branch of government must enjoy a certain autonomy which even the Crown and the courts cannot touch. Judicial consideration of these privileges shows that the broad shelter afforded by the operation of parliamentary privilege is agnostic towards the content of what is protected. It matters not what was said or what the impugned conduct involved — what matters is whether the conduct in question relates to the assembly's ability to fulfill its constitutional functions.

Parliamentary privilege attaches to the entire process through which legislation is developed and adopted. It extends to the range of Parliamentary actors who are involved in the legislative process. When ministers develop legislation, they act in a parliamentary capacity. Despite an inevitable overlap between executive and legislative functions inherent in their work in developing legislation, because they are engaged in the law-making process when they develop legislation, the process is generally protected from judicial oversight.

While the existence and limits of parliamentary privilege are justiciable, their operation is not. Once a court finds that a privilege exists and describes its extent, the court's role ends. It is for the legislature itself to determine whether the exercise of the privilege was proper; such matters are not reviewable by the courts. The wide berth given to parliamentary privilege has been reflected in the manner in which the Court has approached apparent conflicts between parliamentary privilege and other components of the Constitution. The solution, when a conflict emerges between parliamentary privilege and another component of the Constitution, is not to read down the protections afforded by parliamentary privilege — the solution is to read the relevant constitutional components in a compatible way. It is not open to the courts to intrude upon the bona fides of parliamentary debates and proceedings. The courts have long recognized the defining significance of Parliament's work and the need for parliamentarians to debate and develop legislation freely. Parliamentary privileges are vital to the separation of powers as they enable parliamentarians — both individually and collectively — to freely express themselves and to act on matters of importance to Canadians, including controversial public policy issues, without fear of interference from the Crown or the courts.

The Charter did not negate the fundamental constitutional tenets upon which British parliamentary democracy rested or mark a "clean break" with existing constitutional structures that came before the passage of the Constitution Act, 1982. Instead, the passage of the Charter must be understood within the broader context of Canada's constitutional development. Many consider the Charter to be the paramount constitutional instrument. This is incorrect. All parts of the Constitution must be read together, and no one can be subordinated to the others. That said, the Charter was accompanied by a revolutionary transformation of sorts, in the nature and extent of demands by litigants for courts to use their authority to advance goals that those litigants had not achieved through the electoral process. But it is not for the courts to pass upon the policy or wisdom of legislative will or question the wisdom of enactments which are within the competence of the Legislatures. Temperance and moderation in the face of such invitations remain fundamental to the appreciation by the judiciary of its own position in the constitutional scheme.

The theory of liability endorsed by the courts below in the instant case elides the distinction between "the Crown" in its executive and legislative capacities. Canada's Constitution incorporates the Westminster system of government, which was varied for a federal structure rather than a unitary state. Subsequent developments in the Constitution have built on this. In the contemporary constitutional order, the Crown acts in multiple distinct capacities, federal and provincial, as well as executive and legislative. The Crown in its executive capacity and the Crown in its legislative capacity are distinct. The Crown in its executive capacity consists of the King (through the Governor General) exercising the executive government and authority of and over Canada, as continued in the Constitution Act, 1867, s. 9. Those executive powers are, by constitutional convention, exercised by the Prime Minister, Cabinet, and public authorities in furtherance of statutory delegation of authority. The Crown-in-Parliament consists of the monarch (Governor General) acting in their legislative capacity. The Crown-in-Parliament embraces three determinative acts that are part of Parliament's core functions as a legislative body: royal recommendation, royal consent and royal assent.

The Crown, thus, is at the heart of both the executive and legislative branches of government, but plays different roles in each. While Canada's constitutional order envisages some overlap as to the Crown in its various capacities, the law does not recognize executive control of the legislative branch. This is consistent with the scope of parliamentary privilege and its application across the various steps in the legislative process. The preparation of legislation is a complex process involving multiple actors across government. The courts are ill-equipped to deal with the procedural complexities of the legislative process. The distinctive roles played by the Crown reflects the separation of powers between the different branches of government, and the balance between them. This is part of the explanation as to why absolute immunity is needed for the preparation, drafting, and enactment of legislation, but not for determination of the validity of legislation once it is enacted or the legality of acts taken pursuant to the legislation.

Mackin does not resolve the question as to how parliamentary privilege operates where someone seeks s. 24(1) damages for the preparation, drafting, and enactment of legislation. The Court in Mackin did not turn its attention to this question nor has Mackin been applied in this way. The Court cannot rely on a passing reference in Mackin as the basis to depart from a substantial body of jurisprudence on parliamentary privilege and to abandon the fundamental principle that components of the Constitution do not negate one another. Mackin cannot be the basis for deciding that s. 24(1) damages can apply against the Crown in its executive capacity for the preparation, drafting, and enactment of legislation. Parliamentary privilege was never mentioned, much less discussed. To the extent, if any, that Mackin's brief reference to damages for the mere enactment of a law represents a holding of the Court, it should be treated as weak precedent at most. Accordingly, the matter being considered in the instant case must be seen as novel for the Court's consideration.

To remain faithful to the Court's jurisprudence, the Court's role must be limited to establishing the existence of the privileges in question, rather than inquiring into their operation. Parliamentary privilege stands without exception. Moreover, the Crown in its executive capacity cannot be liable for the preparation, drafting, or enactment of legislation, as it is not part of the legislative process. Rather it is the Crown-in-Parliament which is so; legislation is approved by the Commons and the Senate, followed by royal assent. Seeking damages from the Crown in its executive capacity for the preparation, drafting, and enactment of legislation is conceptually incoherent. The Attorney General of Canada is not the legal representative of Parliament and cannot represent Parliament in legal proceedings.

Absolute immunity is necessary. Parliamentary privilege is like an eggshell; one cannot break it just a little. In order for the Crown in its executive capacity to be held liable for the preparation, drafting, and enactment of legislation, courts will need to inquire into the motivations and knowledge of those engaged in the legislative process. The inquiry into "bad faith or abuse of power" can manifest itself in any variety of ways, many that cannot now be contemplated. Legislatures will have to ask themselves whether a court, sitting in judgment of their actions with the benefit of hindsight, will deem theirs to be "an improper purpose". Furthermore, a "clearly unconstitutional" standard will necessarily depend on the eye of the beholder, and what is known to the court sitting in judgment of the legislature's actions ex post facto.

Enabling s. 24(1) damages would upset the dialogical balance between legislatures and the courts. Courts will be thrust into a position of overseeing the work of Parliament, and inquiring into the motives and knowledge of parliamentarians and others involved in the legislative process. Extending s. 24(1) damages to the preparation, drafting, and enactment of legislation would deprive Parliament of its ability to meaningfully respond to decisions in which the judiciary has determined the validity of laws or the legality of actions taken pursuant to those laws. Further, given the number of parliamentary actors and the vagaries of the legislative process, it is unclear whose alleged actions would be at issue in any claim seeking Charter damages for the drafting and enactment of any one statute. Absolute immunities are required for certain institutions to function. This is exemplified by the fact that the judiciary enjoys an absolute immunity in the exercise of its adjudicative function.

Remedies under s. 24(1) are available following the enactment of legislation, in relation to executive action pursuant to legislation. P is not without recourse to a remedy, nor would others be. P could have applied for judicial review on Charter grounds of the decision to deny his application for a criminal record suspension. That remedy accords fully with Canada's constitutional arrangements and would in no way detract from parliamentary privilege.

Cases Cited

By Wagner C.J. and Karakatsanis J.

Discussed: Mackin v. New Brunswick (Minister of Finance), 2002 SCC 13, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 405; distinguished: Mikisew Cree First Nation v. Canada (Governor General in Council), 2018 SCC 40, [2018] 2 S.C.R. 765; considered: Vancouver (City) v. Ward, 2010 SCC 27, [2010] 2 S.C.R. 28; Chagnon v. Syndicat de la fonction publique et parapublique du Québec, 2018 SCC 39, [2018] 2 S.C.R. 687; Canada (House of Commons) v. Vaid, 2005 SCC 30, [2005] 1 S.C.R. 667; Conseil scolaire francophone de la Colombie-Britannique v. British Columbia, 2020 SCC 13, [2020] 1 S.C.R. 678; Ernst v. Alberta Energy Regulator, 2017 SCC 1, [2017] 1 S.C.R. 3; referred to: Chu v. Canada (Attorney General), 2017 BCSC 630, 347 C.C.C. (3d) 449; Charron v. The Queen, Ont. S.C.J., No. 16-67821, June 14, 2017; Rajab v. The Queen, Ont. S.C.J., No. 16-67822, June 14, 2017; P.H. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2020 FC 393, [2020] 2 F.C.R. 461; Hunter v. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145; Reference re Senate Reform, 2014 SCC 32, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 704; McKinney v. University of Guelph, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 229; Nelles v. Ontario, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 170; Doucet-Boudreau v. Nova Scotia (Minister of Education), 2003 SCC 62, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 3; Corbiere v. Canada (Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs), [1999] 2 S.C.R. 203; Schachter v. Canada, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 679; Ontario (Attorney General) v. G, 2020 SCC 38, [2020] 3 S.C.R. 629; R. v. Albashir, 2021 SCC 48; R. v. Ferguson, 2008 SCC 6, [2008] 1 S.C.R. 96; Ravndahl v. Saskatchewan, 2009 SCC 7, [2009] 1 S.C.R. 181; R. v. 974649 Ontario Inc., 2001 SCC 81, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 575; Mills v. The Queen, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 863; Roncarelli v. Duplessis, [1959] S.C.R. 121; Brazeau v.

Canada (Attorney General), 2020 ONCA 184, 149 O.R. (3d) 705; R. (on the application of Miller) v. Prime Minister, [2019] UKSC 41, [2019] 4 All E.R. 299; Reference re Pan-Canadian Securities Regulation, 2018 SCC 48, [2018] 3 S.C.R. 189; Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 3; Fraser v. Public Service Staff Relations Board, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 455; British Columbia (Attorney General) v. Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia, 2020 SCC 20, [2020] 2 S.C.R. 506; Ontario v. Criminal Lawyers' Association of Ontario, 2013 SCC 43, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 3; New Brunswick Broadcasting Co. v. Nova Scotia (Speaker of the House of Assembly), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 319; Reference re Secession of Quebec, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217; Reference re Manitoba Language Rights, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 721; Newfoundland (Treasury Board) v. N.A.P.E., 2004 SCC 66, [2004] 3 S.C.R. 381; Henry v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 24, [2015] 2 S.C.R. 214; Harvey v. New Brunswick (Attorney General), [1996] 2 S.C.R. 876; R. v. Sullivan, 2022 SCC 19; Cooper v. Canada (Human Rights Commission), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 854; Dunlea v. Attorney-General, [2000] NZCA 84, [2000] 3 N.Z.L.R. 136; Maharaj v. Attorney-General of Trinidad and Tobago (No. 2), [1979] A.C. 385; R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295; R. v. Morgentaler, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 463; R. v. Moriarity, 2015 SCC 55, [2015] 3 S.C.R. 485; R. v. Sharma, 2022 SCC 39; Libman v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 569; Ell v. Alberta, 2003 SCC 35, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 857; Canadian Council for Refugees v. Canada (Citizenship and Immigration), 2023 SCC 17; Amax Potash Ltd. v. Government of Saskatchewan, [1977] 2 S.C.R. 576; R. v. Henry, 2005 SCC 76, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 609; R. v. Kirkpatrick, 2022 SCC 33; Guimond v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 347; Finney v.

Barreau du Québec, 2004 SCC 36, [2004] 2 S.C.R. 17; Hinse v. Canada (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 35, [2015] 2 S.C.R. 621; Entreprises Sibeca Inc. v. Frelighsburg (Municipality), 2004 SCC 61, [2004] 3 S.C.R. 304.

By Jamal J. (dissenting in part)

Mackin v. New Brunswick (Minister of Finance), 2002 SCC 13, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 405; Canada (House of Commons) v. Vaid, 2005 SCC 30, [2005] 1 S.C.R. 667; Chu v. Canada (Attorney General), 2017 BCSC 630, 347 C.C.C. (3d) 449; P.H. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2020 FC 393, [2020] 2 F.C.R. 461; New Brunswick Broadcasting Co. v. Nova Scotia (Speaker of the House of Assembly), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 319; Chagnon v. Syndicat de la fonction publique et parapublique du Québec, 2018 SCC 39, [2018] 2 S.C.R. 687; Kielley v. Carson (1842), 4 Moo. 63, 13 E.R. 225; British Columbia (Attorney General) v. Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia, 2020 SCC 20, [2020] 2 S.C.R. 506; Duffy v. Canada (Senate), 2020 ONCA 536, 151 O.R. (3d) 489; Stockdale v. Hansard (1839), 9 Ad. & E. 1, 112 E.R. 1112; R. v. Chaytor, [2010] UKSC 52, [2011] All E.R. 805; Reference re Bill 30, An Act to amend the Education Act (Ont.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 1148; Doucet-Boudreau v. Nova Scotia (Minister of Education), 2003 SCC 62, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 3; Harvey v. New Brunswick, [1996] 2 S.C.R. 876; RWDSU v. Dolphin Delivery Ltd., [1986] 2 S.C.R. 573; Mikisew Cree First Nation v. Canada (Governor General in Council), 2018 SCC 40, [2018] 2 S.C.R. 765; Clyde River (Hamlet) v. Petroleum Geo-Services Inc., 2017 SCC 40, [2017] 1 S.C.R. 1069; Canada (Auditor General) v. Canada (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 49; Vancouver (City) v. Ward, 2010 SCC 27, [2010] 2 S.C.R. 28; Dickson v. Vuntut Gwitchin First Nation, 2024 SCC 10; Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority v. Canadian Federation of Students — British Columbia Component, 2009 SCC 31, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 295; Ontario (Attorney General) v. G, 2020 SCC 38, [2020] 3 S.C.R. 629; R. v. Albashir, 2021 SCC 48; Ontario v. Rothmans Inc., 2014 ONSC 3382, 120 O.R. (3d) 467; Lavigne v. Ontario (Attorney General) (2008), 91 O.R. (3d) 728; Gagliano v. Canada (Attorney General), 2005 FC 576, [2005] 3 F.C.R. 555, aff'd 2006 FCA 86, 268 D.L.R. (4th) 190; Canada (Deputy Commissioner, Royal Canadian Mounted Police) v. Canada (Commissioner, Royal Canadian Mounted Police), 2007 FC 564, [2008] 1 F.C.R. 752; Prebble v. Television of New Zealand Ltd., [1995] 1 A.C. 321; Canada (Board of Internal Economy) v. Boulerice, 2019 FCA 33, [2019] 3 F.C.R. 145; Reference re Canada Assistance Plan (B.C.), [1991] 2 S.C.R. 525; Reference re Resolution to amend the Constitution, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 753; R. v. Demers, 2004 SCC 46, [2004] 2 S.C.R. 489; Canada (Attorney General) v. Hislop, 2007 SCC 10, [2007] 1 S.C.R. 429; Conseil scolaire francophone de la Colombie-Britannique v. British Columbia, 2020 SCC 13, [2020] 1 S.C.R. 678; Quebec (Commission des droits de la personne et des droits de la jeunesse) v. Communauté urbaine de Montréal, 2004 SCC 30, [2004] 1 S.C.R. 789; Henry v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 24, [2015] 2 S.C.R. 214; Ernst v. Alberta Energy Regulator, 2017 SCC 1, [2017] 1 S.C.R. 3; Kosoian v. Société de transport de Montréal, 2019 SCC 59, [2019] 4 S.C.R. 335; Rice v. New Brunswick (1999), 235 N.B.R. (2d) 1; R. v. McGregor, 2023 SCC 4; Plourde v. Wal-Mart Canada Corp., 2009 SCC 54, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 465; R. v. Henry, 2005 SCC 76, [2005] 3 S.C.R.

609; R. v. Kirkpatrick, 2022 SCC 33; Welbridge Holdings Ltd. v. Greater Winnipeg, [1971] S.C.R. 957; Central Canada Potash Co. v. Government of Saskatchewan, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 42; Guimond v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 347; Consortium Developments (Clearwater) Ltd. v. Sarnia (City), [1998] 3 S.C.R. 3; Janssen-Ortho Inc. v. Amgen Canada Inc. (2005), 256 D.L.R. (4th) 407; Club Pro Adult Entertainment v. Ontario (2006), 150 C.R.R. (2d) 1, rev'd in part 2008 ONCA 158, 42 B.L.R. (4th) 47; Highwood Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses (Judicial Committee) v. Wall, 2018 SCC 26, [2018] 1 S.C.R. 750; Bruker v. Marcovitz, 2007 SCC 54, [2007] 3 S.C.R. 607; La Rose v. Canada, 2023 FCA 241, 488 D.L.R. (4th) 340; Turner v. Canada, [1992] 3 F.C. 458; Roncarelli v. Duplessis, [1959] S.C.R. 121; Finney v. Barreau du Québec, 2004 SCC 36, [2004] 2 S.C.R. 17; Hinse v. Canada (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 35, [2015] 2 S.C.R. 621; R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295; Reference re Anti-Inflation Act, [1976] 2 S.C.R. 373; Re B.C. Motor Vehicle Act, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 486; R. v. Malmo-Levine, 2003 SCC 74, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 571; R. v. Clay, 2003 SCC 75, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 735; R. v. Sharma, 2022 SCC 39; Canada (Attorney General) v. Whaling, 2014 SCC 20, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 392; Reference re Genetic Non-Discrimination Act, 2020 SCC 17, [2020] 2 S.C.R. 283; Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27; Pepper (Inspector of Taxes) v. Hart, [1993] A.C. 593; Mills v. The Queen, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 863; R. v. 974649 Ontario Inc., 2001 SCC 81, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 575; Francis v. Ontario, 2021 ONCA 197, 154 O.R. (3d) 498.

By Rowe J. (dissenting)

New Brunswick Broadcasting Co. v. Nova Scotia (Speaker of the House of Assembly), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 319; Harvey v. New Brunswick (Attorney General), [1996] 2 S.C.R. 876; Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 3; Reference re Secession of Quebec, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217; Toronto (City) v. Ontario (Attorney General), 2021 SCC 34, [2021] 2 S.C.R. 845; Reference re Resolution to Amend the Constitution, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 753; Alford v. Canada (Attorney General), 2024 ONCA 306; Chagnon v. Syndicat de la fonction publique et parapublique du Québec, 2018 SCC 39, [2018] 2 S.C.R. 687; Canada (House of Commons) v. Vaid, 2005 SCC 30, [2005] 1 S.C.R. 667; Duffy v. Canada (Senate), 2020 ONCA 536, 151 O.R. (3d) 489; Janssen-Ortho Inc. v. Amgen Canada Inc. (2005), 256 D.L.R. (4th) 407; R. v. Mills, [1999] 3 S.C.R. 668; Sauvé v. Canada (Chief Electoral Officer), 2002 SCC 68, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 519; Canada (Attorney General) v. JTI-Macdonald Corp., 2007 SCC 30, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 610; R. (on the application of SC and others) v. Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, [2021] UKSC 26, [2022] 3 All E.R. 95; Wells v. Newfoundland, [1999] 3 S.C.R. 199; Doucet-Boudreau v. Nova Scotia (Minister of Education), 2003 SCC 62, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 3; Cooper v. Canada (Human Rights Commission), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 854; References re Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act, 2021 SCC 11, [2021] 1 S.C.R. 175; Mikisew Cree First Nation v. Canada (Governor General in Council), 2018 SCC 40, [2018] 2 S.C.R. 765; Stockdale v. Hansard (1839), 9 Ad. & E. 1, 112 E.R. 1112; Ontario v. Rothmans Inc., 2014 ONSC 3382, 120 O.R. (3d) 467; Janssen-Ortho Inc. v. Amgen Canada Inc., 2004 CanLII 8595; Club Pro Adult Entertainment Inc. v. Ontario (2006), 150 C.R.R. (2d) 1, rev'd in part on other grounds 2008 ONCA 158, 42 B.L.R.

(4th) 47; Canada (Board of Internal Economy) v. Boulerice, 2019 FCA 33, [2019] 3 F.C.R. 145; Prebble v. Television New Zealand Ltd., [1994] 3 All E.R. 407; Gagliano v. Canada (Attorney General), 2005 FC 576, [2005] 3 F.C.R. 555; Canada (Deputy Commissioner, Royal Canadian Mounted Police) v. Canada (Commissioner, Royal Canadian Mounted Police), 2007 FC 564, [2008] 1 F.C.R. 752; Guergis v. Novak, 2022 ONSC 3829; Galati v. Canada (Governor General), 2015 FC 91, [2015] 4 F.C.R. 3; Fielding v. Thomas, [1896] A.C. 600; Roman Corp. Ltd. v. Hudson's Bay Oil & Gas Co. Ltd., [1971] 2 O.R. 418, aff'd [1972] 1 O.R. 444; Reference re Bill 30, An Act to Amend the Education Act (Ont.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 1148; Amax Potash Ltd. v. Government of Saskatchewan, [1977] 2 S.C.R. 576; Canada (Auditor General) v. Canada (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 49; Clyde River (Hamlet) v. Petroleum Geo-Services Inc., 2017 SCC 40, [2017] 1 S.C.R. 1069; Mackin v. New Brunswick (Minister of Finance), 2002 SCC 13, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 405; Welbridge Holdings Ltd. v. Greater Winnipeg, [1971] S.C.R. 957; Central Canada Potash Co. v. Government of Saskatchewan, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 42; Schachter v. Canada, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 679; Vancouver (City) v. Ward, 2010 SCC 27, [2010] 2 S.C.R. 28; R. v. Henry, 2005 SCC 76, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 609; Conseil scolaire francophone de la Colombie-Britannique v. British Columbia, 2020 SCC 13, [2020] 1 S.C.R. 678; Henry v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 24, [2015] 2 S.C.R. 214; Mohr v. National Hockey League, 2022 FCA 145, [2021] 4 F.C.R. 465; R. v. Sharma, 2022 SCC 39; R. v. Safarzadeh-Markhali, 2016 SCC 14, [2016] 1 S.C.R. 180; Pepper v. Hart, [1993] A.C. 593; Ontario (Attorney General) v. Clark, 2021 SCC 18, [2021] 1 S.C.R. 607; Morier v. Rivard, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 716; Ernst v. Alberta Energy Regulator, 2017 SCC 1, [2017] 1 S.C.R. 3; P.H. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2020 FC 393, [2020] 2 F.C.R. 461.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Act to restrict and regulate Chinese immigration into Canada, S.C. 1885, c. 71, s. 4.

Bill of Rights (Eng.), 1 Will. & Mar. Sess. 2, c. 2, art. 9.

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 11(h), (i), 24, 32(1), 33.

Constitution Act, 1867, preamble, ss. 9, 17, 18, 55, 91.

Constitution Act, 1982, s. 52.

Crown Liability and Proceedings Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-50, s. 23(1).

Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7, ss. 2(1), 17.

Limiting Pardons for Serious Crimes Act, S.C. 2010, c. 5, s. 10.

Parliament of Canada Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-1, ss. 4, 5.

Safe Streets and Communities Act, S.C. 2012, c. 1, s. 161.

Authors Cited

Black's Law Dictionary, 11th ed., by Bryan A. Garner. St. Paul, Minn.: Thomson Reuters, 2019, "obiter dictum", "ratio decidendi".

Blackstone, William. Commentaries on the Laws of England, Book I, 17th ed. London: Richard Taylor, 1830.

Brun, Henri, Guy Tremblay and Eugénie Brouillet. Droit constitutionnel, 6th ed. Cowansville, Que.: Yvon Blais, 2014.

Charles, W. H. Understanding Charter Damages: The Judicial Evolution of a Charter Remedy. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2016.

Chevrette, François, and Herbert Marx. Droit constitutionnel: Principes fondamentaux: Notes et jurisprudence, 2nd ed. rev. by Han-Ru Zhou. Montréal: Les Éditions Thémis, 2021.

Cooper-Stephenson, Ken. Charter Damages Claims. Toronto: Carswell, 1990.

Cromwell, Thomas A. Locus Standi: A Commentary on the Law of Standing in Canada. Toronto: Carswell, 1986.

Dussault, René, and Louis Borgeat. Administrative Law: A Treatise, 2nd ed., vol. 5. Toronto: Carswell, 1990.

Erskine May's Treatise on The Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament, 25th ed. by David Natzler and Mark Hutton, eds. London: LexisNexis, 2019.

Hogg, Peter W., and Wade K. Wright. Constitutional Law of Canada, 5th ed. Supp. Toronto: Thomson Reuters, 2023 (updated 2023, release 1).

Hogg, Peter W., Patrick J. Monahan and Wade K. Wright. Liability of the Crown, 4th ed. Toronto: Carswell, 2011.

Jackson, Vicki C., and Mark Tushnet. Comparative Constitutional Law. New York: Foundation Press, 1999.

Laskin, Bora. "Case and Comment" (1955), 33 Can. Bar Rev. 215.

Law Society of Upper Canada. Special Lectures of the Law Society of Upper Canada 1979 — The Abuse of Power and the Role of an Independent Judicial System in Its Regulation and Control. Toronto: Richard De Boo, 1979.

Maingot, J. P. Joseph. Parliamentary Immunity in Canada. Toronto: LexisNexis, 2016.

Maingot, J. P. Joseph. Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, 2nd ed. Montréal: McGill-Queen's University Press, 1997.

Marcotte, Alexandre. "Structural Analysis, Unwritten Principles and Constitutional Remedies: Charter Damages for the Enactment of Legislation by Parliament" (2024), 18 J.P.P.L. 69.

Mathen, Carissima, and Patrick Macklem, eds. Canadian Constitutional Law, 6th ed. Toronto: Emond, 2022.

Newman, Warren J. "Parliamentary Privilege, the Canadian Constitution and the Courts" (2008), 39 Ottawa L. Rev. 573.

Newman, Warren J. "The Crown, the Queen, and the Structure of the Constitution", in D. Michael Jackson and Christopher McCreery, eds., A Resilient Crown: Canada's Monarchy at the Platinum Jubilee. Toronto: Dundurn Press, 2022, 13.

Pilkington, Marilyn L. “Damages as a Remedy for Infringement of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms” (1984), 62 Can. Bar Rev. 517.

Roach, Kent. Constitutional Remedies in Canada, 2nd ed. Toronto: Canada Law Book, 2013 (loose-leaf updated October 2023, release 2).

Roach, Kent. “The Separation and Interconnection of Powers in Canada: The Role of Courts, the Executive and the Legislature in Crafting Constitutional Remedies” (2018), 5 J.I.C.L. 315.

Rosenfeld, Michel. “Constitutional Identity”, in Michel Rosenfeld and András Sajó, eds., The Oxford Handbook of Comparative Constitutional Law. Toronto: Oxford University Press, 2012, 756.

Rowe, Malcolm. “The Virtue of Judicial Restraint, or Who Guards the Guardians?” (2022), 55 U.B.C. L. Rev. 311.

Rowe, Malcolm, Chris Puskas and Allyse Cruise. “The Separation of Powers in Canada” (2024), 1 S.C.L.R. (3d) 323.

Rowe, Malcolm, and Leanna Katz. “A Practical Guide to Stare Decisis” (2020), 41 Windsor Rev. Legal Soc. Issues 1.

Rowe, Malcolm, and Manish Oza. “Structural Analysis and the Canadian Constitution” (2023), 101 Can. Bar Rev. 205.

Rowe, Malcolm, and Michael Collins. “The Constitution of Canada” (2017-18), 49 Ottawa L. Rev. 93.

Rowe, Malcolm, and Nicolas Déplanche. “Canada’s Unwritten Constitutional Order: Conventions and Structural Analysis” (2020), 98 Can. Bar Rev. 430.

Roy, Marc-André. “Le Parlement, les tribunaux et la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés: vers un modèle de privilège parlementaire adapté au XXI^{e} siècle” (2014), 55 C. de D. 489.

Sharpe, Robert J. Good Judgment: Making Judicial Decisions. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2018.

Sharpe, Robert J., and Kent Roach. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms, 7th ed. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2021.

Sossin, Lorne M. Boundaries of Judicial Review: The Law of Justiciability in Canada, 2nd ed. Toronto: Carswell, 2012.

Sossin, Lorne M., and Gerard Kennedy. Boundaries of Judicial Review: The Law of Justiciability in Canada, 3rd ed. Toronto: Thomson Reuters, 2024.

Strayer, Barry L. The Canadian Constitution and the Courts: The Function and Scope of Judicial Review, 3rd ed. Toronto: Butterworths, 1988.

Sullivan, Ruth. The Construction of Statutes, 7th ed. Toronto: LexisNexis, 2022.

Trueman, John. Britain: The Growth of Freedom. Toronto: J. M. Dent & Sons (Canada) Ltd., 1960.

Weinrib, Lorraine E. "Canada's Charter of Rights: Paradigm Lost?" (2002), 6 Rev. Const. Stud. 119.

Weinrib, Lorraine Eisenstat. "Of diligence and dice: Reconstituting Canada's Constitution" (1992), 42 U.T.L.J. 207.

APPEAL from a judgment of the New Brunswick Court of Appeal (Richard C.J. and LaVigne and LeBlond JJ.A.), 2022 NBCA 14, 471 D.L.R. (4th) 68, 508 C.R.R. (2d) 115, [2022] N.B.J. No. 80 (Lexis), 2022 CarswellNB 161 (WL), affirming a decision of Dysart J., 2021 NBQB 107, [2021] N.B.J. No. 172 (Lexis), 2021 CarswellNB 336 (WL). Appeal dismissed, Kasirer and Jamal JJ. dissenting in part and Côté and Rowe JJ. dissenting.

Sharlene Telles-Langdon and Sarah Drodge, for the appellant.

Louis-Alexandre Hébert Gosselin and Lex Gill, for the respondent.

Ravi Amarnath and S. Zachary Green, for the intervener the Attorney General of Ontario.

François Hénault, for the intervener the Attorney General of Quebec.

Samantha Parris and Edward A. Gores, K.C., for the intervener the Attorney General of Nova Scotia.

Rose Campbell and Isabel Lavoie Daigle, K.C., for the intervener the Attorney General of New Brunswick.

Charles Murray and Julie Winter, for the intervener the Attorney General of Manitoba.

Nicholas Isaac, Emily Lapper and Steven Davis, for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia.

Written submissions only by Meaghan Hughes and Nicole Sylvester, for the intervener the Attorney General of Prince Edward Island.

Theodore J. C. Litowski, for the intervener the Attorney General of Saskatchewan.

David Kamal, for the intervener the Attorney General of Alberta.

Written submissions only by Justin S. C. Mellor, Mark P. Sheppard and Eugene H. Chao, for the intervener the Attorney General of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Mohsen Seddigh, Adil Abdulla and Alyssa Cloutier, for the interveners the Fisher River Cree Nation, the Sioux Valley Dakota Nation, the Manto Sipi Cree Nation, and the Lake Manitoba First Nation.

David Schulze and Sara Andrade, for the intervener Quebec Native Women Inc.

Marc-André Roy, Anne Burgess and Maxime Faille, for the intervener the Speaker of the Senate.

Neil Abraham and Megan Stephens, for the intervener the David Asper Centre for Constitutional Rights.

Andrew Lokan and Mariam Moktar, for the intervener the Canadian Civil Liberties Association.

George Avraam, Jennifer Bernardo and Rono Khan, for the intervener the Canadian Constitution Foundation.

Written submissions only by James Sayce, Vlad Calina and Caitlin Leach, for the intervener the Queen's Prison Law Clinic.

Connor Bildfell and Simon Bouthillier, for the intervener the John Howard Society of Canada.

Brodie Noga, Emily MacKinnon and Emily Wang, for the intervener the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association.

Written submissions only by Alexa Biscaro and Sarah Ivany, for the intervener the West Coast Prison Justice Society.

Alyssa Tomkins and John J. Wilson, for the intervener the Speaker of the House of Commons.

The judgment of Wagner C.J. and Karakatsanis, Martin, O'Bonsawin and Moreau JJ. was delivered by

THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND KARAKATSANIS J. —

I. Overview

[1] It is a fundamental principle of our constitutional order that courts have a duty to protect the rights guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms from infringement by the state. However, other foundational constitutional principles require that the state be afforded the legislative autonomy to govern effectively. At the heart of this appeal is a question about how to reconcile these principles in the context of s. 24(1) of the Charter, which authorizes courts to grant such remedies to individuals for the infringement of their Charter rights as is considered appropriate and just in the circumstances.

S.C.R. 485, at para. 31; R. v. Sharma, 2022 SCC 39, at paras. 88-90). Indeed, this Court has in other contexts assessed whether the legislature acted in good faith in enacting a law (see, e.g., Libman v. Quebec (Attorney General), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 569, at para. 63; Ell v. Alberta, 2003 SCC 35, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 857, at paras. 3 and 38), or whether the state had actual or constructive knowledge of the unconstitutional effects of a law (Canadian Council for Refugees v. Canada (Citizenship and Immigration), 2023 SCC 17, at para. 114). Granted, the purpose of the review may be different in a claim for Charter damages. But these examples reveal that the judicial assessment of the nature of legislation and Parliament's purpose or objective in enacting it can be accomplished without violating parliamentary privilege.

[93] Fourth, an absolute immunity does not accommodate the principles recognized in this Court's jurisprudence on constitutional remedies. It leaves little room for the principles that underpin legislative accountability — including the broad and purposive approach to rights and remedial provisions in the Charter, as well as constitutionalism and the rule of law. All these principles militate against absolute immunity. We agree in this respect with Mr. Power, who submits that "[a]n absolute immunity is . . . incompatible with the remedial discretion of the courts — 'a fundamental feature of the Charter' — and with the idea that 'flexibility is necessary to arrive at appropriate remedies involving legislation'" (R.F., at para. 81, citing G, at paras. 101 and 146).

[94] As discussed above, the Charter effected a "revolutionary transformation of the Canadian polity" under which courts were "mandated to bring the entire legal system into conformity with a complex new structure of rights-protection" (L. E. Weinrib, "Canada's Charter of Rights: Paradigm Lost?" (2002), 6 Rev. Const. Stud. 119, at p. 120). Even before the Charter, the court's role in holding the legislature accountable was recognized as part of the fabric of Canada's constitutional order. As Dickson J. (as he then was) explained in Amax Potash Ltd. v. Government of Saskatchewan, [1977] 2 S.C.R. 576, at p. 590:

> A state, it is said, is sovereign and it is not for the Courts to pass upon the policy or wisdom of legislative will. As a broad statement of principle that is undoubtedly correct, but the general principle must yield to the requisites of the constitution in a federal state. By it the bounds of sovereignty are defined and supremacy circumscribed. The Courts will not question the wisdom of enactments which, by the terms of the Canadian Constitution are within the competence of the Legislatures, but it is the high duty of this Court to insure that the Legislatures do not transgress the limits of their constitutional mandate and engage in the illegal exercise of power. [Emphasis added.]
>
> (See also Manitoba Language Rights, at p. 745.)

[95] The Charter demands that legislative power be constrained by constitutional rights. Courts are constitutionally obliged to hold the government accountable when it breaches such rights, including by providing meaningful remedies in the face of their violation. An absolute immunity would undermine the purpose and text of s. 24(1), which asks courts to look at the specific context of a given violation to determine whether a remedy is appropriate and just. The Charter requires courts to enforce constitutional rights. Enforcement means ensuring that remedies are commensurate with the extent of the violation (Corbiere, at para. 46). In this way, the separation of powers also protects the judiciary's independence to carry out its constitutional duties: "Nothing less [is] required to maintain the normative ordering of the Canadian legal system" (Doucet-Boudreau, at para. 109).

[96] An absolute immunity would protect the government from any claim for damages for any unconstitutional legislation, no matter how egregious. We accept Mr. Power's assertion that an absolute immunity allows a narrow set of constitutional interests to dominate the analysis (R.F., at para. 81).

[97] In setting a high bar for immunity, Mackin has stood the test of time. It has been good law for over two decades. It has resulted neither in chilling good governance, nor in a floodgate of claims against the state for damages. The state will continue to benefit from immunity unless the high threshold is satisfied. This exacting threshold functions to limit the scope of causes of action for damages. And, as always, the state can apply for a s. 24(1) claim to be dismissed summarily if the claimant fails to plead circumstances which could, if accepted, satisfy the Mackin threshold for liability (Henry (2015), at para. 43).

[98] This Court may depart from precedent where there is a compelling reason to do so, including if the precedent was inconsistent with a binding authority or statute, it has proven unworkable, or its rationale has been eroded by significant social or legal change (R. v. Henry, 2005 SCC 76, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 609, at para. 44; R. v. Kirkpatrick,

Conférence des juges de paix magistrats du Québec, Christine Auger, Jacques Barbès, Réjean Bédard, Dominique Benoît, Georges Benoît, Michel Boissonneault, Suzanne Bousquet, Sylvie Desmeules, Julie Dionne, Marie-Chantal Doucet, Louis Duguay, Gaby Dumas, Nathalie Duperron Roy, Réna Émond, Pierre Fortin, Louise Gallant, Marie-Josée Hénault, François Kouri, Jean-Georges Laliberté, Robert Lanctôt, Luc Marchildon, Sylvie Marcotte, Nicole Martin, Danielle Michaud, Gilles Michaud, Lucie Morissette, Monique Perron, Jean-Gilles Racicot, Gaétan Ratté, Marc Renaud, Rosaire Vallières, Pierre Verrette, Johanne White, Gilles Pigeon, Léopold Goulet, Yannick Couture, Marie-Claude Bélanger and Patricia Compagnone Appellants

v.

Attorney General of Quebec and Minister of Justice of Quebec Respondents

and

Attorney General of Canada, Attorney General of Ontario, Conférence des juges de la Cour du Québec

and

Association of Justices of the Peace of Ontario Interveners

Indexed as: Conférence des juges de paix magistrats du Québec v. Quebec (Attorney General)

2016 SCC 39

File No.: 36165.

2016: January 18; 2016: October 14.

Conférence des juges de paix magistrats du Québec, Christine Auger, Jacques Barbès, Réjean Bédard, Dominique Benoît, Georges Benoît, Michel Boissonneault, Suzanne Bousquet, Sylvie Desmeules, Julie Dionne, Marie-Chantal Doucet, Louis Duguay, Gaby Dumas, Nathalie Duperron Roy, Réna Émond, Pierre Fortin, Louise Gallant, Marie-Josée Hénault, François Kouri, Jean-Georges Laliberté, Robert Lanctôt, Luc Marchildon, Sylvie Marcotte, Nicole Martin, Danielle Michaud, Gilles Michaud, Lucie Morissette, Monique Perron, Jean-Gilles Racicot, Gaétan Ratté, Marc Renaud, Rosaire Vallières, Pierre Verrette, Johanne White, Gilles Pigeon, Léopold Goulet, Yannick Couture, Marie-Claude Bélanger et Patricia Compagnone Appelants

c.

Procureure générale du Québec et Ministre de la justice du Québec Intimées

et

Procureur général du Canada, procureur général de l'Ontario, Conférence des juges de la Cour du Québec

et

Association des juges de paix de l'Ontario Intervenants

Répertorié : Conférence des juges de paix magistrats du Québec c. Québec (Procureure générale)

2016 CSC 39

N° du greffe : 36165.

2016 : 18 janvier; 2016 : 14 octobre.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and Abella, Cromwell, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Wagner, Gascon, Côté and Brown JJ.

Présents : La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges Abella, Cromwell, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Wagner, Gascon, Côté et Brown.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR QUEBEC

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DU QUÉBEC

Constitutional law — Judicial independence — Financial security — Justices of peace — Judicial reform — Provincial legislation amending status of justices of peace, including employment conditions, remuneration and pension plan — Whether new judicial office created — Whether committee review of remuneration and pension plan necessary and if so, when should review occur — Whether legislation infringes constitutional guarantee of judicial independence — If so, whether infringement justifiable — Constitution Act, 1867, preamble — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 11(d) — Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and other legislative provisions as regards the status of justices of the peace, S.Q. 2004, c. 12, ss. 27, 30 and 32 — Décret 932-2008, (2008) 140 G.O. 2, 5681.

Droit constitutionnel — Indépendance judiciaire — Sécurité financière — Juges de paix — Réforme judiciaire — Statut des juges de paix, dont les conditions d'emploi, la rémunération et le régime de retraite, modifié par législation provinciale — Y a-t-il eu création d'une nouvelle charge judiciaire? — Un examen de la rémunération et du régime de retraite par un comité est-il nécessaire et, dans l'affirmative, à quel moment l'examen doit-il intervenir? — La loi porte-t-elle atteinte à la garantie constitutionnelle d'indépendance judiciaire? — Dans l'affirmative, l'atteinte se justifie-t-elle? — Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, préambule — Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 1, 11d) — Loi modifiant la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires et d'autres dispositions législatives eu égard au statut des juges de paix, L.Q. 2004, c. 12, art. 27, 30 et 32 — Décret 932-2008, (2008) 140 G.O. 2, 5681.

Constitutional law — Judicial independence — Financial security — Pensions — Justices of peace — Judicial reform — Section 178 of Courts of Justice Act, CQLR, c. T-16, mandates participation of justices of peace in public service pension plan — Whether pension plan, as part of overall remuneration, meets minimum constitutional threshold required for judicial office.

Droit constitutionnel — Indépendance judiciaire — Sécurité financière — Régime de retraite — Juges de paix — Réforme judiciaire — Participation des juges de paix au régime de retraite de la fonction publique imposée par l'art. 178 de la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires, RLRQ, c. T-16 — Le régime de retraite, qui s'inscrit dans la rémunération globale, satisfait-il au seuil constitutionnel minimal qu'exige une charge judiciaire?

In 2004, the Quebec government reformed its justices of the peace regime in response to a Court of Appeal judgment declaring that the existing regime violated the tenure security guarantee of judicial independence. Six sitting justices of the peace were transitioned to the new regime, with the same remuneration as before; however, justices newly appointed to that office received a lower remuneration. None of the legislative provisions affecting remuneration were put to a reviewing committee before 2007, which then made recommendations only on a forward-looking basis. The government followed up on these recommendations by making executive Order 932-2008. In 2008, the Conférence des juges de paix magistrats du Québec and its individual members (presiding justices of the peace ("PJPs")) challenged ss. 27, 30 and 32 of the Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and other legislative provisions as regards the status of justices of the peace (the "amending Act") and executive Order 932-2008, as infringing the financial security guarantee of judicial independence. In addition, the PJPs argued that s. 178 of the Courts of Justice Act ("CJA"), which mandates their participation in the public service Pension Plan of Management Personnel, also infringes the financial security guarantee. Both the Superior Court and the Court of Appeal, in turn, found no violation of judicial independence because the provisions were part of a reform resulting in the creation of a new judicial office.

En 2004, le gouvernement du Québec a procédé à une réforme du régime applicable aux juges de paix en réponse au jugement de la Cour d'appel déclarant que ce régime ne respectait pas la garantie d'inamovibilité qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire. Six juges de paix ont été transférés au nouveau régime tout en conservant leur rémunération; toutefois les juges de paix nouvellement nommés touchaient un traitement moins élevé. Aucune des dispositions législatives touchant à la rémunération n'a été soumise à l'examen d'un comité de la rémunération avant 2007; le comité n'a alors fait que des recommandations pour l'avenir. Le gouvernement a adopté le Décret 932-2008 pour donner suite aux recommandations. En 2008, la Conférence des juges de paix magistrats du Québec et ses membres (les juges de paix magistrats (« JPM ») ont contesté les art. 27, 30 et 32 de la Loi modifiant la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires et d'autres dispositions législatives eu égard au statut des juges de paix (la « Loi modificatrice ») et le Décret 932-2008 au motif qu'ils ne respectaient pas la garantie de

Held: The appeal should be allowed in part. Sections 27, 30 and 32 of the Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and other legislative provisions as regards the status of justices of the peace are unconstitutional.

A judicial reform may raise questions of judicial independence both for judges occupying offices that are reformed or abolished, and for judges appointed to newly created positions. Any measure that affects remuneration will automatically trigger the institutional dimension of financial security. The initial remuneration for the new office must meet the constitutional minimum required to ensure judicial integrity. Without committee review of the initial remuneration, there is no guarantee that the constitutional minimum is met. A review is also required where the new judges were transferred from an old judicial office. The government should not be able to replace one office with another, adjust the jurisdiction, transfer the judges and change the remuneration, without any safeguards. Because sitting judges are in an existing relationship with the government, their relationship is more susceptible to the risk of manipulation. This warrants additional protection for sitting judges. Thus, while the government retains the discretion to set the remuneration of newly appointed judges, it cannot change the remuneration of sitting judges until after committee review.

To protect judicial independence when a new judicial office is created, all remuneration must be reviewed within a reasonable time. A reasonable time refers to the time required to implement a judicial reform, to establish the appropriate review committee and to ensure proper participation by the new judges. It will generally be measured in months, and not in years.

In the context of a judicial reform, the same reasons that justify deferring committee review of the remuneration for newly appointed judges apply equally to sitting judges who are transferred to a new office. Requiring prior review for sitting judges would create delays for sécurité financière qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire. En outre, les JPM soutenaient que l'art. 178 de la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires (« LTJ »), en les obligeant à participer au régime de retraite du personnel d'encadrement de la fonction publique, ne respectait pas non plus la garantie de sécurité financière. La Cour supérieure et la Cour d'appel ont conclu que les dispositions ne menaçaient pas l'indépendance judiciaire, car elles s'inscrivaient dans le cadre d'une réforme ayant abouti à la création d'une nouvelle charge judiciaire.

Arrêt : L'appel est accueilli en partie. Les articles 27, 30 et 32 de la Loi modifiant la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires et d'autres dispositions législatives eu égard au statut des juges de paix sont inconstitutionnels.

Il se peut qu'une réforme judiciaire suscite des interrogations concernant l'indépendance judiciaire à l'égard non seulement des juges dont la charge a été modifiée ou abolie, mais aussi de ceux qui sont nommés à une charge nouvellement créée. Toute mesure ayant une incidence sur la rémunération des juges mettra automatiquement en jeu la dimension institutionnelle de la sécurité financière. La rémunération initiale de la nouvelle charge doit satisfaire au minimum constitutionnel requis pour assurer l'intégrité judiciaire. À défaut d'examen de la rémunération initiale par un comité, il n'existe aucune garantie que le minimum constitutionnel est respecté. Un examen s'impose également lorsque les nouveaux juges sont transférés d'une ancienne charge judiciaire. Le gouvernement ne saurait simplement remplacer une charge par une autre, en modifier la juridiction, transférer les juges et réduire leur rémunération, sans garantie. Comme les juges en exercice entretiennent déjà des rapports avec le gouvernement, le risque de manipulation est aggravé, ce qui justifie une protection supplémentaire dans leur cas. Ainsi, bien que le gouvernement puisse, en vertu de son pouvoir discrétionnaire, fixer la rémunération des nouveaux juges, il ne peut modifier le traitement des juges en exercice tant que le comité n'a pas procédé à l'examen.

Pour protéger l'indépendance judiciaire lorsqu'il y a création d'une charge judiciaire, toute rémunération doit être examinée dans un délai raisonnable. Un délai raisonnable s'entend du temps qu'il faut pour effectuer une réforme judiciaire, mettre sur pied le comité d'examen et assurer une participation adéquate des nouveaux juges. Il se calcule de façon générale en mois et non en années.

Dans le contexte d'une réforme judiciaire, les raisons qui justifient que soit reportée la tenue d'un comité d'examen de la rémunération dans le cas des juges nouvellement nommés s'appliquent tout autant aux juges en exercice qui sont transférés à une nouvelle charge.

judicial reforms that are in the public interest, potentially prolong an unconstitutional judicial regime, undermine judicial independence and negatively impact public perception. The principle of judicial independence exists for the benefit of the public, not for the judge. Viewed from the perspective of the public, a review within a reasonable time for all judges is an effective safeguard for financial security, even if some judges were previously serving in another judicial office.

In determining whether a judicial office has merely been changed, or a new judicial office has been created, the judicial function and the conditions of employment, including tenure, financial security, selection and administrative independence, are relevant considerations. In this case, the 2004 reform created a new judicial office. The PJPs have a different jurisdiction than under the previous regime: they do not have jurisdiction to preside over bail hearings and do not hear summary prosecutions under Part XXVII of the Criminal Code. In addition, the PJPs now benefit from greater judicial independence guarantees: they enjoy tenure until the age of 70; their remuneration and other benefits are subject to periodic committee review; their selection criteria are set out in the CJA; and finally, they are integrated into the Court of Québec and are thus subject to the authority of its Chief Judge.

Because the reform created a new judicial office, the remuneration of all the judges appointed to it (whether they were appointed for the first time or transferred from another office) needed to be reviewed retroactively, within a reasonable time after their appointment. Section 32 of the amending Act prohibits any review of the remuneration before 2007, although the judicial office was established in 2004. This contravenes the constitutional requirement that the initial remuneration of judges occupying a new office be reviewed by a committee within a reasonable time after their appointment. There were no compelling reasons why a review could not proceed before 2007. Three years is not a reasonable time. As such, s. 32 of the amending Act infringes the financial security guarantee of judicial independence. In addition, as ss. 27 and 30 provide for a freeze in the remuneration of the sitting judges and the establishment of the remuneration of the newly appointed judges, respectively, without referencing the need to retroactively submit the remuneration to a committee, these sections also infringe judicial independence. Finally, s. 27 infringes judicial independence Exiger un examen préalable dans le cas de juges en exercice retarderait la mise en œuvre des réformes judiciaires fondées sur l'intérêt public et risquerait de prolonger un régime judiciaire inconstitutionnel, de porter atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire et de miner la perception du public. Le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire existe au profit du public et non du juge. Pour le public, la tenue dans un délai raisonnable d'un examen portant sur la situation de tous les juges protège efficacement la sécurité financière, même si certains juges occupaient antérieurement une autre charge judiciaire.

Lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si une charge a simplement été modifiée ou si une nouvelle charge a été créée, les fonctions de la charge judiciaire et les conditions d'emploi, dont l'inamovibilité, la sécurité financière, la sélection et l'indépendance administrative, constituent des considérations pertinentes. En l'espèce, la réforme de 2004 a créé une nouvelle charge judiciaire. La juridiction des JPM se distingue de celle que prévoyait l'ancien régime : les JPM n'ont pas compétence pour présider les enquêtes sur mise en liberté sous caution et ne peuvent instruire les poursuites sommaires intentées en vertu de la partie XXVII du Code criminel. En outre, dorénavant, les JPM bénéficient de garanties d'indépendance judiciaire plus étendues : ils peuvent siéger jusqu'à l'âge de 70 ans, leur traitement et les autres avantages sont soumis périodiquement à l'examen d'un comité, leurs critères de sélection sont énoncés dans la LTJ et, enfin, ils relèvent de la Cour du Québec et sont donc soumis à l'autorité du juge en chef de ce tribunal.

Comme la réforme a créé une nouvelle charge judiciaire, le traitement initial de tous les juges nommés à cette charge (pour la première fois ou après un transfert d'une autre charge) devait être examiné rétroactivement, dans un délai raisonnable après leur nomination. L'article 32 de la Loi modificatrice interdit tout examen de la rémunération avant 2007, bien que la charge judiciaire ait été créée en 2004. Il s'agit là d'un manquement à l'exigence constitutionnelle selon laquelle la rémunération initiale des juges occupant une nouvelle charge est examinée par un comité dans un délai raisonnable après leur nomination. Aucune raison valable n'explique pourquoi l'examen ne pouvait être tenu avant 2007. Un délai de trois ans ne constitue pas un délai raisonnable. En conséquence, l'art. 32 de la Loi modificatrice porte atteinte à la garantie de sécurité financière qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire. En outre, étant donné que les art. 27 et 30 prévoient respectivement un gel de la rémunération des juges transférés et l'établissement de la rémunération des juges nouvellement nommés, mais n'exigent pas l'examen rétroactif de la rémunération par un comité, ces dispositions because it freezes the remuneration of sitting judges before a committee has reviewed this remuneration, contrary to the financial security guarantee. As for the salary gap between the sitting judges and those newly appointed, the gap, by itself, did not infringe the financial security guarantee.

As ss. 27, 30 and 32 of the amending Act did not provide for retroactive committee review within a reasonable time, these sections infringe the institutional financial security guarantee of judicial independence, and are thus contrary to s. 11(d) of the Charter and the preamble to the Constitution Act, 1867. This infringement of judicial independence is not justified under s. 1 of the Charter, because there is no evidence of a dire and exceptional financial emergency. Therefore, ss. 27, 30 and 32 are unconstitutional. Because the infringement arises from the lack of committee review between 2004 and 2007, a review for this period is required for all PJPs as a remedy. The committee must consider all factors bearing on remuneration, including the remuneration of the previous judicial office. While the guarantee of judicial independence was compromised between 2004 and 2007, however, the judicial decisions rendered by the PJPs throughout that period are valid.

Since the government complied with its constitutional obligation to periodically submit PJPs remuneration to a committee from 2007 onwards, public confidence in judicial independence was in no way undermined for that later period. As such, there was no violation of judicial independence after 2007 and no defect in the executive Order 932-2008. Moreover, any impact that the lack of committee review from 2004 to 2007 may have had on PJPs remuneration after 2007 cannot be said to have raised constitutional concerns.

Finally, s. 178 of the CJA is valid. While the Pension Plan of Management Personnel may not be as beneficial as that of the judges of the Court of Québec, as part of overall remuneration, it meets the minimum constitutional threshold required for the office of a judge such that the PJPs are not perceived as susceptible to political pressure through economic manipulation.

portent également atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire. Enfin, l'art. 27 porte atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire en ce sens qu'il a pour effet de geler la rémunération de juges en exercice avant qu'un comité n'examine la question, ce qui est contraire aux exigences de la garantie de sécurité financière. En ce qui concerne l'écart salarial entre les juges transférés et les juges nouvellement nommés, en soi, cet écart salarial n'a pas porté atteinte à la garantie de sécurité financière.

Étant donné que les art. 27, 30 et 32 de la Loi modificatrice n'exigent pas l'examen rétroactif de la rémunération par un comité dans un délai raisonnable, ces dispositions portent atteinte à la garantie de sécurité financière institutionnelle qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire et ne respectent pas l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte ainsi que le préambule de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. Cette atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire n'est pas justifiée au regard de l'article premier de la Charte en l'absence de preuve d'une crise financière exceptionnellement grave. En conséquence, les art. 27, 30 et 32 sont inconstitutionnels. Comme l'atteinte découle de l'absence d'examen par un comité entre 2004 et 2007, un examen de la rémunération de tous les JPM par un comité est ordonné pour cette période, à titre de réparation. Le comité doit tenir compte de tous les facteurs ayant une incidence sur la rémunération, y compris la rémunération associée à la charge judiciaire antérieure. Même si la garantie d'indépendance judiciaire a été compromise entre 2004 et 2007, les décisions judiciaires rendues par les JPM durant cette période sont valides.

Comme le gouvernement s'est conformé dès 2007 à son obligation constitutionnelle de soumettre périodiquement à l'examen d'un comité la rémunération des JPM, la confiance du public à l'égard de l'indépendance judiciaire n'a en aucun cas été minée depuis. Il n'y a donc pas eu d'atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire après 2007, et le Décret 932-2008 n'est entaché d'aucun vice. De surcroît, si tant est que l'absence d'examen, entre 2004 et 2007, ait eu sur la rémunération des JPM après 2007 une incidence, on ne peut dire que cette dernière ait soulevé des préoccupations d'ordre constitutionnel.

Enfin, l'art. 178 de la LTJ est valide. Bien que le régime de retraite du personnel d'encadrement ne soit pas aussi avantageux que celui des juges de la Cour du Québec, considéré dans le cadre de la rémunération globale, il respecte le seuil minimal constitutionnel requis pour une charge judiciaire de sorte que les JPM ne soient pas perçus comme étant vulnérables aux pressions politiques exercées par le biais de la manipulation financière.

Cases Cited

Referred to: Pomerleau v. The Queen, 2003 CanLII 33471; Conférence des juges du Québec v. Québec (Procureur général), 2007 QCCS 2672, [2007] R.J.Q. 1556; Beauregard v. Canada, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 56; Valente v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673; Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 3; Ell v. Alberta, 2003 SCC 35, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 857; Mackin v. New Brunswick (Minister of Finance), 2002 SCC 13, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 405; Provincial Court Judges' Assn. of New Brunswick v. New Brunswick (Minister of Justice), 2005 SCC 44, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 286; R. v. Généreux, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 259; MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Simpson, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 725; Masters' Association of Ontario v. Ontario, 2011 ONCA 243, 105 O.R. (3d) 196; Ontario Deputy Judges Assn. v. Ontario (2006), 80 O.R. (3d) 481; Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1998] 1 S.C.R. 3.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Act respecting the Pension Plan of Management Personnel, CQLR, c. R-12.1.
Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and other legislative provisions as regards the status of justices of the peace, S.Q. 2004, c. 12, ss. 1, 26, 27, 30, 32, 35.
Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 11(d).
Constitution Act, 1867, preamble, ss. 92(14), 96, 101.
Courts of Justice Act, CQLR, c. T-16, Part III.1, ss. 161, 162, 163, 165, 166, 169, 173, 175, 176, 178, 246.29, 246.42, Sch. V.
Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, Part XXVII.
Décret 689-2004, (2004) 136 G.O. 2, 3531.
Décret 932-2008, (2008) 140 G.O. 2, 5681.

Authors Cited

Quebec. Assemblée nationale. Journal des débats, vol. 38, nº 75, 1re sess., 37e lég., 20 mai 2004, p. 4543.
Quebec. Assemblée nationale. Journal des débats de la Commission permanente des institutions, vol. 38, nº 54, 1re sess., 37e lég., 28 mai 2004, p. 18.
Quebec. Comité de la rémunération des juges. Rapport du Comité de la rémunération des juges, présidé par Alban D'Amours, 23 décembre 2010 (en ligne: http://www.justice.gouv.qc.ca/francais/publications/rapports/pdf/remjuges2011.pdf).
Quebec. Comité de la rémunération des juges. Rapport du comité de la rémunération des juges, présidé par

Jurisprudence

Arrêts mentionnés : Pomerleau c. La Reine, [2004] R.J.Q. 83; Conférence des juges du Québec c. Québec (Procureur général), 2007 QCCS 2672, [2007] R.J.Q. 1556; Beauregard c. Canada, [1986] 2 R.C.S. 56; Valente c. La Reine, [1985] 2 R.C.S. 673; Renvoi relatif à la rémunération des juges de la Cour provinciale de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, [1997] 3 R.C.S. 3; Ell c. Alberta, 2003 CSC 35, [2003] 1 R.C.S. 857; Mackin c. Nouveau-Brunswick (Ministre des Finances), 2002 CSC 13, [2002] 1 R.C.S. 405; Assoc. des juges de la Cour provinciale du Nouveau-Brunswick c. Nouveau-Brunswick (Ministre de la Justice), 2005 CSC 44, [2005] 2 R.C.S. 286; R. c. Généreux, [1992] 1 R.C.S. 259; MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. c. Simpson, [1995] 4 R.C.S. 725; Masters' Association of Ontario c. Ontario, 2011 ONCA 243, 105 O.R. (3d) 196; Ontario Deputy Judges Assn. c. Ontario (2006), 80 O.R. (3d) 481; Renvoi relatif à la rémunération des juges de la Cour provinciale de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, [1998] 1 R.C.S. 3.

Lois et règlements cités

Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 1, 11*d*).
Code criminel, L.R.C. 1985, c. C-46, partie XXVII.
Décret 689-2004, (2004) 136 G.O. 2, 3531.
Décret 932-2008, (2008) 140 G.O. 2, 5681.
Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, préambule, art. 92(14), 96, 101.
Loi modifiant la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires et d'autres dispositions législatives eu égard au statut des juges de paix, L.Q. 2004, c. 12, art. 1, 26, 27, 30, 32, 35.
Loi sur le régime de retraite du personnel d'encadrement, RLRQ, c. R-12.1.
Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires, RLRQ, c. T-16, partie III.1, art. 161, 162, 163, 165, 166, 169, 173, 175, 176, 178, 246.29, 246.42, ann. V.

Doctrine et autres documents cités

Québec. Assemblée nationale. Journal des débats, vol. 38, nº 75, 1re sess., 37e lég., 20 mai 2004, p. 4543.
Québec. Assemblée nationale. Journal des débats de la Commission permanente des institutions, vol. 38, nº 54, 1re sess., 37e lég., 28 mai 2004, p. 18.
Québec. Comité de la rémunération des juges. Rapport du Comité de la rémunération des juges, présidé par Alban D'Amours, 23 décembre 2010 (en ligne : http://www.justice.gouv.qc.ca/francais/publications/rapports/pdf/remjuges2011.pdf).
Québec. Comité de la rémunération des juges. Rapport du comité de la rémunération des juges, présidé par

Daniel Johnson, avril 2008 (en ligne: http://www.justice.gouv.qc.ca/francais/publications/rapports/pdf/rem-juge3.pdf).

Quebec. Comité de la rémunération des juges. Rapport du Comité de la rémunération des juges, présidé par Michel Clair, 30 septembre 2013 (en ligne: http://www.justice.gouv.qc.ca/francais/publications/rapports/pdf/remjuges2013.pdf).

APPEAL from a judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal (Dalphond, Bouchard and Vauclair JJ.A.), 2014 QCCA 1654, [2014] AZ-51107397, [2014] Q.J. No. 9733 (QL), 2014 CarswellQue 14611 (WL Can.), affirming a decision of Mongeon J., 2012 QCCS 1021, [2012] R.J.Q. 729, [2012] AZ-50840226, [2012] J.Q. nº 2260 (QL), 2012 CarswellQue 2373 (WL Can.). Appeal allowed in part.

Raymond Doray and Loïc Berdnikoff, for the appellants.

Sébastien Rochette and Brigitte Bussières, for the respondents.

François Joyal and Catherine Lawrence, for the intervener the Attorney General of Canada.

Sarah Kraicer and Josh Hunter, for the intervener the Attorney General of Ontario.

Joël Mercier and Christine Baudouin, for the intervener Conférence des juges de la Cour du Québec.

J. Thomas Curry and Paul-Erik Veel, for the intervener the Association of Justices of the Peace of Ontario.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

KARAKATSANIS, WAGNER AND CÔTÉ JJ. —

I. Introduction

[1] Legislatures have the constitutional power over the creation, transformation and abolition of judicial offices. However, legislatures must exercise this

Daniel Johnson, avril 2008 (en ligne : http://www.justice.gouv.qc.ca/francais/publications/rapports/pdf/rem-juge3.pdf).

Québec. Comité de la rémunération des juges. Rapport du Comité de la rémunération des juges, présidé par Michel Clair, 30 septembre 2013 (en ligne : http://www.justice.gouv.qc.ca/francais/publications/rapports/pdf/remjuges2013.pdf).

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel du Québec (les juges Dalphond, Bouchard et Vauclair), 2014 QCCA 1654, [2014] AZ-51107397, [2014] J.Q. nº 9733 (QL), 2014 CarswellQue 9133 (WL Can.), qui a confirmé une décision du juge Mongeon, 2012 QCCS 1021, [2012] R.J.Q. 729, [2012] AZ-50840226, [2012] J.Q. nº 2260 (QL), 2012 CarswellQue 2373 (WL Can.). Pourvoi accueilli en partie.

Raymond Doray et Loïc Berdnikoff, pour les appelants.

Sébastien Rochette et Brigitte Bussières, pour les intimées.

François Joyal et Catherine Lawrence, pour l'intervenant le procureur général du Canada.

Sarah Kraicer et Josh Hunter, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Ontario.

Joël Mercier et Christine Baudouin, pour l'intervenante la Conférence des juges de la Cour du Québec.

J. Thomas Curry et Paul-Erik Veel, pour l'intervenante l'Association des juges de paix de l'Ontario.

Version française du jugement de la Cour rendu par

LES JUGES KARAKATSANIS, WAGNER ET CÔTÉ —

I. Introduction

[1] Les législatures disposent du pouvoir constitutionnel de créer des charges judiciaires, de les modifier et de les abolir. Cependant, elles doivent exercer power in a way that complies with the constitutional principle of judicial independence.

[2] In 2004, the government of Quebec reformed its regime of justices of the peace in response to a Court of Appeal judgment declaring that the existing regime violated the tenure security guarantee of judicial independence. The new regime created two categories of justices of the peace. Six sitting justices were transitioned to the new tenured category, maintaining their remuneration. However, the government set the starting remuneration of the new category well below the previous levels; therefore, judges newly appointed into that office received a significantly lower remuneration than their sitting counterparts. None of the provisions affecting remuneration were put to a remuneration committee (or commission) before 2007; the committee made recommendations only on a forward-looking basis.

[3] In 2008, the appellants — the Conférence des juges de paix magistrats du Québec and its individual members — made an application in the Superior Court. They argued that the transitional provisions relating to the setting and review of remuneration, specifically ss. 27, 30 and 32 of the Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and other legislative provisions as regards the status of justices of the peace, S.Q. 2004, c. 12 ("Act"), and executive Order 932-2008, (2008) 140 G.O. 2, 5681, violate the financial security guarantee of judicial independence. They also argued that their participation in the public service Pension Plan of Management Personnel mandated by s. 178 of the Courts of Justice Act, CQLR, c. T-16 ("CJA"), violates the financial security guarantee.

[4] The courts below found no violation of judicial independence because the provisions were part of a reform resulting in the creation of a new judicial office.

ce pouvoir conformément au principe constitutionnel d'indépendance judiciaire.

[2] En 2004, le gouvernement du Québec a procédé à une réforme du régime applicable aux juges de paix en réponse au jugement de la Cour d'appel déclarant que ce régime ne respectait pas la garantie d'inamovibilité qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire. Le nouveau régime créait deux catégories de juges de paix. Six juges de paix ayant été nommés sous l'ancien régime sont passés à l'une des nouvelles catégories, une charge inamovible, tout en conservant leur traitement. Or, le gouvernement avait fixé le traitement initial de cette nouvelle catégorie bien en deçà de la rémunération de la charge précédente; les juges de paix nouvellement nommés touchaient donc un traitement beaucoup moins élevé que leurs homologues en exercice. Aucune des dispositions touchant à la rémunération n'a été soumise à l'examen d'un comité — ou commission — de la rémunération avant 2007; le comité n'a alors fait que des recommandations pour l'avenir.

[3] En 2008, les appelants — la Conférence des juges de paix magistrats du Québec et ses membres — se sont adressés à la Cour supérieure. Ils soutenaient que les dispositions transitoires relatives à la détermination de leur traitement et à l'examen de ce dernier, à savoir les art. 27, 30 et 32 de la Loi modifiant la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires et d'autres dispositions législatives eu égard au statut des juges de paix, L.Q. 2004, c. 12 (« Loi »), et le Décret 932-2008, (2008) 140 G.O. 2, 5681, ne respectaient pas la garantie de sécurité financière qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire. Ils soutenaient également que leur participation au régime de retraite du personnel d'encadrement imposée par l'art. 178 de la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires, RLRQ, c. T-16 (« LTJ »), ne respectait pas la garantie de sécurité financière.

[4] Les juridictions inférieures ont conclu que les dispositions contestées ne menaçaient pas l'indépendance judiciaire, car elles s'inscrivaient dans le cadre d'une réforme ayant abouti à la création d'une nouvelle charge judiciaire.

[5] For the reasons that follow, we would allow the appeal in part. In our view, committee review of remuneration is required for any new judicial office, although it can be done retroactively within a reasonable time after the appointments. This is so even where those appointed to the new judicial office were transferred from a previous judicial office. Because ss. 27, 30 and 32 of the Act did not provide for retroactive committee review within a reasonable time after the appointments, these sections violate the financial security guarantee of judicial independence. The constitutional questions and our answers to them are set out in the Appendix to the reasons.

II. Facts

[6] Before 2004, Quebec's justice of the peace system comprised two categories of justices: justices of the peace with limited powers, who were public servants, and justices of the peace with expanded powers ("JPEPs"), who were authorized to exercise a wide array of judicial functions.

[7] In Pomerleau v. The Queen, 2003 CanLII 33471, the Quebec Court of Appeal held that the existing system was unconstitutional because it did not guarantee the independence of justices of the peace. Since justices of the peace with limited powers were subject to removal, the court declared that they did not have the required minimum guarantees of independence. The Court of Appeal refused to suspend the effects of that declaration.

[8] Six months after Pomerleau, the National Assembly adopted the Act, which replaced Part III.1 of the CJA, entitled "Justices of the Peace", with a new part. The new part created the offices of "presiding justice of the peace" ("PJP") and "administrative justice of the peace". The key provisions of the Act are set out in the Appendix.

[9] Administrative justices of the peace exercise functions that do not require judicial independence. They are not at issue in this appeal.

[5] Pour les motifs qui suivent, nous sommes d'avis d'accueillir en partie le pourvoi. Selon nous, il est nécessaire qu'un comité se penche sur la rémunération liée à toute nouvelle charge judiciaire, bien que cet examen puisse être fait rétroactivement dans un délai raisonnable après les nominations. Il en est ainsi même si les personnes nommées à la nouvelle charge judiciaire occupaient une ancienne charge. Comme les art. 27, 30 et 32 de la Loi ne prévoyaient pas l'examen rétroactif par un comité dans un délai raisonnable après les nominations, ces dispositions ne respectent pas la garantie de sécurité financière qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire. Les questions constitutionnelles et nos réponses se trouvent en annexe aux présents motifs.

II. Les faits

[6] Avant 2004, le système des juges de paix en place au Québec comprenait deux catégories de juges. Il y avait les juges de paix à pouvoirs restreints, qui étaient fonctionnaires, et les juges de paix à pouvoirs étendus (« JPPE »), autorisés à poser de nombreux actes de nature judiciaire.

[7] Dans l'arrêt Pomerleau c. La Reine, [2004] R.J.Q. 83, la Cour d'appel du Québec a conclu que le système en place était inconstitutionnel puisqu'il ne garantissait pas l'indépendance des juges de paix. Comme les juges de paix à pouvoirs restreints étaient amovibles, la cour a déclaré que ces juges ne jouissaient pas des garanties minimales d'indépendance. La Cour d'appel a refusé de suspendre l'effet de cette déclaration.

[8] Six mois après l'arrêt Pomerleau, l'Assemblée nationale a adopté la Loi. Cette loi venait remplacer la partie III.1 de la LTJ, « des juges de paix », par une nouvelle partie, qui créait les postes de « juge de paix magistrat » (« JPM ») et de « juge de paix fonctionnaire ». Les dispositions importantes de la Loi se trouvent à l'annexe.

[9] Les juges de paix fonctionnaires exercent des fonctions qui ne requièrent pas l'indépendance judiciaire. Ils ne sont pas visés par ce pourvoi.

[10] The functions of the PJP are similar to those of the JPEP. Unlike the JPEP, however, a PJP cannot preside over bail hearings or hear summary conviction proceedings under Part XXVII of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46 (CJA, s. 173 and Schedule V). The Act also included changes to the qualifications for PJPs and to the selection and appointment processes (CJA, ss. 161, 162 and 163). PJPs are now integrated into the Court of Québec (s. 169). Moreover, they have security of tenure until the age of 70 (ss. 165 to 166). Their salary and benefits are fixed by the government after receipt of the recommendations of a committee on the remuneration of judges and justices of the peace (ss. 175 and 176). PJPs participate in the pension plan established by the Act respecting the Pension Plan of Management Personnel, CQLR, c. R-12.1 (CJA, s. 178). Changes to this plan can be made only after a committee on the remuneration of judges and justices of the peace has reviewed them (s. 178 para. 2; s. 246.29).

[11] The Act also set out rules that governed the transition from the old system to the new. Section 26 of the Act provided that JPEPs who had been appointed before 2004 and were still in office in 2004 were to become PJPs. Section 27 provided that they were to retain the salary they had been receiving before then "until that salary is equal to the salary to be determined by the Government", thus creating a higher level of remuneration. Further, in 2007, as a result of a Superior Court judgment regarding judges' salaries for the period from 2001 to 2007, the former JPEPs were awarded a retroactive increase, raising their salary as of June 30, 2004, to $137,280 (see Conférence des juges du Québec v. Québec (Procureur général), 2007 QCCS 2672, [2007] R.J.Q. 1556).

[12] Moreover, s. 30 of the Act gave the government the power to unilaterally determine the salary of PJPs appointed on or after June 30, 2004. Under that section, the government made an order — Order 689-2004, (2004) 136 G.O. 2, 3531, of June 30, 2004 — in which it fixed the annual salary of PJPs at $90,000. Section 32 of the Act provided that the [10] Les attributions des JPM sont similaires à celles des JPPE. Cependant, contrairement aux JPPE, les JPM ne peuvent présider des enquêtes pour mise en liberté et présider des audiences sur des poursuites sommaires en vertu de la partie XXVII du Code criminel, L.R.C. 1985, c. C-46 (LTJ, art. 173 et annexe V). La Loi comprenait également des changements portant sur les conditions d'admissibilité des JPM et sur le processus de sélection et de nomination (LTJ, art. 161, 162 et 163). Les JPM sont désormais intégrés à la Cour du Québec (art. 169). De plus, ils sont inamovibles jusqu'à l'âge de 70 ans (art. 165 à 166). Le traitement ainsi que les autres avantages sont déterminés par le gouvernement après réception des recommandations d'un comité de la rémunération des juges (art. 175 et 176). Les JPM participent au régime de retraite établi par la Loi sur le régime de retraite du personnel d'encadrement, RLRQ, c. R-12.1 (LTJ, art. 178). Ce régime ne peut être modifié qu'après l'intervention d'un comité de la rémunération des juges (art. 178 al. 2, art. 246.29).

[11] La Loi prévoit aussi les règles applicables au passage de l'ancien au nouveau régime. L'article 26 de la Loi prévoit que les JPPE nommés avant 2004 et en fonction en 2004 deviennent JPM. Selon l'article 27, ils conservent le traitement qu'ils recevaient antérieurement, « jusqu'à ce que ce traitement soit égal à celui qui sera établi par le gouvernement », ce qui a pour effet d'établir un palier supérieur de rémunération. En outre, en 2007, à la suite d'un jugement de la Cour supérieure relatif au traitement des juges pour la période de 2001 à 2007, les anciens JPPE reçoivent une augmentation rétroactive qui porte leur salaire au 30 juin 2004 à 137 280 $ (voir Conférence des juges du Québec c. Québec (Procureur général), 2007 QCCS 2672, [2007] R.J.Q. 1556).

[12] De plus, l'art. 30 de la Loi confère au gouvernement le pouvoir de fixer unilatéralement le traitement des JPM nommés à compter du 30 juin 2004. En vertu de cet article, le 30 juin 2004, par le Décret 689-2004, (2004) 136 G.O. 2, 3531, le gouvernement fixe le salaire annuel des JPM à 90 000 $. L'article 32 de la Loi énonce pour sa part committee on the remuneration of judges and justices of the peace was not to begin exercising its functions with regard to PJPs until 2007.

[13] The first new PJPs were appointed in May 2005. The Conférence des juges de paix magistrats was created in December of that year.

[14] In 2008, a committee on the remuneration of judges and justices of the peace chaired by Daniel Johnson (the "Johnson Committee") tabled its report on, among other subjects, the remuneration of PJPs. It concluded that it lacked the authority to retroactively review remuneration for the period from 2004 to 2007 (Rapport du comité de la rémunération des juges (2008) (online), at p. IV-17). The Johnson Committee recommended that the annual salary of PJPs be raised to $110,000 for the period from 2007 to 2010 (p. IV-26). It recommended that the salary of the former JPEPs, then frozen at $137,280, be maintained. The government adopted these recommendations by way of Order 932-2008.

[15] In November 2008, the 33 PJPs and the Conférence des juges de paix magistrats commenced proceedings in the Superior Court.

[16] In 2010, a committee on the remuneration of judges and justices of the peace chaired by Alban D'Amours (the "D'Amours Committee") recommended that the salary of PJPs be raised to $119,000 (Rapport du Comité de la rémunération des juges (2010) (online), at pp. IV-19 to IV-20), and that the salary of PJPs appointed before June 30, 2004, remain unchanged. The government adopted these recommendations. In 2013, a committee on the remuneration of judges and justices of the peace chaired by Michel Clair (the "Clair Committee") reviewed the remuneration of PJPs once again. (See Rapport du Comité de la rémunération des juges (2013) (online).)

[17] Since 2013, the salary of PJPs appointed after 2004 has been identical to that of the former JPEPs. The existence of two tiers of remuneration has thus been eliminated.

que le Comité de la rémunération des juges n'exerce ses attributions concernant les JPM qu'à compter de 2007.

[13] Les premiers nouveaux JPM sont nommés en mai 2005. En décembre 2005, la Conférence des juges de paix magistrats est constituée.

[14] En 2008, un comité de la rémunération des juges présidé par Daniel Johnson (le « Comité Johnson ») dépose son rapport portant, entre autres, sur la rémunération des JPM. Le comité estime qu'il est sans pouvoir pour examiner rétroactivement la rémunération pour la période de 2004 à 2007 (Rapport du comité de la rémunération des juges (2008) (en ligne), p. IV-17). Le Comité Johnson recommande d'augmenter le traitement annuel des JPM pour le porter à 110 000 $ pour la période de 2007 à 2010 (p. IV-26). Il recommande de maintenir le traitement des anciens JPPE, alors gelé à 137 280 $. Le gouvernement adopte ces recommandations par le Décret 932-2008.

[15] En novembre 2008, les 33 JPM, ainsi que la Conférence des juges de paix magistrats, intentent un recours en Cour supérieure.

[16] En 2010, un comité de la rémunération des juges présidé par Alban D'Amours (le « Comité D'Amours ») recommande une augmentation du traitement des JPM qui le porterait à 119 000 $ (Rapport du Comité de la rémunération des juges (2010) (en ligne), p. IV-19 à IV-20), et le maintien du statu quo concernant le traitement des JPM nommés avant le 30 juin 2004. Le gouvernement adopte ces recommandations. En 2013, un comité de la rémunération des juges et juges de paix présidé par Michel Clair (le « Comité Clair ») examine à nouveau la rémunération des JPM. (Voir le Rapport du Comité de la rémunération des juges (2013) (en ligne).)

[17] Depuis 2013, le traitement des JPM nommés après 2004 est identique à celui des anciens JPPE. En conséquence, les deux paliers de rémunération sont disparus.

III. Judgments of the Courts Below

A. Superior Court, 2012 QCCS 1021, [2012] R.J.Q. 729

[18] The Conférence des juges de paix magistrats challenged the constitutionality of ss. 27, 30 and 32 of the Act, as well as of s. 178 of the CJA and Order 932-2008, on the basis that they compromised the judicial independence — and more specifically, the financial security — of PJPs. The judge dismissed the application.

[19] On the issue of the constitutionality of s. 27 of the Act, the application judge found that it suffices, when the government freezes judges' salaries, that it submit the decision to a committee on the remuneration of judges and justices of the peace within a reasonable time. In this case, the decision to freeze the remuneration of the former JPEPs who had become PJPs was submitted to and accepted by the Johnson and D'Amours committees. The time at issue was reasonable in the circumstances, as the government, although it could have acted more quickly, submitted the question of the freeze to a committee on the remuneration of judges and justices of the peace within three years.

[20] Turning to s. 30 of the Act, the application judge stressed that it was not until after the order establishing the remuneration of PJPs had been issued that candidates applied for the office and that they did so with full knowledge of the situation. This was therefore not a case of economic manipulation.

[21] The application judge further stated that, although the Johnson Committee had lacked the authority to intervene retroactively in order to assess the remuneration of PJPs for the period from 2004 to 2007, it had effectively validated the government's decision after the fact.

[22] The application judge added that the prerogative for fixing the starting remuneration of judges lies with the government and that there is no authority to the effect that, when creating a new category of judges, the government is first required to

III. Décisions des juridictions inférieures

A. Cour supérieure, 2012 QCCS 1021, [2012] R.J.Q. 729

[18] La Conférence des juges de paix magistrats attaque la constitutionnalité des art. 27, 30 et 32 de la Loi, ainsi que l'art. 178 de la LTJ et le Décret 932-2008, au motif qu'ils portent atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire — et plus spécifiquement, à la sécurité financière — des JPM. Le juge de la Cour supérieure du Québec rejette la requête.

[19] Au sujet de la constitutionnalité de l'art. 27 de la Loi, le juge saisi de la requête conclut qu'il est suffisant, lorsque le gouvernement procède à un gel du traitement des juges, qu'il soumette la décision à un comité de la rémunération des juges dans un délai raisonnable. En l'espèce, la décision de geler la rémunération des anciens JPPE devenus JPM a été soumise et entérinée par les Comités Johnson et D'Amours. Ce délai était raisonnable dans les circonstances, même si le gouvernement aurait pu agir plus rapidement, et ce, dans la mesure où ce dernier a soumis la question du gel à un comité de la rémunération des juges dans un délai de trois ans.

[20] À propos de l'art. 30 de la Loi, le juge saisi de la requête insiste sur le fait que ce n'est qu'après la promulgation du décret établissant la rémunération des JPM et, en pleine connaissance de cause, que les candidats au poste de JPM ont soumis leur candidature. Il ne peut donc être question de manipulation financière.

[21] Par ailleurs, selon le juge saisi de la requête, même si le Comité Johnson n'avait pas le pouvoir d'intervenir rétroactivement pour évaluer la rémunération des JPM pour la période allant de 2004 à 2007, il a, dans les faits, validé la décision du gouvernement a posteriori.

[22] Le juge saisi de la requête ajoute que la prérogative de fixation de la rémunération initiale des juges appartient au gouvernement, et rien dans la jurisprudence n'indique que le gouvernement qui crée une nouvelle catégorie de juges doit au préalable submit their employment conditions to an independent committee. He concluded that s. 32 of the Act was valid.

[23] Finally, addressing the issue of the applicable pension plan, the application judge recognized that the plan for management personnel was less advantageous and more onerous than the one for judges of the Court of Québec. That said, two independent committees had considered the plan to be adequate.

[24] As a result, the application judge dismissed the applicants' motion in its entirety, without costs.

B. Court of Appeal, 2014 QCCA 1654

[25] The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal. It found, first, that even though it may have been beneficial to obtain a recommendation from a committee on the remuneration of judges and justices of the peace before fixing the remuneration for the new office of PJP, the government was under no constitutional obligation to do so. In the court's opinion, such an obligation arises only where judges' employment conditions are modified by increasing, reducing or freezing their salary.

[26] The Court of Appeal noted that the Act had had the effect of creating two new offices (those of the PJP and the administrative justice of the peace), which had replaced the two existing categories of justices of the peace. Therefore, no salaries were increased, reduced or frozen; rather, a level of remuneration was fixed for a new office.

[27] Thus, the government's sole obligation was to order a salary level above the minimum threshold that would be required to ensure public confidence in the new judicial office. In this case, it is clear that the Court of Appeal considered the level of remuneration that was fixed to be high enough to guarantee the independence of the new PJPs.

[28] The Court of Appeal added that even if it had found that a prior recommendation from a soumettre leurs conditions de travail à un comité indépendant. Il conclut que l'art. 32 de la Loi est valide.

[23] Finalement, abordant la question du régime de retraite applicable, le juge saisi de la requête reconnaît que le régime du personnel d'encadrement est moins avantageux et plus onéreux que le régime de retraite des juges de la Cour du Québec. Cela étant, deux comités indépendants ont estimé que ce régime était adéquat.

[24] Partant, le juge rejette la requête des requérants dans son entièreté, et ce, sans dépens.

B. Cour d'appel, 2014 QCCA 1654

[25] La Cour d'appel rejette le pourvoi. Tout d'abord, la cour estime que, quand bien même il aurait été bénéfique de le faire, le gouvernement n'avait pas l'obligation constitutionnelle d'obtenir une recommandation d'un comité de la rémunération des juges avant de fixer la rémunération rattachée à la nouvelle charge de JPM. Selon la Cour d'appel, une telle obligation existe seulement lorsque les conditions de travail des juges sont modifiées par augmentation, réduction ou gel de leur traitement.

[26] La Cour d'appel a constaté que la Loi a eu pour effet de créer deux nouvelles charges (celle de JPM et celle de juge de paix fonctionnaire), lesquelles ont remplacé les deux catégories existantes de juges de paix. Donc, il ne s'agissait pas d'une augmentation, d'une réduction ou d'un gel de traitement, mais de la fixation de la rémunération d'une nouvelle charge.

[27] Ainsi, la seule obligation qui revenait au gouvernement était de décréter un niveau de traitement supérieur au seuil minimum requis pour assurer la confiance du public dans la nouvelle instance judiciaire. Or, en l'espèce, il est clair que pour la Cour d'appel le niveau de rémunération fixé était suffisamment élevé pour garantir l'indépendance des nouveaux JPM.

[28] La Cour d'appel ajoute que même si elle avait conclu qu'une recommandation préalable d'un committee on the remuneration of judges and justices of the peace was required, the remedy being sought would not have been granted, given the level of remuneration that had been ordered and the fact that there was no evidence of an attempt at economic manipulation. In the court's opinion, to make it a systemic obligation to proceed by means of a committee on the remuneration of judges and justices of the peace regardless of the circumstances would be to allow form to prevail over substance. Moreover, the Court of Appeal found that there was nothing unlawful per se in the existence of two tiers of remuneration, as the Constitution does not require uniformity in judges' salaries and benefits.

[29] On the issue of the establishment of the employment conditions of the former JPEPs, the Court of Appeal held that a reasonable and well-informed person would find that the Act, as a whole, had the effect of reinforcing the independence of those justices, who now benefit from broader guarantees of independence.

[30] Finally, regarding the pension plan established by s. 178 of the CJA, as amended by s. 1 of the Act, the Court of Appeal found that it was not unconstitutional, stating that [TRANSLATION] "the Constitution does not require the implementation of pension plans intended solely for and controlled by judges, but merely that judges benefit from a pension plan that takes into account the specificities of their duties" (para. 111 (CanLII)). Nor does the Constitution require a uniform pension plan for all PJPs. Given that three remuneration committees had concluded that the new pension plan was adequate, the Court of Appeal was of the opinion that the submissions in this regard should be rejected on the basis that a reasonable and well-informed person would conclude that the requisite minimum threshold was met and that the plan did not expose PJPs to attempts at economic manipulation.

IV. Principles

A. Judicial Independence: General Principles

[31] Judicial independence has its basis in the preamble to the Constitution Act, 1867, which comité de la rémunération des juges s'imposait, la réparation demandée n'aurait pas été accordée de toute façon, vu le niveau de rémunération décrété et l'absence de preuve de tentative de manipulation financière. De l'avis de la cour, faire de l'étape du comité de la rémunération des juges une obligation systémique, quelles que soient les circonstances, équivaudrait à faire prévaloir la forme sur le fond. De plus, la Cour d'appel est d'avis que l'existence de deux paliers de traitement n'a rien d'illégal en soi, la Constitution n'exigeant pas l'uniformité de la rémunération et des autres avantages conférés aux juges.

[29] Sur la question de la fixation des conditions de travail des anciens JPPE, la Cour d'appel estime qu'une personne raisonnable et bien informée conclurait que la Loi, dans son ensemble, a eu pour effet de renforcer l'indépendance des anciens JPPE, lesquels bénéficient désormais de garanties d'indépendance plus étendues.

[30] Enfin, concernant le régime de retraite établi par l'art. 178 de la LTJ, et modifié par l'art. 1 de la Loi, la Cour d'appel estime que celui-ci n'est pas inconstitutionnel. En effet, « la Constitution n'exige pas la mise sur pied de régimes de retraite réservés aux juges et contrôlés par eux, mais uniquement qu'ils bénéficient d'un régime qui tient compte des particularités de leurs fonctions » (par. 111 (CanLII)). La Constitution n'exige pas non plus un régime de retraite uniforme pour tous les JPM. Trois comités de la rémunération ayant conclu que le nouveau régime de retraite est adéquat, la Cour d'appel est d'avis de rejeter l'argument sur le régime de retraite, et ce, dans la mesure où une personne raisonnable et bien informée conclurait que le seuil minimal requis est respecté et que le régime n'expose pas les JPM à des tentatives de manipulation financière.

IV. Principes

A. Indépendance judiciaire : généralités

[31] Le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire est issu du préambule de la Loi constitutionnelle

states that the Constitution of Canada is "similar in Principle to that of the United Kingdom" (see Beauregard v. Canada, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 56, at p. 72). It is also based on s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which guarantees an accused the right to a fair trial before an impartial tribunal (Valente v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673, at pp. 685-89). This Court has recognized judicial independence as an unwritten constitutional principle (Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 3 ("1997 Reference"), at paras. 83-109). Judicial independence is important both for public confidence in the proper administration of justice and for the constitutional separation of powers (1997 Reference; Ell v. Alberta, 2003 SCC 35, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 857, at paras. 22-23; Mackin v. New Brunswick (Minister of Finance), 2002 SCC 13, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 405, at paras. 37-38).

[32] The principle of judicial independence applies to all courts (1997 Reference, at para. 106). In Ell, this Court found that the principle extended to Alberta's justices of the peace because these justices performed numerous judicial functions — most notably presiding at bail hearings and issuing search warrants — that significantly affected the rights and liberties of individuals (paras. 20-26). There is no dispute in this case that judicial independence applies to Quebec's PJPs.

[33] Judicial independence entails three objective guarantees: security of tenure, financial security, and administrative independence (1997 Reference, at para. 115; Valente, at pp. 697-712). Each of these guarantees has both an individual and an institutional dimension (1997 Reference, at para. 118). The manner in which each of these guarantees may be satisfied varies with the context (Ell, at paras. 30-32). The ultimate question is whether a reasonable and informed person would perceive that the tribunal enjoys the objective guarantees (Valente, at p. 689, cited in Ell, at para. 32; see also 1997 Reference, at para. 112). As such, judicial independence belongs not to judges, but to the public.

de 1867, qui prévoit que la Constitution du Canada repose sur « les mêmes principes que celle du Royaume-Uni » (voir Beauregard c. Canada, [1986] 2 R.C.S. 56, p. 72). Il est également issu de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, qui garantit à l'accusé le droit à un procès équitable devant un tribunal impartial (Valente c. La Reine, [1985] 2 R.C.S. 673, p. 685-689). Notre Cour a reconnu l'indépendance judiciaire comme principe constitutionnel non écrit (Renvoi relatif à la rémunération des juges de la Cour provinciale de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, [1997] 3 R.C.S. 3 (« Renvoi de 1997 »), par. 83-109). L'indépendance judiciaire est importante à la fois pour la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice et pour la séparation constitutionnelle des pouvoirs (Renvoi de 1997; Ell c. Alberta, 2003 CSC 35, [2003] 1 R.C.S. 857, par. 22-23; Mackin c. Nouveau-Brunswick (Ministre des Finances), 2002 CSC 13, [2002] 1 R.C.S. 405, par. 37-38).

[32] Le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire s'applique à tous les tribunaux judiciaires (Renvoi de 1997, par. 106). Dans l'arrêt Ell, la Cour reconnaît l'application de ce principe aux juges de paix de l'Alberta, ces derniers exerçant de nombreuses fonctions judiciaires — notamment présider des enquêtes sur mise en liberté sous caution et décerner des mandats de perquisition — susceptibles de restreindre de manière importante les droits et libertés d'individus (par. 20-26). Il ne fait aucun doute en l'espèce que l'indépendance judiciaire s'applique aux JPM du Québec.

[33] L'indépendance judiciaire exige trois garanties objectives : l'inamovibilité, la sécurité financière et l'indépendance administrative (Renvoi de 1997, par. 115; Valente, p. 697-712). Chacune de ces garanties possède une dimension individuelle et une dimension institutionnelle (Renvoi de 1997, par. 118). La manière de respecter ces garanties varie selon le contexte (Ell, par. 30-32). Il s'agit en définitive de déterminer si une personne raisonnable et renseignée conclurait que le tribunal bénéficie de ces garanties objectives (Valente, p. 689, cité dans Ell, par. 32; voir aussi le Renvoi de 1997, par. 112). Ainsi, l'indépendance judiciaire existe au profit, non pas des juges, mais du public. Les

The guarantees are not intended to be a means for judges to improve their working conditions (1997 Reference, at para. 9; Ell, at para. 29).

[34] This Court has examined the institutional dimension of the financial security guarantee on a number of occasions. This guarantee has three elements: first, remuneration cannot be changed without recourse to an independent committee (or commission); second, there are to be no negotiations between the judiciary and the executive or legislature regarding remuneration; and third, any reduction to remuneration cannot take it below a basic minimum level of remuneration required for the office of a judge (1997 Reference, at paras. 133-35; Provincial Court Judges' Assn. of New Brunswick v. New Brunswick (Minister of Justice), 2005 SCC 44, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 286 ("Bodner"), at paras. 8-11). The purpose of these elements is to ensure that the process of setting judicial remuneration remains, to the extent possible, consistent with the depoliticized relationship between the judiciary and the other branches of government (1997 Reference, at paras. 138-46; Mackin, at paras. 53-54; Bodner, at paras. 8-11 and 14-21). A minimum level of remuneration protects the integrity of the judicial office.

[35] The role of remuneration committees has been detailed elsewhere (see, in particular, 1997 Reference, at paras. 147-85, and Bodner, at paras. 13-21). Only a few points bear repeating here. The committee must review all proposed changes to remuneration: remuneration cannot be "reduced, increased, or frozen" without prior recourse to a committee (1997 Reference, at para. 133; see also para. 174; Mackin, at paras. 57 and 69). Further, the committee reviews overall remuneration: salary, pensions, and other benefits are considered together as part of overall remuneration (Valente, at p. 704). Finally, the committee's recommendations are not binding (Bodner, at paras. 19-20). The government may depart from the committee's recommendations provided it gives "rational reasons" (para. 21).

garanties ne sont pas là pour permettre aux juges d'améliorer leurs conditions de travail (Renvoi de 1997, par. 9; Ell, par. 29).

[34] La Cour s'est penchée sur la dimension institutionnelle de la garantie de sécurité financière à quelques reprises. Cette garantie comporte trois éléments : premièrement, la rémunération ne saurait être modifiée sans l'aval d'un comité indépendant — ou commission; deuxièmement, elle ne saurait faire l'objet de négociations entre le pouvoir judiciaire et le pouvoir exécutif ou la législature; troisièmement, elle ne saurait être abaissée sous le seuil minimum requis par la charge de juge (Renvoi de 1997, par. 133-135; Assoc. des juges de la Cour provinciale du Nouveau-Brunswick c. Nouveau-Brunswick (Ministre de la Justice), 2005 CSC 44, [2005] 2 R.C.S. 286 (« Bodner »), par. 8-11). L'objectif de ces éléments est d'assurer que le processus de fixation de la rémunération des juges respecte, dans la mesure du possible, le principe de dépolitisation des rapports entre le pouvoir judiciaire et les autres pouvoirs de l'État (Renvoi de 1997, par. 138-146; Mackin, par. 53-54; Bodner, par. 8-11 et 14-21). Un seuil minimal de rémunération protège l'intégrité de la magistrature.

[35] Le rôle des comités de la rémunération des juges a déjà été expliqué en détail dans d'autres affaires (voir, plus particulièrement, le Renvoi de 1997, par. 147-185, et Bodner, par. 13-21). Seuls quelques points méritent d'être répétés ici. Le comité doit examiner toutes les modifications proposées à la rémunération : les traitements ne peuvent être « réduits, haussés ou bloqués » sans recours préalable à un comité (Renvoi de 1997, par. 133; voir aussi par. 174; Mackin, par. 57 et 69). Par ailleurs, le comité examine la rémunération de façon globale : le traitement, le régime de retraite et les autres avantages sont considérés dans la rémunération globale (Valente, p. 704). Enfin, les recommandations du comité ne sont pas exécutoires (Bodner, par. 19-20). Le gouvernement peut s'en écarter à condition de justifier sa décision par des « motifs rationnels » (par. 21).

B. Judicial Independence in the Context of Judicial Reform

[36] The seminal cases in the judicial independence jurisprudence do not address the issue of the financial security guarantee in the context of broad court reforms. In Valente, the question was whether or not the Ontario Provincial Court was an independent tribunal. In Beauregard, a Quebec Superior Court judge challenged the constitutional validity of a newly enacted provision providing that Superior Court judges would be required to contribute to the cost of their pension plan. R. v. Généreux, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 259, for its part, concerned the remuneration of existing members of military tribunals. The 1997 Reference involved numerous changes made by legislatures to the remuneration of provincial court judges as a result of provincial governments' efforts to balance their budget. In Mackin, the violation of judicial independence was the result of the abolition of the status of supernumerary judge and the creation of the position of per diem judge. While the Court found that tenure security was not infringed since there was no removal from office, it nevertheless found that financial security was violated. The absence of an independent remuneration committee was fatal. Finally, Bodner concerned the nature of judicial remuneration committees and the obligation of governments to respond to these recommendations.

[37] In Ell, the issue was whether a reform to the Alberta justices of the peace regime infringed the tenure security of existing justices who lost their position as a result of this reform. This Court found that since their removal was not arbitrary, it did not violate the security of tenure guarantee (paras. 37-41). However, Ell concerned the tenure guarantee, and did not raise any issue regarding financial security.

[38] Thus, while the principles in these cases assist in our analysis, the application of the financial security guarantee in the context of broad judicial reform is an issue of first impression before this Court.

B. L'indépendance judiciaire dans le contexte d'une réforme judiciaire

[36] Les arrêts de principe concernant l'indépendance judiciaire n'abordent pas la question de la garantie de sécurité financière dans le contexte d'une réforme judiciaire générale. Dans l'affaire Valente, il s'agissait de déterminer si la Cour provinciale de l'Ontario était un tribunal indépendant. Dans l'affaire Beauregard, un juge de la Cour supérieure du Québec contestait la constitutionnalité d'une nouvelle disposition obligeant les juges de ce tribunal à cotiser à leur régime de pension. Pour sa part, l'arrêt R. c. Généreux, [1992] 1 R.C.S. 259, portait sur la rémunération des membres en exercice des tribunaux militaires. Le Renvoi de 1997 portait sur les nombreuses modifications apportées par les législatures à la rémunération des juges des cours provinciales dans la foulée des efforts déployés par les gouvernements provinciaux pour atteindre l'équilibre budgétaire. Dans l'affaire Mackin, il avait été reconnu que l'abolition des fonctions de juge surnuméraire et la création de la charge de juge rémunéré sur une base journalière avaient porté atteinte au principe de l'indépendance judiciaire. La Cour a conclu que si l'inamovibilité n'avait pas été touchée, puisqu'il n'y avait pas eu révocation de charge, il n'en allait pas de même de la sécurité financière. L'absence d'un comité indépendant était fatale. Enfin, l'arrêt Bodner portait sur la nature des comités et l'obligation des gouvernements de donner suite à leurs recommandations.

[37] Dans l'affaire Ell, la Cour devait décider si la garantie d'inamovibilité avait été respectée par une réforme albertaine ayant éliminé des postes de juges de paix. La Cour a conclu que les destitutions n'étaient pas arbitraires et que la réforme ne portait donc pas atteinte à la garantie d'inamovibilité (par. 37-41). Toutefois, l'arrêt Ell concernait l'inamovibilité et ne portait aucunement sur la sécurité financière.

[38] En conséquence, bien que les principes qui se dégagent de ces affaires puissent servir à notre analyse, c'est la première fois que la Cour se penche sur l'application de la garantie de sécurité financière dans le contexte d'une réforme judiciaire générale.

[39] Legislatures have the power and responsibility to legislate in relation to the administration of justice (Constitution Act, 1867, ss. 92(14), 96 and 101). This includes the power to create, transform and abolish judicial offices. Provincial legislatures also have power over the jurisdiction of the courts they create (MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Simpson, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 725, at paras. 10-12). Reforms can contribute to public confidence in the administration of justice. Indeed, by implementing reforms to the justice system, governments and legislatures often play an active role in ensuring and enhancing public confidence in the judiciary. Reforms can be driven by a number of reasons: improving the independence and qualifications of judicial officers, adapting to new realities, and increasing access to justice. However, all reforms must respect the constitutional requirements for judicial independence (paras. 36-37) and the core jurisdiction of the courts established under s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

[40] A judicial reform may raise questions of judicial independence both for judges occupying offices that are reformed or abolished, and for judges appointed into newly created positions. Where a reform affects the conditions of sitting judges, the reform may engage all three objective guarantees of judicial independence (security of tenure, financial security, and administrative independence). However, any measure that affects remuneration will automatically trigger the institutional dimension of financial security (Mackin, at para. 61).

[41] In this case, the impact of the reform on the other guarantees of judicial independence — such as tenure security — is not at issue. The appeal raises issues relating to the financial security guarantee in the context of a judicial reform. Thus, the question is whether the requirement for prior committee review of the remuneration of a new judicial office is necessary to satisfy a reasonable and informed person that the court enjoys the objective guarantee of financial security.

[39] Les législatures ont le pouvoir et la responsabilité de légiférer en matière d'administration de la justice (Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, par. 92(14), art. 96 et 101) et notamment de créer, de transformer et d'abolir des charges judiciaires. Les législatures provinciales ont également compétence sur les tribunaux qu'elles créent (MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. c. Simpson, [1995] 4 R.C.S. 725, par. 10-12). Les réformes sont susceptibles d'améliorer la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice. En effet, en réformant le système de justice, les gouvernements et les législatures contribuent activement à assurer et à renforcer la confiance du public envers le pouvoir judiciaire. Divers besoins dictent ces changements : accroissement de l'indépendance des officiers de justice et rehaussement de leurs compétences, adaptation aux nouvelles réalités et amélioration de l'accès à la justice. Cependant, les exigences constitutionnelles relatives à l'indépendance judiciaire (par. 36-37) et la juridiction fondamentale des tribunaux constitués en vertu de l'art. 96 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 doivent être respectées.

[40] Il se peut qu'une réforme judiciaire suscite des interrogations concernant l'indépendance judiciaire à l'égard non seulement des juges dont la charge a été modifiée ou abolie, mais aussi de ceux qui sont nommés à une charge nouvellement créée. Une réforme qui modifie les conditions de travail des juges en exercice est susceptible de toucher les trois garanties objectives d'indépendance judiciaire (inamovibilité, sécurité financière et indépendance administrative). Toutefois, toute mesure ayant une incidence sur la rémunération des juges mettra automatiquement en jeu la dimension institutionnelle de la sécurité financière (Mackin, par. 61).

[41] Dans la présente affaire, l'incidence de la réforme sur les autres garanties d'indépendance judiciaire — l'inamovibilité, à titre d'exemple — n'est pas en litige. Le pourvoi soulève des questions liées à la garantie de sécurité financière dans le contexte d'une réforme judiciaire. La Cour doit donc décider s'il faut absolument que la rémunération associée à une nouvelle charge judiciaire soit soumise à l'examen préalable d'un comité de la rémunération des juges pour convaincre la personne raisonnable et renseignée que la cour bénéficie de la garantie objective de sécurité financière.

V. Issues

[42] The specific issues in this case are as follows:

(1) Is a committee review necessary when a new judicial office is created?

(2) If committee review is necessary when a new judicial office is created, when should that review take place?

(3) Should sitting judges "transferred" to a new office be treated differently?

(4) What qualifies as a "new judicial office"?

(5) Were these requirements satisfied in the case at bar?

VI. Analysis

(1) Is a Committee Review Necessary When a New Judicial Office Is Created?

[43] The Court of Appeal found that because the amendments created a new judicial office, no committee review of the initial remuneration was required. The court found that the requirement for prior committee review applied only when judges' remuneration is increased, reduced or frozen, because in these contexts, committee review guards against any government attempt to financially manipulate judges. Similarly, the respondent the Attorney General of Quebec argues that the safeguarding function of the remuneration committee — namely to avoid negotiations and maintain a depoliticized relationship between the judiciary and the other branches — is not required when a legislature creates a new office, because there is no risk of the government exerting political pressure on judges who have not yet been appointed.

[44] We disagree. Such an approach may have the unintended effect of permitting the legislature to

V. Questions en litige

[42] Le présent pourvoi soulève les questions suivantes :

(1) Une nouvelle charge judiciaire doit-elle être examinée par un comité de la rémunération des juges?

(2) Si une nouvelle charge judiciaire doit être examinée par un comité de la rémunération des juges, quand cet examen devrait-il avoir lieu?

(3) Les juges en exercice qui « sont transférés » à une nouvelle charge doivent-ils être traités différemment?

(4) Qu'est-ce qui caractérise une « nouvelle charge judiciaire »?

(5) Ces conditions ont-elles été respectées en l'espèce?

VI. Analyse

(1) Une nouvelle charge judiciaire doit-elle être examinée par un comité de la rémunération des juges?

[43] Selon la Cour d'appel, comme les modifications en cause créaient une nouvelle charge judiciaire, il n'était pas nécessaire de soumettre à l'examen d'un comité la rémunération initiale. Selon elle, l'exigence d'un examen préalable par un comité ne s'applique que si la rémunération des juges est augmentée, réduite ou gelée; l'examen sert alors à parer aux possibilités de manipulation financière des juges par le gouvernement. De même, la procureure générale du Québec soutient que le rôle protecteur du comité — qui consiste notamment à éviter les négociations et à maintenir des rapports dépolitisés entre le pouvoir judiciaire et les autres pouvoirs — n'est d'aucune utilité lorsqu'une législature crée une nouvelle charge, parce que le gouvernement est incapable d'exercer des pressions politiques sur des juges n'ayant pas encore été nommés.

[44] Nous ne partageons pas cet avis. Un tel raisonnement peut entraîner un résultat non souhaitable :

use the creation of judicial offices to circumvent the requirements set out in the 1997 Reference: a legislature could effectively change or freeze judicial remuneration without recourse to a remuneration committee by simply creating a new office and wiping the slate clean.

[45] As noted above, it is a clearly established principle that any changes or freezes in judicial remuneration require prior recourse to a committee to avoid the possibility or appearance of political interference through economic manipulation (1997 Reference, at para. 133). This obligation arises whether or not the judicial offices are filled at the time of the proposed change. Although the concern regarding economic manipulation is not as strong when the government establishes the initial remuneration of a new office as it is when it increases, decreases or freezes remuneration in an office with sitting judges, the concern remains real. For example, the government should not be able to simply replace one court with another, adjust the jurisdiction, transfer the judges and reduce the remuneration, without any safeguards. This is especially true where the core jurisdiction remains. Such a scenario would raise the perception of a serious risk of financial manipulation. Personal financial considerations should never be seen as playing any role in judicial decision-making. The public needs assurance that changes to a judicial office that could result in financial consequences for judges cannot by-pass the constitutional assurance of review by an arm's-length committee.

[46] In addition, public confidence in the judiciary may be undermined if the new remuneration does not meet the constitutional minimum required to ensure the integrity of the new office (1997 Reference, at para. 193). A certain minimum level of remuneration also promotes a well-qualified judiciary. But without committee review of the initial remuneration, there is no guarantee — or public assurance — that the constitutional minimum is met.

la législature pourrait utiliser son pouvoir de créer des charges judiciaires pour contourner les exigences établies dans le Renvoi de 1997; elle pourrait modifier ou geler la rémunération des juges sans constituer de comité, et ce, en créant simplement une nouvelle charge et en faisant table rase.

[45] Comme nous l'avons mentionné, un principe clairement établi veut que toute modification ou tout gel de la rémunération des juges soit préalablement soumis à l'examen d'un comité afin d'éviter toute possibilité ou apparence d'ingérence politique par le biais de la manipulation financière (Renvoi de 1997, par. 133). Cette obligation existe, que la charge judiciaire soit pourvue ou non au moment de la modification proposée. Bien que la crainte d'une manipulation financière soit moins élevée lorsque le gouvernement fixe la rémunération associée à une nouvelle charge que lorsqu'il augmente, diminue ou gèle celle de juges en exercice, cette crainte est toujours réelle. À titre d'exemple, le gouvernement ne saurait simplement remplacer un tribunal par un autre, en modifier la juridiction, transférer les juges et réduire leur rémunération, sans garantie, tout particulièrement si la juridiction principale du tribunal en question est maintenue. Un tel scénario pourrait être perçu comme présentant un risque grave de manipulation financière. Il ne faut jamais que les considérations financières personnelles paraissent avoir joué un rôle dans les décisions des juges. Le public doit avoir l'assurance que les modifications à une charge judiciaire susceptibles d'entraîner des conséquences financières pour ses titulaires ne peuvent être soustraites au crible constitutionnel que représente l'examen par un comité indépendant.

[46] De plus, il y a un risque de miner la confiance du public envers le pouvoir judiciaire si la nouvelle rémunération ne satisfait pas au minimum constitutionnel requis pour assurer l'intégrité de la nouvelle charge (Renvoi de 1997, par. 193). Un certain seuil minimum de rémunération promeut également une magistrature compétente. Or, à défaut d'examen de la rémunération initiale par un comité, il n'existe aucune garantie — ni assurance pour le public — que le minimum constitutionnel est respecté.

[47] As a result, we are of the view that in order to adequately protect judicial independence in such circumstances, whenever a new judicial office is created, an independent review of the initial remuneration of judges appointed to the new office is always necessary. This ensures that all judicial remuneration is reviewed, regardless of whether the remuneration of an existing office is changed or a new office is created.

(2) If Committee Review Is Necessary When a New Judicial Office Is Created, When Should That Review Take Place?

[48] The application judge raised the possibility of review within a reasonable delay after the new office was implemented, albeit in a different context. For its part, the Attorney General of Quebec argues that while retroactive review may be beneficial, if prior review is not required, neither is retroactive review.

[49] In our view, when the government sets the initial remuneration of a newly created judicial office, review by a remuneration committee may take place within a reasonable time after the appointment of the new judges. There are both principled and practical reasons for this.

[50] The manner in which the conditions of judicial independence may be satisfied varies with the context (Ell, at para. 30). While committee review is always required for the implementation of judicial remuneration, in our view, the manner in which this requirement may be satisfied is different in the context of a new judicial office. There are two relevant contextual considerations: first, the legislature has the constitutional power to reform courts; and second, as previously noted, the risk of political pressure or economic manipulation is not as strong in the context of a reform that creates a new judicial office. In this context, requiring that the initial remuneration of the new office be subject to a retroactive review by a committee within a reasonable time is a sufficient safeguard for the financial security guarantee. It ensures that remuneration will be reviewed in a timely enough fashion to correct any

[47] C'est pourquoi nous sommes d'avis que, pour protéger adéquatement l'indépendance judiciaire dans de telles circonstances, dès lors qu'il y a création d'une charge judiciaire, un examen indépendant de la rémunération initiale des juges nommés à la nouvelle charge doit avoir lieu. Ainsi, la rémunération de tous les juges est examinée, qu'il y ait modification de la rémunération associée à une charge existante ou création d'une nouvelle charge.

(2) Si une nouvelle charge judiciaire doit être examinée par un comité de la rémunération des juges, quand cet examen devrait-il avoir lieu?

[48] Le juge saisi de la requête a évoqué la possibilité, dans un autre contexte, d'un examen dans un délai raisonnable après la création de la nouvelle charge. Pour sa part, la procureure générale du Québec soutient que, si un examen préalable n'est pas nécessaire, il en va de même d'un examen rétroactif, même si ce dernier pourrait se révéler utile.

[49] À notre avis, lorsque le gouvernement fixe la rémunération associée à une nouvelle charge judiciaire, l'examen par un comité peut avoir lieu dans un délai raisonnable après la nomination des nouveaux juges. Des raisons de principe et des raisons pratiques le justifient.

[50] La manière de satisfaire aux conditions de l'indépendance judiciaire varie selon le contexte (Ell, par. 30). À notre avis, bien qu'il soit toujours nécessaire de soumettre la rémunération des juges à un comité, la manière avec laquelle cette exigence est satisfaite diffère dans le cas de la création d'une nouvelle charge. Il existe deux facteurs contextuels pertinents : premièrement, la législature dispose du pouvoir constitutionnel de réformer les tribunaux; et deuxièmement, comme nous l'avons souligné, le risque de pression politique ou de manipulation économique est plus faible dans le cas d'une réforme se soldant par la création d'une nouvelle charge judiciaire. Dans ce contexte, exiger l'examen rétroactif de la nouvelle charge par un comité, dans un délai raisonnable, protège suffisamment la garantie de sécurité financière. Ainsi, la rémunération est examinée dans un délai assez court pour en deficiency if it is found to be below the constitutional minimum. At the same time, it enables legislatures to fulfill their constitutional role effectively.

[51] Such a requirement provides governments with flexibility, while not imposing unwarranted barriers to the effective implementation of court reform initiatives.

[52] Moreover, it is simply more efficient to consider the new office-holders all together. In fact, requiring retroactive review rather than prior review may actually serve to increase the protection of financial security. As the Court explained in Bodner, at para. 17, a remuneration committee "must objectively consider the submissions of all parties" (emphasis added). But if a committee were required to review remuneration prior to the establishment of a new judicial office and before any judges had been appointed into the new office, there would be no office-holders to make submissions before the committee. Therefore, the proper functioning of the committee would likely be hindered. But where the review takes place within a reasonable time after the appointment of the judges to the new office, this allows the cohort of newly appointed judges to fully participate in the committee process.

[53] In addition, requiring prior recourse to a remuneration committee before setting the initial remuneration of a new judicial office would necessarily create delays. Establishing a remuneration committee takes time. As the intervener the Attorney General of Ontario points out, in establishing a committee for a new judicial office, "there are many issues, and many options on those issues, that the government will have to consider before establishing an independent, effective and objective special process for setting the remuneration" of that new office (Masters' Association of Ontario v. Ontario, 2011 ONCA 243, 105 O.R. (3d) 196, at para. 70, quoted in I.F., at para. 29). These issues may include the question of whether the appropriate forum is an existing or a new committee, its size, structure, powers and membership and what objective criteria the committee is mandated to consider. While the committee process is a constitutional requirement, it permettre la révision si elle est jugée inférieure au minimum constitutionnel. En même temps, les législatures peuvent ainsi s'acquitter efficacement de leur rôle constitutionnel.

[51] Une telle exigence donne de la latitude aux gouvernements tout en n'entravant pas indûment la mise en œuvre efficace des initiatives de réforme judiciaire.

[52] En réalité, l'exercice est simplement plus efficace une fois tous les nouveaux titulaires de charge nommés. En fait, il se peut qu'exiger un examen rétroactif plutôt qu'un examen préalable accroisse effectivement la protection de la sécurité financière. Comme la Cour l'explique, au par. 17 de l'arrêt Bodner, le comité de rémunération « doit examiner objectivement les arguments de toutes les parties » (nous soulignons). Or, si un comité devait se pencher sur la rémunération avant la création de la nouvelle charge judiciaire, et avant la nomination des juges, aucun titulaire de charge ne serait en mesure de lui présenter des observations. Le bon fonctionnement du comité s'en trouverait donc probablement gêné. Cependant, si l'examen a lieu dans un délai raisonnable après la nomination des juges à la nouvelle charge, ces juges auraient l'occasion de participer pleinement au processus d'examen.

[53] De surcroît, exiger la tenue d'un comité avant que ne soit fixée la rémunération rattachée à la nouvelle charge entraînerait nécessairement des retards. Mettre sur pied un comité prend du temps. Comme le souligne le procureur général de l'Ontario, intervenant en l'espèce, lorsqu'il s'agit de constituer un comité appelé à examiner une nouvelle charge judiciaire, [TRADUCTION] « il y a de nombreuses questions et de nombreuses solutions, et le gouvernement doit en tenir compte avant d'établir un mécanisme extraordinaire qui soit indépendant, efficace et objectif pour la détermination de la rémunération » associée à cette nouvelle charge (Masters' Association of Ontario c. Ontario, 2011 ONCA 243, 105 O.R. (3d) 196, par. 70, cité dans le m.i., par. 29). À titre d'exemple, parmi les questions, il pourrait y avoir celle de savoir si la tribune appropriée serait un comité existant ou un nouveau comité, de même que d'autres portant sur sa taille, sa structure, ses should not cause unnecessary delays in rolling out reforms.

[54] The imposition of structural barriers to reforms aimed at improving the independence and qualifications of judges would undermine the public's confidence in the administration of justice rather than increasing it. Taking into account that "the conditions of independence are intended to protect the interests of the public", and that they are a "means to safeguard our constitutional order and to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice", such barriers should be avoided (Ell, at para. 29). Therefore, in our view, when a new office is created, a committee must review the initial remuneration, but this review can take place within a reasonable time after the appointment of judges into the new office.

[55] Governments have a variety of options for structuring a judicial remuneration committee so long as it is "[i]ndependent, [e]ffective and [o]bjective" (1997 Reference, at paras. 166-74). For example, the government could decide to conduct a simplified process for the first committee review, without "formal hearings, the calling of evidence, commission counsel, intervenors . . . or any of the other accoutrements common to public or judicial commissions" (Ontario Deputy Judges Assn. v. Ontario (2006), 80 O.R. (3d) 481 (C.A.), at para. 36).

[56] A "reasonable time" refers to the time it takes to set up a committee process as soon as some judges have been appointed into the new office. Because the minimum adequate remuneration ensures judicial integrity, the retroactive review should be conducted within a reasonable time after the appointment of judges into the new office. In establishing this "reasonable time" requirement, we are not here referring to the three- to five-year period described in the 1997 Reference. Indeed, that time period serves a different purpose; namely to "guard against the possibility that government inaction could be used as a means of economic manipulation by allowing pouvoirs et sa formation ainsi que les critères objectifs dont il devrait tenir compte. Bien que l'établissement d'un comité réponde à une exigence constitutionnelle, cela ne devrait pas entraîner de retard inutile dans la mise en œuvre d'une réforme.

[54] En imposant des obstacles structurels à des réformes destinées à renforcer l'indépendance et à améliorer les compétences des juges, on minerait la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice au lieu de l'accroître. Vu que « les conditions d'indépendance sont censées protéger les intérêts du public » et que l'indépendance judiciaire est un « moyen de préserver notre ordre constitutionnel et de maintenir la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice », il faut éviter d'imposer de tels obstacles (Ell, par. 29). En conséquence, nous sommes d'avis que, lorsqu'une nouvelle charge est créée, la rémunération initiale qui y est rattachée doit être soumise à un comité, mais que cet examen peut avoir lieu dans un délai raisonnable après la nomination des juges à cette nouvelle charge.

[55] Les gouvernements peuvent structurer de diverses façons les commissions, pourvu qu'elles soient « indépendantes, efficaces et objectives » (Renvoi de 1997, par. 166-174). À titre d'exemple, le gouvernement pourrait opter pour un processus simplifié pour le premier examen, sans [TRADUCTION] « audience formelle, production de preuve, avocats de la commission, intervenants [. . .] et tout ce qu'emportent les commissions publiques ou judiciaires » (Ontario Deputy Judges Assn. c. Ontario (2006), 80 O.R. (3d) 481 (C.A.), par. 36).

[56] Un « délai raisonnable » s'entend du temps qu'il faut pour mettre sur pied un comité aussitôt que certains juges sont nommés à la nouvelle charge. Puisqu'une rémunération minimale adéquate assure l'intégrité judiciaire, l'examen rétroactif devrait avoir lieu dans un délai raisonnable après la nomination des juges à la nouvelle charge. En imposant cette condition d'un « délai raisonnable », nous ne parlons pas ici du délai de trois à cinq ans dont il est question dans le Renvoi de 1997. En effet, ce délai vise une fin différente, à savoir « parer à la possibilité que l'inaction du gouvernement puisse servir de moyen de manipulation financière du fait qu'on judges' real salaries to fall because of inflation, and also to protect against the possibility that judges' salaries will drop below the adequate minimum required by judicial independence" (1997 Reference, at para. 147). In order to achieve this objective, the Court deemed that "[a] commission must convene if a fixed period of time (e.g., three to five years) has elapsed since its last report, in order to consider the adequacy of judges' salaries in light of the cost of living and other relevant factors" (para. 147). As we are here dealing with very different circumstances and purpose, the "reasonable time" period for retroactive review will be much shorter. It will reflect the time required to implement the reform, to establish the appropriate review committee and to ensure proper participation by the new judicial officers. It will generally be measured in months, and not in years.

(3) Should Sitting Judges "Transferred" to a New Office Be Treated Differently?

[57] With respect to sitting judges who are transferred to a new office, the appellants argue that the 1997 Reference requires that any changes in the remuneration of sitting judges require prior committee review, regardless of whether a new office is created. Governments cannot by-pass this requirement simply by making changes to a judicial office. From the sitting judges' perspective, whether it occurs in an existing or new judicial office, a change in remuneration has the same implications for them, and for the existing relationship between the executive and the judiciary.

[58] There is some force to these submissions. As discussed, the purpose of the committee process is to maintain a depoliticized relationship between the judiciary and the other branches of government and to guard against the possibility or perception of political interference through economic manipulation (1997 Reference, at paras. 138-47 and 166). No doubt the impact on the judge and on the relationship between the executive and the judge holding a new judicial office is greater where a judicial relationship already laisserait les traitements réels des juges reculer à cause de l'inflation, et aussi pour parer à la possibilité que ces traitements tombent sous le minimum requis pour assurer l'indépendance de la magistrature » (Renvoi de 1997, par. 147). Afin d'atteindre cet objectif, la Cour estime dans le Renvoi de 1997 que « la commission doit se réunir si une période déterminée (par exemple de trois à cinq années) s'est écoulée depuis la présentation de son dernier rapport, afin d'étudier le caractère adéquat des traitements des juges à la lumière du coût de la vie et d'autres facteurs pertinents » (par. 147). Comme en l'espèce les circonstances et l'objet sont très différents, le « délai raisonnable » dans lequel l'examen rétroactif doit avoir lieu sera beaucoup plus court. Il est fonction du temps nécessaire à la réforme, à la constitution du comité et à une participation adéquate des nouveaux officiers de justice. Il se calcule de façon générale en mois et non en années.

(3) Les juges en exercice qui « sont transférés » à une nouvelle charge doivent-ils être traités différemment?

[57] Les appelants soutiennent que le Renvoi de 1997 exige que toute modification à la rémunération des juges en exercice, que ce soit en raison de la création d'une nouvelle charge ou non, soit soumise à l'examen préalable d'un comité. Les gouvernements ne sauraient se soustraire à cette exigence en modifiant simplement une charge judiciaire. Du point de vue des juges en exercice, les effets d'une modification à leur rémunération sont les mêmes pour eux et pour les rapports entre l'exécutif et le judiciaire, que la modification découle de la création d'une nouvelle charge ou qu'elle intervienne dans le cadre d'une charge existante.

[58] Ces arguments sont pertinents. Comme nous l'avons mentionné, l'objectif des comités est de maintenir des rapports dépolitisés entre le judiciaire et les autres pouvoirs de l'État, et d'éviter la possibilité d'ingérence politique exercée par le biais de la manipulation financière ou la perception qu'une telle situation existe (Renvoi de 1997, par. 138-147 et 166). Il ne fait aucun doute que les effets sur le juge titulaire d'une nouvelle charge et sur les rapports entre ce dernier et l'exécutif sont plus importants exists. According to the appellants, sitting judges should therefore receive the enhanced protections accorded in the 1997 Reference, namely prior review of all proposed changes in remuneration.

[59] But in our view, in the context of broader judicial reforms, the same reasons that justify deferring committee review for newly appointed judges apply equally to sitting judges. It falls within the legislature's constitutional authority to implement court reforms for important public policy reasons. Requiring prior review for sitting judges would create delays for judicial reforms in the public interest and, as in the case at bar, potentially prolong an unconstitutional judicial regime. As such, though prior review normally affords sitting judges enhanced judicial independence protections, requiring prior review in circumstances where a new judicial office is created for the purposes of remedying an otherwise unconstitutional regime may actually undermine judicial independence and negatively affect public perception. And the principle of judicial independence exists for the benefit of the public, not for the judge. Viewed from the perspective of the public, a review within a reasonable time for all judges is an effective safeguard for financial security, even if some judges were previously serving in another judicial office.

[60] In addition, there are important pragmatic reasons for review within a reasonable time when a new judicial office is filled in part by those transferred from another judicial office. If remuneration of sitting judges must be reviewed prior to the reform, but remuneration of newly appointed judges may be reviewed after, a committee would need to be convened twice — once before the reform, and once again after. By contrast, if the remuneration of transferred judges is reviewed at the same time as that of the newly appointed judges, the committee can review all the remuneration together, in the context of the whole reform. This enables the committee to better fulfill its mandate.

lorsqu'il existe déjà un lien judiciaire. Selon les appelants, les juges en exercice devraient en conséquence bénéficier des protections accrues accordées dans le Renvoi de 1997 et notamment l'examen préalable de toute modification proposée à la rémunération.

[59] Or, à notre avis, dans le contexte d'une réforme judiciaire générale, les raisons qui justifient que soit reportée la tenue d'un comité dans le cas des juges nouvellement nommés s'appliquent tout autant aux juges en exercice. Les législatures ont le pouvoir constitutionnel d'adopter des réformes judiciaires pour des raisons importantes d'intérêt public. Exiger un examen préalable dans le cas de juges en exercice retarderait la mise en œuvre des réformes judiciaires fondées sur l'intérêt public, et risque, comme en l'espèce, de prolonger un régime judiciaire inconstitutionnel. Ainsi, bien qu'un examen préalable assure normalement aux juges en exercice des garanties accrues en matière d'indépendance judiciaire, exiger un examen préalable, alors qu'une charge judiciaire est créée pour corriger un régime inconstitutionnel, risque en fait de porter atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire et de miner la perception du public. Rappelons que le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire existe au profit du public et non du juge. Pour le public, la tenue dans un délai raisonnable d'un examen portant sur la situation de tous les juges protège efficacement la sécurité financière, même si certains juges occupaient antérieurement une autre charge judiciaire.

[60] En outre, d'importantes raisons pratiques justifient de tenir l'examen dans un délai raisonnable lorsqu'une nouvelle charge judiciaire est pourvue en partie par des personnes qui occupaient l'ancienne. S'il fallait examiner la rémunération des juges en exercice avant la réforme, et celle des nouveaux juges après, il faudrait réunir le comité deux fois. En revanche, si la rémunération des juges transférés est examinée en même temps que celle des juges nouvellement nommés, le comité peut examiner les deux traitements à la lumière de l'ensemble de la réforme et ainsi mieux s'acquitter de son mandat.

[61] For example, examining the two groups of judges separately may lead to contradictory results. By contrast, in a unified committee process, where the committee can review all the remuneration of the new judicial office at the same time, the committee may make recommendations about any proposed remuneration differential between judges occupying the same office. Similarly, when provincial legislatures create new courts that include functions that used to be exercised by other judges, these judges' remuneration may be taken into account in the analysis of the overall remuneration of the judges to be appointed. Indeed, since it is dealing with a new or different office, for which the remuneration has not been considered in the past, the remuneration committee has more latitude in its initial review.

[62] This being said, because sitting judges are in an existing relationship with the government, this relationship is more susceptible to the risk of manipulation. The principles in the 1997 Reference warrant additional protection for sitting judges. Thus, while the government retains the discretion to set the remuneration of newly appointed judges, the government may not change (increase, decrease or freeze) the remuneration of sitting judges until after the committee review. When the government complies with this obligation to maintain the salaries of the sitting judges until committee review, the committee can make retroactive and forward-looking recommendations with regards to the salaries of the sitting judges.

[63] Thus, in our view, where a new judicial office has been created, judges who have held another judicial office should be treated the same as newly appointed judges when it comes to the timing of the requirement for committee review of remuneration: review within a reasonable time after their appointment is required. However, their remuneration cannot be changed until after the review has taken place.

[61] À titre d'exemple, examiner séparément les deux catégories de juges risque de donner lieu à des résultats contradictoires. Cependant, dans le cadre d'un processus intégré où il examine en même temps toutes les rémunérations rattachées à la nouvelle charge judiciaire, le comité peut faire des recommandations au sujet de tout écart proposé dans la rémunération des juges occupant la même charge. De même, lorsque les législatures provinciales créent de nouveaux tribunaux intégrant des fonctions auparavant exercées par d'autres juges, la rémunération de ces derniers peut être prise en compte dans l'analyse de la rémunération globale des prochains titulaires. En fait, puisque son examen porte sur une charge nouvelle ou différente, dont la rémunération n'a pas déjà été examinée, le comité dispose de plus de latitude dans son examen initial.

[62] Cela dit, comme les juges en exercice entretiennent déjà des rapports avec le gouvernement, le risque de manipulation est accru. Les principes établis dans le Renvoi de 1997 justifient une protection supplémentaire dans leur cas. Ainsi, bien que le gouvernement puisse, en vertu de son pouvoir discrétionnaire, fixer la rémunération des nouveaux juges, il ne peut modifier (augmenter, réduire ou geler) le traitement des juges en exercice tant que le comité n'a pas procédé à l'examen. Lorsque le gouvernement respecte l'obligation de maintenir la rémunération de ces juges jusqu'à l'examen, le comité est en mesure de faire des recommandations rétroactives et prospectives à ce sujet.

[63] C'est pourquoi nous croyons que, lorsqu'une nouvelle charge est créée, il faut traiter les juges qui ont occupé une autre charge de la même manière que les nouveaux lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer le moment où il convient de constituer le comité : il faut tenir un examen dans un délai raisonnable suivant la nomination. Cependant, la rémunération des juges en exercice ne peut être modifiée avant la tenue de l'examen.

(4) What Qualifies as a "New Judicial Office"?

[64] While the financial security guarantee of judicial independence requires committee review prior to any changes to the remuneration of a judicial office, we have concluded that prior review is not required when a judicial reform results in the creation of a new judicial office. Therefore, in the context of judicial reform, it is important to determine whether a new judicial office has been created. Often, it will be obvious when a new judicial office has been created. But sometimes, the line between a new judicial office and minor changes to an existing office can be hard to draw. The criteria for what constitutes a new judicial office varied in the arguments and judgments below.

[65] The application judge was of the view that the Act created a new judicial office (paras. 4, 47 and 142). However, it is unclear which criteria the application judge applied in coming to this conclusion. The Court of Appeal also opined that the Act established a new judicial office. In doing so, it compared the functions and employment conditions of the old and new offices. In the Court of Appeal's view, because these functions and employment conditions were sufficiently different, the Act created a new judicial office (paras. 72-78). The Attorney General of Quebec endorses the appeal court's analysis. The appellants argue that no new office was created because in reality, judges in the "new" office exercised the same functions as the old office: the new office simply included better tenure guarantees.

[66] We agree with the appellants that mere adjustments to an existing office do not automatically create a new judicial office. Where the remuneration of an existing judicial office is revised in any way, our jurisprudence is clear: prior committee review is essential to guarantee financial security. However, where a new office is created, a legislature's constitutional authority to reform the justice

(4) Qu'est-ce qui caractérise une « nouvelle charge judiciaire »?

[64] Bien que la garantie de sécurité financière qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire demande qu'un comité procède à un examen préalablement à toute modification proposée à la rémunération associée à une charge judiciaire, nous avons conclu que cet examen n'est pas nécessaire lorsqu'une réforme judiciaire aboutit à la création d'une nouvelle charge. En conséquence, dans le contexte d'une réforme judiciaire, il est important de déterminer s'il y a eu création d'une nouvelle charge judiciaire. Souvent, ce sera évident. Parfois, la distinction entre la création d'une nouvelle charge et une légère modification d'une charge existante sera plus difficile à mesurer. La nature des éléments constitutifs d'une nouvelle charge judiciaire a varié selon les arguments plaidés devant les juridictions inférieures et les jugements de celles-ci.

[65] Le juge saisi de la requête a conclu que la Loi créait une nouvelle charge judiciaire (par. 4, 47 et 142). Toutefois, on ne sait pas exactement quels critères il a appliqués pour parvenir à cette conclusion. La Cour d'appel a également conclu que la Loi créait une nouvelle charge judiciaire. Pour trancher, elle a comparé les fonctions et les conditions d'emploi de l'ancienne et de la nouvelle charge. Selon elle, puisque ces fonctions et conditions d'emploi différaient suffisamment, la Loi créait une nouvelle charge judiciaire (par. 72-78). La procureure générale du Québec appuie l'analyse de la Cour d'appel. Les appelants affirment qu'aucune nouvelle charge judiciaire n'a été créée, car, en réalité, les juges occupant la « nouvelle » charge exercent les mêmes fonctions qu'auparavant : la nouvelle charge comporte simplement de meilleures garanties d'inamovibilité.

[66] Nous convenons avec les appelants que de simples modifications à une charge existante ne créent pas automatiquement une nouvelle charge. En cas de modification, quelle qu'elle soit, à la rémunération associée à une charge judiciaire existante, notre jurisprudence est claire : l'examen préalable par un comité est essentiel au maintien de la garantie de sécurité financière. Toutefois, lorsqu'une system and the practical realities of real reform justify retroactive review.

[67] Financial security can be implicated both by changes to the mandate of a judicial office, as well as by changes to the conditions that have direct financial implications for the office-holders, because any such changes can be seen as potential pressure or manipulation. Thus, we agree with the Court of Appeal that the judicial function and the conditions of employment are relevant considerations in determining whether a judicial office has merely been changed, or whether a new judicial office has been created.

[68] At what point do such reforms create a new office, such that they justify deferral of arm's-length review?

[69] In our view, changes to judicial functions, and changes to other conditions that impact judicial independence — including conditions related to such things as tenure, financial security, selection, and administrative independence — are all relevant to assessing whether a new judicial office is created. A new judicial office is created if these changes, viewed as a whole, and in context, create a new office.

[70] The analysis is holistic: the court must look at the change to judicial functions alongside the other changes to the conditions that impact judicial independence, in light of the context of the reform. The focus is on whether the overall effect of the reform is to create a new judicial office.

(5) Were These Requirements Satisfied in the Case at Bar?

[71] In the present case, modifications to the Quebec judicial order were necessary and urgent following the judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal, which concluded that the regime then in place in the nouvelle charge est créée, le pouvoir constitutionnel de la législature de réformer le système de justice et les réalités pratiques d'une véritable réforme justifient la tenue d'un examen rétroactif.

[67] Tant les modifications apportées au mandat d'une charge judiciaire que celles apportées aux conditions ayant des répercussions financières directes sur les titulaires de la charge peuvent affecter le principe de la sécurité financière, car elles sont susceptibles d'être perçues comme des pressions ou une manipulation. C'est pourquoi nous sommes d'accord avec la Cour d'appel pour affirmer que l'examen des fonctions de la charge judiciaire et des conditions d'emploi est pertinent lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si une charge a simplement été modifiée ou si une nouvelle charge a été créée.

[68] Dans quelles circonstances de telles modifications créent-elles une nouvelle charge, de sorte qu'il soit justifié de reporter l'examen indépendant?

[69] À notre avis, les modifications apportées aux fonctions judiciaires et aux autres conditions qui touchent à l'indépendance judiciaire — y compris celles liées à l'inamovibilité, à la sécurité financière, à la sélection et à l'indépendance administrative — sont pertinentes lorsqu'il s'agit de décider si une nouvelle charge a été créée. Une nouvelle charge judiciaire est créée si ces modifications, considérées dans leur ensemble et dans leur contexte, créent une nouvelle charge.

[70] L'analyse est globale : le tribunal doit examiner les modifications apportées aux fonctions de la charge judiciaire ainsi qu'aux conditions qui ont une incidence sur l'indépendance judiciaire, en tenant compte du contexte de la réforme. La question est donc de déterminer si la réforme a pour conséquence la création d'une nouvelle charge judiciaire.

(5) Ces conditions ont-elles été respectées en l'espèce?

[71] En l'espèce, il était nécessaire et urgent de modifier l'ordre judiciaire du Québec en raison du jugement de la Cour d'appel du Québec, qui avait conclu que le régime alors en place dans la province province did not adequately ensure the tenure guarantee of judicial independence. The 2004 reforms served the public good and advanced the underlying interests of judicial independence.

[72] However, these reforms must also comply with the requirements for the financial security guarantee of judicial independence. In our view, the reform failed to comply with these requirements. For the reasons that follow, we find that the reform breached the financial security guarantee of judicial independence because the remuneration for 2004 to 2007 was not reviewed within a reasonable time after the new appointments. Indeed, the remuneration for that period has never been reviewed.

(a) Did the Reform Create a New Judicial Office?

[73] We agree with the Court of Appeal that the Act created a new judicial office. Viewed as a whole, the changes from the reform did indeed create a new judicial office.

[74] The context for the reform is relevant: the government implemented a reform to the system of justices of the peace following the Quebec Court of Appeal's decision in Pomerleau that the existing system violated judicial independence. The reform provided tenure for the judicial offices.

[75] Looking at the judicial functions, the PJPs have a narrower jurisdiction than the old office of JPEP: the PJPs do not have jurisdiction to preside over bail hearings and do not hear summary prosecutions under Part XXVII of the Criminal Code, as the old JPEPs did. Although in practice the JPEPs never exercised these functions, it remains that, in law, the new office of PJP had a different jurisdiction than that of JPEP (trial decision, at paras. 23 and 83; appeal decision, at paras. 10 and 74).

n'assurait pas adéquatement la garantie d'inamovibilité qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire. La réforme de 2004 a servi l'intérêt public et a favorisé les intérêts sous-jacents de l'indépendance judiciaire.

[72] Or, cette réforme doit également respecter les critères liés à la garantie de sécurité financière qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire. À notre avis, elle ne les a pas respectés. Pour les motifs qui suivent, nous concluons que la réforme a porté atteinte à la garantie de sécurité financière qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire parce que la rémunération en vigueur de 2004 à 2007 n'a pas été examinée dans un délai raisonnable après les nouvelles nominations. En fait, elle n'a jamais été examinée.

a) La réforme a-t-elle créé une nouvelle charge judiciaire?

[73] Nous convenons avec la Cour d'appel que la Loi a créé une nouvelle charge judiciaire. Considérées globalement, les modifications découlant de la réforme ont effectivement créé une nouvelle charge judiciaire.

[74] Le contexte de la réforme est pertinent : le gouvernement a réformé le régime des juges de paix après la décision rendue par la Cour d'appel du Québec dans l'affaire Pomerleau selon laquelle le régime en place ne respectait pas le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire. La réforme a instauré l'inamovibilité des charges.

[75] Si on examine les fonctions judiciaires, on constate que la juridiction des JPM est plus restreinte que celle des anciens JPPE : les JPM n'ont pas compétence pour présider les enquêtes sur mise en liberté sous caution et ne peuvent présider les audiences sur les poursuites sommaires intentées en vertu de la partie XXVII du Code criminel, contrairement aux anciens JPPE. Bien qu'en pratique, ces derniers n'aient jamais exercé ces fonctions, il n'en demeure pas moins qu'en droit, la juridiction des nouveaux JPM diffère de celle des JPPE (décision de première instance, par. 23 et 83; décision d'appel, par. 10 et 74).

[76] Looking at the conditions that impact judicial independence, there are many differences in these conditions. The PJPs benefit from greater judicial independence guarantees than did the JPEPs. For instance, though both PJPs and JPEPs could only be removed from office by virtue of a report from the Court of Appeal after a request from the Minister of Justice, the JPEPs were appointed for renewable five-year terms, whereas the PJPs now enjoy tenure until the age of 70. Additionally, the remuneration and other benefits associated with the office of PJP are now subject to periodic committee review. Furthermore, the selection criteria of the PJPs are now set out in the CJA. Finally, the PJPs are now integrated into the Court of Québec and are thus subject to the authority of the Chief Judge of the Court of Québec, something which was not provided for by the CJA with regards to the JPEPs before 2004. As such, clearly there are significant changes to the conditions that impact judicial independence.

[77] It is also worth noting that the Act completely substitutes Part III.1 of the CJA (Act, s. 1), which deals with justices of the peace, that s. 26 of the Act provides that former JPEPs "become" PJPs, and that s. 35 of the Act requires that PJPs take a new oath, a logical consequence of holding a new office. Additionally, during the parliamentary debates leading up to the adoption of the Act, there are several references in passing to the creation of a new judicial office (Quebec, National Assembly, Journal des débats, vol. 38, No. 75, 1st Sess., 37th Leg., May 20, 2004, at p. 4543; Journal des débats de la Commission permanente des institutions, vol. 38, No. 54, 1st Sess., 37th Leg., May 28, 2004, at p. 18).

[78] Looking at the effects of the reform overall, we conclude that the reform created a new judicial office.

(b) Did a Committee Review the Remuneration Within a Reasonable Time After the Appointment of the Judges?

[79] Since the Act created a new judicial office, the initial remuneration of all the judges appointed

[76] Si on examine les conditions touchant l'indépendance judiciaire, on constate qu'elles ont beaucoup changé. Les JPM bénéficient de garanties d'indépendance judiciaire plus étendues que les JPPE. À titre d'exemple, les JPPE ne pouvaient être destitués que sur rapport de la Cour d'appel après une demande du ministre de la Justice, comme les JPM, mais les JPPE étaient nommés pour un mandat renouvelable de cinq ans, alors que les JPM peuvent maintenant siéger jusqu'à l'âge de 70 ans. De plus, le traitement et les autres avantages liés à la charge de JPM sont maintenant soumis périodiquement à l'examen d'un comité. Qui plus est, les critères de sélection des JPM sont désormais énoncés dans la LTJ. Enfin, les JPM relèvent de la Cour du Québec et sont donc soumis à l'autorité du juge en chef de ce tribunal, ce que la LTJ ne prévoyait pas à l'égard des JPPE avant 2004. Ainsi, les conditions touchant l'indépendance judiciaire ont beaucoup changé.

[77] Il convient également de souligner que la Loi remplace intégralement la partie III.1 de la LTJ (Loi, article premier), qui porte sur les juges de paix, que l'art. 26 de la Loi prévoit que les anciens JPPE « deviennent » des JPM et que l'art. 35 de la Loi exige que les JPM prêtent de nouveau serment, ce qui est logique puisqu'ils assument une nouvelle charge. De plus, durant les débats parlementaires ayant mené à l'adoption de la Loi, on a fait plusieurs fois référence à la création d'une nouvelle charge judiciaire (Québec, Assemblée nationale, Journal des débats, vol. 38, nº 75, 1re sess., 37e lég., 20 mai 2004, p. 4543; Journal des débats de la Commission permanente des institutions, vol. 38, nº 54, 1re sess., 37e lég., 28 mai 2004, p. 18).

[78] Si on examine les effets de la réforme dans son ensemble, nous concluons qu'elle a créé une nouvelle charge judiciaire.

b) La rémunération a-t-elle été examinée par un comité de la rémunération des juges dans un délai raisonnable après la nomination des juges?

[79] Comme la Loi a créé une nouvelle charge judiciaire, le traitement initial de tous les juges to this office (whether they were appointed for the first time or transferred from the now-abolished office of JPEP) needed to be reviewed retroactively, within a reasonable time after their appointment.

[80] As s. 32 of the Act provides that "[d]espite sections 2 to 8, the committee on the remuneration of judges will not exercise its functions with regard to presiding justices of the peace until a committee is formed in 2007 with respect to judges of the Court of Québec and municipal courts", it effectively prohibits any review of the initial PJP remuneration prior to 2007. Indeed, although the office of PJP was established in 2004, the remuneration of the judges occupying this new office could only be reviewed starting in 2007. This contravenes the constitutional requirement that the initial remuneration of judges occupying a new office must be reviewed by a remuneration committee within a reasonable time after their appointment. There are no compelling reasons why a review could not proceed well before 2007. None were offered. The time period should be measured in months, not years. Obviously, three years is not a reasonable time. As such, s. 32 of the Act infringes the financial security guarantee of judicial independence.

[81] Additionally, as ss. 27 and 30 of the Act respectively provide for a freeze in the remuneration of the six former JPEPs and the establishment of the remuneration of the newly appointed PJPs by executive order, without referencing the need to retroactively submit the remuneration to a remuneration committee, we are of the view that ss. 27 and 30 also infringe judicial independence. Indeed, when a legislature creates a new judicial office, it is constitutionally required to provide for salary committee review in the legislation establishing the new judicial office. Finally, s. 27 of the Act infringes judicial independence because it freezes the remuneration of sitting judges before a committee has reviewed this remuneration, contrary to the requirements of the financial security guarantee.

nommés à cette charge (pour la première fois ou après l'abolition de la charge de JPPE) devait être examiné rétroactivement, dans un délai raisonnable après leur nomination.

[80] L'article 32 de la Loi prévoit que « [m]algré les articles 2 à 8 de la présente loi, le Comité de la rémunération des juges n'exerce ses attributions eu égard aux juges de paix magistrats qu'à compter du moment où il sera procédé à la nomination des membres du comité qui sera formé en 2007 à l'égard des juges de la Cour du Québec et des cours municipales ». Il interdit ainsi tout examen de la rémunération initiale des JPM avant 2007. En effet, bien que la charge de JPM ait été créée en 2004, la rémunération des juges qui occupent cette nouvelle charge ne pouvait être examinée qu'à compter de 2007. Il s'agit là d'un manquement à l'exigence constitutionnelle selon laquelle la rémunération initiale des juges occupant une nouvelle charge est examinée par un comité dans un délai raisonnable après leur nomination. Aucune raison valable n'explique pourquoi l'examen ne pouvait être tenu bien avant 2007, et aucune n'a été avancée. Le délai aurait dû se calculer en mois, non en années. Évidemment, un délai de trois ans ne constitue pas un délai raisonnable. En conséquence, l'art. 32 de la Loi porte atteinte à la garantie de sécurité financière qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire.

[81] En outre, puisque les art. 27 et 30 de la Loi prévoient respectivement un gel de la rémunération des six anciens JPPE et l'établissement, par décret, de la rémunération des JPM nouvellement nommés, mais n'exigent pas l'examen rétroactif de la rémunération par un comité, nous sommes d'avis que ces dispositions portent également atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire. En effet, la législature qui crée une nouvelle charge judiciaire est tenue par la Constitution de prévoir, dans la loi constituant la charge, l'examen de la rémunération par un comité établi à cette fin. Enfin, l'art. 27 de la Loi porte atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire en ce sens qu'il a pour effet de geler la rémunération de juges en exercice avant qu'un comité n'examine la question, ce qui est contraire aux exigences de la garantie de sécurité financière.

[82] The appellants also submitted that the government was not permitted to appoint new PJPs at a lower remuneration than the old JPEPs' remuneration. We disagree. Where a reform results in the creation of a new judicial office, and sitting judges are transferred to that new office, the government may be entirely justified in holding their remuneration at existing levels and appointing new judges into the same category at a lower remuneration. But the government does not have carte blanche in this matter. Both the remuneration of newly appointed judges and any proposed changes to the remuneration of the transferred judges must be subject to review by a committee. In the case at bar, three remuneration committees found that the salary gap between the transferred judges and the newly appointed judges was appropriate. Based on the findings of the remuneration committees, we are satisfied that this salary gap, by itself, did not infringe the financial security guarantee of judicial independence.

(c) Was There a Violation of the Financial Security Guarantee After 2007?

[83] The appellants also challenge the validity of executive Order 932-2008, adopting the 2008 Johnson Committee recommendations and setting remuneration for 2007 to 2010. In our view, this Order is valid. Remuneration committees reviewed PJP remuneration periodically starting in 2007. As such, there was no violation of judicial independence after 2007 and no defect in the 2008 Order.

[84] It is true that the post-2007 remuneration derived from an initial level of remuneration which was never reviewed, contrary to constitutional requirements. That being said, the criteria the committees were required to apply make it clear that a change in the baseline remuneration would have had a limited impact on future remuneration reviews. Indeed, under s. 246.42 of the CJA, "the level and prevailing trend of the remuneration received by the judges concerned, as compared to that received by other persons receiving remuneration out of public

[82] Les appelants soutiennent également que le gouvernement n'avait pas le droit de nommer de nouveaux JPM et de leur accorder une rémunération moindre que celle des anciens JPPE. Nous ne sommes pas d'accord. Lorsqu'une réforme entraîne la création d'une nouvelle charge judiciaire, il peut se révéler tout à fait justifié pour le gouvernement de maintenir la rémunération des juges en poste transférés à la nouvelle charge et de fixer une rémunération moindre pour les nouveaux juges qu'il nomme dans la même catégorie. Cependant, le gouvernement n'a pas carte blanche. La rémunération des juges nouvellement nommés et les modifications proposées à la rémunération des juges transférés doivent être soumises à l'examen d'un comité. Dans le cas qui nous occupe, trois comités ont conclu que l'écart salarial entre les juges transférés et les juges nouvellement nommés était justifié. À la lumière de ces conclusions, nous sommes d'avis qu'en soi, cet écart salarial n'a pas porté atteinte à la garantie de sécurité financière qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire.

c) Y a-t-il eu atteinte à la garantie de sécurité financière après 2007?

[83] Les appelants contestent également la validité du Décret 932-2008 en vertu duquel les recommandations du Comité Johnson de 2008 ont été adoptées, et la rémunération de 2007 à 2010, fixée. À notre avis, ce décret est valide. À compter de 2007, la rémunération des JPM a été soumise périodiquement à l'examen d'un comité. Il n'y a donc pas eu d'atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire après 2007, et le décret de 2008 n'est entaché d'aucun vice.

[84] Certes, après 2007, la rémunération était calculée en fonction du traitement initial, qui n'avait jamais été examiné, ce qui est contraire aux exigences constitutionnelles. Cela dit, il ressort clairement des critères que les comités étaient tenus d'appliquer qu'une modification à la rémunération initiale aurait eu un effet limité sur les examens à venir. D'ailleurs, suivant l'art. 246.42 de la LTJ, « l'état et l'évolution comparés de la rémunération des juges concernés d'une part, et de celle des autres personnes rémunérées sur les fonds publics, funds" constitutes only 1 of 10 factors which the committee must consider when determining judges' remuneration. For instance, the committees were also required to consider remuneration for similar offices in other provinces.

[85] Additionally, we emphasize that judicial independence exists for the benefit of the public, and does not serve as a means of labour arbitration to ensure better remuneration for judges. As this Court stated in Ell, at para. 29, judicial independence is "for the benefit of the judged, not the judges", as "[j]udicial independence serves not as an end in itself, but as a means to safeguard our constitutional order and to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice" (see also Bodner, at paras. 4 and 6). Consequently, "[t]he benefit that the members of those courts derive is purely secondary" (1997 Reference, at para. 9). As such, even if the actual remuneration of PJPs after 2007 may have been in some way affected by the lack of remuneration committee review from 2004 to 2007, this problem is not one with judicial independence itself, since the constitutional requirements necessary to the protection of judicial independence were met from 2007 onwards. Indeed, since the government complied with its constitutional obligation to periodically submit PJP remuneration to a committee from 2007 onwards, as required by the 1997 Reference, public confidence in judicial independence was in no way undermined for that period. Any impact that the lack of committee review from 2004 to 2007 may have had on PJP remuneration after 2007 cannot be said to have raised constitutional concerns.

VII. Pensions

[86] The appellants challenge the participation of PJPs in the public service management personnel pension plan. They argue that because the pension plan is not designed for the career of a judge, and is less remunerative than the pension plan for the judges of the Court of Québec, the pension plan does not meet the basic minimum threshold required for the office of a judge. As such, the participation d'autre part » n'est que l'un des dix facteurs que le comité doit prendre en considération lorsqu'il établit la rémunération des juges. À titre d'exemple, le comité doit également tenir compte de la rémunération des juges exerçant des fonctions similaires dans d'autres provinces.

[85] De plus, nous rappelons que l'indépendance judiciaire existe au profit du public et ne saurait constituer un moyen d'arbitrage pour les juges en vue d'obtenir une hausse de leur traitement. Comme l'a affirmé la Cour dans l'arrêt Ell, par. 29, l'indépendance judiciaire existe « au profit de la personne jugée et non des juges », puisque « [l]'indépendance judiciaire est non pas une fin en soi, mais un moyen de préserver notre ordre constitutionnel et de maintenir la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice » (voir également Bodner, par. 4 et 6). En conséquence, « [l]'avantage qui en découle pour les juges n'est qu'un aspect purement accessoire » (Renvoi de 1997, par. 9). Ainsi, même s'il est possible que la rémunération des JPM après 2007 ait souffert en quelque sorte de l'absence d'examen entre 2004 et 2007, il ne s'agit pas d'un problème d'indépendance judiciaire comme tel, puisque les exigences constitutionnelles relatives à la protection de l'indépendance judiciaire ont été respectées dès 2007. En effet, le gouvernement s'est conformé dès lors à son obligation constitutionnelle de soumettre périodiquement à l'examen d'un comité la rémunération des JPM, comme l'exigeait le Renvoi de 1997. La confiance du public à l'égard de l'indépendance judiciaire n'a donc en aucun cas été minée pendant cette période. On ne peut pas dire que l'absence d'examen, entre 2004 et 2007, ait eu sur la rémunération des JPM après 2007 des effets d'ordre constitutionnel.

VII. Régimes de retraite

[86] Les appelants contestent la participation des JPM au régime de retraite du personnel d'encadrement de la fonction publique. Ils affirment que, comme le régime de retraite n'est pas conçu en fonction de la carrière judiciaire, et qu'il est moins avantageux que le régime de retraite des juges de la Cour du Québec, il ne satisfait pas au seuil minimal requis par la charge de juge. Ainsi, la participation of PJPs in this pension plan infringes judicial independence. To them, changes to pensions should be analyzed separately from changes to remuneration as a whole.

des JPM à ce régime de retraite porte atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire. Selon eux, les modifications apportées au régime de retraite doivent être analysées séparément de celles touchant la rémunération dans son ensemble.

[87] The courts below rejected this argument. The application judge declined to comment on the merits of the pension plan, but relied on the Johnson and D'Amours committees' endorsements of the plan. For its part, the Court of Appeal also relied on the committees' recommendations, since these conclusions were not unreasonable. They found that a reasonable and well-informed person would find that the constitutionally required minimum threshold was met. We agree with the courts below.

[87] Les juridictions inférieures ont rejeté cet argument. Le juge saisi de la requête a refusé de se prononcer sur le bien-fondé du régime de retraite et s'en est remis aux Comités Johnson et D'Amours, qui l'avaient approuvé. Pour sa part, la Cour d'appel a également accepté les recommandations des comités, puisque leurs conclusions n'étaient pas déraisonnables. Elles ont jugé qu'une personne raisonnable et bien informée estimerait que le seuil minimal requis par la Constitution avait été respecté. Nous sommes d'accord avec les juridictions inférieures.

[88] The issue before us concerns the adequacy of the pensions and not the impact of the change from a previous pension plan to a new one. In regards to the adequacy argument, it bears repeating that one of the main roles of a remuneration committee is precisely to determine whether the overall remuneration of judges — which includes pensions — is adequate.

[88] La question dont nous sommes saisis est de savoir si le régime de retraite est adéquat, et ne vise pas les effets du passage de l'ancien régime au nouveau. À ce sujet, nous rappelons que l'une des principales fonctions d'un comité est précisément de décider si la rémunération globale des juges — y compris le régime de retraite — est adéquate.

[89] As discussed above, the third element of the institutional dimension of financial security is that remuneration may not fall below a basic minimum level required for the office of a judge (1997 Reference, at para. 135; Bodner, at para. 8; Mackin, at para. 59). This is so because public confidence in judicial independence would be undermined "if judges were paid at such a low rate that they could be perceived as susceptible to political pressure through economic manipulation" (1997 Reference, at para. 135; see also paras. 192-96). In articulating this element in the 1997 Reference, Lamer C.J. stressed that this element is not for the benefit of the judiciary, but for the public (para. 193):

[89] Comme nous l'avons souligné, le troisième élément de la dimension institutionnelle de la sécurité financière exige que la rémunération ne puisse être inférieure au seuil minimal que requiert la charge de juge (Renvoi de 1997, par. 135; Bodner, par. 8; Mackin, par. 59). La confiance du public dans l'indépendance judiciaire serait sapée « si les traitements versés aux juges étaient si bas que ces derniers risqueraient d'être perçus comme étant vulnérables aux pressions politiques exercées par le biais de la manipulation financière » (Renvoi de 1997, par. 135; voir également les par. 192-196). Dans le Renvoi de 1997, le juge en chef Lamer souligne, au moment de le formuler, que cet élément n'existe pas au profit des juges, mais bien au profit du public (par. 193) :

I want to make it very clear that the guarantee of a minimum salary is not meant for the benefit of the judiciary. Rather, financial security is a means to the end of judicial independence, and is therefore for the benefit of the public. As Professor Friedland has put it, speaking as a concerned citizen, it is "for our sake, not for theirs" ([A Place Apart: Judicial Independence and Accountability in Canada (1995), at] p. 56).

Je veux qu'il soit bien clair que le fait de garantir un traitement minimal ne vise pas à avantager les juges. La sécurité financière est plutôt un moyen d'assurer l'indépendance de

[90] Pensions are part of judicial remuneration (Valente, at p. 704; Beauregard, at p. 75). Pensions must be examined with a view to their place in the overall compensation package for judges. For example, a less generous pension may be offset by more substantial salary and other benefits; viewed together, the overall remuneration might well meet the minimum constitutional threshold. This does not mean, however, that specific problems relating to pensions will never arise. For example, the total absence of a pension plan might raise concerns that overall remuneration cannot cure. And, of course, any proposed changes to the pension — as any other changes to remuneration — must be subject to prior review by a remuneration committee.

[91] Judicial independence does not require that a pension plan be exclusive or controlled by judges (Valente, at p. 708); nor does it require that all judges enjoy the same level of remuneration. Conversely, there is no reason in principle why a public service pension cannot apply to judges. There is also no reason in principle not to have a distinct and separate part of a pension plan specifically tailored for judges, although the absence of such a tailored plan does not automatically infringe judicial independence. Membership in a public sector pension plan does not preclude adapting that plan to the specific characteristics of judicial office. For example, justices of the peace in Ontario are members of a Public Sector Pension Plan, but are also members of a Supplemental Plan, which provides additional benefits.

[92] The appellants argue that their pension plan does not meet the basic constitutional minimum threshold. The management personnel pension plan is designed for career public servants with around 35 years of service at retirement. But a career as a la magistrature et, de ce fait, elle est à l'avantage du public. Comme l'a dit le professeur Friedland, en tant que citoyen concerné, une telle mesure est « dans notre propre intérêt » ([Une place à part : l'indépendance et la responsabilité de la magistrature au Canada (1995),] p. 64).

[90] Le régime de retraite fait partie de la rémunération des juges (Valente, p. 704; Beauregard, p. 75). Son examen doit tenir compte de la place qu'il occupe dans l'ensemble de la rémunération des juges. À titre d'exemple, un régime de retraite moins généreux pourrait être compensé par un traitement plus élevé et d'autres avantages; il en résulterait possiblement une rémunération globale qui respecte le seuil minimal constitutionnel. Or, cela ne signifie pas qu'il n'y aura jamais de problème lié au régime de retraite. À titre d'exemple, l'absence de régime de retraite soulèvera probablement des préoccupations que la rémunération globale ne permettra pas de dissiper. Bien entendu, toute modification proposée au régime — comme toute modification à la rémunération — doit être soumise à l'examen préalable d'un comité.

[91] L'indépendance judiciaire n'exige pas qu'un régime de retraite soit exclusif aux juges ou contrôlé par eux (Valente, p. 708); elle n'exige pas non plus la même rémunération pour tous les juges. À l'inverse, aucune raison de principe n'empêche les juges de participer à un régime de retraite public. Aucune raison de principe n'empêche non plus qu'une partie distincte d'un régime de retraite soit adaptée aux juges, quoique l'absence d'un régime sur mesure ne porte pas automatiquement atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire. Ce n'est pas parce que les juges participent à un régime de retraite du secteur public que ce régime ne peut être adapté aux particularités propres à la fonction. À titre d'exemple, les juges de paix de l'Ontario sont membres d'un régime de retraite du secteur public, mais sont également membres d'un régime complémentaire, qui leur confère des prestations supplémentaires.

[92] Les appelants soutiennent que leur régime de retraite ne respecte pas le seuil minimal constitutionnel. Le régime de retraite du personnel d'encadrement est conçu pour les fonctionnaires de carrière, qui ont cumulé environ 35 ans de service au moment

PJP is typically shorter. Under the current pension plan, a PJP appointed at the age of 43 and retiring at age 65 would only receive 44 percent of their average salary from their three best years before retirement, whereas a judge of the Court of Québec would receive about 65 percent of their average salary from the same period. This pension plan is far less remunerative than that of the judges of the Court of Québec, which is more properly tailored to the shorter career of a judge. The appellants argue that because the pension plan is not designed for the shorter career of a judge, the pension plan does not meet the basic minimum threshold required for the office of a judge.

[93] It is common ground that the Pension Plan of Management Personnel available to PJPs is less advantageous and more costly than the pension plan enjoyed by the judges of the Court of Québec. In fact, in its representations before the D'Amours and Clair committees, the Conférence des juges de paix magistrats asked to participate in the Court of Québec judges' pension plan.

[94] However, the Johnson, D'Amours and Clair committees evaluated the pension plan, and found that it was adequate. While the PJPs may not enjoy a pension plan as beneficial as that of the judges of the Court of Québec, this is not the constitutional question at hand. The question is whether this pension plan, as part of overall remuneration, meets a minimum threshold such that these judges are not "perceived as susceptible to political pressure through economic manipulation" (1997 Reference, at para. 135).

[95] In our view, in light of overall remuneration and the findings of the three committees, the remuneration, including the pension, meets the minimum constitutional threshold. Therefore, s. 178 of the CJA, which mandates the participation of PJPs in the Pension Plan of Management Personnel, is valid.

VIII. Conclusion

[96] We conclude that ss. 27, 30 and 32 of the Act infringe the institutional financial security guarantee de leur retraite. Or, la carrière d'un JPM est généralement de plus courte durée. Selon le régime de retraite actuel, un JPM qui serait nommé à 43 ans et prendrait sa retraite à 65 ans recevrait seulement 44 p. 100 de son salaire moyen des trois meilleures années de rémunération précédant sa retraite, alors qu'un juge de la Cour du Québec en recevrait environ 65 p. 100. Ce régime de retraite est beaucoup moins généreux que celui des juges de la Cour du Québec, qui est davantage adapté à la carrière plus courte d'un juge. Les appelants affirment donc que leur régime de retraite ne respecte pas le seuil minimal requis par la charge de juge.

[93] Personne ne conteste que le régime de retraite du personnel d'encadrement auquel participent les JPM est moins avantageux et plus onéreux que celui des juges de la Cour du Québec. En fait, dans ses observations devant les Comités D'Amours et Clair, la Conférence des juges de paix magistrats a demandé à participer au régime de retraite des juges de la Cour du Québec.

[94] Cependant, les Comités Johnson, D'Amours et Clair ont évalué le régime de retraite et ont conclu qu'il était adéquat. Bien que les JPM ne bénéficient pas d'un régime de retraite aussi avantageux que celui des juges de la Cour du Québec, il ne s'agit pas là de la question constitutionnelle qui nous occupe. La question consiste plutôt à savoir si ce régime de retraite, qui fait partie de la rémunération globale, respecte le seuil minimal requis pour que ces juges ne soient pas « perçus comme étant vulnérables aux pressions politiques exercées par le biais de la manipulation financière » (Renvoi de 1997, par. 135).

[95] À notre avis, compte tenu de la rémunération globale des JPM ainsi que des conclusions des trois comités, la rémunération, y compris le régime de retraite, satisfait au seuil minimal constitutionnel. En conséquence, l'art. 178 de la LTJ, qui impose aux JPM de participer au régime de retraite du personnel d'encadrement, est valide.

VIII. Conclusion

[96] Nous concluons que les art. 27, 30 et 32 de la Loi portent atteinte à la garantie de sécurité of judicial independence, and are thus contrary to s. 11(d) of the Charter and the preamble to the Constitution Act, 1867.

[97] This infringement is not justified under s. 1 of the Charter. Indeed, an infringement of judicial independence can only be justified where there are "dire and exceptional financial emergencies caused by extraordinary circumstances such as the outbreak of war or imminent bankruptcy" (Mackin, at para. 72, citing the 1997 Reference, at para. 137). To justify an infringement, the government must adduce evidence to justify why the independent, effective and objective process has been circumvented (Mackin, at para. 73, citing the 1997 Reference, at paras. 277 et seq.). We are far from that threshold here. The Attorney General of Quebec makes no submissions on this issue and adduces no evidence that would justify an infringement. There is no evidence of a dire financial emergency; in fact, the Attorney General of Quebec does not raise financial considerations as the basis or justification for any of the government's action. Therefore, there is nothing that would meet the high threshold of justification under s. 1.

[98] Having found that ss. 27, 30 and 32 of the Act infringe judicial independence, and that this infringement is not saved by s. 1, we conclude that these sections are unconstitutional.

[99] However, neither Order 932-2008, nor s. 178 of the CJA infringes judicial independence.

IX. Remedy

[100] Having determined that the failure to provide for retroactive review of the new judicial office within a reasonable time after the appointments was a breach of the financial security guarantee of judicial independence between 2004 and 2007, there remains the question of the appropriate remedy.

financière institutionnelle qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire et qu'ils sont donc contraires à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte ainsi qu'au préambule de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867.

[97] Cette atteinte n'est pas justifiée au regard de l'article premier de la Charte. En effet, un manquement au principe de l'indépendance judiciaire ne peut être justifié qu'en cas de « crise financière exceptionnellement grave provoquée par des circonstances extraordinaires, telles que le déclenchement d'une guerre ou une faillite imminente » (Mackin, par. 72, citant le Renvoi de 1997, par. 137). Pour justifier une atteinte, le gouvernement doit présenter des éléments de preuve expliquant pourquoi le processus indépendant, efficace et objectif a été contourné (Mackin, par. 73, citant le Renvoi de 1997, par. 277 et suiv.). En l'espèce, ce critère est loin d'avoir été respecté. La procureure générale du Québec n'a présenté aucune observation sur cette question et n'a produit aucune preuve qui justifierait une telle atteinte. Rien ne démontre qu'il existe une crise financière grave; en fait, la procureure générale du Québec n'a soulevé aucun facteur financier susceptible de fonder ou de justifier les mesures du gouvernement. En conséquence, le critère élevé de justification exigé par l'article premier n'est pas satisfait en l'espèce.

[98] Comme nous avons conclu que les art. 27, 30 et 32 de la Loi portent atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire et qu'elle ne peut se justifier au regard de l'article premier, nous concluons à l'inconstitutionnalité de ces dispositions.

[99] Toutefois, ni le Décret 932-2008 ni l'art. 178 de la LTJ ne portent atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire.

IX. Réparation

[100] Comme nous avons conclu que le défaut de prévoir un examen rétroactif de la nouvelle charge judiciaire dans un délai raisonnable après les nominations portait atteinte à la garantie de sécurité financière qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire pour la période de 2004 à 2007, nous devons maintenant nous pencher sur la question de la réparation appropriée.

[101] The appellants ask this Court to declare the impugned sections invalid. Further, they argue that if these sections are invalid, then all the executive orders setting remuneration since 2004 are also invalid. They ask this Court to order committee review of all remuneration since 2004. By contrast, the Attorney General of Quebec asks that any remedy be limited to a declaration of invalidity and a declaration that in the future, a committee must review the initial remuneration of a new office.

[102] While we agree there was a breach in the financial security guarantee, the extensive remedy requested by the appellants goes too far.

[103] First, we declare ss. 27, 30 and 32 of the Act invalid. However, the other impugned provisions (s. 178 of the CJA, and Order 932-2008) remain valid.

[104] Additionally, because the breach to judicial independence arises from the lack of committee review for the period between 2004 and 2007, we order that a remuneration committee review remuneration of all PJPs for this period only. The committee must consider all factors bearing on remuneration, including the remuneration of the previous judicial office. This committee review signals that a breach of judicial independence cannot remain unaddressed, and serves to promote future government compliance with the requirements of judicial independence.

[105] However, as discussed above, any impact on remuneration after 2007 is not due to a violation of judicial independence after 2007; as a result, judicial independence does not require that the subsequent Order 932-2008 be struck.

[106] That being said, although one of the guarantees of judicial independence was compromised between 2004 and 2007, the judicial decisions rendered by the PJPs throughout that period are

[101] Les appelants demandent à la Cour de déclarer invalides les dispositions contestées. De plus, ils soutiennent que l'invalidité de ces dispositions emporte celle de tous les décrets établissant la rémunération adoptés depuis 2004. Ils demandent à la Cour d'ordonner l'examen par un comité de l'ensemble des rémunérations fixées depuis 2004. En revanche, la procureure générale du Québec demande que la réparation soit limitée à une déclaration d'invalidité ainsi qu'à une déclaration selon laquelle, à l'avenir, un comité devra examiner la rémunération initiale associée à une nouvelle charge.

[102] Même si nous convenons qu'il y a eu atteinte à la garantie de sécurité financière, nous sommes d'avis que la réparation demandée par les appelants est exagérée.

[103] Premièrement, même si nous déclarons les art. 27, 30 et 32 de la Loi invalides, les autres dispositions contestées (l'art. 178 de la LTJ et le Décret 932-2008) demeurent valides.

[104] De plus, comme l'atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire découle de l'absence d'examen par un comité entre 2004 et 2007, nous ordonnons que la rémunération de tous les JPM soit examinée par un comité, mais seulement pour cette période. Le comité doit tenir compte de tous les facteurs ayant une incidence sur la rémunération, y compris la rémunération associée à la charge judiciaire antérieure. Non seulement pareil examen établit qu'il faudra toujours remédier à une atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire, mais il contribue également à obliger le gouvernement à respecter pour l'avenir les exigences de l'indépendance judiciaire.

[105] Cependant, comme nous l'avons souligné, les répercussions sur la rémunération après 2007 ne découlent pas d'une atteinte à l'indépendance judiciaire survenue après cette année; en conséquence, l'annulation du Décret 932-2008 n'est pas nécessaire.

[106] Cela dit, même si l'une des garanties qu'exige l'indépendance judiciaire a été compromise entre 2004 et 2007, les décisions judiciaires rendues par les JPM durant cette période sont valides :

valid: ". . . absent a demonstration of positive and substantial injustice in the circumstances of a particular case, the doctrine of necessity will prevent the reopening of past decisions of [courts] by reason only of their lack of independence" (Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1998] 1 S.C.R. 3, at para. 8).

[107] We would allow the appeal in part, and order costs in favour of the appellants.

APPENDIX

I. Legislative Provisions

Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and other legislative provisions as regards the status of justices of the peace, S.Q. 2004, c. 12

26. Justices of the peace appointed before 30 June 2004 in accordance with section 158 of the Courts of Justice Act (R.S.Q., chapter T-16), to whom section 162 of that Act was made applicable by their deed of appointment and who are in office on that date become presiding justices of the peace. They are deemed to have been appointed to hold office during good behaviour in accordance with Division II of Part III.1 of the Courts of Justice Act, as amended by this Act, and, for the purposes of section 161 of that Act, to have established their residence in the place where they were residing on 30 June 2004.

Justices of the peace referred to in the first paragraph who were on leave without pay from the public service are, from the date of coming into force of this section, deemed to have resigned from their public service position.

27. Persons who became presiding justices of the peace by virtue of section 26 retain the salary they were receiving before the coming into force of section 26, until that salary is equal to the salary to be determined by the Government pursuant to section 175 of the Courts of Justice Act.

They also retain the employment conditions, including the employment benefits and the pension plan, formerly applicable to them. However, during the six months following the coming into force of section 26, they may

« . . . en l'absence de démonstration d'une injustice concrète et substantielle dans les circonstances particulières d'un cas donné, la doctrine de la nécessité aura pour effet d'empêcher le réexamen des décisions passées des cours [. . .] sur le seul fondement de l'absence d'indépendance de ces tribunaux » (Renvoi relatif à la rémunération des juges de la Cour provinciale de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, [1998] 1 R.C.S. 3, par. 8).

[107] Nous sommes d'avis d'accueillir en partie le pourvoi et d'adjuger les dépens aux appelants.

ANNEXE

I. Dispositions législatives

Loi modifiant la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires et d'autres dispositions législatives eu égard au statut des juges de paix, L.Q. 2004, c. 12

26. Les juges de paix nommés avant le 30 juin 2004 conformément à l'article 158 de la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires (L.R.Q., chapitre T-16), auxquels l'article 162 de cette loi était rendu applicable par leur acte de nomination et qui sont en fonction à cette date, deviennent juges de paix magistrats. Ils sont réputés avoir été nommés durant bonne conduite suivant les dispositions de la section II de la partie III.1 de la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires telle que modifiée par la présente loi et, aux fins de l'application de l'article 161 de cette loi, avoir établi leur résidence au lieu dans lequel ils résidaient le 30 juin 2004.

Parmi ces personnes, celles qui étaient en congé sans solde de la fonction publique sont, à compter de l'entrée en vigueur du présent article, réputées avoir remis à cette date leur démission de leur poste de fonctionnaires.

27. Les personnes devenues juges de paix magistrats par l'effet de l'article 26 conservent le traitement qu'elles recevaient avant l'entrée en vigueur de l'article 26, jusqu'à ce que ce traitement soit égal à celui qui sera établi par le gouvernement en application de l'article 175 de la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires (L.R.Q., chapitre T-16).

Elles conservent également les conditions de travail, y compris les avantages sociaux et le régime de retraite, qui leur étaient jusque-là applicables. Elles peuvent toutefois, dans les six mois suivant l'entrée en vigueur elect to become members of the pension plan established under the Act respecting the Pension Plan of Management Personnel (R.S.Q., chapter R-12.1) by sending a notice to that effect to the Commission administrative des régimes de retraite et d'assurances established under the Act respecting the Government and Public Employees Retirement Plan (R.S.Q., chapter R-10). In that case, and if they were formerly members of the pension plan established under the Act respecting the Civil Service Superannuation Plan (R.S.Q., chapter R-12), section 42 and the first paragraph of section 139 of the Act respecting the Pension Plan of Management Personnel apply, with the necessary modifications.

30. The Government determines, by order, the salary and employment conditions of presiding justices of the peace appointed on or after 30 June 2004, including their employment benefits other than the pension plan. The order remains applicable until the first order is made under section 175 of the Courts of Justice Act (R.S.Q., chapter T-16) enacted by section 1.

32. Despite sections 2 to 8, the committee on the remuneration of judges will not exercise its functions with regard to presiding justices of the peace until a committee is formed in 2007 with respect to judges of the Court of Québec and municipal courts.

II. Constitutional Questions

The Chief Justice stated the following constitutional questions on August 18, 2015:

1. Do ss. 27, 30 and 32 of the Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and other legislative provisions as regards the status of justices of the peace, S.Q. 2004, c. 12, violate the principle of judicial independence guaranteed by:

   (a) the Constitution Act, 1867 or

   (b) section 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

2. If so, in respect of s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, is the infringement a reasonable limit prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society under s. 1 of the Charter?

de l'article 26, opter de participer au régime de retraite établi par la Loi sur le régime de retraite du personnel d'encadrement (L.R.Q., chapitre R-12.1) en transmettant un avis à cet effet à la Commission administrative des régimes de retraite et d'assurances constituée en vertu de la Loi sur le régime de retraite des employés du gouvernement et des organismes publics (L.R.Q., chapitre R-10). Dans ce cas, et si elles participaient au régime de retraite établi par la Loi sur le régime de retraite des fonctionnaires (L.R.Q., chapitre R-12), l'article 42 et le premier alinéa de l'article 139 de la Loi sur le régime de retraite du personnel d'encadrement s'appliquent, compte tenu des adaptations nécessaires.

30. Le gouvernement fixe, par décret, le traitement et les conditions de travail des juges de paix magistrats nommés à compter du 30 juin 2004, y compris leurs avantages sociaux autres que le régime de retraite. Ce décret demeure applicable jusqu'à l'adoption du premier décret pris en application de l'article 175 de la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires (L.R.Q., chapitre T-16) édicté par l'article 1 de la présente loi.

32. Malgré les articles 2 à 8 de la présente loi, le Comité de la rémunération des juges n'exerce ses attributions eu égard aux juges de paix magistrats qu'à compter du moment où il sera procédé à la nomination des membres du comité qui sera formé en 2007 à l'égard des juges de la Cour du Québec et des cours municipales

II. Questions constitutionnelles

La Juge en chef a formulé les questions constitutionnelles suivantes le 18 août 2015 :

1. Les articles 27, 30 et 32 de la Loi modifiant la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires et d'autres dispositions législatives eu égard au statut des juges de paix, L.Q. 2004, c. 12, contreviennent-ils au principe d'indépendance judiciaire garanti par :

   a) la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 ou

   b) l'alinéa 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés?

2. Dans l'affirmative, quant à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, s'agit-il d'une atteinte portée par une règle de droit dans des limites qui sont raisonnables et dont la justification peut se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique suivant l'article premier de la Charte?

3. Does s. 178 of the Courts of Justice Act, CQLR, c. T-16, as amended by the Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and other legislative provisions as regards the status of justices of the peace, S.Q. 2004, c. 12, violate the principle of judicial independence guaranteed by:

   (a) the Constitution Act, 1867 or

   (b) section 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

4. If so, in respect of s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, is the infringement a reasonable limit prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society under s. 1 of the Charter?

5. Does the Décret 932-2008, (2008) 140 G.O. 2, 5681, concerning the pay and other working conditions of presiding justices of the peace, violate the principle of judicial independence guaranteed by:

   (a) the Constitution Act, 1867 or

   (b) section 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

6. If so, in respect of s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, is the infringement a reasonable limit prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society under s. 1 of the Charter?

We answer the constitutional questions as follows:

Question 1: Sections 27, 30 and 32 of the Act violate the principle of judicial independence.

Question 2: No.

Question 3: No.

Question 4: It is unnecessary to answer this question.

Question 5: No.

Question 6: It is unnecessary to answer this question.

3. L'article 178 de la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires, RLRQ, c. T-16, tel que modifié par la Loi modifiant la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires et d'autres dispositions législatives eu égard au statut des juges de paix, L.Q. 2004, c. 12, contrevient-il au principe d'indépendance judiciaire garanti par :

   a) la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 ou

   b) l'alinéa 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés?

4. Dans l'affirmative, quant à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, s'agit-il d'une atteinte portée par une règle de droit dans des limites qui sont raisonnables et dont la justification peut se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique suivant l'article premier de la Charte?

5. Le Décret 932-2008, (2008) 140 G.O. 2, 5681, concernant le traitement et les autres conditions de travail des juges de paix magistrats, contrevient-il au principe d'indépendance judiciaire garanti par :

   a) la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 ou

   b) l'alinéa 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés?

6. Dans l'affirmative, quant à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, s'agit-il d'une atteinte portée par une règle de droit dans des limites qui sont raisonnables et dont la justification peut se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique suivant l'article premier de la Charte?

Nous répondons ainsi aux questions constitutionnelles :

Première question : Les articles 27, 30 et 32 de la Loi contreviennent au principe de l'indépendance judiciaire.

Deuxième question : Non.

Troisième question : Non.

Quatrième question : Il n'est pas nécessaire de répondre à cette question.

Cinquième question : Non.

Sixième question : Il n'est pas nécessaire de répondre à cette question.

Appeal allowed in part with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants: Lavery, de Billy, Montréal.

Solicitor for the respondents: Attorney General of Quebec, Québec.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Canada: Attorney General of Canada, Montréal and Ottawa.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Ontario: Attorney General of Ontario, Toronto.

Solicitors for the intervener Conférence des juges de la Cour du Québec: Casavant Mercier, Montréal.

Solicitors for the intervener the Association of Justices of the Peace of Ontario: Lenczner Slaght Royce Smith Griffin, Toronto.

Pourvoi accueilli en partie avec dépens.

Procureurs des appelants : Lavery, de Billy, Montréal.

Procureure des intimées : Procureure générale du Québec, Québec.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général du Canada : Procureur général du Canada, Montréal et Ottawa.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Ontario : Procureur général de l'Ontario, Toronto.

Procureurs de l'intervenante la Conférence des juges de la Cour du Québec : Casavant Mercier, Montréal.

Procureurs de l'intervenante l'Association des juges de paix de l'Ontario : Lenczner Slaght Royce Smith Griffin, Toronto.

Delgamuukw, also known as Earl Muldoe, suing on his own behalf and on behalf of all the members of the Houses of Delgamuukw and Haaxw (and others suing on their own behalf and on behalf of thirty-eight Gitksan Houses and twelve Wet'suwet'en Houses as shown in Schedule 1) Appellants/ Respondents on the cross-appeal

v.

Her Majesty The Queen in Right of the Province of British Columbia Respondent/ Appellant on the cross-appeal

and

The Attorney General of Canada Respondent

and

The First Nations Summit, the Musqueam Nation et al. (as shown in Schedule 2), the Westbank First Nation, the B.C. Cattlemen's Association et al. (as shown in Schedule 3), Skeena Cellulose Inc., Alcan Aluminum Ltd. Interveners

INDEXED AS: DELGAMUUKW v. BRITISH COLUMBIA

File No.: 23799.

1997: June 16, 17; 1997: December 11.

Present: Lamer C.J. and La Forest, L'Heureux-Dubé, Sopinka,* Cory, McLachlin and Major JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Constitutional law — Aboriginal rights — Aboriginal land title — Claim made for large tract — Content of aboriginal title — How aboriginal title protected by s. 35(1) of Constitution Act, 1982 — What required to *Sopinka J. took no part in this judgment.

Delgamuukw, connu également sous le nom d'Earl Muldoe, en son propre nom et au nom de tous les membres des maisons Delgamuukw et Haaxw (et d'autres personnes en leur propre nom et au nom des membres de trente-huit maisons Gitksan et de douze maisons Wet'suwet'en, selon ce qui est indiqué à l'annexe 1) Appelants/ Intimés dans le pourvoi incident

c.

Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de la province de la Colombie-Britannique Intimée/ Appelante dans le pourvoi incident

et

Le procureur général du Canada Intimé

et

Le First Nations Summit, la Nation Musqueam et autres (selon ce qui est indiqué à l'annexe 2), la Première nation de Westbank, la B.C. Cattlemen's Association et autres (selon ce qui est indiqué à l'annexe 3), Skeena Cellulose Inc., Alcan Aluminium Ltée Intervenants

RÉPERTORIÉ: DELGAMUUKW c. COLOMBIE-BRITANNIQUE

N° du greffe: 23799.

1997: 16 et 17 juin; 1997: 11 décembre.

Présents: Le juge en chef Lamer et les juges La Forest, L'Heureux-Dubé, Sopinka*, Cory, McLachlin et Major.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE LA COLOMBIE-BRITANNIQUE

Droit constitutionnel — Droits ancestraux — Titre aborigène sur des terres — Revendication d'un vaste territoire — Contenu du titre aborigène — Comment l'art. 35(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982 protègeprove aboriginal title — Whether claim to self-government made out — Whether province could extinguish aboriginal rights after 1871, either under own jurisdiction or through the operation of s. 88 of the Indian Act (incorporating provincial laws of general application by reference) — Constitution Act, 1982, s. 35(1) — Indian Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. I-5, s. 88.

*Le juge Sopinka n'a pas pris part au jugement.

Constitutional law — Aboriginal rights — Aboriginal land title — Evidence — Oral history and native law and tradition — Weight to be given evidence — Ability of Court to interfere with trial judge's factual findings.

Courts — Procedure — Land claims — Aboriginal title and self-government — Claim altered but no formal amendments to pleadings made — Whether pleadings precluded the Court from entertaining claims.

The appellants, all Gitksan or Wet'suwet'en hereditary chiefs, both individually and on behalf of their "Houses", claimed separate portions of 58,000 square kilometres in British Columbia. For the purpose of the claim, this area was divided into 133 individual territories, claimed by the 71 Houses. This represents all of the Wet'suwet'en people, and all but 12 of the Gitksan Houses. Their claim was originally for "ownership" of the territory and "jurisdiction" over it. (At this Court, this was transformed into, primarily, a claim for aboriginal title over the land in question.) British Columbia counterclaimed for a declaration that the appellants have no right or interest in and to the territory or alternatively, that the appellants' cause of action ought to be for compensation from the Government of Canada.

At trial, the appellants' claim was based on their historical use and "ownership" of one or more of the territories. In addition, the Gitksan Houses have an "adaawk" which is a collection of sacred oral tradition about their ancestors, histories and territories. The Wet'suwet'en each have a "kungax" which is a spiritual song or dance or performance which ties them to their land. Both of these were entered as evidence on behalf of the appellants. The most significant evidence of spiritual connection between the Houses and their territory t-il le titre aborigène? — Quels sont les éléments de preuve requis pour établir le titre aborigène? — Le bien-fondé de la revendication de l'autonomie gouvernementale a-t-il été établi? — La province pouvait-elle, après 1871, éteindre des droits ancestraux soit par l'exercice de sa propre compétence soit par l'effet de l'art. 88 de la Loi sur les Indiens (qui incorpore par renvoi les lois provinciales d'application générale)? — Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, art. 35(1) — Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. (1985), ch. I-5, art. 88.

Droit constitutionnel — Droits ancestraux — Titre aborigène sur des terres — Preuve — Récits oraux et règles de droit et traditions autochtones — Poids à donner aux éléments de preuve — Pouvoir d'intervention de la Cour quant aux conclusions de fait du juge de première instance.

Tribunaux — Procédure — Revendications territoriales — Titre aborigène et autonomie gouvernementale — Revendication modifiée mais sans modification formelle des actes de procédure — Les actes de procédure empêchent-ils la Cour d'entendre les revendications?

Les appelants, tous des chefs héréditaires Wet'suwet'en ou Gitksan, revendiquent tant en leur propre nom qu'au nom de leurs «maisons» des parties distinctes d'un territoire de 58 000 kilomètres carrés situé en Colombie-Britannique. Aux fins de la revendication, ce grand territoire a été divisé en 133 territoires distincts, revendiqués par les 71 maisons. Y sont représentés tous les Wet'suwet'en et toutes les maisons Gitksan, à l'exception de 12. Initialement, les appelants revendiquaient la «propriété» du territoire et la «compétence» sur celuici. (Devant la Cour, cette revendication a changé et est devenue principalement la revendication d'un titre aborigène sur le territoire en question.) La Colombie-Britannique a présenté une demande reconventionnelle dans laquelle elle sollicite une déclaration portant que les appelants n'ont aucun droit ou intérêt dans le territoire, ou, subsidiairement, que la cause d'action des appelants devrait être l'obtention d'une indemnité de la part du gouvernement du Canada.

Au procès, les appelants ont fondé leur revendication sur la «propriété» et l'utilisation historiques d'un ou de plusieurs des territoires. En outre, les maisons Gitksan ont un «adaawk», c'est-à-dire un ensemble de traditions orales sacrées au sujet de leurs ancêtres, de leur histoire et de leurs territoires. Chaque maison Wet'suwet'en possède un «kungax», c'est-à-dire un chant, une danse ou une représentation spirituelle qui les rattache à leur territoire. Ces deux éléments ont été déposés en preuve au nom des appelants. Le signe le plus important du lien was a feast hall where the Gitksan and Wet'suwet'en peoples tell and retell their stories and identify their territories to remind themselves of the sacred connection that they have with their lands. The feast has a ceremonial purpose but is also used for making important decisions.

spirituel entre les différentes maisons et leur territoire est la salle des célébrations. C'est là que les Wet'suwet'en et les Gitksan disent et redisent leurs récits et identifient leurs territoires afin de se rappeler le lien sacré qu'ils entretiennent avec leurs terres. Ces célébrations ont une fin rituelle, mais elles sont aussi l'occasion de prise de décisions importantes.

The trial judge did not accept the appellants' evidence of oral history of attachment to the land. He dismissed the action against Canada, dismissed the plaintiffs' claims for ownership and jurisdiction and for aboriginal rights in the territory, granted a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to use unoccupied or vacant land subject to the general law of the province, dismissed the claim for damages and dismissed the province's counterclaim. No order for costs was made. On appeal, the original claim was altered in two different ways. First, the claims for ownership and jurisdiction were replaced with claims for aboriginal title and self-government, respectively. Second, the individual claims by each House were amalgamated into two communal claims, one advanced on behalf of each nation. There were no formal amendments to the pleadings to this effect. The appeal was dismissed by a majority of the Court of Appeal.

Le juge de première instance n'a pas accepté les récits oraux que les appelants présentaient comme éléments de preuve de leur attachement au territoire. Il a rejeté l'action contre le Canada, il a rejeté les revendications, par les demandeurs, de la propriété du territoire, de la compétence sur celui-ci ou de droits ancestraux à son égard, il a accordé une déclaration portant que les demandeurs avaient le droit d'utiliser toute terre inoccupée ou vacante, sous réserve du respect des lois d'application générale de la province, il a rejeté la demande de dommages-intérêts et il a rejeté la demande reconventionnelle de la province. Il n'a rendu aucune ordonnance concernant les dépens. En appel, la revendication initiale a été modifiée de deux façons. Premièrement, les revendications relatives à la propriété des territoires et à la compétence sur ceux-ci ont été remplacées respectivement par la revendication du titre aborigène et la revendication de l'autonomie gouvernementale. Deuxièmement, les revendications individuelles présentées par chaque maison ont été fusionnées en deux revendications collectives, une au nom de chaque nation. Aucune modification en ce sens n'a été apportée formellement aux actes de procédure. L'appel a été rejeté par la Cour d'appel à la majorité.

The principal issues on the appeal, some of which raised a number of sub-issues, were as follows: (1) whether the pleadings precluded the Court from entertaining claims for aboriginal title and self-government; (2) what was the ability of this Court to interfere with the factual findings made by the trial judge; (3) what is the content of aboriginal title, how is it protected by s. 35(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, and what is required for its proof; (4) whether the appellants made out a claim to self-government; and, (5) whether the province had the power to extinguish aboriginal rights after 1871, either under its own jurisdiction or through the operation of s. 88 of the Indian Act.

Les principales questions dans le pourvoi sont les suivantes: (1) Les actes de procédure empêchent-ils la Cour d'examiner les revendications relatives au titre aborigène et à l'autonomie gouvernementale? (2) Quel pouvoir notre Cour a-t-elle de modifier les conclusions de fait du juge de première instance? (3) Quel est le contenu du titre aborigène, comment est-il protégé par le par. 35(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982 et comment fait-on la preuve de son existence? (4) Les appelants ont-ils établi le bien-fondé de leur revendication de l'autonomie gouvernementale? (5) La province avait-elle, après 1871, le pouvoir d'éteindre des droits ancestraux soit par l'exercice de sa propre compétence soit par l'effet de l'art. 88 de la Loi sur les Indiens?

Held: The appeal should be allowed in part and the cross-appeal should be dismissed.

Arrêt: Le pourvoi est accueilli en partie et le pourvoi incident est rejeté.

Whether the Claims Were Properly Before the Court

Per Lamer C.J. and Cory, McLachlin, and Major JJ.: The claims were properly before the Court. Although the pleadings were not formally amended, the trial judge did allow a de facto amendment to permit a claim for aboriginal rights other than ownership and jurisdiction. The respondents did not appeal this de facto amendment and the trial judge's decision on this point must accordingly stand.

No amendment was made with respect to the amalgamation of the individual claims brought by the individual Gitksan and Wet'suwet'en Houses into two collective claims, one by each nation, for aboriginal title and self-government. The collective claims were simply not in issue at trial and to frame the case on appeal in a different manner would retroactively deny the respondents the opportunity to know the appellants' case.

A new trial is necessary. First, the defect in the pleadings prevented the Court from considering the merits of this appeal. The parties at a new trial would decide whether any amendment was necessary to make the pleadings conform with the other evidence. Then, too, appellate courts, absent a palpable and overriding error, should not substitute their own findings of fact even when the trial judge misapprehended the law which was applied to those facts. Appellate intervention is warranted, however, when the trial court fails to appreciate the evidentiary difficulties inherent in adjudicating aboriginal claims when applying the rules of evidence and interpreting the evidence before it.

Per La Forest and L'Heureux-Dubé JJ.: The amalgamation of the appellants' individual claims technically prevents a consideration of the merits. However, there is a more substantive problem with the pleadings. The appellants sought a declaration of "aboriginal title" but attempted, in essence, to prove that they had complete control over the territory. It follows that what the appellants sought by way of declaration and what they set out

La Cour était-elle régulièrement saisie des revendications?

Le juge en chef Lamer et les juges Cory, McLachlin et Major: La Cour était régulièrement saisie des revendications. Même si les actes de procédure n'ont pas été formellement modifiés, le juge de première instance a bel et bien accepté une modification de facto pour permettre la revendication de droits ancestraux autres que la propriété et la compétence. Les intimés n'ont pas interjeté appel contre cette modification de facto et la décision du juge de première instance sur ce point doit être maintenue.

Aucune modification n'a été apportée en ce qui a trait à la fusion des revendications individuelles présentées par les maisons Wet'suwet'en et Gitksan en deux revendications collectives, une pour chaque nation, sollicitant un titre aborigène et l'autonomie gouvernementale. Les revendications collectives n'étaient tout simplement pas en litige en première instance, et redéfinir le litige en appel aurait pour effet de nier rétroactivement aux intimés la possibilité de savoir quelle est la cause des appelants.

Il est nécessaire de tenir un nouveau procès. Premièrement, le vice dans les actes de procédure a empêché la Cour d'examiner le fond du pourvoi. Il reviendra aux parties à un nouveau procès de se demander si une modification est nécessaire pour rendre les actes de procédure conformes à la preuve. En outre, sauf erreur manifeste et dominante, les cours d'appel ne devraient pas substituer leurs propres conclusions de fait à celles du juge de première instance, même lorsque ce dernier a mal saisi le droit qu'il a appliqué aux faits en question. Par contre, une cour d'appel est justifiée d'intervenir dans le cas où le juge de première instance n'a pas tenu compte des difficultés de preuve inhérentes à l'examen des revendications de droits ancestraux, lorsqu'il a appliqué les règles de preuve et a interprété la preuve qui lui était présentée.

Les juges La Forest et L'Heureux-Dubé: La fusion des revendications individuelles des appelants a empêché, sur le plan de la forme, la Cour d'examiner le fond de l'affaire. Cependant, les actes de procédure posent un problème encore plus substantiel. Même si les appelants ont sollicité un jugement déclarant l'existence d'un «titre aborigène», ils ont essentiellement tenté d'établir qu'ils exerçaient un contrôle complet sur le territoire en question. Il s'ensuit que ce que les appelants ont demandé à la Cour de leur reconnaître, par voie de jugement déclaratoire, et ce qu'ils se sont efforcés d'établir to prove by way of the evidence were two different matters. A new trial should be ordered.

McLachlin J. was in substantial agreement.

The Ability of the Court to Interfere with the Trial Judge's Factual Findings

Per Lamer C.J. and Cory, McLachlin and Major JJ.: The factual findings made at trial could not stand because the trial judge's treatment of the various kinds of oral histories did not satisfy the principles laid down in R. v. Van der Peet. The oral histories were used in an attempt to establish occupation and use of the disputed territory which is an essential requirement for aboriginal title. The trial judge refused to admit or gave no independent weight to these oral histories and then concluded that the appellants had not demonstrated the requisite degree of occupation for "ownership". Had the oral histories been correctly assessed, the conclusions on these issues of fact might have been very different.

The Content of Aboriginal Title, How It Is Protected by s. 35(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, and the Requirements Necessary to Prove It

Per Lamer C.J. and Cory, McLachlin and Major JJ.: Aboriginal title encompasses the right to exclusive use and occupation of the land held pursuant to that title for a variety of purposes, which need not be aspects of those aboriginal practices, customs and traditions which are integral to distinctive aboriginal cultures. The protected uses must not be irreconcilable with the nature of the group's attachment to that land.

Aboriginal title is sui generis, and so distinguished from other proprietary interests, and characterized by several dimensions. It is inalienable and cannot be transferred, sold or surrendered to anyone other than the Crown. Another dimension of aboriginal title is its sources: its recognition by the Royal Proclamation, 1763 and the relationship between the common law which recognizes occupation as proof of possession and systems of aboriginal law pre-existing assertion of British sovereignty. Finally, aboriginal title is held communally.

par la preuve, étaient deux choses différentes. La tenue d'un nouveau procès doit être ordonnée.

Le juge McLachlin est largement en accord avec ces motifs.

Le pouvoir de la Cour de modifier les conclusions de fait du juge de première instance

Le juge en chef Lamer et les juges Cory, McLachlin et Major: Les conclusions de fait tirées en première instance ne pouvaient être maintenues en raison du fait que le traitement accordé aux divers types de récits oraux par le juge de première instance ne respecte pas les principes établis dans R. c. Van der Peet. Ces récits ont été invoqués pour tenter d'établir l'occupation et l'utilisation du territoire contesté, condition essentielle à l'existence du titre aborigène. Après avoir refusé d'admettre ces récits oraux ou de leur accorder quelque valeur probante indépendante que ce soit, le juge de première instance est arrivé à la conclusion que les appelants n'avaient pas démontré l'existence du degré d'occupation requis du territoire pour fonder la «propriété» de celui-ci. Si le juge du procès avait apprécié correctement les récits oraux, ses conclusions sur ces questions de fait auraient pu être très différentes.

Le contenu du titre aborigène, la façon dont il est protégé par le par. 35(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982 et les exigences en matière de preuve de son existence

Le juge en chef Lamer et les juges Cory, McLachlin et Major: Le titre aborigène comprend le droit d'utiliser et d'occuper de façon exclusive les terres détenues en vertu de ce titre pour différentes fins qui ne doivent pas nécessairement être des aspects de coutumes, pratiques et traditions autochtones faisant partie intégrante d'une culture autochtone distinctive. Ces utilisations protégées ne doivent pas être incompatibles avec la nature de l'attachement qu'a le groupe concerné pour ces terres.

Le titre aborigène est un droit sui generis; il se distingue de ce fait des autres intérêts de propriété et est caractérisé par différentes dimensions. Le titre aborigène est inaliénable et ne peut être transféré, cédé ou vendu à personne d'autre que la Couronne. Les origines du titre aborigène constituent une autre dimension de celui-ci: sa reconnaissance par la Proclamation royale de 1763 et le rapport entre la common law, qui reconnaît l'occupation comme preuve de la possession en droit, et les systèmes juridiques autochtones qui existaient avant l'affirmation de la souveraineté britannique. Finalement, le titre aborigène est détenu collectivement.

The exclusive right to use the land is not restricted to the right to engage in activities which are aspects of aboriginal practices, customs and traditions integral to the claimant group's distinctive aboriginal culture. Canadian jurisprudence on aboriginal title frames the "right to occupy and possess" in broad terms and, significantly, is not qualified by the restriction that use be tied to practice, custom or tradition. The nature of the Indian interest in reserve land which has been found to be the same as the interest in tribal lands is very broad and incorporates present-day needs. Finally, aboriginal title encompasses mineral rights and lands held pursuant to aboriginal title should be capable of exploitation. Such a use is certainly not a traditional one.

The content of aboriginal title contains an inherent limit in that lands so held cannot be used in a manner that is irreconcilable with the nature of the claimants' attachment to those lands. This inherent limit arises because the relationship of an aboriginal community with its land should not be prevented from continuing into the future. Occupancy is determined by reference to the activities that have taken place on the land and the uses to which the land has been put by the particular group. If lands are so occupied, there will exist a special bond between the group and the land in question such that the land will be part of the definition of the group's distinctive culture. Land held by virtue of aboriginal title may not be alienated because the land has an inherent and unique value in itself, which is enjoyed by the community with aboriginal title to it. The community cannot put the land to uses which would destroy that value. Finally, the importance of the continuity of the relationship between an aboriginal community and its land, and the non-economic or inherent value of that land, should not be taken to detract from the possibility of surrender to the Crown in exchange for valuable consideration. On the contrary, the idea of surrender reinforces the conclusion that aboriginal title is limited. If aboriginal peoples wish to use their lands in a way that aboriginal title does not permit, then they must surrender those lands and convert them into non-title lands to do so.

Aboriginal title at common law was recognized well before 1982 and is accordingly protected in its full form by s. 35(1). The constitutionalization of common law aboriginal rights, however, does not mean that those rights exhaust the content of s. 35(1). The existence of an aboriginal right at common law is sufficient, but not

Le droit exclusif d'utiliser les terres ne comprend pas simplement le droit d'exercer des activités qui sont des aspects de coutumes, pratiques et traditions autochtones faisant partie intégrante de la culture distinctive du groupe autochtone qui revendique le droit. La jurisprudence canadienne relative au titre aborigène définit le «droit d'occuper et de posséder» en termes généraux et, fait important, ne l'assortit pas d'une réserve le limitant aux utilisations liées à des coutumes, pratiques ou traditions. La nature du droit des Indiens sur les terres des réserves, qui a été déclaré être le même que leur droit sur les terres tribales, est très générale et intègre les besoins actuels des collectivités autochtones. Finalement, le titre aborigène comprend les droits miniers, et les terres détenues en vertu d'un titre aborigène devraient pouvoir être exploitées pour ces ressources, ce qui ne constitue certes pas une utilisation traditionnelle.

Le contenu du titre aborigène comporte une limite intrinsèque, savoir que les terres détenues en vertu d'un titre aborigène ne peuvent pas être utilisées d'une manière incompatible avec la nature de l'attachement qu'ont les revendicateurs pour ces terres. Cette limite intrinsèque découle du fait que rien ne devrait empêcher ce rapport de continuer dans le futur. L'occupation est définie en fonction des activités qui ont été exercées sur les terres et des utilisations qui ont été faites de celles-ci par le groupe en question. Si des terres font l'objet d'une telle occupation, il existera entre ce groupe et les terres visées un lien spécial tel que les terres feront partie intégrante de la définition de la culture distinctive du groupe. Les terres détenues en vertu d'un titre aborigène sont inaliénables parce qu'elles ont en elles-mêmes une valeur intrinsèque et unique dont jouit la collectivité qui possède le titre aborigène sur celles-ci. La collectivité ne peut pas faire de ces terres des utilisations qui détruiraient cette valeur. Enfin, l'importance de la continuité du rapport qu'entretient une collectivité autochtone avec ses terres et la valeur non économique ou intrinsèque de celles-ci ne devraient pas être considérées comme faisant obstacle à la possibilité d'une cession à la Couronne moyennant contrepartie de valeur. Au contraire, l'idée de cession renforce la conclusion que le titre aborigène est limité. Si les autochtones désirent utiliser leurs terres d'une manière que ne permet pas le titre, ils doivent alors les céder et les convertir en terres non visées par un titre aborigène.

Le titre aborigène a été reconnu en common law bien avant 1982 et est par conséquent protégé dans sa forme complète par le par. 35(1). Toutefois, la constitutionnalisation par le par. 35(1) des droits ancestraux reconnus en common law ne signifie pas que ces droits épuisent le contenu du par. 35(1). L'existence d'un droit ancestral necessary, for the recognition and affirmation of that right by s. 35(1).

Constitutionally recognized aboriginal rights fall along a spectrum with respect to their degree of connection with the land. At the one end are those aboriginal rights which are practices, customs and traditions integral to the distinctive aboriginal culture of the group claiming the right but where the use and occupation of the land where the activity is taking place is not sufficient to support a claim of title to the land. In the middle are activities which, out of necessity, take place on land and indeed, might be intimately related to a particular piece of land. Although an aboriginal group may not be able to demonstrate title to the land, it may nevertheless have a site-specific right to engage in a particular activity. At the other end of the spectrum is aboriginal title itself which confers more than the right to engage in site-specific activities which are aspects of the practices, customs and traditions of distinctive aboriginal cultures. Site-specific rights can be made out even if title cannot. Because aboriginal rights can vary with respect to their degree of connection with the land, some aboriginal groups may be unable to make out a claim to title, but will nevertheless possess aboriginal rights that are recognized and affirmed by s. 35(1), including site-specific rights to engage in particular activities.

Aboriginal title is a right to the land itself. That land may be used, subject to the inherent limitations of aboriginal title, for a variety of activities, none of which need be individually protected as aboriginal rights under s. 35(1). Those activities are parasitic on the underlying title. Section 35(1), since its purpose is to reconcile the prior presence of aboriginal peoples with the assertion of Crown sovereignty, must recognize and affirm both aspects of that prior presence — first, the occupation of land, and second, the prior social organization and distinctive cultures of aboriginal peoples on that land.

The test for the identification of aboriginal rights to engage in particular activities and the test for the identification of aboriginal title, although broadly similar, are reconnu en common law est donc suffisante, mais pas nécessaire, pour la reconnaissance et la confirmation de ce droit par le par. 35(1).

Les droits ancestraux reconnus et confirmés par le par. 35(1) s'étalent le long d'un spectre, en fonction de leur degré de rattachement avec le territoire visé. À une extrémité du spectre, il y a le cas des droits ancestraux qui sont des coutumes, pratiques et traditions faisant partie intégrante de la culture autochtone distinctive du groupe qui revendique le droit en question mais où l'occupation et l'utilisation du territoire sur lequel l'activité est pratiquée sont insuffisantes pour étayer la revendication du titre sur celui-ci. Au milieu du spectre, on trouve les activités qui, par nécessité, sont pratiquées sur le territoire et, de fait, pourraient même être étroitement rattachées à une parcelle de terrain particulière. Bien qu'un groupe autochtone puisse être incapable de démontrer l'existence d'un titre sur le territoire, il peut quand même avoir le droit — spécifique à un site — de s'adonner à une activité particulière. À l'autre extrémité du spectre, il y a le titre aborigène proprement dit, qui confère quelque chose de plus que le droit d'exercer des activités spécifiques à un site qui sont des aspects de coutumes, pratiques et traditions de cultures autochtones distinctives. L'existence de droits spécifiques à un site peut être établie même si l'existence d'un titre ne peut pas l'être. Étant donné que les droits ancestraux peuvent varier en fonction de leur degré de rattachement au territoire, il est possible que certains groupes autochtones soient incapables d'établir le bien-fondé de leur revendication d'un titre, mais qu'ils possèdent néanmoins des droits ancestraux reconnus et confirmés par le par. 35(1), notamment des droits spécifiques à un site d'exercer des activités particulières.

Le titre aborigène est le droit au territoire lui-même. Sous réserve des limites inhérentes au titre aborigène, ce territoire peut être utilisé pour diverses activités, dont aucune ne doit nécessairement être protégée individuellement en tant que droit ancestral prévu au par. 35(1). Ces activités sont des parasites du titre sous-jacent. Comme l'objet du par. 35(1) est de concilier la présence antérieure des peuples autochtones en Amérique du Nord avec l'affirmation de la souveraineté de la Couronne, cette disposition doit reconnaître et confirmer les deux aspects de cette préexistence, savoir l'occupation du territoire, d'une part, et l'organisation sociale antérieure et les cultures distinctives des peuples autochtones habitant ce territoire, d'autre part.

Bien que le critère applicable pour déterminer l'existence de droits ancestraux autorisant l'exercice d'activités particulières et le critère applicable pour détermidistinct in two ways. First, under the test for aboriginal title, the requirement that the land be integral to the distinctive culture of the claimants is subsumed by the requirement of occupancy. Second, whereas the time for the identification of aboriginal rights is the time of first contact, the time for the identification of aboriginal title is the time at which the Crown asserted sovereignty over the land.

In order to establish a claim to aboriginal title, the aboriginal group asserting the claim must establish that it occupied the lands in question at the time at which the Crown asserted sovereignty over the land subject to the title. In the context of aboriginal title, sovereignty is the appropriate time period to consider for several reasons. First, from a theoretical standpoint, aboriginal title arises out of prior occupation of the land by aboriginal peoples and out of the relationship between the common law and pre-existing systems of aboriginal law. Aboriginal title is a burden on the Crown's underlying title. The Crown, however, did not gain this title until it asserted sovereignty and it makes no sense to speak of a burden on the underlying title before that title existed. Aboriginal title crystallized at the time sovereignty was asserted. Second, aboriginal title does not raise the problem of distinguishing between distinctive, integral aboriginal practices, customs and traditions and those influenced or introduced by European contact. Under common law, the act of occupation or possession is sufficient to ground aboriginal title and it is not necessary to prove that the land was a distinctive or integral part of the aboriginal society before the arrival of Europeans. Finally, the date of sovereignty is more certain than the date of first contact.

Both the common law and the aboriginal perspective on land should be taken into account in establishing the proof of occupancy. At common law, the fact of physical occupation is proof of possession at law, which in turn will ground title to the land. Physical occupation may be established in a variety of ways, ranging from the construction of dwellings through cultivation and enclosure of fields to regular use of definite tracts of land for hunting, fishing or otherwise exploiting its resources. In considering whether occupation sufficient ner l'existence d'un titre aborigène comportent de grandes similitudes, ils se distinguent l'un de l'autre de deux façons: premièrement, dans le cadre du critère relatif au titre aborigène, l'exigence que le territoire fasse partie intégrante de la culture distincte des demandeurs est subsumée sous l'exigence d'occupation; deuxièmement, alors que c'est le moment du premier contact avec les Européens qui est le moment pertinent pour la détermination des droits ancestraux, dans le cas du titre aborigène, c'est le moment de l'affirmation par la Couronne de sa souveraineté sur le territoire.

Pour établir le bien-fondé de la revendication d'un titre aborigène, le groupe autochtone qui revendique le titre doit démontrer qu'il occupait les terres en question au moment où la Couronne a affirmé sa souveraineté sur ces terres. Lorsqu'il est question de titre aborigène, la période de l'affirmation de la souveraineté est celle qui doit être prise en considération, et ce pour plusieurs raisons. Premièrement, d'un point de vue théorique, le titre aborigène découle de l'occupation antérieure du territoire par les peuples autochtones et du rapport entre la common law et les régimes juridiques autochtones préexistants. Le titre aborigène grève le titre sous-jacent de la Couronne. Cependant, celle-ci n'a acquis ce titre qu'à compter du moment où elle a affirmé sa souveraineté sur le territoire en question et il serait absurde de parler d'une charge grevant le titre sous-jacent avant que celui-ci ait existé. Le titre aborigène s'est cristallisé au moment de l'affirmation de la souveraineté. Deuxièmement, le titre aborigène ne soulève pas le problème que pose la distinction entre les coutumes, pratiques et traditions distinctives faisant partie intégrante d'une société autochtone et celles qui ont été introduites par suite du contact avec les Européens ou influencées par celui-ci. En vertu de la common law, le fait de l'occupation ou de la possession suffit pour fonder un titre aborigène, et il n'est pas nécessaire de prouver que le territoire en question faisait partie intégrante de la société autochtone visée avant l'arrivée des Européens ou qu'il était un élément distinctif de celle-ci. Finalement, la date de l'affirmation de la souveraineté a un caractère plus certain que celle du premier contact avec les Européens.

Tant la common law que le point de vue des autochtones à l'égard du territoire devraient être pris en compte dans la démonstration de l'occupation. En common law, l'occupation physique fait preuve de la possession en droit, fait qui à son tour fondera le droit au titre sur les terres. L'occupation physique peut être prouvée par différents faits, allant de la construction de bâtiments à l'utilisation régulière de secteurs bien définis du territoire pour y pratiquer la chasse, la pêche ou d'autres types d'exploitation de ses ressources, en pas-to ground title is established, the group's size, manner of life, material resources, and technological abilities, and the character of the lands claimed must be taken into account. Given the occupancy requirement, it was not necessary to include as part of the test for aboriginal title whether a group demonstrated a connection with the piece of land as being of central significance to its distinctive culture. Ultimately, the question of physical occupation is one of fact to be determined at trial.

sant par la délimitation et la culture de champs. Dans l'examen de la question de savoir si on a fait la preuve d'une occupation suffisante pour fonder un titre aborigène, il faut tenir compte de la taille, du mode de vie, des ressources matérielles et des habiletés technologiques du groupe concerné, ainsi que de la nature des terres revendiquées. Compte tenu de l'exigence d'occupation, il n'est pas nécessaire d'inclure dans le critère relatif au titre aborigène la question de savoir si le groupe concerné a démontré que le lien qui le rattache au territoire visé est d'une importance fondamentale pour sa culture distinctive. En définitive, la preuve de l'occupation physique est une question de fait à trancher au procès.

If present occupation is relied on as proof of occupation pre-sovereignty, there must be a continuity between present and pre-sovereignty occupation. Since conclusive evidence of pre-sovereignty occupation may be difficult, an aboriginal community may provide evidence of present occupation as proof of pre-sovereignty occupation in support of a claim to aboriginal title. An unbroken chain of continuity need not be established between present and prior occupation. The fact that the nature of occupation has changed would not ordinarily preclude a claim for aboriginal title, as long as a substantial connection between the people and the land is maintained. The only limitation on this principle might be that the land not be used in ways which are inconsistent with continued use by future generations of aboriginals.

Si l'occupation actuelle est invoquée comme preuve de l'occupation antérieure à l'affirmation de la souveraineté, il faut qu'il y ait une continuité entre l'occupation antérieure à l'affirmation de la souveraineté et l'occupation actuelle. Étant donné qu'il peut s'avérer difficile d'apporter des éléments de preuve concluants d'une occupation antérieure à l'affirmation de la souveraineté, une collectivité autochtone peut produire, au soutien de la revendication d'un titre aborigène, des éléments de preuve de l'occupation actuelle comme preuve de l'occupation antérieure à l'affirmation de la souveraineté. Il n'est pas nécessaire de faire la preuve d'une continuité parfaite entre l'occupation actuelle et l'occupation antérieure. Le fait que la nature de l'occupation ait changé ne fera généralement pas obstacle à la revendication d'un titre aborigène, dans la mesure où un lien substantiel entre le peuple et le territoire en question a été maintenu. La seule restriction à ce principe pourrait être qu'il ne soit pas fait du territoire des utilisations incompatibles avec son usage continu par les générations autochtones futures.

At sovereignty, occupation must have been exclusive. This requirement flows from the definition of aboriginal title itself, which is defined in terms of the right to exclusive use and occupation of land. The test must take into account the context of the aboriginal society at the time of sovereignty. The requirement of exclusive occupancy and the possibility of joint title can be reconciled by recognizing that joint title can arise from shared exclusivity. As well, shared, non-exclusive aboriginal rights short of aboriginal title but tied to the land and permitting a number of uses can be established if exclusivity cannot be proved. The common law should develop to recognize aboriginal rights as they were recognized by either de facto practice or by aboriginal systems of governance.

L'occupation doit avoir été exclusive au moment de l'affirmation de la souveraineté. Cette exigence d'exclusivité découle de la définition même du titre aborigène, défini comme étant le droit d'utiliser et d'occuper de façon exclusive les terres visées. Le critère doit prendre en compte le contexte de la société autochtone au moment de l'affirmation de la souveraineté. Il est possible de concilier l'exigence d'occupation exclusive et l'existence possible d'un titre conjoint en reconnaissant qu'un titre conjoint peut découler d'une exclusivité partagée. De même, l'existence de droits ancestraux non exclusifs partagés ne constituant pas un titre, mais par ailleurs liés au territoire et permettant certaines utilisations, peut être établie, même si l'exclusivité ne peut être prouvée. La common law doit évoluer pour reconnaître les droits ancestraux qui étaient reconnus soit par

Per La Forest and L'Heureux-Dubé JJ.: "Aboriginal title" is based on the continued occupation and use of the land as part of the aboriginal peoples' traditional way of life. This sui generis interest is not equated with fee simple ownership; nor can it be described with reference to traditional property law concepts. It is personal in that it is generally inalienable except to the Crown and, in dealing with this interest, the Crown is subject to a fiduciary obligation to treat the aboriginal peoples fairly. There is reluctance to define more precisely the right of aboriginal peoples to live on their lands as their forefathers had lived.

The approach to defining the aboriginal right of occupancy is highly contextual. A distinction must be made between (1) the recognition of a general right to occupy and possess ancestral lands and (2) the recognition of a discrete right to engage in an aboriginal activity in a particular area. The latter has been defined as the traditional use, by a tribe of Indians, that has continued from pre-contact times of a particular area for a particular purpose. By contrast, a general claim to occupy and possess vast tracts of territory is the right to use the land for a variety of activities related to the aboriginal society's habits and mode of life. As well, in defining the nature of "aboriginal title", reference need not be made to statutory provisions and regulations dealing with reserve lands.

In defining the nature of "aboriginal title", reference need not be made to statutory provisions and regulations dealing specifically with reserve lands. Though the interest of an Indian band in a reserve has been found to be derived from, and to be of the same nature as, the interest of an aboriginal society in its traditional tribal lands, it does not follow that specific statutory provisions governing reserve lands should automatically apply to traditional tribal lands.

The "key" factors for recognizing aboriginal rights under s. 35(1) are met in the present case. First, the nature of an aboriginal claim must be identified precisely with regard to particular practices, customs and traditions. When dealing with a claim of "aboriginal une pratique de facto, soit par un régime de gestion autochtone.

Les juges La Forest et L'Heureux-Dubé: Le «titre aborigène» se fonde sur l'occupation et l'utilisation ininterrompues des terres visées par le peuple autochtone dans le cadre de son mode de vie traditionnel. Ce droit sui generis n'équivaut pas à la propriété en fief simple et il ne peut pas non plus être décrit au moyen des concepts traditionnels du droit des biens. Il est personnel en ce sens qu'il est généralement inaliénable, sauf en faveur de la Couronne qui, dans ses opérations concernant un tel droit, est assujettie à une obligation de fiduciaire, savoir celle de traiter équitablement les peuples autochtones. On hésite à définir avec plus de précision le droit des peuples autochtones de continuer à vivre sur leurs terres comme l'avaient fait leurs ancêtres.

Le point de vue adopté pour définir le droit d'occupation ancestral est éminemment contextuel. Il est nécessaire de faire la distinction entre les deux aspects suivants: (1) la reconnaissance d'un droit général d'occuper et de posséder des terres ancestrales; (2) la reconnaissance d'un droit distinct d'exercer une activité autochtone dans une région particulière. Ce dernier aspect a été défini comme étant l'utilisation traditionnelle — remontant avant l'arrivée des Européens — que fait une tribu indienne d'un territoire donné, à une fin particulière. À l'opposé, une revendication générale visant le droit d'occuper et de posséder de vastes étendues de territoire concerne le droit d'utiliser ces terres pour y exercer différentes activités liées aux habitudes et au mode de vie de la société autochtone concernée. En outre, en définissant la nature du «titre aborigène», il n'est pas nécessaire de se référer aux dispositions législatives et réglementaires concernant les terres des réserves.

En définissant la nature du «titre aborigène», il n'est pas nécessaire de se référer aux dispositions législatives et réglementaires visant spécifiquement les terres des réserves. Même s'il a été jugé que le droit que possède une bande indienne sur une réserve découle du droit de la société autochtone sur ses terres tribales traditionnelles, il ne s'ensuit aucunement que les dispositions législatives particulières régissant les terres des réserves s'appliquent automatiquement aux terres tribales traditionnelles.

Il est satisfait, dans le présent pourvoi, aux facteurs «clés» permettant de reconnaître des droits ancestraux en vertu du par. 35(1). Premièrement, la nature d'une revendication autochtone doit être rattachée précisément à des coutumes, pratiques et traditions particulières. Le title", the court will focus on the occupation and use of the land as part of the aboriginal society's traditional way of life.

Second, an aboriginal society must specify the area that has been continuously used and occupied by identifying general boundaries. Exclusivity means that an aboriginal group must show that a claimed territory is indeed its ancestral territory and not the territory of an unconnected aboriginal society. It is possible that two or more aboriginal groups may have occupied the same territory and therefore a finding of joint occupancy would not be precluded.

Third, the aboriginal right of possession is based on the continued occupation and use of traditional tribal lands since the assertion of Crown sovereignty. However, the date of sovereignty may not be the only relevant time to consider. Continuity may still exist where the present occupation of one area is connected to the pre-sovereignty occupation of another area. Also, aboriginal peoples claiming a right of possession may provide evidence of present occupation as proof of prior occupation. Further, it is not necessary to establish an unbroken chain of continuity.

Fourth, if aboriginal peoples continue to occupy and use the land as part of their traditional way of life, the land is of central significance to them. Aboriginal occupancy refers not only to the presence of aboriginal peoples in villages or permanently settled areas but also to the use of adjacent lands and even remote territories used to pursue a traditional mode of life. Occupancy is part of aboriginal culture in a broad sense and is, therefore, absorbed in the notion of distinctiveness. The Royal Proclamation, 1763 supports this approach to occupancy.

McLachlin J. was in substantial agreement.

Infringements of Aboriginal Title: The Test of Justification

Per Lamer C.J. and Cory, McLachlin and Major JJ.: Constitutionally recognized aboriginal rights are not absolute and may be infringed by the federal and pro-tribunal qui examine la revendication d'un «titre aborigène» se demande principalement si l'occupation et l'utilisation des terres visées faisaient partie du mode de vie traditionnel de la société autochtone concernée.

Deuxièmement, la société autochtone doit spécifier le territoire qui a été utilisé et occupé de façon ininterrompue en en indiquant les limites générales. L'exclusivité signifie que le groupe autochtone doit établir que le territoire qu'il revendique est, en fait, son territoire ancestral et non celui d'une autre société autochtone avec laquelle il n'a aucun lien. Comme il est possible que deux groupes autochtones ou plus aient occupé le même territoire, il est donc possible de conclure à l'existence d'une occupation conjointe.

Troisièmement, le droit de possession ancestral se fonde sur l'occupation et l'utilisation ininterrompues de terres tribales traditionnelles depuis l'affirmation par la Couronne de sa souveraineté. Cependant, il est possible que la date de l'affirmation de la souveraineté ne soit pas le seul moment pertinent dont il faille tenir compte. Il peut encore y avoir continuité lorsque l'occupation actuelle d'une région est liée à l'occupation d'une autre région avant l'affirmation de la souveraineté. En outre, les peuples autochtones qui revendiquent un droit de possession peuvent présenter des éléments de preuve de l'occupation actuelle du territoire visé pour établir son occupation antérieure. De plus, il n'est pas nécessaire de faire la preuve d'une continuité parfaite.

Quatrièmement, si des peuples autochtones continuent d'occuper et d'utiliser le territoire visé dans le cadre de leur mode de vie traditionnel, ce territoire a une importance fondamentale pour eux. La notion d'occupation d'un territoire par des autochtones ne s'entend pas seulement de la présence de peuples autochtones dans des villages ou des établissements permanents, mais également de l'utilisation de terres adjacentes et même de territoires éloignés dans le cadre d'un mode de vie traditionnel. L'occupation constitue un aspect de la culture autochtone prise dans un sens large et s'intègre, par conséquent, à la notion de caractère distinctif. Cette approche relative à la nature de l'occupation est étayée par la Proclamation royale de 1763.

Le juge McLachlin est largement en accord avec ces motifs.

Les atteintes au titre aborigène: le critère de justification

Le juge en chef Lamer et les juges Cory, McLachlin et Major: Les droits ancestraux reconnus et confirmés par la Constitution ne sont pas absolus, et tant le gouver-vincial governments if the infringement (1) furthers a compelling and substantial legislative objective and (2) is consistent with the special fiduciary relationship between the Crown and the aboriginal peoples. The development of agriculture, forestry, mining and hydroelectric power, the general economic development of the interior of British Columbia, protection of the environment or endangered species, and the building of infrastructure and the settlement of foreign populations to support those aims, are objectives consistent with this purpose. Three aspects of aboriginal title are relevant to the second part of the test. First, the right to exclusive use and occupation of land is relevant to the degree of scrutiny of the infringing measure or action. Second, the right to choose to what uses land can be put, subject to the ultimate limit that those uses cannot destroy the ability of the land to sustain future generations of aboriginal peoples, suggests that the fiduciary relationship between the Crown and aboriginal peoples may be satisfied by the involvement of aboriginal peoples in decisions taken with respect to their lands. There is always a duty of consultation and, in most cases, the duty will be significantly deeper than mere consultation. And third, lands held pursuant to aboriginal title have an inescapable economic component which suggests that compensation is relevant to the question of justification as well. Fair compensation will ordinarily be required when aboriginal title is infringed.

nement fédéral que les gouvernements provinciaux peuvent y porter atteinte si (1) l'atteinte au droit ancestral visé se rapporte à la poursuite d'un objectif législatif impérieux et réel; (2) l'atteinte est compatible avec les rapports spéciaux de fiduciaire qui existent entre la Couronne et les peuples autochtones. L'extension de l'agriculture, de la foresterie, de l'exploitation minière et de l'énergie hydroélectrique, le développement économique général de l'intérieur de la Colombie-Britannique, la protection de l'environnement et des espèces menacées d'extinction, ainsi que la construction des infrastructures et l'implantation des populations requises par ces fins, sont des types d'objectifs compatibles avec cet objet. Trois aspects du titre aborigène sont pertinents quant à la deuxième étape du critère. Premièrement, le droit d'utiliser et d'occuper de façon exclusive les terres visées est pertinent pour ce qui est du degré d'examen auquel est soumis la mesure ou l'acte qui porte atteinte au titre. Deuxièmement, le droit de choisir les utilisations qui peuvent être faites de ces terres, sous réserve de la restriction ultime que ces usages ne sauraient détruire la capacité de ces terres d'assurer la subsistance des générations futures de peuples autochtones, indique qu'il est possible de respecter les rapports de fiduciaire entre la Couronne et les peuples autochtones en faisant participer les peuples autochtones à la prise des décisions concernant leurs terres. Il y a toujours obligation de consultation et, dans la plupart des cas, l'obligation exigera beaucoup plus qu'une simple consultation. Troisièmement, les terres détenues en vertu d'un titre aborigène ont une composante économique inéluctable qui montre que l'indemnisation est également un facteur pertinent à l'égard de la question de la justification. Il sera généralement nécessaire de verser une juste indemnité en cas d'atteinte à un titre aborigène.

Per La Forest and L'Heureux-Dubé JJ.: Rights that are recognized and affirmed are not absolute. Government regulation can therefore infringe upon aboriginal rights if it meets the test of justification under s. 35(1). The approach is highly contextual.

Les juges La Forest et L'Heureux-Dubé: Les droits qui sont reconnus et confirmés ne sont pas absolus. Des mesures de réglementation prises par le gouvernement peuvent porter atteinte aux droits ancestraux si elles satisfont au critère de justification des atteintes aux droits visés au par. 35(1). La méthode adoptée est éminemment contextuelle.

The general economic development of the interior of British Columbia, through agriculture, mining, forestry and hydroelectric power, as well as the related building of infrastructure and settlement of foreign populations, are valid legislative objectives that, in principle, satisfy the first part of the justification analysis. Under the second part, these legislative objectives are subject to accommodation of the aboriginal peoples' interests. This accommodation must always be in accordance with the honour and good faith of the Crown. One aspect of accommodation of "aboriginal title" entails notifying and consulting aboriginal peoples with respect to the development of the affected territory. Another aspect is fair compensation.

Le développement économique général de l'intérieur de la Colombie-Britannique par l'agriculture, l'exploitation minière, la foresterie et l'énergie hydroélectrique, ainsi que la construction des infrastructures et l'implantation des populations requises par ce développement sont des objectifs législatifs réguliers qui, en principe, satisfont au premier volet du critère de justification. Dans le cadre du second volet de ce critère, ces objectifs législatifs doivent tenir compte des intérêts des peuples

McLachlin J. was in substantial agreement.

Self-Government

Per The Court: The errors of fact made by the trial judge, and the resultant need for a new trial, made it impossible for this Court to determine whether the claim to self-government had been made out.

Extinguishment

Per Lamer C.J. and Cory, McLachlin and Major JJ.: Section 91(24) of the Constitution Act, 1867 (the federal power to legislate in respect of Indians) carries with it the jurisdiction to legislate in relation to aboriginal title, and by implication, the jurisdiction to extinguish it. The ownership by the provincial Crown (under s. 109) of lands held pursuant to aboriginal title is separate from jurisdiction over those lands. Notwithstanding s. 91(24), provincial laws of general application apply proprio vigore to Indians and Indian lands.

A provincial law of general application cannot extinguish aboriginal rights. First, a law of general application cannot, by definition, meet the standard "of clear and plain intention" needed to extinguish aboriginal rights without being ultra vires the province. Second, s. 91(24) protects a core of federal jurisdiction even from provincial laws of general application through the operation of the doctrine of interjurisdictional immunity. That core has been described as matters touching on "Indianness" or the "core of Indianness".

Provincial laws which would otherwise not apply to Indians proprio vigore are allowed to do so by s. 88 of the Indian Act which incorporates by reference provincial laws of general application. This provision, however, does not "invigorate" provincial laws which are invalid because they are in relation to Indians and Indian lands.

autochtones. Cette prise en compte doit toujours être faite conformément à l'obligation de la Couronne d'agir honorablement et de bonne foi. L'un des aspects de cette prise en compte, dans un tel contexte, consiste à informer et à consulter les peuples autochtones relativement au développement du territoire visé. Un autre aspect de la prise en compte est la question de la juste indemnisation.

Le juge McLachlin est largement en accord avec ces motifs.

L'autonomie gouvernementale

La Cour: En raison des erreurs de fait commises par le juge de première instance et de la nécessité de tenir un nouveau procès qui en a découlé, il est impossible pour la Cour de décider si le bien-fondé de la revendication de l'autonomie gouvernementale a été établi.

L'extinction

Le juge en chef Lamer et les juges Cory, McLachlin et Major: Le paragraphe 91(24) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 (le pouvoir du fédéral de légiférer sur les Indiens) emporte le pouvoir de légiférer relativement au titre aborigène et par implication, celui d'éteindre ce titre. Le droit de propriété de la province sur les terres détenues en vertu d'un titre aborigène (en vertu de l'art. 109) est distinct de la compétence exercée à l'égard de ces terres. Malgré le par. 91(24), les lois provinciales d'application générale s'appliquent proprio vigore (d'elles-mêmes) aux Indiens et aux terres indiennes.

Une loi provinciale d'application générale ne peut pas éteindre des droits ancestraux. Premièrement, par définition, une loi provinciale d'application générale ne peut pas, sans être ultra vires, respecter la norme de l'«intention claire et expresse» établie à l'égard de l'extinction des droits ancestraux. Deuxièmement, le par. 91(24) protège le fondement de la compétence du fédéral, même contre les lois provinciales d'application générale, par l'application du principe de l'exclusivité des compétences. Il a été dit que ce fondement se rapporte à des questions touchant à la «quiddité indienne», ou indianité, ou à l'«essentiel de l'indianité».

Des règles de droit provinciales qui autrement ne s'appliqueraient pas d'elles-mêmes aux Indiens peuvent le faire par l'effet de l'art. 88 de la Loi sur les Indiens, qui incorpore par renvoi les lois provinciales d'application générale. Cependant, cette disposition ne «revigore» pas des règles de droit provinciales qui sont invalides parce qu'elles se rapportent aux Indiens et aux terres indiennes.

Per La Forest and L'Heureux-Dubé JJ.: The province had no authority to extinguish aboriginal rights either under the Constitution Act, 1867 or by virtue of s. 88 of the Indian Act.

McLachlin J. was in substantial agreement.

Cases Cited

By Lamer C.J.

Considered: R. v. Sparrow, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1075; R. v. Van der Peet, [1996] 2 S.C.R. 507; R. v. N.T.C. Smokehouse Ltd., [1996] 2 S.C.R. 672; R. v. Gladstone, [1996] 2 S.C.R. 723; R. v. Adams, [1996] 3 S.C.R. 101; R. v. Côté, [1996] 3 S.C.R. 139; St. Catherine's Milling and Lumber Co. v. The Queen (1888), 14 A.C. 46, aff'g sub nom. St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Co. v. The Queen (1887), 13 S.C.R. 577; Calder v. Attorney-General of British Columbia, [1973] S.C.R. 313; Baker Lake v. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, [1980] 1 F.C. 518; Guerin v. The Queen, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 335; referred to: R. v. Pamajewon, [1996] 2 S.C.R. 821; R. v. Sioui, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1025; Mabo v. Queensland (1992), 107 A.L.R. 1; Four B Manufacturing Ltd. v. United Garment Workers of America, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1031; Natural Parents v. Superintendent of Child Welfare, [1976] 2 S.C.R. 751; Dick v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 309; Stein v. The Ship "Kathy K", [1976] 2 S.C.R. 802; N.V. Bocimar S.A. v. Century Insurance Co. of Canada, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 1247; Schwartz v. Canada, [1996] 1 S.C.R. 254; Chartier v. Attorney General of Quebec, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 474; Kruger v. The Queen, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 104; R. v. Taylor (1981), 62 C.C.C. (2d) 227; Simon v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 387; Uukw v. R., [1987] 6 W.W.R. 155; Canadian Pacific Ltd. v. Paul, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 654; Roberts v. Canada, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 322; Blueberry River Indian Band v. Canada (Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development), [1995] 4 S.C.R. 344; Mitchell v. Peguis Indian Band, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 85; St. Mary's Indian Band v. Cranbrook (City), [1997] 2 S.C.R. 657; United States v. Santa Fe Pacific Railroad Co., 314 U.S. 339 (1941); R. v. Sutherland, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 451; R. v. Francis, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 1025; Derrickson v. Derrickson, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 285.

By La Forest J.

Considered: Calder v. Attorney-General of British Columbia, [1973] S.C.R. 313; Guerin v. The Queen, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 335; Canadian Pacific Ltd. v. Paul, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 654; R. v. Van der Peet, [1996] 2 S.C.R.

Les juges La Forest et L'Heureux-Dubé: La province n'avait pas le pouvoir d'éteindre des droits ancestraux en vertu de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 ni par l'effet de l'art. 88 de la Loi sur les indiens.

Le juge McLachlin est largement en accord avec ces motifs.

Jurisprudence

Citée par le juge en chef Lamer

Arrêts examinés: R. c. Sparrow, [1990] 1 R.C.S. 1075; R. c. Van der Peet, [1996] 2 R.C.S. 507; R. c. N.T.C. Smokehouse Ltd., [1996] 2 R.C.S. 672; R. c. Gladstone, [1996] 2 R.C.S. 723; R. c. Adams, [1996] 3 R.C.S. 101; R. c. Côté, [1996] 3 R.C.S. 139; St. Catherine's Milling and Lumber Co. c. The Queen (1888), 14 A.C. 46, conf. sub nom. St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Co. c. The Queen (1887), 13 R.C.S. 577; Calder c. Procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique, [1973] R.C.S. 313; Baker Lake c. Ministre des Affaires indiennes et du Nord canadien, [1980] 1 C.F. 518; Guerin c. La Reine, [1984] 2 R.C.S. 335; arrêts mentionnés: R. c. Pamajewon, [1996] 2 R.C.S. 821; R. c. Sioui, [1990] 1 R.C.S. 1025; Mabo c. Queensland (1992), 107 A.L.R. 1; Four B Manufacturing Ltd. c. Travailleurs unis du vêtement d'Amérique, [1980] 1 R.C.S. 1031; Parents naturels c. Superintendent of Child Welfare, [1976] 2 R.C.S. 751; Dick c. La Reine, [1985] 2 R.C.S. 309; Stein c. Le navire «Kathy K», [1976] 2 R.C.S. 802; N.V. Bocimar S.A. c. Century Insurance Co. of Canada, [1987] 1 R.C.S. 1247; Schwartz c. Canada, [1996] 1 R.C.S. 254; Chartier c. Procureur général du Québec, [1979] 2 R.C.S. 474; Kruger c. La Reine, [1978] 1 R.C.S. 104; R. c. Taylor (1981), 62 C.C.C. (2d) 227; Simon c. La Reine, [1985] 2 R.C.S. 387; Uukw c. R., [1987] 6 W.W.R. 155; Canadien Pacifique Ltée c. Paul, [1988] 2 R.C.S. 654; Roberts c. Canada, [1989] 1 R.C.S. 322; Bande indienne de la rivière Blueberry c. Canada (Ministère des Affaires indiennes et du Nord canadien), [1995] 4 R.C.S. 344; Mitchell c. Bande indienne Peguis, [1990] 2 R.C.S. 85; Bande indienne de St. Mary's c. Cranbrook (Ville), [1997] 2 R.C.S. 657; United States c. Santa Fe Pacific Railroad Co., 314 U.S. 339 (1941); R. c. Sutherland, [1980] 2 R.C.S. 451; R. c. Francis, [1988] 1 R.C.S. 1025; Derrickson c. Derrickson, [1986] 1 R.C.S. 285.

Citée par le juge La Forest

Arrêts examinés: Calder c. Procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique, [1973] R.C.S. 313; Guerin c. La Reine, [1984] 2 R.C.S. 335; Canadien Pacifique Ltée c. Paul, [1988] 2 R.C.S. 654; R. c. Van der Peet, [1996] 2

507; R. v. Côté, [1996] 3 S.C.R. 139; R. v. Gladstone, [1996] 2 S.C.R. 723; R. v. N.T.C. Smokehouse Ltd., [1996] 2 S.C.R. 672; R. v. Sparrow, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1075; referred to: R. v. Wesley, [1932] 4 D.L.R. 774; Sikyea v. The Queen, [1964] S.C.R. 642, aff'g R. v. Sikyea (1964), 43 D.L.R. (2d) 150.

R.C.S. 507; R. c. Côté, [1996] 3 R.C.S. 139; R. c. Gladstone, [1996] 2 R.C.S. 723; R. c. N.T.C. Smokehouse Ltd., [1996] 2 R.C.S. 672; R. c. Sparrow, [1990] 1 R.C.S. 1075; arrêts mentionnés: R. c. Wesley, [1932] 4 D.L.R. 774; Sikyea c. The Queen, [1964] R.C.S. 642, conf. R. c. Sikyea (1964), 43 D.L.R. (2d) 150.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Constitution Act, 1867, ss. 91(24), 109.
Constitution Act, 1982, s. 35(1).
Indian Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. I-5, ss. 18, 88.
Indian Oil and Gas Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. I-7, s. 6(2).
Royal Proclamation, 1763, R.S.C., 1985, App. II, No.1.
Treaty Between Her Majesty And The United Stated Of America, For The Settlement Of The Oregon Boundary (Oregon Boundary Treaty, 1846), TS 120.

Lois et règlements cités

Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, art. 91(24), 109.
Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, art. 35(1).
Loi sur le pétrole et le gaz des terres indiennes, L.R.C. (1985), ch. I-7, art. 6(2).
Loi sur les Indiens, L.R.C. (1985), ch. I-5, art. 18, 88.
Proclamation royale de 1763, L.R.C. (1985), app. II, nº 1.
Treaty Between Her Majesty And The United States Of America, For The Settlement Of The Oregon Boundary (Oregon Boundary Treaty, 1846), TS 120.

Authors Cited

Burn, E. H. Cheshire and Burn's Modern Law of Real Property, 14th ed. London: Butterworths, 1988.
Canada. Royal Commission on Aboriginal Peoples. Report of the Royal Commission on Aboriginal Peoples, vols. 1 (Looking Forward, Looking Back) and 2 (Restructuring the Relationship). Ottawa: The Commission, 1996.
Gagne, Jocelyn. "The Content of Aboriginal Title at Common Law: A Look at the Nishga Claim" (1982-83), 47 Sask. L. Rev. 309.
Hogg, Peter W. Constitutional Law of Canada, 3rd ed. Scarborough, Ont.: Carswell, 1992.
Howard, Michael Newman, Peter Crane and Daniel A. Hochberg. Phipson on Evidence, 14th ed. London: Sweet & Maxwell, 1990.
Macklem, Patrick. "First Nations Self-Government and the Borders of the Canadian Legal Imagination" (1991), 36 McGill L.J. 382.
McLeod, Clay. "The Oral Histories of Canada's Northern People, Anglo-Canadian Evidence Law, and Canada's Fiduciary Duty to First Nations: Breaking Down the Barriers of the Past" (1992), 30 Alta. L. Rev. 1276.
McNeil, Kent. Common Law Aboriginal Title. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1989.
McNeil, Kent. "The Constitutional Rights of the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada" (1982), 4 Sup. Ct. L. Rev. 255.

Doctrine citée

Burn, E. H. Cheshire and Burn's Modern Law of Real Property, 14th ed. London: Butterworths, 1988.
Canada. Commission royale sur les peuples autochtones. Rapport de la Commission royale sur les peuples autochtones, vol. 1 (Un passé, un avenir) et 2 (Une relation à redéfinir). Ottawa: La Commission, 1996.
Gagne, Jocelyn. «The Content of Aboriginal Title at Common Law: A Look at the Nishga Claim» (1982-83), 47 Sask. L. Rev. 309.
Hogg, Peter W. Constitutional Law of Canada, 3rd ed. Scarborough, Ont.: Carswell, 1992.
Howard, Michael Newman, Peter Crane and Daniel A. Hochberg. Phipson on Evidence, 14th ed. London: Sweet & Maxwell, 1990.
Macklem, Patrick. «First Nations Self-Government and the Borders of the Canadian Legal Imagination» (1991), 36 R.D. McGill 382.
McLeod, Clay. «The Oral Histories of Canada's Northern People, Anglo-Canadian Evidence Law, and Canada's Fiduciary Duty to First Nations: Breaking Down the Barriers of the Past» (1992), 30 Alta. L. Rev. 1276.
McNeil, Kent. Common Law Aboriginal Title. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1989.
McNeil, Kent. «The Constitutional Rights of the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada» (1982), 4 Sup. Ct. L. Rev. 255.

McNeil, Kent. "The Meaning of Aboriginal Title". In Michael Asch, ed., Aboriginal and Treaty Rights in Canada. Vancouver: U.B.C. Press, 1997.

Megarry, Robert E., and H. W. R. Wade. The Law of Real Property, 4th ed. London: Stevens, 1975.

O'Reilly, James. "La Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, droit des autochtones" (1984), 25 C. de D. 125.

Pentney, William. "The Rights of the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada in the Constitution Act, 1982 Part II — Section 35: The Substantive Guarantee" (1988), 22 U.B.C. L. Rev. 207.

Sanders, Douglas. "Pre-Existing Rights: The Aboriginal Peoples of Canada". In Gérald-A. Beaudoin and Ed Ratushny, eds., The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, 2nd ed. Toronto: Carswell, 1989, 707.

Sanders, Douglas. "The Rights of the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada" (1983), 61 Can. Bar Rev. 314.

Slattery, Brian. Ancestral Lands, Alien Laws: Judicial Perspectives on Aboriginal Title. Saskatoon: University of Saskatchewan Native Law Centre, 1983.

Slattery, Brian. "The Constitutional Guarantee of Aboriginal and Treaty Rights" (1982-83), 8 Queen's L.J. 232.

Slattery, Brian. "Understanding Aboriginal Rights" (1987), 66 Can. Bar Rev. 727.

McNeil, Kent. «The Meaning of Aboriginal Title». In Michael Asch, ed., Aboriginal and Treaty Rights in Canada. Vancouver: U.B.C. Press, 1997.

Megarry, Robert E., and H. W. R. Wade. The Law of Real Property, 4th ed. London: Stevens, 1975.

O'Reilly, James. «La Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, droit des autochtones» (1984), 25 C. de D. 125.

Pentney, William. «The Rights of the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada in the Constitution Act, 1982 Part II — Section 35: The Substantive Guarantee» (1988), 22 U.B.C. L. Rev. 207.

Sanders, Douglas. «Les droits préexistants: les peuples autochtones du Canada». Dans Gérald-A. Beaudoin et Ed Ratushny, dir., Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, 2e éd. Montréal: Wilson & Lafleur, 1989, 779.

Sanders, Douglas. «The Rights of the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada» (1983), 61 R. du B. can. 314.

Slattery, Brian. Ancestral Lands, Alien Laws: Judicial Perspectives on Aboriginal Title. Saskatoon: University of Saskatchewan Native Law Centre, 1983.

Slattery, Brian. «The Constitutional Guarantee of Aboriginal and Treaty Rights» (1982-83), 8 Queen's L.J. 232.

Slattery, Brian. «Understanding Aboriginal Rights» (1987), 66 R. du B. can. 727.

APPEAL and CROSS-APPEAL from a judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (1993), 30 B.C.A.C. 1, 49 W.A.C. 1, 104 D.L.R. (4th) 470, [1993] 5 W.W.R. 97, [1993] 5 C.N.L.R. 1, [1993] B.C.J. No. 1395 (QL), varying an order of McEachern C.J., [1991] 3 W.W.R. 97, [1991] 5 C.N.L.R. xiii, (1991), 79 D.L.R. (4th) 185, [1991] B.C.J. No. 525 (QL), and dismissing British Columbia's cross-appeal as abandoned. Appeal allowed in part; cross-appeal dismissed.

Stuart Rush, Q.C., Peter Grant, Michael Jackson, Louise Mandell and David Paterson, for the appellants and respondents on the cross-appeal, the Gitksan Hereditary Chiefs et al.

Marvin R. V. Storrow, Q.C., Joanne R. Lysyk and Joseph C. McArthur, for the appellants and respondents on the cross-appeal, the Wet'suwet'en Hereditary Chiefs et al.

POURVOI et POURVOI INCIDENT contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique (1993), 30 B.C.A.C. 1, 49 W.A.C. 1, 104 D.L.R. (4th) 470, [1993] 5 W.W.R. 97, [1993] 5 C.N.L.R. 1, [1993] B.C.J. No. 1395 (QL), modifiant une ordonnance du juge en chef McEachern, [1991] 3 W.W.R. 97, [1991] 5 C.N.L.R. xiii, (1991), 79 D.L.R. (4th) 185, [1991] B.C.J. No. 525 (QL), et rejetant le pourvoi incident de la Colombie-Britannique pour cause d'abandon. Pourvoi accueilli en partie; pourvoi incident rejeté.

Stuart Rush, c.r., Peter Grant, Michael Jackson, Louise Mandell et David Paterson, pour les appelants et intimés dans le pourvoi incident, les chefs héréditaires Gitksan et autres.

Marvin R. V. Storrow, c.r., Joanne R. Lysyk et Joseph C. McArthur, pour les appelants et intimés dans le pourvoi incident, les chefs héréditaires Wet'suwet'en et autres.

Joseph J. Arvay, Q.C., Mark G. Underhill and Brenda Edwards, for the respondent and appellant on the cross-appeal, Her Majesty the Queen in Right of the Province of British Columbia.

Graham Garton, Q.C., Judith Bowers, Q.C., Murray T. Wolf and Geoffrey S. Lester, for the respondent the Attorney General of Canada.

Arthur Pape, Harry A. Slade, Peter Hogg and Jean Teillet, for the intervener the First Nations Summit.

Jack Woodward and Albert C. Peeling, for the intervener the Westbank First Nation.

Marvin R. V. Storrow, Q.C., Joanne R. Lysyk and Joseph C. McArthur, for the interveners the Musqueam Nation et al.

J. Keith Lowes, for the interveners the B.C. Cattlemen's Association et al.

Charles F. Willms, for the intervener Skeena Cellulose Inc.

J. Edward Gouge, Q.C., and Jill M. Marks, for the intervener Alcan Aluminum Ltd.

The judgment of Lamer C.J. and Cory and Major JJ. was delivered by

THE CHIEF JUSTICE —

I. Introduction

1 This appeal is the latest in a series of cases in which it has fallen to this Court to interpret and apply the guarantee of existing aboriginal rights found in s. 35(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982. Although that line of decisions, commencing with R. v. Sparrow, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1075, proceeding through the Van der Peet trilogy (R. v. Van der Peet, [1996] 2 S.C.R. 507, R. v. N.T.C. Smokehouse Ltd., [1996] 2 S.C.R. 672, and R. v. Gladstone, [1996] 2 S.C.R. 723), and ending in R. v. Pamajewon, [1996] 2 S.C.R. 821, R. v. Adams, [1996] 3 S.C.R. 101, and R. v. Côté, [1996] 3 S.C.R. 139, have laid down the jurisprudential framework for s. 35(1), this appeal raises a set of Joseph J. Arvay, c.r., Mark G. Underhill et Brenda Edwards, pour l'intimée et appelante dans le pourvoi incident, Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de la province de la Colombie-Britannique.

Graham Garton, c.r., Judith Bowers, c.r., Murray T. Wolf et Geoffrey S. Lester, pour l'intimé le procureur général du Canada.

Arthur Pape, Harry A. Slade, Peter Hogg et Jean Teillet, pour l'intervenant le First Nations Summit.

Jack Woodward et Albert C. Peeling, pour l'intervenante la Première nation de Westbank.

Marvin R. V. Storrow, c.r., Joanne R. Lysyk et Joseph C. McArthur, pour les intervenants la Nation Musqueam et autres.

J. Keith Lowes, pour les intervenants la B.C. Cattlemen's Association et autres.

Charles F. Willms, pour l'intervenante Skeena Cellulose Inc.

J. Edward Gouge, c.r., et Jill M. Marks, pour l'intervenante Alcan Aluminium Ltée.

Version française du jugement du juge en chef Lamer et des juges Cory et Major rendu par

LE JUGE EN CHEF —

I. Introduction

Le présent pourvoi est le plus récent d'une série d'affaires où notre Cour a été appelée à interpréter et à appliquer la garantie relative aux droits ancestraux existants prévue au par. 35(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982. Bien que cette série de décisions — qui a commencé par l'arrêt R. c. Sparrow, [1990] 1 R.C.S. 1075, s'est poursuivie par la trilogie Van der Peet (R. c. Van der Peet, [1996] 2 R.C.S. 507, R. c. N.T.C. Smokehouse Ltd., [1996] 2 R.C.S. 672, et R. c. Gladstone, [1996] 2 R.C.S. 723), et s'est terminée par les arrêts R. c. Pamajewon, [1996] 2 R.C.S. 821, R. c. Adams, [1996] 3 R.C.S. 101, et R. c. Côté, [1996] 3 R.C.S. 139 — ait établi le cadre jurisprudentiel d'analyse du eral application: Dick, supra, at pp. 326-27; Derrickson v. Derrickson, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 285, at p. 297; Francis, supra, at pp. 1030-31. However, it is important to note, in Professor Hogg's words, that s. 88 does not "invigorate" provincial laws which are invalid because they are in relation to Indians and Indian lands (Constitutional Law of Canada (3rd ed. 1992), at p. 676; also see Dick, supra, at p. 322). What this means is that s. 88 extends the effect of provincial laws of general application which cannot apply to Indians and Indian lands because they touch on the Indianness at the core of s. 91(24). For example, a provincial law which regulated hunting may very well touch on this core. Although such a law would not apply to aboriginal people proprio vigore, it would still apply through s. 88 of the Indian Act, being a law of general application. Such laws are enacted to conserve game and for the safety of all.

183 The respondent B.C. Crown argues that since such laws are intra vires the province, and applicable to aboriginal persons, s. 88 could allow provincial laws to extinguish aboriginal rights. I reject this submission, for the simple reason that s. 88 does not evince the requisite clear and plain intent to extinguish aboriginal rights. The provision states in full:

> 88. Subject to the terms of any treaty and any other Act of Parliament, all laws of general application from time to time in force in any province are applicable to and in respect of Indians in the province, except to the extent that those laws are inconsistent with this Act or any order, rule, regulation or by-law made thereunder, and except to the extent that those laws make provision for any matter for which provision is made by or under this Act.

I see nothing in the language of the provision which even suggests the intention to extinguish aboriginal rights. Indeed, the explicit reference to treaty rights in s. 88 suggests that the provision les lois provinciales d'application générale: Dick, précité, aux pp. 326 et 327; Derrickson c. Derrickson, [1986] 1 R.C.S. 285, à la p. 297; Francis, précité, aux pp. 1030 et 1031. Toutefois, il est important de souligner, dans les mots du professeur Hogg, que l'art. 88 ne [TRADUCTION] «revigore» pas des règles de droit provinciales qui sont invalides parce qu'elles se rapportent aux Indiens et aux terres indiennes (Constitutional Law of Canada (3e éd. 1992), à la p. 676; voir aussi Dick, précité, à la p. 322). Ce que cela veut dire, c'est que l'art. 88 étend l'effet des lois provinciales d'application générale qui ne sauraient autrement s'appliquer aux Indiens et aux terres indiennes parce qu'elles touchent à la quiddité indienne qui est au cœur du par. 91(24). Par exemple, une règle de droit provinciale réglementant la chasse peut très bien affecter ce fondement. Même si une telle loi ne s'appliquait pas d'elle-même aux peuples autochtones, elle le ferait néanmoins sous l'effet de l'art. 88 de la Loi sur les Indiens, en tant que loi d'application générale. De telles lois sont adoptées pour la conservation du gibier et pour assurer la sécurité de tous.

La province intimée prétend que, comme les provinces ont le pouvoir d'adopter de telles lois et que celles-ci sont applicables aux autochtones, l'art. 88 pourrait autoriser l'extinction de droits ancestraux par des règles de droit provinciales. Je rejette cet argument pour la simple raison que l'intention claire et expresse requise pour l'extinction de droits ancestraux ne ressort pas de l'art. 88. Cette disposition est rédigée ainsi:

> 88. Sous réserve des dispositions de quelque traité et de quelque autre loi fédérale, toutes les lois d'application générale et en vigueur dans une province sont applicables aux Indiens qui s'y trouvent et à leur égard, sauf dans la mesure où ces lois sont incompatibles avec la présente loi ou quelque arrêté, ordonnance, règle, règlement ou règlement administratif pris sous son régime, et sauf dans la mesure où ces lois contiennent des dispositions sur toute question prévue par la présente loi ou sous son régime.

Selon moi, il n'y a rien dans le texte de cette disposition qui suggère même l'intention d'éteindre des droits ancestraux. De fait, l'allusion explicite aux droits issus de traités à l'art. 88 indique que cette was clearly not intended to undermine aboriginal rights.

VI. Conclusion and Disposition

For the reasons I have given above, I would allow the appeal in part, and dismiss the cross-appeal. Reluctantly, I would also order a new trial.

I conclude with two observations. The first is that many aboriginal nations with territorial claims that overlap with those of the appellants did not intervene in this appeal, and do not appear to have done so at trial. This is unfortunate, because determinations of aboriginal title for the Gitksan and Wet'suwet'en will undoubtedly affect their claims as well. This is particularly so because aboriginal title encompasses an exclusive right to the use and occupation of land, i.e., to the exclusion of both non-aboriginals and members of other aboriginal nations. It may, therefore, be advisable if those aboriginal nations intervened in any new litigation.

Finally, this litigation has been both long and expensive, not only in economic but in human terms as well. By ordering a new trial, I do not necessarily encourage the parties to proceed to litigation and to settle their dispute through the courts. As was said in Sparrow, at p. 1105, s. 35(1) "provides a solid constitutional base upon which subsequent negotiations can take place". Those negotiations should also include other aboriginal nations which have a stake in the territory claimed. Moreover, the Crown is under a moral, if not a legal, duty to enter into and conduct those negotiations in good faith. Ultimately, it is through negotiated settlements, with good faith and give and take on all sides, reinforced by the judgments of this Court, that we will achieve what I stated in Van der Peet, supra, at para. 31, to be a basic purpose of s. 35(1) — "the reconciliation of the pre-existence disposition n'est manifestement pas censée porter atteinte aux droits ancestraux.

VI. Conclusion et dispositif

184 Pour les motifs que je viens d'exposer, je suis d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi en partie et de rejeter le pourvoi incident. À regret, j'ordonnerais également la tenue d'un nouveau procès.

185 Je vais conclure par deux observations. En premier lieu, de nombreuses nations autochtones dont les revendications territoriales chevauchent celles des appelants ne sont pas intervenues dans le présent pourvoi et ne paraissent pas l'avoir fait en première instance. Cette situation est malheureuse parce que les décisions relatives au titre aborigène des Gitksan et des Wet'suwet'en auront indubitablement un effet sur les revendications de ces autres nations autochtones, particulièrement en raison du fait que le titre aborigène comprend le droit exclusif d'utiliser et d'occuper des terres, c'est-à-dire de le faire à l'exclusion des non-autochtones et des membres d'autres nations autochtones. Par conséquent, peut-être serait-il souhaitable que ces autres nations autochtones interviennent dans une nouvelle instance.

186 En second lieu, la présente affaire a été longue et coûteuse, non seulement sur le plan financier mais aussi sur le plan humain. En ordonnant la tenue d'un nouveau procès, je n'encourage pas nécessairement les parties à introduire une instance et à régler leur différend devant les tribunaux. Comme il a été dit dans Sparrow, à la p. 1105, le par. 35(1) «procure [. . .] un fondement constitutionnel solide à partir duquel des négociations ultérieures peuvent être entreprises». Devraient également participer à ces négociations les autres nations autochtones qui ont un intérêt dans le territoire revendiqué. En outre, la Couronne a l'obligation morale, sinon légale, d'entamer et de mener ces négociations de bonne foi. En fin de compte, c'est au moyen de règlements négociés — toutes les parties négociant de bonne foi et faisant les compromis qui s'imposent — processus renforcé par les arrêts de notre Cour, que nous pourrons réaliser ce que, dans Van der Peet, précité, au par. 31, j'ai déclaré être l'objet fondamental du par. 35(1), of aboriginal societies with the sovereignty of the Crown". Let us face it, we are all here to stay.

The reasons of La Forest and L'Heureux-Dubé JJ. were delivered by 187 LA FOREST J. — I have read the reasons of the Chief Justice, and while I agree with his conclusion, I disagree with various aspects of his reasons and in particular, with the methodology he uses to prove that aboriginal peoples have a general right of occupation of certain lands (often referred to as "aboriginal title").

188 I begin by considering why a new trial is necessary in this case. It is true, as the Chief Justice points out, that the amalgamation of the appellants' individual claims represents a defect in the pleadings and, technically speaking, this prevents us from considering the merits of the case. However, in my view, there is a more substantive problem with the pleadings in this case. Before this Court, the appellants sought a declaration of "aboriginal title" but attempted, in essence, to prove that they had complete control over the territory in question. The appellants effectively argued on appeal, as they did at trial, that by virtue of their social and land tenure systems — consisting of Chief authority, Houses, feasts, crests, and totem poles — they acquired an absolute interest in the claimed territory, including ownership of and jurisdiction over the land. The problem with this approach is that it requires proof of governance and control as opposed to proof of general occupation of the affected land. Only the latter is the sine qua non of "aboriginal title". It follows that what the appellants sought by way of declaration from this Court and what they set out to prove by way of the evidence were two different matters. In light of this substantive defect in the pleadings, a new trial c'est-à-dire «concilier la préexistence des sociétés autochtones et la souveraineté de Sa Majesté». Il faut se rendre à l'évidence, nous sommes tous ici pour y rester.

Version française des motifs des juges La Forest et L'Heureux-Dubé rendus par

LE JUGE LA FOREST — J'ai lu les motifs du Juge en chef et, bien que je souscrive à sa conclusion, je suis en désaccord avec divers aspects de ses motifs et en particulier avec la méthode dont il se sert pour établir que les peuples autochtones ont un droit général d'occupation de certaines terres (souvent appelé «titre aborigène»).

Je vais d'abord examiner les raisons pour lesquelles la tenue d'un nouveau procès est nécessaire en l'espèce. Il est vrai, comme le souligne le Juge en chef, que la fusion des revendications individuelles des appelants constitue un vice affectant les actes de procédure et que, sur le plan de la forme, cela nous empêche d'examiner le fond de l'affaire. Cependant, à mon avis, les actes de procédure en l'espèce posent un problème encore plus substantiel. En effet, même si, devant notre Cour, les appelants ont sollicité un jugement déclarant l'existence d'un «titre aborigène», ils ont essentiellement tenté d'établir qu'ils exerçaient un contrôle complet sur le territoire en question. En appel, les appelants ont effectivement prétendu, comme ils l'avaient fait en première instance, qu'en vertu de leur régime de tenure foncière et de leur organisation sociale — constituée de l'autorité des chefs, de maisons, de célébrations, d'armoiries et de mâts totémiques — ils ont acquis un intérêt absolu sur le territoire revendiqué, y compris la propriété des terres visées et la compétence sur celles-ci. Le problème que pose cette approche est qu'elle exige qu'on prouve la gestion et le contrôle des terres visées, plutôt que l'occupation générale de celles-ci. Or, seule la preuve du deuxième fait est la condition sine qua non de l'existence du «titre aborigène». Il s'ensuit que ce que les appelants ont demandé à notre Cour de leur reconnaître, par voie de jugement déclaratoire, et ce qu'ils se sont efforcés d'établir par la preuve, étaient deux choses différentes. Étant donné ce vice substantiel entachant les actes de procédure, la tenue d'un

CITATION: Drew v. Kaker, 2023 ONSC 4589
COURT FILE NO.: FC-23-205
DATE: 2023/08/08

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE - ONTARIO

RE: MICHAEL DREW, Applicant

AND:

SUNBUL KAKER, Respondent

BEFORE: Justice Jennifer Breithaupt Smith

COUNSEL: T. Miller, Counsel for the Applicant

T. Lattanzio, Counsel, for the Respondent

HEARD: August 8, 2023 – IN CHAMBERS

ENDORSEMENT

[1] No one appearing. Matter addressed in Chambers.

[2] The Respondent brings an urgent motion alleging that the Applicant has overheld the child and denied her any meaningful parenting time. She alleges that the child has been kept out of his daycare by the Applicant, who she attests is a drug dealer living in a hotel with the child. The Respondent's Notice of Motion and Affidavit were delivered to Applicant's counsel by email at 3:27 p.m. today. The Respondent has requested that the Court determine whether this matter is urgent for scheduling purposes.

[3] The procedure in Central South Region is governed by the Notice to the Public and Profession effective February 13, 2023 (the "Consolidated Notice"). The Consolidated Notice provides an avenue for urgent matters to be addressed outside of the usual course. This is for judicial direction as to scheduling for an urgent hearing timeslot, and, in family litigation matters, is entirely without prejudice to the determination of urgency under the Rosen test (see Rosen v. Rosen, 2005 CanLII 480 (ON SC)). At page 5 of the Consolidated Notice, the following guidance appears:

> Urgent matters are matters which require immediate access to the court and for which it is impractical to follow the standard procedures. Generally, a matter is urgent if a court order is necessary to preserve life, the health or safety of a child, liberty, property, to address the immediate danger of a child's removal from Ontario and time is of the essence. Urgent requests are to be made by e-mail to the respective Trial Co-ordinator Offices.

[4] I find this matter to be urgent for triage purposes, having regard to the potentially dangerous situation in which the parties' young child may currently be living (that is, if Father is in fact dealing drugs from a hotel room).

[5] Central South Region is woefully underserviced at this time. The Unified Family Court at Kitchener, as a single example, continues to wait for a fifth chair to be filled which has now been vacant for roughly two years. The four judges of the Unified Family Court at Kitchener are thus each doing 125% of their expected workload, and this is only one example of a problem that is rampant throughout Ontario and, indeed, across the country. Our generalist colleagues, who otherwise assist us whenever possible, are themselves overburdened. Many are booking additional cases to be heard before and after the regular court day's proceedings. This is completely unsustainable. It is incomprehensible that the public, and particularly vulnerable children and families, should be so poorly assisted. Until such time as judicial vacancies are taken seriously, it cannot be said that litigants truly have access to justice.

[6] The only available urgent slot is on August 24, 2023 at 10:00 a.m. This family cannot wait for that date unless there is the possibility of a substantive judicial decision being rendered, which cannot be done at a conference. In order to alleviate any requirement that the Rosen test for urgency need be argued on the motion, and to preserve the available urgent date for argument, I am therefore booking this matter for an Urgent Case Conference, at a special appointment time on Thursday, August 10, 2023 at 9:30 a.m., with the motion to be argued on August 24, 2023 at 10:00 a.m.

[7] In the circumstances, Temporary Order to go:

1. The Respondent's Notice of Motion and Affidavit dated August 8, 2023 are to be accepted by Court staff for filing in the absence of proof of service.

2. The matter is scheduled for an urgent case conference on Thursday, August 10, 2023 at 9:30 a.m., to be conducted virtually via Zoom at:
   https://ca01web.zoom.us/j/65212670916?pwd=eG1SVklBSzdBNTNqdUJKZC91QTU3dz09 or by calling toll free: 1-855-703-8985.
   Meeting ID: 652 1267 0916 Passcode: 980471

3. The requirement for Case Conference Briefs is waived. By 4:00 p.m. on Wednesday, August 9, 2023, counsel are to email a short memorandum setting out each party's position to the Judiciary Assistants, attention Justice Breithaupt Smith, noting the file name and number in the subject line, to: kitchener.scjja@ontario.ca CC: kitchener.superior.court@ontario.ca.

4. The matter is further scheduled for argument of the Respondent's Motion on Thursday, August 24, 2023 at 10:00 a.m., to be conducted virtually via Zoom at such exact connection details as will be provided by the Trial Co-ordination Office.

5. The Applicant shall serve and file any responding material on the motion by Monday, August 14, 2023.

6. The Respondent shall serve and file any reply material by Friday, August 18, 2023.

7. Both parties to provide Confirmations and Draft Temporary Orders in the usual course.

J. Breithaupt Smith J.

DATE: August 8, 2023

Her Majesty The Queen in Right of Alberta Appellant

v.

Devon Gary Ell, John Michael Maguire and Roselynne Margaret Spencer Respondents

and

Attorney General of Canada, Attorney General of Ontario, Attorney General of Quebec, Attorney General of British Columbia, Attorney General for Saskatchewan and Association of Justices of the Peace of Ontario Interveners

INDEXED AS: ELL v. ALBERTA

Neutral citation: 2003 SCC 35.

File No.: 28261.

2003: February 12; 2003: June 26.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and Gonthier, Iacobucci, Major, Bastarache, Binnie, Arbour, LeBel and Deschamps JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR ALBERTA

Constitutional law — Judicial independence — Security of tenure — Justices of the peace — Provincial legislation requiring all justices of the peace who exercise judicial functions to meet qualifications decided upon by an independent Judicial Council — Whether legislation infringes guarantees of judicial independence — Whether removal from office of justices of the peace who did not meet qualifications violated their security of tenure — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s. 11(d) — Constitution Act, 1867, preamble — Justice of the Peace Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. J-3, s. 2.4(8) — Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 1998, S.A. 1998, c. 18.

The respondents are challenging the constitutionality of legislative reforms that seek to improve the qualifications and independence of Alberta's justices of the peace. The challenged amendments to the Justice of the Peace Act require all justices of the peace who exercise judicial functions to meet qualifications decided upon by an independent Judicial Council. The Judicial Council

Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de l'Alberta Appelante

c.

Devon Gary Ell, John Michael Maguire et Roselynne Margaret Spencer Intimés

et

Procureur général du Canada, procureur général de l'Ontario, procureur général du Québec, procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique, procureur général de la Saskatchewan et Association of Justices of the Peace of Ontario Intervenants

RÉPERTORIÉ : ELL c. ALBERTA

Référence neutre : 2003 CSC 35.

N^{o} du greffe : 28261.

2003 : 12 février; 2003 : 26 juin.

Présents : La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges Gonthier, Iacobucci, Major, Bastarache, Binnie, Arbour, LeBel et Deschamps.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE L'ALBERTA

Droit constitutionnel — Indépendance judiciaire — Inamovibilité — Juges de paix — Loi provinciale exigeant que tous les juges de paix qui exercent des fonctions judiciaires aient les qualifications fixées par un conseil de la magistrature indépendant — La loi porte-t-elle atteinte aux garanties d'indépendance judiciaire? — La destitution des juges de paix n'ayant pas les qualifications requises porte-t-elle atteinte à leur inamovibilité? — Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 11d) — Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, préambule — Justice of the Peace Act, R.S.A. 1980, ch. J-3, art. 2.4(8) — Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 1998, S.A. 1998, ch. 18.

Les intimés contestent la constitutionnalité de réformes législatives destinées à relever les qualifications des juges de paix albertains et à accroître leur indépendance. Les modifications contestées, qui ont été apportées à la Justice of the Peace Act exigent que tous les juges de paix qui exercent des fonctions judiciaires aient les qualifications fixées par un conseil de la magistrature unanimously agreed on minimum qualifications of membership in the Law Society of Alberta and five years related experience. The respondents, who had been appointed as justices of the peace prior to the amendments, did not meet these requirements. They were removed from office and were offered administrative positions as non-presiding justices of the peace. The respondents applied for a declaration that s. 2.4(8) of the amended Justice of the Peace Act, which removed them from office, contravened their constitutionally required security of tenure and independence. The chambers judge granted the application and declared the provision to be of no force and effect as it applied to them. The Court of Appeal upheld the decision.

Held: The appeal should be allowed.

The principle of judicial independence applies to the position of the respondents as a result of their authority to exercise judicial functions directly related to the enforcement of law in the court system and to perform numerous judicial functions that significantly affect the rights and liberties of individuals. The respondents played an important role in assisting the provincial and superior courts in fulfilling the judiciary's constitutional mandate and they were constitutionally required to be independent in the exercise of their duties. The Legislature's removal of the respondents from office did not violate their security of tenure, however, and so did not contravene the principle of judicial independence. The essence of security of tenure is that members of a tribunal be free from arbitrary or discretionary removal from office. Removal from office that is reasonably intended to further the interests that underlie the principle of judicial independence — namely, public confidence in the administration of justice, and the maintenance of a strong and independent judiciary that is able to uphold the rule of law and the values of our Constitution — is not arbitrary. It is evident that in this case the Legislature concluded that the positive impact of the reforms on the interests that underlie judicial independence outweighed any negative impact of the respondents' removal from office. A reasonable and informed person would perceive the legislative amendments to strengthen the qualifications and independence of Alberta's justices of the peace.

The respondents do not dispute the merits of the reforms but argue that the amendments should apply only to new appointments to office. Once it is established that the office is in need of significant structural reform, however, a requirement of "grandfathering" incumbents serves only to delay that reform. Moreover, public confidence in the administration of justice could be harmed by indépendant. Le conseil de la magistrature a convenu à l'unanimité que, pour être nommé, il fallait au moins être membre du barreau de l'Alberta et avoir au moins cinq ans d'expérience pertinente. Les intimés, qui avaient été nommés juges de paix avant les modifications apportées, ne satisfaisaient pas à ces exigences. Ils ont été destitués et se sont vu offrir des fonctions administratives à titre de juges de paix non présidant. Les intimés ont présenté une demande de jugement déclarant que le par. 2.4(8) de la Justice of the Peace Act modifiée, à l'origine de leur destitution, portait atteinte à l'inamovibilité et à l'indépendance dont ils doivent bénéficier en vertu de la Constitution. Le juge en chambre a accueilli la demande et déclaré la disposition inopérante à leur égard. La Cour d'appel de l'Alberta a confirmé cette décision.

Arrêt : Le pourvoi est accueilli.

Le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire s'applique à la charge des intimés en raison de leur pouvoir d'exercer des fonctions judiciaires directement liées à l'application de la loi au sein du système judiciaire, ainsi que maintes fonctions judiciaires ayant une incidence importante sur les droits et libertés des citoyens. Les intimés aidaient grandement les cours provinciales et supérieures à remplir le mandat constitutionnel confié au pouvoir judiciaire et leur indépendance dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions était une exigence constitutionnelle. Cependant, la destitution des intimés par la législature ne portait pas atteinte à leur inamovibilité et ne contrevenait donc pas au principe de l'indépendance judiciaire. L'inamovibilité vise essentiellement à empêcher que les membres d'un tribunal fassent l'objet d'une destitution arbitraire ou discrétionnaire. N'est pas arbitraire la destitution raisonnablement conçue pour servir les intérêts qui sous-tendent le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire — à savoir la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice et le maintien d'un pouvoir judiciaire fort et indépendant capable de faire respecter la primauté du droit et les valeurs consacrées par notre Constitution. Il est évident qu'en l'espèce la législature a conclu que l'incidence positive des réformes sur les intérêts qui sous-tendent l'indépendance judiciaire l'emportait sur l'incidence négative de la destitution des intimés. Une personne raisonnable et renseignée considérerait que les modifications législatives renforcent l'indépendance des juges de paix albertains et relèvent leurs qualifications.

Les intimés ne contestent pas le bien-fondé des réformes, mais ils font valoir que les modifications ne devraient s'appliquer qu'aux nouvelles nominations. Toutefois, dès qu'il est établi que la charge a besoin d'une réforme structurelle importante, l'établissement d'une disposition maintenant les « droits acquis » des titulaires de la charge ne contribue qu'à retarder la mise retaining those individuals who do not meet the qualifications for eligibility that an independent Judicial Council, with intimate knowledge of the duties of office, have determined to be the minimum necessary. Finally, the manner in which the reforms were implemented lessened as much as possible the legislation's adverse impact upon the respondents.

Cases Cited

Referred to: Reference re Adoption Act, [1938] S.C.R. 398; R. v. Bush (1888), 15 O.R. 398; Valente v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673; Beauregard v. Canada, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 56; Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 3; Mackin v. New Brunswick (Minister of Finance), [2002] 1 S.C.R. 405, 2002 SCC 13; Baron v. Canada, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 416; Canadian Pacific Ltd. v. Matsqui Indian Band, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 3; Therrien (Re), [2001] 2 S.C.R. 3, 2001 SCC 35; R. v. Généreux, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 259.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Act of Settlement, 12 & 13 Will. 3, c. 2.
Act to Amend the Justices of the Peace Act, R.S.N.W.T. 1988, c. 39 (Supp.), ss. 5, 8.
Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 7, 8, 11(d), (e).
Constitution Act, 1867, preamble, ss. 92(14), 96 to 100.
Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, ss. 2 "justice", 515.
Justice of the Peace Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. J-3, ss. 2.1(1) [ad. 1998, c. 18, s. 3], (2) [idem], (5) [idem], 2.2 [idem], 2.4(8) [idem], 5 [rep. 1998, c. 18, s. 3], 5.1 [ad. 1991, c. 21, s. 16; rep. 1998, c. 18, s. 3], 5.2 [idem].
Justices of the Peace Act, 1988, S.S. 1988-89, c. J-5.1, s. 6(7).
Justices of the Peace Act, 1989, S.O. 1989, c. 46, s. 4(4).
Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 1998, S.A. 1998, c. 18, s. 3.
Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 1991, S.A. 1991, c. 21, s. 16.

Authors Cited

Alberta Hansard, March 11, 1998, p. 811.
Doob, Anthony N., Patricia M. Baranek and Susan M. Addario. Understanding Justices: A Study of Canadian Justices of the Peace. Toronto: Centre of Criminology, University of Toronto, 1991.
Friedland, Martin L. Detention before Trial: A Study of Criminal Cases Tried in the Toronto Magistrates' Courts. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1965.

en œuvre de cette réforme. De plus, le maintien en poste de personnes ne satisfaisant pas aux conditions minimales d'admissibilité fixées par un conseil de la magistrature indépendant, qui a une connaissance approfondie des fonctions de la charge, pourrait avoir pour effet d'ébranler la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice. Enfin, la manière dont les réformes ont été mises en œuvre a réduit au minimum l'incidence négative de la mesure législative sur les intimés.

Jurisprudence

Arrêts mentionnés : Reference re Adoption Act, [1938] R.C.S. 398; R. c. Bush (1888), 15 O.R. 398; Valente c. La Reine, [1985] 2 R.C.S. 673; Beauregard c. Canada, [1986] 2 R.C.S. 56; Renvoi relatif à la rémunération des juges de la Cour provinciale de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, [1997] 3 R.C.S. 3; Mackin c. Nouveau-Brunswick (Ministre des Finances), [2002] 1 R.C.S. 405, 2002 CSC 13; Baron c. Canada, [1993] 1 R.C.S. 416; Canadien Pacifique Ltée c. Bande indienne de Matsqui, [1995] 1 R.C.S. 3; Therrien (Re), [2001] 2 R.C.S. 3, 2001 CSC 35; R. c. Généreux, [1992] 1 R.C.S. 259.

Lois et règlements cités

Act of Settlement, 12 & 13 Will. 3, ch. 2.
Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 1, 7, 8, 11*d*), e).
Code criminel, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-46, art. 2 « juge de paix », 515.
Justice of the Peace Act, R.S.A. 1980, ch. J-3, art. 2.1(1) [aj. 1998, ch. 18, art. 3], (2) [idem], (5) [idem], 2.2 [idem], 2.4(8) [idem], 5 [abr. 1998, ch. 18, art. 3], 5.1 [aj. 1991, ch. 21, art. 16; abr. 1998, ch. 18, art. 3], 5.2 [idem].
Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 1998, S.A. 1998, ch. 18, art. 3.
Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, préambule, art. 92(14), 96 à 100.
Loi de 1988 sur les juges de paix, L.S. 1988-89, ch. J-5,1, art. 6(7).
Loi de 1989 sur les juges de paix, L.O. 1989, ch. 46, art. 4(4).
Loi modifiant la Loi sur les juges de paix, L.R.T.N.-O. 1988, ch. 39 (suppl.), art. 5, 8.
Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 1991, S.A. 1991, ch. 21, art. 16.

Doctrine citée

Alberta Hansard, 11 mars 1998, p. 811.
Doob, Anthony N., Patricia M. Baranek and Susan M. Addario. Understanding Justices : A Study of Canadian Justices of the Peace. Toronto : Centre of Criminology, University of Toronto, 1991.
Friedland, Martin L. Detention before Trial : A Study of Criminal Cases Tried in the Toronto Magistrates' Courts. Toronto : University of Toronto Press, 1965.

Klinck, J. E. Report of the Justice of the Peace Committee. Alberta: Ministry of the Attorney General, 1986.

Manitoba. Law Reform Commission. The Independence of Justices of the Peace and Magistrates, Report No. 75. Winnipeg: Queen's Printer, 1991.

McRuer, James Chalmers. Royal Commission Inquiry Into Civil Rights, Report No. 1, vol. 2, c. 38. Toronto: Queen's Printer, 1968.

Mewett, Alan W. Report to the Attorney General of Ontario on the Office and Function of Justices of the Peace in Ontario, 1981.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Alberta Court of Appeal, [2001] 1 W.W.R. 606, 83 Alta. L.R. (3d) 215, 266 A.R. 266, 25 Admin. L.R. (3d) 17, 49 C.P.C. (4th) 18, [2000] A.J. No. 1101 (QL), 2000 ABCA 248, affirming a decision of the Court of Queen's Bench (1999), 240 A.R. 146, 28 C.P.C. (4th) 342, 60 C.R.R. (2d) 107, [1999] A.J. No. 451 (QL), 1999 ABQB 45. Appeal allowed.

Robert C. Maybank and Christine Enns, for the appellant.

Alan D. Hunter, Q.C., Sheilah L. Martin, Q.C., and James T. Eamon, for the respondents.

David Sgayias, Q.C., and Jan Brongers, for the intervener the Attorney General of Canada.

Janet E. Minor and Sean Hanley, for the intervener the Attorney General of Ontario.

Monique Rousseau and Julie Dassylva, for the intervener the Attorney General of Quebec.

George H. Copley, Q.C., for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia.

Graeme G. Mitchell, Q.C., for the intervener the Attorney General for Saskatchewan.

Paul B. Schabas and Catherine Beagan Flood, for the intervener the Association of Justices of the Peace of Ontario.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

1 MAJOR J. — At issue in this appeal is the constitutionality of legislative reforms that seek to improve the qualifications and independence of Alberta's

Klinck, J. E. Report of the Justice of the Peace Committee. Alberta : Ministry of the Attorney General, 1986.

Manitoba. Commission de réforme du droit. The Independence of Justices of the Peace and Magistrates, Report No. 75. Winnipeg : Queen's Printer, 1991.

McRuer, James Chalmers. Royal Commission Inquiry Into Civil Rights, Report No. 1, vol. 2, c. 38. Toronto : Queen's Printer, 1968.

Mewett, Alan W. Report to the Attorney General of Ontario on the Office and Function of Justices of the Peace in Ontario, 1981.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de l'Alberta, [2001] 1 W.W.R. 606, 83 Alta. L.R. (3d) 215, 266 A.R. 266, 25 Admin. L.R. (3d) 17, 49 C.P.C. (4th) 18, [2000] A.J. No. 1101 (QL), 2000 ABCA 248, confirmant une décision de la Cour du Banc de la Reine (1999), 240 A.R. 146, 28 C.P.C. (4th) 342, 60 C.R.R. (2d) 107, [1999] A.J. No. 451 (QL), 1999 ABQB 45. Pourvoi accueilli.

Robert C. Maybank et Christine Enns, pour l'appelante.

Alan D. Hunter, c.r., Sheilah L. Martin, c.r., et James T. Eamon, pour les intimés.

David Sgayias, c.r., et Jan Brongers, pour l'intervenant le procureur général du Canada.

Janet E. Minor et Sean Hanley, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Ontario.

Monique Rousseau et Julie Dassylva, pour l'intervenant le procureur général du Québec.

George H. Copley, c.r., pour l'intervenant le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique.

Graeme G. Mitchell, c.r., pour l'intervenant le procureur général de la Saskatchewan.

Paul B. Schabas et Catherine Beagan Flood, pour l'intervenante Association of Justices of the Peace of Ontario.

Version française du jugement de la Cour rendu par

LE JUGE MAJOR — Le présent pourvoi porte sur la constitutionnalité de réformes législatives destinées à relever les qualifications des juges de paix justices of the peace. The challenged amendments to the Justice of the Peace Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. J-3, require all justices of the peace who exercise judicial functions to meet qualifications decided upon by an independent Judicial Council.

The respondents, and other justices of the peace appointed prior to the amendments, did not meet the qualifications. They were removed from office, but were offered administrative positions as non-presiding justices of the peace.

The courts below held that the removal of the respondents from office contravenes the principle of judicial independence. With respect, I disagree. The principle of judicial independence must be interpreted in light of the public interests it is meant to protect: a strong and independent judiciary capable of upholding the rule of law and our constitutional order, and public confidence in the administration of justice. The reforms in this case reflect a good faith and considered decision of the Legislature that was intended to promote these interests. As a result, the legislation does not undermine the perception of independence in the mind of a reasonable and informed person, and is respectful of the principle of judicial independence. I would allow the appeal.

albertains et à accroître leur indépendance. Les modifications contestées, qui ont été apportées à la Justice of the Peace Act, R.S.A. 1980, ch. J-3, exigent que tous les juges de paix qui exercent des fonctions judiciaires aient les qualifications fixées par un conseil de la magistrature indépendant.

2 Les intimés, ainsi que d'autres juges de paix nommés avant les modifications apportées, n'avaient pas les qualifications requises. Ils ont été destitués, mais se sont vu offrir des fonctions administratives à titre de juges de paix non présidant.

3 Les cours d'instance inférieure ont conclu que la destitution des intimés contrevient au principe de l'indépendance judiciaire. En toute déférence, je ne partage pas leur avis. Le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire doit être interprété à la lumière des intérêts du public qu'il est censé protéger : un pouvoir judiciaire fort et indépendant capable d'assurer le respect de la primauté du droit et de notre ordre constitutionnel, et la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice. Les réformes dont il est question en l'espèce reflètent une décision que la législature a prise de bonne foi et de façon réfléchie dans le but de promouvoir ces intérêts. Par conséquent, la mesure législative en cause ne mine pas la perception d'indépendance qu'aurait une personne raisonnable et renseignée, et elle respecte le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire. Je suis d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi.

I. Factual Background

Justices of the peace have played an important role in Canada's administration of justice since the adoption of the position from England in the 18th century. It has long been accepted that s. 92(14) of the Constitution Act, 1867 confers upon the provinces full control over the appointment and regulation of these judicial officers. See Reference re Adoption Act, [1938] S.C.R. 398, per Duff C.J., at p. 406, citing R. v. Bush (1888), 15 O.R. 398 (Q.B.), at p. 405:

> The administration of justice could not be carried on in the Provinces effectually without the appointment of justices of the peace and police magistrates, and the conclusion seems to me to be irresistible that it was intended that the appointment of these and other officers, whose duty it should be to aid in the administration of justice, should be left in the hands of the Provincial Legislatures.

I. Les faits

4 Les juges de paix jouent un rôle important dans l'administration de la justice au Canada depuis que la charge qu'ils occupent a été empruntée à l'Angleterre au XVIII^{e} siècle. Il est reconnu depuis longtemps que le par. 92(14) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 assujettit au contrôle total des provinces la nomination et la réglementation de ces officiers de justice. Voir Reference re Adoption Act, [1938] R.C.S. 398, p. 406, où le juge en chef Duff, cite le passage suivant de la décision R. c. Bush (1888), 15 O.R. 398 (B.R.), p. 405 :

> [TRADUCTION] Il ne saurait y avoir d'administration efficace de la justice dans les provinces sans la nomination de juges de paix et de magistrats de police, et la

5 The powers and authority of justices of the peace have waxed and waned over time and across the country. In many provinces, they have come to occupy a critical role as the point of entry into the criminal justice system, with jurisdiction over bail hearings and the issuance of search warrants. As a result of an increased recognition of their important functions, numerous commissions have issued reports describing problems with the office and making recommendations for change: see Hon. J. C. McRuer, Royal Commission Inquiry Into Civil Rights (1968), Report No. 1, vol. 2, c. 38 ("McRuer Commission"); A. W. Mewett, Report to the Attorney General of Ontario on the Office and Function of Justices of the Peace in Ontario (1981) ("Mewett Report"); J. E. Klinck, Report of the Justice of the Peace Committee (1986); the Manitoba Law Reform Commission, The Independence of Justices of the Peace and Magistrates (1991), Report No. 75 ("Manitoba Report"); and A. N. Doob, P. M. Baranek and S. M. Addario, Understanding Justices: A Study of Canadian Justices of the Peace (1991) ("Doob Report").

6 These reports have invariably indicated a pressing need to improve both the independence and qualifications of justices of the peace. The McRuer Commission concluded, at p. 524, with regard to Ontario's justices of the peace:

> . . . the whole concept, that the office should stand as a safeguard of the civil rights of the individual against the exercise of arbitrary police power, is in many cases, and probably in most cases, little more than a sham. In saying this we do not want to be taken as condemning individuals. We are condemning a system under which many conscientious and dedicated individuals are required to work.

Many provinces have enacted significant reforms since then in an effort to meet the stated concerns: in Ontario, the Justices of the Peace Act, 1989, S.O. 1989, c. 46, s. 4(4); in Saskatchewan, The Justices of conclusion que la nomination de ces officiers de justice et d'autres agents — dont la mission doit consister à faciliter l'administration de la justice — est censée relever des législatures provinciales me paraît incontournable.

Dans notre pays, les pouvoirs et le mandat des juges de paix ont varié au fil des ans. Dans maintes provinces, les juges de paix — compétents pour tenir des enquêtes sur cautionnement et décerner des mandats de perquisition — en sont venus à jouer un rôle crucial au seuil du système de justice criminelle. La reconnaissance accrue de l'importance de leurs fonctions est à l'origine de la publication de nombreux rapports de commission décrivant les problèmes liés à cette charge et recommandant des changements : voir l'honorable J. C. McRuer, Royal Commission Inquiry Into Civil Rights (1968), rapport n^{o} 1, vol. 2, ch. 38 (« commission McRuer »); A. W. Mewett, Report to the Attorney General of Ontario on the Office and Function of Justices of the Peace in Ontario (1981) (« rapport Mewett »); J. E. Klinck, Report of the Justice of the Peace Committee (1986); Commission de réforme du droit du Manitoba, The Independence of Justices of the Peace and Magistrates (1991), rapport n^{o} 75 (« rapport manitobain »); A. N. Doob, P. M. Baranek et S. M. Addario, Understanding Justices : A Study of Canadian Justices of the Peace (1991) (« rapport Doob »).

Ces rapports soulignent tous, sans exception, l'urgence d'accroître l'indépendance des juges de paix et de relever leurs qualifications. La commission McRuer a conclu ce qui suit à propos des juges de paix ontariens (à la p. 524) :

> [TRADUCTION] . . . toute l'idée selon laquelle cette charge devrait servir à protéger les droits civils des particuliers contre l'exercice arbitraire des pouvoirs de la police n'est dans bien des cas, voire dans la plupart des cas, guère plus que de la frime. Nous ne voulons pas que l'on croie que, par ces propos, nous condamnons des personnes en particulier. Nous condamnons un système dans le cadre duquel de nombreuses personnes consciencieuses et dévouées doivent travailler.

Depuis lors, maintes provinces ont adopté des réformes importantes afin de dissiper les inquiétudes exprimées : en Ontario, la Loi de 1989 sur les juges de paix, L.O. 1989, ch. 46, par. 4(4); the Peace Act, 1988, S.S. 1988-89, c. J-5.1, s. 6(7); and in the Northwest Territories, An Act to Amend the Justices of the Peace Act, R.S.N.W.T. 1988, c. 39 (Supp.), ss. 5 and 8.

Alberta enacted legislative reforms to the office in 1991: see the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 1991, S.A. 1991, c. 21, s. 16. The legislation brought in two significant changes. First, security of tenure was provided for all justices of the peace until age 70. Removal could only be for cause following a recommendation of the Justices of the Peace Review Council. Second, in an effort to tailor the qualifications of justices of the peace to their specific duties, the office was divided into the categories of sitting and non-sitting justices of the peace. Sitting justices of the peace were authorized to preside over trials of less serious offences and to sit in Provincial Court. Appointment to this position required membership in the Law Society of Alberta and five years of related experience.

Non-sitting justices of the peace were not required to meet any eligibility criteria, apart from Canadian citizenship. These judicial officers were authorized to preside over judicial interim release; to issue search warrants, summons, subpoenas and arrest warrants; and to confirm or cancel police process. They also performed numerous administrative tasks, including receiving information and affidavits, scheduling trials and hearing dates, and administering oaths. The position was divided into four sub-categories: hearing officers, who worked full-time on salary; ad hoc justices, who worked part-time on a per diem basis; fee justices, who were paid per transaction; and staff justices, who were employed and paid by the Department of Justice.

en Saskatchewan, Loi de 1988 sur les juges de paix, L.S. 1988-89, ch. J-5,1, par. 6(7); dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les juges de paix, L.R.T.N.-O. 1988, ch. 39 (suppl.), art. 5 et 8.

7 En Alberta, la charge a été soumise à des réformes législatives en 1991 : voir la Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 1991, S.A. 1991, ch. 21, art. 16. Cette loi a apporté deux changements importants. Premièrement, tous les juges de paix seraient inamovibles jusqu'à l'âge de 70 ans. Il ne pourrait y avoir destitution que pour un motif suffisant, à la suite d'une recommandation du Justices of the Peace Review Council (« conseil de surveillance des juges de paix »). Deuxièmement, en vue d'adapter les qualifications des juges de paix à leurs fonctions particulières, la charge a été divisée en deux catégories, à savoir celle des juges de paix siégeant et celle des juges de paix non siégeant. Les juges de paix siégeant étaient autorisés à présider les procès relatifs à des infractions moins graves et à siéger à la Cour provinciale. Pour être nommé à cette charge, il fallait être membre de la Law Society of Alberta (« barreau de l'Alberta ») et avoir cinq ans d'expérience pertinente.

8 Les juges de paix non siégeant n'étaient assujettis à aucun critère d'admissibilité, à part celui de la citoyenneté canadienne. Ces officiers de justice étaient autorisés à présider les audiences de mise en liberté provisoire, à décerner des mandats de perquisition, des sommations, des assignations et des mandats d'arrestation, et à confirmer ou à annuler des actes de procédure obtenus par la police. Ils accomplissaient également de nombreuses tâches administratives, dont la réception des dénonciations et des affidavits, l'établissement du rôle et des dates d'audience et la prestation de serment. La charge était divisée en quatre sous-catégories : les agents d'audience (hearing officers), travaillant à temps plein et touchant un salaire; les juges de paix ad hoc (ad hoc justices), travaillant à temps partiel et rémunérés à la journée; les juges de paix payés sur honoraires (fee justices), c'est-à-dire rémunérés à la tâche; les juges de paix salariés (staff justices), employés et rémunérés par le ministère de la Justice.

9 In 1998, Alberta enacted more extensive reforms, which are the subject of the present appeal. The purpose of the amendments, as expressed by Alberta's Minister of Justice, was > to ensure the independence of the courts of Alberta in keeping with the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada.

>
> (Alberta Hansard, March 11, 1998, at p. 811)

In a further effort to ensure that justices of the peace are qualified for the duties they perform, the amendments replace the office of non-sitting justices of the peace with the positions of presiding and non-presiding justices of the peace. In essence, presiding justices of the peace assume the judicial tasks that had previously been assigned to the non-sitting justices of the peace, and non-presiding justices of the peace are limited to their administrative tasks.

10 The amendments stipulate that in order to be appointed as a sitting or presiding justice of the peace, a person must be deemed qualified by an independent Judicial Council: Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 1998, S.A. 1998, c. 18, s. 2.1(1). The Judicial Council unanimously agreed on minimum qualifications of membership in the Law Society of Alberta and five years related experience. The amendments also bar persons who suffer from inherent conflicts of interest (such as government employees, law enforcement officers, prosecutors, and prison guards) from appointment: s. 2.1(5). Individuals who had previously been appointed but did not meet these requirements were precluded from holding office: s. 2.4(8). They were offered administrative positions as non-presiding justices of the peace.

11 Of the several hundred non-sitting justices of the peace appointed prior to the amendments, only 15 ad hoc justices met the objective requirements for appointment as presiding justices of the peace. The three respondents, who were classified as hearing officers and lacked the new qualifications, were not appointed to that office, nor were the approximately 200 fee justices and 250 staff justices. They were

En 1998, l'Alberta a adopté des réformes plus importantes, qui font l'objet du présent pourvoi. Comme l'a affirmé le ministre de la Justice de l'Alberta, ces modifications visaient à > [TRADUCTION] garantir l'indépendance des tribunaux judiciaires albertains conformément à la jurisprudence récente de la Cour suprême du Canada.

>
> (Alberta Hansard, 11 mars 1998, p. 811)

Toujours dans le but de garantir que les juges de paix aient les qualifications nécessaires pour exercer leurs fonctions, les modifications remplacent la charge de juge de paix non siégeant par celles de juge de paix présidant et de juge de paix non présidant. Essentiellement, les juges de paix présidant accomplissent les tâches judiciaires auparavant confiées aux juges de paix non siégeant, et les juges de paix non présidant se voient confier uniquement des tâches administratives.

Les modifications prévoient que pour être nommée juge de paix siégeant ou juge de paix présidant, une personne doit être jugée qualifiée par un conseil de la magistrature indépendant : Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 1998, S.A. 1998, ch. 18, par. 2.1(1). Le conseil de la magistrature a convenu à l'unanimité que, pour être nommé, il fallait au moins être membre du barreau de l'Alberta et avoir au moins cinq ans d'expérience pertinente. Les modifications empêchent également la nomination de personnes en situation de conflit d'intérêts inhérent (tels les employés du gouvernement, les agents responsables de l'application de la loi, les procureurs et les gardiens de prison) (par. 2.1(5)). Les personnes occupant déjà cette charge, mais ne satisfaisant pas à ces conditions minimales, ne pouvaient plus rester en fonction (par. 2.4(8)). Elles se sont vu offrir des fonctions administratives à titre de juges de paix non présidant.

Parmi plusieurs centaines de juges de paix non siégeant qui avaient été nommés avant l'entrée en vigueur des modifications, seulement 15 juges de paix ad hoc remplissaient les conditions objectives requises pour être nommés juges de paix présidant. Les trois intimés, qui faisaient partie de la sous-catégorie des agents d'audience et qui n'avaient pas les nouvelles qualifications requises, n'ont pas été offered positions as non-presiding justices of the peace.

The respondents brought an application to the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench for a declaration that s. 2.4(8), which removed them from office, contravened their constitutionally required security of tenure and independence. The chambers judge granted the application and declared the provision to be of no force and effect as it applied to them. The Court of Appeal for Alberta upheld the finding of the chambers judge. The Province appeals from that decision.

II. Relevant Statutory Provisions

The following provisions of the Justice of the Peace Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. J-3, subsequently repealed under the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 1998, are relevant:

5 The appointment of a justice of the peace terminates when he attains the age of 70 years.

5.1(1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall, subject to the regulations, establish a Justices of the Peace Review Council.

(2) The Justices of the Peace Review Council shall

(a) review complaints respecting the lack of competence of, conduct or misbehaviour of, or neglect of duty by, justices of the peace or the inability of justices of the peace to perform their duties, and

(b) make recommendations to the Lieutenant Governor in Council in respect of matters reviewed under clause (a).

5.2 Notwithstanding section 5, the appointment of a justice of the peace may be terminated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Justices of the Peace Review Council.

The relevant 1998 amendments to the Justice of the Peace Act are:

2.1(1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may appoint a person as a justice of the peace designated as a sitting nommés à cette charge, pas plus que les quelque 200 juges de paix payés sur honoraires et 250 juges de paix salariés. On leur a offert des postes de juge de paix non présidant.

12 Les intimés ont présenté à la Cour du Banc de la Reine de l'Alberta une demande de jugement déclarant que le par. 2.4(8), à l'origine de leur destitution, portait atteinte à l'inamovibilité et à l'indépendance dont ils doivent bénéficier en vertu de la Constitution. Le juge en chambre a accueilli la demande et déclaré la disposition inopérante à leur égard. La Cour d'appel de l'Alberta a confirmé la conclusion du juge en chambre. La province se pourvoit contre cette décision.

II. Les dispositions législatives pertinentes

13 Les dispositions suivantes de la Justice of the Peace Act, R.S.A. 1980, ch. J-3, subséquemment abrogées par la Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 1998, sont pertinentes :

[TRADUCTION]

5 Le juge de paix occupe sa charge jusqu'à l'âge de 70 ans.

5.1(1) Sous réserve des règlements, le lieutenant-gouverneur en conseil établit un conseil de surveillance des juges de paix.

(2) Le conseil de surveillance des juges de paix :

a) examine les plaintes fondées sur l'incompétence, la conduite ou l'inconduite des juges de paix, ou sur leur manquement au devoir ou leur incapacité d'exercer leurs fonctions;

b) soumet au lieutenant-gouverneur des recommandations relatives aux plaintes examinées en vertu de l'alinéa a).

5.2 Par dérogation à l'article 5, le lieutenant-gouverneur en conseil peut destituer un juge de paix, sur recommandation du conseil de surveillance des juges de paix.

Les modifications pertinentes qui ont été apportées en 1998 à la Justice of the Peace Act sont les suivantes :

[TRADUCTION]

2.1(1) Le lieutenant-gouverneur en conseil peut nommer une personne juge de paix désigné comme juge de paix justice of the peace or as a presiding justice of the peace if the Judicial Council has determined that the person is qualified.

(2) An order under subsection (1) shall designate the person appointed as a sitting justice of the peace or as a presiding justice of the peace and shall designate whether the appointment is full-time or part-time.

2.2(1) The Minister may appoint a person as a justice of the peace designated as a non-presiding justice of the peace.

(2) A non-presiding justice of the peace is appointed as a justice of the peace solely for the purposes of exercising the following, to the extent that their exercise is consistent with the constitutional requirements for independence, if any:

(a) administering oaths or affirmations or taking declarations;

(b) processing judicial interim release orders;

(c) adjourning cases where a judge of the Provincial Court or a sitting justice of the peace is not present;

(d) performing any other functions and duties prescribed by the regulations.

2.4 . . .

(8) A person appointed as a justice of the peace before the coming into force of this section who is not appointed under section 2.1(1) or 2.2 may not exercise any authority or receive any remuneration as a justice of the peace after this section comes into force.

siégeant ou comme juge de paix présidant, si le conseil de la magistrature juge que cette personne est qualifiée.

(2) Le décret pris en vertu du paragraphe (1) désigne la personne nommée juge de paix siégeant ou comme juge de paix présidant, et précise si la nomination est à temps plein ou à temps partiel.

2.2(1) Le ministre peut nommer une personne juge de paix désigné comme juge de paix non présidant.

(2) Le juge de paix non présidant n'est nommé juge de paix que pour exercer les fonctions suivantes, pourvu que leur exercice soit conforme aux exigences constitutionnelles d'indépendance, s'il en est :

a) faire prêter serment ou recevoir des affirmations ou déclarations solennelles;

b) traiter les ordonnances de mise en liberté provisoire;

c) ordonner des ajournements en cas d'absence d'un juge de la Cour provinciale ou d'un juge siégeant;

d) exercer toute autre attribution conférée par règlement.

2.4 . . .

(8) Une personne nommée juge de paix avant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente disposition, qui n'a toutefois pas été nommée en vertu du par. 2.1(1) ou de l'art. 2.2, ne peut exercer aucun pouvoir ni être rémunérée en qualité de juge de paix après l'entrée en vigueur de la présente disposition.

III. Judicial History

14 At the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench, McMahon J. held that the respondents carried out judicial functions ((1999), 240 A.R. 146, 1999 ABQB 45). As such, their position attracted the constitutional principle of judicial independence. The chambers judge noted that security of tenure was at the core of this principle. He held that the retroactive imposition of an educational requirement that the respondents could not meet, and their subsequent removal from office, would necessarily undermine the perception of independence to a reasonable and informed person. As a result, he concluded that s. 2.4(8) was constitutionally invalid and was of no force and effect insofar as it relates to the

III. Historique des procédures judiciaires

Le juge McMahon de la Cour du Banc de la Reine de l'Alberta a conclu que les intimés exerçaient des fonctions judiciaires ((1999), 240 A.R. 146, 1999 ABQB 45). Par conséquent, le principe constitutionnel de l'indépendance judiciaire s'appliquait à leur charge. Le juge en chambre a souligné que l'inamovibilité était au cœur de ce principe. Il a estimé que l'exigence rétroactive d'un niveau particulier d'instruction, à laquelle les intimés ne pouvaient satisfaire, et la destitution subséquente de ces derniers mineraient nécessairement la perception d'indépendance qu'aurait une personne raisonnable et renseignée. Il a donc conclu que le par. 2.4(8) était inconstitutionnel et inopérant à l'égard des intimés, respondents. He declared that the respondents should continue to serve as non-sitting justices of the peace and enjoy security of tenure in accordance with ss. 5, 5.1 and 5.2 of the Justice of the Peace Act.

The Alberta Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal and upheld the declaration of the chambers judge ([2001] 1 W.W.R. 606, 2000 ABCA 248). That court observed that the essence of security of tenure requires protection "against interference by the Executive or other appointing authority in a discretionary or arbitrary manner": see Valente v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673, at p. 698. The Court of Appeal held that this standard required that a judicial officer be removable from office only for cause following a hearing by an independent tribunal. In this case, cause has not been alleged. Accordingly, the removal of the respondents from office violated their security of tenure and contravened the principle of independence.

IV. Issues

The Chief Justice stated the following constitutional questions on May 1, 2002:

1. Does s. 2.4(8) of the Justice of the Peace Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. J-3, as amended, interfere with the tenure of non-sitting justices of the peace and thereby violate the principle of judicial independence guaranteed by:

   (a) the preamble of the Constitution Act, 1867, or

   (b) section 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

2. If the answer to question 1(b) is yes, is the Act demonstrably justified as a reasonable limit prescribed by law under s. 1 of the Charter?

V. Analysis

The primary issues in this appeal are whether the principle of judicial independence extends to the office of the respondents, and if so, whether the legislated removal of the respondents from office contravenes that principle. I agree that the principle applies to the position of the respondents as a result of their authority to exercise judicial qui, selon lui, devraient continuer à occuper le poste de juge de paix non siégeant et à bénéficier de l'inamovibilité conformément aux art. 5, 5.1 et 5.2 de la Justice of the Peace Act.

15 La Cour d'appel de l'Alberta a rejeté l'appel et confirmé la validité du jugement déclaratoire du juge en chambre ([2001] 1 W.W.R. 606, 2000 ABCA 48). Elle a noté que l'inamovibilité requiert essentiellement une protection contre « toute intervention discrétionnaire ou arbitraire de la part de l'exécutif ou de l'autorité responsable des nominations » : voir Valente c. La Reine, [1985] 2 R.C.S. 673, p. 698. La Cour d'appel était d'avis que, selon cette norme, un officier de justice ne pouvait être destitué que pour un motif suffisant, à la suite d'une audience tenue par un tribunal indépendant. En l'espèce, aucun motif suffisant n'a été allégué. Par conséquent, la destitution des intimés portait atteinte à leur inamovibilité et contrevenait au principe de l'indépendance.

IV. Les questions en litige

16 Le 1er mai 2002, la Juge en chef a formulé les questions constitutionnelles suivantes :

1. Le paragraphe 2.4(8) de la Justice of the Peace Act, R.S.A. 1980, ch. J-3 et ses modifications, porte-t-il atteinte à l'inamovibilité des juges de paix non siégeant et contrevient-il, de ce fait, au principe de l'indépendance judiciaire garanti par :

   a) le préambule de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 ou

   b) l'alinéa 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés?

2. Si la réponse à la première question est affirmative, s'agit-il d'une loi dont la justification peut se démontrer en tant que limite raisonnable prescrite par une règle de droit, conformément à l'article premier de la Charte?

V. Analyse

17 Les principales questions en litige dans le présent pourvoi sont de savoir si le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire s'applique à la charge des intimés et, dans l'affirmative, si la destitution des intimés par voie législative contrevient à ce principe. Je reconnais que le principe s'applique à la charge des intimés en raison de leur pouvoir d'exercer des functions. However, I conclude that the amendments at issue do not violate the constitutional essence of the respondents' security of tenure, and so do not contravene the principle of judicial independence.

A. The Scope of Judicial Independence

18 Judicial independence has been recognized as "the lifeblood of constitutionalism in democratic societies": see Beauregard v. Canada, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 56, at p. 70, per Dickson C.J. It requires objective conditions that ensure the judiciary's freedom to act without interference from any other entity. The principle finds explicit constitutional reference in ss. 96 to 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The application of these provisions is limited: the former to judges of superior courts, and the latter to courts and tribunals that determine the guilt of those charged with criminal offences: see Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 3 ("Provincial Court Judges Reference"), at para. 84, per Lamer C.J. The respondents do not fall into either of these categories. Nonetheless, as this Court has recognized, the principle of judicial independence extends beyond the limited scope of the above provisions.

19 Judicial independence has been a cornerstone of the United Kingdom's constitutional structure back to the Act of Settlement of 1700, 12 & 13 Will. 3, c. 2. See the comments of Lord Lane, cited in Beauregard, supra, at p. 71:

> Few constitutional precepts are more generally accepted there in England, the land which boasts no written constitution, than the necessity for the judiciary to be secure from undue influence and autonomous within its own field ("Judicial Independence and the Increasing Executive Role in Judicial Administration", in S. Shetreet and J. Deschênes (eds.), Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate (1985), at p. 525).

fonctions judiciaires. Cependant, je conclus que les modifications en cause ne portent pas atteinte à l'inamovibilité dont les intimés doivent bénéficier en vertu de la Constitution et ne contreviennent donc pas au principe de l'indépendance judiciaire.

A. La portée de l'indépendance judiciaire

L'indépendance judiciaire a été reconnue comme étant « l'élément vital du caractère constitutionnel des sociétés démocratiques » : voir Beauregard c. Canada, [1986] 2 R.C.S. 56, p. 70, le juge en chef Dickson. Elle requiert des conditions objectives garantissant au pouvoir judiciaire une liberté d'agir sans ingérence de la part de quelque autre entité. Le principe est mentionné expressément aux art. 96 à 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 et à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés. L'application de ces dispositions est limitée : dans le premier cas, les articles en question s'appliquent aux juges des cours supérieures, et dans le deuxième cas, l'alinéa mentionné s'applique aux tribunaux qui se prononcent sur la culpabilité de personnes accusées d'une infraction criminelle : voir le Renvoi relatif à la rémunération des juges de la Cour provinciale de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, [1997] 3 R.C.S. 3 (« Renvoi relatif aux juges de la Cour provinciale »), par. 84, le juge en chef Lamer. Les intimés ne font partie d'aucune de ces catégories. Néanmoins, comme notre Cour l'a reconnu, la portée du principe de l'indépendance judiciaire excède celle des dispositions susmentionnées.

L'indépendance judiciaire est un principe fondamental du régime constitutionnel du Royaume-Uni depuis l'Act of Settlement de 1700, 12 & 13 Will. 3, ch. 2. Voir les commentaires de lord Lane, reproduits dans l'arrêt Beauregard, précité, p. 71 :

> [TRADUCTION] Peu de préceptes constitutionnels sont plus généralement acceptés en Angleterre, le pays qui se glorifie de n'avoir aucune constitution écrite, que la nécessité pour le pouvoir judiciaire d'être à l'abri de toute influence indue et d'être autonome dans son propre domaine de compétence (« Judicial Independence and the Increasing Executive Role in Judicial Administration », dans S. Shetreet et J. Deschênes (éd.), Judicial Independence : The Contemporary Debate (1985), à la p. 525).

The preamble to the Constitution Act, 1867 provides for Canada to have "a Constitution similar in Principle to that of the United Kingdom". These words, by their adoption of the basic principles of the United Kingdom's Constitution, serve as textual affirmation of an unwritten principle of judicial independence in Canada. Lamer C.J. concluded as follows in Provincial Court Judges Reference, supra, at para. 109:

> . . . it is in that preamble, which serves as the grand entrance hall to the castle of the Constitution, that the true source of our commitment to this foundational principle is located.

The preamble acknowledges judicial independence to be one of the pillars upon which our constitutional democracy rests.

Historically, the principle of judicial independence was confined to the superior courts. As a result of the expansion of judicial duties beyond that realm, it is now accepted that all courts fall within the principle's embrace. See Provincial Court Judges Reference, supra, at para. 106:

> . . . our Constitution has evolved over time. In the same way that our understanding of rights and freedoms has grown, such that they have now been expressly entrenched through the enactment of the Constitution Act, 1982, so too has judicial independence grown into a principle that now extends to all courts, not just the superior courts of this country.

The scope of the unwritten principle of independence must be interpreted in accordance with its underlying purposes. In this appeal, its extension to the office held by the respondents depends on whether they exercise judicial functions that relate to the bases upon which the principle is founded.

The historical rationale for independence was to ensure that judges, as the arbiters of disputes, are at complete liberty to decide individual cases on their merits without interference: see Beauregard, supra, at p. 69. The integrity of judicial decision making depends on an adjudicative process that is untainted by outside pressures. This gives rise to the individual dimension of judicial independence, that is,

Le préambule de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 dote le Canada d'« une constitution reposant sur les mêmes principes que celle du Royaume-Uni ». Du fait qu'ils évoquent l'adoption des principes fondamentaux de la Constitution du Royaume-Uni, ces mots confirment par écrit un principe non écrit d'indépendance judiciaire au Canada. Le juge en chef Lamer a tiré la conclusion suivante dans le Renvoi relatif aux juges de la Cour provinciale, précité, par. 109 :

> . . . c'est dans le préambule, qui constitue le portail de l'édifice constitutionnel, que se trouve la véritable source de notre engagement envers ce principe fondamental.

Le préambule reconnaît que l'indépendance judiciaire est l'un des piliers de notre démocratie constitutionnelle.

20 Autrefois, le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire s'appliquait uniquement aux cours supérieures. Depuis que les fonctions judiciaires ne sont plus l'apanage exclusif de ces cours, il est maintenant accepté que ce principe s'applique à tous les tribunaux judiciaires. Voir le Renvoi relatif aux juges de la Cour provinciale, précité, par. 106 :

> . . . notre Constitution a évolué avec le temps. Tout comme notre compréhension des droits et des libertés a progressé, à tel point qu'ils ont été expressément constitutionnalisés par l'édiction de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, l'indépendance de la magistrature est devenue un principe qui vise maintenant tous les tribunaux, et non seulement les cours supérieures du pays.

Le principe non écrit de l'indépendance judiciaire doit être interprété conformément aux objets qui le sous-tendent. En l'espèce, l'indépendance judiciaire ne s'appliquera à la charge des intimés que s'il est déterminé qu'ils exercent des fonctions judiciaires liées aux fondements de ce principe.

21 La raison d'être de l'indépendance judiciaire a toujours été de garantir que les juges, en tant qu'arbitres de différends, soient complètement libres de trancher chaque affaire au fond sans ingérence de la part de qui que ce soit : voir Beauregard, précité, p. 69. L'intégrité du processus décisionnel judiciaire n'est assurée que si la prise des décisions n'est assujettie à aucune pression extérieure. D'où l'aspect the need to ensure that a particular judge is free to decide upon a case without influence from others.

22 In modern times, it has been recognized that the basis for judicial independence extends far beyond the need for impartiality in individual cases. The judiciary occupies an indispensable role in upholding the integrity of our constitutional structure: see Provincial Court Judges Reference, supra, at para. 108. In Canada, like other federal states, courts adjudicate on disputes between the federal and provincial governments, and serve to safeguard the constitutional distribution of powers. Courts also ensure that the power of the state is exercised in accordance with the rule of law and the provisions of our Constitution. In this capacity, courts act as a shield against unwarranted deprivations by the state of the rights and freedoms of individuals. Dickson C.J. described this role in Beauregard, supra, at p. 70:

> [Courts act as] protector of the Constitution and the fundamental values embodied in it — rule of law, fundamental justice, equality, preservation of the democratic process, to name perhaps the most important.

This constitutional mandate gives rise to the principle's institutional dimension: the need to maintain the independence of a court or tribunal as a whole from the executive and legislative branches of government.

23 Accordingly, the judiciary's role as arbiter of disputes and guardian of the Constitution require that it be independent from all other bodies. A separate, but related, basis for independence is the need to uphold public confidence in the administration of justice. Confidence in our system of justice requires a healthy perception of judicial independence to be maintained amongst the citizenry. Without the perception of independence, the judiciary is unable to "claim any legitimacy or command the respect and acceptance that are essential to it": see Mackin v. New Brunswick (Minister of Finance), [2002] 1 S.C.R. 405, 2002 SCC 13, at para. 38, per individuel de l'indépendance judiciaire, c'est-à-dire la nécessité de veiller à ce que le juge soit libre de trancher une affaire sans influence extérieure.

De nos jours, on reconnaît que le besoin d'impartialité dans chaque cas est loin d'être le seul impératif justifiant l'indépendance judiciaire. Le pouvoir judiciaire joue un rôle indispensable pour ce qui est de préserver la structure fondamentale de notre Constitution : voir le Renvoi relatif aux juges de la Cour provinciale, précité, par. 108. Au Canada, comme dans les autres États fédéraux, les tribunaux judiciaires tranchent les différends opposant le gouvernement fédéral et les gouvernements provinciaux et veillent au respect du partage constitutionnel des compétences. Ces mêmes tribunaux veillent également à ce que l'exercice du pouvoir étatique respecte la primauté du droit et les dispositions de notre Constitution. À ce titre, ils servent de bouclier contre les atteintes injustifiées de l'État aux droits et libertés des citoyens. Le juge en chef Dickson a décrit ainsi ce rôle dans l'arrêt Beauregard, précité, p. 70 :

> [Les tribunaux judiciaires jouent le rôle de] protecteur de la constitution et des valeurs fondamentales qui y sont enchâssées — la primauté du droit, la justice fondamentale, l'égalité, la préservation du processus démocratique, pour n'en nommer peut-être que les plus importantes.

Ce mandat constitutionnel est à l'origine de l'aspect institutionnel du principe : la nécessité de maintenir l'indépendance d'un tribunal judiciaire ou administratif dans son ensemble vis-à-vis des organes exécutif et législatif du gouvernement.

Par conséquent, en raison de son rôle d'arbitre des différends et de gardien de la Constitution, le pouvoir judiciaire doit être complètement indépendant. Un motif séparé, mais connexe, justifiant l'indépendance judiciaire est la nécessité de maintenir la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice. Pour que règne la confiance dans notre système de justice, il faut s'assurer que les citoyens aient toujours une saine perception d'indépendance judiciaire. Sans cette perception d'indépendance, le pouvoir judiciaire ne peut pas « prétendre à la légitimité, ni commander le respect et l'acceptation qui lui sont essentiels » : voir Mackin c.

Gonthier J. The principle requires the judiciary to be independent both in fact and perception.

Nouveau-Brunswick (Ministre des Finances), [2002] 1 R.C.S. 405, 2002 CSC 13, par. 38, le juge Gonthier. Le principe exige que le pouvoir judiciaire soit non seulement effectivement indépendant, mais encore perçu comme étant indépendant.

In light of these bases of judicial independence — impartiality in adjudication, preservation of our constitutional order, and public confidence in the administration of justice — it is clear that the principle extends its protection to the judicial office held by the respondents. Alberta's non-sitting justices of the peace exercised judicial functions directly related to the enforcement of law in the court system. They served on the front line of the criminal justice process, and performed numerous judicial functions that significantly affected the rights and liberties of individuals. Of singular importance was their jurisdiction over bail hearings. Justices of the peace are included in the definition of "justice" under s. 2 of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, and the respondents were thereby authorized to determine judicial interim release pursuant to s. 515 of the Code. Decisions on judicial interim release impact upon the right to security of the person under s. 7 of the Charter and the right not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause under s. 11(e). Professor Friedland commented upon the importance of bail hearings in Detention before Trial: A Study of Criminal Cases Tried in the Toronto Magistrates' Courts (1965), at p. 172:

24

À la lumière de ces raisons d'être de l'indépendance judiciaire — l'impartialité dans la prise de décisions et le maintien de notre ordre constitutionnel et de la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice — il est clair que la protection offerte par le principe s'applique également à la charge judiciaire occupée par les intimés. Les juges de paix albertains non siégeant exerçaient des fonctions judiciaires directement liées à l'application de la loi au sein du système judiciaire. Ils étaient sur la ligne de feu du processus de justice criminelle et exerçaient maintes fonctions judiciaires ayant une incidence importante sur les droits et libertés des citoyens. Leur compétence en matière d'enquêtes sur cautionnement revêtait une importance particulière. Les juges de paix étant visés par la définition de l'expression « juge de paix » figurant à l'art. 2 du Code criminel, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-46, les intimés étaient, de ce fait, autorisés à se prononcer sur des mises en liberté provisoire, conformément à l'art. 515 du Code. Les décisions en matière de mise en liberté provisoire ont une incidence sur le droit à la sécurité de la personne et sur le droit de ne pas être privé sans juste cause d'une mise en liberté assortie d'un cautionnement raisonnable, garantis respectivement par l'art. 7 et l'al. 11*e*) de la Charte. Le professeur Friedland a commenté ainsi l'importance des enquêtes sur cautionnement dans Detention before Trial : A Study of Criminal Cases Tried in the Toronto Magistrates' Courts (1965), p. 172 :

> The period before trial is too important to be left to guess-work and caprice. At stake in the process is the value of individual liberty. Custody during the period before trial not only affects the mental, social, and physical life of the accused and his family, but also may have a substantial impact on the result of the trial itself. The law should abhor any unnecessary deprivation of liberty and positive steps should be taken to ensure that detention before trial is kept to a minimum.

> [TRADUCTION] La période précédant le procès est trop importante pour être livrée à la conjecture et à l'arbitraire. C'est la valeur accordée à la liberté individuelle qui est alors en jeu. La détention avant le procès touche non seulement aux aspects moral, social et physique de la vie de l'accusé et de sa famille, mais peut également avoir une incidence considérable sur l'issue du procès lui-même. Le droit devrait avoir en horreur toute privation inutile de liberté, et des mesures concrètes devraient être prises pour faire en sorte que la détention avant le procès soit réduite au minimum.

The respondents were required to exercise significant judicial discretion in adjudicating on these matters.

25 The respondents also had the authority to issue search warrants, which impact upon the right to be secure from unreasonable search and seizure under s. 8 of the Charter. Sopinka J. described the effect of search warrants on the right to privacy in Baron v. Canada, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 416, at pp. 444-45:

> Physical search of private premises . . . is the greatest intrusion of privacy short of a violation of bodily integrity. . . .
>
> Warrants for the search of any premises constitute a significant intrusion on the privacy of an individual that is both upsetting and disruptive.

In that case, the Court concluded at p. 439 that the issuance of search warrants constitutionally required discretion to be exercised by a judicial officer who remains independent from the state and its agents.

26 Each of the above judicial responsibilities makes clear that the respondents played an important role in assisting the provincial and superior courts in fulfilling the judiciary's constitutional mandate. The following conclusion of Professor Mewett on Ontario's justices of the peace is equally applicable to the respondents (Mewett Report, at p. 39):

> . . . the Justice of the Peace is the very person who stands between the individual and the arbitrary exercise of power by the state or its officials. It is essential that an independent person be the one to determine whether process should issue, whether a search warrant should be granted, whether and on what terms an accused should be released on bail and so on. This is a fundamental principle . . . [that] must be zealously preserved.

It is obvious the respondents were constitutionally required to be independent in the exercise of their duties.

Les intimés devaient exercer un pouvoir discrétionnaire judiciaire important en rendant des décisions à cet égard.

Les intimés étaient également habilités à décerner des mandats de perquisition, qui ont une incidence sur le droit à la protection contre les fouilles, les perquisitions et les saisies abusives, garanti par l'art. 8 de la Charte. Dans l'arrêt Baron c. Canada, [1993] 1 R.C.S. 416, p. 444-445, le juge Sopinka a décrit ainsi l'effet des mandats de perquisition sur le droit à la protection de la vie privée :

> La perquisition dans des locaux privés [. . .] constitue la plus grave atteinte à la vie privée, abstraction faite de l'atteinte à l'intégrité physique . . .
>
> Les mandats de perquisition constituent une atteinte importante à la vie privée d'un particulier qui est à la fois contrariante et perturbatrice.

À la page 439 de cet arrêt, la Cour a conclu que, pour être conforme à la Constitution, la délivrance d'un mandat de perquisition devait relever de l'exercice d'un pouvoir discrétionnaire par un officier de justice indépendant de l'État et de ses mandataires.

Il ressort clairement de chacune des fonctions judiciaires susmentionnées que les intimés aidaient grandement les cours provinciales et supérieures à remplir le mandat constitutionnel confié au pouvoir judiciaire. La conclusion suivante du professeur Mewett concernant les juges de paix ontariens s'applique également aux intimés (rapport Mewett, p. 39) :

> [TRADUCTION] . . . le juge de paix est la personne qui s'interpose entre le citoyen et l'exercice arbitraire de pouvoir par l'État ou ses fonctionnaires. Il est essentiel que ce soit une personne indépendante qui décide s'il y a lieu de délivrer l'acte de procédure, de décerner un mandat de perquisition ou de mettre un accusé en liberté sous caution et, le cas échéant, à quelles conditions, et ainsi de suite. Il s'agit d'un principe fondamental [. . . qui] doit être jalousement préservé.

Il est évident que l'indépendance des intimés dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions était une exigence constitutionnelle.

This review leads to the substance of judicial independence and to whether the legislation at issue contravenes this principle.

B. The Essential Conditions of Independence

As stated, judicial independence encompasses both an individual and institutional dimension. The former relates to the independence of a particular judge, and the latter to the independence of the court to which the judge is a member. Each of these dimensions depends on objective conditions or guarantees that ensure the judiciary's freedom from influence or any interference by others: see Valente, supra, at p. 685. The requisite guarantees are security of tenure, financial security and administrative independence: see Provincial Court Judges Reference, supra, at para. 115.

The principal question in this case is whether the Legislature's removal of the respondents from office contravened their security of tenure. In assessing this issue, it must be considered that the conditions of independence are intended to protect the interests of the public. Judicial independence serves not as an end in itself, but as a means to safeguard our constitutional order and to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice: see Provincial Court Judges Reference, supra, at para. 9. The principle exists for the benefit of the judged, not the judges. If the conditions of independence are not "interpreted in light of the public interests they were intended to serve, there is a danger that their application will wind up hurting rather than enhancing public confidence in the courts": see Mackin, supra, at para. 116, per Binnie J., in his dissent.

The manner in which the essential conditions of independence may be satisfied varies in accordance with the nature of the court or tribunal and the interests at stake. See Canadian Pacific Ltd. v. Matsqui Indian Band, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 3, at para. 83, per Lamer C.J., and Therrien (Re), [2001] 2 S.C.R. 3, 2001 SCC 35, at para. 65, where the Court advocated a contextual approach to judicial independence:

Cet examen nous amène au contenu de l'indépendance judiciaire et à la question de savoir si la mesure législative en cause contrevient à ce principe. 27

B. Les conditions essentielles de l'indépendance

Comme nous l'avons vu, l'indépendance judiciaire comporte à la fois un aspect individuel et un aspect institutionnel. Le premier aspect concerne l'indépendance du juge lui-même, et le deuxième, l'indépendance du tribunal judiciaire où il siège. Chacun de ces aspects est tributaire de l'existence de conditions ou garanties objectives destinées à soustraire le pouvoir judiciaire à toute influence ou à toute intervention extérieure : voir Valente, précité, p. 685. Les garanties nécessaires sont l'inamovibilité, la sécurité financière et l'indépendance administrative : voir le Renvoi relatif aux juges de la Cour provinciale, précité, par. 115. 28

La principale question qui se pose en l'espèce est de savoir si la destitution des intimés par la législature portait atteinte à leur inamovibilité. En examinant cette question, il faut considérer que les conditions d'indépendance sont censées protéger les intérêts du public. L'indépendance judiciaire est non pas une fin en soi, mais un moyen de préserver notre ordre constitutionnel et de maintenir la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice : voir le Renvoi relatif aux juges de la Cour provinciale, précité, par. 9. Ce principe existe au profit de la personne jugée et non des juges. Si les conditions d'indépendance ne sont pas « interprété[e]s en fonction des intérêts d'ordre public qu'[elles] visent à servir, il y a danger que leur application compromette la confiance du public dans les tribunaux, au lieu de l'accroître » : voir l'arrêt Mackin, précité, par. 116, le juge Binnie dissident. 29

La manière de remplir les conditions essentielles de l'indépendance varie selon la nature du tribunal judiciaire ou administratif et les intérêts en jeu. Voir les arrêts Canadien Pacifique Ltée c. Bande indienne de Matsqui, [1995] 1 R.C.S. 3, par. 83, le juge en chef Lamer, et Therrien (Re), [2001] 2 R.C.S. 3, 2001 CSC 35, par. 65, où la Cour a préconisé une approche contextuelle en matière d'indépendance judiciaire : 30

. . . although it may be desirable, it is not reasonable to apply the most elaborate and rigorous conditions of judicial independence as constitutional requirements, since s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter may have to be applied to a variety of tribunals. These essential conditions should instead respect that diversity and be construed flexibly. Accordingly, there should be no uniform standard imposed or specific legislative formula dictated as supposedly prevailing. It will be sufficient if the essence of these conditions is respected . . . .

31 The level of security of tenure that is constitutionally required will depend upon the specific context of the court or tribunal. Superior court judges are removable only by a joint address of the House of Commons and the Senate, as stipulated by s. 99 of the Constitution Act, 1867. This level of tenure reflects the historical and modern position of superior courts as the core of Canada's judicial structure and as the central guardians of the rule of law. Less rigorous conditions apply in the context of provincial courts, which are creatures of statute, but which nonetheless perform significant constitutional tasks. See Mackin, supra, at para. 52:

. . . the provincial judiciary has important constitutional functions to perform, especially in terms of what it may do: ensure respect for the primacy of the Constitution under s. 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982; provide relief for violations of the Charter under s. 24; apply ss. 2 and 7 to 14 of the Charter; ensure compliance with the division of powers within Confederation under ss. 91 and 92 of the Constitution Act, 1867; and render decisions concerning the rights of the aboriginal peoples protected by s. 35(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982.

While the respondents have important duties, their jurisdiction is considerably more limited than that of provincial court judges. Their role in upholding the Constitution is narrower in scope. As a result, less stringent conditions are necessary in order to satisfy their security of tenure.

32 The ultimate question in each case is whether a reasonable and informed person, viewing the relevant statutory provisions in their full historical

. . . bien que ce puisse être souhaitable, il n'est pas raisonnable de poser comme exigences constitutionnelles les conditions les plus rigoureuses et élaborées de l'indépendance judiciaire parce que l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne est susceptible de s'appliquer à une grande diversité de tribunaux. Ces conditions essentielles devront plutôt respecter cette diversité et être interprétées de façon souple. Ainsi, il ne saurait être question d'imposer une norme uniforme ou de dicter une formule législative particulière qui devrait prévaloir. Il suffira que l'essence de ces conditions soit respectée . . .

Le degré d'inamovibilité constitutionnellement requis dépend du contexte particulier du tribunal judiciaire ou administratif. Les juges des cours supérieures ne peuvent être destitués que sur adresse conjointe de la Chambre des communes et du Sénat, comme le prévoit l'art. 99 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. Ce degré d'inamovibilité reflète la position traditionnelle et contemporaine que les cours supérieures occupent en leur qualité de composante fondamentale de la structure judiciaire canadienne et de principales gardiennes de la primauté du droit. Des conditions moins rigoureuses s'appliquent dans le cas des cours provinciales, qui sont constituées par des lois, mais qui accomplissent néanmoins des tâches constitutionnelles importantes. Voir l'arrêt Mackin, précité, par. 52 :

. . . la magistrature provinciale est investie d'importantes fonctions constitutionnelles, notamment en ce qu'elle est habilitée à faire : respecter la primauté de la Constitution en application de l'art. 52 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982; accorder réparation pour violation de la Charte, en vertu de l'art. 24; appliquer les art. 2, et 7 à 14 de la Charte; veiller au respect du partage des pouvoirs au sein de la fédération en vertu des art. 91 et 92 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867; et rendre des décisions relatives aux droits des peuples autochtones protégés par le par. 35(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982.

Bien que les intimés soient investis de fonctions importantes, leur compétence est beaucoup plus limitée que celle des juges des cours provinciales. Leur rôle de protecteur de la Constitution a une portée plus restreinte. Par conséquent, des conditions moins rigoureuses sont nécessaires pour respecter leur inamovibilité.

Dans chaque cas, il faut se demander, en définitive, si en examinant les dispositions législatives pertinentes dans leur contexte historique complet, context, would conclude that the court or tribunal is independent: Valente, supra, at p. 689. The perception of independence will be upheld if the essence of each condition of independence is met. The essence of security of tenure is that members of a tribunal be free from arbitrary or discretionary removal from office. See Valente, supra, at p. 698:

> The essence of security of tenure for purposes of s. 11(d) is a tenure, whether until an age of retirement, for a fixed term, or for a specific adjudicative task, that is secure against interference by the Executive or other appointing authority in a discretionary or arbitrary manner.

In my view, a removal from office that is reasonably intended to further the interests that underlie the principle of judicial independence is not arbitrary. Those interests, as noted above, are public confidence in the administration of justice, and the maintenance of a strong and independent judiciary that is able to uphold the rule of law and the values of our Constitution. If the removal from office is necessary in the promotion of these interests, then it cannot be considered arbitrary, and would not undermine the perception of independence in the mind of a reasonable and informed person.

This Court has previously held that a legislative structure that permitted the removal of a judicial officer without cause by the Executive will generally be considered arbitrary: see Valente, supra, at p. 698; R. v. Généreux, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 259, at p. 285; and Matsqui, supra, at para. 101. That issue does not arise in this appeal. Neither party submitted that the legislative guarantees against Executive interference were insufficient.

In this case, the question is whether the removal of the respondents from office by the Legislature is arbitrary. With respect to the contrary view of the Court of Appeal, the requirement of cause cannot be rigidly applied in this context without consideration of the purpose of judicial independence. If the removal of the respondents from office reflects a good faith and considered decision of the Legislature intended to advance the public interests that judicial independence is meant to protect, then une personne raisonnable et renseignée conclurait que le tribunal judiciaire ou administratif en question est indépendant : Valente, précité, p. 689. Il y a perception d'indépendance lorsque chaque condition est remplie pour l'essentiel. L'inamovibilité vise essentiellement à empêcher que les membres d'un tribunal fassent l'objet d'une destitution arbitraire ou discrétionnaire. Voir l'arrêt Valente, précité, p. 698 :

> L'essence de l'inamovibilité pour les fins de l'al. 11*d*), que ce soit jusqu'à l'âge de la retraite, pour une durée fixe, ou pour une charge ad hoc, est que la charge soit à l'abri de toute intervention discrétionnaire ou arbitraire de la part de l'exécutif ou de l'autorité responsable des nominations.

33 À mon avis, la destitution raisonnablement conçue pour servir les intérêts qui sous-tendent le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire n'est pas arbitraire. Comme nous l'avons vu, ces intérêts sont la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice et le maintien d'un pouvoir judiciaire fort et indépendant capable de faire respecter la primauté du droit et les valeurs consacrées par notre Constitution. La destitution nécessaire pour servir ces intérêts ne peut pas être qualifiée d'arbitraire et ne mine pas la perception d'indépendance qu'aurait une personne raisonnable et renseignée.

34 Notre Cour a déjà statué qu'un régime législatif qui permet à l'exécutif de destituer sans motif suffisant un officier de justice est généralement jugé arbitraire : voir Valente, précité, p. 698; R. c. Généreux, [1992] 1 R.C.S. 259, p. 285; Matsqui, précité, par. 101. Cette question ne se pose pas dans le présent pourvoi. Aucune des parties n'a plaidé l'insuffisance des garanties législatives contre l'ingérence de l'exécutif.

35 En l'espèce, il s'agit de savoir si la destitution des intimés par la législature est arbitraire. En ce qui concerne l'opinion contraire exprimée par la Cour d'appel, on ne saurait, dans le présent contexte, appliquer rigoureusement l'exigence d'un motif suffisant sans tenir compte de l'objet de l'indépendance judiciaire. Si la destitution des intimés reflète une décision que la législature a prise de bonne foi et de façon réfléchie dans le but de promouvoir les intérêts du public que l'indépendance judiciaire est the prevention of this removal will serve only to frustrate these interests.

36 Tenure cannot be viewed as an absolute. If an absolute, necessary reforms would be almost impossible. Conversely, to accept the need for reform in required circumstances is to acknowledge that individual persons may be affected. A legislated change resulting in a removal from office undertaken upon the advice of an independent Judicial Council is justified if it is necessary to accommodate significant reforms that are considered integral to public confidence in the administration of justice. Legislative action of this kind is neither arbitrary nor discretionary. In contrast, removal without cause by the Executive could not be justified on this basis, and would almost certainly be arbitrary.

37 In light of the circumstances that led to the present reforms, it is evident that a reasonable and informed person would perceive the amendments to strengthen, rather than diminish, the independence and qualifications of Alberta's justices of the peace. It is evident that the Legislature concluded that the positive impact of the reforms on the interests that underlie judicial independence outweighs any negative impact of the respondents' removal from office. Their removal was necessary to give effect to those reforms. As such, the respondents' removal cannot be said to be arbitrary, and does not violate the principle of judicial independence.

38 This conclusion is reached on several considerations. First, it is uncontested that the provisions at issue were enacted to serve the public good. There is no suggestion that the amendments were a disguised attempt to remove any particular justices of the peace from office. To the contrary, the particular qualifications were set by an independent Judicial Council. The reforms were designed to alleviate institutional impediments to the independence and qualifications of justices of the peace. In Valente, supra, this Court determined that the involvement of a provincial Judicial Council in tenure issues went a considerable distance to secure judicial independence censée protéger, alors le fait d'empêcher cette destitution ne contribue qu'à contrecarrer ces intérêts.

L'inamovibilité ne saurait être considérée comme absolue. Si elle était absolue, il serait quasi impossible de mettre en œuvre des réformes nécessaires. À l'inverse, reconnaître le besoin de réforme lorsque cela est indiqué revient à reconnaître que des particuliers peuvent être touchés. Une modification apportée par voie législative, qui entraîne une destitution sur avis d'un conseil de la magistrature indépendant, est justifiée si elle est nécessaire pour mettre en œuvre d'importantes réformes jugées essentielles au maintien de la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice. Une telle mesure législative n'est ni arbitraire ni discrétionnaire. Par contre, une destitution sans motif suffisant ordonnée par l'exécutif ne saurait être justifiée par ce motif et serait presque certainement arbitraire.

Eu égard aux circonstances à l'origine des réformes en cause dans la présente affaire, il est évident qu'une personne raisonnable et renseignée considérerait que les modifications renforcent l'indépendance des juges de paix albertains et relèvent leurs qualifications, au lieu de les diminuer. Il est évident que la législature a conclu que l'incidence positive des réformes sur les intérêts qui sous-tendent l'indépendance judiciaire l'emporte sur l'incidence négative de la destitution des intimés. Leur destitution était nécessaire à la mise en œuvre de ces réformes. Par conséquent, elle ne saurait être qualifiée d'arbitraire et ne contrevient pas au principe de l'indépendance judiciaire.

Plusieurs considérations mènent à cette conclusion. Premièrement, on ne conteste pas que les dispositions en cause ont été adoptées dans l'intérêt du public. Rien n'indique que les modifications constituaient une tentative déguisée de destituer des juges de paix en particulier. Au contraire, les qualifications requises étaient fixées par un conseil de la magistrature indépendant. Les réformes avaient pour but de pallier les obstacles institutionnels à l'indépendance et aux qualifications des juges de paix. Dans l'arrêt Valente, précité, p. 703-704, la Cour a statué que le rôle joué en matière d'inamovibilité par un conseil de la magistrature which, in turn, removed any reasonably held concerns that this was an arbitrary or discretionary measure: pp. 703-4. The Legislature's good faith removes the possibility of a chilling effect on presiding justices of the peace under the new regime.

Second, the need to improve both the independence and competence of Alberta's justices of the peace was amply demonstrated by the recommendations of the independent commissions mentioned above. As the chambers judge observed, "the proposed changes have great merit. The need for change has been demonstrated several times over" (para. 54). The substance of the legislation reflected the recommendations of the various reports, and aligns closely with the conclusions of the Manitoba Report (1991), the most recent Canadian study available.

The Manitoba Report suggested a classification of the office into three categories, with the duties of justices of the peace in each category stipulated by statute or regulations (p. 52). It recommended that qualifications for office be left to an independent committee chaired by the Chief Judge of the Provincial Court, and that individuals with inherent conflicts of interest be barred from office (p. 59). Finally, it suggested that in order to implement the reforms in a timely fashion, incumbents that failed to meet the new qualifications be removed from office, but in a manner that ensured the least possible disruption to their career (p. 76).

Alberta's legislative amendments follow all of these recommendations. Each change is clearly designed to improve the independence and qualifications of Alberta's justices of the peace, with consideration given to the disruption of the careers of those removed from previous duties.

(1) Reclassification of Duties

Alberta's amendments divide justices of the peace into the three categories of sitting, presiding, provincial avait contribué de façon importante à assurer l'indépendance judiciaire qui, à son tour, dissipait toute crainte raisonnable que la mesure en cause ait été arbitraire ou discrétionnaire. La bonne foi de la législature élimine tout risque d'effet paralysant sur les juges de paix qui président en vertu du nouveau régime.

39 Deuxièmement, les recommandations des commissions indépendantes susmentionnées ont amplement démontré la nécessité d'accroître l'indépendance et la compétence des juges de paix albertains. Comme le juge en chambre l'a noté, [TRADUCTION] « les changements proposés sont très bien fondés. Le besoin de changement a été démontré à plusieurs reprises » (par. 54). La mesure législative reflète, pour l'essentiel, les recommandations des divers rapports et suit de près les conclusions du rapport manitobain (1991) qui est l'étude canadienne la plus récente en la matière.

40 Le rapport manitobain proposait que la charge soit divisée en trois catégories, les fonctions des juges de paix de chaque catégorie devant être édictées par voie législative ou réglementaire (p. 52). Il recommandait que les qualifications requises pour occuper la charge en question soient fixées par un comité indépendant présidé par le juge en chef de la Cour provinciale, et qu'il soit interdit aux personnes en situation de conflit d'intérêts inhérent d'occuper cette charge (p. 59). Finalement, il était recommandé que, pour assurer la mise en œuvre en temps utile des réformes, les titulaires ne satisfaisant pas aux nouvelles qualifications requises soient destitués, mais de façon à bouleverser le moins possible leur carrière (p. 76).

41 Les modifications législatives apportées par l'Alberta suivent toutes ces recommandations. Chaque modification est clairement destinée à accroître l'indépendance des juges de paix albertains et à relever leurs qualifications, tout en tenant compte du bouleversement causé à la carrière des personnes destituées de leurs fonctions.

(1) Reclassification des fonctions

42 Les modifications apportées en Alberta répartissent les juges de paix en trois catégories, à savoir and non-presiding justices. This permits a precise delineation by statute and regulations of the jurisdiction of each office. In the past, the jurisdiction of each non-sitting justice of the peace was determined by administrative directive in the form of "letters of authority" from the Chief Judge of the Provincial Court. As a result of the varying qualifications of the non-sitting justices, and the different duties required of them, the system was unworkable. Since there were no eligibility requirements for office, there was little assurance that justices were qualified for the particular duties assigned to them. The amendments allow for the qualifications of each justice to be appropriately tailored to the scope of his or her duties.

43 As well, prior to the amendments there was a danger that the perception of independence would be fettered by the significant administrative discretion vested in the supervisory role of the Chief Judge. See the Manitoba Report, at p. 51:

> Limitation by administrative directive also carries the disadvantage that it may be perceived as a means to carry out a back-door disciplinary process, a perception that should be eliminated by statutory limits which can be regulated and administered publicly.

The clarification of the scope of each officer's jurisdiction reduces this administrative discretion and alleviates the danger that the perception of independence would be undermined in this regard.

(2) Removal of Conflicts of Interest

44 The amendments bar persons with inherent conflicts of interest from appointment to office as sitting or presiding justices of the peace: s. 2.1(5). These persons include government employees, law enforcement officers, prosecutors, and prison wardens. At the time of the amendments, several hundred non-sitting justices of the peace were employees of the Department of Justice. The employment of judicial officers by the executive branch of government was a significant taint on the perception les juges de paix siégeant, les juges de paix présidant et les juges de paix non présidant. Cette mesure permet de définir exactement — par voie législative ou réglementaire — la compétence rattachée à chaque charge. Auparavant, la compétence de chaque juge de paix non siégeant était définie au moyen d'une directive administrative sous forme de [TRADUCTION] « lettres d'habilitation » (letters of authority) du juge en chef de la Cour provinciale. En raison de la diversité des qualifications et des fonctions des juges de paix non siégeant, le système posait des problèmes insurmontables. Étant donné qu'il n'existait aucune condition d'admissibilité à la charge, il était loin d'être assuré que les juges de paix étaient qualifiés pour exercer les fonctions particulières qui leur étaient assignées. Les modifications permettent de bien adapter les qualifications de chaque juge de paix aux fonctions de sa charge.

De même, avant les modifications, la perception d'indépendance risquait d'être compromise en raison de l'important pouvoir discrétionnaire administratif rattaché au rôle de surveillance du juge en chef. Voir le rapport manitobain, p. 51 :

> [TRADUCTION] La restriction par voie de directive administrative est également désavantageuse en ce sens qu'elle risque d'être perçue comme un moyen détourné de mettre en œuvre un processus disciplinaire, perception qui devrait être éliminée par des restrictions légales pouvant être régies et appliquées publiquement.

La clarification de l'étendue de la compétence de chaque juge de paix contribue à réduire ce pouvoir discrétionnaire administratif et le risque que la perception d'indépendance soit minée à cet égard.

(2) Élimination des conflits d'intérêts

Les modifications empêchent de nommer juge de paix siégeant ou juge de paix présidant les personnes en situation de conflit d'intérêts (par. 2.1(5)). Ces personnes sont notamment les employés du gouvernement, les personnes chargées d'appliquer la loi, les procureurs et les gardiens de prison. À l'époque où les modifications ont été apportées, plusieurs centaines de juges de paix non siégeant étaient des employés du ministère de la Justice. L'embauche d'officiers de justice par le pouvoir exécutif avait of the office's independence. Their removal from judicial office alleviates that.

(3) Qualifications Set by an Independent Judicial Council

Historically, there was a widespread belief that appointment to office was solely on political grounds. The McRuer Commission (1968) described the situation in Ontario as a "mockery of judicial office [that is] bound to depreciate respect for law and order in the community" (p. 518). It is hoped that patronage in the appointment process has been at least lessened if not eradicated since the time of that report. Unquestionably, the perception that appointment to judicial office is political in nature undermines public confidence in the administration of justice.

One step towards ameliorating this perception was to require that candidates for office meet qualifications decided upon by an independent committee that is divorced from political influence. In this appeal the Alberta amendments stipulated that no person may be appointed as a sitting or presiding justice of the peace unless he or she meets qualifications determined by the Judicial Council: s. 2.1(1). The setting of qualifications for office by this independent committee counters the perception of patronage in the appointment process.

The delegation of this task to an independent Judicial Council also ensures that appropriate qualifications are set by a body that is familiar with the duties demanded of justices of the peace and the level of education and training required to discharge those duties. The Manitoba Report observed at p. 58:

> . . . we are of the opinion that the Committee itself should determine the level of educational preparation to be required. This is especially appropriate, given that those charged with the training and supervision of justices of the peace are represented on the Committee.

pour effet de compromettre sérieusement la perception d'indépendance relative à leur charge. Le fait de destituer ces personnes de leur charge d'officier de justice permet de pallier cet effet.

(3) Qualifications fixées par un conseil de la magistrature indépendant

45 On a longtemps cru que les nominations en question reposaient uniquement sur des motifs politiques. La commission McRuer (1968) a qualifié la situation en Ontario de [TRADUCTION] « simulacre de charge judiciaire [qui ne peut] que dévaloriser le respect de la loi et de l'ordre dans la collectivité » (p. 518). Il est à espérer que, à défaut d'avoir été éliminé, le favoritisme dans le processus de nomination a au moins été réduit depuis ce rapport. Il est incontestable que la perception selon laquelle la nomination à une charge judiciaire est de nature politique mine la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice.

46 Une mesure destinée à améliorer cette perception consistait à exiger que les candidats et candidates aient les qualifications fixées par un comité indépendant échappant à toute influence politique. Dans le présent pourvoi, les modifications apportées en Alberta prévoyaient que seule la personne ayant les qualifications fixées par le conseil de la magistrature pouvait être nommée juge de paix siégeant ou juge de paix présidant (par. 2.1(1)). L'établissement, par ce comité indépendant, des qualifications requises pour occuper la charge remédie à la perception de favoritisme dans le processus de nomination.

47 La délégation de cette tâche à un conseil de la magistrature indépendant garantit également que les qualifications pertinentes sont fixées par un organisme qui connaît bien les fonctions des juges de paix et le niveau d'instruction et de formation nécessaire pour les exercer. Le rapport manitobain fait remarquer ceci, à la p. 58 :

> [TRADUCTION] . . . nous sommes d'avis que le comité lui-même devrait fixer le niveau d'instruction requis. Cela est particulièrement pertinent, étant donné que les responsables de la formation et de la surveillance des juges de paix sont représentés au comité.

The Judicial Council unanimously agreed that a minimum requirement for appointment is membership in good standing of the Law Society of Alberta with at least five years related experience at the bar.

Le conseil de la magistrature a convenu à l'unanimité que, pour être nommé, il fallait au moins être membre en règle du barreau de l'Alberta et avoir au moins cinq ans d'expérience pertinente à titre d'avocat.

48 These eligibility criteria are reasonable in light of the judicial functions of sitting and presiding justices of the peace and their significant impact on the rights and liberties of individuals. The Doob Report noted that 84 percent of justices of the peace surveyed in Ontario and British Columbia thought "it would be helpful to justices to have some formal training in law before being appointed" (p. 64). It is a sensible conclusion that minimum requirements of education and experience for justices of the peace will tend to improve the quality of legal decisions. Increased training also reduces the reliance of individual officers on the advice of others, thereby increasing their independence in decision making.

Ces critères d'admissibilité sont raisonnables compte tenu des fonctions judiciaires des juges de paix siégeant et des juges de paix présidant et de l'incidence importante qu'elles ont sur les droits et libertés des particuliers. Le rapport Doob a révélé que 84 pour 100 des juges de paix interrogés en Ontario et en Colombie-Britannique pensaient [TRADUCTION] « qu'il serait utile que les juges de paix nommés aient quelque formation en droit » (p. 64). Il est raisonnable de conclure que les exigences minimales en matière d'instruction et d'expérience des juges de paix tendront à améliorer la qualité des décisions judiciaires. En étant mieux formé, le juge de paix cherchera moins à consulter d'autres personnes, ce qui aura pour effet d'accroître son indépendance sur le plan décisionnel.

(4) Application of the Reforms to the Respondents

(4) Application des réformes aux intimés

49 The respondents do not dispute the merits of the above reforms. They argue, however, that the amendments should apply only to new appointments to office. I disagree. As many of the reports observed, once it is established that the office is in need of significant structural reform, a requirement of "grandfathering" incumbents serves only to delay that reform. See the Manitoba Report, at pp. 75-76:

Les intimés ne contestent pas le bien-fondé des réformes susmentionnées. Cependant, ils font valoir que les modifications ne devraient s'appliquer qu'aux nouvelles nominations. Je ne suis pas de cet avis. Comme un bon nombre des rapports l'ont souligné, dès qu'il est établi que la charge a besoin d'une réforme structurelle importante, l'établissement d'une disposition maintenant les « droits acquis » des titulaires de la charge ne contribue qu'à retarder la mise en œuvre de cette réforme. Voir le rapport manitobain, p. 75-76 :

> Because justices of the peace and magistrates may hold office for many years, a solution which did not affect those presently appointed would have no appreciable impact for a very long time.

> [TRADUCTION] Étant donné que les juges de paix et les magistrats peuvent rester en fonction pendant de nombreuses années, une solution qui ne s'appliquerait pas à ceux qui sont déjà nommés n'aurait aucune incidence appréciable pendant longtemps.

Reforms in Ontario, Saskatchewan, and the Northwest Territories did not include provisions to grandfather incumbents. In this appeal, the requirement of removal only for cause would mandate that, in addition to the respondents, the 190 fee justices and 242 staff justices would hold office until Les réformes adoptées en Ontario, en Saskatchewan et dans les Territoires du Nord-Ouest ne comportaient aucune disposition maintenant les droits acquis des titulaires de la charge. En l'espèce, l'exigence que la destitution soit fondée sur un motif suffisant commanderait que, outre les intimés, les retirement. This would preclude any meaningful implementation of reforms for many years. Such delay, in the face of a demonstrated need for change, does not serve the interests of the public.

Moreover, public confidence in the administration of justice could be harmed by retaining those individuals who do not meet the qualifications for eligibility that an independent Judicial Council, with intimate knowledge of the duties of office, have determined to be the minimum necessary. Regardless of whether the respondents are in fact qualified for office, their failure to meet these minimum educational criteria could undermine the perception of their qualifications in the minds of the individuals who come before them.

Finally, the manner in which the reforms were implemented lessened as much as possible the legislation's adverse impact upon the respondents. The respondents were offered appointment as non-presiding justices of the peace. This position comprises the administrative functions that they had performed as non-sitting justices of the peace. Although the position lacks security of tenure, it entitles the respondents to receive the equivalent pay and benefits as they did in their previous office.

(5) Conclusion

In light of these factors, I conclude that a reasonable and informed person would perceive the legislative amendments to strengthen the qualifications and independence of Alberta's justices of the peace. The reforms are the result of the Legislature's considered and thorough judgment that changes to the office are necessary to serve the public good by advancing the underlying interests of judicial independence. They strengthen the ability of justices of the peace to uphold the Constitution and adjudicate disputes, and improve public confidence in the administration of justice. The removal of the respondents from their positions is not arbitrary or discretionary, and does 51 Enfin, la manière dont les réformes ont été mises en œuvre a réduit au minimum l'incidence négative de la mesure législative sur les intimés. Ceux-ci se sont vu offrir une charge de juge de paix non présidant, laquelle charge comporte les fonctions administratives qu'ils exerçaient en leur qualité de juges de paix non siégeant. Bien que ses titulaires ne bénéficient pas de l'inamovibilité, la charge de juge de paix non présidant permet aux intimés de recevoir la même rémunération et les mêmes avantages que leur procurait leur charge antérieure.

190 juges de paix payés sur honoraires et les 242 juges de paix salariés restent en fonction jusqu'à leur retraite. Il s'ensuivrait que toute mise en œuvre significative des réformes serait impossible pendant plusieurs années. Compte tenu du besoin démontré de changement, un tel délai ne sert pas les intérêts du public.

50 De plus, le maintien en poste de personnes ne satisfaisant pas aux conditions minimales d'admissibilité fixées par un conseil de la magistrature indépendant, qui a une connaissance approfondie des fonctions de la charge, pourrait avoir pour effet d'ébranler la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice. Indépendamment de la question de savoir si les intimés sont effectivement qualifiés pour occuper leur charge, leur défaut de satisfaire aux conditions minimales en matière d'instruction pourrait miner la perception qu'ont de leurs qualifications les personnes qui comparaissent devant eux.

(5) Conclusion

52 Compte tenu de ces facteurs, je conclus qu'une personne raisonnable et renseignée considérerait que les modifications législatives renforcent l'indépendance des juges de paix albertains et relèvent leurs qualifications. Les réformes sont le fruit de la décision mûrement réfléchie de la législature, selon laquelle il est nécessaire, dans l'intérêt du public, de modifier la charge par la promotion des intérêts qui sous-tendent l'indépendance judiciaire. Elles renforcent la capacité des juges de paix de défendre la Constitution et de trancher des différends, et elles augmentent la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice. La destitution des intimés n'est not undermine the reasonable and informed person's perception of independence.

53 I respectfully disagree with the conclusion reached by the courts below. In my view, s. 2.4(8) does not contravene the principle of judicial independence as it applies to the respondents.

C. Section 1 of the Charter

54 In light of the conclusion that s. 11(d) of the Charter is not engaged in this case, it is unnecessary to consider whether the Act is justified under s. 1.

VI. Disposition

55 Accordingly, I would allow the appeal without costs in this Court and, in light of the unique circumstances of this case, would not interfere with the costs awarded in the courts below.

56 The constitutional questions are answered as follows:

Answer to question 1: No.

Answer to question 2: It is unnecessary to answer this question.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellant: Alberta Department of Justice, Edmonton.

Solicitors for the respondents: Code Hunter, Calgary.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Canada: Deputy Attorney General of Canada, Ottawa.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Ontario: Attorney General of Ontario, Toronto.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Quebec: Department of Justice, Sainte-Foy.

ni arbitraire ni discrétionnaire, et ne mine pas la perception d'indépendance qu'aurait une personne raisonnable et renseignée.

En toute déférence, je ne suis pas d'accord avec la conclusion des cours d'instance inférieure. J'estime que le par. 2.4(8) ne contrevient pas au principe de l'indépendance judiciaire applicable aux intimés.

C. L'article premier de la Charte

Compte tenu de la conclusion que l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte n'est pas en jeu en l'espèce, il n'est pas nécessaire de se demander si la Loi est justifiée au regard de l'article premier.

VI. Dispositif

En conséquence je suis d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi sans dépens dans notre Cour et, compte tenu des circonstances exceptionnelles de la présente affaire, je suis d'avis de ne pas modifier les dépens accordés par les cours d'instance inférieure.

Les réponses données aux questions constitutionnelles sont les suivantes :

Réponse à la première question : Non.

Réponse à la deuxième question : Il n'est pas nécessaire de répondre à cette question.

Pourvoi accueilli.

Procureur de l'appelante : Ministère de la Justice de l'Alberta, Edmonton.

Procureurs des intimés : Code Hunter, Calgary.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général du Canada : Sous-procureur général du Canada, Ottawa.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Ontario : Procureur général de l'Ontario, Toronto.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général du Québec : Ministère de la Justice, Sainte-Foy.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia: Ministry of the Attorney General, Victoria.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General for Saskatchewan: Deputy Attorney General for Saskatchewan, Regina.

Solicitors for the intervener the Association of Justices of the Peace of Ontario: Blake, Cassels & Graydon, Toronto.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique : Ministère du Procureur général, Victoria.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général de la Saskatchewan : Sous-procureur général de la Saskatchewan, Regina.

Procureurs de l'intervenante Association of Justices of the Peace of Ontario : Blake, Cassels & Graydon, Toronto.

Anita Endean, as representative plaintiff Appellant

v.

Her Majesty The Queen in Right of the Province of British Columbia and Attorney General of Canada Respondents

- and -

Dianna Louise Parsons, deceased, by her Estate Administrator, William John Forsyth, Michael Herbert Cruickshanks, David Tull, Martin Henry Griffen, Anna Kardish, Elsie Kotyk, Executrix of the Estate of Harry Kotyk, deceased, Elsie Kotyk, personally, and Fund Counsel for Ontario Appellants

v.

Her Majesty The Queen in Right of Ontario, Attorney General of Canada, Canadian Red Cross Society, Her Majesty The Queen in Right of Alberta, Her Majesty The Queen in Right of Saskatchewan, Her Majesty The Queen in Right of Manitoba, Her Majesty The Queen in Right of New Brunswick, Her Majesty The Queen in Right of Prince Edward Island, Her Majesty The Queen in Right of Nova Scotia, Her Majesty The Queen in Right of Newfoundland and Labrador, Government of the Northwest Territories, Government of Nunavut and Government of the Yukon Territory Respondents

and

Attorney General of Quebec Intervener

and

Anita Endean, en sa qualité de représentante des demandeurs Appelante

c.

Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de la province de la Colombie-Britannique et procureur général du Canada Intimés

- et -

Dianna Louise Parsons, décédée, par l'administrateur de sa succession, William John Forsyth, Michael Herbert Cruickshanks, David Tull, Martin Henry Griffen, Anna Kardish, Elsie Kotyk, exécutrice de la succession de Harry Kotyk, décédé, Elsie Kotyk, personnellement, et Conseiller juridique du Fonds pour l'Ontario Appelants

c.

Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de l'Ontario, procureur général du Canada, Société canadienne de la Croix-Rouge, Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de l'Alberta, Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de la Saskatchewan, Sa Majesté la Reine du chef du Manitoba, Sa Majesté la Reine du chef du Nouveau-Brunswick, Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de la Nouvelle-Écosse, Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador, Gouvernement des Territoires du Nord-Ouest, Gouvernement du Nunavut et Gouvernement du Territoire du Yukon Intimés

et

Procureure générale du Québec Intervenante

et

Her Majesty The Queen in Right of Ontario Appellant on cross-appeal

v.

Dianna Louise Parsons, deceased, by her Estate Administrator, William John Forsyth, Michael Herbert Cruickshanks, David Tull, Martin Henry Griffen, Anna Kardish, Elsie Kotyk, Executrix of the Estate of Harry Kotyk, deceased, Elsie Kotyk, personally, Attorney General of Canada and Canadian Red Cross Society Respondents on cross-appeal

Indexed as: Endean v. British Columbia

2016 SCC 42

File Nos.: 35843, 36456.

2016: May 19; 2016: October 20.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and Abella, Cromwell, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Wagner, Gascon, Côté and Brown JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURTS OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA AND ONTARIO

Courts — Jurisdiction — Class actions — Hearings outside superior court's home province — Superior court judges in three provinces supervising implementation of pan-national class action settlement — Motions relating to settlement brought before supervisory judges — Class counsel proposing that supervisory judges sit together in fourth province to hear motions — Parties agreeing that judges have discretionary power to sit together outside their home provinces, but disagreeing on source of power and conditions under which it may be exercised — Whether source of authority is statutory or an aspect of inherent powers of superior court — Whether video link to open courtroom in judges' home jurisdiction is condition for exercise of authority — Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6, s. 12 — Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 50, s. 12.

Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de l'Ontario Appelante au pourvoi incident

c.

Dianna Louise Parsons, décédée, par l'administrateur de sa succession, William John Forsyth, Michael Herbert Cruickshanks, David Tull, Martin Henry Griffen, Anna Kardish, Elsie Kotyk, exécutrice de la succession de Harry Kotyk, décédé, Elsie Kotyk, personnellement, procureur général du Canada et Société canadienne de la Croix-Rouge Intimés au pourvoi incident

Répertorié : Endean c. Colombie-Britannique

2016 CSC 42

N[os] du greffe : 35843, 36456.

2016 : 19 mai; 2016 : 20 octobre.

Présents : La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges Abella, Cromwell, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Wagner, Gascon, Côté et Brown.

EN APPEL DES COURS D'APPEL DE LA COLOMBIE-BRITANNIQUE ET DE L'ONTARIO

Tribunaux — Compétence — Recours collectifs — Audiences de cours supérieures tenues à l'extérieur de leur province de rattachement — Juges de la cour supérieure de trois provinces chargés de superviser la mise en œuvre d'une convention pancanadienne de règlement de recours collectifs — Juges superviseurs saisis de requêtes relatives à la convention de règlement — Conseillers juridiques proposant que les juges superviseurs siègent ensemble dans une quatrième province pour trancher les requêtes — Accord des parties sur le fait que les juges ont le pouvoir discrétionnaire de siéger ensemble à l'extérieur de leur province de rattachement, mais non sur la source et les modalités d'exercice de ce pouvoir — S'agit-il d'un pouvoir d'origine législative ou d'un volet de la compétence inhérente des cours supérieures? — L'exercice de ce pouvoir nécessite-t-il un lien vidéo entre la salle d'audience où se trouve le juge et une salle d'audience accessible au public dans la province de rattachement du juge? — Loi de 1992 sur les recours collectifs, L.O. 1992, c. 6, art. 12 — Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 50, art. 12.

The superior courts of British Columbia, Quebec and Ontario certified concurrent class action proceedings on behalf of individuals infected with hepatitis C by the Canadian blood supply between 1986 and 1990. The British Columbia and Quebec class actions included residents of those provinces, while the Ontario class action included all other persons in Canada. The parties reached a pan-Canadian settlement agreement in 1999, which assigned a supervisory role to the British Columbia, Quebec and Ontario superior courts and provided that decisions of those courts only took effect if they were materially identical.

In 2012, class counsel filed motions before the supervisory judges relating to the settlement agreement and proposed that the motions be heard by the three judges sitting together in one location. British Columbia, Quebec and Ontario opposed the proposal on the basis that the judges did not have the jurisdiction to conduct hearings outside their home province. Motions for directions were brought in each jurisdiction to resolve the objection. All three motions judges concluded that it was permissible for the superior court judges to sit in a province other than their respective home province with their judicial counterparts to hear the settlement agreement motions. Only Ontario and British Columbia appealed. The Ontario Court of Appeal agreed with the motions judge that the basis for the power to conduct a hearing outside the province was the superior court's inherent jurisdiction, but concluded that a video link was required between the out-of-province courtroom and an Ontario courtroom. The British Columbia Court of Appeal found that the common law prohibited superior court judges from sitting outside the province, but that it was permissible for a judge who was not physically present in the province to conduct a hearing taking place in the province by telephone, video conference or other communication medium.

The representative plaintiffs appeal to this Court and Ontario cross-appeals. The parties now agree that the superior court judges have a discretionary power to sit together outside their home provinces to hear a motion without oral evidence in the context of a pan-Canadian settlement agreement. However, there is no agreement

Les cours supérieures de la Colombie-Britannique, du Québec et de l'Ontario ont autorisé l'introduction de recours collectifs concomitants au nom de personnes ayant été infectées par l'hépatite C par suite de transfusions sanguines reçues au Canada entre 1986 et 1990. Les recours collectifs intentés en Colombie-Britannique et au Québec touchaient des résidents de ces provinces, tandis que celui intenté en Ontario concernait tous les autres Canadiens visés. En 1999, les parties ont conclu une convention de règlement pancanadienne qui attribuait un rôle de supervision aux cours supérieures de la Colombie-Britannique, du Québec et de l'Ontario, et qui prévoyait que les décisions de ces tribunaux n'entraient en vigueur que s'il n'existait pas de différences importantes entre elles.

En 2012, les conseillers juridiques agissant dans le cadre des recours collectifs ont saisi les juges superviseurs de requêtes relatives à la convention de règlement et ont proposé qu'elles soient instruites par les trois juges siégeant à un seul endroit. La Colombie-Britannique, le Québec et l'Ontario ont contesté la proposition au motif que les juges n'étaient pas compétents pour tenir une audience à l'extérieur de leur province de rattachement. Des requêtes visant à obtenir des directives ont été présentées dans chaque province afin que cette objection soit tranchée. Les trois juges saisis des requêtes ont conclu que les juges des cours supérieures pouvaient siéger avec leurs homologues dans une province autre que leur province respective de rattachement pour instruire les requêtes portant sur la convention de règlement. Seuls l'Ontario et la Colombie-Britannique ont fait appel de cette décision. La Cour d'appel de l'Ontario a souscrit à la décision du juge des requêtes suivant laquelle le pouvoir de tenir une audience à l'extérieur de la province est fondé sur la compétence inhérente d'une cour supérieure, mais elle a conclu qu'il est nécessaire d'établir un lien vidéo entre la salle d'audience située à l'extérieur de la province et une salle d'audience située en Ontario. La Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique a conclu que la common law interdit aux juges des cours supérieures de siéger à l'extérieur de la province, mais qu'un juge qui n'est pas physiquement présent dans la province peut présider une audience se déroulant dans la province par téléphone, par vidéoconférence ou par tout autre moyen de communication.

Les représentants des demandeurs se pourvoient devant la Cour et l'Ontario forme un pourvoi incident. Les parties sont maintenant d'accord pour dire que les juges de la cour supérieure ont le pouvoir discrétionnaire de siéger ensemble à l'extérieur de leur province de rattachement respective pour instruire, sans preuve orale, une concerning the source of this power and the conditions under which it may be exercised.

Held: The appeals should be allowed and the cross-appeal should be dismissed.

Per McLachlin C.J. and Abella, Cromwell, Moldaver, Gascon, Côté and Brown JJ.: In pan-national class action proceedings over which the superior court has subject-matter and personal jurisdiction, a judge of that court has the discretion to hold a hearing outside his or her territory in conjunction with other judges managing related class actions, provided that the judge will not have to resort to the court's coercive powers in order to convene or conduct the hearing and the hearing is not contrary to the law of the place in which it will be held.

To determine the source of their discretionary power to sit outside their home jurisdiction, courts ought to look first to their statutory powers before considering their inherent jurisdiction. Given the broad and loosely defined nature of the inherent powers of superior courts, they should be exercised sparingly and with caution. In Ontario and British Columbia, superior court judges have the discretionary statutory power under s. 12 of the Ontario Class Proceedings Act, 1992 and s. 12 of the British Columbia Class Proceedings Act (the "Acts") to sit outside their home provinces. A broad interpretation of these statutory powers, which confirms and reflects the inherent authority of judges to control procedure, helps to fulfil the purpose of class actions and to ensure that procedural innovations in aid of access to justice will not be stymied by unduly technical or time-bound understandings of the scope of the class action judge's authority. There are no constitutional, statutory or common law limitations that restrict the scope of the broad and general language of these provisions and that prevent a judge from sitting outside his or her province for the purposes in issue in these cases.

Section 12 of the Acts should be understood as both confirming and reflecting the inherent jurisdiction of the superior courts to govern their own processes. Thus, in common law jurisdictions where comparable provisions do not exist, the analysis of the courts' inherent jurisdiction would lead to the same result, subject to any limitations on requête portant sur une convention de règlement pancanadienne. Elles ne s'entendent toutefois pas sur la source et les éventuelles modalités d'exercice de ce pouvoir.

Arrêts : Les pourvois sont accueillis et le pourvoi incident est rejeté.

La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges Abella, Cromwell, Moldaver, Gascon, Côté et Brown : Dans le cadre de recours collectifs pancanadiens sur lesquels une cour supérieure a compétence ratione materiæ et ratione personæ, un juge de cette cour a le pouvoir discrétionnaire de tenir une audience à l'extérieur de sa province de rattachement conjointement avec d'autres juges chargés de gérer des recours collectifs connexes, à condition de ne pas avoir à recourir aux pouvoirs de contrainte de la cour pour convoquer ou mener l'audience et à condition que l'audience ne soit pas contraire aux lois de la province où elle se déroule.

Pour déterminer la source de leur pouvoir discrétionnaire de siéger à l'extérieur de leur province de rattachement, les tribunaux devraient en premier lieu s'enquérir des pouvoirs que la loi leur confère avant d'examiner leur compétence inhérente. Compte tenu de son caractère général et de sa définition formulée en termes vagues, la compétence inhérente des cours supérieures doit être exercée avec circonspection. En Ontario et en Colombie-Britannique, les juges des cours supérieures ont — en vertu respectivement de l'art. 12 de la Loi de 1992 sur les recours collectifs et de l'art. 12 de la Class Proceedings Act (les « Lois ») — le pouvoir discrétionnaire de siéger à l'extérieur de leur province de rattachement. Une interprétation large de ces pouvoirs conférés par la loi, qui confirme et reflète le pouvoir inhérent qu'ont les juges de contrôler la procédure, contribue à réaliser l'objectif des recours collectifs et à garantir que l'on ne vienne pas, en raison d'une vision de la portée des pouvoirs des juges présidant les recours collectifs qui serait trop technique ou trop circonscrite dans le temps, nuire à des innovations procédurales censées faciliter l'accès à la justice. Aucune limite fixée par la Constitution, par une loi ou par la common law ne restreint la portée du libellé large et général de ces dispositions ni n'empêche un juge de siéger à l'extérieur de sa province de rattachement pour les fins dont il est question en l'espèce.

Les articles 12 des Lois devraient être interprétés comme confirmant et reflétant le pouvoir inhérent des cours supérieures de gérer leur propre procédure. Ainsi, dans les provinces de common law où il n'existe pas de dispositions comparables, l'analyse de la compétence inhérente des cours conduirait à la même conclusion, sous inherent jurisdiction there applicable, such as constraints imposed by the Constitution, by any statutory provisions or by common law rules. Absent some clear limitation, the inherent jurisdiction of the superior courts extends to permitting the court to hold the sort of hearing in issue here.

A video link between the out-of-province courtroom where the hearing takes place and a courtroom in the judge's home province is not a condition for a judge to be able to sit outside his or her home province. Neither the Acts nor the inherent jurisdiction of the court imposes such a requirement. The open court principle is not violated when a superior court judge exercises his or her discretion to sit outside his or her home province without a video link to the home jurisdiction.

The court's discretion to hold a hearing outside its territory must be exercised in the interests of the administration of justice. The court should also be guided by the following broad considerations: whether sitting in another province will impinge or could be seen as impinging on the sovereignty of that province; whether there are benefits or costs to the proposed out-of-province proceeding; and whether any terms should be imposed, such as conditions as to the payment of extraordinary costs or use of a video link to the court's home jurisdiction.

Per Karakatsanis and Wagner JJ.: There is agreement that the superior court judges in these cases have discretionary statutory authority under s. 12 of the Acts to sit outside of their home provinces, and that a video link is not mandatory in an extraprovincial hearing.

The open court principle encompasses more than a singular requirement that justice not be carried out in secrecy. It fosters public confidence in the court system and furthers public understanding of the administration of justice. In addition, the open court principle protects the media's right to access courts and the circumstances necessary for the media to fulfil their role as surrogates for the public. A judge sitting extraprovincially should be prepared to consider how to give effect to the educational and community-centric aspects of the open court principle. In particular, courts should strive to make class actions procedure visible and understandable to class members and the community where the proceedings réserve de toute restriction applicable à la compétence inhérente, par exemple des contraintes fixées par la Constitution, par des dispositions législatives ou par des règles de la common law. À défaut de restriction explicite, les cours supérieures peuvent, en vertu de leur compétence inhérente, tenir le type d'audiences dont il est question en l'espèce.

L'existence d'un lien vidéo entre la salle de cour située à l'extérieur de la province où se déroule l'audience et une salle d'audience se trouvant dans la province de rattachement du juge n'est pas requise pour qu'un juge puisse siéger à l'extérieur de cette dernière. Ni les Lois ni la compétence inhérente des cours supérieures n'imposent une telle condition. Le principe de la publicité des débats est respecté lorsqu'un juge d'une cour supérieure exerce son pouvoir discrétionnaire de siéger à l'extérieur de sa province sans qu'un lien vidéo soit établi avec cette dernière.

Le pouvoir discrétionnaire de la cour de tenir une audience à l'extérieur de sa province de rattachement doit être exercé dans l'intérêt de l'administration de la justice. La cour devrait également prendre en considération les facteurs généraux suivants : si le fait de siéger dans une autre province portera atteinte ou pourrait être considéré comme portant atteinte à la souveraineté de cette province, les avantages et les coûts de la tenue de l'audience projetée à l'extérieur de la province, et s'il y a lieu d'imposer des conditions, par exemple le remboursement des frais extraordinaires ou le recours à un lien vidéo avec la province de rattachement de la cour.

Les juges Karakatsanis et Wagner : Il y a accord quant au fait que les juges des cours supérieures dans les présents dossiers ont le pouvoir légal discrétionnaire en vertu des art. 12 des Lois de siéger en dehors de leur province de rattachement et qu'il n'est pas obligatoire d'établir un lien vidéo dans le contexte d'une audience tenue hors province.

Le principe de la publicité des débats judiciaires englobe davantage que la seule exigence selon laquelle la justice ne doit pas être rendue secrètement. Il favorise la confiance du public à l'égard du système judiciaire et accroît sa compréhension de l'administration de la justice. En outre, le principe de la publicité des débats protège le droit des médias d'avoir accès aux salles d'audience et les circonstances nécessaires pour que les médias puissent jouer leur rôle de suppléants du public. Un juge qui préside une audience tenue hors province doit être prêt à examiner comment donner effet au volet éducatif du principe de la publicité des débats judiciaires ainsi qu'à celui qui veut que la communauté soit au cœur de were initiated. While the court should not presumptively order that a video link back to the home provinces be set up where the court sits extraprovincially, members of the public, the media, or counsel can request that a video link or other means be used to enhance the accessibility of the hearing. If such a request is made, or the judge considers it appropriate, a video link or other means to enhance accessibility should be ordered, subject to any countervailing considerations.

cet enjeu. Plus particulièrement, les tribunaux doivent aspirer à rendre les recours collectifs visibles et compréhensibles pour les membres des groupes visés par de tels recours ainsi que pour la communauté où ces derniers ont été intentés. Même si les tribunaux ne devraient pas présumer devoir ordonner la mise en place d'un lien vidéo avec les provinces de rattachement lorsque les juges siègent hors province, les membres du public, les médias ou les avocats peuvent demander qu'un tel lien ou qu'un autre moyen de communication soit utilisé pour accroître l'accessibilité à l'audience. Si une telle demande est présentée — ou si le juge estime qu'il est de mise d'établir un lien vidéo ou d'utiliser un autre moyen de communication —, sous réserve de considérations qui feraient contrepoids, elle devrait généralement être accueillie.

Cases Cited

By Cromwell J.

Referred to: Ontario v. Criminal Lawyers' Association of Ontario, 2013 SCC 43, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 3; R. v. Caron, 2011 SCC 5, [2011] 1 S.C.R. 78; MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Simpson, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 725; Century Services Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2010 SCC 60, [2010] 3 S.C.R. 379; Western Canadian Shopping Centres Inc. v. Dutton, 2001 SCC 46, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 534; Hollick v. Toronto (City), 2001 SCC 68, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 158; Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis Society of Essex County v. Windsor (City), 2015 ONCA 572, 337 O.A.C. 315; Fantl v. Transamerica Life Canada, 2009 ONCA 377, 95 O.R. (3d) 767; Ontario New Home Warranty Program v. Chevron Chemical Co. (1999), 46 O.R. (3d) 130; R. v. Rose, [1998] 3 S.C.R. 262; Canadian Broadcasting Corp. v. New Brunswick (Attorney General), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 480; Re Southam Inc. and The Queen (No. 1) (1983), 41 O.R. (2d) 113; Vancouver Sun (Re), 2004 SCC 43, [2004] 2 S.C.R. 332; Named Person v. Vancouver Sun, 2007 SCC 43, [2007] 3 S.C.R. 253; Canadian Broadcasting Corp. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2011 SCC 2, [2011] 1 S.C.R. 19; Scott v. Scott, [1913] A.C. 417; Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326.

By Wagner J.

Referred to: Canadian Broadcasting Corp. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2011 SCC 2, [2011] 1 S.C.R. 19; Canadian Broadcasting Corp. v. New Brunswick (Attorney General), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 480; Named Person v. Vancouver Sun, 2007 SCC 43, [2007] 3 S.C.R. 253; Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326; AIC Limited v. Fischer, 2013 SCC 69, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 949; Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448

Jurisprudence

Citée par le juge Cromwell

Arrêts mentionnés : Ontario c. Criminal Lawyers' Association of Ontario, 2013 CSC 43, [2013] 3 R.C.S. 3; R. c. Caron, 2011 CSC 5, [2011] 1 R.C.S. 78; MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. c. Simpson, [1995] 4 R.C.S. 725; Century Services Inc. c. Canada (Procureur général), 2010 CSC 60, [2010] 3 R.C.S. 379; Western Canadian Shopping Centres Inc. c. Dutton, 2001 CSC 46, [2001] 2 R.C.S. 534; Hollick c. Toronto (Ville), 2001 CSC 68, [2001] 3 R.C.S. 158; Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis Society of Essex County c. Windsor (City), 2015 ONCA 572, 337 O.A.C. 315; Fantl c. Transamerica Life Canada, 2009 ONCA 377, 95 O.R. (3d) 767; Ontario New Home Warranty Program c. Chevron Chemical Co. (1999), 46 O.R. (3d) 130; R. c. Rose, [1998] 3 R.C.S. 262; Société Radio-Canada c. Nouveau-Brunswick (Procureur général), [1996] 3 R.C.S. 480; Re Southam Inc. and The Queen (No. 1) (1983), 41 O.R. (2d) 113; Vancouver Sun (Re), 2004 CSC 43, [2004] 2 R.C.S. 332; Personne désignée c. Vancouver Sun, 2007 CSC 43, [2007] 3 R.C.S. 253; Société Radio-Canada c. Canada (Procureur général), 2011 CSC 2, [2011] 1 R.C.S. 19; Scott c. Scott, [1913] A.C. 417; Edmonton Journal c. Alberta (Procureur général), [1989] 2 R.C.S. 1326.

Citée par le juge Wagner

Arrêts mentionnés : Société Radio-Canada c. Canada (Procureur général), 2011 CSC 2, [2011] 1 R.C.S. 19; Société Radio-Canada c. Nouveau-Brunswick (Procureur général), [1996] 3 R.C.S. 480; Personne désignée c. Vancouver Sun, 2007 CSC 43, [2007] 3 R.C.S. 253; Edmonton Journal c. Alberta (Procureur général), [1989] 2 R.C.S. 1326; AIC Limitée c. Fischer, 2013 CSC 69, [2013] 3 R.C.S. 949; Richmond Newspapers, Inc. c. Virginia, U.S. 555 (1980); Dagenais v. Canadian Broadcasting Corp., [1994] 3 S.C.R. 835; R. v. Mentuck, 2001 SCC 76, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 442.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 50, s. 12.
Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6, s. 12.
Code of Civil Procedure, CQLR, c. C-25, art. 1045.
Code of Civil Procedure, CQLR, c. C-25.01, art. 11.
Constitution Act, 1867, s. 92(14).
Court of Queen's Bench Act, C.C.S.M., c. C280, s. 76(1).
Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, ss. 11(2), 15(1), 135.
Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106, r. 29.
Judicature Act, S.P.E.I. 2008, c. 20, s. 61.
Nova Scotia Civil Procedure Rules, r. 86.05(4).
Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, r. 1.08.
Rules of Court, N.B. Reg. 82-73, rr. 37.08, 38.08.
Supreme Court Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 443, s. 3(1).
Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, rr. 22-1(5), 23-5(4).

Authors Cited

Alberta Law Reform Institute. Final Report No. 85. Class Actions. Edmonton: The Institute, 2000.
Black, Vaughan, and Stephen G. A. Pitel. "Out of Bounds: Can a Court Sit Outside Its Home Jurisdiction?" (2013), 41 Adv. Q. 503.
British Columbia. Legislative Assembly. Official Report of Debates of the Legislative Assembly (Hansard), vol. 20, No. 20, 4th Sess., 35th Parl., June 6, 1995, pp. 15070, 15072 and 15075-76.
British Columbia. Legislative Assembly. Official Report of Debates of the Legislative Assembly (Hansard), vol. 20, No. 23, 4th Sess., 35th Parl., June 8, 1995, pp. 15231-32.
British Columbia. Ministry of Attorney General. Consultation Document: Class Action Legislation for British Columbia. Victoria: The Ministry, 1994.
Côté, Pierre-André, in collaboration with Stéphane Beaulac and Mathieu Devinat. The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada, 4th ed. Toronto: Carswell, 2011.
Cunliffe, Emma. "Open Justice: Concepts and Judicial Approaches" (2012), 40 Fed. L. Rev. 385.
Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. 24, 5th ed. London: LexisNexis, 2010.

448 U.S. 555 (1980); Dagenais c. Société Radio-Canada, [1994] 3 R.C.S. 835; R. c. Mentuck, 2001 CSC 76, [2001] 3 R.C.S. 442.

Lois et règlements cités

Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 50, art. 12.
Code de procédure civile, RLRQ, c. C-25, art. 1045.
Code de procédure civile, RLRQ, c. C-25.01, art. 11.
Judicature Act, S.P.E.I. 2008, c. 20, art. 61.
Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, art. 92(14).
Loi de 1992 sur les recours collectifs, L.O. 1992, c. 6, art. 12.
Loi sur la Cour du Banc de la Reine, C.P.L.M., c. C280, art. 76(1).
Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires, L.R.O. 1990, c. C.43, art. 11(2), 15(1), 135.
Nova Scotia Civil Procedure Rules, règle 86.05(4).
Règles de procédure civile, R.R.O. 1990, Règl. 194, règle 1.08.
Règles de procédure, Règl. du N.-B. 82-73, règles 37.08, 38.08.
Règles des Cours fédérales, DORS/98-106, règle 29.
Supreme Court Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 443, art. 3(1).
Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, règles 22-1(5), 23-5(4).

Doctrine et autres documents cités

Alberta Law Reform Institute. Final Report No. 85, Class Actions, Edmonton, The Institute, 2000.
Black, Vaughan, and Stephen G. A. Pitel. « Out of Bounds : Can a Court Sit Outside Its Home Jurisdiction? » (2013), 41 Adv. Q. 503.
Colombie-Britannique. Assemblée législative. Official Report of Debates of the Legislative Assembly (Hansard), vol. 20, No. 20, 4th Sess., 35th Parl., June 6, 1995, pp. 15070, 15072 and 15075-76.
Colombie-Britannique. Assemblée législative. Official Report of Debates of the Legislative Assembly (Hansard), vol. 20, No. 23, 4th Sess., 35th Parl., June 8, 1995, pp. 15231-32.
Colombie-Britannique. Ministry of Attorney General. Consultation Document : Class Action Legislation for British Columbia, Victoria, The Ministry, 1994.
Conférence pour l'harmonisation des lois au Canada. Loi uniforme sur les recours collectifs (1996) (en ligne : http://www.ulcc.ca/fr/lois-uniformes-nouvelle-structure/lois-uniformes-courantes/83-josetta-1-fr-fr/lois-uniformes/loi-sur-les-recours-collectifs/1398-loi-uniforme-sur-les-recours-collectifs-1996).

Jackson, Georgina R., and Janis Sarra. "Selecting the Judicial Tool to get the Job Done: An Examination of Statutory Interpretation, Discretionary Power and Inherent Jurisdiction in Insolvency Matters", in Janis P. Sarra, ed., Annual Review of Insolvency Law 2007. Toronto: Thomson Carswell, 2008, 41.

Jacob, I. H. "The Inherent Jurisdiction of the Court" (1970), 23 Curr. Legal Probs. 23.

Macdonald, Roderick A. "Access to Justice in Canada Today: Scope, Scale and Ambitions", in Julia Bass, W. A. Bogart and Frederick H. Zemans, eds., Access to Justice for a New Century — The Way Forward. Toronto: Law Society of Upper Canada, 2005, 19.

Ontario. Attorney General's Advisory Committee on Class Action Reform. Report of the Attorney General's Advisory Committee on Class Action Reform. Toronto: The Committee, 1990.

Ontario. Law Reform Commission. Report on Class Actions, vol. II. Toronto: Ministry of the Attorney General, 1982.

Ontario. Legislative Assembly. Official Report of Debates (Hansard), 1st Sess., 35th Parl., November 18, 1991 (online: www.ontla.on.ca/web/house-proceedings/house_detail.do?Date=1991-11-18&Parl=35&Sess=1&locale=en).

Ontario. Legislative Assembly. Official Report of Debates (Hansard), 2nd Sess., 34th Parl., June 12, 1990 (online: www.ontla.on.ca/web/house-proceedings/house_detail.do?Date=1990-06-12&Parl=35&Sess=1&locale=en).

Resnik, Judith. "The Democracy in Courts: Jeremy Bentham, 'Publicity', and the Privatization of Process in the Twenty-First Century" (2013), 10 NoFo 77.

Uniform Law Conference of Canada. Uniform Class Proceedings Act (1996) (online: http://www.ulcc.ca/en/uniform-acts-new-order/current-uniform-acts/82-josetta-1-en-gb/uniform-actsa/class-proceedings-act/1395-uniform-class-proceedings-act-1996).

Warren, Marilyn. "Open Justice in the Technological Age" (2014), 40 Monash U.L. Rev. 45.

APPEAL from a judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (Saunders, Tysoe and Goepel JJ.A.), 2014 BCCA 61, 59 B.C.L.R. (5th) 113, 352 B.C.A.C. 7, 601 W.A.C. 7, 49 C.P.C. (7th) 316, [2014] 5 W.W.R. 481, [2014] B.C.J. No. 254 (QL), 2014 CarswellBC 363 (WL Can.), setting aside a decision of Bauman C.J.B.C., 2013 BCSC 1074, [2013] B.C.J. No. 1304 (QL), 2013 CarswellBC 1828 (WL Can.). Appeal allowed.

Côté, Pierre-André, avec la collaboration de Stéphane Beaulac et Mathieu Devinat. Interprétation des lois, 4e éd., Montréal, Thémis, 2009.

Cunliffe, Emma. « Open Justice : Concepts and Judicial Approaches » (2012), 40 Fed. L. Rev. 385.

Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. 24, 5th ed., London, LexisNexis, 2010.

Jackson, Georgina R., and Janis Sarra. « Selecting the Judicial Tool to get the Job Done : An Examination of Statutory Interpretation, Discretionary Power and Inherent Jurisdiction in Insolvency Matters », in Janis P. Sarra, ed., Annual Review of Insolvency Law 2007, Toronto, Thomson Carswell, 2008, 41.

Jacob, I. H. « The Inherent Jurisdiction of the Court » (1970), 23 Curr. Legal Probs. 23.

Macdonald, Roderick A. « L'accès à la justice aujourd'hui au Canada — étendue, envergure et ambitions », dans Julia Bass, W. A. Bogart et Frederick H. Zemans, dir., L'accès à la justice pour le nouveau siècle : les voies du progrès, Toronto, Barreau du Haut-Canada, 2005, 23.

Ontario. Assemblée législative. Journal des débats (Hansard), 1re sess., 35e lég., 18 novembre 1991 (en ligne : www.ontla.on.ca/web/house-proceedings/house_detail.do?Date=1991-11-18&Parl=35&Sess=1&locale=fr).

Ontario. Assemblée législative. Journal des débats (Hansard), 2e sess., 34e lég., 12 juin 1990 (en ligne : www.ontla.on.ca/web/house-proceedings/house_detail.do?Date=1990-06-12&Parl=35&Sess=1&locale=fr).

Ontario. Attorney General's Advisory Committee on Class Action Reform. Report of the Attorney General's Advisory Committee on Class Action Reform, Toronto, The Committee, 1990.

Ontario. Commission de réforme du droit. Report on Class Actions, vol. II, Toronto, ministère du Procureur général, 1982.

Resnik, Judith. « The Democracy in Courts : Jeremy Bentham, "Publicity", and the Privatization of Process in the Twenty-First Century » (2013), 10 NoFo 77.

Warren, Marilyn. « Open Justice in the Technological Age » (2014), 40 Monash U.L. Rev. 45.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique (les juges Saunders, Tysoe et Goepel), 2014 BCCA 61, 59 B.C.L.R. (5th) 113, 352 B.C.A.C. 7, 601 W.A.C. 7, 49 C.P.C. (7th) 316, [2014] 5 W.W.R. 481, [2014] B.C.J. No. 254 (QL), 2014 CarswellBC 363 (WL Can.), qui a infirmé une décision du juge en chef Bauman, 2013 BCSC 1074, [2013] B.C.J. No. 1304 (QL), 2013 CarswellBC 1828 (WL Can.). Pourvoi accueilli.

APPEAL and CROSS-APPEAL from a judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal (Juriansz, LaForme and Lauwers JJ.A.), 2015 ONCA 158, 125 O.R. (3d) 168, 331 O.A.C. 71, 381 D.L.R. (4th) 667, 64 C.P.C. (7th) 227, [2015] O.J. No. 1257 (QL), 2015 CarswellOnt 3336 (WL Can.), setting aside in part a decision of Winkler C.J.O., 2013 ONSC 3053, 363 D.L.R. (4th) 352, 43 C.P.C. (7th) 412, [2013] O.J. No. 2343 (QL), 2013 CarswellOnt 6659 (WL Can.). Appeal allowed and cross-appeal dismissed.

Sharon D. Matthews, Q.C., J. J. Camp, Q.C., and Michael Sobkin, for the appellant Anita Endean, as representative plaintiff.

Keith Evans and Katherine Webber, for the respondent Her Majesty The Queen in Right of the Province of British Columbia.

Robert J. Frater, Q.C., and Kathryn Hucal, for the respondent/respondent on cross-appeal the Attorney General of Canada.

Paul J. Pape and Shantona Chaudhury, for the appellants/respondents on cross-appeal Dianna Louise Parsons et al.

John E. Callaghan and Alex Zavaglia, for the appellant the Fund Counsel for Ontario.

Josh Hunter, Brent Kettles and Lynne McArdle, for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal Her Majesty The Queen in Right of Ontario.

No one appeared for the respondent/respondent on cross-appeal the Canadian Red Cross Society.

Caroline Zayid, H. Michael Rosenberg and Adam Goldenberg, for the respondents Her Majesty The Queen in Right of Alberta et al.

Written submissions only by Dana Pescarus, Carole Soucy and Manon Des Ormeaux, for the intervener.

POURVOI PRINCIPAL et POURVOI INCIDENT contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario (les juges Juriansz, LaForme et Lauwers), 2015 ONCA 158, 125 O.R. (3d) 168, 331 O.A.C. 71, 381 D.L.R. (4th) 667, 64 C.P.C. (7th) 227, [2015] O.J. No. 1257 (QL), 2015 CarswellOnt 3336 (WL Can.), qui a infirmé en partie une décision du juge en chef Winkler, 2013 ONSC 3053, 363 D.L.R. (4th) 352, 43 C.P.C. (7th) 412, [2013] O.J. No. 2343 (QL), 2013 CarswellOnt 6659 (WL Can.). Pourvoi principal accueilli et pourvoi incident rejeté.

Sharon D. Matthews, c.r., J. J. Camp, c.r., et Michael Sobkin, pour l'appelante Anita Endean, en sa qualité de représentante des demandeurs.

Keith Evans et Katherine Webber, pour l'intimée Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de la province de la Colombie-Britannique.

Robert J. Frater, c.r., et Kathryn Hucal, pour l'intimé/intimé au pourvoi incident le procureur général du Canada.

Paul J. Pape et Shantona Chaudhury, pour les appelants/intimés au pourvoi incident Dianna Louise Parsons et autres.

John E. Callaghan et Alex Zavaglia, pour l'appelant le Conseiller juridique du Fonds pour l'Ontario.

Josh Hunter, Brent Kettles et Lynne McArdle, pour l'intimée/appelante au pourvoi incident Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de l'Ontario.

Personne n'a comparu pour l'intimée/intimée au pourvoi incident la Société canadienne de la Croix-Rouge.

Caroline Zayid, H. Michael Rosenberg et Adam Goldenberg, pour les intimés Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de l'Alberta et autres.

Argumentation écrite seulement par Dana Pescarus, Carole Soucy et Manon Des Ormeaux, pour l'intervenante.

The judgment of McLachlin C.J. and Abella, Cromwell, Moldaver, Gascon, Côté and Brown JJ. was delivered by

CROMWELL J. —

I. Introduction and Issues

[1] Class actions are an important procedural tool designed to help improve access to justice. They are meant to provide a fair and expeditious resolution of the plaintiffs' claims and, to ensure that they do, class action judges have broad and flexible procedural powers. The limits of those powers are tested by these appeals.

[2] At issue is the power of superior court judges who are implementing a pan-national class action settlement to sit outside their home provinces to hear and decide a motion relating to it.

[3] While all parties agree that judges may do this under certain conditions, there is disagreement about two related issues:

1. What is the source of authority for the judge to sit outside his or her home jurisdiction: Is it statutory or an aspect of the inherent powers of a superior court?

2. Is a video link to an open courtroom in the judge's home jurisdiction a condition for the exercise of this authority?

[4] In my opinion, superior court judges in Ontario and British Columbia have the discretionary statutory power under s. 12 of the Class Proceedings Act, 1992, S.O. 1992, c. 6, and s. 12 of the Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 50 (the "Acts"), to sit outside their home provinces, and a video link to an open courtroom in the judge's home jurisdiction is Version française du jugement de la juge en chef McLachlin et des juges Abella, Cromwell, Moldaver, Gascon, Côté et Brown rendu par

LE JUGE CROMWELL —

I. Introduction et questions en litige

[1] Le recours collectif est un important outil procédural conçu pour accroître l'accès à la justice. Il est censé offrir une procédure permettant de trancher les litiges avec équité et célérité. À cette fin, les juges qui instruisent ce type de recours disposent de pouvoirs à la fois vastes et souples en matière de procédure. Les présents pourvois amènent la Cour à se pencher sur les limites de ces pouvoirs.

[2] Il s'agit ici de savoir si les juges des cours supérieures chargés de mettre en œuvre des conventions pancanadiennes de règlement de recours collectifs ont le pouvoir de siéger à l'extérieur de leur province de rattachement pour trancher les requêtes s'y rapportant.

[3] Bien que toutes les parties s'entendent pour dire que les juges peuvent exercer ce pouvoir à certaines conditions, elles sont en désaccord sur les deux questions connexes suivantes :

1. Quelle est la source du pouvoir permettant aux juges de siéger à l'extérieur de leur province de rattachement : s'agit-il d'un pouvoir d'origine législative ou d'un volet de la compétence inhérente des cours supérieures?

2. Est-il nécessaire, pour pouvoir exercer ce pouvoir, qu'il y ait un lien vidéo entre la salle d'audience où se trouve le juge et une salle d'audience accessible au public dans la province de rattachement du juge?

[4] À mon avis, les juges des cours supérieures ont, en Ontario et en Colombie-Britannique — en vertu respectivement de l'art. 12 de la Loi de 1992 sur les recours collectifs, L.O. 1992, c. 6, et de l'art. 12 de la Class Proceedings Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 50 (les « Lois ») — le pouvoir discrétionnaire de siéger à l'extérieur de leur province de rattachement,

(a) Common Law and Constitutional Barriers

[43] The British Columbia Court of Appeal found that English common law, which, in its view, prohibited judges in England from sitting outside England, was received into British Columbia as of November 1858 and prevented British Columbia judges from sitting outside their province. The court also found that using inherent jurisdiction to support out-of-province hearings would be inconsistent with and contrary to the common law and ancient usage. Further, while the common law was subject to modification, the Court of Appeal concluded that any major revisions of the common law rule prohibiting judges from sitting outside their territorial jurisdiction was better left to the legislature.

[44] The British Columbia appellant, Anita Endean, as representative plaintiff, submits that the Court of Appeal was wrong to find a common law limit on the court's inherent power. Ms. Endean submits that this old English rule was not received into British Columbia law and, in any event, should not be followed.

[45] When one looks at the common law relating to courts sitting outside their jurisdiction, one finds that the jurisprudence is sparse and the precise ambit of any limitation is unclear. However, I accept that there is, as V. Black and S. G. A. Pitel have put it, a "deep-seated sense" in the common law that courts conduct their business within their geographical boundaries: "Out of Bounds: Can a Court Sit Outside Its Home Jurisdiction?" (2013), 41 Adv. Q. 503, at p. 503; see also pp. 509-10.

[46] A number of considerations support this "deep-seated sense", including concerns about the sovereignty of the jurisdiction in which the hearing is held and concerns about the territorial limits of the

a) Obstacles découlant de la common law ou de la Constitution

[43] La Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique a conclu que la common law anglaise — qui, à son avis, interdit aux juges anglais de siéger à l'extérieur de l'Angleterre — a été admise en Colombie-Britannique en novembre 1858 et qu'elle empêche les juges de la Colombie-Britannique de siéger à l'extérieur de leur province. La Cour d'appel a également jugé qu'il serait contraire à la common law et à un usage séculaire d'utiliser la compétence inhérente des cours supérieures pour soutenir leur droit de tenir des audiences hors province. Enfin, tout en reconnaissant que la common law pouvait être modifiée, la Cour d'appel a conclu qu'il était préférable de laisser au législateur le soin de réviser les règles de common law interdisant aux juges de siéger à l'extérieur de leur ressort.

[44] Selon Anita Endean, appelante de la Colombie-Britannique agissant en sa qualité de représentante des demandeurs, la Cour d'appel a eu tort de conclure que la common law restreint la compétence inhérente de la cour. M^me^ Endean affirme que cette ancienne règle anglaise n'a pas été admise dans le droit applicable en Colombie-Britannique et que, en tout état de cause, elle ne devrait pas être suivie.

[45] Lorsqu'on examine les règles de common law relatives aux cours dont les juges siègent à l'extérieur de leur ressort, on constate que la jurisprudence sur le sujet est peu abondante et que la portée précise des restrictions qui peuvent exister est incertaine. J'admets cependant, pour reprendre la formule de V. Black et de S. G. A. Pitel qu'il existe, en common law, une [TRADUCTION] « notion bien ancrée » selon laquelle les tribunaux doivent exercer leurs activités à l'intérieur des limites géographiques de leur ressort : « Out of Bounds : Can a Court Sit Outside Its Home Jurisdiction? » (2013), 41 Adv. Q. 503, p. 503; voir aussi p. 509-510.

[46] Plusieurs facteurs appuient cette « notion bien ancrée ». Il existe notamment certaines préoccupations quant à la protection de la souveraineté de la province ou du territoire où se déroulerait coercive powers of the judge conducting the hearing. But the type of court hearing in issue in these cases does not give rise to the concerns which support any broader principle against out-of-province sittings. In particular, judges in cases like these will not be called on to exercise any coercive powers, as they would be adjudicating on a paper record. And there is no suggestion that the proposed hearing would be inconsistent with the law of the place in which it would be held. There is thus no threat either to the authority or dignity of the superior court or to the sovereignty of the jurisdiction in which the hearing would be held.

[47] Moreover, it is open to the Court to modify the common law if necessary to make it clear that it does not preclude such hearings.

[48] Permitting these hearings does not give rise to the concerns about sovereignty, dignity of the courts or extraterritorial exercise of coercive powers. It is also a practical alternative that serves the underlying purposes of class proceedings. To take too dogmatic a stand on this point, as Winkler C.J.O. noted, risks leaving the common law unsuited "to modern realities of increasingly complex litigation involving parties and subject matters that transcend provincial borders": para. 25.

[49] Further, the narrow circumstances of these appeals do not raise a concern that the judiciary is trenching on powers reserved to the legislature. What is proposed here is not the sort of major procedural innovation that arguably ought to be left to the legislature. On the contrary, the legislatures have, through s. 12 of the Acts, encouraged courts to make full use of their power to regulate the process in the interests of making it fair and expeditious. Allowing courts to hold the type of hearing in issue here furthers the legislative intention l'audience, et d'autres quant à la portée territoriale des pouvoirs de contrainte du juge qui présiderait l'audience. Cela dit, le type d'audiences dont il est question en l'espèce ne justifie pas les craintes évoquées au soutien d'un principe plus large contre les audiences hors province. En effet, plus particulièrement, dans ce type de causes, les juges ne sont pas appelés à exercer leurs pouvoirs de contrainte puisqu'ils jugent l'affaire sur dossier. Nul ne prétend par ailleurs que l'audience proposée serait incompatible avec les lois de la province où elle se tiendrait. Il n'y a donc aucune menace à l'autorité ou à la dignité de la cour supérieure, pas plus qu'à la souveraineté de la province dans laquelle l'audience aurait lieu.

[47] De plus, la Cour peut toujours modifier la common law au besoin pour bien préciser qu'elle n'empêche pas de telles audiences.

[48] Ainsi, le fait de permettre la tenue de telles audiences ne soulève pas de préoccupations quant à la souveraineté ou à la dignité des tribunaux ou quant à l'exercice extraterritorial de pouvoirs de contrainte. C'est par ailleurs une solution pratique qui contribue à réaliser les objectifs sous-jacents des recours collectifs. Comme le juge en chef Winkler l'a noté, en adoptant une position trop dogmatique à ce sujet, on risquerait de faire perdurer une situation où la common law serait mal adaptée [TRADUCTION] « aux réalités modernes où des procès de plus en plus complexes font intervenir des parties et des questions qui transcendent les frontières provinciales » : par. 25.

[49] De plus, les circonstances particulières des présents pourvois ne font pas craindre que l'organe judiciaire empiète sur des pouvoirs réservés au législateur. En effet, la mesure proposée en l'espèce n'a rien à voir avec le type d'innovation procédurale majeure dont on pourrait prétendre qu'il reviendrait au législateur d'adopter. Au contraire, le législateur, grâce aux art. 12 des Lois, a incité les tribunaux à utiliser pleinement leurs pouvoirs de gestion du déroulement de l'instance pour en favoriser l'équité et la célérité. Or, permettre aux evident in this scheme; far from usurping legislative authority, this approach uses the authority broadly conferred by the legislature to further its objectives.

tribunaux de tenir le genre d'audiences dont il est question en l'espèce sert l'intention du législateur qui ressort à l'évidence de l'économie des lois en question; loin d'usurper des pouvoirs législatifs, cette démarche puise plutôt à même les vastes pouvoirs conférés par le législateur pour favoriser l'atteinte de ses objectifs.

[50] The Attorney General of Ontario suggests that any interpretation of s. 12 of the Class Proceedings Act, 1992 must respect the "presumption against extraterritoriality" (R.F., at para. 53), an interpretative presumption that "[t]he legislature is presumed to intend the territorial limits of its jurisdiction to coincide with that of the statute's operation" and "[u]nless implicitly or explicitly provided otherwise, the legislature is presumed to enact for persons, property, juridical acts and events within the territorial boundaries of its jurisdiction": P.-A. Côté, in collaboration with S. Beaulac and M. Devinat, The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada (4th ed. 2011), at p. 212. The Attorney General notes that such a concern would arise if s. 12 were interpreted to allow an order to have a true extraterritorial effect, such as a coercive order taking effect outside Ontario or British Columbia.

[50] Suivant le procureur général de l'Ontario, toute interprétation de l'art. 12 de la Loi de 1992 sur les recours collectifs doit respecter le [TRADUCTION] « principe de la territorialité des lois » (m.i., par. 53), selon lequel on « prête[ra] en principe au législateur la volonté de faire coïncider les limites spatiales de l'effet de ses lois avec les frontières du territoire soumis à sa compétence » et, « [e]n l'absence de disposition contraire, expresse ou implicite, on présumera que l'auteur d'un texte législatif entend qu'il s'applique aux personnes, aux biens, aux actes ou aux faits qui se situent à l'intérieur des limites du territoire soumis à sa compétence » : P.-A. Côté, en collaboration avec S. Beaulac et M. Devinat, Interprétation des lois (4e éd. 2009), p. 230. Le procureur général fait observer que cette question se poserait si l'on interprétait les art. 12 de manière à donner à une ordonnance judiciaire une véritable portée extraterritoriale, en permettant par exemple à une ordonnance coercitive de s'appliquer à l'extérieur de l'Ontario ou de la Colombie-Britannique.

[51] I do not rely on s. 12 of the Acts as providing for the exercise of coercive powers outside the court's home province. Interpreting s. 12 as allowing the type of hearing at issue in these cases therefore does not engage the presumption against extraterritoriality since this application of the provisions does not give rise to any impermissible extraterritorial effect.

[51] Or, une interprétation de ces dispositions qui permettrait de tenir le genre d'audiences dont il est question en l'espèce ne fait pas intervenir le principe de la territorialité des lois, puisque l'application des dispositions en cause n'a aucune portée extraterritoriale interdite.

[52] Finally, in my opinion, no constitutional impediment has been identified to the limited authority of a superior court to sit outside its jurisdiction that we are addressing in this case.

[52] J'estime enfin qu'on n'a signalé aucun empêchement d'ordre constitutionnel au pouvoir limité dont il est question ici d'une cour supérieure de siéger à l'extérieur de son ressort.

Federal Court  Cour fédérale

Date: 20240213

Docket: T-1274-23

Citation: 2024 FC 242

Ottawa, Ontario, February 13, 2024

PRESENT: The Hon Mr. Justice Henry S. Brown

BETWEEN:

YAVAR HAMEED

Applicant

and

PRIME MINISTER AND MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Respondents

JUDGMENT AND REASONS

Table of Contents

I. Letter from Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council to the Prime Minister of Canada dated May 3, 2023

[1] At its core, this matter concerns the following letter from the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council to the Prime Minister of Canada dated, May 3, 2023 (English translation of Exhibit KKK of the Applicant's Record, Volume 1, as set out in Schedule A of this Judgment and Reasons):

> The Right Honourable Justin Trudeau
>
> Dear Prime Minister:
>
> As Chief Justice of Canada and Chairperson for the Canadian Judicial Council, I must express my deep concern with regard to the significant number of vacancies within Federal Judicial Affairs and the government's inability to fill these positions in a timely manner.
>
> The current situation is untenable, and I fear that this will result in a crisis for our justice system, which is already facing many challenges. Access to justice and the health of our democratic institutions are at risk.
>
> As you undoubtedly know, there are currently 85 vacancies within Federal Judicial Affairs across the country. Some courts have had to deal with a 10 to 15% vacancy rate for years now. It is also not uncommon for positions to remain vacant for several months, if not years, in some cases. As a concrete example, over half of the positions at the Manitoba Court of Appeal are currently vacant. Key chief justice and associate chief justice positions are also being filled at a very slow pace. In fact, there have recently been considerable delays in appointments to chief justice positions in a number of provinces, including Alberta, Ontario and Prince Edward Island. The chief justice of Manitoba position has been vacant for six months now, and the associate chief justice positions in the Court of King's Bench for Saskatchewan and the Superior Court of Quebec have been vacant for over a year. No clear explanation justifies these delays.
>
> It should be noted that the difficulties brought on by the judge shortage are exacerbating an already critical situation within several courts—namely a serious lack of resources due to chronic underfunding by the provinces and territories. However, while several factors explain the crisis currently facing our justice system, the appointment of judges in due course is a solution within reach that could help quickly and effectively improve the situation. Given this obvious fact and the critical situation we are faced with, the government's inertia regarding vacancies and the absence of satisfactory explanations for these delays are disconcerting. The slow pace of appointments is all the more difficult to understand since most judicial vacancies are predictable, especially those resulting from retirements for which judges usually provide several months' notice. In this context, these delays in appointments send a message that this is simply not a priority for the government.

On behalf of the Canadian Judicial Council, I can attest to the fact that chief justices and associate chief justices across the country are satisfied with the quality of recent appointments and are thrilled with the addition of new judge positions in recent budgets. We also recognize that your government has made efforts to establish a more independent, transparent and impartial appointment process for federally appointed judges. It would be unfortunate if the failure to improve the pace of federal judicial appointments across the country were to ultimately discredit this process.

I recently had the opportunity to meet with the Minister of Justice and discuss this matter with him. The Chief Justices also have very good relationships with the Minister and his office, and we are confident that he is willing to make every effort to remedy the problems I have outlined.

Despite all these efforts, it is imperative for the Prime Minister's Office to give this issue the importance it deserves and for appointments to be made in a timely manner. It is essential that the vacant positions within the judiciary be filled diligently to ensure that judicial branch functions properly. In the past, the Canadian Judicial Council has urged governments to make judicial appointments more quickly. This time, we have serious concerns that without concrete efforts to remedy the situation, we will soon reach a point of no return in several jurisdictions. The consequences will make headlines and have serious repercussions on our democracy and on all Canadians. This situation requires your immediate attention.

The positions that have been left vacant are having significant impacts on the administration of justice, the operations of our courts and the health of our judges. Canadian Judicial Council members recently took it upon themselves to provide a more comprehensive overview of the difficulties faced by their respective courts. The findings are appalling.

Despite all our judges' professionalism and dedication, the staffing shortage inevitably results in additional delays in hearing cases and rendering judgments. Chief justices have indicated that, because judges are overburdened, delays in setting cases are unavoidable and hearings need to be postponed or adjourned. What's more, even when cases are heard, judgments are slow to be rendered because judges need to spend more time sitting, leaving them less time to deliberate. The analysis framework in R. V. Jordan, 2016 SCC 27, with respect to the accused's right to be tried within a reasonable time pursuant to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, also plays an important role in that regard. It provides that, before superior courts, criminal charges must be tried within 30 months, save in exceptional circumstances. If a trial has not ended within that timeframe, a stay of proceedings may be ordered. Many chief justices say that as part of their efforts to respect the timelines prescribed by Jordan, they are currently forced to choose the criminal matters that "deserve" to be heard most. Despite their best efforts, stays of proceedings are pronounced against individuals accused of serious crimes, such as sexual assault or murder, because of delays that are due, in part or in whole, to a shortage of judges. For example, the Court of King's Bench of Alberta has reported that over 22% of ongoing criminal cases are passing the 30-month deadline and that 91% of those cases involve serious and violent crimes. Furthermore, the necessary urgency in processing criminal cases means the courts' role in civil cases is being neglected. The justice system is consequently at risk of being perceived as useless for civil matters. These types of situations represent a failure of our justice system and are likely to fuel public cynicism and undermine their trust in our democratic institutions.

These ongoing vacancies also have a serious impact on judges themselves. Faced with a chronic work overload and increased stress, judges are increasingly going on medical leave, which has a domino effect on their colleagues, who then must carry an additional workload. It is also becoming difficult for judges of certain courts to find the necessary time to complete training, including training that is considered mandatory. This situation does not bode well for ensuring a healthy and thriving judiciary. If current issues persist, it could also become difficult to attract high-quality candidates for judge positions.

This is already the case in British Columbia.

Richard Wagner

II. Summary and conclusions

[2] This is the Applicant's request for judicial resolution of a dispute between himself and the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council on the one hand, and the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice on the other.

[3] By the foregoing letter, the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council requested the Prime Minister to fill a very large number of vacant Superior Court and Federal Courts judicial positions across Canada.

[4] The requested number of vacancies have not been filled. While appointments were made over the last 8 months, during the same period new vacancies have been created by resignation or otherwise. This significant and unacceptably large number of vacancies remains essentially unchanged. The facts are there were 79 vacancies when this application was filed in June 2023, and 75 vacancies as of February 1, 2024 according to the Federal Commissioner of Judicial Affair's website [FCJA]: https://www.fja-cmf.gc.ca/appointments-nominations/judges-juges-eng.aspx.

[5] Neither the Prime Minister and two successive Ministers of Justice have remedied this critical situation in the 9 months since the request by our Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council.

[6] With the greatest respect, the Court finds the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice are simply treading water. They have failed to take the actions requested by the Chief Justice of Canada and the Canadian Judicial Council. And with the greatest respect, they have also failed all those who rely on them for the timely exercise of their powers in relation to filling these vacancies. Also failed are all those who have unsuccessfully sought timely justice in the Superior Courts and Federal Courts across Canada.

[7] As a consequence, a point not contested, the Court finds the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice have refused the request made by the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council.

[8] The Respondents offered no justification for their decision to refuse the request to fill these judicial vacancies.

[9] As a matter of well-established convention, also not disputed, the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice have effective and exclusive control over, and in the Court's view, they have the concomitant responsibility to appoint judges to the Superior Courts across Canada, and the Federal Courts. It is not doubted that no such appointments may be made without their advice and consent.

[10] Notably, the advice and consent of the Respondents must be directed to either the Governor General (by the Minister of Justice in the case of provincial Superior Court judges, or by the Prime Minister in the case of relevant Chief Justices), or to the Governor in Council (by the Minister of Justice in the case of judges of the Federal Courts or by the Prime Minister in the case of relevant Chief Justices): see Democracy Watch v Canada (Attorney General), 2023 FC 31 [Democracy Watch] [per Southcott J].

[11] The level of vacancies is now, as the letter describes and which is not contested, at both a crisis and critical level. Other words used by the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council to describe the impact of the ongoing failure to fill vacancies include “appalling” and “untenable.”

[12] The Court is given no explanation or justification by the Respondents of this untenable situation. Notably, the Respondents filed no evidence to dispute what I accept as expert opinions of both the Chief Justice of Canada and the Canadian Judicial Council. Their unequalled individual and collective experience, knowledge and expertise in relation to the state of the federally appointed judicial vacancies across Canada was not questioned in any way.

[13] In these circumstances, the Court finds no reason to discount or disregard the evidence and submissions of the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council to the Respondents. I find the responsibilities of the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice to meaningfully engage their powers with respect to filling the critical and untenable level of judicial vacancies across our federal judiciary may not be ignored.

[14] With the greatest respect, this Court faced with these assessments by such credible entities, accepts the views of the Chief Justice of Canada and the Canadian Judicial Council as set out in their letter to the Prime Minister.

[15] On this basis the Court has no hesitation in concluding the current level of vacancies is untenable, and at a minimum, requires the judicial response afforded in the following Judgment.

[16] The Court comes to this conclusion because the same constitutional convention giving the Respondents advice-giving responsibility respecting federal judicial appointments obviously entails their responsibility to fill judicial vacancies in a timely manner, that is, within a reasonable time. It would be absurd to suggest the “rule of law”, essential to the proper function of the nation and enshrined in the preamble to the Constitution Act, 1982, exists at the whim of the executive government. The rule of law may not be critically and negatively impacted simply by what the Court finds the Respondents’ unjustified and persistent failure to advise the Governor General and or Governor in Council to fill this critical and unacceptably high level of judicial vacancies.

[17] How long should it take to fill a sufficient number of vacancies? In the Court’s view the answer is plain and obvious: these vacancies must be materially reduced within a reasonable time to a reasonable level.

[18] What is a reasonable or sufficient level of vacancies? The Court was provided with no reason the number of vacancies may not be reduced to the mid-40s: there were only 46 vacancies in the Spring of 2016, for example.

[19] That said, the number of vacancies in an ideal world should be very low, and it seems to me this is a matter to be determined by Parliament. In some cases it may be that all relevant vacancies must be filled, as where serious crimes are not prosecuted in a timely way such that victims, the public and accused are denied justice. That may not be possible in other cases, but as noted, no evidence was provided by the Respondents. This is a matter in respect of which the Respondents should obviously engage with the Chief Justice of Canada and relevant Chief Justices / Associate Chief Justices and in respect of which the Canadian Judicial Council, having come this far, should provide (as perhaps it has) specific guidance.

[20] By way of remedy, the Court may, and in this case will recognize and declare the constitutional convention that judicial vacancies on the provincial Superior Courts and Federal Courts must be filled within a reasonable time. The Court will make this declaration in its expectation that the number of vacant positions will be materially reduced to the mid-40s being the number of federal vacancies in Spring of 2016. In this manner, the Court expects the crisis and critical situation to be resolved.

[21] Specifically, the Court's declaration is:

> 1. All federal judicial appointments are made by the Governor General on the advice of Cabinet. In turn, Cabinet acts on the advice of the Minister of Justice. In the case of appointment of > Chief Justices and Associate Chief Justices, it is the Prime Minister who provides the advice to Cabinet.

>
> 2. Appointments to fill judicial vacancies under section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act must be made within a reasonable time of the vacancy.
>
> 3. Appointments to fill current judicial vacancies are required for the reasons set out in the letter from the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council to the Prime Minister of Canada dated May 3, 2023 set out in paragraph 1 and Schedule A to these Reasons for Judgment.
>
> 4. The Court makes Declarations 2 and 3 above in its expectation that the number of said judicial vacancies will be materially reduced in a reasonable time such that the total number of judicial vacancies returns to the mid-40s, that is, to the number of federal judicial vacancies in the Spring of 2016; in this manner the Court expects the untenable and appalling crisis, and critical judicial vacancy situation found by this Court as identified by the Chief Justice and Canadian Judicial Council will be resolved.

[22] I encourage the parties, and or the Chief Justice of Canada and or the Canadian Judicial Council to seek further direction and relief from this Court in the event this Court's Judgment is not satisfied or in issue.

[23] I now turn to a number of legal issues raised by the parties, at the conclusion of which the Court's Judgment will issue.

III. The Application

[24] The Applicant applies for a writ of mandamus pursuant to sections 18 and 18.1 of the Federal Courts Act, RSC 1985, c F-7 [Federal Courts Act] to compel the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice [Respondents] to appoint judges to fill vacancies in the superior courts across Canada including the Federal Courts. By law, these appointments are to be filled either by the Governor General pursuant to section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, 30 & 31 Vict, c 3, reprinted in RSC 1985 [Constitution Act, 1867] in respect of Provincial Superior Court judges, or by the Governor in Council pursuant to section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act in respect of judges of the Federal Court and Federal Court of Appeal [Federal Courts].

[25] The Applicant asks that such vacancies be filled i.e., that appointments be made within certain timelines, namely within the later of three months of the date of this Court's Order, or within nine months of their having become aware the positions would be vacated, and does so by analogy to practices developed by this Court in immigration cases.

[26] In the alternative, the Applicant asks the Court to declare that:

> a. The Prime Minister and Minister of Justice are in violation of their duties to appoint judges to the vacancies in the superior courts under section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and section 5. 2 of the Federal Courts Act; and
>
> b. A reasonable interpretation of the requirement to appoint judges in section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act is that, absent exceptional circumstances, the appointments shall be made within nine months of the date of the applicable Minister becomes aware that a position will be vacated, or three months after a position is vacated, whichever is later.

[27] It is noteworthy that while the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice are named parties against whom relief is sought, the Applicant (who confirmed his position at the hearing) does not name either the Governor General or the Governor in Council as parties, notwithstanding it is they who by the Constitution Act, 1867 or Federal Courts Act respectively hold the legal power to make these appointments.

[28] While the Applicant filed evidence in support of his Application, including of course the letter from the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council, the Respondents filed no evidence disputing the same. Indeed, the Respondents filed no evidence at all.

[29] Instead, the Respondents raise and wholly rely on a number of procedural and technical objections, none of which - and with the greatest respect - the Court accepts.

IV. The Applicant

[30] The Applicant is a human rights lawyer in Ottawa. Called to the bar of Ontario 22 years ago, the Applicant regularly litigates in the Federal Court, the Ontario Superior Court of Justice, and Ontario's Court of Appeal. None of this is in dispute.

[31] In his affidavit, the Applicant states (and it is not disputed) that over the past several years he has experienced significant delays in litigation proceedings in the Superior Courts on behalf of vulnerable clients. In addition to this general information, which I accept, the Applicant provides concrete evidence of delay in the form of uncontested correspondence to him from the Ottawa Superior Court of Justice Trial Coordinator concerning a case of his that was adjourned in which the Trial Coordinator attributed the delay to the fact "[T]he court is experiencing a lack of judicial resources as of late." I accept this because the note to that effect is exhibited and is undisputed.

V. Applicant's facts on federal judicial vacancies are accepted

[32] The Applicant also set out the following material facts which the Court accepts.

[33] As of the filing of this Application in June 2023, there were 79 superior court vacancies (including those in the Federal Courts) across Canada. This represents almost 7 percent of the total federally appointed judiciary.

[34] 79 vacancies represents a very significant increase from the Spring of 2016 at which time there were only 46 vacancies.

[35] It is also the case that many vacancies are of very great duration.

[36] These facts are also illustrated in the following tables produced and deposed to by the Applicant, the accuracy of which was not seriously disputed. The Court accepts this table into evidence:

Table 1: Vacancies

Court	Retiree or Act creating vacant position	Date position became vacant	Days vacant as of July 11, 2023	Exhibit
FC	BIA, 2018	21-Jun-18	1846
FC	BIA, 2019	21-Jun-19	1481
FC	BIA, 2019	21-Jun-19	1481
FC	BIA, 2019	21-Jun-19	1481
ONSC	BIA, 2021	29-Jun-21	742

ONSC	BIA, 2021	29-Jun-21	742
ONSC	BIA, 2021	29-Jun-21	742
ONSC	BIA, 2021	29-Jun-21	742
ONSC	BIA, 2021	29-Jun-21	742
FCA	BIA, 2021	29-Jun-21	742
TCC	BIA, 2021	29-Jun-21	742
BCCA	David Franklin Tysoe	01-Jan-22	556	F
ABKB	Donna L. Shelley	02-Jan-22	555	G
ABKB	Alan D. Macleod	13-Jan-22	544	H
ABKB	Kristine Eidsvik	07-Feb-22	519	I
BCSC	Robert Jenkins	15-Jun-22	391	J
ONSC	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
ONSC	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
ONSC	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
ONSC	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
ONSC	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
ONSC	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
ONSC	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
ONSC	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
ONSC	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
BCSC	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
BCSC	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
BCSC	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
SKKB	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
SKKB	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
SKKB	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
ABKB	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383

ABKB	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
NUCJ	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
FCA	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
TCC	BIA, 2022	23-Jun-22	383
BCSC	Grace Choi	14-Jul-22	362	K
ABCA	Catherine Anne Fraser	30-Jul-22	346	L
BCCA	Richard B. T. Goepel	24-Aug-22	321	M
BCSC	Barry Davies	04-Sept-22	310	K
BCSC	William Grist	06-Sept-22	308	K
BCSC	Elaine Adair	31-Dec-22	192	N
BCSC	Arne Silverman	31-Dec-22	192	N
BCSC	James Williams	18-Jan-23	174	N
QCCA	France Thibault	26-Apr-23	76	O
ABCA	Marina Paperny	29-Apr-23	73	P
BCSC	George Macintosh	30-Apr-23	72	Q
ABCA	Barbara Veldhuis	01-May-23	71	P

[37] The Applicant also deposed to a table illustrating how quickly vacancies have been filled in the recent past. Again, the accuracy of this table was not seriously challenged. The Court accepts this table:

Table 2: Vacancies filled in less than 90 days

Appointee	Court	Date position Vacant	Date Appointed	Days Vacant	Exhibit
Philip W. Osborne	NLSC	Aug 4, 2021	Aug 6, 2021	2	R
Monica Biringer	TCC	Aug 4, 2021	Aug 6, 2021	2	S
Lisa Silver	ABKB	April 21, 2023	April 24, 2023	3	T

Allison Kuntz	ABKB	April 21, 2023	April 24, 2023	3	T
Kent J. Teskey	ABKB	April 21, 2023	April 24, 2023	3	T
Suzanne Stevenson	ONSC	Jan 30, 2020	Feb 3, 2020	4	U
Colin D. Clackson	SKKB	Dec 1, 2020	Dec 11, 2020	10	V
Robert W. Armstrong	ABKB	Jan 12, 2021	Feb 8, 2021	27	W
Lauren Blake	BCSC	Mar 31, 2021	Apr 27, 2021	27	X
Mark L. Edwards	ONSC	Jan 1, 2021	Feb 8, 2021	38	Y
Sherry L. Kachur	ABKB	Apr 26, 2020	June 3, 2020	38	Z
Marylène Pilote	NBKB	Dec 31, 2020	Feb 8, 2021	39	AA
Michael A. Marion	ABKB	Mar 4, 2022	Apr 20, 2022	47	BB
Jonathan M. Coady	PESC	May 3, 2022	June 21, 2022	49	CC
Karen Wenckebach	YKSC	Sept 30, 2020	Nov 19, 2020	50	DD
Leonard Marchand	BCCA	Feb 1, 2021	Mar 24, 2021	51	EE
Peter Kalichman	QCCA	Mar 1, 2021	Apr 27, 2021	57	FF
Meghan McCreary	SKCA	Apr 2, 2022	June 6, 2022	65	GG
Leonard Ricchetti	ONSC	Jan 31, 2020	Apr 6, 2020	66	HH
J. Ross Macfarlane	ONSC	Dec 15, 2022	Feb 20, 2023	67	II
Denise LeBlanc	NBKB	Mar 31, 2022	June 6, 2022	67	JJ
Lobat Sadrehashemi	FC	Jan 29, 2021	Apr 6, 2021	67	KK
Sophie Lavallée	QCCA	July 25, 2020	Oct 1, 2020	68	LL
Julie Bergeron	ONSC	Mar 28, 2022	June 6, 2022	70	MM
Nancy M. Carruthers	ABKB	Feb 7, 2022	Apr 20, 2022	72	BB
Diane Rowe	NSSC	Mar 1, 2020	May 14, 2020	74	NN
Eleanor J. Funk	ABKB	May 23, 2021	Aug 6, 2021	75	OO
Calum U.C. MacLeod	ONSC	Dec 30, 2019	Mar 16, 2020	77	PP

Charles C Chang	ONSC	Apr 4, 2022	June 27, 2022	84	QQ
Lorne Sossin	ONCA	Sept 2, 2020	Nov 26, 2020	85	RR
Spencer Nicholson	ONSC	June 15, 2020	Sept 8, 2020	85	SS
Jana Steele	ONSC	Feb 25, 2020	May 22, 2020	87	TT

[38] The Applicant also produced and deposed to a table illustrating how quickly various Chief Justice and Associate Chief Justice vacancies have been filled recently. This table is also accepted:

Table 3: Chief Justice and Associate Chief Justice Appointments

Appointee	Position	Vacant Date	Appointed Date	Days Vacant	Exhibit
Marc Richard	CJ NB	Apr 27, 2018	May 4, 2018	7	UU
Faye E. McWatt	ACJ ONSC	Nov 10, 2020	Dec 21, 2020	41	VV
Deborah K. Smith	ACJ NSSC	Apr 30, 2019	June 24, 2019	55	WW
Malcolm Rowe	SCC	Sept 1, 2016	Oct 28, 2016	57	XX
Manon Savard	CJ QC	Apr 8, 2020	June 11, 2020	64	YY
Suzanne Duncan	CJ YK	July 25, 2020	Oct 1, 2020	68	ZZ
Shannon Smallwood	CJ NT	July 11, 2022	Sept 22, 2022	73	AAA
Michael J. Wood	CJ NS	Feb 1, 2019	Apr 17, 2019	75	BBB
Tracey K. DeWare	CJ NBKB	Mar 20, 2019	June 4, 2019	76	CCC

[39] Finally, the Applicant attests to three instances of public judicial retirement notice announcements, which this table is also accepted:

Table 4: Public Retirement Notices

Retiree	Court	Notice Date	Vacant Date	Days Notice to Public	Exhibit

Robert J. Bauman	BCCA	Jan 10, 2023	Oct 1, 2023	264	DDD
Robert G. Richards	SKCA	Mar 17, 2023	Aug 31, 2023	167	EEE
Marc Noël	FCA	Mar 29, 2023	Aug 1, 2023	125	FFF

[40] The Respondents also objected to this evidence. However, I accept it for the reasons outlined below, including the fact these tables are based on publicly available information which information itself was not objected to by the Respondents. I also accept this evidence because it is confirmed in some material respects by the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council's letter dated May 3, 2023.

VI. The Court accepts the facts and opinions of the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council [41] With great respect, and for the reasons set out, I accept the facts and opinions expressed by the Chief Justice of Canada and the Canadian Judicial Council in terms of the facts and consequences of delays in appointing judicial vacancies.

[42] The Court does so because, to begin with, the Canadian Judicial Council is composed of 44 members and includes all federally appointed Chief Justices and Associate Chief Justices of all provincial Superior Courts and the Federal Courts across Canada. The Chief Justice of Canada is the Chair of the Canadian Judicial Council on whose behalf the Chief Justice also wrote. These Chief Justices and Associate Chief Justices are responsible for managing the proper flow of criminal and civil cases within their respective courts.

[43] Notably, the Respondents raise no doubts concerning and do not dispute that these Chief Justices and Associate Chief Justices have unequalled knowledge of the critical situation and crisis in respect of which they wrote.

[44] Therefore, as the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council wrote, I accept that some courts have had to deal with a 10 to 15% vacancy rate for years. I also accept it is not uncommon for positions to remain vacant for several months, if not years, in some cases:

> As you undoubtedly know, there are currently 85 vacancies within Federal Judicial Affairs across the country. Some courts have had to deal with a 10 to 15% vacancy rate for years now. It is also not uncommon for positions to remain vacant for several months, if not years, in some cases. As a concrete example, over half of the positions at the Manitoba Court of Appeal are currently vacant. Key chief justice and associate chief justice positions are also being filled at a very slow pace. In fact, there have recently been considerable delays in appointments to chief justice positions in a number of provinces, including Alberta, Ontario and Prince Edward Island. The chief justice of Manitoba position has been vacant for six months now, and the associate chief justice positions in the Court of King's Bench for Saskatchewan and the Superior Court of Quebec have been vacant for over a year. No clear explanation justifies these delays.

[45] The Chief Justice and Canadian Judicial Council wrote, it is not contradicted and I again accept, that delays in filling vacancies inevitably causes delays in prosecuting and determining serious violent crimes, such as sexual assault and murder, and other criminal and civil cases. In this connection, as an example, the Court of King's Bench of Alberta has reported that over 22% of ongoing criminal cases are passing the 30-month deadline and that 91% of those cases involve serious and violent crimes. Furthermore, the necessary urgency in processing criminal cases means the courts' role in civil cases is being neglected:

> Despite all our judges' professionalism and dedication, the staffing shortage inevitably results in additional delays in hearing cases and rendering judgments. Chief justices have indicated that, because judges are overburdened, delays in setting cases are unavoidable and hearings need to be postponed or adjourned. What's more, even when cases are heard, judgments are slow to be rendered because judges need to spend more time sitting, leaving them less time to deliberate. The analysis framework in R. v. Jordan, 2016 SCC 27, with respect to the accused's right to be tried within a reasonable time pursuant to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, also plays an important role in that regard. It provides that, before superior courts, criminal charges must be tried within 30 months, save in exceptional circumstances. If a trial has not ended within that timeframe, a stay of proceedings may be ordered. Many chief justices say that as part of their efforts to respect the timelines prescribed by Jordan, they are currently forced to choose the criminal matters that "deserve" to be heard most. Despite their best efforts, stays of proceedings are pronounced against individuals accused of serious crimes, such as sexual assault or murder, because of delays that are due, in part or in whole, to a shortage of judges. For example, the Court of King's Bench of Alberta has reported that over 22% of ongoing criminal cases are passing the 30-month deadline and that 91% of those cases involve serious and violent crimes. Furthermore, the necessary urgency in processing criminal cases means the courts' role in civil cases is being neglected. The justice system is consequently at risk of being perceived as useless for civil matters. These types of situations represent a failure of our justice system and are likely to fuel public cynicism and undermine their trust in our democratic institutions.

[46] In terms of the exacerbating consequences of delays ("government's inertia") in filling judicial vacancies on the critical situation of Canada's Superior Court and Federal Courts systems, the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council wrote, and I accept that the slow pace of appointments is all the more difficult to understand since most judicial vacancies are predictable, especially those resulting from retirements for which judges usually provide several months' notice. In this context, these delays in appointments send a message that this is simply not a priority for the government:

> It should be noted that the difficulties brought on by the judge shortage are exacerbating an already critical situation within several courts—namely a serious lack of resources due to chronic underfunding by the provinces and territories. However, while several factors explain the crisis currently facing our justice system, the appointment of judges in due course is a solution within reach that could help quickly and effectively improve the situation. Given this obvious fact and the critical situation we are faced with, the government's inertia regarding vacancies and the absence of satisfactory explanations for these delays are disconcerting. The slow pace of appointments is all the more difficult to understand since most judicial vacancies are predictable, especially those resulting from retirements for which judges usually provide several months' notice. In this context, these delays in appointments send a message that this is simply not a priority for the government.

[47] The Court is compelled to note Canadians access to justice without delay is and has been enshrined in various constitutional and quasi-constitutional documents since the Magna Carta (Great Charter of Liberties) of 1215 which promised: “To no one will we sell, to no one will we refuse or delay, right or justice.” See Magna Carta, article 40, Select Documents of English Constitutional History, London: MacMillan & Co., London 1918. With respect, I conclude the inevitable and untenable delayed justice caused by the executive government of Canada goes to the very heart of this 800-year-old promise and unacceptably denies access to justice without delay.

[48] In this connection I add that in the Canadian criminal context, section 11(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms [Charter] guarantees “any person charged with an offence has the right to be tried within a reasonable time.” This was commented upon in detail in R v Jordan, 2016 SCC 27 where the Supreme Court of Canada applied section 11(b) of the Charter to set presumptive time limits for trials. The consequences of delay and not being tried within a reasonable time are discussed by Moldaver, Karakatsanis and Brown JJ for the majority at paragraphs 19-26:

> [19] As we have said, the right to be tried within a reasonable time is central to the administration of Canada's system of criminal justice. It finds expression in the familiar maxim: "Justice delayed is justice denied." An unreasonable delay denies justice to the accused, victims and their families, and the public as a whole.
>
> [20] Trials within a reasonable time are an essential part of our criminal justice system's commitment to treating presumptively innocent accused persons in a manner that protects their interests in liberty, security of the person, and a fair trial. Liberty is engaged because a timely trial means an accused person will spend as little time as possible held in pre-trial custody or living in the community under release conditions. Security of the person is impacted because a long-delayed trial means prolonging the stress, anxiety, and stigma an accused may suffer. Fair trial interests are affected because the longer a trial is delayed, the more likely it is that some accused will be prejudiced in mounting a defence, owing to faded memories, unavailability of witnesses, or lost or degraded evidence.
>
> [21] At the same time, we recognize that some accused persons who are in fact guilty of their charges are content to see their trials delayed for as long as possible. Indeed, there are incentives for them to remain passive in the face of delay. Accused persons may seek to avoid responsibility for their crimes by embracing delay, in the hope that the case against them will fall apart or they will obtain a stay of proceedings. This operates to the detriment of the public and of the system of justice as a whole. Section 11(b) was not intended to be a sword to frustrate the ends of justice (Morin, at pp. 801-2).
>
> [22] Of course, the interests protected by s. 11(b) extend beyond those of accused persons. Timely trials impact other people who play a role in and are affected by criminal trials, as well as the public's confidence in the administration of justice.
>
> [23] Victims of crime and their families may be devastated by criminal acts and therefore have a special interest in timely trials (R. v. Askov, 1990 CanLII 45 (SCC), [1990] 2 S.C.R. 1199, at pp. 1220-21). Delay aggravates victims' suffering, preventing them from moving on with their lives.

> [24] Timely trials allow victims and witnesses to make the best possible contribution to the trial, and minimize the "worry and frustration [they experience] until they have given their testimony" (Askov, at p. 1220). Repeated delays interrupt their personal, employment or business activities, creating inconvenience that may present a disincentive to their participation.
>
> [25] Last but certainly not least, timely trials are important to maintaining overall public confidence in the administration of justice. As McLachlin J. (as she then was) put it in Morin, "delays are of consequence not only to the accused, but may affect the public interest in the prompt and fair administration of justice" (p. 810). Crime is of serious concern to all members of the community. Unreasonable delay leaves the innocent in limbo and the guilty unpunished, thereby offending the community's sense of justice (see Askov, at p. 1220). Failure "to deal fairly, quickly and efficiently with criminal trials inevitably leads to the community's frustration with the judicial system and eventually to a feeling of contempt for court procedures" (p. 1221).
>
> [26] Extended delays undermine public confidence in the system. And public confidence is essential to the survival of the system itself, as "a fair and balanced criminal justice system simply cannot exist without the support of the community" (Askov, at p. 1221).

[49] In terms of the significant ("appalling") negative impacts delayed vacancies create for the federally appointed judiciary, the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council conclude and the Court accepts it is imperative for the Prime Minister and his office to give this issue the importance it deserves, and for appointments to be made in a timely manner. They say it is essential that the vacant positions within the federal judiciary be filled diligently to ensure the judicial branch functions properly. In the past, the Canadian Judicial Council has urged governments to make judicial appointments more quickly. This time, the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council have serious concerns that without concrete efforts to remedy the situation, Canada's federal judiciary will soon reach a point of no return in several jurisdictions.

The consequences will make headlines and have serious repercussions on our democracy and on all Canadians:

> Despite all these efforts, it is imperative for the Prime Minister's Office to give this issue the importance it deserves and for appointments to be made in a timely manner. It is essential that the vacant positions within the judiciary be filled diligently to ensure that judicial branch functions properly. In the past, the Canadian Judicial Council has urged governments to make judicial appointments more quickly. This time, we have serious concerns that without concrete efforts to remedy the situation, we will soon reach a point of no return in several jurisdictions. The consequences will make headlines and have serious repercussions on our democracy and on all Canadians. This situation requires your immediate attention.
>
> The positions that have been left vacant are having significant impacts on the administration of justice, the operations of our courts and the health of our judges. Canadian Judicial Council members recently took it upon themselves to provide a more comprehensive overview of the difficulties faced by their respective courts. The findings are appalling.
>
> These ongoing vacancies also have a serious impact on judges themselves. Faced with a chronic work overload and increased stress, judges are increasingly going on medical leave, which has a domino effect on their colleagues, who then must carry an additional workload. It is also becoming difficult for judges of certain courts to find the necessary time to complete training, including training that is considered mandatory. This situation does not bode well for ensuring a healthy and thriving judiciary. If current issues persist, it could also become difficult to attract high-quality candidates for judge positions.
>
> This is already the case in British Columbia.

[50] In terms of the (“untenable”) consequences for access to justice and the health of democratic institutions, the Chief Justice or Canada and Canadian Judicial Council wrote and the Court accepts appointments need to be made in a timely manner because the current situation is untenable, and they both fear that this will result in a crisis for our justice system, which is already facing many challenges. The Court accepts their evidence that access to justice and the health of our democratic institutions are at risk, that the justice system is consequently at risk of being perceived as useless for civil matters, and that the types of situations represent a failure of our justice system and are likely to fuel public cynicism and undermine trust in our democratic institutions. They conclude and I accept that the current situation is untenable:

> The current situation is untenable, and I fear that this will result in a crisis for our justice system, which is already facing many challenges. Access to justice and the health of our democratic institutions are at risk.
>
> Furthermore, the necessary urgency in processing criminal cases means the courts' role in civil cases is being neglected. The justice system is consequently at risk of being perceived as useless for civil matters. These types of situations represent a failure of our justice system and are likely to fuel public cynicism and undermine their trust in our democratic institutions.
>
> In this context, these delays in appointments send a message that this is simply not a priority for the government.

[51] The Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council also found the vacancy crisis is having a “serious” impact on judges themselves, on their health in terms of medical leave, and on their training. The situation does not bode well for ensuring a healthy and thriving judiciary. If current issues persist, it could also become difficult to attract high-quality candidates for judicial positions, all of which conclusions this Court respectfully accepts:

> These ongoing vacancies also have a serious impact on judges themselves. Faced with a chronic work overload and increased stress, judges are increasingly going on medical leave, which has a domino effect on their colleagues, who then must carry an additional workload. It is also becoming difficult for judges of certain courts to find the necessary time to complete training, including training that is considered mandatory. This situation does not bode well for ensuring a healthy and thriving judiciary. If current issues persist, it could also become difficult to attract high-> quality candidates for judge positions. This is already the case in British Columbia.

[52] Neither Respondent gave any explanation or reason to justify this crisis situation, either to the Chief Justice of Canada or the Canadian Judicial Council, or to this Court. The Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council wrote and I have to agree that "[N]o clear explanation justifies these delays."

[53] Notably also, the Respondents did not object to any of the assessments in the letter. This Court has no hesitation in accepting the expert assessments by the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council that the slow pace of appointments is all the more difficult to understand since most judicial vacancies are predictable, especially those resulting from retirements for which judges usually provide several months' notice:

> The slow pace of appointments is all the more difficult to understand since most judicial vacancies are predictable, especially those resulting from retirements for which judges usually provide several months' notice. In this context, these delays in appointments send a message that this is simply not a priority for the government.

VII. Demands made to the Respondents

[54] In addition to the letter from the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council to the Prime Minister of May 3, 2023, which and with respect I consider a request for these purposes, on June 16, 2023, Applicant's counsel sent a letter to Canada's Minister of Justice, with the subject line "vacant judicial appointments" stating he echoes the request of the Chief Justice of Canada and respectfully requests to fill these vacancies in a timely manner.

[55] On June 17, 2023, the Applicant's lawyer sent the same letter, but addressed to the Prime Minister again echoing the request of the Chief Justice of Canada and the Canadian Judicial Council and respectfully requests the Prime Minister fill these vacancies in a timely manner.

[56] The Applicant received no response to either letter. And, in any event, as already seen, the number of vacancies has not gone down as requested by the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council; in fact, according to the FCJA, the number superior count vacancies is 75 as of February 1, 2024, which is almost identical to the 79 vacancies when this application was commenced in June 2023.

[57] In this connection and in the Court's respectful view, reports on the public website of the FCJA may be accepted for the truth thereof, it being a highly professional and completely impartial and credible federal source of data in relation to federal judicial vacancies and appointments across Canada. See: Barakat v Andraos, 2023 ONSC 582 where Justice Trimble at paragraph 24 reviews the jurisprudence on judicial notice and government websites (most of which is of this Court). This Court agrees with and adopts their conclusions and applies them to the FCJA:

> A court may take judicial notice of facts can come from government and NGO websites provided that the government or organization has a reputation for credibility (see: Araya v. Nevsun Resources Ltd, 2017 BCCA 401 at par 24, Mahjoub v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) 2006 FC 1503 at paras. 72–75, Buri v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2001 FCT 1358, [2001] F.C.J. No. 1867 (Fed T.D.) at para. 22 and Kazi v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), 2002 FCT 178, [2002] F.C.J. No. 223 (Fed. T.D.) at paras. 28, 30).

VIII. Issues

[58] The Applicant raises the following issues:

1. Should the Court order mandamus?
2. Should the Court order a declaration?

[59] The Respondents raise the following issues:

1. As a preliminary matter, whether the Applicant's affidavit evidence is admissible and relevant;
2. Whether the Federal Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of the application;
3. Whether the Applicant has private interest standing or should be granted public interest standing to adjudicate the issues raised in the application;
4. Whether the requirements of mandamus have been met; and
5. Whether the Court should grant the Applicant's alternative request for declaratory relief.

IX. Relevant statutory provisions

[60] The following sections of the Constitution Act, 1867 are relevant:

Exclusive Powers of Provincial Legislatures	Pouvoirs exclusifs des législatures provinciales
Subjects of exclusive Provincial Legislation	Sujets soumis au contrôle exclusif de la législation provinciale
92 In each Province the Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say,	92 Dans chaque province la législature pourra exclusivement faire des lois relatives aux matières tombant dans les catégories de sujets ci-dessous énumérés, savoir :

[…]	[…]
14. The Administration of Justice in the Province, including the Constitution, Maintenance, and Organization of Provincial Courts, both of Civil and of Criminal Jurisdiction, and including Procedure in Civil Matters in those Courts.	14. L'administration de la justice dans la province, y compris la création, le maintien et l'organisation de tribunaux de justice pour la province, ayant juridiction civile et criminelle, y compris la procédure en matières civiles dans ces tribunaux;
[…]	[…]
VII. Judicature	VII. Judicature
Appointment of Judges	Nomination des juges
96 The Governor General shall appoint the Judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts in each Province, except those of the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.	96 Le gouverneur-général nommera les juges des cours supérieures, de district et de comté dans chaque province, sauf ceux des cours de vérification dans la Nouvelle-Écosse et le Nouveau-Brunswick.
[…]	[…]
Salaries, etc., of Judges	Salaires, etc. des juges
100 The Salaries, Allowances, and Pensions of the Judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts (except the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick), and of the Admiralty Courts in Cases where the Judges thereof are for the Time being paid by Salary, shall be fixed and provided by the Parliament of Canada.	100 Les salaires, allocations et pensions des juges des cours supérieures, de district et de comté (sauf les cours de vérification dans la Nouvelle-Écosse et le Nouveau-Brunswick) et des cours de l'Amirauté, lorsque les juges de ces dernières sont alors salariés, seront fixés et payés par le parlement du Canada.
General Court of Appeal, etc.	Cour générale d'appel, etc.

101 The Parliament of Canada may, notwithstanding anything in this Act, from Time to Time provide for the Constitution, Maintenance, and Organization of a General Court of Appeal for Canada, and for the Establishment of any additional Courts for the better Administration of the Laws of Canada.	101 Le parlement du Canada pourra, nonobstant toute disposition contraire énoncée dans la présente loi, lorsque l'occasion le requerra, adopter des mesures à l'effet de créer, maintenir et organiser une cour générale d'appel pour le Canada, et établir des tribunaux additionnels pour la meilleure administration des lois du Canada.
[Emphasis added]	[Je souligne]

[61] The following sections of the Federal Courts Act and Interpretation Act, RSC 1985, c I 21 are relevant:

Federal Courts Act	Loi sur les Cours fédérales
Appointment of judges	Nomination des juges
5.2 The judges of the Federal Court of Appeal and the Federal Court are to be appointed by the Governor in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.	5.2 La nomination des juges de la Cour d'appel fédérale et de la Cour fédérale se fait par lettres patentes du gouverneur en conseil revêtues du grand sceau.
[…]	[…]
Extraordinary remedies, federal tribunals	Recours extraordinaires : offices fédéraux
18 (1) Subject to section 28, the Federal Court has exclusive original jurisdiction	18 (1) Sous réserve de l'article 28, la Cour fédérale a compétence exclusive, en première instance, pour :
(a) to issue an injunction, writ of certiorari, writ of prohibition, writ of mandamus or writ of quo warranto, or grant declaratory relief, against	a) décerner une injonction, un bref de certiorari, de mandamus, de prohibition ou de quo warranto, ou pour rendre un jugement any federal board, commission or other tribunal; and déclaratoire contre tout office fédéral;

[…]

[…]

Application for judicial review

18.1 (1) An application for judicial review may be made by the Attorney General of Canada or by anyone directly affected by the matter in respect of which relief is sought.

Demande de contrôle judiciaire

18.1 (1) Une demande de contrôle judiciaire peut être présentée par le procureur général du Canada ou par quiconque est directement touché par l'objet de la demande.

Powers of Federal Court

(3) On an application for judicial review, the Federal Court may

Pouvoirs de la Cour fédérale

(3) Sur présentation d'une demande de contrôle judiciaire, la Cour fédérale peut:

(a) order a federal board, commission or other tribunal to do any act or thing it has unlawfully failed or refused to do or has unreasonably delayed in doing; or

[…]

[Emphasis added]

a) ordonner à l'office fédéral en cause d'accomplir tout acte qu'il a illégalement omis ou refusé d'accomplir ou dont il a retardé l'exécution de manière déraisonnable;

[…]

[Je souligne]

Interpretation Act

Loi d'interprétation

Definitions

Définitions

General definitions

35 (1) In every enactment,

Définitions d'application générale

35 (1) Les définitions qui suivent s'appliquent à tous les textes.

[…]	[…]
Governor General in Council or Governor in Council means the Governor General of Canada acting by and with the advice of, or by and with the advice and consent of, or in conjunction with the Queen's Privy Council for Canada; (gouverneur en conseil ou gouverneur général en conseil)	gouverneur en conseil ou gouverneur général en conseil Le gouverneur général du Canada agissant sur l'avis ou sur l'avis et avec le consentement du Conseil privé de la Reine pour le Canada ou conjointement avec celui-ci. (Governor General in Council or Governor in Council)

X. Submissions and Analysis

A. Jurisdiction of the Federal Court

(1) The ITO test

[62] The starting point for this assessment is the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in ITO-International Terminal Operations Ltd v Miida Electronics Inc, [1986] 1 SCR 752 [ITO] at p.767. In ITO the Supreme Court sets a three-part test for construing the Federal Court's jurisdiction. In this connection it is worth noting the predecessor of the Federal Courts was set up by the same Act of Parliament that established the Supreme Court of Canada. Such statutes require interpretation in the constitutional setting:

> 1. There must be a statutory grant of jurisdiction by the federal Parliament.
>
> 2. There must be an existing body of federal law which is essential to the disposition of the case and which nourishes the statutory grant of jurisdiction.
>
> 3. The law on which the case is based must be "a law of Canada" as the phrase is used in s.101 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

[63] The Applicant submits the Federal Court has jurisdiction to hear this application and grant the relief sought. In this he relies on jurisprudence of this Court, jurisprudence of the Federal Court of Appeal and jurisprudence of the Supreme Court of Canada all of which mandate a broad, fair and liberal approach to this Court's jurisdiction.

[64] The Respondents disagree. They argue the Federal Court lacks jurisdiction to hear and decide this application.

[65] In this respect the Court determines that the leading jurisprudence is Canada (Human Rights Commission) v Canadian Liberty Net, [1998] 1 SCR 626 [Liberty Net] per Bastarache J. In Liberty Net, the Supreme Court endorsed a fair and liberal approach to the Federal Court's jurisdiction. Justice Bastarache for the majority at pp. 657 and 658 states:

> These are the historical and constitutional factors which led to the development of the notion of inherent jurisdiction in provincial superior courts, which to a certain extent has been compared and contrasted to the more limited statutory jurisdiction of the Federal Court of Canada. But in my view, there is nothing in this articulation of the essentially remedial concept of inherent jurisdiction which in any way can be used to justify a narrow, rather than a fair and liberal, interpretation of federal statutes granting jurisdiction to the Federal Court. The legitimate proposition that the institutional and constitutional position of provincial superior courts warrants the grant to them of a residual jurisdiction over all federal matters where there is a "gap" in statutory grants of jurisdiction, is entirely different from the proposition that federal statutes should be read to find "gaps" unless the words of the statute explicitly close them. The doctrine of inherent jurisdiction raises no valid reasons, constitutional or otherwise, for jealously protecting the jurisdiction of provincial superior courts as against the Federal Court of Canada.
>
> [Emphasis added]

[66] Notably and central to this Court's conclusion in this regard, is the Supreme Court of Canada's plain rejection of a narrow interpretation of the Federal Court's jurisdiction in favour of a fair and liberal interpretation of statutes granting jurisdiction to the Federal Court set out in Liberty Net.

[67] Of interest, the Supreme Court in Windsor (City) v Canadian Transit Co., 2016 SCC 54 [Windsor], pointed to by the Respondents, neither addresses nor considers the Supreme Court of Canada's own previous decision in Liberty Net.

[68] Upon reflection and due consideration, the Court will follow Liberty Net and persuasive post-Windsor jurisprudence and approach the determination of Federal Court's jurisdiction in fair and liberal manner, and not narrowly as the Respondents proposed.

[69] To begin this, the Court adopts a fair and liberal approach because it agrees with Justice Mactavish (as she then was) in Deegan v Canada (Attorney General), 2019 FC 960 [Deegan]:

> [224] In contrast to the inherent jurisdiction enjoyed by provincial superior courts, the Supreme Court held in Windsor Bridge that the Federal Courts have only the jurisdiction that has been conferred on them by statute, and that they are without inherent jurisdiction: at paragraph 33. This of course begs the question: if the Federal Courts' jurisdiction is constrained by the fact that they are statutory courts created under section 101 of the Constitution Act, 1867, how is it that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada—another statutory court created under section 101 of the Constitution Act, 1867—is not similarly constrained?
>
> [225] Indeed, as the Federal Court of Appeal observed in Lee, "the Supreme Court and the Federal Courts (through their predecessor, the Exchequer Court) are both statutory courts under section 101 of the Constitution Act, 1867, born at the same time from a single joint statute: Supreme and Exchequer Court Act, S.C. 1875, c. 11": above, at paragraph 13. The Federal Court of Appeal went on to > observe in Lee that "the Supreme Court and the Federal Courts must be seen as identical twins" in terms of their ability to manage their processes and proceedings, that is, their plenary powers: Lee, above, at paragraph 13.

>
> …
>
> [227] The fact is that the Federal Court is neither an inferior court nor an administrative tribunal: Lee, above, at paragraph 12; Bilodeau-Massé, above, at paragraph 72. It is, rather, a superior court of record having civil and criminal jurisdiction: Federal Courts Act, section 4. As a superior court, the Federal Court has plenary jurisdiction to determine any matter of law arising out of its original jurisdiction. This includes constitutional jurisdiction in matters that are properly before the Court.
>
> [Emphasis added]

[70] Justice Mactavish followed Bilodeau-Massé v Canada (Attorney General), 2017 FC 604 [Bilodeau-Massé], where Justice Martineau concluded at paragraph 72 that "the grant of jurisdiction under the Federal Courts Act should not be interpreted in a narrow fashion." In this respect Justice Martineau adopts the reasoning of the Supreme Court in Liberty Net as does this Court:

> [78] As a result, as the Supreme Court noted in Canadian Liberty Net, "[i]n a federal system, the doctrine of inherent jurisdiction does not provide a rationale for narrowly reading federal legislation which confers jurisdiction on the Federal Court" (at paragraph 35). Thus, because this involves the Federal Court's general administrative jurisdiction over federal administrative tribunals, "[t]his means that where an issue is clearly related to the control and exercise of powers of an administrative agency, which includes the interim measures to regulate disputes whose final disposition is left to an administrative decision-maker, the Federal Court can be considered to have a plenary jurisdiction" (Canadian Liberty Net, at paragraph 36) (my emphasis). If section 44 of the Federal Courts Act gives the Federal Court jurisdiction to grant an injunction in enforcing the Canadian Human Rights Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. H-6, this is all the more reason to argue that in the context of an action against the Crown or an application for judicial review, the inherent or residual jurisdiction of the provincial > superior courts in matters involving the constitution or habeas corpus in no way affects the "plenary jurisdiction" exercised by the Federal Court under sections 17 and 18 of the Federal Courts Act.

>
> [Emphasis added]

[71] To the same effect are the reasons of Justice Roussel (as she then was) in PH v Canada (Attorney General), 2020 FC 393 [PH] at paragraphs 42 and 43. Justice Roussel declined to follow Windsor, holding:

> [42] With the greatest of respect to the Supreme Court of Canada, I do not consider myself bound by these obiter comments. The facts in this case differ from those in Windsor. That case dealt with the application of a municipal bylaw to a federal undertaking. The applicant was not seeking relief under an Act of Parliament and under a federal right, but was seeking relief under the Constitution Act, 1867. In this case, sections 18 and 18.1 of the Act grant this Court the jurisdiction to issue declaratory relief against the Parole Board of Canada. There is no need to interpret this Court's jurisdiction restrictively because this Court is a statutory court rather than a court of inherent jurisdiction. Although it is not a "superior court" within the meaning of section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, this Court is nevertheless comparable to a superior court when it exercises its general supervisory jurisdiction over federal boards, such as the Parole Board of Canada. Sections 18 and 18.1 of the Act do not remove the jurisdiction of provincial superior courts to grant a constitutional declaration against a federal board. However, the Act does create concurrent jurisdiction in cases where the Federal Court has been granted jurisdiction by an Act of Parliament (ss 18 and 18.1 of the Act) and the ITO test is otherwise met, as is the case here.
>
> [43] I do not intend to comment any further on the majority's obiter comments in Windsor. I accept and adopt as my own the reasoning of my colleagues who recently found that this Court does indeed have the jurisdiction to issue general declarations of invalidity for the purpose of section 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982 (Deegan v Canada (Attorney General), 2019 FC 960 at paras 212-240; Fédération des francophones de la Colombie-Britannique v Canada (Employment and Social Development), 2018 FC 530 at paras 55-65; Bilodeau-Massé v Canada (Attorney General), 2017 FC 604 at paras 38-88). I also rely on the statements made by the Federal Court of Appeal in Lee v Canada

> (Correctional Service), 2017 FCA 228 regarding the plenary powers of the Federal Courts. As I do not find it useful to repeat their analysis in these reasons, I refer the parties and the reader to the cited portions of those decisions.
>
> [Emphasis added]

[72] As did Justice Roussel (as she then was), I also rely on the determinations of the Federal Court of Appeal in Lee v Canada (Correctional Service), 2017 FCA 228 regarding the plenary powers of the Federal Courts emanating from their constitutional status as courts, as set out at paragraphs 8-12:

> [8] The idea is that the Federal Courts' plenary powers emanate from their constitutional status as courts, not from any particular legislative provision in the Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7 or the Federal Courts Rules. The Federal Courts are not just ordinary agencies of government but rather part of the judicial branch within the constitutional separation of powers. If courts are to be courts and to fulfil their function as part of the judicial branch, they must have certain plenary powers to manage their processes and proceedings.
>
> [9] Cases decided by the Supreme Court after Liberty Net have alluded to these powers—in one case at the level of obiter in a single paragraph, and in another case buried as an afterthought in a endnote: see, respectively R. v. Cunningham, 2010 SCC 10, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 331, at para. 19 and Windsor (City) v. Canadian Transit Co., 2016 SCC 54, [2016] 2 S.C.R. 617. Perhaps because the treatment of the powers is brief, both cases fail to cite Liberty Net. But both loosely suggest that the Federal Courts' plenary powers are "necessarily incidental" to statutory powers already granted, rather than powers stemming from the Federal Court's status as courts within the judicial branch.
>
> [10] In fact, in terms of the powers the Federal Courts have, Cunningham seems to place the Federal Courts on the same footing as administrative tribunals and other administrative functionaries throughout the government. But Cunningham is not the only word on this point.
>
> [11] Again, there is Liberty Net. And in a brief comment in another case, the Supreme Court seems to have recognized the Federal > Courts as superior courts established under the federal power in the Constitution Act, 1867 to create federal courts, not just as mere administrative functionaries: Charkaoui v. Canada (Citizenship and Immigration), 2007 SCC 9, [2007] 1 S.C.R. 350 at para. 136 (not cited in Cunningham and Windsor); see also the clear text of section 4 of the Federal Courts Act.

>
> [12] In my view, the Supreme Court's holdings in Charkaoui and Liberty Net are unassailable. The Federal Courts cannot be equated to administrative tribunals. As is suggested in Liberty Net, the Federal Courts—like the Supreme Court, the provincial courts (both superior and otherwise), the Tax Court and military courts—are fully fledged courts within the judicial branch and, by virtue of this, have all the plenary powers of courts to manage their processes and proceedings.
>
> [Emphasis added]

[73] This Court also agrees with Justice Martineau in Bilodeau-Massé that access to justice concerns, the unique fact that the Federal Court is fully bilingual and bijural forum, and that the Federal Court is nationally accessible, strongly militate in favour a fair and liberal approach to the Federal Court's jurisdiction.

[74] Moreover, the case at hand calls for the resolution of a quintessentially federal issue involving purely federal powers, in preference to a multiplicity of parallel proceedings in many different provincial court systems with attendant delays, possible inconsistent decisions, needless duplication overlap, expense and waste of judicial resources. Justice Martineau in Bilodeau-Massé states:

> [69] In short, justice is not in competition with itself: access to justice must prevail in every case, which favours a broad construction of the jurisdiction conferred on this Court by the Federal Courts Act. In this sense, the Federal Court is part of the solution, and it would be wrong to want to associate it with the problem of the increasing number of jurisdictions. When it created a national court of first instance, Parliament could very well have > left it to the courts mentioned in section 129 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and to the other provincial courts created under subsection 92(14) of the Constitution Act, 1867, to exercise their traditional jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters, while making adjustments over time, if necessary, for the purposes of the "laws of Canada". But what characterizes the Federal Court is not only its nature as a national court (trial and appeal). Its composition also ensures national continuity (section 5.3 of the Federal Courts Act) and the maintenance of Canadian bijuralism (common law and civil law). However, like section 6 of the Supreme Court Act, section 5.4 of the Federal Courts Act provides for effective representation of Quebec, with a minimum and large number of judges (at least five judges of the Federal Court of Appeal and at least 10 judges of the Federal Court) who must have been judges of the Court of Appeal or of the Superior Court of Quebec or members of the Bar of Quebec. It is an eloquent legislative demonstration of Parliament's wish to create a pan-Canadian court that is particularly well adapted to Canada's reality and bijuralism.

>
> [Emphasis added]

[75] Further, there is no body of provincial law in dispute. This case relates to the federal power to make federal judicial appointments and an obvious disagreement between our most senior and most experienced judicial office holders including the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council on the one hand, and the executive government including the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice on the other.

[76] There is no issue of competing jurisdiction. There is no "pretence" of provincial law in this case that exclusively involves the application of federal law in an area of undisputed federal jurisdiction. See Girouard v Canada (Attorney General), 2020 FCA 129, at paragraph 108:

> [108] In stipulating that the Governor General appoints judges of the superior courts and has the authority to remove them (on address of the Senate and House of Commons) and that Parliament fixes and provides their salaries, the C.A., 1867 clearly ousts provincial jurisdiction on any matters relating to these issues.

[77] And see Deegan per Mactavish J.:

> [232] There is, moreover, an existing body of federal law that is essential to the disposition of the case that nourishes the statutory grant of jurisdiction. The Impugned Provisions form part of the federal Income Tax Act and the Implementation Act, federal legislation implementing an agreement with a foreign state governing the sharing of information under a bilateral tax treaty. It also bears noting that no body of provincial law is implicated in this proceeding, and that the case does not involve competing spheres of jurisdiction. The case thus involves the application of federal law in an area of federal jurisdiction.
>
> [Emphasis added]

(2) First prong of ITO

[78] With this guidance, and to recall, prong one of ITO requires that "[T]here must be a statutory grant of jurisdiction by the federal Parliament." In my view, sections 18 and 18.1 of the Federal Courts Act constitute a statutory grant of jurisdiction by the federal Parliament to this Court to grant declaratory relief against any federal board: this point was expressly decided by the Court in PH at paragraphs 38 and 42. I therefore conclude the first prong of ITO is met.

[79] In this connection, and while the Respondents accept section 18.1 of the Federal Courts Act confers jurisdiction to the Federal Court to grant declaratory relief against any "federal board, commission or other tribunal" they argue it does not apply to the Prime Minister or Minister of Justice.

[80] With respect, I disagree. First of all, this submission does not apply in relation to appointments under section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act given the Supreme Court of Canada's opposite conclusion in Strickland v Canada (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 37:

> [64] At this point, it seems to me that the language of the Act conferring "exclusive original jurisdiction" can be taken as a clear and explicit expression of parliamentary intent. Similarly, as presently advised I see no reason to doubt that the Governor in Council, when exercising "jurisdiction or powers conferred by or under an Act of Parliament" is a "federal board, commission or other tribunal" within the meaning of s. 2 the Act.

[81] And I see no reason to accept the Respondents' narrow construction in terms of granting declaratory relief in relation to appointments under section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867. In this connection, I take the same view of the authority conferred on this Court by paragraphs 18(1)(a) and 18.1(3)(a) of the Federal Courts Act as that taken to section 44 of the Federal Courts Act by the Supreme Court of Canada in Liberty Net and by this Court in Bilodeau-Massé, namely that "the Federal Court can be considered to have a plenary jurisdiction". This is further confirmed in Deegan and PH. I am not persuaded to depart from concurrent findings of my colleagues, nor to disagree with the Supreme Court of Canada's determination in Liberty Net.

(3) Second and third prongs of ITO

[82] The second step in ITO is that "[t]here must be an existing body of federal law which is essential to the disposition of the case and which nourishes the statutory grant of jurisdiction."

[83] The third step in ITO is that the law on which the case is based must be "a law of Canada" as the phrase is used in section 101 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

[84] The Applicant submits that federal law includes federal common law. As outlined below, I agree. In particular, the Applicant argues federal common law includes law surrounding the modalities of federal judicial appointments, including judicial recognition of constitutional conventions that such appointments may only be made on the advice and consent of Cabinet, and the Prime Minister or Minister of Justice. Again I agree.

[85] The Applicant submits that constitutional conventions may be recognized by courts as laws. But it is also well established that constitutional conventions may not be enforced by the courts.

[86] The Respondents argue that constitutional conventions, while being rules regulating conduct as between constitutional actors (a conclusion the Court accepts), are not laws for the purposes of the second prong of ITO. As I understand their argument, it is based on the rule that constitutional conventions may not be enforced by the Courts, from which they conclude constitutional conventions may not support step two of ITO.

[87] Through post-hearing submissions, the Court entertained additional arguments on this and related points as to whether federal common law and constitutional conventions may establish this Court's jurisdiction per ITO on the issue of filling vacancies on the provincial Superior Courts and Federal Courts.

[88] The Respondents argue the common law cited by the Applicant relates to the interpretation of legal principles governing reviewability of conventional actors and constitutional conventions, falling under the law of justiciability. The Respondents submit and rely on Canada (Auditor General) v Canada (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources), [1989]

2 SCR 49, where Chief Justice Dickson at pp.90-91 said that the law of justiciability involves "a normative inquiry into the appropriateness as a matter of constitutional judicial policy of the courts deciding a given issue…"

[89] The Applicant, in reply on this point, submits he is not relying on the common law of justiciability, but rather the common law regarding the transfer of power and duties from the Governor General to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice as a result of constitutional conventions. The Applicant submits this body of common law was created in the context of merits determinations about substantive legal rights, duties, and powers, citing the decisions to be discussed later namely Acadian Society of New Brunswick v Right Honourable Prime Minister of Canada, 2022 NBQB 85 [Acadian Society], Conacher v Canada (Prime Minister), 2010 FCA 131 [Conacher], and Democracy Watch [per Southcott J].

[90] In post-hearing submissions, the Respondents submit justiciability is common law, but does not have a federal character. The Respondents argue the concept of justiciability flows from the constitutional separation of power, and is inherently neither federal nor provincial. I disagree.

[91] The Applicant submits this is false, relying on Quebec North Shore Paper v CP Ltd, [1977] 2 SCR 1054 [Quebec North Shore Paper] for the proposition that when common law relates to both a provincial and federal issue, at p.1063, "it is federal law in relation to the Crown in right of Canada, just as it is provincial law in relation to the Crown in right of a Province." The Applicant advances the argument here that when the common law about the transference of powers and duties by constitutional convention relates to provincial actors, it is provincial common law. When it relates to federal actors, he submits it is federal common law.

[92] I agree with the Applicant in this respect.

[93] Lastly, the Respondents submit that if the Court finds that constitutional conventions are federal common law, they do not constitute an existing body of federal law essential to the disposition of this application, per the second prong of ITO. The Respondents submit justiciability is no more essential to the disposition of this application than it is to any other application, and is insufficient to satisfy the second prong of ITO given the high threshold on the party asserting the Court's jurisdiction.

[94] The Applicant, again in reply, submits this is incorrect and the Respondents mischaracterize the nature of the common law being relied upon in this case. Further, the Applicant asserts the Respondents argument comparing the federal common law to other applications to determine whether it is more essential to the disposition of this case is not found in the jurisprudence on the application of the ITO test.

[95] Lastly, the Applicant submits that just because the legal duty relied on to compel the appointment of provincial Superior Court judges is not created by a federal law, does not mean federal law is not essential to the disposition of the application. Again I agree with the Applicant. The Applicant submits the remedy does not need to be expressly created or conferred by federal law for the Federal Court to have jurisdiction; it is enough that a body of federal law has an impact on the matter at every turn. For this, the Applicant correctly relies on Rhine v The Queen, [1980] 2 SCR 442, where Chief Justice Laskin stated at p. 447:

> At every turn, the Act has its impact on the undertaking so as to make it proper to say that there is here existing and valid federal law to govern the transaction which became the subject of litigation in the Federal Court. It should hardly be necessary to add that "contract" or other legal institutions, such as "tort" cannot be invariably attributed to sole provincial legislative regulation or be deemed to be, as common law, solely matters of provincial law.

[96] Having considered the matter, the Court is not persuaded the lack of enforceability at law renders federal constitutional conventions incapable of being considered federal laws for the purposes of ITO.

[97] To begin with, there is no jurisprudence to that effect.

[98] In addition, taking a fair and liberal interpretation to the Federal Court's jurisdiction per Liberty Net, Lee, Deegan, Bilodeau-Massé and PH, I am persuaded that constitutional conventions in relation to the appointment of federal judges by the Governor General and Governor in Council pursuant to section 96 of the Constitution Act,1867 and section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act do constitute federal laws essential to the disposition of this case and which nourishes the statutory grant of jurisdiction for the purposes of ITO.

[99] Upon review, and with respect, this Court concludes that a "federal law" for the purposes of the second step of ITO (and "a law of Canada" for the purposes of the third step, given there is here "clearly an overlap between the second and third" prong per Wilson in Roberts v Canada, [1989] 1 SCR 322 [Roberts]), includes federal statutes, federal regulations and federal common law. This conclusion is endorsed by Chief Justice Laskin in Quebec North Shore Paper at p. 1063. There the Supreme Court unanimously held common law associated with the Crown's position as a litigant [it] is federal law:

> Stress is laid, however, on what the Privy Council said in discussing the application of s. 30(d) of the Exchequer Court Act, the provision giving jurisdiction to the Exchequer Court in civil actions where the Crown is plaintiff or petitioner. I do not take its statement that "sub-s. (d) must be confined to actions ... in relation to some subject matter legislation in regard to which is within the legislative competence of the Dominion" as doing anything more than expressing a limitation on the range of matters in respect of which the Crown in right of Canada may, as plaintiff, bring persons into the Exchequer Court as defendants. It would still be necessary for the Crown to found its action on some law that would be federal law under that limitation. It should be recalled that the law respecting the Crown came into Canada as part of the public or constitutional law of Great Britain, and there can be no pretence that that law is provincial law. In so far as there is a common law associated with the Crown's position as a litigant it is federal law in relation to the Crown in right of Canada, just as it is provincial law in relation to the Crown in right of a Province, and is subject to modification in each case by the competent Parliament or Legislature. Crown law does not enter into the present case.
>
> [Emphasis added]

[100] Furthermore, Chief Justice Laskin in Quebec North Shore Paper at pp.1066 states:

> It is also well to note that s. 101 does not speak of the establishment of Courts in respect of matters within federal legislative competence but of Courts "for the better administration of the laws of Canada". The word "administration" is as telling as the plural words "laws", and they carry, in my opinion, the requirement that there be applicable and existing federal law, whether under statute or regulation or common law, as in the case of the Crown, upon which the jurisdiction of the Federal Court can be exercised. Section 23 requires that the claim for relief be one sought under such law.
>
> [Emphasis added]

[101] In McNamara Construction et al v The Queen, [1977] 2 SCR 654 at pp.658-659, Chief Justice Laskin again writing for the Supreme Court states:

> In Quebec North Shore Paper Company v. Canadian Pacific Limited, (a decision which came after the judgments of the Federal Court of Appeal in the present appeals), this Court held that the quoted provisions of s. 101, make it a prerequisite to the exercise of jurisdiction by the Federal Court that there be existing and applicable federal law which can be invoked to support any proceedings before it. It is not enough that the Parliament of Canada have legislative jurisdiction in respect of some matter which is the subject of litigation in the Federal Court. As this Court indicated in the Quebec North Shore Paper Company case, judicial jurisdiction contemplated by s. 101 is not co-extensive with federal legislative jurisdiction. It follows that the mere fact that Parliament has exclusive legislative authority in relation to "the public debt and property" under s. 91(1A) of the British North America Act and in relation to "the establishment, maintenance and management of penitentiaries" under s. 91(28), and that the subject matter of the construction contract may fall within either or both of these grants of power, is not enough to support a grant of jurisdiction to the Federal Court to entertain the claim for damages made in these cases.

[102] Then at p. 659, Chief Justice Laskin states: "[i]n the Quebec North Shore Paper Company case, this Court observed, referring to this provision, that the Crown in right of Canada in seeking to bring persons in the Exchequer Court as defendants must have founded its action on some existing federal law, whether statute or regulation or common law."

[103] In Roberts, Madam Justice Wilson expansively reviewed the issue and concludes that indeed federal law includes federal common law, writing for the Court at pp. 330 and 331:

> While there is clearly an overlap between the second and third elements of the test for Federal Court jurisdiction, the second element, as I understand it, requires a general body of federal law covering the area of the dispute, i.e., in this case the law relating to Indians and Indian interests in reserve lands, and the third element requires that the specific law which will be resolutive of the > dispute be "a law of Canada" within the meaning of s. 101 of the Constitution Act, 1867. No difficulty arises in meeting the third element of the test if the dispute is to be determined on the basis of an existing federal statute. As will be seen, problems can, however, arise if the law of Canada which is relied on is not federal legislation but so-called "federal common law" or if federal law is not exclusively applicable to the issue in dispute.

>
> [Emphasis added]

[104] The Supreme Court of Canada per Wilson J. also concluded at pp. 339-340:

> If Professor Evans is saying in the above-quoted paragraph that only federal legislation can meet the description of a "law of Canada" within the meaning of s. 101, I think he must be wrong since Laskin C.J. clearly includes "common law" as existing federal law inasmuch as he says that the cause of action must be founded "on some existing federal law, whether statute or regulation or common law". Professor Evans may be right that Quebec North Shore and McNamara Construction deny the existence of a federal body of common law co-extensive with the federal legislature's unexercised legislative jurisdiction over the subject matters assigned to it. However, I think that the existence of "federal common law" in some areas is expressly recognized by Laskin C.J. and the question for us, therefore, is whether the law of aboriginal title is federal common law.
>
> [Emphasis added]

[105] In this context the Court finds that constitutional conventions concerning the appointment of the judiciary of Superior Court and Federal Courts such as already determined by this Court, and for the purposes of both the second and third element of ITO, constitute the required "general body of federal law covering the area of the dispute" identified by Wilson J in Roberts.

[106] In this connection, our highest Court in Re: Resolution to amend the Constitution, [1981] 1 SCR 753 [Repatriation Reference] at p. 882, confirms courts may determine and recognize the existence of constitutional conventions, as this Court does in the matter before it now.

[107] In addition, while the Supreme Court in Repatriation Reference confirms courts have no authority to enforce constitutional conventions, it appears to me this rule is irrelevant in the case at hand. I say this because in this case this Court will issue a declaration, but will not order mandamus. This Court remains free to declare the existence of constitutional conventions.

[108] Therefore this Court's decision to grant declarations in the case at hand fits harmoniously with the Repatriation Reference. The following passage from the Repatriation Reference confirms both that courts may recognize constitutional conventions and that they may not enforce them:

> Another example of the conflict between law and convention is provided by a fundamental convention already stated above: if after a general election where the opposition obtained the majority at the polls the government refused to resign and clung to office, it would thereby commit a fundamental breach of convention, one so serious indeed that it could be regarded as tantamount to a coup d'état. The remedy in this case would lie with the Governor General or the Lieutenant Governor as the case might be who would be justified in dismissing the ministry and in calling on the opposition to form the government. But should the Crown be slow in taking this course, there is nothing the courts could do about it except at the risk of creating a state of legal discontinuity, that is, a form of revolution.

B. What federal common law or constitutional conventions apply in this case

[109] As submitted by the Applicant, I agree some constitutional conventions have the effect of transferring power from the legal holder to another official or institution. In coming to this conclusion I respectfully adopt Acadian Society per Chief Justice DeWare, citing with approval the late Professor Peter Hogg's text at paragraph 18:

> [18] The Respondents refer the Court to constitutional scholarship explaining the nature and importance of constitutional conventions as well as their lack of justiciability. Professor Hogg's discussion of convention at 1.10 in Constitutional Law of Canada, 5th edition, where he comments:
>
> > An extraordinary feature of the system of responsible government is that its rules are not legal rules in the sense of being enforceable in the courts. They are conventions only. The exercise of the Crown's prerogative powers is thus regulated by conventions, not laws. Conventions are the topic of the next section of this chapter.
> >
> > 1.10 – Conventions
> >
> > (a) – Definition of conventions
> >
> > Conventions are rules of the constitution that are not enforced by the law courts. Because they are not enforced by the law courts, they are best regarded as non-legal rules, but because they do in fact regulate the working of the constitution, they are an important concern of the constitutional lawyer. What conventions do is to prescribe the way in which legal powers shall be exercised. Some conventions have the effect of transferring effective power from the legal holder to another official or institution.
> >
> > Consider the following examples. (1) The Constitution Act, 1867, and many Canadian statutes, confer extensive powers on the Governor General or on the Governor General in Council, but a convention stipulates that the Governor General will exercise those powers only in accordance with the advice of the cabinet or in some cases the Prime Minister. (2) The Constitution Act, 1867 makes the Queen, or the Governor General, an essential party > to all federal legislation (s. 17), and it expressly confers upon the Queen and the Governor General the power to withhold the royal assent from a bill that has been enacted by the two Houses of Parliament (s. 55), but a convention stipulates that the royal assent shall never be withheld.

>
> If a convention is disobeyed by an official, then it is common, especially in the United Kingdom, to describe the official's act or omission as "unconstitutional". But this use of the term unconstitutional must be carefully distinguished from the case where a legal rule of the constitution has been disobeyed. Where unconstitutionality springs from a breach of law, the purported act is normally a nullity and there is a remedy available in the courts. But where "unconstitutionality" springs merely from a breach of convention, no breach of the law has occurred and no legal remedy will be available.
>
> [Emphasis added]

[110] The foregoing establishes constitutional convention may effectively transfer effective power from the legal holder to another official or institution. The fact they may not be enforced at law is irrelevant in this case.

(1) Constitutional convention concerning judicial appointment advice-giving roles of the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice

[111] I note in Conacher the Federal Court of Appeal indicated courts arguably may consider not only the powers of the Governor General but the advice-giving role of the Prime Minister. That is what the Applicant now asks this Court to do now: to find there has been a transference of the legal powers and duties from the Governor General or Governor General in Council, to the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice in their advice-giving roles. In this connection, see Stratas J.A. at paragraph 5:

> [5] Various conventions are associated with the Governor General's status, role, powers, and discretions. Some of these conventions, which are open to debate as to their scope, concern the Prime Minister's advice to the Governor General about the dissolution of Parliament and how the Governor General should respond: Peter W. Hogg, Constitutional Law of Canada, 5th ed., Vol. 1, loose-leaf (Toronto: Carswell, 2007), at pages 9-29 to 9-33. In our view, given the connection between the Governor General and the Prime Minister in this regard, the preservation of the Governor General's powers and discretions under subsection 56.1(1) arguably may also extend to the Prime Minister's advice-giving role. In any event, it seems to us that if Parliament meant to prevent the Prime Minister from advising the Governor General that Parliament should be dissolved and an election held, Parliament would have used explicit and specific wording to that effect in section 56.1. Parliament did not do so. In saying this, we offer no comment on whether such wording, if enacted, would be constitutional.
>
> [Emphasis added]

[112] In fact, this Court recognized a constitutional convention in relation to the advice-giving role of the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice in relation to appointments of judges under section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, just as the Federal Court of Appeal indicated it might in Conacher. Importantly, this Court recognized a constitutional convention in Democracy Watch, a decision of Justice Southcott. In Democracy Watch, this Court recognized that the powers of both the Governor General under section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and the powers of the Governor in Council under section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act, have been transferred as a matter of constitutional convention to the Governor in Council (the federal Cabinet) and Prime Minister and Minister of Justice.

[113] The Court very respectfully adopts the conclusions of my colleague Justice Southcott in Democracy Watch at paragraph 9:

> [9] By constitutional convention, when appointing judges to provincial superior courts, the Governor General acts on the advice of the Committee of the Privy Council of Canada. Similarly, the GIC, which appoints judges to the Federal Court, the Federal Court of Appeal, and the Tax Court of Canada, is defined in the Interpretation Act, RSC 1985, c I-21, as the Governor General acting on the advice or consent of the Privy Council for Canada. The Privy Council is composed of all the ministers of the Crown, who meet in the body known as Cabinet (see League for Human Rights of B'Nai Brith Canada v Attorney General (Canada), 2010 FCA 307 [B'Nai Brith] at para 77). As such, all federal judicial appointments are made by the Governor General on the advice of Cabinet. In turn, Cabinet acts on the advice of the Minister of Justice [Minister]. (In the case of appointment of Chief Justices and Associate Chief Justices, it is the Prime Minister who provides the advice to Cabinet. For simplicity, these Reasons will refer to the advice to Cabinet being provided by the Minister.)
>
> [Emphasis added]

[114] The Respondents argue this application does not meet the criteria established by the ITO test because the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice (the only named Respondents) may give advice (and consent) but are not the legal actors named in either section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 (the Governor General) or the Governor in Council in the case of section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act. The Respondents correctly note they alone are vested the relevant legal powers to fill judicial vacancies.

[115] While I agree the legal jurisdiction and power to fill vacancies lie with the Governor General under section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and with the Governor in Council under section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act, constitutional conventions place those decisions in practice on Cabinet, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice who are named in this proceeding and whose advice-giving authority has already been confirmed by Southcott J., in Democracy Watch.

[116] As will be seen later in these reasons, the failure of the Applicant to name the legal actors is fatal to the Applicant's claim for mandamus.

[117] But that is not the end of the matter in terms of the alternative claim for declarations, where the issue becomes whether Justice Southcott's determination of the relevant advice-giving powers may be incorporated into a declaration.

[118] As stated at paragraph 9 of Democracy Watch, Justice Southcott concluded and put the convention this way:

> All federal judicial appointments are made by the Governor General on the advice of Cabinet. In turn, Cabinet acts on the advice of the Minister of Justice. In the case of appointment of Chief Justices and Associate Chief Justices, it is the Prime Minister who provides the advice to Cabinet.

[119] With respect, there is no obstacle in making a declaration to the same effect as Justice Southcott's conclusion. In support, I note the Respondent in Conacher v Canada (Prime Minister), 2009 FC 920 (an application for judicial review before Justice Shore) made related arguments submitting the decision then at hand was for the Governor General to make, and that the Prime Minister and Cabinet's advice was not legally binding on the Governor General. Therefore, the Respondents submit here that the relief sought in this application pursuant to section 18.1 of the Federal Courts Act is not available. I disagree.

[120] Indeed, Justice Shore rejected this argument, and was affirmed by the Federal Court of Appeal (Conacher v Canada (Prime Minister), 2010 FCA 131) which confirmed that the Federal Court has jurisdiction over direct exercises of Crown prerogative because they emanate from a federal source. At paragraph 68, Justice Shore stated:

> [68] The case of Black v. Canada (Prime Minister), above, shows that the Federal Court has jurisdiction over direct exercises of Crown prerogative because they emanate from a federal source. Although some prerogatives are reviewable, the Court must still determine whether a particular prerogative is justiciable. The hallmark of justiciability is whether the exercise of prerogative affects the rights or legitimate expectations of an individual. In the present case, no legal rights or legitimate expectations were affected, other than a claim having been made under the Charter, thus, the Prime Minister's advice is not reviewable. That being said, paragraph 18.1(4)(f) of the Federal Courts Act gives the Court the power to review, if, in fact, a decision maker acted "contrary to law" which is what the applicants imply in regard to section 56.1 of the Canada Elections Act.
>
> [Emphasis added]

[121] The Federal Court of Appeal in upholding Justice Shore, per Stratas J.A., determined:

> [5] Various conventions are associated with the Governor General's status, role, powers, and discretions. Some of these conventions, which are open to debate as to their scope, concern the Prime Minister's advice to the Governor General about the dissolution of Parliament and how the Governor General should respond: Peter W. Hogg, Constitutional Law of Canada, 5th ed., Vol. 1, loose-leaf (Toronto: Carswell, 2007), at pages 9-29 to 9-33. In our view, given the connection between the Governor General and the Prime Minister in this regard, the preservation of the Governor General's powers and discretions under subsection 56.1(1) arguably may also extend to the Prime Minister's advice-giving role. In any event, it seems to us that if Parliament meant to prevent the Prime Minister from advising the Governor General that Parliament should be dissolved and an election held, Parliament would have used explicit and specific wording to that effect in section 56.1. Parliament did not do so. In saying this, we offer no comment on whether such wording, if enacted, would be constitutional.

[122] With respect therefore, the constitutional conventions identified by Justice Southcott form part of Canada's federal constitutional common law in the sense they are judge-made rules which the courts are entitled and may recognize in the appropriate case through the Court's declaratory power, notwithstanding they are not laws that may been enforced by the courts.

[123] The Court was not pointed to any jurisprudence in which the distinction argued by the Respondents between recognition on the one hand, and enforcement of constitutional conventions on the other hand, results in the refusal of a declaration outlining the constitutional convention. .

(2) Constitutional convention to fill vacancies within a reasonable time

[124] The Chief Justice of Canada and the Canadian Judicial Council have requested that the vacancy crisis facing Canada's federal judiciary be remedied by filling vacant positions. I have accepted the facts and opinions of the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council as expert evidence in this proceeding. They make an unanswerable case requiring this Court to take steps to cause the untenably high number of vacancies to be filled.

[125] The letter speaks for itself. It is set out above. The Court has already quoted extensively from it and needs not do so again. Obviously the root of the vacancy crisis is delay by the Governor General and Governor in Council in appointing judges to fill the critical and "appalling" level of federal judicial vacancies. It is apparent to this Court that the central issue is that judicial vacancies are not being filled within a reasonable time. And with respect, the Court is persuaded that the vacancy crisis is caused by delay – (unjustified "government inertia" according to the letter) – by the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice in giving the required and necessary advice and consent to the Governor General and or Governor in Council to fill these critical vacancies. The Respondents filed no evidence to rebut any of this.

[126] It seems to me given Parliament has determined what it considered an appropriate number of judges required by the Superior Courts, including the Federal Courts, as it has in legislation authorizing that number of appointments, such appointments must be made within a reasonable time of the vacancy. The alternative would allow the current untenable and crisis number of vacancies to remain unacceptably high with the negative consequences set out in the letter, plus the added negative consequence of effectively permitting Canada's executive government to ignore the express will of Parliament.

[127] In response, the Respondents effectively argue they are under no duty to advise the Governor General or Governor in Council to make appointments under either section 96 or 5.2. They say that how long they may decline to deal with the crisis backlog of vacancies is not for the courts but wholly for them. I disagree.

[128] The Respondents' position is not supportable in this case. The Court is satisfied based on the letter of the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council relied on by the Applicant, and the evidence before the Court, that the backlog of vacancies is legally untenable and must be reduced.

[129] In the Court's view, the acknowledged constitutional convention that it is the exclusive authority of the Respondents to advise in respect of vacancies necessarily implies the related constitutional convention that judicial vacancies must be filled as soon as possible after vacancies arise, except in exceptional circumstances.

[130] In this connection, nothing suggests Democracy Watch, which affirmed the existence of the convention, is the last word on the subject. The Court is certainly not persuaded that the framing of the convention in Democracy Watch was ever intended to justify the "untenable", "appalling", "crisis" and "critical" vacancy situation now existing in the federal judiciary.

[131] In my view, the Court should now recognize that the relevant constitutional conventions include not only the responsibility to take steps to fill vacancies as soon as possible, but in this appalling and critical situation, to materially reduce the present backlog to what it was as recently as the Spring of 2016, that is to reduce the vacancies to the mid-40s across the federally appointed provincial Superior Courts and Federal Courts.

[132] In addition to declaring the constitutional convention set out above as found by Justice Southcott in Democracy Watch, the Court will declare the constitutional convention that appointments to fill vacancies shall be made within a reasonable time, and that the vacancy situation described by the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council shall be materially reduced to what it was in the Spring of 2016.

[133] In the result, the Court will issue declarations as follows:

> 1. All federal judicial appointments are made by the Governor General on the advice of Cabinet. In turn, Cabinet acts on the advice of the Minister of Justice. In the case of appointment of Chief Justices and Associate Chief Justices, it is the Prime Minister who provides the advice to Cabinet.
>
> 2. Appointments to fill judicial vacancies under section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act must be made within a reasonable time of the vacancy.
>
> 3. Appointments to fill current judicial vacancies are required for the reasons set out in the letter from the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council to the Prime Minister of Canada dated May 3, 2023.
>
> 4. The Court makes Declarations 2 and 3 above in its expectation that the number of the judicial vacancies will be materially reduced in a reasonable time such that the total number of judicial vacancies returns to the mid-40s, that is, to the number of federal judicial vacancies in the Spring of 2016; in this manner the Court expects the untenable and appalling crisis and critical judicial vacancy situation found by this Court as identified by the Chief Justice and Canadian Judicial Council will be resolved.

C. Admissibility of the Applicant's affidavit evidence

[134] I will briefly canvass some of the technical and procedural objections raised by the Respondents in the alternative to their jurisdictional arguments.

(1) The Applicant's tables are admissible

[135] I have dealt with this already, but would repeat and add as follows, to confirm what has already been stated and found by the Court.

[136] The Respondents challenge the tables referred to above in the Applicant's affidavit, primarily alleging they contain inadmissible opinion evidence. The Applicant disagrees. In my respectful view, the tables should and will be accepted as evidence in this proceeding for the following reasons.

[137] In my view, these tables represent the aggregation by the Applicant of bare-bone raw statistical data the Applicant compiled from a great number of documents all of which are publicly available and obtained from federal and provincial websites, as identified and exhibited. The tables are also in the Court's view, useful aids in the analysis of the facts of this case. I see no point in going through the voluminous but uncontested record on which the tables are based simply to satisfy such unwarranted insistence.

[138] Also, the Respondents accept the documents on the basis of which these tables are produced, do not question to application of simple math to the many calendar dates, and point to no inaccuracies. To emphasize neither Respondent challenges the substance of the facts reported in these tables. The Respondents filed no contrary evidence although they had ample time and opportunity to do so. I therefore accept the tables for the facts they set out.

[139] The Court is also of the view the information in these tables is relevant to the Applicant's case in terms of the tests for mandamus (although mandamus is dismissed) and declaratory relief (which is granted) set out in Apotex v Canada (Attorney General), [1994] 1 FC 742 (FCA), aff'd [1994] 3 SCR 1100 [Apotex] and SA v Metro Vancouver Housing Corp, 2019 SCC 4 [Metro Vancouver Housing Corp]. I respectfully conclude the objections of the Respondents in this respect are unfounded.

[140] I appreciate the onus is on the Applicant to make his case. In my respectful view the Applicant has made his case. Notably, his evidence in this respect is confirmed and corroborated on the national scale by both the Chief Justice of Canada and the Canadian Judicial Council.

[141] To confirm, I accept there were 46 vacancies in the spring of 2016, that there were 79 vacancies by July 1, 2023, that delays in appointing federal judges across Canada average 504 days with a midpoint of 383 days, that 32 Superior Court appointments were made in less than 90 days since 2020, and that the appointment of Chief Justices and Associate Chief Justices since 2016 took an average 57 days. I also accept that appointments in some cases have been made with the benefit of some additional notice in advance of the actual vacancy.

(2) Evidence drawn from the Budget Implementation Acts is accepted

[142] I also accept that Parliament has enacted a series of Budget Implementation Acts which variously increased the number of positions that might be filled under sections 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act. I am entitled to take judicial notice of Acts of Parliament: see Canada Evidence Act, RSC 1985,c C 5, section 17:

> 17 Judicial notice shall be taken of all Acts of the Imperial Parliament, of all ordinances made by the Governor in Council, or the lieutenant governor in council of any province or colony that, or some portion of which, now forms or hereafter may form part of Canada, and of all the Acts of the legislature of any such province or colony, whether enacted before or after the passing of the Constitution Act, 1867.

[143] The relevant Budget Implementation Acts relied upon by the Applicant in his affidavit are:

a. Budget Implementation Act, 2018, No. 1, SC 2018, c 12 ("BIA, 2018");

b. Budget Implementation Act, 2019, No. 1, SC 2019, c 29 ("BIA, 2019");

c. Budget Implementation Act, 2021, No. 1, SC 2021, c 23 ("BIA, 2021");

d. Budget Implementation Act, 2022, No. 1, SC 2022, c 10 ("BIA, 2022").

[144] In this connection, the Respondents do not dispute any of the information relied upon by the Applicant drawn from these statutes. I therefore accept the Applicant's evidence in this respect.

(3) Speculation that provinces have not created relevant vacant judicial positions rejected

[145] The Respondents argue vacancies to which appointments may be made by the Governor General (i.e., under section 96 of Constitution Act, 1867) may not be filled if the relevant provincial legislature has not created the relevant judicial position that is vacant for the Governor General to fill under section 96 of Constitution Act, 1867. No one disagrees with that assertion. I likewise agree no appointments may be made under section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act to the Federal Courts for the Governor in Council to fill unless Parliament has created a judicial position(s) that is (are) vacant.

[146] However, other than stating these undisputed propositions, the Respondents filed no evidence to rebut the submissions of the Applicant or the contents of the letter from the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council. While the Respondents' argument is valid in the abstract, I am therefore unable to give it any force in this case. Without a shred of evidence, the Respondents position that the Provinces (or Parliament with respect to the Federal Courts) is or are at fault must fail.

[147] The Respondents also submit much of the Applicant's affidavit should be struck on three main grounds: 1) it contains hearsay; 2) it contains opinion, argument, or legal opinion; and 3) it is not relevant to issues before the Court.

(4) Improper hearsay including letter from the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council to the Prime Minister [148] With respect to improper hearsay, the Respondents submit the affidavit includes media articles, reports, and letters that the Applicant did not author himself, that are relied upon for the truth of their contents to establish facts for this application.

[149] Principally, and among other things, the Respondents allege Exhibit KKK should be struck because it was tendered for the truth of its contents. Exhibit KKK is the email exchange between Applicant's counsel and a Radio-Canada/CBC journalist in which counsel requested and the journalist gave the Applicant's counsel a copy of the letter from the Chief Justice of Canada and the Canadian Judicial Council to the Prime Minister referred to throughout these Reasons.

[150] As I understand the Respondents they say the letter may not be considered because it contains impermissible information from a third party and not from the Applicant himself. They say the letter is hearsay.

[151] I disagree. The letter from the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council to the Prime Minister was widely publicized at the time, and extensively quoted by both English and French media. In my view the letter was not tendered for the truth of its contents, but as proof the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council made a demand and request that the vacancies be filled and that the demand was worded as it was. I come to the same conclusion for Exhibit HHH from the Federation of Ontario Law Associations.

[152] In addition, the letter itself appears not to be publicly available. However, the record contains additional information confirming the letter was sent and received; both the Chief Justice of Canada and Prime Minister have said it was: see Applicant's Record, Volume 1, Exhibits LLL and MMM.

[153] The unchallenged evidence is that Applicant's counsel requested a copy of the letter from a journalist at Radio Canada/CBC who had written and published a report about the letter. The Radio-Canada/CBC journalist sent the Applicant an email copy of the letter in response to the Applicant's request.

[154] In my view, the copy exhibited in the Court's record meets the test of necessity. The letter was provided by a reputable source in whose business one might expect him to have received such a letter. I have no reason to doubt the honesty or truthfulness of the journalist. The letter was published widely. The Respondents do not suggest the exhibit is fabricated or unreliable. The letter was not disavowed and was indeed subsequently referenced by both the sender and recipient: see Applicant's Record, Volume 1, Exhibits LLL and MMM.

[155] I find it more likely than not the letter as set out in the journalist's email was sent and received as stated on its face.

[156] The Court reviewed the letter with Counsel for the Respondents at the hearing on several occasions. At no time was it suggested the Chief Justice of Canada was not qualified to write the letter on his behalf or for the Canadian Judicial Council.

[157] No one cast doubt on the qualifications or expertise of the Chief Justice of Canada or Canadian Judicial Council members, individually or collectively, to form the opinions expressed. Indeed, no one suggested the exhibited letter was not sent, its contents were not disputed, and no doubt was cast on the proposition that the letter exhibited what the letter said.

[158] In all the circumstances, the Court concludes the letter is admissible because it is both necessary and reliable as an exception to the hearsay rule: Telus Communications Inc v Telecommunications Workers Union, 2005 FCA 262 at paragraphs 25-26; Cabral v Canada (Citizenship and Immigration), 2018 FCA 4 at paragraph 30.

[159] Given the absence of any evidence on this point from the Respondents, the Court accepts and adopts what it finds the credible and evidence-based facts and opinions of the Chief Justice of Canada and Chair of Canada's collective federally-appointed senior most judiciary, and Canadian Judicial Council as expressed in the letter.

(5) Opinion and argument submissions rejected

[160] The Respondents also argue the Applicant's affidavit contains his opinion and the opinion of others that are irrelevant to the issues. In particular, the Respondents seek the following:

> a) Paragraphs 17, 18, 19, 20, 24 and 26 should be struck because they contain opinions and/or are irrelevant.
>
> b) Paragraphs 27, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 36 and 37 (as well and Exhibits HHH, III, JJJ, KKK, LLL and MMM attached thereto) shoud be struck because they contain improper hearsay.
>
> c) Paragraphs 38 to 49 should be struck because they contain improper hearsay, argument and opinion.

[161] As stated by Justice Noël at the Federal Court of Appeal in Duyvenbode v Canada (Attorney General), 2009 FCA 120 at paragraph 2, the purpose of an affidavit is "to adduce facts relevant to the dispute without gloss or explanation."

[162] However, by this I do not understand an affidavit which betrays a belief in the facts presented is inadmissible and must be struck in its entirety, particularly where, as here, the central facts are gathered up from a great number of original sources the veracity of which the Respondents do not question, not to mention they are corroborated by our Chief Justice of Canada and the Canadian Judicial Council. It is, with respect a question of degree. I am not persuaded to strike the entire affidavit.

[163] However, paragraphs 17, 20, 24, 26, 29, and 39-49 of the affidavit summarize in his own words the Applicant's views as to the content of the exhibits relied upon. This is unnecessary and they will be struck.

D. Mandamus not granted

[164] I turn now to the relief requested. The Applicant requests an order of mandamus compelling the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice to appoint judges to each of the vacancies in the superior courts across Canada by the later of the following two dates:

> a) Three months of the date of the order, or > b) Nine months of having become aware that the position would be vacated.
>

[165] The Applicant states, it is not disputed and the Court agrees the test for mandamus is set out by the Federal Court of Appeal in Apotex as follows. Notably, all branches of the test for mandamus must be met; failure on one disentitles an applicant to relief:

> 1. There must be a legal duty to act;
>
> 2. The duty must be owed to the applicant;
>
> 3. There must be a clear right to performance of that duty, in particular;
>
> a. The applicant has satisfied all conditions precedent giving rise to the duty; and
>
> b. The was;

i. A prior demand for performance of the duty;

ii. A reasonable time to comply with the demand unless refused outright; and

iii. A subsequent refusal which can be either expressed or implied, e.g. by unreasonable delay;

4. Where the duty sought to be enforced is discretionary, certain additional principles apply;

5. No adequate remedy is available to the applicant;

6. The order sought will have some practical value or effect;

7. The Court finds no equitable bar to the relief sought; and

8. On a balance of convenience, an order of mandamus should be issued.

(1) Legal Duty to Act lies with non-parties

[166] The Applicant submits the Respondents have the legal duty to appoint judges pursuant to section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act.

[167] Under the theory of transference discussed above, it is not disputed and I find the Respondents by constitutional convention have the sole authority to advise and give consent as to who and when the Governor General and or Governor in Council makes appointments to fill federal judicial vacancies.

[168] Because it is a convention, I am not persuaded there is an enforceable legal duty on the named Respondents in this case. The applicable legal duty in this case lies on the Governor General to make appointments in the case of section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and the Governor in Council under section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act as set out by Justice Southcott in Democracy Watch.

[169] However the jurisprudence is universal that courts may not compel the Governor General or Governor in Council to follow a constitutional convention. In other words, it appears there is nothing this Court can do to enforce the constitutional convention even if the Governor General were to unconstitutionally reject the advice of Cabinet. This is thoroughly discussed above.

[170] That said, and even accepting as I do that by constitutional convention certain powers of the Governor General and Governor in Council under sections 96 and 5.2 are now effectively transferred to Cabinet, the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister, it remains the law that the assent of the Governor General and Governor in Council to the advice offered is and remains a statutory legal requirement under section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act.

[171] The Court has no power to amend the language of either section 96 or section 5.2 to remove the references to the Governor General and or the Governor in Council.

[172] Given the Applicant's decision not to name either the Governor General or the Governor in Council as parties, the Court declines to issue mandamus in this case.

[173] The tests for mandamus being conjunctive, all must be met. Having failed the first, it is not necessary to consider the remaining test.

[174] Therefore the request for mandamus will be dismissed.

E. Applicant has public interest standing

[175] The Respondents further alleged the Applicant had no standing to bring this application. The Applicant argued that he meets the tests for both private interest standing and public interests standing.

[176] With respect, the Court finds the Applicant meets the test for public interest standing. It is not necessary to consider the private interest standing test for mandamus because, as discussed above, the Court is not granting mandamus.

[177] The Applicant deposes and it is not disputed that he is affected by judicial vacancies as counsel representing vulnerable clients:

> 8. Over the past few years, I have experienced significant delays in the litigation proceedings I have brought in superior courts on behalf of vulnerable clients. These delays have harmed my clients, who often do not have the resources to wait years for justice. These delays exacerbate trauma for some clients and create additional pressure for clients to settle legitimate claims for a lesser amount than might be obtained in court because they do not have the financial resources to pay their bills while waiting for a trial date to be set or a judgement to be rendered.
>
> 9. For example, I represented Margaret Godard, a victim of workplace sexual harassment, in a civil action before the Ontario Superior Court of Justice. After many years of pre-trial proceedings, the court confirmed that a trial date was set for the week of October 17, 2022. However, mere days beforehand, on October 13, 2022, the Trial Coordinator informed me that there were no judges available to preside over the matter, so it would have to be cancelled, and the earliest available new hearing date would be December 12, 2022. The email chain containing this correspondence is attached as Exhibit “A”.

[178] The test for public interest standing is set out by the Supreme Court of Canada in Canada (Attorney General) v Downtown Eastside Sex Workers United Against Violence Society, 2012 SCC 45 [Downtown East Side]. At paragraph 37, Justice Cromwell for the majority identifies three factors to consider in exercising discretion to grant public interest standing:

> a. There is a serious justiciable issue raised;
>
> b. The plaintiff has a real stake or a genuine interest in it; and
>
> c. In all the circumstances, the proposed suit is a reasonable and effective way to bring the issue before the courts.

[179] The Applicant meets all three tests.

[180] The first test is met. The issue is serious and justiciable, and accords with paragraph 73 of Democracy Watch where the appropriateness of judicial involvement in a matter was explored with the following questions: the issues are entirely legal, the factual basis not being contested; the issue is not abstract of hypothetical, is not simply a disagreement with a government opinion as indeed the Respondents provided no opinion to justify or explain their decisions, it is appropriate for the courts to engage on this issue as others have not, the issuance of a declaration is expected to have practical effect assuming the Court's Judgment is respected by the Respondents.

[181] I also find the Applicant has a real stake and genuine interest in this issue. He represents clients whose right to access justice in a reasonable time and without unreasonable delay is infringed or denied.

[182] Downtown Eastside at paragraph 44 recognizes the third issue entails asking if the manner the proceeding is undertaken is a reasonable and effective means to bring the challenge to court. In League for Human Rights of B'Nai Brith Canada v Attorney General (Canada), 2010 FCA 307, Justice Stratas recognized at paragraph 61 a "concern that an overly restrictive approach to public interest standing would immunize government from certain challenges."

[183] In my respectful view, this Application is a reasonable and effective manner in all the circumstances of bringing this issue before the courts, particularly as it concerns an issue in respect of which the government should not be immunized from challenge. The issue raised is obviously an important one for the Chief Justice of Canada and the Canadian Judicial Council.

[184] Frankly in my discretion this case is one that should be addressed because of its importance not just to the Applicants but to the federally appointed judiciary as a whole, and is of great importance to the Canadian public who need access to the courts and wish to see criminal and civil justice dispensed without unreasonable delay and impediments such as caused by the untenable level of vacancies, as stated by the Chief Justice of Canada and the Canadian Judicial Council, and whose submissions have been accepted by this Court.

[185] See the Court's discussion under Parts V and VI and elsewhere above.

F. Declaratory Relief

[186] While mandamus will not be granted, in the alternative the Applicant requests declarations that:

> A. the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice are in violation of their duties to appoint judges to the vacancies in the superior courts under s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and s. 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act; and
>
> B. A reasonable interpretation of the requirement to appoint judges in s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and s. 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act is that, absent exceptional circumstances, the appointments shall be made within nine months of the date the applicable Minister becomes aware that a position will be vacated, or three months after a position is vacated, whichever is later.

(1) Declaratory relief granted

[187] For the reasons outlined above, the Court will not grant the first declaration which seeks the same relief requested by way of mandamus which the Court has declined to grant.

[188] Turning to the second declaration sought, the test for granting declaratory relief is stated by the Supreme Court of Canada in Metro Vancouver Housing Corp at paragraph 60. Declaratory relief is appropriate where a) the court has jurisdiction to hear the issue, (b) the dispute is real and not theoretical, (c) the party raising the issue has a genuine interest in its resolution, and (d) the responding party has an interest in opposing the declaration being sought.

[189] In my respectful view, this case meets these requirements but a declaration will not be granted in the terms sought.

[190] First, as extensively considered already, the Court has jurisdiction to hear the matter and to grant the specified relief pursuant to section 18 and 18.1 of the Federal Courts Act.

[191] Second, I agree the dispute is real and not theoretical. The Applicant's assertions are in material respects corroborated and confirmed by the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council, there are approximately 80 judicial vacancies in the provincial Superior Courts and Federal Courts across the country, and unquestionably these vacancies pose serious and critical challenges to the functioning of our courts, access to justice, timely determination of serious criminal cases and civil actions and other consequences as set out in the letter from the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council.

[192] Indeed, no one can review the words of the Chief Justice of Canada and the Canadian Judicial Council in their letter, understanding nothing has changed in the intervening 9 months, and suggest the dispute between Canada's federally appointed judiciary and the Prime Minister and his Minister of Justice is in any way theoretical.

[193] I have already found per (c) of the test that the party raising the issue has a genuine interest in its resolution and therefore have granted him public interest standing. I also find the Respondents have an interest in opposing the declaration being sought, thus satisfying (d) of the tests for a declaration.

(2) Appointments shall be made within a reasonable time

[194] The Court is not persuaded to accept the timelines proposed by the Applicant within which these "appalling" and unacceptably high vacancies levels should be filled. The situation as outlined by the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council is clearly critical and untenable and thus most serious, and therefore in the Court's view may not simply be ignored.

[195] Very unfortunately, the Court has no reason to expect the situation will change without judicial intervention. The Respondents filed no evidence to justify why the “appalling”, “untenable” and “crisis” situation created by the unacceptably high number of vacancies has not yet been remedied by the Prime Minister, and now by two successive Ministers of Justice.

[196] While timelines are routinely ordered for hearings before immigration officials in immigration cases, I am not persuaded the situation of judicial appointments is analogous. The classic immigration situations does not usually involve delay caused by a shortage of decision makers but delay in obtaining evidence often from foreign governments. To the contrary, the sole issue in this case is the critical vacancy situation.

[197] While the Respondents cite Daniels v Canada (Indian Affairs and Northern Development), 2016 SCC 12 at paragraph 11 for the proposition that “a declaration can only be granted if it will have practical utility, that is, if it will settle a ‘live controversy’ between the parties,” in my respectful view the Court is entitled to expect the Respondents - particularly the Respondent Minister of Justice who in his capacity as Attorney General of Canada is the chief law officer of the Crown - to obey the law.

[198] The Court has no reason to believe a declaration in this case will be ignored. Rather, the Court has every expectation and entitlement to proceed on the opposite presumption. Indeed, in Assiniboine v Meeches, 2013 FCA 114 the Federal Court of Appeal holds that declaratory relief declares what the law is, without ordering any sanction or specific action that must be done. The Federal Court of Appeal also holds that compliance by government actors (i.e., the state) is expected:

> 12 … [A] declaratory judgment is binding and has legal effect. A declaration differs from other judicial orders in that it declares what the law is without ordering any specific action or sanction against a party. Ordinarily, such declarations are not enforceable through traditional means. However, since the issues which are determined by a declaration set out in a judgment become res judicata between the parties, compliance with the declaration is nevertheless expected, and it is required in appropriate circumstances.
>
> 13. Declaratory relief is particularly useful when the subject of the relief is a public body or public official entrusted with public responsibilities, because it can be assumed that such bodies and officials will, without coercion, comply with the law as declared by the judiciary. Hence the inability of a declaration to sustain, without more, an execution process should not be seen as an inadequacy of declaratory orders against public bodies and public officials.
>
> 14 …[The] proposition that public bodies and their officials must obey the law is a fundamental aspect of the principle of the rule of law, which is enshrined in the Constitution of Canada by the preamble to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. ... Thus, a public body or public official subject to a declaratory order is bound by that order and has a duty to comply with it. If the public body or official has doubts concerning a judicial declaration, the rule of law requires that body or official to pursue the matter through the legal system. ... The rule of law can mean no less.
>
> 15 … As further noted in Doucet-Boudreau v. Nova Scotia (Minister of Education), 2003 SCC 62, [2003] 3 S.C.R. 3, at par. 62, the assumption underlying the choice of a declaratory order as a remedy is that governments and public bodies subject to that order will comply with the declaration promptly and fully. However, should this not be the case, the Supreme Court of Canada has laid to rest any doubt about the availability of contempt proceedings in appropriate cases in the event that public bodies or officials do not comply with such an order. As noted by Iacobucci and Arbour JJ. at par. 67 of Doucet-Boudreau: “[o]ur colleagues LeBel and Deschamps JJ. suggest that the reporting order in this case was not called for since any violation of a simple declaratory remedy could be dealt with in contempt proceedings > against the Crown. We do not doubt that contempt proceedings may be available in appropriate cases" (emphasis added).

[199] Given this, and with respect, the Court has concluded no timelines should be ordered as proposed at least at this time. That may change of course if the underlying situation does not, in respect of which the Court is not asked to speculate.

[200] For the reasons set out above, the Court declares that:

1. All federal judicial appointments are made by the Governor General on the advice of Cabinet. In turn, Cabinet acts on the advice of the Minister of Justice. In the case of appointment of Chief Justices and Associate Chief Justices, it is the Prime Minister who provides the advice to Cabinet.

2. Appointments to fill judicial vacancies under section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act must be made within a reasonable time of the vacancy.

3. Appointments to fill current judicial vacancies are required for the reasons set out in the letter from the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council to the Prime Minister of Canada dated May 3, 2023, reproduced herein.

4. The Court makes Declarations 2 and 3 above in its expectation that the number of said judicial vacancies will be materially reduced within a reasonable time such that the total number of judicial vacancies returns to the mid-40s, that is, to the number of federal judicial vacancies in the Spring of 2016; in this manner the Court expects the untenable and appalling crisis and critical judicial vacancy situation found by this Court as identified by the Chief Justice and Canadian Judicial Council will be resolved.

   [Emphasis added]

XI. Conclusion

[201] The Court grants the application in part. The request for an order of mandamus is dismissed, as is the request for the first declaration. However declarations will be issued.

XII. Costs

[202] The parties agreed that if the Applicant is successful he would receive all inclusive costs of $1500.00 but if the Applicant is not successful, the parties would bear their own costs. In my discretion these agreements are reasonable. The Applicant having succeeded for the most part, the Court awards him costs in the all-inclusive sum of $1,500.00 payable by the Respondents.

JUDGMENT in T-1274-23

THIS COURT'S JUDGMENT is that:

1. The Application is granted in part.
2. It is hereby declared:
    1. That all federal judicial appointments are made by the Governor General on the advice of Cabinet. In turn, Cabinet acts on the advice of the Minister of Justice. In the case of appointment of Chief Justices and Associate Chief Justices, it is the Prime Minister who provides the advice to Cabinet.
    2. That appointments to fill judicial vacancies under section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and section 5.2 of the Federal Courts Act must be made within a reasonable time of the vacancy.
    3. That appointments to fill current judicial vacancies are required for the reasons set out in the letter from the Chief Justice of Canada and Canadian Judicial Council to the Prime Minister of Canada dated May 3, 2023 set out in paragraph 1 and Schedule A to these Reasons for Judgment.
    4. That the Court makes Declarations 2 and 3 above in its expectation that the number of said judicial vacancies will be materially reduced in a reasonable time such that the total number of judicial vacancies returns to the mid-40s, that is, to the number of federal judicial vacancies in the Spring of 2016; in this manner the Court expects the untenable and appalling crisis, and critical judicial vacancy situation found by this Court as identified by the Chief Justice and Canadian Judicial Council will be resolved.

3. While I will not seize myself of this matter, the Court may provide guidance or resolution of related issues if requested.

4. Paragraphs 17, 20, 24, 26, 29, and 39-49 are struck from the Applicant's affidavit.

5. The Respondents shall pay the Applicant $1500.00 all inclusive costs.

"Henry S. Brown"
Judge

SCHEDULE A

Nicholas Pope

From: DANIEL LEBLANC <daniel.leblanc@radio-canada.ca>

Sent: June 16, 2023 9:18 AM

To: Nicholas Pope

Subject: Re: Wagner CJ's May 3 letter to PM

Good morning, here is the letter.

Le 3 mai 2023

Le très honorable Justin Trudeau

Monsieur le Premier ministre.

En tant que juge en chef du Canada et président du Conseil canadien de la magistrature, je dois vous faire part de ma très grande inquiétude concernant le nombre important de postes vacants au sein de la magistrature fédérale et l'incapacité du gouvernement à combler ces postes en temps opportun.

La situation actuelle est intenable et je crains qu'elle ne résulte en une crise pour notre système de justice, qui fait déjà face à de multiples défis. L'accès à la justice et la santé de nos institutions démocratiques sont en péril.

Vous le savez sans doute, il y a à l'heure actuelle 85 postes vacants au sein de la magistrature fédérale à travers le pays. Certains tribunaux doivent composer depuis des années avec un taux de postes vacants se situant entre 10 et 15 pour cent. Il n'est d'ailleurs pas rare de voir des postes demeurer vacants pendant plusieurs mois, voire, même dans certains cas, pendant des années. À titre d'exemple concret, la moitié des postes à la Cour d'appel du Manitoba sont présentement vacants. Les nominations aux postes clés de juges en chef et de juges en chef associés se font également à un rythme très lent. À cet effet, il y a récemment eu des délais considérables dans les nominations au poste de juge en chef dans nombre de provinces, incluant l'Alberta, l'Ontario et l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard. Le poste de juge en chef du Manitoba est quant à lui vacant depuis maintenant six mois, et les postes de juges en chef associés à la Cour du Banc du Roi de la Saskatchewan et à la Cour supérieure du Québec sont vacants depuis plus d'une année. Aucune explication claire ne justifie ces délais.

Il faut préciser que les difficultés engendrées par la pénurie de juges exacerbent une situation déjà critique au sein de plusieurs tribunaux, confrontés à un manque criant de ressources, en raison d'un sous-financement chronique de la part des provinces et territoires. Toutefois, bien que plusieurs facteurs expliquent la crise à laquelle fait face notre système de justice actuellement, la nomination des juges en temps utile est une solution à portée de main, qui permettrait d'améliorer la situation de manière rapide et efficace. Compte tenu de ce fait évident et de la situation critique à laquelle nous sommes confrontés, l'inertie du gouvernement quant aux postes vacants et l'absence d'explications satisfaisantes pour ces retards sont déconcertantes. La lenteur des nominations est d'autant plus difficile à comprendre que la plupart des vacances judiciaires sont prévisibles, notamment celles générées par les départs à la retraite, pour lesquelles les juges donnent généralement un préavis de plusieurs mois. Dans ce contexte, les retards quant aux nominations envoient un signal qu'elles ne sont tout simplement pas une priorité pour le gouvernement.

Au nom du Conseil canadien de la magistrature, je peux attester que les juges en chef et juges en chef adjoints de tout le pays sont satisfaits de la qualité des récentes nominations et se réjouissent de l'ajout de nouveaux postes de juge dans les derniers budgets. Nous reconnaissons d'ailleurs que votre gouvernement a déployé des efforts afin d'instaurer un processus de nomination plus indépendant, transparent et impartial pour les juges de nomination fédérale. Il serait malheureux que le rythme perfectible des nominations à la magistrature fédérale à travers le pays discrédite ultimement ce processus.

J'ai eu récemment l'occasion de rencontrer le ministre de la Justice et de discuter avec lui à ce sujet. Les juges en chef entretiennent d'ailleurs de très bonnes relations avec le ministre et son cabinet et nous sommes confiants qu'il est disposé à déployer tous les efforts nécessaires pour remédier aux problèmes que je viens d'exposer.

Malgré tous ces efforts, il est impératif que le Cabinet du Premier ministre accorde à cette question l'importance qu'elle mérite et que les nominations soient faites en temps opportun. Il est en effet primordial de combler les postes vacants au sein de la magistrature avec diligence, afin d'assurer le bon fonctionnement du pouvoir judiciaire. Le Conseil canadien de la magistrature a dans le passé exhorté les gouvernements à procéder aux nominations judiciaires plus rapidement. Cette fois, nous craignons sérieusement que, sans des efforts concrets pour remédier à la situation, nous atteignions très bientôt un point de non-retour dans plusieurs juridictions. Les conséquences feront les manchettes et seront graves pour notre démocratie et l'ensemble des Canadiens et Canadiennes. La situation exige votre attention immédiate.

Les postes laissés vacants ont des impacts significatifs sur l'administration de la justice, le fonctionnement de nos tribunaux et la santé des juges. Les membres du Conseil canadien de la magistrature ont récemment entrepris de dresser un portrait plus complet des difficultés rencontrées dans leurs tribunaux respectifs. Les constats sont accablants.

Malgré tout le professionnalisme et le dévouement de nos juges, le manque d'effectifs se traduit nécessairement par des délais additionnels pour entendre des causes et rendre des jugements. Les juges en chef rapportent que, puisque les juges sont surchargés, les délais pour fixer des affaires sont inévitables et des audiences doivent être reportées ou ajournées. De plus, même lorsque les affaires sont entendues, les jugements tardent parfois à être rendus, puisque les juges doivent siéger davantage, ce qui leur laisse moins de temps pour délibérer. Le cadre d'analyse de l'arrêt R. c. Jordan, 2016 CSC 27, quant au droit de l'accusé d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable en vertu de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, joue également un rôle important à cet égard. Il prévoit que, devant les cours supérieures, les accusations pénales doivent être traitées dans un délai maximum de 30 mois, sauf circonstances exceptionnelles. Si un procès n'est pas achevé dans ce délai, un arrêt des procédures peut être ordonné. Plusieurs juges en chef mentionnent qu'en s'efforçant de respecter le délai prévu dans Jordan, ils sont actuellement contraints de choisir les affaires pénales qui « méritent » le plus d'être entendues. Malgré tous leurs efforts, des arrêts de procédure sont prononcés contre des individus accusés de crimes graves, comme des agressions sexuelles ou des meurtres, en raison de délais dus, en partie ou en totalité, à une pénurie de juges. À titre d'exemple, la Cour du Banc du Roi de l'Alberta rapporte que plus de 22 pour cent des affaires pénales en cours dépassent le délai de 30 mois et que 91 pour cent de ces affaires concernent des crimes graves et violents. Par ailleurs, l'urgence de traiter les affaires pénales a aussi pour effet d'écarter les affaires civiles du rôle des tribunaux. Pour celles-ci, le système de justice risque de plus en plus d'être perçu comme inutile. De telles situations démontrent une faillite de notre système de justice et sont susceptibles d'alimenter le cynisme auprès du public, et d'ébranler la confiance de ce dernier dans nos institutions démocratiques.

L'impact des postes laissés vacants sur les juges eux-mêmes est aussi non négligeable. Faisant face à une surcharge de travail chronique et à un stress accru, il est de plus en plus fréquent de voir des juges placés en congés médicaux, ce qui a un effet domino sur leurs collègues qui doivent alors porter un fardeau additionnel. Par ailleurs, il devient difficile pour les juges de certains tribunaux de trouver le temps nécessaire pour suivre des formations, y compris celles dites obligatoires. Cette situation n'augure rien de positif pour assurer une magistrature saine et prospère. Si les difficultés actuelles perdurent, il pourrait également devenir plus difficile d'attirer des candidatures de qualité aux postes de juge.

C'est d'ailleurs déjà le cas en Colombie-Britannique.

Richard Wagner

Le ven. 16 juin 2023, à 07 h 40, Nicholas Pope <npope@hameedlaw.ca> a écrit :

Hi Daniel,

I’m a lawyer in Ottawa. I read your story on Chief Justice Wagner’s May 3, 2023, letter to the Prime Minister about judicial vacancies. Would you be able to share a copy of this letter with me?

Thanks,

Nicholas Pope
Lawyer (he/him)
Phone: 613.656.6917 | Fax: 613.232.2680 | npope@hameedlaw.ca
43 Florence Street | Ottawa, Ontario, Canada | K2P 0W6
www.hameedlaw.ca

FEDERAL COURT

SOLICITORS OF RECORD

DOCKET:	T-1274-23
STYLE OF CAUSE:	YAVAR HAMEED v PRIME MINISTER AND MINISTER OF JUSTICE
PLACE OF HEARING:	OTTAWA, ONTARIO
DATE OF HEARING:	NOVEMBER 15, 2023
JUDGMENT AND REASONS:	BROWN J.
DATED:	FEBRUARY 13, 2024

APPEARANCES:

Nicholas Pope	FOR THE APPLICANT
David Aaron Dylan Smith	FOR THE RESPONDENTS

SOLICITORS OF RECORD:

Hameed Law Barristers and Solicitors Ottawa, Ontario	FOR THE APPLICANT
Attorney General of Canada Toronto, Ontario	FOR THE RESPONDENTS

Robert Hryniak Appellant

v.

Fred Mauldin, Dan Myers, Robert Blomberg, Theodore Landkammer, Lloyd Chelli, Stephen Yee, Marvin Cleair, Carolyn Cleair, Richard Hanna, Douglas Laird, Charles Ivans, Lyn White and Athena Smith Respondents

and

Ontario Trial Lawyers Association and Canadian Bar Association Interveners

Indexed as: Hryniak v. Mauldin

2014 SCC 7

File No.: 34641.

2013: March 26; 2014: January 23.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell, Karakatsanis and Wagner JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

Civil procedure — Summary judgment — Investors bringing action in civil fraud and subsequently bringing a motion for summary judgment — Motion judge granting summary judgment — Purpose of summary judgment motions — Access to justice — Proportionality — Interpretation of recent amendments to Ontario Rules of Civil Procedure — Trial management orders — Standard of review for summary judgment motions — Whether motion judge erred in granting summary judgment — Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, Rule 20.

In June 2001, two representatives of a group of American investors met with H and others to discuss an investment opportunity. The group wired US$1.2 million, which was pooled with other funds and transferred to H's company, Tropos. A few months later, Tropos forwarded more than US$10 million to an offshore bank and the money disappeared. The investors brought an action for

Robert Hryniak Appelant

c.

Fred Mauldin, Dan Myers, Robert Blomberg, Theodore Landkammer, Lloyd Chelli, Stephen Yee, Marvin Cleair, Carolyn Cleair, Richard Hanna, Douglas Laird, Charles Ivans, Lyn White et Athena Smith Intimés

et

Ontario Trial Lawyers Association et Association du Barreau canadien Intervenantes

Répertorié : Hryniak c. Mauldin

2014 CSC 7

N° du greffe : 34641.

2013 : 26 mars; 2014 : 23 janvier.

Présents : La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges LeBel, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell, Karakatsanis et Wagner.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE L'ONTARIO

Procédure civile — Jugement sommaire — Investisseur intentant une action pour fraude civile et présentant ensuite une requête en jugement sommaire —Requête en jugement sommaire accueillie — Objectif des requêtes en jugement sommaire — Accès à la justice — Proportionnalité — Interprétation des modifications récentes apportées aux Règles de procédure civile de l'Ontario — Ordonnances de gestion de l'instance — Norme de contrôle applicable aux requêtes en jugement sommaire — Le juge saisi de la requête a-t-il commis une erreur en accueillant la requête en jugement sommaire? — Règles de procédure civile, R.R.O. 1990, Règl. 194, règle 20.

Au mois de juin 2001, deux représentants d'un groupe d'investisseurs américains ont rencontré H et d'autres personnes afin de discuter d'une possibilité d'investissement. Le groupe a viré 1,2 million de dollars américains et cette somme a été mise en commun avec d'autres fonds et transférée à Tropos, la société de H. Quelques mois plus tard, Tropos a transféré plus de civil fraud against H and others and subsequently brought a motion for summary judgment. The motion judge used his powers under Rule 20.04(2.1) of the Ontario Rules of Civil Procedure (amended in 2010) to weigh the evidence, evaluate credibility, and draw inferences. He concluded that a trial was not required against H. Despite concluding that this case was not an appropriate candidate for summary judgment, the Court of Appeal was satisfied that the record supported the finding that H had committed the tort of civil fraud against the investors, and therefore dismissed H's appeal.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed.

Our civil justice system is premised upon the value that the process of adjudication must be fair and just. This cannot be compromised. However, undue process and protracted trials, with unnecessary expense and delay, can prevent the fair and just resolution of disputes. If the process is disproportionate to the nature of the dispute and the interests involved, then it will not achieve a fair and just result.

A shift in culture is required. The proportionality principle is now reflected in many of the provinces' rules and can act as a touchstone for access to civil justice. The proportionality principle means that the best forum for resolving a dispute is not always that with the most painstaking procedure. Summary judgment motions provide an opportunity to simplify pre-trial procedures and move the emphasis away from the conventional trial in favour of proportional procedures tailored to the needs of the particular case. Summary judgment rules must be interpreted broadly, favouring proportionality and fair access to the affordable, timely and just adjudication of claims.

Rule 20 was amended in 2010 to improve access to justice. These reforms embody the evolution of summary judgment rules from highly restricted tools used to weed out clearly unmeritorious claims or defences to their current status as a legitimate alternative means for adjudicating and resolving legal disputes. They offer significant new tools to judges, which allow them to adjudicate more cases through summary judgment motions and attenuate the risks when such motions do not resolve the 10 millions de dollars américains à une banque étrangère et l'argent a disparu. Les investisseurs ont intenté contre H et d'autres personnes une action pour fraude civile et ont ensuite présenté une requête en jugement sommaire. Le juge saisi de la requête a exercé les pouvoirs que lui confère le par. 20.04(2.1) des Règles de procédure civile de l'Ontario (modifiées en 2010) pour apprécier la preuve, évaluer la crédibilité et tirer des conclusions. Il a conclu que la tenue d'un procès n'était pas nécessaire dans l'instance intentée contre H. Bien qu'elle ait conclu que cette affaire ne se prêtait pas à un jugement sommaire, la Cour d'appel était convaincue que le dossier étayait la conclusion selon laquelle H avait commis le délit de fraude civile à l'endroit des investisseurs et elle a par conséquent rejeté l'appel de H.

Arrêt : Le pourvoi est rejeté.

Notre système de justice civile repose sur le principe que le processus décisionnel doit être juste et équitable. Ce principe ne souffre aucun compromis. Or, les formalités excessives et les procès interminables occasionnant des dépenses et des délais inutiles peuvent faire obstacle au règlement juste et équitable des litiges. Si la procédure est disproportionnée par rapport à la nature du litige et aux intérêts en jeu, elle n'aboutira pas à un résultat juste et équitable.

Un virage culturel s'impose. Le principe de la proportionnalité trouve aujourd'hui son expression dans les règles de procédure de nombreuses provinces et peut constituer la pierre d'assise de l'accès au système de justice civile. Le principe de la proportionnalité veut que le meilleur forum pour régler un litige ne soit pas toujours celui dont la procédure est la plus laborieuse. La requête en jugement sommaire offre une possibilité de simplifier les procédures préalables au procès et d'insister moins sur la tenue d'un procès conventionnel et plus sur des procédures proportionnées et adaptées aux besoins de chaque affaire. Les règles régissant les jugements sommaires doivent recevoir une interprétation large et propice à la proportionnalité et à l'accès équitable à un règlement abordable, expéditif et juste des demandes.

La règle 20 a été modifiée en 2010 afin d'améliorer l'accès à la justice. Ces réformes incarnent l'évolution des règles régissant les jugements sommaires, lesquelles passent du statut d'outil à usage très restreint visant à écarter les demandes ou défenses manifestement dénuées de fondement à celui de solution de rechange légitime pour trancher et régler les litiges d'ordre juridique. Les juges disposent ainsi de nouveaux outils importants qui leur permettent de trancher plus de litiges sur requête entire case. The new powers in Rules 20.04(2.1) and (2.2) expand the number of cases in which there will be no genuine issue requiring a trial by permitting motion judges to weigh evidence, evaluate credibility and draw reasonable inferences.

Summary judgment motions must be granted whenever there is no genuine issue requiring a trial. There will be no genuine issue requiring a trial when the judge is able to reach a fair and just determination on the merits on a motion for summary judgment. This will be the case when the process (1) allows the judge to make the necessary findings of fact, (2) allows the judge to apply the law to the facts, and (3) is a proportionate, more expeditious and less expensive means to achieve a just result.

The new fact-finding powers granted to motion judges in Rule 20.04 may be employed on a motion for summary judgment unless it is in the interest of justice for them to be exercised only at trial. When the use of the new powers would enable a judge to fairly and justly adjudicate a claim, it will generally not be against the interest of justice to do so. The power to hear oral evidence should be employed when it allows the judge to reach a fair and just adjudication on the merits and it is the proportionate course of action. While this is more likely to be the case when the oral evidence required is limited, there will be cases where extensive oral evidence can be heard. Where a party seeks to lead oral evidence, it should be prepared to demonstrate why such evidence would assist the motion judge and to provide a description of the proposed evidence so that the judge will have a basis for setting the scope of the oral evidence.

On a motion for summary judgment under Rule 20.04, the judge should first determine if there is a genuine issue requiring trial based only on the evidence before her, without using the new fact-finding powers. There will be no genuine issue requiring a trial if the summary judgment process provides her with the evidence required to fairly and justly adjudicate the dispute and is a timely, affordable and proportionate procedure, under Rule 20.04(2)(a). If there appears to be a genuine issue requiring a trial, she should then determine if the need for a trial can be avoided by using the new powers under Rules 20.04(2.1) and (2.2). Their use will not be against en jugement sommaire et qui atténuent les risques lorsque pareille requête ne permet pas de trancher l'affaire dans son ensemble. Les nouveaux pouvoirs prévus aux par. 20.04(2.1) et (2.2) des Règles augmentent le nombre d'affaires qui ne soulèvent pas de véritable question litigieuse nécessitant la tenue d'un procès en permettant au juge saisi d'une requête d'apprécier la preuve, d'évaluer la crédibilité et de tirer des conclusions raisonnables.

La requête en jugement sommaire doit être accueillie dans tous les cas où il n'existe pas de véritable question litigieuse nécessitant la tenue d'un procès. Il n'existe pas de véritable question litigieuse nécessitant la tenue d'un procès lorsque le juge est en mesure de statuer justement et équitablement au fond sur une requête en jugement sommaire. Ce sera le cas lorsque la procédure (1) permet au juge de tirer les conclusions de fait nécessaires, (2) lui permet d'appliquer les règles de droit aux faits et (3) constitue un moyen proportionné, plus expéditif et moins coûteux d'arriver à un résultat juste.

Le juge saisi d'une requête en jugement sommaire peut exercer les nouveaux pouvoirs en matière de recherche des faits que lui confère la règle 20.04 à moins qu'il ne soit dans l'intérêt de la justice de ne les exercer que lors d'un procès. Lorsqu'il permettrait au juge de trancher une demande de manière juste et équitable, l'exercice des nouveaux pouvoirs serait généralement dans l'intérêt de la justice. Le pouvoir d'entendre des témoignages oraux devrait être exercé lorsqu'il permet au juge de rendre une décision juste et équitable sur le fond et que son exercice constitue la marche à suivre proportionnée. Ce sera plus probablement le cas lorsque le témoignage oral requis est succinct, mais dans certains cas, la requête en jugement sommaire comportera l'audition de longs témoignages oraux. La partie qui cherche à présenter des témoignages oraux doit être prête à démontrer en quoi ils aideraient le juge saisi de la requête et à fournir un exposé de la preuve proposée afin de permettre au juge d'établir la portée de ces témoignages oraux.

Lors de l'audition d'une requête en jugement sommaire aux termes de la règle 20.04, le juge devrait en premier lieu décider, compte tenu uniquement de la preuve dont il dispose et sans recourir aux nouveaux pouvoirs en matière de recherche des faits, s'il existe une véritable question litigieuse nécessitant la tenue d'un procès. Il n'y aura pas de question de ce genre si la procédure de jugement sommaire fournit au juge la preuve nécessaire pour trancher justement et équitablement le litige et constitue une procédure expéditive, abordable et proportionnée selon l'al. 20.04(2)a) des Règles. S'il semble y avoir une véritable question nécessitant la tenue d'un procès, the interest of justice if they will lead to a fair and just result and will serve the goals of timeliness, affordability and proportionality in light of the litigation as a whole.

Failed, or even partially successful, summary judgment motions add to costs and delay. This risk can be attenuated by a judge who makes use of the trial management powers provided in Rule 20.05 and the court's inherent jurisdiction. These powers allow the judge to use the insight she gained from hearing the summary judgment motion to craft a trial procedure that will resolve the dispute in a way that is sensitive to the complexity and importance of the issue, the amount involved in the case, and the effort expended on the failed motion. Where a motion judge dismisses a motion for summary judgment, in the absence of compelling reasons to the contrary, she should also seize herself of the matter as the trial judge.

Absent an error of law, the exercise of powers under the new summary judgment rule attracts deference. When the motion judge exercises her new fact-finding powers under Rule 20.04(2.1) and determines whether there is a genuine issue requiring a trial, this is a question of mixed fact and law which should not be overturned, absent palpable and overriding error. Similarly, the determination of whether it is in the interest of justice for the motion judge to exercise the new fact-finding powers provided by Rule 20.04(2.1) is also a question of mixed fact and law which attracts deference.

The motion judge did not err in granting summary judgment in the present case. The tort of civil fraud has four elements, which must be proven on a balance of probabilities: (1) a false representation by the defendant; (2) some level of knowledge of the falsehood of the representation on the part of the defendant (whether knowledge or recklessness); (3) the false representation caused the plaintiff to act; (4) the plaintiff's actions resulted in a loss. In granting summary judgment to the group against H, the motion judge did not explicitly address the correct test for civil fraud but his findings are sufficient to make out the cause of action. The motion le juge devrait alors déterminer si l'exercice des nouveaux pouvoirs prévus aux par. 20.04(2.1) et (2.2) des Règles permettra d'écarter la nécessité d'un procès. L'exercice de ces pouvoirs ne sera pas contraire à l'intérêt de la justice s'il aboutit à un résultat juste et équitable et permettra d'atteindre les objectifs de célérité, d'accessibilité économique et de proportionnalité, compte tenu du litige dans son ensemble.

Qu'elle soit rejetée ou même accueillie en partie, la requête en jugement sommaire occasionne des frais et des délais additionnels. Le juge peut toutefois atténuer ce risque en exerçant la compétence inhérente du tribunal et les pouvoirs de gestion de l'instance prévus à la règle 20.05. Ces pouvoirs permettent au juge de mettre à profit les connaissances acquises lors de l'audition de la requête en jugement sommaire pour élaborer une procédure d'instruction de nature à régler le litige en tenant compte de la complexité et de l'importance de la question soulevée, de la somme en jeu et des efforts déployés lors de l'instruction de la requête rejetée. Le juge qui rejette une requête en jugement sommaire devrait également se saisir de l'instance à titre de juge du procès à moins que des raisons impérieuses l'en empêchent.

En l'absence d'une erreur de droit, l'exercice des pouvoirs que confère la nouvelle règle relative au jugement sommaire commande la retenue. Lorsque le juge saisi d'une requête exerce les nouveaux pouvoirs en matière de recherche des faits que lui confère le par. 20.04(2.1) des Règles et détermine s'il existe une véritable question litigieuse nécessitant la tenue d'un procès, il s'agit d'une question mixte de fait et de droit et sa décision ne doit pas être infirmée en l'absence d'erreur manifeste et dominante. De même, la décision quant à savoir s'il est dans l'intérêt de la justice que le juge saisi d'une requête exerce les nouveaux pouvoirs en matière de recherche des faits prévus au par. 20.04(2.1) des Règles constitue également une question mixte de fait et de droit qui commande la retenue.

Le juge saisi de la requête n'a pas eu tort de rendre un jugement sommaire en l'espèce. Le délit de fraude civile comporte quatre éléments dont il faut prouver l'existence selon la prépondérance des probabilités : (1) une fausse déclaration du défendeur; (2) une certaine connaissance de la fausseté de la déclaration de la part du défendeur (connaissance ou insouciance); (3) le fait que la fausse déclaration a amené le demandeur à agir; (4) le fait que les actes du demandeur ont entraîné une perte. Lorsqu'il a prononcé contre H un jugement sommaire en faveur du groupe, le juge saisi de la requête n'a pas traité explicitement du critère qu'il convient d'appliquer à la fraude judge found no credible evidence to support H's claim that he was a legitimate trader, and the outcome was therefore clear, so the motion judge concluded there was no issue requiring a trial. It was neither against the interest of justice for the motion judge to use his fact-finding powers nor was his discretionary decision to do so tainted with error.

civile mais ses conclusions suffisent pour établir la cause d'action. Le juge saisi de la requête a conclu qu'il n'existait pas d'élément de preuve crédible à l'appui de la prétention de H selon laquelle ce dernier était un courtier légitime et l'issue était donc claire; ainsi le juge a conclu qu'il n'y avait pas de question litigieuse nécessitant la tenue d'un procès. L'exercice, par le juge, de ses pouvoirs en matière de recherche des faits n'allait pas à l'encontre de l'intérêt de la justice, et sa décision discrétionnaire d'exercer ces pouvoirs n'était pas non plus entachée d'erreur.

Cases Cited

Referred to: Bruno Appliance and Furniture, Inc. v. Hryniak, 2014 SCC 8, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 126; New Brunswick (Minister of Health and Community Services) v. G. (J.), [1999] 3 S.C.R. 46; Medicine Shoppe Canada Inc. v. Devchand, 2012 ABQB 375, 541 A.R. 312; Saturley v. CIBC World Markets Inc., 2011 NSSC 4, 297 N.S.R. (2d) 371; Szeto v. Dwyer, 2010 NLCA 36, 297 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 311; Bal Global Finance Canada Corp. v. Aliments Breton (Canada) inc., 2010 QCCS 325 (CanLII); Vaughan v. Warner Communications, Inc. (1986), 56 O.R. (2d) 242; Canada (Attorney General) v. Lameman, 2008 SCC 14, [2008] 1 S.C.R. 372; Aguonie v. Galion Solid Waste Material Inc. (1998), 38 O.R. (3d) 161; Dawson v. Rexcraft Storage and Warehouse Inc. (1998), 164 D.L.R. (4th) 257; Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235.

Jurisprudence

Arrêts mentionnés : Bruno Appliance and Furniture, Inc. c. Hryniak, 2014 CSC 8, [2014] 1 R.C.S. 126; Nouveau-Brunswick (Ministre de la Santé et des Services communautaires) c. G. (J.), [1999] 3 R.C.S. 46; Medicine Shoppe Canada Inc. c. Devchand, 2012 ABQB 375, 541 A.R. 312; Saturley c. CIBC World Markets Inc., 2011 NSSC 4, 297 N.S.R. (2d) 371; Szeto c. Dwyer, 2010 NLCA 36, 297 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 311; Bal Global Finance Canada Corp. c. Aliments Breton (Canada) inc., 2010 QCCS 325 (CanLII); Vaughan c. Warner Communications, Inc. (1986), 56 O.R. (2d) 242; Canada (Procureur général) c. Lameman, 2008 CSC 14, [2008] 1 R.C.S. 372; Aguonie c. Galion Solid Waste Material Inc. (1998), 38 O.R. (3d) 161; Dawson c. Rexcraft Storage and Warehouse Inc. (1998), 164 D.L.R. (4th) 257; Housen c. Nikolaisen, 2002 CSC 33, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 235.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Code of Civil Procedure, R.S.Q., c. C-25, arts. 4.2, 54.1 et seq., 165(4).
Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, rr. 1.04(1), (1.1), 1.05, 20, 20.04(2)(a), (2.1), (2.2), 20.05, 20.06(a).
Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, r. 1-3(2).

Lois et règlements cités

Code de procédure civile, L.R.Q., ch. C-25, art. 4.2, 54.1 et suiv., 165(4).
Règles de procédure civile, R.R.O. 1990, Règl. 194, règles 1.04(1), (1.1), 1.05, 20, 20.04(2)a), (2.1), (2.2), 20.05, 20.06a).
Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, règle 1-3(2).

Authors Cited

Agrast, Mark David, Juan Carlos Botero and Alejandro Ponce. World Justice Project Rule of Law Index 2011. Washington, D.C.: World Justice Project, 2011.
Ontario. Ministry of the Attorney General. Civil Justice Reform Project: Summary of Findings and Recommendations. Toronto: The Ministry, 2007.
Walsh, Teresa, and Lauren Posloski. "Establishing a Workable Test for Summary Judgment: Are We There Yet?", in Todd L. Archibald and Randall Scott Echlin, eds., Annual Review of Civil Litigation 2013. Toronto: Thomson Carswell, 2013, 419.

Doctrine et autres documents cités

Agrast, Mark David, Juan Carlos Botero and Alejandro Ponce. World Justice Project Rule of Law Index 2011. Washington, D.C. : World Justice Project, 2011.
Ontario. Ministère du procureur général. Projet de réforme du système de justice civile : Résumé des conclusions et des recommandations. Toronto : Le ministère, 2007.
Walsh, Teresa, and Lauren Posloski. « Establishing a Workable Test for Summary Judgment : Are We There Yet? », in Todd L. Archibald and Randall Scott Echlin, eds., Annual Review of Civil Litigation 2013. Toronto : Thomson Carswell, 2013, 419.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal (Winkler C.J.O. and Laskin, Sharpe, Armstrong and Rouleau JJ.A.), 2011 ONCA 764, 108 O.R. (3d) 1, 286 O.A.C. 3, 97 C.C.E.L. (3d) 25, 14 C.P.C. (7th) 242, 13 R.P.R. (5th) 167, 93 B.L.R. (4th) 1, 344 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 10 C.L.R. (4th) 17, [2011] O.J. No. 5431 (QL), 2011 CarswellOnt 13515 (sub nom. Combined Air Mechanical Services Inc. v. Flesch), affirming a decision of Grace J., 2010 ONSC 5490, [2010] O.J. No. 4661 (QL), 2010 CarswellOnt 8325. Appeal dismissed.

Sarit E. Batner, Brandon Kain and Moya J. Graham, for the appellant.

Javad Heydary, Jeffrey D. Landmann, David K. Alderson, Michelle Jackson and Jonathan A. Odumeru, for the respondents.

Allan Rouben and Ronald P. Bohm, for the intervener the Ontario Trial Lawyers Association.

Paul R. Sweeny and David Sterns, for the intervener the Canadian Bar Association.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

[1] Karakatsanis J. — Ensuring access to justice is the greatest challenge to the rule of law in Canada today. Trials have become increasingly expensive and protracted. Most Canadians cannot afford to sue when they are wronged or defend themselves when they are sued, and cannot afford to go to trial. Without an effective and accessible means of enforcing rights, the rule of law is threatened. Without public adjudication of civil cases, the development of the common law is stunted.

[2] Increasingly, there is recognition that a culture shift is required in order to create an environment promoting timely and affordable access to the civil justice system. This shift entails simplifying pretrial

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario (le juge en chef Winkler et les juges Laskin, Sharpe, Armstrong et Rouleau), 2011 ONCA 764, 108 O.R. (3d) 1, 286 O.A.C. 3, 97 C.C.E.L. (3d) 25, 14 C.P.C. (7th) 242, 13 R.P.R. (5th) 167, 93 B.L.R. (4th) 1, 344 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 10 C.L.R. (4th) 17, [2011] O.J. No. 5431 (QL), 2011 CarswellOnt 13515 (sub nom. Combined Air Mechanical Services Inc. c. Flesch), qui a confirmé une décision du juge Grace, 2010 ONSC 5490, [2010] O.J. No. 4661 (QL), 2010 CarswellOnt 8325. Pourvoi rejeté.

Sarit E. Batner, Brandon Kain et Moya J. Graham, pour l'appelant.

Javad Heydary, Jeffrey D. Landmann, David K. Alderson, Michelle Jackson et Jonathan A. Odumeru, pour les intimés.

Allan Rouben et Ronald P. Bohm, pour l'intervenante Ontario Trial Lawyers Association.

Paul R. Sweeny et David Sterns, pour l'intervenante l'Association du Barreau canadien.

Version française du jugement de la Cour rendu par

[1] La juge Karakatsanis — De nos jours, garantir l'accès à la justice constitue le plus grand défi à relever pour assurer la primauté du droit au Canada. Les procès sont de plus en plus coûteux et longs. La plupart des Canadiens n'ont pas les moyens d'intenter une action en justice lorsqu'ils subissent un préjudice ou de se défendre lorsqu'ils sont poursuivis; ils n'ont pas les moyens d'aller en procès. À défaut de moyens efficaces et accessibles de faire respecter les droits, la primauté du droit est compromise. L'évolution de la common law ne peut se poursuivre si les affaires civiles ne sont pas tranchées en public.

[2] On reconnaît de plus en plus qu'un virage culturel s'impose afin de créer un environnement favorable à l'accès expéditif et abordable au système de justice civile. Ce virage implique que procedures and moving the emphasis away from the conventional trial in favour of proportional procedures tailored to the needs of the particular case. The balance between procedure and access struck by our justice system must come to reflect modern reality and recognize that new models of adjudication can be fair and just.

[3] Summary judgment motions provide one such opportunity. Following the Civil Justice Reform Project: Summary of Findings and Recommendations (2007) (the Osborne Report), Ontario amended the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194 (Ontario Rules or Rules) to increase access to justice. This appeal, and its companion, Bruno Appliance and Furniture, Inc. v. Hryniak, 2014 SCC 8, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 126, address the proper interpretation of the amended Rule 20 (summary judgment motion).

[4] In interpreting these provisions, the Ontario Court of Appeal placed too high a premium on the "full appreciation" of evidence that can be gained at a conventional trial, given that such a trial is not a realistic alternative for most litigants. In my view, a trial is not required if a summary judgment motion can achieve a fair and just adjudication, if it provides a process that allows the judge to make the necessary findings of fact, apply the law to those facts, and is a proportionate, more expeditious and less expensive means to achieve a just result than going to trial.

[5] To that end, I conclude that summary judgment rules must be interpreted broadly, favouring proportionality and fair access to the affordable, timely and just adjudication of claims.

[6] As the Court of Appeal observed, the inappropriate use of summary judgment motions creates l'on simplifie les procédures préalables au procès et que l'on insiste moins sur la tenue d'un procès conventionnel et plus sur des procédures proportionnées et adaptées aux besoins de chaque affaire. L'équilibre entre la procédure et l'accès à la justice qu'établit notre système de justice doit en venir à refléter la réalité contemporaine et à reconnaître que de nouveaux modèles de règlement des litiges peuvent être justes et équitables.

[3] La requête en vue d'obtenir un jugement sommaire offre une occasion d'atteindre ces objectifs. À la suite du rapport de 2007 intitulé Projet de réforme du système de justice civile : Résumé des conclusions et des recommandations (le rapport Osborne), l'Ontario a modifié ses Règles de procédure civile, R.R.O. 1990, Règl. 194 (les Règles de l'Ontario ou les Règles) afin d'améliorer l'accès à la justice. Le présent pourvoi et le pourvoi connexe, Bruno Appliance and Furniture, Inc. c. Hryniak, 2014 CSC 8, [2014] 1 R.C.S. 126, portent sur l'interprétation correcte de la règle 20 (requête en jugement sommaire) modifiée.

[4] Lorsqu'elle a interprété les dispositions de cette règle, la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario a accordé trop d'importance à la « pleine appréciation » que l'on peut faire de la preuve lors d'un procès conventionnel, étant donné que pareil procès ne constitue pas une solution de rechange réaliste pour la plupart des parties à un litige. À mon avis, la tenue d'un procès n'est pas nécessaire si une requête en jugement sommaire peut déboucher sur une décision juste et équitable, si elle offre un processus qui permet au juge de tirer les conclusions de fait nécessaires, d'appliquer les règles de droit à ces faits et si elle constitue, par rapport au procès, un moyen proportionné, plus expéditif et moins onéreux d'arriver à un résultat juste.

[5] Je conclus à cette fin que les règles régissant les jugements sommaires doivent recevoir une interprétation large et propice à la proportionnalité et à l'accès équitable à un règlement abordable, expéditif et juste des demandes.

[6] Comme l'a indiqué la Cour d'appel, le recours inapproprié à la requête en jugement sommaire its own costs and delays. However, judges can mitigate such risks by making use of their powers to manage and focus the process and, where possible, remain seized of the proceedings.

[7] While I differ in part on the interpretation of Rule 20, I agree with the Court of Appeal's disposition of the matter and would dismiss the appeal.

I. Facts

[8] More than a decade ago, a group of American investors, led by Fred Mauldin (the Mauldin Group), placed their money in the hands of Canadian "traders". Robert Hryniak was the principal of the company Tropos Capital Inc., which traded in bonds and debt instruments; Gregory Peebles, is a corporate-commercial lawyer (formerly of Cassels Brock & Blackwell) who acted for Hryniak, Tropos and Robert Cranston, formerly a principal of a Panamanian company, Frontline Investments Inc.

[9] In June 2001, two members of the Mauldin Group met with Cranston, Peebles, and Hryniak, to discuss an investment opportunity.

[10] At the end of June 2001, the Mauldin Group wired US$1.2 million to Cassels Brock, which was pooled with other funds and transferred to Tropos. A few months later, Tropos forwarded more than US$10 million to an offshore bank, and the money disappeared. Hryniak claims that at this point, Tropos' funds, including the funds contributed by the Mauldin Group, were stolen.

[11] Beyond a small payment of US$9,600 in February 2002, the Mauldin Group lost its investment.

occasionne lui-même des frais et des délais. Or, le juge peut atténuer ces risques en exerçant ses pouvoirs de gérer et de circonscrire la procédure et, si possible, en demeurant saisi de l'instance.

[7] Bien que mon interprétation de la règle 20 diffère en partie de celle de la Cour d'appel, je souscris à sa décision en l'espèce et je suis d'avis de rejeter le pourvoi.

I. Les faits

[8] Il y a plus de 10 ans, un groupe d'investisseurs américains, dirigé par Fred Mauldin (le Groupe Mauldin), ont confié leur argent à des « courtiers » canadiens. Robert Hryniak était le dirigeant de la société Tropos Capital Inc., qui faisait le commerce des obligations et des titres de créance; Gregory Peebles, un avocat spécialisé en droit des sociétés et en droit commercial (ancien avocat du cabinet Cassels Brock & Blackwell), représentait M. Hryniak, Tropos et Robert Cranston, l'ancien dirigeant d'une société panaméenne, Frontline Investments Inc.

[9] Au mois de juin 2001, deux membres du Groupe Mauldin ont rencontré MM. Cranston, Peebles et Hryniak pour discuter d'une possibilité d'investissement.

[10] À la fin juin 2001, le Groupe Mauldin a viré 1,2 million de dollars américains à Cassels Brock; cette somme a été mise en commun avec d'autres fonds et transférée à Tropos. Quelques mois plus tard, Tropos a transféré plus de 10 millions de dollars américains à une banque étrangère et l'argent a disparu. M. Hryniak soutient qu'à ce stade, les fonds appartenant à Tropos, y compris ceux versés par le Groupe Mauldin, ont été dérobés.

[11] À part un paiement modique de 9 600 dollars américains versé en février 2002, le Groupe Mauldin a perdu son placement.

people look for alternatives or simply give up on justice. Sometimes, they choose to represent themselves, often creating further problems due to their lack of familiarity with the law.

[26] In some circles, private arbitration is increasingly seen as an alternative to a slow judicial process. But private arbitration is not the solution since, without an accessible public forum for the adjudication of disputes, the rule of law is threatened and the development of the common law undermined.

[27] There is growing support for alternative adjudication of disputes and a developing consensus that the traditional balance struck by extensive pre-trial processes and the conventional trial no longer reflects the modern reality and needs to be re-adjusted. A proper balance requires simplified and proportionate procedures for adjudication, and impacts the role of counsel and judges. This balance must recognize that a process can be fair and just, without the expense and delay of a trial, and that alternative models of adjudication are no less legitimate than the conventional trial.

[28] This requires a shift in culture. The principal goal remains the same: a fair process that results in a just adjudication of disputes. A fair and just process must permit a judge to find the facts necessary to resolve the dispute and to apply the relevant legal principles to the facts as found. However, that process is illusory unless it is also accessible — proportionate, timely and affordable. The proportionality principle means that the best forum for resolving a dispute is not always that with the most painstaking procedure.

[29] There is, of course, always some tension between accessibility and the truth-seeking function but, much as one would not expect a jury trial over a contested parking ticket, the procedures used to adjudicate civil disputes must fit the nature of the claim. If the process is disproportionate to the judiciaires deviennent excessifs, les gens cherchent d'autres solutions ou renoncent tout simplement à obtenir justice. Ils décident parfois de se représenter eux-mêmes, ce qui entraîne souvent d'autres difficultés en raison de leur méconnaissance du droit.

[26] Dans certains milieux, l'arbitrage privé est de plus en plus considéré comme une solution de rechange à un processus judiciaire lent. Or, ce n'est pas la solution : en l'absence d'un forum public accessible pour faire trancher les litiges, la primauté du droit est compromise et l'évolution de la common law, freinée.

[27] Les solutions de rechange au règlement des différents recueillent de plus en plus d'appuis et il se dégage un consensus sur le fait que l'équilibre traditionnel entre les longues procédures préalables au procès et le procès conventionnel ne correspond plus à la réalité actuelle et doit être rajusté. L'atteinte d'un juste équilibre exige la mise en place de procédures de règlement des litiges simplifiées et proportionnées, et influe sur le rôle des avocats et des juges. Il faut reconnaître par cet équilibre qu'un processus peut être juste et équitable sans entraîner les dépenses et les délais propres au procès, et que les autres modèles de règlement des litiges sont aussi légitimes que le procès conventionnel.

[28] Un virage culturel s'impose. L'objectif principal demeure le même : une procédure équitable qui aboutit au règlement juste des litiges. Une procédure juste et équitable doit permettre au juge de dégager les faits nécessaires au règlement du litige et d'appliquer les principes juridiques pertinents aux faits établis. Or, cette procédure reste illusoire si elle n'est pas également accessible — soit proportionnée, expéditive et abordable. Le principe de la proportionnalité veut que le meilleur forum pour régler un litige ne soit pas toujours celui dont la procédure est la plus laborieuse.

[29] De toute évidence, il existe toujours un certain tiraillement entre l'accessibilité et la fonction de recherche de la vérité, mais, tout comme l'on ne s'attend pas à la tenue d'un procès avec jury dans le cas d'une contravention de stationnement contestée, les procédures en place pour trancher des nature of the dispute and the interests involved, then it will not achieve a fair and just result.

[30] The proportionality principle is now reflected in many of the provinces' rules and can act as a touchstone for access to civil justice.[3] For example, Ontario Rules 1.04(1) and (1.1) provide:

1.04 (1) These rules shall be liberally construed to secure the just, most expeditious and least expensive determination of every civil proceeding on its merits.

(1.1) In applying these rules, the court shall make orders and give directions that are proportionate to the importance and complexity of the issues, and to the amount involved, in the proceeding.

[31] Even where proportionality is not specifically codified, applying rules of court that involve discretion "includes . . . an underlying principle of proportionality which means taking account of the appropriateness of the procedure, its cost and impact on the litigation, and its timeliness, given the nature and complexity of the litigation": Szeto v. Dwyer, 2010 NLCA 36, 297 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 311, at para. 53.

[32] This culture shift requires judges to actively manage the legal process in line with the principle of proportionality. While summary judgment motions can save time and resources, like most pre-trial procedures, they can also slow down the proceedings if used inappropriately. While judges can and should play a role in controlling such risks,

3 This principle has been expressly codified in British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec: Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, Rule 1-3(2); Ontario Rules, Rule 1.04(1.1); and Code of Civil Procedure, R.S.Q., c. C-25, art. 4.2. Aspects of Alberta's and Nova Scotia's rules of court have also been interpreted as reflecting proportionality: Medicine Shoppe Canada Inc. v. Devchand, 2012 ABQB 375, 541 A.R. 312, at para. 11; Saturley v. CIBC World Markets Inc., 2011 NSSC 4, 297 N.S.R. (2d) 371, at para. 12.

litiges civils doivent être adaptées à la nature de la demande. Si la procédure est disproportionnée par rapport à la nature du litige et aux intérêts en jeu, elle n'aboutira pas à un résultat juste et équitable.

[30] Le principe de la proportionnalité trouve aujourd'hui son expression dans les règles de procédure de nombreuses provinces et peut constituer la pierre d'assise de l'accès au système de justice civile[3]. Par exemple, les par. 1.04(1) et (1.1) des Règles de l'Ontario prévoient ce qui suit :

1.04 (1) Les présentes règles doivent recevoir une interprétation large afin d'assurer la résolution équitable sur le fond de chaque instance civile, de la façon la plus expéditive et la moins onéreuse.

(1.1) Lorsqu'il applique les présentes règles, le tribunal rend des ordonnances et donne des directives qui sont proportionnées à l'importance et au degré de complexité des questions en litige ainsi qu'au montant en jeu dans l'instance.

[31] Même si la proportionnalité n'est pas expressément codifiée, l'application de règles de procédure qui font intervenir un pouvoir discrétionnaire [TRADUCTION] « englobe [. . .] un principe sous-jacent de proportionnalité, selon lequel il faut tenir compte de l'opportunité de la procédure, de son coût, de son incidence sur le litige et de sa célérité, selon la nature et la complexité du litige » : Szeto c. Dwyer, 2010 NLCA 36, 297 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 311, par. 53.

[32] Ce virage culturel oblige les juges à gérer activement le processus judiciaire dans le respect du principe de la proportionnalité. La requête en jugement sommaire peut permettre d'économiser temps et ressources, mais, à l'instar de la plupart des procédures préalables au procès, elle peut ralentir l'instance si elle est utilisée de manière counsel must, in accordance with the traditions of their profession, act in a way that facilitates rather than frustrates access to justice. Lawyers should consider their client's limited means and the nature of their case and fashion proportionate means to achieve a fair and just result.

3 Ce principe a été expressément codifié en Colombie-Britannique, en Ontario et au Québec : Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, par. 1-3(2); Règles de l'Ontario, par. 1.04(1.1); et Code de procédure civile, L.R.Q., ch. C-25, art. 4.2. Certaines dispositions des règles de procédure de l'Alberta et de la Nouvelle-Écosse ont également été considérées comme illustrant la proportionnalité : Medicine Shoppe Canada Inc. c. Devchand, 2012 ABQB 375, 541 A.R. 312, par. 11; Saturley c. CIBC World Markets Inc., 2011 NSSC 4, 297 N.S.R. (2d) 371, par. 12.

[33] A complex claim may involve an extensive record and a significant commitment of time and expense. However, proportionality is inevitably comparative; even slow and expensive procedures can be proportionate when they are the fastest and most efficient alternative. The question is whether the added expense and delay of fact finding at trial is necessary to a fair process and just adjudication.

B. Summary Judgment Motions

[34] The summary judgment motion is an important tool for enhancing access to justice because it can provide a cheaper, faster alternative to a full trial. With the exception of Quebec, all provinces feature a summary judgment mechanism in their respective rules of civil procedure.[4] Generally, summary judgment is available where there is no genuine issue for trial.

[35] Rule 20 is Ontario's summary judgment procedure, under which a party may move for summary judgment to grant or dismiss all or part of a claim. While Ontario's Rule 20 in some ways goes further than other rules throughout the country, the values

4 Quebec has a procedural device for disposing of abusive claims summarily: see arts. 54.1 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. While this procedural device is narrower on its face, it has been likened to summary judgment: see Bal Global Finance Canada Corp. v. Aliments Breton (Canada) inc., 2010 QCCS 325 (CanLII). Moreover, s. 165(4) of the Code provides that the defendant may ask for an action to be dismissed if the suit is "unfounded in law".

inappropriée. Bien que les juges puissent contribuer à la réduction de ce risque, et devraient le faire, les avocats doivent, conformément aux traditions de leur profession, agir de manière à faciliter plutôt qu'à empêcher l'accès à la justice. Ils devraient ainsi tenir compte des moyens limités de leurs clients et de la nature de leur dossier et élaborer des moyens proportionnés d'arriver à un résultat juste et équitable.

[33] Une demande complexe peut comporter un dossier volumineux et exiger un investissement important en temps et en argent. Toutefois, la proportionnalité est forcément de nature comparative; même les procédures lentes et coûteuses peuvent s'avérer proportionnées lorsqu'elles constituent la solution la plus rapide et la plus efficace. La question est de savoir si les frais et les délais additionnels occasionnés par la recherche des faits lors du procès sont essentiels à un processus décisionnel juste et équitable.

B. Requêtes en jugement sommaire

[34] La requête en jugement sommaire constitue un outil important pour faciliter l'accès à la justice parce qu'elle peut offrir une solution de rechange au procès complet plus abordable et plus rapide que celui-ci. À l'exception du Québec, toutes les provinces prévoient dans leurs règles de procédure civile respectives des dispositions relatives au jugement sommaire[4]. En règle générale, le tribunal peut rendre un jugement sommaire si aucune véritable question litigieuse ne requiert un procès.

[35] La règle 20 énonce la procédure de jugement sommaire à suivre en Ontario; une partie peut demander, par voie de requête, un jugement sommaire accueillant ou rejetant en totalité ou en partie la demande. Bien que la règle 20 de l'Ontario

4 Le Québec dispose d'un mécanisme procédural pour écarter sommairement les demandes abusives : voir les art. 54.1 et suiv. du Code de procédure civile. Bien qu'il ait une portée plus circonscrite à première vue, ce mécanisme a été assimilé au jugement sommaire : voir Bal Global Finance Canada Corp. c. Aliments Breton (Canada) inc., 2010 QCCS 325 (CanLII). De plus, selon le par. 165(4) du Code, le défendeur peut solliciter le rejet de l'action si la demande « n'est pas fondée en droit ».

CITATION: Lounds v. Lounds; MacIsaac v. Lounds, 2024 ONSC 2010
COURT FILE NO.: CV-15-6241
CV-15-6178
DATE: 2024/04/05

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE – ONTARIO (North Bay)

BETWEEN: DARRELL MacISAAC and LYNN CONNOR, Plaintiffs

AND:

HARRY LOUNDS and LYNDA LOUNDS, Defendants

AND:

BETWEEN: LYNDA LOUNDS, Plaintiff

AND:

HARRY LOUNDS, Defendant

BEFORE: Justice J.S. Richard

COUNSEL: Michael Switzer and Mikolaj Grodzki, for the Plaintiffs, Darrell MacIsaac and Lynn Connor (CV-15-6241)
Sandi Smith, for the Defendants Harry Lounds and Lynda Lounds (CV-15-6241)
Sonam Sapra, for the Plaintiff Lynda Lounds (CV-15-6178)
Sandi Smith, for the Defendant Harry Lounds (CV-15-6178)

MOTION TO STRIKE JURY NOTICE – REASONS FOR DECISION

[1] Two actions arose out of a motor vehicle accident that occurred on January 27, 2014: CV-15-6241 (the "Main Action") and CV-15-6178 (the "Companion Action"). In May 2017, the Honourable Justice M.G. Ellies ordered that these two actions be tried together or one immediately after the other, or as otherwise directed by the trial judge.

[2] Trial dates have been fixed commencing on September 9, 2024, with a jury, for a maximum of six weeks. Liability and damages continue to be live issues in both actions.

[3] The Plaintiffs in the Main Action, Darrell MacIsaac and Lynn Connor, bring a motion to strike a jury notice on the basis that it will be impossible for these actions, or even just one of them, to be completed in 6 weeks with a jury. They argue that for this reason it should be converted to a judge-alone trial.

[4] The Defendants oppose the motion stating that leave should not be granted to bring this motion. Alternatively, they argue that if leave is granted, the motion should be denied on the basis that the Plaintiffs' arguments are entirely speculative, that this motion is premature, and that there is insufficient evidence to support the Plaintiffs' position. According to the Defendants, justice would be better served by a "wait and see" approach when there will be a higher degree of certainty related to the operation of the civil courts and the issues in dispute have been trial-managed.

[5] The Plaintiff in the Companion Action takes no position in this motion to strike the jury notice.

Facts

[6] The highlights of the procedural history following the motor vehicle accident of January 27, 2014, are as follows:

- 2015: The two actions are commenced. Defendants file Jury Notice.
- 2017: Justice Ellies orders that both actions will be tried together, or one immediately following the other, unless otherwise directed by the trial judge;
- February 2018: The Trial Record is filed. The court asks parties and counsel for trial availability;
- December 2019: Regional Senior Justice Ellies, orders that "these actions will be tried one after the other, with the MacIsaac action proceeding first";
- September 2021: During one of multiple assignment courts attended by counsel, Regional Senior Justice Ellies advises that the North Bay jurisdiction has no jury sittings available to accommodate these matters. The transcript, entered into evidence, highlights Regional Senior Justice Ellies' comments: it's easier for us to set judge-alone dates than jury trial dates, because we don't have to fit a particular sitting, and we can fit particular sittings even with judge-alone matters when we have enough judges, but the problem is I don't have enough judges to just plug it into one of the sittings next year.
- January 2023: Trial dates are fixed commencing September 9, 2024, for an absolute maximum of 6 weeks, for both actions.
- May 2023: Plaintiffs in Main Action file their Motion Record for this motion that includes a supporting affidavit of Mikolaj T. Grodzki dated May 23, 2023, indicating "To date, the court has been unable to accommodate a jury trial because the trial is estimated to last ten (10) weeks with the companion action expected to be of similar duration. The delay has been due to the COVID-19 pandemic and, subsequent to same, the limited judicial resources in the judicial region which makes the scheduling of a ten-week jury trial impossible."

- May 29, 2023: I endorse that there are no long motion dates available to hear this motion to strike the jury notice in 2023, and the matters were returnable to September 2023 to set a date for this hearing in 2024.
- April 2024: This motion to strike the jury notice is finally heard.

[7] It should also be noted that these two matters, being ready for trial since 2018, were pre-tried three times, and have been in assignment court multiple times.

Issues

[8] These are the issues before the court at this time:

1. Should leave be granted to the Plaintiffs in the Main Action allowing them to bring this motion?
2. If so, should the jury notice of October 30, 2015, be struck thereby converting the Main Action (CV-15-6241) trial to a judge-alone trial?

Analysis

Leave to bring this motion

[9] Leave sought is governed by Rule 48.04(1):

> ... a party who has set an action down for trial shall not initiate or continue any motion or form of discovery without leave of the court.

[10] The Defendants argue that the motion to strike the jury is premature given the importance of the right to a jury trial. They urge, furthermore, that the Court ought to be prudent and apply the "wait and see approach", leaving the decision to strike the jury to the trial judge. They further argue that there is only speculation before the court, not evidence, with respect to estimated trial time, and since the matters are already set down for trial by jury for six weeks, they ought to proceed.

[11] The Plaintiffs, of course, argue the opposite and urge the court to draw on the court's experience to conclude that completing these trials, or even just one of them, within six weeks is a forgone impossibility. For this reason, they argue, their motion cannot be said to be premature.

[12] As was summarized recently by the Honourable Madam Justice A.A. Casullo in Byard v. Reid, 2023 ONSC 5146, at para 21:

> There are two lines of authority with respect to the proper test for granting leave to bring a motion after an action has been set down for trial. As the Court of Appeal set out in Horani (Litigation Guardian of) v. Manulife Financial Corp., 2023 ONCA 51, [2023] O.J. No. 228 at paras. 17-19:
>
> > Some courts have required the moving party to show "a substantial or unexpected change in circumstances such that a refusal to make an order under Section 48.04(1) would be manifestly unjust": see, Hill v. Ortho Pharmaceutical (Canada) Ltd., [1992] O.J. No. 1740, 11 C.P.C. (3d) 236 (Gen. Div.); for cases adopting Hill, see LML Investments Inc. v Choi (2007), 85 O.R. (3d) 351 (S.C.), at para. 10; Jetport v Jones Brown

> Inc., 2013 ONSC 2740, 115 O.R. (3d) 772, at paras. 68, 70 and 71; Lugen Corporation v Starbucks Coffee Canada Inc., 2014 ONSC 7141, at paras. 12, 30, 31; Denis v Lalonde, 2016 ONSC 5960, at para. 11; Secure Solutions Inc. v. Smiths Detection Toronto Ltd., 2017 ONSC 2401, at paras. 42-46.
>
> Others have determined that leave be granted if the moving party can demonstrate that "the interlocutory step is necessary in the interests of justice" even in the absence of a substantial or unexpected change in circumstances: see, A.G.C. Mechanical Structural Security Inc. v. Rizzo, 2013 ONSC 1316 (CanLII), at paras. 21-23; BNL Entertainment Inc. v. Ricketts, 2015 ONSC 1737, 126, O.R. (3d) 154 (Mast.), at paras. 12, 14; Fruitland Juices Inc. v. Custom Farm Service Inc. et al., 2012 ONSC 4902, at para. 28; and Cromb v. Bouwmeester, 2014 ONSC 5318, at para. 35.
>
> In yet other cases, courts have considered both tests and determined that they need not weigh in on the prevailing approach as the moving party could not meet the bar even under the broader "interest of justice" test: see for instance, Alofs v. Blake, Cassels & Graydon LLP, 2017 ONSC 950, at paras. 22-23; Chokler v. FCA Canada Inc. 2017, ONSC 4494, at para. 13.

[13] In Byard, v. Reid, supra, leave to bring the motion to strike was denied. Justice Casullo concluded that there was no evidence before the court to explain the delay in bringing the motion to strike the jury notice. Justice Casullo further explained that counsel for the moving party argued that “lawyers are entitled to change their litigation strategy,” and that the responding party had not been advised in advance of scheduling court that the Plaintiff intended to strike the jury notice. Finally, in her reasons, Justice Casullo concluded that the moving party had not met the bar under the interest of justice test.

[14] In this case, there is affidavit evidence before the court explaining the delay in bringing this motion, as well as assignment court transcripts and court endorsements from as recently as 2023, setting an absolute maximum of six weeks, on the court’s own initiative, for trial sitting time for these cases due to limits on judicial resources in the region. In my view, the evidence meets both tests for leave to be granted under Rule 48.

[15] First, the pandemic imposed an unprecedented strain on court operations that were already backlogged, and it was not until 2023 that the parties were informed that they would be limited to 6 weeks for a jury trial, or both. I find that bringing this motion only a few months later does not constitute a delay.

[16] Secondly, even if one could have foreseen this unprecedented strain on court operations, these matters are already 9 years old, with the accident already well past its 10th anniversary. It is unequivocally clear that in these circumstances, this interlocutory step is just.

[17] Leave to bring the motion to strike the jury notice is, therefore, granted.

Should the jury notice be struck?

[18] Yes. Ideally, there would be no time constraints and limitations on judicial resources. It is clear to the court, based on the evidence presented, that this motion is not being brought as a change in legal strategy, but rather, as a means to ensure that the Main Action proceeds, that it proceed efficiently, and that it at least have an opportunity to be completed, without having to strike the jury notice midway through the trial if and when it becomes clear that completing it with a jury will be impossible, as was suggested by the Defence.

[19] The Plaintiff, Darrell MacIsaac, claims he sustained serious and permanent orthopaedic, psychological and cognitive impairments. He claims compensatory damages, including general damages, damages for income loss, damages for future loss of income, damages for costs of future care, and damages for home maintenance and housekeeping.

[20] The Defendants have thus far not made any payments to the Plaintiffs, and liability continues to be a live issue. The Plaintiffs' evidence in support of this motion includes a list of 25 witnesses they intend on calling, all of whom are reasonably necessary in this set of facts. It also includes a reasonable and detailed breakdown of estimated days required for a jury trial, which amounts to 8 to 9 weeks for the first trial. All of this points to not only a possibility, but in fact to a likelihood, that the Main Action, the MacIsaac trial, with a jury, will take much more than the allotted six weeks.

[21] The test applicable for a motion to strike a Jury notice under Rule 47.02(2) is whether justice to the parties would be better served by dismissing or retaining the jury. (See Cowles v. Balac, 2006 ONCA 34916 at para. 28). The object of a civil trial is to provide justice between the parties, and therefore neither party should have an unfettered right to determine the mode of trial. (Cowles v. Balac, supra, at para. 71).

[22] In Louis v. Poitras, 2021 ONCA 49, the Court of Appeal addressed the "unprecedented crisis" and the "overwhelm" of our civil justice system requiring judges "to respond to local conditions to ensure the timely delivery of justice" as a result of the pandemic. At para. 15, moreover, the Court of Appeal emphasized that "while a court should not interfere with the right to a jury trial in a civil case without just cause or compelling reasons, a judge considering a motion to strike a jury notice has broad discretion to determine the mode of trial." The pandemic restrictions may have been lifted, and the pandemic may be considered "over", but its effects on our courts persist and will continue to do so for some time.

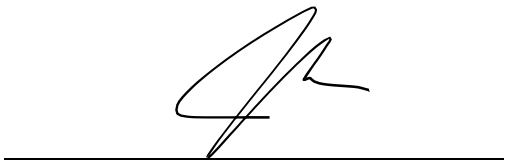
[23] At the time of the accident, the Plaintiff, Darrell MacIsaac, was 54 years old and had significant experience as a sales representative for a pharmaceutical company. He is now 65 years old and relying on CPP and old age security for income. The Plaintiffs' claim alleges that Mr. MacIsaac has been totally and permanently disabled as a result of the accident. The events in question are 10 years old. As time goes on, witnesses will become less reliable, and the potential recovery for loss of income erodes due to s.267.5 of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1990, c.I.8. The matters need to proceed, and to commence a trial with a jury knowing that the jury will almost certainly have to be dismissed partly though the trial because of time constraints is a waste of our already limited resources, and unnecessarily disrupts the lives and livelihood of jurors.

[24] The Defendants argue that this motion is premature and that the court ought to adopt a "wait and see" approach, as encouraged by our case law. With respect, the parties have been "waiting and seeing" since 2018, and it would be unjust to continue to do so.

Order

[25] Simply put, North Bay cannot accommodate a jury trial of this duration and complexity, let alone two of them. The parties have already been prejudiced enough by the age of the case. It is not only in the interest of justice to strike the jury notice, at this point, it has become necessary.

[26] For reasons already mentioned, the motion to strike the jury notice of October 30, 2015, is granted, and the trial of action CV-15-6241 shall proceed by judge alone on September 9, 2024. If the parties are unable to agree on costs for this motion, Darrell MacIsaac and Lynn Connor may submit a bill of costs within 30 days. All parties may file cost submissions, not exceeding 3 pages, double-spaced, within 30 days.



Justice J.S. Richard

MediaQMI inc. Appellant

v.

Magdi Kamel and Centre intégré universitaire de santé et de services sociaux de l'Ouest-de-l'Île-de-Montréal Respondents

and

Fédération professionnelle des journalistes du Québec,
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation,
La Presse Inc. and
Ad IDEM/Canadian Media Lawyer Association Interveners

Indexed as: MediaQMI inc. v. Kamel

2021 SCC 23

File No.: 38755.

2020: November 12; 2021: May 28.

Present: Wagner C.J. and Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Côté, Brown, Rowe, Martin and Kasirer JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL OF QUEBEC

Civil procedure — Openness of court proceedings — Right to access court record — Discontinuance — Retrieval of exhibits — Public body bringing action against former manager alleging misappropriation of public funds — Newspaper publishing company filing motion for access to sealed exhibits in court record — Court authorizing retrieval of exhibits because of discontinuance filed by public body before motion heard — Whether Superior Court judge was obliged to decide application for access to court record before authorizing retrieval of exhibits — Code of Civil Procedure, CQLR, c. C-25.01, arts. 11, 108.

On October 6, 2016, the Centre intégré universitaire de santé et de services sociaux de l'Ouest-de-l'Île-de-Montréal ("CIUSSS") brought a legal action against a former manager, alleging misappropriation of public

MédiaQMI inc. Appelante

c.

Magdi Kamel et Centre intégré universitaire de santé et de services sociaux de l'Ouest-de-l'Île-de-Montréal Intimés

et

Fédération professionnelle des journalistes du Québec,
Société Radio-Canada,
La Presse Inc. et
Ad IDEM/Canadian Media Lawyer Association Intervenantes

Répertorié : MédiaQMI inc. c. Kamel

2021 CSC 23

N° du greffe : 38755.

2020 : 12 novembre; 2021 : 28 mai.

Présents : Le juge en chef Wagner et les juges Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Côté, Brown, Rowe, Martin et Kasirer.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DU QUÉBEC

Procédure civile — Publicité des débats judiciaires — Droit d'accès au dossier du tribunal — Désistement — Retrait des pièces — Action intentée par un organisme public contre un ancien cadre alléguant le détournement de fonds publics — Requête sollicitant l'accès aux pièces se trouvant sous scellés au dossier du tribunal déposée par une entreprise de publication de journaux — Retrait des pièces autorisé par le tribunal en raison du désistement de l'organisme public avant l'audition de la requête — Le juge de première instance avait-il l'obligation de trancher la demande d'accès au dossier du tribunal avant d'autoriser le retrait des pièces? — Code de procédure civile, RLRQ, c. C-25.01, art. 11, 108.

Le 6 octobre 2016, le Centre intégré universitaire de santé et de services sociaux de l'Ouest-de-l'Île-de-Montréal (« CIUSSS ») a entrepris une action en justice contre un ancien cadre, alléguant un détournement de funds. The action was accompanied by an application for a Norwich order to obtain the identity of the holder of the four bank accounts to which the money had allegedly been diverted. On October 7, 2016, the Superior Court made the Norwich order and ordered that the entire record be sealed, including the four exhibits filed by the CIUSSS in support of its allegations. On March 29, 2017, MediaQMI, a newspaper publishing company, filed a motion to unseal based on art. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure ("C.C.P.") and s. 23 of the Charter of human rights and freedoms ("Quebec Charter") in order to have access to the court record, including the exhibits that might be in it. The hearing of the motion, scheduled for April 5, 2017, was postponed to April 25, 2017. In the meantime, on April 19, 2017, the CIUSSS discontinued its legal action. It tried to retrieve the exhibits it had filed, but the staff of the court office could not find them. When the motion was heard on April 25, the CIUSSS made an oral request to retrieve the exhibits filed in the court record. MediaQMI opposed that request.

The Superior Court ordered that the court record be unsealed based on the test set out in Dagenais v. Canadian Broadcasting Corp., [1994] 3 S.C.R. 835, and R. v. Mentuck, 2001 SCC 76, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 442, finding that the evidence was insufficient to depart from the principle of open court proceedings. However, it granted the request to retrieve the exhibits made by the CIUSSS, in accordance with art. 108 C.C.P., because of the discontinuance that had terminated the proceeding. The day after the judgment was rendered, the CIUSSS retrieved its exhibits. The Court of Appeal dismissed MediaQMI's appeal from the conclusion relating to the retrieval of exhibits.

Held (Wagner C.J. and Rowe, Martin and Kasirer JJ. dissenting): The appeal should be dismissed.

Per Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Côté and Brown JJ.: MediaQMI cannot obtain a copy of the exhibits that were in the Superior Court's record at the time its motion was filed. The right to have access to court records set out in art. 11 C.C.P. does not extend beyond what is in these records at the time they are consulted. Once the parties retrieve their exhibits at the end of a proceeding in accordance with art. 108 C.C.P., members of the public will still be able to consult the record but will no longer have access to the exhibits that have been removed from it.

Article 11 C.C.P., which sets out the principle of open proceedings, does not confer a specific right to access fonds publics. L'action était assortie d'une demande d'ordonnance de type Norwich destinée à obtenir l'identité du détenteur des quatre comptes bancaires au profit desquels les sommes d'argent auraient été détournées. Le 7 octobre 2016, la Cour supérieure a rendu l'ordonnance de type Norwich et ordonné la mise sous scellés de l'ensemble du dossier, dont les quatre pièces déposées par le CIUSSS au soutien de ses allégations. MédiaQMI, une entreprise de publication de journaux, a déposé le 29 mars 2017 une requête pour mettre fin aux scellés fondée sur l'art. 11 du Code de procédure civile (« C.p.c. ») et l'art. 23 de la Charte des droits et libertés de la personne (« Charte québécoise ») dans le but de prendre connaissance du dossier du tribunal, y compris les pièces qui pouvaient s'y trouver. L'audition de la requête, prévue pour le 5 avril 2017, a été remise au 25 avril 2017. Entre-temps, le 19 avril 2017, le CIUSSS s'est désisté de son action en justice. Il a tenté de reprendre possession des pièces qu'il avait déposées, mais le personnel du greffe n'a pas réussi à les retrouver. Lors de l'audition de la requête le 25 avril, le CIUSSS a formulé une demande verbale afin de reprendre possession des pièces déposées au dossier du tribunal. MédiaQMI s'est opposée à cette demande.

La Cour supérieure a ordonné la levée des scellés suivant le test énoncé dans les arrêts Dagenais c. Société Radio-Canada, [1994] 3 R.C.S. 835, et R. c. Mentuck, 2001 CSC 76, [2001] 3 R.C.S. 442, au motif que la preuve était insuffisante pour déroger au principe du caractère public des débats judiciaires. Elle a toutefois autorisé la demande de retrait des pièces formulée par le CIUSSS, conformément à l'art. 108 C.p.c., en raison du désistement ayant mis fin à l'instance. Le lendemain du prononcé du jugement, le CIUSSS a repris possession de ses pièces. La Cour d'appel a rejeté l'appel de MédiaQMI formulé à l'encontre de la conclusion relative au retrait des pièces.

Arrêt (le juge en chef Wagner et les juges Rowe, Martin et Kasirer sont dissidents): Le pourvoi est rejeté.

Les juges Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Côté et Brown : MédiaQMI ne peut obtenir une copie des pièces qui se trouvaient au dossier de la Cour supérieure au moment du dépôt de sa requête. Le droit de prendre connaissance des dossiers des tribunaux énoncé à l'art. 11 C.p.c. ne s'étend pas au-delà de ce qui se trouve dans ces dossiers au moment de la consultation. Lorsqu'à la fin d'une instance les parties reprennent possession de leurs pièces conformément à l'art. 108 C.p.c., les membres du public pourront toujours consulter le dossier mais n'auront plus accès aux pièces qui en ont été retirées.

L'article 11 C.p.c., qui énonce le principe de la publicité des débats, ne confère pas un droit spécifique d'accéder exhibits that were once part of court records. That provision gives access to a court record whose content is governed in part by art. 108 C.C.P. Thus, the retrieval of exhibits from a record in the circumstances described in art. 108 C.C.P., when an application to consult the record is pending, does not infringe a rule of public order; it simply constitutes the exercise of a right provided for in the Code of Civil Procedure. The position that the scope of the principle of open proceedings should be interpreted in light of the charters must be rejected. Whatever protection that principle may have under the charters, the legislature remains free to fix the scope of the principle in the rules it enacts, and it is not the role of the courts to do so in its place. In the civil law context, creating law remains the legislature's prerogative. Accordingly, in the absence of a constitutional challenge, the rules clearly stated in the Code of Civil Procedure are what apply. Moreover, except where there is ambiguity that persists even though the contextual approach to interpretation has been applied, courts do not have to interpret statutes so as to make them consistent with the principles and values of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This approach also accords with the interpretative provisions of the Quebec Charter.

The new Code of Civil Procedure that came into force in 2016 sets out the general scheme relating to the public nature of civil justice in arts. 11 to 16 and establishes two distinct rights in art. 11: the right to attend court hearings wherever they are held and the right to have access to court records and entries in the registers of the courts. Article 108 C.C.P. makes explicit reference to that general scheme; this is clear both from the words used by the legislature and from the holistic reading of the Code of Civil Procedure called for by its preliminary provision and by s. 41.1 of Quebec's Interpretation Act. It therefore seems to be beyond question that art. 108 C.C.P. concerns the content of the records contemplated in arts. 11 to 16 C.C.P., that is, the records that are subject to a court's supervisory power and control. That provision thus governs the keeping, retrieval and preservation of the exhibits filed in the record to which art. 11 C.C.P. gives access.

The scope of art. 108 para. 2 C.C.P. cannot be limited on the basis of passages from parliamentary debates suggesting that the legislature's objective was to reduce the costs associated with the judicial system. Arguments from parliamentary history cannot result in the refusal to apply a clear rule, as doing so would compromise the reader's right to rely on the letter of the law interpreted in its context. Courts do not have to interpret or implement the objective underlying a legislative scheme or provision, aux pièces qui ont un jour fait partie des dossiers des tribunaux. Cette disposition donne accès au dossier du tribunal dont le contenu est en partie régi par l'art. 108 C.p.c. Ainsi, le fait de retirer des pièces du dossier dans les circonstances décrites à l'art. 108 C.p.c., alors qu'une demande de consultation du dossier est pendante, ne constitue pas une atteinte à une règle d'ordre public; ce n'est que l'exercice d'un droit prévu par le Code de procédure civile. La position selon laquelle la portée du principe de la publicité des débats devrait s'interpréter à la lumière des chartes doit être rejetée. Quelle que soit la protection que les chartes accordent à ce principe, le législateur demeure libre d'en fixer la portée dans les règles qu'il édicte et il n'appartient pas aux tribunaux de le faire à sa place. En contexte civiliste, la création de règles de droit demeure la prérogative du législateur, de telle sorte qu'en l'absence de contestation constitutionnelle, ce sont les règles clairement énoncées au Code de procédure civile qui s'appliquent. En outre, en l'absence d'ambiguïté qui persisterait malgré l'application de la méthode d'interprétation contextuelle, les tribunaux n'ont pas à interpréter les lois de façon à les rendre conformes aux principes et valeurs de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés. Cette approche s'accorde par ailleurs avec les dispositions interprétatives de la Charte québécoise.

Le nouveau Code de procédure civile, entré en vigueur en 2016, prévoit, à ses art. 11 à 16, le régime général de la publicité de la justice civile et édicte, à l'art. 11, deux droits distincts : le droit d'assister aux audiences des tribunaux où qu'elles se tiennent et le droit de prendre connaissance des dossiers et des inscriptions aux registres des tribunaux. L'article 108 C.p.c. se réfère explicitement à ce régime général; cela ressort tout autant des termes employés par le législateur que de la lecture holistique du Code de procédure civile préconisée par sa disposition préliminaire et par l'art. 41.1 de la Loi d'interprétation québécoise. Ainsi, il paraît indiscutable que l'art. 108 C.p.c. concerne le contenu des dossiers dont il est question aux art. 11 à 16 C.p.c., à savoir ceux dont le tribunal a la surveillance et le contrôle. Cette disposition régit donc le maintien, le retrait et la conservation des pièces produites au dossier auquel l'art. 11 C.p.c. donne accès.

On ne saurait restreindre la portée de l'art. 108, al. 2 C.p.c. en s'appuyant sur des passages des débats parlementaires d'après lesquels l'objectif du législateur aurait été de réduire les coûts associés au système judiciaire. Le recours aux travaux préparatoires ne saurait servir à justifier de ne pas appliquer une règle claire, minant ainsi la confiance que le lecteur doit pouvoir mettre dans le libellé du texte interprété à la lumière de son contexte. Les tribunaux n'ont pas à interpréter ni à appliquer l'objectif sous-jacent à une but must rather interpret and apply the text through which the legislature seeks to achieve that objective.

In this case, the text of art. 108 para. 2 C.C.P. authorizes the parties to retrieve their exhibits by consent in the course of a proceeding, and requires them to retrieve their exhibits once the proceeding has ended. It reiterates, with some modifications, the two rules set out in arts. 83 and 331.9 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, which were incorporated when the general scheme for the communication and filing of exhibits was reformed. That 1994 reform was designed to encourage parties to exchange information with regard to their respective evidence and to communicate their exhibits to one another directly, without first filing them in the court record. It contemplated that exhibits would be filed and kept on the basis of usefulness and necessity. As the successor of that scheme, art. 108 C.C.P. revises and unifies the rules on the keeping, retrieval and preservation of the exhibits filed in court records. Insofar as it governs the content of those records, it has a direct impact on the information to which the public can have access under art. 11 C.C.P.

Article 11 C.C.P. gives the public the right to have access to court records, subject to exceptions for confidential information. This right applies during and after a proceeding. Even after the proceeding has ended, the exhibits can be consulted as long as they remain in the record, but once the parties retrieve them or the court clerk destroys them, they cease to be part of the record to which the public can have access. This conclusion is in keeping with the intention expressed by the legislature through the words of arts. 11 and 108 C.C.P., with the legislative objectives underlying those provisions, with the general scheme of the Code of Civil Procedure and with civil law principles of interpretation. It also avoids giving the principle that civil justice is public set out in art. 11 C.C.P. a scope that might distort that principle, just as it avoids undermining other important objectives of the Code of Civil Procedure, such as the prevention and resolution of disputes. The objective of facilitating the resolution of disputes would surely be undermined if parties who wished to come to an agreement after taking a matter to court could not bring the documents they had filed with the court back into the private sphere.

Because arts. 11 and 108 C.C.P. do not give rise to any judicial discretion, the test from Dagenais and Mentuck should not be applied in this case. That test establishes that the discretion to make an order limiting the openness disposition ou à un régime législatif, mais plutôt le texte au moyen duquel le législateur entend atteindre cet objectif.

En l'occurrence, le texte de l'art. 108, al. 2 C.p.c. autorise les parties à retirer leurs pièces de façon consensuelle en cours d'instance et les oblige à les récupérer une fois l'instance terminée. Il reprend, à quelques modifications près, les deux règles énoncées aux art. 83 et 331.9 de l'ancien Code de procédure civile intégrées à l'occasion d'une réforme relative au régime général de la communication et de la production de pièces. Cette réforme, survenue en 1994, visait à encourager les parties à s'échanger les informations en lien avec leurs preuves respectives et à se communiquer directement leurs pièces sans passer par la production au dossier du tribunal. Elle envisageait la production et la conservation des pièces sous l'angle de l'utilité et de la nécessité. Héritier de ce régime, l'art. 108 C.p.c. refond et unifie les règles liées au maintien, au retrait et à la conservation des pièces produites au dossier du tribunal. Dans la mesure où il régit le contenu de ces dossiers, il entraîne des conséquences immédiates sur les informations dont le public peut prendre connaissance en vertu de l'art. 11 C.p.c.

L'article 11 C.p.c. confère au public le droit de prendre connaissance des dossiers du tribunal, sous réserve des exceptions relatives à la confidentialité. Ce droit s'applique pendant et après l'instance. Même après la fin de l'instance, les pièces peuvent être consultées tant qu'elles restent au dossier, mais dès que les parties les reprennent ou que le greffier les détruit, elles cessent de faire partie du dossier dont le public peut prendre connaissance. Cette conclusion s'accorde avec l'intention du législateur exprimée dans le texte des art. 11 et 108 C.p.c., avec les objectifs législatifs sous-jacents à ces dispositions, avec l'économie générale du Code de procédure civile et avec les principes d'interprétation civilistes. Elle évite par ailleurs de donner au principe de la publicité de la justice civile énoncé à l'art. 11 C.p.c. une étendue susceptible de le dénaturer, de même qu'elle évite de compromettre d'autres objectifs importants visés par le Code de procédure civile comme la prévention et le règlement des différends. En effet, l'objectif de favoriser le règlement des différends serait assurément compromis si les parties désireuses de s'entendre après avoir saisi les tribunaux ne pouvaient rapatrier dans la sphère privée les documents qu'elles y ont produits.

Comme les art. 11 et 108 C.p.c. ne font intervenir aucune discrétion judiciaire, il n'y a pas lieu d'appliquer le test des arrêts Dagenais et Mentuck en l'espèce. En effet, ce test établit que le pouvoir discrétionnaire de rendre une of proceedings must be exercised within the boundaries set by the Canadian Charter, having regard to rights and interests that pull in opposite directions. But where the law fixes the scope of the principle of open proceedings without conferring any discretion on judges, there is no reason to seek a correct balance between competing rights and interests that is within the boundaries set by the Canadian Charter.

In this case, MediaQMI's right under art. 11 C.C.P. to have access to court records was never compromised. This was because the sealing order that had kept the record confidential until then came to an end when the Superior Court's judgment was rendered. MediaQMI could have consulted the exhibits in issue if it had applied for access to the record during the time when the exhibits were available, since no conservatory measure had been sought by the parties. It did not do so. Only the terms of access to the court record and the content of that record changed between the filing of the motion to unseal and the retrieval of the exhibits. However, that situation was beyond the reach of art. 11 because it fell within art. 108 C.C.P. The fact that MediaQMI filed its motion under art. 11 C.C.P. prior to the CIUSSS's discontinuance is not determinative and did not give it any acquired right to argue that motion. Nor did it give MediaQMI any right to require that the content of the court record remain unchanged until the motion was decided.

The legal consequence that art. 213 C.C.P. attaches to a discontinuance is the termination of the proceeding. Yet the termination of the proceeding entitles the parties to retrieve their exhibits in accordance with art. 108 C.C.P. In this case, if MediaQMI wanted to prevent the exercise of that power, it had to contest the discontinuance extinguishing the proceeding. It did not do so. There was therefore nothing that prohibited the CIUSSS from retrieving its exhibits.

Per Wagner C.J. and Rowe, Martin and Kasirer JJ. (dissenting): The appeal should be allowed. The case should be remanded to the Superior Court so that it can decide the application for access to the exhibits on the basis of the analytical framework established in Dagenais and Mentuck, which was affirmed for civil proceedings in Sierra Club of Canada v. Canada (Minister of Finance), 2002 SCC 41, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 52, and make the orders it considers necessary.

The parties' control over the course of their case is a guiding principle set out in art. 19 C.C.P. This principle ordonnance limitant la publicité des débats doit être exercé dans les limites prescrites par la Charte canadienne en tenant compte des droits et des intérêts qui militent dans des directions opposées. Or, lorsque la loi fixe la portée d'application du principe de publicité sans attribuer de discrétion au juge, la recherche d'un juste équilibre entre des droits et intérêts opposés qui respecterait les limites prescrites par la Charte canadienne n'a aucune raison d'être.

En l'espèce, le droit reconnu à MédiaQMI par l'art. 11 du C.p.c. de prendre connaissance des dossiers des tribunaux n'a jamais été compromis. En effet, l'ordonnance de mise sous scellés qui avait assuré jusque-là la confidentialité du dossier a pris fin avec le prononcé du jugement de première instance. MédiaQMI aurait pu consulter les pièces litigieuses si elle avait demandé à prendre connaissance du dossier pendant l'intervalle où elles étaient disponibles, puisqu'aucune mesure conservatoire n'avait été demandée par les parties. Elle ne l'a pas fait. Seules les modalités d'accès au dossier du tribunal et le contenu de ce dossier ont changé entre le dépôt de la requête pour mettre fin aux scellés et le retrait des pièces. Il s'agit là cependant d'une situation qui échappe à l'emprise de l'art. 11 puisqu'elle relève de l'art. 108 C.p.c. Le fait que MédiaQMI a déposé sa requête fondée sur l'art. 11 C.p.c. avant le désistement du CIUSSS n'est pas déterminant. Il ne lui confère aucun droit acquis à en débattre. De même, il ne lui accorde aucun droit d'exiger le maintien, de façon statique, du contenu du dossier judiciaire jusqu'à ce que la requête soit tranchée.

La conséquence juridique que l'art. 213 du C.p.c. attache au désistement, c'est la fin de l'instance. Or, la fin de l'instance habilite les parties à retirer leurs pièces suivant l'art. 108 C.p.c. En l'espèce, si MédiaQMI souhaitait prévenir l'exercice de cette faculté, elle devait contester le désistement qui emportait extinction de l'instance. Elle ne l'a pas fait. Dès lors, rien n'interdisait au CIUSSS de reprendre possession de ses pièces.

Le juge en chef Wagner et les juges Rowe, Martin et Kasirer (dissidents) : L'appel devrait être accueilli. Le dossier devrait être retourné à la Cour supérieure afin qu'elle tranche la demande d'accès aux pièces suivant le cadre d'analyse établi dans les arrêts Dagenais et Mentuck dont l'application en matière civile a été confirmée dans l'arrêt Sierra Club du Canada c. Canada (Ministre des Finances), 2002 CSC 41, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 522, et qu'elle rende les ordonnances qu'elle juge nécessaire.

La maîtrise par les parties de leur dossier est un principe directeur consacré à l'art. 19 C.p.c., qui englobe la extends to the parties' right to agree at any stage of the proceeding to settle their dispute or otherwise terminate the proceeding (para. 3). It does not allow them to override a judge's discretion to ensure compliance with the rule of public order arising from the principle of open proceedings, nor does it allow them to exercise their powers at the expense of the existing and legitimate interests of third persons in seeking the application of that rule. The fact is that when parties decide to have recourse to the civil justice system, which is a public service, they do so knowing that members of the public may exercise their fundamental right to information about court proceedings. The private resolution of a dispute alone cannot ipso facto supplant the principle of open proceedings when invoked in accordance with procedural rules while a proceeding is still under way. This is all the more true in a case in which a judge issued an order limiting the principle of open court proceedings as soon as the legal action was filed, as in this case.

The fundamental principle of open court proceedings, a hallmark of a free and democratic society, is affirmed in art. 11 C.C.P., which provides that anyone may attend court hearings and have access to court records. The public, and in particular the news media, have the interest required to seek the application of this principle. The legislature provides for two specific exceptions to this fundamental principle: first, where the law provides for in camera proceedings (art. 15 C.C.P.) or restricts access to court records (art. 16 C.C.P.), which is notably the case in family matters; second, by giving the court a discretion to make an exception to the fundamental principle of open proceedings if, in its opinion, public order or the protection of substantial and legitimate interests so requires (art. 12 C.C.P.). A court seized of an application to limit the openness of court proceedings must exercise its discretion in accordance with the analytical framework developed in Dagenais, Mentuck and Sierra Club, even if the application is unopposed.

The rules on discontinuance flow from the principle that the parties control the course of their case (art. 19 para. 3 C.C.P.). To be set up against the other parties, the unilateral discontinuance need only be notified to those parties in accordance with art. 213 C.C.P. However, the principle that the parties control the course of their case is subject to a qualification, developed and consistently applied by the courts: a discontinuance may not prejudice the rights of the other parties or of third persons, including the right to have an application filed prior to the discontinuance faculté des parties de choisir, à tout moment de l'instance, de régler leur litige ou de mettre autrement fin à l'instance (al. 3). Ce principe ne permet pas aux parties d'écarter le pouvoir discrétionnaire du juge de veiller au respect de la règle d'ordre public découlant du principe de la publicité des débats ou d'exercer leurs pouvoirs au détriment des intérêts nés et légitimes que possèdent des tiers d'en revendiquer l'application. En effet, lorsque les parties décident d'avoir recours à la justice civile, un service public, elles le font en sachant que le public peut exercer son droit fondamental à l'information concernant les procédures judiciaires. Le règlement d'un différend par voie privée ne peut à lui seul supplanter ipso facto le principe de la publicité des débats lorsque celui-ci est invoqué dans le respect des règles procédurales alors que l'instance est toujours en cours. Ceci est d'autant plus vrai dans le cadre d'un litige où, dès le dépôt du recours en justice, un juge a émis une ordonnance limitant le principe du caractère public des débats judiciaires, comme en l'espèce.

Le principe fondamental de la publicité des débats judiciaires, caractéristique d'une société libre et démocratique, est consacré à l'art. 11 C.p.c., qui prévoit que tous peuvent assister aux audiences des tribunaux et prendre connaissance des dossiers. Le public et, en particulier, les médias d'information, possèdent l'intérêt requis pour en revendiquer l'application. Le législateur prévoit deux exceptions précises à ce principe fondamental. Premièrement, lorsque la loi prévoit le huis clos (art. 15 C.p.c.) ou restreint l'accès aux dossiers (art. 16 C.p.c.), ce qui est notamment le cas en matière familiale. Deuxièmement, en accordant au tribunal un pouvoir discrétionnaire lui permettant de faire exception au principe fondamental de la publicité des débats s'il considère que l'ordre public ou la protection d'intérêts légitimes importants l'exigent (art. 12 C.p.c.). Le tribunal qui est saisi d'une demande visant à limiter la publicité des procédures judiciaires doit exercer son pouvoir discrétionnaire conformément au cadre d'analyse élaboré dans les arrêts Dagenais, Mentuck et Sierra Club, et ce, même si personne ne s'y oppose.

Le régime du désistement découle du principe voulant que les parties aient la maîtrise de leur dossier (art. 19 al. 3 C.p.c.). Pour être opposable aux autres parties, il suffit que le désistement unilatéral leur soit notifié aux termes de l'art. 213 C.p.c. Il existe cependant un tempérament au principe de la maîtrise par les parties de leur dossier, lequel a été développé et appliqué par une jurisprudence constante : le désistement ne peut porter préjudice aux droits des autres parties ou des tiers, y compris le droit de faire juger d'une demande antérieure au désistement.

decided. Because discontinuance constitutes a voluntary renunciation of a right or claim, it affects only the rights of the renouncing party, that is, the party that discontinues proceedings or waives a right or claim. A discontinuance may therefore be valid yet ineffective against the rights of third persons. It follows that the purpose or effect of a party's discontinuance cannot be to avoid a suit already brought against it.

If the discontinuance of a proceeding cannot be relied on at the expense of third persons' existing legitimate interests or contrary to the rules of public order, then parties cannot avail themselves of art. 108 para. 2 C.C.P. in order to remove exhibits from the record after an application has been made under art. 11 C.C.P. The control that the parties have over the course of their case must be exercised in compliance with the principles of civil procedure (art. 19 C.C.P.). The parties cannot displace a rule of public order, even by mutual consent. Applying the principle that the parties control the course of their case as if it were an end in itself would be contrary to Quebec jurisprudence and to the general scheme of the Code of Civil Procedure. It would also conflict with the well-established principle that the Code's provisions must be interpreted in harmony with the Quebec Charter and the general principles of law. Therefore, the principle that the parties control the course of the case could not adversely affect MediaQMI's existing and legitimate interests in seeking the application of the rule of public order requiring open court proceedings.

From the moment MediaQMI applied to unseal the record and access the exhibits, a new proceeding began, and it went beyond the strictly private interests of the parties to the principal litigation. The discontinuance filed following the application brought under art. 11 C.C.P. could not defeat that new proceeding, which was separate from the principal litigation and related to the proper functioning of the judicial institution, whose legitimacy depends on its openness and in part on media scrutiny. MediaQMI was thus seeking to play its role as a surrogate for the public and to inform readers of what was taking place in the courts, a crucial role in a context where it was alleged that fraud had been committed within a public body responsible for ensuring the proper functioning of regional health institutions. The court had to exercise the discretion conferred on it by art. 12 C.C.P. However, the discontinuance would have produced its full effects if MediaQMI had filed its application after the CIUSSS's discontinuance and had sought access to the exhibits when they were no longer in the record. Its appeal would have failed on that basis unless it challenged the constitutionality of art. 108 C.C.P.

Comme le désistement constitue une renonciation volontaire à un droit, à une prétention, ses effets se limitent aux droits du renonçant, soit la partie qui se désiste. Il peut donc être valide, sans être opposable aux droits des tiers. En conséquence, le désistement d'une partie ne peut avoir pour objet ou effet de lui permettre d'échapper à une demande déjà formulée contre elle.

Si un désistement d'instance ne peut être invoqué au préjudice des intérêts nés et légitimes des tiers et à l'encontre des règles d'ordre public, les parties ne peuvent se prévaloir de l'art. 108 al. 2 C.p.c. afin de retirer des pièces du dossier, à la suite d'une demande fondée sur l'art. 11 C.p.c. La maîtrise dont jouissent les parties à l'égard de leur dossier doit s'exercer dans le respect des principes de la procédure civile (art. 19 C.p.c.). Les parties ne peuvent écarter une règle d'ordre public, et ce, même par consentement mutuel. Appliquer le principe de la maîtrise du dossier comme s'il constituait une fin en soi serait non seulement contraire à la jurisprudence québécoise, mais irait également à l'encontre de l'économie générale du Code de procédure civile et du principe bien établi voulant qu'il faille interpréter ses dispositions en harmonie avec la Charte québécoise et les principes généraux du droit. Par conséquent, le principe de la maîtrise du dossier ne peut porter atteinte aux intérêts nés et légitimes de MédiaQMI de revendiquer l'application de la règle d'ordre public de la publicité des débats judiciaires.

Dès le moment où MédiaQMI a demandé la levée des scellés et l'accès aux pièces, un nouveau débat s'est engagé qui dépasse le strict intérêt privé des parties au litige principal. Le désistement produit à la suite de la demande déposée en vertu de l'art. 11 C.p.c. ne peut faire échec à ce nouveau débat, distinct du litige principal, qui porte sur le bon fonctionnement de l'institution judiciaire dont la légitimité dépend de sa transparence et en partie du regard des médias. MédiaQMI cherchait ainsi à jouer son rôle de suppléant du public et à informer les lecteurs des activités se déroulant devant les tribunaux, un rôle crucial dans un contexte d'allégations de fraude au sein d'un organisme public responsable d'assurer le bon fonctionnement des établissements de santé régionaux. Le tribunal devait exercer le pouvoir discrétionnaire qui lui est conféré par l'art. 12 C.p.c. Le désistement aurait toutefois produit ses pleins effets si MédiaQMI avait déposé sa demande après le désistement du CIUSSS et qu'elle avait demandé l'accès aux pièces alors que celles-ci ne se trouvaient plus au dossier. Son pourvoi aurait échoué sur cette base en l'absence de contestation de la validité constitutionnelle de l'art. 108 C.p.c.

Cases Cited

By Côté J.

Referred to: Dagenais v. Canadian Broadcasting Corp., [1994] 3 S.C.R. 835; R. v. Mentuck, 2001 SCC 76, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 442; Lac d'Amiante du Québec Ltée v. 2858-0702 Québec Inc., 2001 SCC 51, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 743; Cie Immobilière Viger Ltée v. Giguère Inc., [1977] 2 S.C.R. 67; Prud'homme v. Prud'homme, 2002 SCC 85, [2002] 4 S.C.R. 663; Quebec (Commission des droits de la personne et des droits de la jeunesse) v. Communauté urbaine de Montréal, 2004 SCC 30, [2004] 1 S.C.R. 789; Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership v. Rex, 2002 SCC 42, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 559; Pharmascience Inc. v. Binet, 2006 SCC 48, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 513; R. v. Clarke, 2014 SCC 28, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 612; Michel v. Graydon, 2020 SCC 24, [2020] 2 S.C.R. 763; Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27; Construction Gilles Paquette ltée v. Entreprises Végo ltée, [1997] 2 S.C.R. 299; Canadian National Railway Co. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2014 SCC 40, [2014] 2 S.C.R. 135; Canada 3000 Inc. (Re), 2006 SCC 24, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 865; Sun Indalex Finance, LLC v. United Steelworkers, 2013 SCC 6, [2013] 1 S.C.R. 271; TELUS Communications Inc. v. Wellman, 2019 SCC 19, [2019] 2 S.C.R. 144; R. v. Rafilovich, 2019 SCC 51; Imperial Oil v. Jacques, 2014 SCC 66, [2014] 3 S.C.R. 287; Vickery v. Nova Scotia Supreme Court (Prothonotary), [1991] 1 S.C.R. 671; Sable Offshore Energy Inc. v. Ameron International Corp., 2013 SCC 37, [2013] 2 S.C.R. 623; CTV Television Inc. v. Ontario Superior Court of Justice (Toronto Region) (2002), 59 O.R. (3d) 18; Hong v. Lavy, 2019 NSSC 271, 46 C.P.C. (8th) 327; Attorney General of Nova Scotia v. MacIntyre, [1982] 1 S.C.R. 175; Canadian Broadcasting Corp. v. New Brunswick (Attorney General), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 480; Sierra Club of Canada v. Canada (Minister of Finance), 2002 SCC 41, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 522; Canadian Broadcasting Corp. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2011 SCC 2, [2011] 1 S.C.R. 19; British Columbia (Attorney General) v. Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia, 2020 SCC 20, [2020] 2 S.C.R. 506; Tremblay v. Quebec (Commission des affaires sociales), [1992] 1 S.C.R. 952; R. v. Oakes, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103; Globe and Mail v. Canada (Attorney General), 2010 SCC 41, [2010] 2 S.C.R. 592; Named Person v. Vancouver Sun, 2007 SCC 43, [2007] 3 S.C.R. 253; Canadian Broadcasting Corp. v. The Queen, 2011 SCC 3, [2011] 1 S.C.R. 65; Bisaillon v. Concordia University, 2006 SCC 19, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 666; Classic Fabrics Corp. v. B. Rawe GMBH & Co., 2001 CanLII 7221; L'Espérance v. Atkins, [1956] B.R. 62; 175809 Canada inc. v. 2740478 Canada inc., 2000

Jurisprudence

Citée par la juge Côté

Arrêts mentionnés : Dagenais c. Société Radio-Canada, [1994] 3 R.C.S. 835; R. c. Mentuck, 2001 CSC 76, [2001] 3 R.C.S. 442; Lac d'Amiante du Québec Ltée c. 2858-0702 Québec Inc., 2001 CSC 51, [2001] 2 R.C.S. 743; Cie Immobilière Viger Ltée c. Giguère Inc., [1977] 2 R.C.S. 67; Prud'homme c. Prud'homme, 2002 CSC 85, [2002] 4 R.C.S. 663; Québec (Commission des droits de la personne et des droits de la jeunesse) c. Communauté urbaine de Montréal, 2004 CSC 30, [2004] 1 R.C.S. 789; Bell ExpressVu Limited Partnership c. Rex, 2002 CSC 42, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 559; Pharmascience inc. c. Binet, 2006 CSC 48, [2006] 2 R.C.S. 513; R. c. Clarke, 2014 CSC 28, [2014] 1 R.C.S. 612; Michel c. Graydon, 2020 CSC 24, [2020] 2 R.C.S. 763; Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 R.C.S. 27; Construction Gilles Paquette ltée c. Entreprises Végo ltée, [1997] 2 R.C.S. 299; Compagnie des chemins de fer nationaux du Canada c. Canada (Procureur général), 2014 CSC 40, [2014] 2 R.C.S. 135; Canada 3000 Inc. (Re), 2006 CSC 24, [2006] 1 R.C.S. 865; Sun Indalex Finance, LLC c. Syndicat des Métallos, 2013 CSC 6, [2013] 1 R.C.S. 271; TELUS Communications Inc. c. Wellman, 2019 CSC 19, [2019] 2 R.C.S. 144; R. c. Rafilovich, 2019 CSC 51; Pétrolière Impériale c. Jacques, 2014 CSC 66, [2014] 3 R.C.S. 287; Vickery c. Cour suprême de la Nouvelle-Écosse (Protonotaire), [1991] 1 R.C.S. 671; Sable Offshore Energy Inc. c. Ameron International Corp., 2013 CSC 37, [2013] 2 R.C.S. 623; CTV Television Inc. c. Ontario Superior Court of Justice (Toronto Region) (2002), 59 O.R. (3d) 18; Hong c. Lavy, 2019 NSSC 271, 46 C.P.C. (8th) 327; Procureur général de la Nouvelle-Écosse c. MacIntyre, [1982] 1 R.C.S. 175; Société Radio-Canada c. Nouveau-Brunswick (Procureur général), [1996] 3 R.C.S. 480; Sierra Club du Canada c. Canada (Ministre des Finances), 2002 CSC 41, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 522; Société Radio-Canada c. Canada (Procureur général), 2011 CSC 2, [2011] 1 R.C.S. 19; Colombie-Britannique (Procureur général) c. Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia, 2020 CSC 20, [2020] 2 R.C.S. 506; Tremblay c. Québec (Commission des affaires sociales), [1992] 1 R.C.S. 952; R. c. Oakes, [1986] 1 R.C.S. 103; Globe and Mail c. Canada (Procureur général), 2010 CSC 41, [2010] 2 R.C.S. 592; Personne désignée c. Vancouver Sun, 2007 CSC 43, [2007] 3 R.C.S. 253; Société Radio-Canada c. La Reine, 2011 CSC 3, [2011] 1 R.C.S. 65; Bisaillon c. Université Concordia, 2006 CSC 19, [2006] 1 R.C.S. 666; Classic Fabrics Corp. c. B. Rawe GMBH & Co., 2001 CanLII 7221; L'Espérance c. Atkins, [1956] B.R. 62; 175809 Canada inc. c. 2740478 Canada

CanLII 9254; Droit de la famille — 092038, 2009 QCCS 3822, [2009] R.D.F. 646.

By Wagner C.J. and Kasirer J. (dissenting)

Dagenais v. Canadian Broadcasting Corp., [1994] 3 S.C.R. 835; R. v. Mentuck, 2001 SCC 76, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 442; Sierra Club of Canada v. Canada (Minister of Finance), 2002 SCC 41, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 522; Charland v. Lessard, 2015 QCCA 14; Imperial Oil v. Jacques, 2014 SCC 66, [2014] 3 S.C.R. 287; Union Carbide Canada Inc. v. Bombardier Inc., 2014 SCC 35, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 800; Homans v. Gestion Paroi inc., 2017 QCCA 480; J.G. v. Nadeau, 2016 QCCA 167; Lac d'Amiante du Québec Ltée v. 2858-0702 Québec Inc., 2001 SCC 51, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 743; Globe and Mail v. Canada (Attorney General), 2010 SCC 41, [2010] 2 S.C.R. 592; Canada (Citizenship and Immigration) v. Harkat, 2014 SCC 37, [2014] 2 S.C.R. 33; B. (B.) v. Québec (Procureur général), [1998] R.J.Q. 317; Rosei v. Benesty, 2020 QCCS 1795; Marcovitz v. Bruker, 2005 QCCA 835, [2005] R.J.Q. 2482, rev'd on another point 2007 SCC 54, [2007] 3 S.C.R. 607; Sirius Services conseils en technologie de l'information inc. v. Boisvert, 2017 QCCA 518; Horic v. Nepveu, 2016 QCCS 3921; Edmonton Journal v. Alberta (Attorney General), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1326; Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555 (1980); 3834310 Canada Inc. v. R.C., 2004 CanLII 4122; Canadian Broadcasting Corp. v. The Queen, 2011 SCC 3, [2011] 1 S.C.R. 65; Canadian Broadcasting Corp. v. New Brunswick (Attorney General), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 480; Georgiadis v. Angelopoulos, 2008 QCCS 6890; Classic Fabrics Corp. v. B. Rawe GMBH & Co., 2001 CanLII 7221; 175809 Canada inc. v. 2740478 Canada inc., 2000 CanLII 9254; L'Espérance v. Atkins, [1956] B.R. 62; Graham-Albulet v. Albulet, [1977] C.A. 323; Barzelex Inc. v. M.E.C.S. International Inc. (1989), 29 Q.A.C. 63; Constructions Panthéon inc. v. Clinique Altermed inc., 2015 QCCA 50; Taran Furs (Mtl) inc. v. Tuac, local 501, 2005 CanLII 11669; 7006098 Canada inc. v. Sobeys Canada inc., 2020 QCCS 897; Berenbaum v. Berenbaum Reichson, 2014 QCCA 1630; Entreprises de béton Fern Leclerc Ltée v. Bourassa, [1990] R.D.J. 558; Droit de la famille — 092038, 2009 QCCS 3822, [2009] R.D.F. 646; Wetherall v. Macdonald (1903), 9 R. de J. 381; 9163-5771 Québec inc. v. Bonifier inc., 2017 QCCA 1316; Ditomene v. Syndicat des enseignants du Cégep de l'Outaouais (SECO), 2012 QCCA 1296; Byer v. Québec (Inspecteur général des institutions financières), [2000] R.L. 615; Fers et métaux américains, s.e.c. v. Picard, 2013 QCCA 2255; Banque Commerciale Italienne du Canada v. Magas Development Corp., [1992] R.D.I. 246; Portnoff (Syndic de), [2000] R.J.Q. 1290.

inc., 2000 CanLII 9254; Droit de la famille — 092038, 2009 QCCS 3822, [2009] R.D.F. 646.

Citée par le juge en chef Wagner et le juge Kasirer (dissidents)

Dagenais c. Société Radio-Canada, [1994] 3 R.C.S. 835; R. c. Mentuck, 2001 CSC 76, [2001] 3 R.C.S. 442; Sierra Club du Canada c. Canada (Ministre des Finances), 2002 CSC 41, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 522; Charland c. Lessard, 2015 QCCA 14; Pétrolière Impériale c. Jacques, 2014 CSC 66, [2014] 3 R.C.S. 287; Union Carbide Canada Inc. c. Bombardier Inc., 2014 CSC 35, [2014] 1 R.C.S. 800; Homans c. Gestion Paroi inc., 2017 QCCA 480; J.G. c. Nadeau, 2016 QCCA 167; Lac d'Amiante du Québec Ltée c. 2858-0702 Québec Inc., 2001 CSC 51, [2001] 2 R.C.S. 743; Globe and Mail c. Canada (Procureur général), 2010 CSC 41, [2010] 2 R.C.S. 592; Canada (Citoyenneté et Immigration) c. Harkat, 2014 CSC 37, [2014] 2 R.C.S. 33; B. (B.) c. Québec (Procureur général), [1998] R.J.Q. 317; Rosei c. Benesty, 2020 QCCS 1795; Marcovitz c. Bruker, 2005 QCCA 835, [2005] R.J.Q. 2482, inf. sur un autre point par 2007 CSC 54, [2007] 3 R.C.S. 607; Sirius Services conseils en technologie de l'information inc. c. Boisvert, 2017 QCCA 518; Horic c. Nepveu, 2016 QCCS 3921; Edmonton Journal c. Alberta (Procureur général), [1989] 2 R.C.S. 1326; Richmond Newspapers, Inc. c. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555 (1980); 3834310 Canada Inc. c. R.C., 2004 CanLII 4122; Société Radio-Canada c. La Reine, 2011 CSC 3, [2011] 1 R.C.S. 65; Société Radio-Canada c. Nouveau-Brunswick (Procureur général), [1996] 3 R.C.S. 480; Georgiadis c. Angelopoulos, 2008 QCCS 6890; Classic Fabrics Corp. c. B. Rawe GMBH & Co., 2001 CanLII 7221; 175809 Canada inc. c. 2740478 Canada inc., 2000 CanLII 9254; L'Espérance c. Atkins, [1956] B.R. 62; Graham-Albulet c. Albulet, [1977] C.A. 323; Barzelex Inc. c. M.E.C.S. International Inc. (1989), 29 Q.A.C. 63; Constructions Panthéon inc. c. Clinique Altermed inc., 2015 QCCA 50; Fourrures Taran (Mtl) inc. c. Tuac, local 501, 2005 CanLII 11669; 7006098 Canada inc. c. Sobeys Canada inc., 2020 QCCS 897; Berenbaum c. Berenbaum Reichson, 2014 QCCA 1630; Entreprises de béton Fern Leclerc Ltée c. Bourassa, [1990] R.D.J. 558; Droit de la famille — 092038, 2009 QCCS 3822, [2009] R.D.F. 646; Wetherall c. Macdonald (1903), 9 R. de J. 381; 9163-5771 Québec inc. c. Bonifier inc., 2017 QCCA 1316; Ditomene c. Syndicat des enseignants du Cégep de l'Outaouais (SECO), 2012 QCCA 1296; Byer c. Québec (Inspecteur général des institutions financières), [2000] R.L. 615; Fers et métaux américains, s.e.c. c. Picard, 2013 QCCA 2255; Banque Commerciale Italienne du Canada c. Magas Development Corp., [1992] R.D.I. 246; Portnoff (Syndic de), [2000] R.J.Q. 1290.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Act to modify the organization and governance of the health and social services network, in particular by abolishing the regional agencies, CQLR, c. O-7.2, s. 38.
An Act to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, Bill 24, 3rd Sess., 34th Leg., Quebec, 1994.
Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 2(b), 11(d).
Charter of human rights and freedoms, CQLR, c. C-12, ss. 3, 9.1, 23, 51, 53.
Civil Code of Québec, art. 33.
Code de procédure civile (France), 1806, art. 87.
Code of Civil Procedure, S.Q. 1897, c. 48, art. 16.
Code of Civil Procedure, CQLR, c. C-25, arts. 13, 47, 83 [am. 1994, c. 28, s. 3], 331.7, 331.9 [ad. idem, s. 20].
Code of Civil Procedure, CQLR, c. C-25.01, preliminary provision, arts. 1 to 7, 8 to 28, 49, 107, 108, 205, 206, 213, 214, 220, 246 to 252.
Interpretation Act, CQLR, c. I-16, art. 41.1.
Loi sur la procédure civile du canton de Genève, 1837, s. 84.
Nouveau Code de procédure civile (France), arts. 394, 395, 396.
Regulation of the Court of Québec, CQLR, c. C-25, r. 4, ss. 3, 4, 18, 19.
Rules of practice of the Superior Court of Québec in civil matters, R.R.Q. 1981, c. C-25, r. 8, rr. 2, 3.

Authors Cited

Bachand, Frédéric. "Les principes généraux de la justice civile et le nouveau Code de procédure civile" (2015), 61 McGill L.J. 447.
Chamberland, Luc, dir. Le grand collectif: Code de procédure civile — Commentaires et annotations, vol. 1, Articles 1 à 390, 5e éd. Montréal: Yvon Blais, 2020.
Côté, Pierre-André, in collaboration with Stéphane Beaulac and Mathieu Devinat. The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada, 4th ed. Toronto: Carswell, 2011.
Cromwell, Thomas A., Siena Anstis and Thomas Touchie. "Revisiting the Role of Presumptions of Legislative Intent in Statutory Interpretation" (2017), 95 Can. Bar Rev. 297.
d'Aguesseau, Henri François. Discours de M. le chancelier d'Aguesseau, t. 1, nouv. éd. Lyon: L. Boget, 1822.
Dorais, O. P., et A. P. Dorais, Code de procédure civile de la province de Québec, comprenant les observations spéciales des commissaires chargés de la révision et modification du Code de procédure civile du Bas-Canada. Montréal: Théoret, 1897.

Lois et règlements cités

Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 1, 2b), 11d).
Charte des droits et libertés de la personne, RLRQ, c. C-12, art. 3, 9.1, 23, 51, 53.
Code civil du Québec, art. 33.
Code de procédure civile (France), 1806, art. 87.
Code de procédure civile, S.Q. 1897, c. 48, art. 16.
Code de procédure civile, RLRQ, c. C-25, art. 13, 47, 83 [mod. 1994, c. 28, art. 3], 331.7, 331.9 [aj. idem, art. 20].
Code de procédure civile, RLRQ, c. C-25.01, disposition préliminaire, art. 1 à 7, 8 à 28, 49, 107, 108, 205, 206, 213, 214, 220, 246 à 252.
Loi d'interprétation, RLRQ, c. I-16, art. 41.1.
Loi modifiant le Code de procédure civile, projet de loi 24, 3e sess., 34e lég., Québec, 1994.
Loi modifiant l'organisation et la gouvernance du réseau de la santé et des services sociaux notamment par l'abolition des agences régionales, RLRQ, c. O-7.2, art. 38.
Loi sur la procédure civile du canton de Genève, 1837, art. 84.
Nouveau Code de procédure civile (France), art. 394, 395, 396.
Règlement de la Cour du Québec, RLRQ, c. C-25, r. 4, art. 3, 4, 18, 19.
Règles de pratique de la Cour supérieure du Québec en matières civiles, R.R.Q. 1981, c. C-25, r. 8, règles 2, 3.

Doctrine et autres documents cités

Bachand, Frédéric. « Les principes généraux de la justice civile et le nouveau Code de procédure civile » (2015), 61 R.D. McGill 447.
Chamberland, Luc, dir. Le grand collectif : Code de procédure civile — Commentaires et annotations, vol. 1, Articles 1 à 390, 5e éd., Montréal, Yvon Blais, 2020.
Côté, Pierre-André, avec la collaboration de Stéphane Beaulac et Mathieu Devinat. Interprétation des lois, 4e éd., Montréal, Thémis, 2009.
Cromwell, Thomas A., Siena Anstis and Thomas Touchie. « Revisiting the Role of Presumptions of Legislative Intent in Statutory Interpretation » (2017), 95 R. du B. can. 297.
d'Aguesseau, Henri François. Discours de M. le chancelier d'Aguesseau, t. 1, nouv. éd., Lyon, L. Boget, 1822.
Dorais, O. P., et A. P. Dorais, Code de procédure civile de la province de Québec, comprenant les observations spéciales des commissaires chargés de la révision et modification du Code de procédure civile du Bas-Canada, Montréal, Théoret, 1897.

Dreifuss-Netter, Frédérique. Les manifestations de volonté abdicatives. Paris: Librairie générale de droit et de jurisprudence, 1985.

Fauteux, Gérald. Le livre du magistrat. Ottawa: Ministre des Approvisionnements et Services Canada, 1980.

Ferland, Denis, et Benoît Emery. Précis de procédure civile du Québec, vol. 1, 6e éd. Montréal: Yvon Blais, 2020.

Frain du Tremblay, Jean. Essais sur l'idée du parfait magistrat où l'on fait voir une partie des obligations des Juges. Paris: Pierre Emery, 1701.

Fricero, Natalie. "Audience et débats", dans JurisClasseur France — Procédure civile, par Philippe Carillon et Roger Perrot, dir. Paris: LexisNexis, 2019, fascicule 800-50 (mis à jour novembre 2020) (online: www.lexisnexis.ca).

Fricero, Natalie. "Désistement", dans JurisClasseur France — Procédure civile, par Philippe Carillon et Roger Perrot, dir. Paris: LexisNexis, 2018, fascicule 800-40 (online: www.lexisnexis.ca).

Grammatikas, Georges. Théorie générale de la renonciation en droit civil. Paris: Librairie générale de droit et de jurisprudence, 1971.

Guillemard, Sylvette. "Réflexions autour des sept premiers articles du Code de procédure civile", dans Sylvette Guillemard, dir., Le Code de procédure civile: quelles nouveautés? Montréal: Yvon Blais, 2016, 123.

Guillemard, Sylvette, et Séverine Menétrey. Comprendre la procédure civile québécoise, 2e éd. Montréal: Yvon Blais, 2017, "pièce".

Lafond, Pierre-Claude. "Introduction", dans Pierre-Claude Lafond, dir., Régler autrement les différends, 2e éd. Montréal: LexisNexis, 2018, 1.

Lamothe, Maxime. La renonciation à l'exercice des droits et libertés garantis par les chartes. Cowansville, Que.: Yvon Blais, 2007.

LeBel, Louis. "La loi et le droit: la nature de la fonction créatrice du juge dans le système de droit québécois" (2015), 56 C. de D. 87.

LeBel, Louis. "La méthode d'interprétation moderne: le juge devant lui-même et en lui-même", dans Stéphane Beaulac et Mathieu Devinat, dir., Interpretatio non cessat — Mélanges en l'honneur de Pierre-André Côté. Cowansville, Que.: Yvon Blais, 2011, 103.

Lluelles, Didier, et Benoît Moore. Droit des obligations, 3e éd. Montréal: Thémis, 2018.

Maillette, Hélène. "Incidents qui mettent fin à l'instance", dans JurisClasseur Québec — Collection droit civil — Procédure civile I, 2e éd., par Pierre-Claude Lafond, dir. Montréal: LexisNexis, 2015, fascicule 21 (feuilles mobiles mises à jour novembre 2019, envoi no 9).

Dreifuss-Netter, Frédérique. Les manifestations de volonté abdicatives, Paris, Librairie générale de droit et de jurisprudence, 1985.

Fauteux, Gérald. Le livre du magistrat, Ottawa, Ministre des Approvisionnements et Services Canada, 1980.

Ferland, Denis, et Benoît Emery. Précis de procédure civile du Québec, vol. 1, 6e éd., Montréal, Yvon Blais, 2020.

Frain du Tremblay, Jean. Essais sur l'idée du parfait magistrat où l'on fait voir une partie des obligations des Juges, Paris, Pierre Emery, 1701.

Fricero, Natalie. « Audience et débats », dans JurisClasseur France — Procédure civile, par Philippe Carillon et Roger Perrot, dir., Paris, LexisNexis, 2019, fascicule 800-50 (mis à jour novembre 2020) (en ligne : www.lexisnexis.ca).

Fricero, Natalie. « Désistement », dans JurisClasseur France — Procédure civile, par Philippe Carillon et Roger Perrot, dir., Paris, LexisNexis, 2018, fascicule 800-40 (en ligne : www.lexisnexis.ca).

Guillemard, Sylvette. « Réflexions autour des sept premiers articles du Code de procédure civile », dans Sylvette Guillemard, dir., Le Code de procédure civile : quelles nouveautés?, Montréal, Yvon Blais, 2016, 123.

Guillemard, Sylvette, et Séverine Menétrey. Comprendre la procédure civile québécoise, 2e éd., Montréal, Yvon Blais, 2017, « pièce ».

Grammatikas, Georges. Théorie générale de la renonciation en droit civil, Paris, Librairie générale de droit et de jurisprudence, 1971.

Lafond, Pierre-Claude. « Introduction », dans Pierre-Claude Lafond, dir., Régler autrement les différends, 2e éd., Montréal, LexisNexis, 2018, 1.

Lamothe, Maxime. La renonciation à l'exercice des droits et libertés garantis par les chartes, Cowansville (Qc), Yvon Blais, 2007.

LeBel, Louis. « La loi et le droit : la nature de la fonction créatrice du juge dans le système de droit québécois » (2015), 56 C. de D. 87.

LeBel, Louis. « La méthode d'interprétation moderne : le juge devant lui-même et en lui-même », dans Stéphane Beaulac et Mathieu Devinat, dir., Interpretatio non cessat — Mélanges en l'honneur de Pierre-André Côté, Cowansville (Qc), Yvon Blais, 2011, 103.

Lluelles, Didier, et Benoît Moore. Droit des obligations, 3e éd., Montréal, Thémis, 2018.

Maillette, Hélène. « Incidents qui mettent fin à l'instance », dans JurisClasseur Québec — Collection droit civil — Procédure civile I, 2e éd., par Pierre-Claude Lafond, dir., Montréal, LexisNexis, 2015, fascicule 21 (feuilles mobiles mises à jour novembre 2019, envoi no 9).

Menétrey, Séverine. "L'évolution des fondements de la publicité des procédures judiciaires internes et son impact sur certaines procédures arbitrales internationales" (2008), 40 Ottawa L. Rev. 117.

Mignault, P. B. "Le Code Civil de la Province de Québec et son Interprétation" (1935), 1 U.T.L.J. 104.

Montesquieu. The Spirit of Laws, v. 1. London: T. Evans, 1777.

Morissette, Yves-Marie. "Gestion d'instance, proportionnalité et preuve civile: état provisoire des questions" (2009), 50 C. de D. 381.

Motulsky, Henri. Principes d'une réalisation méthodique du droit privé (La théorie des éléments générateurs des droits subjectifs). Paris: Librairie du Recueil Sirey, 1948.

Perrot, Roger. Institutions judiciaires. Paris: Les cours de droit, 1978.

Perrot, Roger, Bernard Beignier et Lionel Miniato. Institutions judiciaires, 18e éd. Paris: L.G.D.J., 2020.

Piché, Catherine. "La disposition préliminaire du Code de procédure civile" (2014), 73 R. du B. 135.

Piché-Messier, Mathieu, et Anaïs Bussières McNicoll. "Développements récents en matière de propriété intellectuelle dans le cadre des ordonnances de type Anton Piller, Mareva et Norwich", dans Service de la qualité de la profession du Barreau du Québec, vol. 464, Développements récents en droit de la propriété intellectuelle. Montréal: Yvon Blais, 2019, 89.

Pigeon, Louis-Philippe. Drafting and Interpreting Legislation. Toronto: Carswell, 1988.

Plamondon, Jacinthe. "Les principes directeurs et le nouveau Code de procédure civile (art. 17 à 24 C.p.c.)", dans Sylvette Guillemard, dir., Le Code de procédure civile: quelles nouveautés? Montréal: Yvon Blais, 2016, 27.

Québec. Assemblée nationale. "Adoption du principe — Projet de loi 24 — Loi modifiant le Code de procédure civile", Journal des débats, vol. 33, no 30, 3e sess., 34e lég., 1er juin 1994, p. 1573-1579.

Québec. Assemblée nationale. Commission permanente des institutions, "Étude détaillée du projet de loi no 28 — Loi instituant le nouveau Code de procédure civile", Journal des débats, vol. 43, no 79, 1re sess., 40e lég., 29 octobre 2013, p. 73-77.

Québec. Ministère de la Justice. Comité de révision de la procédure civile. Une nouvelle culture judiciaire. Québec: 2001.

Québec. Ministère de la Justice. Commentaires de la ministre de la Justice: Code de procédure civile, chapitre C-25.01. Montréal: SOQUIJ, 2015.

Raynaud, Pierre. "La renonciation à un droit. Sa nature et son domaine en Droit civil" (1936), 35 R.T.D. civ. 763.

Menétrey, Séverine. « L'évolution des fondements de la publicité des procédures judiciaires internes et son impact sur certaines procédures arbitrales internationales » (2008), 40 R.D. Ottawa 117.

Mignault, P. B. « Le Code Civil de la Province de Québec et son Interprétation » (1935), 1 U.T.L.J. 104.

Morissette, Yves-Marie. « Gestion d'instance, proportionnalité et preuve civile : état provisoire des questions » (2009), 50 C. de D. 381.

Montesquieu. De l'Esprit des Lois, t. 1, Genève, Barrillot & fils, 1748.

Motulsky, Henri. Principes d'une réalisation méthodique du droit privé (La théorie des éléments générateurs des droits subjectifs), Paris, Librairie du Recueil Sirey, 1948.

Perrot, Roger. Institutions judiciaires, Paris, Les cours de droit, 1978.

Perrot, Roger, Bernard Beignier et Lionel Miniato. Institutions judiciaires, 18e éd., Paris, L.G.D.J., 2020.

Piché, Catherine. « La disposition préliminaire du Code de procédure civile » (2014), 73 R. du B. 135.

Piché-Messier, Mathieu, et Anaïs Bussières McNicoll. « Développements récents en matière de propriété intellectuelle dans le cadre des ordonnances de type Anton Piller, Mareva et Norwich », dans Service de la qualité de la profession du Barreau du Québec, vol. 464, Développements récents en droit de la propriété intellectuelle, Montréal, Yvon Blais, 2019, 89.

Pigeon, Louis-Philippe. Rédaction et interprétation des lois, 3e éd., Québec, Publications du Québec, 1986.

Plamondon, Jacinthe. « Les principes directeurs et le nouveau Code de procédure civile (art. 17 à 24 C.p.c.) », dans Sylvette Guillemard, dir., Le Code de procédure civile : quelles nouveautés ?, Montréal, Yvon Blais, 2016, 27.

Québec. Assemblée nationale. « Adoption du principe — Projet de loi 24 — Loi modifiant le Code de procédure civile », Journal des débats, vol. 33, no 30, 3e sess., 34e lég., 1er juin 1994, p. 1573-1579.

Québec. Assemblée nationale. Commission permanente des institutions, « Étude détaillée du projet de loi no 28 — Loi instituant le nouveau Code de procédure civile », Journal des débats, vol. 43, no 79, 1re sess., 40e lég., 29 octobre 2013, p. 73-77.

Québec. Ministère de la Justice. Comité de révision de la procédure civile. Une nouvelle culture judiciaire, Québec, 2001.

Québec. Ministère de la Justice. Commentaires de la ministre de la Justice : Code de procédure civile, chapitre C-25.01, Montréal, SOQUIJ, 2015.

Raynaud, Pierre. « La renonciation à un droit. Sa nature et son domaine en Droit civil » (1936), 35 R.T.D. civ. 763.

Reid, Hubert, avec la collaboration de Simon Reid. Dictionnaire de droit québécois et canadien, 5e éd. Montréal: Wilson & Lafleur, 2015, "désistement", "pièce".

Thériault, Michelle. "Le défi du passage vers la nouvelle culture juridique de la justice participative" (2015), 74 R. du B. 1.

Vincent, Jean, et Serge Guinchard. Procédure civile, 27e éd. Paris: Dalloz, 2003.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal (Marcotte and Schrager JJ.A. and Samson J. (ad hoc)), 2019 QCCA 814, [2019] AZ-51434213, [2019] J.Q. no 3707 (QL), 2019 CarswellQue 3871 (WL Can.), affirming a decision of Gagnon J., 2017 QCCS 4691, [2017] AZ-51434213, [2017] J.Q. no 14219 (QL), 2017 CarswellQue 9231 (WL Can.). Appeal dismissed, Wagner C.J. and Rowe, Martin and Kasirer JJ. dissenting.

Mathieu Quenneville and Marc-André Nadon, for the appellant.

Jonathan Pierre-Étienne and Antoun Al-Saoub, for the respondent Magdi Kamel.

Dominique Vallières, for the respondent Centre intégré universitaire de santé et de services sociaux de l'Ouest-de-l'Île-de-Montréal.

Mark Bantey, for the intervener Fédération professionnelle des journalistes du Québec.

Christian Leblanc, for the intervener the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, La Presse Inc. and Ad IDEM/Canadian Media Lawyer Association.

English version of the judgment of Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Côté and Brown JJ. delivered by

CÔTÉ J. —

I. Overview

[1] The importance of the principle of open court proceedings is no longer a matter of controversy

Reid, Hubert, avec la collaboration de Simon Reid. Dictionnaire de droit québécois et canadien, 5e éd., Montréal, Wilson & Lafleur, 2015, « désistement », « pièce ».

Thériault, Michelle. « Le défi du passage vers la nouvelle culture juridique de la justice participative » (2015), 74 R. du B. 1.

Vincent, Jean, et Serge Guinchard. Procédure civile, 27e éd., Paris, Dalloz, 2003.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel du Québec (les juges Marcotte et Schrager et le juge Samson (ad hoc)), 2019 QCCA 814, [2019] AZ-51434213, [2019] J.Q. no 3707 (QL), 2019 CarswellQue 3871 (WL Can.), qui a confirmé une décision du juge Gagnon, 2017 QCCS 4691, [2017] AZ-51434213, [2017] J.Q. no 14219 (QL), 2017 CarswellQue 9231 (WL Can.). Pourvoi rejeté, le juge en chef Wagner et les juges Rowe, Martin et Kasirer sont dissidents.

Mathieu Quenneville et Marc-André Nadon, pour l'appelante.

Jonathan Pierre-Étienne et Antoun Al-Saoub, pour l'intimé Magdi Kamel.

Dominique Vallières, pour l'intimé le Centre intégré universitaire de santé et de services sociaux de l'Ouest-de-l'Île-de-Montréal.

Mark Bantey, pour l'intervenante la Fédération professionnelle des journalistes du Québec.

Christian Leblanc, pour les intervenantes la Société Radio-Canada, La Presse Inc. et Ad IDEM/Canadian Media Lawyer Association.

Le jugement des juges Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Côté et Brown a été rendu par

LA JUGE CÔTÉ —

I. Aperçu

[1] L'importance du principe de la publicité des débats judiciaires ne suscite plus aujourd'hui de

"[t]o emphasize them and ensure their primacy" (Une nouvelle culture judiciaire (2001), at p. 38, cited in Charland v. Lessard, 2015 QCCA 14, at para. 169 (CanLII)). These principles are now gathered together in arts. 8 to 28 C.C.P. under the title "Principles of procedure applicable before the courts", which has four chapters: mission of the courts, public nature of procedure before the courts, guiding principles of procedure, and rules of interpretation and application of the Code.

[95] The parties' control over the course of their case is a guiding principle set out in art. 19 C.C.P. The parties thus have a [TRANSLATION] "circumscribe[d]" freedom to choose the appropriate proceedings and the grounds of fact and law they will raise (Ministère de la Justice, Commentaires de la ministre de la Justice: Code de procédure civile, chapitre C-25.01 (2015), art. 19; Imperial Oil v. Jacques, 2014 SCC 66, [2014] 3 S.C.R. 287, at para. 25). This principle extends to the parties' right to agree "at any stage of the proceeding" to settle their dispute or otherwise terminate the proceeding (para. 3). They may therefore decide to remove their dispute from the judicial arena in order to resolve it privately.

[96] This ability to withdraw a case from the courts is consistent with the general approach taken by the Code of Civil Procedure, which places a [TRANSLATION] "spectacularly" high value on private civil justice (C. Piché, "La disposition préliminaire du Code de procédure civile" (2014), 73 R. du B. 135, at p. 152). As its preliminary provision indicates, the Code of Civil Procedure "is designed to provide, in the public interest, means to prevent and resolve disputes", and it sets out general principles in this regard in arts. 1 to 7. In this way, the legislature expressly recognizes that when parties enter into a dispute prevention and resolution process by mutual agreement, civil justice is possible, even desirable, without the intervention of the courts. Facilitating the resolution of disputes is a public objective of undeniable importance, both for the parties and for our overburdened justice system (Union Carbide Canada Inc. v. Bombardier Inc., 2014 SCC 35, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 800, at para. 32; L. Chamberland, ed., Le grand collectif: Code de procédure civile — Commentaires et annotations, vol. 1, Articles 1 à 390 (5th ed. 2020), des procédures (Une nouvelle culture judiciaire (2001), p. 38, cité dans Charland c. Lessard, 2015 QCCA 14, par. 169 (CanLII)). Ces principes sont désormais rassemblés sous le titre « Les principes de la procédure applicable devant les tribunaux de l'ordre judiciaire » aux art. 8 à 28 C.p.c., en quatre chapitres : la mission des tribunaux, le caractère public de la procédure devant les tribunaux judiciaires, les principes directeurs de la procédure, et les règles d'interprétation et d'application du Code.

[95] La maîtrise par les parties de leur dossier est un principe directeur consacré à l'art. 19 C.p.c. Les parties jouissent ainsi d'une liberté « encadr[ée] » quant au choix des procédures appropriées et des moyens de fait et de droit qu'elles avancent (Ministère de la Justice, Commentaires de la ministre de la Justice : Code de procédure civile, chapitre C-25.01 (2015), art. 19; Pétrolière Impériale c. Jacques, 2014 CSC 66, [2014] 3 R.C.S. 287, par. 25). Ce principe englobe la faculté des parties de choisir, « à tout moment de l'instance », de régler leur litige ou de mettre autrement fin à l'instance (al. 3). Ainsi, les parties peuvent décider de retirer leur litige de l'arène judiciaire en vue de le régler en privé.

[96] Cette faculté de dessaisir le tribunal s'harmonise avec l'orientation générale du Code de procédure civile, qui valorise la justice civile privée « de façon spectaculaire » (C. Piché, « La disposition préliminaire du Code de procédure civile » (2014), 73 R. du B. 135, p. 152). Comme l'indique sa disposition préliminaire, le Code de procédure civile « vise à permettre, dans l'intérêt public, la prévention et le règlement des différends » et énonce des principes généraux en la matière aux art. 1 à 7. Ce faisant, le législateur reconnaît expressément que, lorsque les parties s'y engagent d'un commun accord, la justice civile est possible, voire souhaitable, sans l'intervention des tribunaux judiciaires. Favoriser le règlement des différends constitue un objectif public d'une importance indéniable, autant pour les parties que pour notre système judiciaire surchargé (Union Carbide Canada Inc. c. Bombardier Inc., 2014 CSC 35, [2014] 1 R.C.S. 800, par. 32; L. Chamberland, dir., Le grand collectif : Code de procédure civile — Commentaires et annotations, vol. 1, Articles 1 à 390 (5e éd. 2020), p. 9). Les règlements at p. 9). Private dispute resolution processes have several advantages, including [TRANSLATION] "their confidentiality, their more informal nature, their flexibility, better conflict management by the parties, lower costs and the possibility of arriving at individualized solutions" (P.-C. Lafond, "Introduction", in P.-C. Lafond, ed., Régler autrement les différends (2nd ed. 2018), 1, at p. 20; see also M. Thériault, "Le défi du passage vers la nouvelle culture juridique de la justice participative" (2015), 74 R. du B. 1, at pp. 9-12).

[97] However, the parties' control over the course of their case is not absolute: it cannot be exercised contrary to rules of public order or to the existing and legitimate interests of third persons. In exercising this power, the parties must "comply with the principles, objectives and rules of procedure" (art. 19 para. 1 C.C.P.). The latitude given to the parties in conducting the proceeding is therefore limited by the general principles of civil procedure, including the rules found in the Code of Civil Procedure, which confer on judges a role as [TRANSLATION] "protectors of the judicial process and the various parties' rights" (J. Plamondon, "Les principes directeurs et le nouveau Code de procédure civile (art. 17 à 24 C.p.c.)", in S. Guillemard, ed., Le Code de procédure civile: quelles nouveautés? (2016), 27, at pp. 38-39). As Professor Piché notes, the Code of Civil Procedure [TRANSLATION] "gives the judge's duties priority over the parties' rights" (p. 166). Having chosen to go before the courts, the parties must therefore comply with the established rules and principles.

[98] The parties' control over the course of their case, for example, is subject to the "duty of the courts to ensure proper case management and the orderly conduct of proceedings" (art. 19 para. 1 C.C.P.). The courts are therefore required to play an active role in the management of cases, thereby incidentally limiting the parties' control over the conduct of a proceeding (F. Bachand, "Les principes généraux de la justice civile et le nouveau Code de procédure civile" (2015), 61 McGill L.J. 447, at p. 458; Homans v. Gestion Paroi inc., 2017 QCCA 480, at paras. 92-93 (CanLII)). The principle of proportionality set out in art. 18 C.C.P. is also a good example of a restriction on [TRANSLATION] "the parties' freedom privés des différends comportent plusieurs avantages, dont « leur confidentialité, leur caractère plus informel, leur flexibilité, une meilleure gestion du conflit par les parties, des coûts moindres et la possibilité d'en arriver à des solutions individualisées » (P.-C. Lafond, « Introduction », dans P.-C. Lafond, dir., Régler autrement les différends (2e éd. 2018), 1, p. 20; voir aussi M. Thériault, « Le défi du passage vers la nouvelle culture juridique de la justice participative » (2015), 74 R. du B. 1, p. 9-12).

[97] Cependant, la maîtrise par les parties de leur dossier n'est pas absolue : elle ne peut s'exercer à l'encontre de règles d'ordre public et des intérêts nés et légitimes que possèdent des tiers. Ce pouvoir doit être exercé « dans le respect des principes, des objectifs et des règles de la procédure » (art. 19 al. 1 C.p.c.). La latitude laissée aux parties dans la conduite de l'instance est, en conséquence, limitée par les principes généraux de la procédure civile, dont les règles contenues au Code de procédure civile, qui confèrent aux juges un rôle de « protecteurs du processus judiciaire et des droits des diverses parties » (J. Plamondon, « Les principes directeurs et le nouveau Code de procédure civile (art. 17 à 24 C.p.c.) », dans S. Guillemard, dir., Le Code de procédure civile : quelles nouveautés? (2016), 27, p. 38-39). Comme le signale la professeure Piché, le Code de procédure civile « donne priorité aux devoirs du juge sur les droits des parties » (p. 166). Ayant choisi la voie judiciaire, les parties doivent alors se conformer aux règles et principes établis.

[98] À titre d'exemple, la maîtrise par les parties de leur dossier est assujettie au « devoir des tribunaux d'assurer la saine gestion des instances et de veiller à leur bon déroulement » (art. 19 al. 1 C.p.c.). Les tribunaux doivent donc jouer un rôle actif dans la gestion des instances, limitant ainsi de manière incidente le contrôle des parties sur le déroulement de l'instance (F. Bachand, « Les principes généraux de la justice civile et le nouveau Code de procédure civile » (2015), 61 R.D. McGill 447, p. 458; Homans c. Gestion Paroi inc., 2017 QCCA 480, par. 92-93 (CanLII)). Le principe de proportionnalité que consacre l'art. 18 C.p.c. offre également un bon exemple de restriction à « la liberté des parties de

to conduct their case as they see fit" (J.G. v. Nadeau, 2016 QCCA 167, at para. 40 (CanLII); see also Y.-M. Morissette, "Gestion d'instance, proportionnalité et preuve civile: état provisoire des questions" (2009), 50 C. de D. 381, at p. 412). In short, the parties can have only [TRANSLATION] "incomplete" control over the course of the case given the interplay between that control and the competing and divergent principles set out in the Code of Civil Procedure (see D. Ferland and B. Emery, Précis de procédure civile du Québec (6th ed. 2020), vol. 1, at No. 1-164). S. Guillemard and S. Menétrey conclude from this that, especially since the enactment of the new 2016 Code of Civil Procedure, [TRANSLATION] "a kind of dilution" of the power given to the parties to control the course of their case may be observed, in comparison with the "lead role" they had prior to the revision (Comprendre la procédure civile québécoise (2nd ed. 2017), at No. 100).

[99] Similarly, the parties' control over the course of their case does not allow them to override the judge's discretion to ensure compliance with the rule of public order arising from the principle of open proceedings, nor does it allow them to exercise their powers at the expense of the existing and legitimate interests of third persons in seeking the application of that rule. This fundamental principle is affirmed in art. 11 C.C.P., which provides that anyone may attend court hearings and have access to court records. This principle also guarantees rights protected in ss. 3 and 23 of the Quebec Charter and s. 2(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (see, e.g., Lac d'Amiante du Québec Ltée v. 2858-0702 Québec Inc., 2001 SCC 51, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 743, at para. 62; Globe and Mail v. Canada (Attorney General), 2010 SCC 41, [2010] 2 S.C.R. 592, at para. 87). As the Court reiterated in Canada (Citizenship and Immigration) v. Harkat, 2014 SCC 37, [2014] 2 S.C.R. 33, the openness of court proceedings is an important hallmark of a free and democratic society such as ours (para. 24).

[100] In the chapter entitled "Public nature of procedure before the courts", the legislature provides for two specific exceptions to this fundamental principle. First, art. 11 para. 2 C.C.P. states that an exception to this principle applies if the law provides for mener leur cause comme bon leur semble » (J.G. c. Nadeau, 2016 QCCA 167, par. 40 (CanLII); voir aussi Y.-M. Morissette, « Gestion d'instance, proportionnalité et preuve civile : état provisoire des questions » (2009), 50 C. de D. 381, p. 412). Somme toute, la maîtrise du dossier ne peut être que « relative » eu égard à ses interactions avec les principes concurrents et divergents énoncés au Code de procédure civile (voir D. Ferland et B. Emery, Précis de procédure civile du Québec (6e éd. 2020), vol. 1, no 1-164). Les autrices S. Guillemard et S. Menétrey en concluent que l'on peut observer, surtout depuis l'adoption du nouveau Code de procédure civile de 2016, « une sorte de dilution » du pouvoir qui est donné aux parties comme maîtres de leur dossier, par rapport au « premier rôle » qui était le leur avant la refonte (Comprendre la procédure civile québécoise (2e éd. 2017), no 100).

[99] De même, la maîtrise par les parties de leur dossier ne leur permet pas d'écarter le pouvoir discrétionnaire du juge de veiller au respect de la règle d'ordre public découlant du principe de la publicité des débats ou d'exercer leurs pouvoirs au détriment des intérêts nés et légitimes que possèdent des tiers d'en revendiquer l'application. Ce principe fondamental est consacré à l'art. 11 C.p.c., qui prévoit que tous peuvent assister aux audiences des tribunaux et prendre connaissance des dossiers. Ce principe garantit également des droits protégés aux art. 3 et 23 de la Charte québécoise et à l'al. 2b) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés (voir, p. ex., Lac d'Amiante du Québec Ltée c. 2858-0702 Québec Inc., 2001 CSC 51, [2001] 2 R.C.S. 743, par. 62; Globe and Mail c. Canada (Procureur général), 2010 CSC 41, [2010] 2 R.C.S. 592, par. 87). Comme l'a réitéré notre Cour dans l'arrêt Canada (Citoyenneté et Immigration) c. Harkat, 2014 CSC 37, [2014] 2 R.C.S. 33, la publicité des débats judiciaires est une caractéristique importante d'une société libre et démocratique comme la nôtre (par. 24).

[100] Au chapitre portant sur « Le caractère public de la procédure devant les tribunaux judiciaires », le législateur prévoit deux exceptions précises à ce principe fondamental. Premièrement, l'art. 11 al. 2 C.p.c. énonce qu'il est fait exception à ce principe

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

CITATION: Peace River Hydro Partners v. Petrowest Corp., 2022 SCC 41

APPEAL HEARD: January 19, 2022
JUDGMENT RENDERED: November 10, 2022
DOCKET: 39547

BETWEEN:

Peace River Hydro Partners, Acciona Infrastructure Canada Inc., Samsung C&T Canada Ltd., Acciona Infraestructuras S.A. and Samsung C&T Corporation
Appellants

and

Petrowest Corporation, Petrowest Civil Services LP by its general partner, Petrowest GP Ltd., carrying on business as RBEE Crushing, Petrowest Construction LP by its general partner Petrowest GP Ltd., carrying on business as Quigley Contracting, Petrowest Services Rentals LP by its general partner Petrowest GP Ltd., carrying on business as Nu-Northern Tractor Rentals, Petrowest GP Ltd., as general partner of Petrowest Civil Services LP, Petrowest Construction LP and Petrowest Services Rentals LP, Trans Carrier Ltd. and Ernst & Young Inc. in its capacity as court-appointed receiver and manager of Petrowest Corporation, Petrowest Civil Services LP, Petrowest Construction LP, Petrowest Services Rentals LP, Petrowest GP Ltd. and Trans Carrier Ltd.
Respondents

- and -

Canadian Commercial Arbitration Center, Arbitration Place, Chartered Institute of Arbitrators (Canada) Inc., Insolvency Institute of Canada and Canadian Federation of Independent Business

Interveners

CORAM: Wagner C.J. and Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Côté, Brown, Rowe, Martin, Kasirer and Jamal JJ.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT: (paras. 1 to 189)	Côté J. (Wagner C.J. and Moldaver, Rowe and Kasirer JJ. concurring)
CONCURRING REASONS: (paras. 190 to 199)	Jamal J. (Karakatsanis, Brown and Martin JJ. concurring)

Peace River Hydro Partners,
Acciona Infrastructure Canada Inc.,
Samsung C&T Canada Ltd.,
Acciona Infraestructuras S.A. and Samsung C&T Corporation Appellants

v.

Petrowest Corporation,
Petrowest Civil Services LP by its general partner, Petrowest GP Ltd., carrying on business as RBEE Crushing, Petrowest Construction LP by its general partner Petrowest GP Ltd., carrying on business as Quigley Contracting, Petrowest Services Rentals LP by its general partner Petrowest GP Ltd., carrying on business as Nu-Northern Tractor Rentals, Petrowest GP Ltd., as general partner of Petrowest Civil Services LP, Petrowest Construction LP and Petrowest Services Rentals LP, Trans Carrier Ltd. and Ernst & Young Inc. in its capacity as court-appointed receiver and manager of Petrowest Corporation, Petrowest Civil Services LP, Petrowest Construction LP, Petrowest Services Rentals LP, Petrowest GP Ltd. and Trans Carrier Ltd. Respondents

and

Canadian Commercial Arbitration Center,
Arbitration Place,
Chartered Institute of Arbitrators (Canada) Inc., Insolvency Institute of Canada and Canadian Federation of Independent Business Interveners

Indexed as: Peace River Hydro Partners v. Petrowest Corp.

2022 SCC 41

File No.: 39547.

2022: January 19; 2022: November 10.

Present: Wagner C.J. and Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Côté, Brown, Rowe, Martin, Kasirer and Jamal JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Bankruptcy and insolvency — Court-ordered receivership — Enforceability of arbitration agreement — Receiver commencing civil action for payment of amounts allegedly owed to debtors under agreements that include mandatory arbitration clauses — Defendants seeking stay of proceedings of receiver's action under provincial arbitration legislation on basis that arbitration clauses govern dispute — Receiver opposing stay and arguing that court authorized to assert centralized judicial control over matter under federal bankruptcy and insolvency legislation — Whether receiver's action should be stayed — Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, ss. 183(1), 243(1) — Arbitration Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 55, s. 15.

Peace River is a partnership formed to build a hydroelectric dam in northeastern British Columbia. Peace River subcontracted work to Petrowest, an Alberta-based construction company, and its affiliates. The parties executed several clauses providing that disputes arising from their relationship were to be resolved through arbitration ("Arbitration Agreements"). When Petrowest encountered financial difficulties, the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench granted an order ("Receivership Order"), pursuant to s. 243(1) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act ("BIA"), appointing a receiver ("Receiver") to manage the assets and property of Petrowest and its affiliates. The Receiver then brought a civil claim against Peace River seeking to collect funds allegedly owed to Petrowest and its affiliates for subcontracted work. Peace River applied under s. 15 of British Columbia's Arbitration Act for a stay of proceedings on the ground that the Arbitration Agreements governed the dispute. The chambers judge dismissed the stay application and the Court of Appeal dismissed Peace River's appeal.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed.

Per Wagner C.J. and Moldaver, Côté, Rowe and Kasirer JJ.: The civil claim brought by the Receiver should be allowed to proceed. Section 15 of the Arbitration Act does not require a court, in every case, to stay a civil claim brought by a court-appointed receiver where the claim is subject to a valid arbitration agreement. A court may decline to grant a stay where the arbitration agreement at issue is "void, inoperative or incapable of being performed" within the meaning of s. 15(2). An otherwise valid arbitration agreement may, in some circumstances, be inoperative or incapable of being performed if enforcing it would compromise the integrity of court-ordered receivership proceedings. In the specific circumstances of this case, the chaotic nature of the arbitral proceedings bargained for by the parties would compromise the orderly and efficient resolution of the receivership, to the detriment of affected creditors and contrary to the purpose of the BIA. Accordingly, the chambers judge was entitled to refuse to grant a stay.

Competence-competence is a principle that gives precedence to the arbitration process. Generally, arbitrators should be allowed to rule first on their own jurisdiction. The principle is not absolute, however. A court may resolve a challenge to an arbitrator's jurisdiction if the challenge involves pure questions of law or, as in this case, questions of mixed fact and law requiring only superficial consideration of the evidentiary record.

In a dispute governed by an arbitration agreement with an insolvent or bankrupt counterparty, there is a tension between arbitration law and insolvency law as regards the forum in which the dispute is to be resolved. The modern view expressed in Canadian arbitration legislation is that parties should be held to their contractual agreements to arbitrate, consistent with principles of party autonomy and freedom of contract. Generally speaking, judicial intervention in commercial disputes governed by a valid agreement clause should be the exception, not the rule. On the other hand, insolvency proceedings are creatures of statute subject to close judicial oversight. The role of courts in ensuring the equitable and orderly resolution of insolvency disputes is reflected in the single proceeding model, which favours the enforcement of stakeholder rights through a centralized judicial process. Section 183(1) of the BIA confers a broad scope of authority on superior courts to deal with most bankruptcy disputes. Court-ordered receiverships under s. 243 of the BIA are one available tool for enhancing the judicial oversight and flexibility underlying Canadian insolvency law, whereby receivers may take various actions to preserve the debtor's assets for the benefit of all creditors. While a court order under s. 243 of the BIA gives a receiver wide-ranging powers, the receiver remains under a fiduciary duty to act honestly and in the best interests of all interested parties.

Notwithstanding these differences, arbitration law and insolvency law have much in common. Each prioritizes efficiency and expediency; procedural flexibility is a hallmark of both arbitration and insolvency law; and both often rely on specialized decision makers to achieve their respective objectives. In many cases, these shared interests will converge through arbitration, and parties should be held to their agreement to arbitrate notwithstanding ongoing insolvency proceedings. Valid arbitration agreements are generally to be respected. The presumption in favour of arbitral jurisdiction is supported by the Court's longstanding jurisprudence, the pro-arbitration stance adopted in provincial and territorial legislation nationwide, and the foundational principle that contracting parties are free to structure their affairs as they see fit. However, in certain insolvency matters, it may be necessary to preclude arbitration in favour of a centralized judicial process, when arbitration would compromise the orderly and efficient conduct of a court-ordered receivership. In such a scenario, a court may assert control over the proceedings, both to ensure the timely resolution of the parties' dispute and to protect the orderly restructuring or dissolution of the debtor and the equal treatment of its creditors.

The exercise required to determine if a stay of proceedings should be granted in favour of arbitration is highly factual. It requires the court to review the statutory regimes and arbitration agreements in play, having regard to the principles of party autonomy and freedom of contract and to the policy imperatives underpinning bankruptcy and insolvency law. To guide this exercise, a two-part framework, implicit in provincial arbitration legislation across the country and mirrored in ss. 15(1) and (2) of the Arbitration Act, applies. The two general components of this framework are: (1) the technical prerequisites for a mandatory stay of court proceedings; and (2) the statutory exceptions to a mandatory stay of court proceedings. These components ought to remain analytically distinct because the burden of proof shifts between them. The applicant for a stay in favour of arbitration must establish the technical prerequisites. If the applicant discharges this burden, under the second component, the party seeking to avoid arbitration must show that a statutory exception applies.

The first component, technical prerequisites, is concerned with whether the arbitration agreement at issue engages the mandatory stay provision in the applicable provincial arbitration statute. Considerations at this stage may differ depending on the jurisdiction and the nature of the arbitration, i.e. whether it relates to domestic or international arbitration. There are typically four technical prerequisites: an arbitration agreement exists; court proceedings have been commenced by a party to the arbitration agreement; the court proceedings are in respect of a matter that the parties agreed to submit to arbitration; and the party applying for a stay does so before taking any step in the court proceedings. The applicant must only establish an arguable case that these prerequisites are met.

For the purposes of the technical prerequisites set out in s. 15(1) of the Arbitration Act, a court-appointed receiver may be a party to the debtor's pre-receivership arbitration agreement through the operation of ordinary contract law. First, it is well established that an entity connected with a signatory to a contract may become bound as a party by operation of law; for example, subsidiaries, assignees, trustees and others claiming through or under the named party. There is no principled reason why this should not apply to a court-appointed receiver claiming through a debtor under a contract containing an arbitration agreement. It would violate basic principles of contract law to permit a receiver to enforce a contract on the debtor's behalf while avoiding the burdens, including the obligations to arbitrate contractual disputes. Nor does a receiver's duty as an officer of the court preclude it from being considered a party to an arbitration agreement within the meaning of s. 15(1). To the contrary, a receiver owes a fiduciary duty to all interested parties involving the debtor's assets, property, and undertakings, and may not arbitrarily break contracts entered into by the debtor with third parties prior to the receivership. Second, s. 15(1) does not expressly preclude non-signatories like receivers from being considered parties. Where legislation does not fully address a matter, courts may look to the common law to interpret the statutory language. It is a foundational contractual doctrine that all non-signatories to a contract may claim only through or under a signatory upon stepping into its contractual shoes. Nothing in the legislative record or text of the Arbitration Act indicates that the legislature intended to change or displace the common law. Third, effectively preventing arbitration as soon as one of the contracting parties entered receivership would subvert the core arbitral principles of party autonomy, limited court intervention, and competence-competence.

As for determining whether the party applying for a stay took a step in the proceedings, this requires an objective approach. The court must ask itself whether, on the facts, the party should be held to have impliedly affirmed the correctness of the proceedings and its willingness to go along with a determination by a court of law instead of arbitration. Undertaking to file a defence does not constitute a step in the proceedings, nor does requesting an extension of time to file a defence. In the context of s. 15(1), the very purpose of such a request is to decide whether or not to take a step, and there is no election to proceed with the action.

At the second stage of the analysis, the key question is whether, on a balance of probabilities, one or more of the statutory exceptions set out in the applicable provincial arbitration statute apply. If not, the court must grant a stay. A court should dismiss a stay application on the basis of a statutory exception only in a clear case. One such exception, set out in s. 15(2) of the Arbitration Act, is when the arbitration clause is "void, inoperative or incapable of being performed". A court-appointed receiver cannot unilaterally disclaim an arbitration agreement, thereby rendering it void, inoperative or incapable of being performed. Section 15(2) should be interpreted narrowly to prevent parties from avoiding arbitration in favour of what they view as a preferable procedure. Allowing a receiver to avoid arbitration by unilaterally disclaiming a debtor's pre-existing arbitration agreement conflicts with the text and intent of s. 15 and diminishes the presumptive enforceability and predictability of arbitration agreements. As s. 15(2) makes plain, the sole basis upon which a party may sue to enforce a contract and yet avoid the obligation to arbitrate is that the arbitration agreement has been found by a court to be void, inoperative, or incapable of being performed. Preferably, court-appointed receivers should seek such a judicial determination by bringing a motion for directions in the supervising court. However, when a receiver initiates court proceedings without prior judicial approval, the court must decide whether to decline to enforce the agreement under s. 15 of the Arbitration Act.

Section 15(2) gives a court the power to refuse a stay by finding that an arbitration agreement has become inoperative or incapable of being performed because of court-ordered receivership proceedings where arbitration would compromise the orderly and efficient resolution of a receivership. There is no conflict between the provincial Arbitration Act and the federal BIA giving rise to paramountcy concerns. In the typical case, the purposes of the Arbitration Act will be served by holding the parties to their agreement to arbitrate through a narrow interpretation of the words "void", "inoperative" and "incapable of being performed". An arbitration agreement will be considered "void" only in the rare circumstances where it is intrinsically defective according to the usual rules of contract law, including when it is undermined by fraud, undue influence, unconscionability, duress, mistake, or misrepresentation. The term "inoperative" has no universal common law definition. Possible reasons for finding an arbitration agreement inoperative include frustration, discharge by breach, waiver, or a subsequent agreement between the parties. The party seeking to avoid arbitration bears the heavy onus of showing that the exception for an inoperative arbitration agreement applies. The making of a winding-up order or a receivership order may be grounds to find an arbitration agreement inoperative. However, the term inoperative may not always cover scenarios where a court-appointed creditor representative initiates court proceedings on behalf of a debtor. This is because insolvency law generally stays legal claims brought against a debtor while permitting claims brought on its behalf to proceed. An arbitration agreement is "incapable of being performed" where the arbitral process cannot effectively be set into motion because of a physical or legal impediment beyond the parties' control. Physical impediments may include inconsistencies, inherent contradictions, or vagueness in the arbitration agreement that cannot be remedied by interpretation or other contractual techniques; the non-availability of the arbitrator specified in the agreement; the dissolution or non-existence of the chosen arbitration institution; or political or other circumstances at the seat of arbitration rendering arbitration impossible. Legal impediments include express legislative overrides of the parties' agreement to arbitrate.

There is statutory jurisdiction arising from ss. 183(1) and 243(1)(c) of the BIA for a court to hold that an arbitration agreement is inoperative in the receivership context. It is therefore unnecessary for courts to resort to inherent jurisdiction, which is to be considered only after statutory jurisdiction is determined to be unavailable. The BIA is remedial legislation that is intended, in part, to provide for an orderly and efficient distribution of a bankrupt's funds to various creditors. As such, it is to be given a liberal interpretation in order to facilitate its objectives. Section 183(1) of the BIA confirms that superior courts have jurisdiction in bankruptcy and insolvency matters which may be exercised concurrently with their jurisdiction in ordinary civil matters. Further, under s. 243(1)(c) of the BIA, a court may appoint a receiver to, among other things, take any action that the court considers advisable, if the court considers it just or convenient to do so. This very expansive wording has been interpreted as giving judges the broadest possible mandate in insolvency proceedings to enable them to react to any circumstances that may arise in relation to court-ordered receiverships. Section 243(1)(c) thus permits a court to do not only what justice dictates but what practicality demands. Practicality demands that a court have the ability, in limited circumstances, to decline to enforce an arbitration agreement following a commercial insolvency. Factors that may be relevant in determining whether an arbitration agreement is inoperative under s. 15(2) include: (a) the effect of arbitration on the integrity of the insolvency proceedings; (b) the relative prejudice to the parties to the arbitration agreement and the debtor's stakeholders; (c) the urgency of resolving the dispute; (d) the effect of a stay of proceedings arising from the bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings; and (e) any other factors the court considers material in the circumstances. Each factor may carry more or less weight depending on the circumstances of the case.

In the instant case, the technical prerequisites set out in s. 15(1) of the Arbitration Act are met. The impugned civil proceedings are in respect of a contractual dispute covered by valid arbitration agreements. In addition, Peace River has established an arguable case that the Receiver is a party to the Arbitration Agreements and Peace River has not taken a step in the proceedings. As s. 15 is engaged, a stay in favour of arbitration must be granted unless the Arbitration Agreements are found to be void, inoperative or incapable of being performed under s. 15(2). The Receiver has established that the Arbitration Agreements are inoperative. The multiple arbitral processes contemplated in the Arbitration Agreements would compromise the orderly and efficient resolution of the receivership, contrary to the objectives of the BIA. While recognizing the importance of party autonomy and freedom of contract, referral to arbitration in the unique circumstances of the instant case would jeopardize the Receiver's ability to maximize recovery for the creditors and to allow Petrowest and its affiliates to move forward with certainty.

Per Karakatsanis, Brown, Martin and Jamal JJ.: There is agreement that the appeal should be dismissed as the Arbitration Agreements are inoperative under s. 15(2) of the Arbitration Act. However, there is disagreement as to the primary basis for finding the Arbitration Agreements to be inoperative. The analysis should start with the terms of the Receivership Order itself. By suing in court as authorized under the Receivership Order, the Receiver disclaimed the Arbitration Agreements and they were thereby rendered inoperative.

The Receivership Order authorized the Receiver to receive and collect all monies and accounts owed or owing to Petrowest; to exercise all remedies of Petrowest in collecting such monies; to initiate, prosecute, and continue the prosecution of any and all proceedings with respect to Petrowest's property, assets, and undertakings, including all proceeds thereof; and to cease to perform any contracts of Petrowest. An arbitration agreement is a contractual right of a party to have a claim referred to arbitration to the exclusion of the courts and thus could be disclaimed pursuant to the Receivership Order. The combined effect of these terms authorized the Receiver to disclaim the Arbitration Agreements and to sue in court for amounts owing to Petrowest. The terms of the Receivership Order authorized the Receiver to sue, either in court or before an arbitrator, at the Receiver's election, based on what will best promote the orderly and efficient resolution of the receivership under the BIA. The legal effect of the Receiver suing in court and not before an arbitrator was undoubtedly to disclaim reliance on the Arbitration Agreements.

There is agreement with the majority that to the extent that the Receivership Order did not authorize the Receiver to sue in court, the BIA provided a statutory basis for the chambers judge to declare the Arbitration Agreements inoperative and to dismiss the stay application. Requiring arbitration of the Receiver's collection action would compromise the orderly and efficient resolution of the receivership.

Cases Cited

By Côté J.

Referred to: Commonwealth Insurance Co. v. Larc Developments Ltd.,

2010 BCCA 18, 315 D.L.R. (4th) 242; Ontario v. Criminal Lawyers' Association of Ontario, 2013 SCC 43, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 3; Residential Warranty Co. of Canada Inc. (Re), 2006 ABCA 293, 275 D.L.R. (4th) 498; United Used Auto & Truck Parts Ltd., Re, 2000 BCCA 146, 16 C.B.R. (4th) 141; Harbour Assurance Co. (U.K.) Ltd. v. Kansa General International Insurance Co. Ltd., [1993] 3 W.L.R. 42; Uber Technologies Inc. v. Heller, 2020 SCC 16; Dell Computer Corp. v. Union des consommateurs, 2007 SCC 34, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 801; TELUS Communications Inc. v. Wellman, 2019 SCC 19, [2019] 2 S.C.R. 144; Seidel v. TELUS Communications Inc., 2011 SCC 15, [2011] 1 S.C.R. 531; Rogers Wireless Inc. v. Muroff, 2007 SCC 35, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 921; In re U.S. Lines, Inc., 197 F.3d 631 (1999); Societe Nationale Algerienne v. Distrigas Corp., 80 B.R. 606 (1987); Astoria Medical Group v. Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York, 182 N.E.2d 85 (1962); Hofer v. Hofer, [1970] S.C.R. 958; Century Services Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), 2010 SCC 60, [2010] 3 S.C.R. 379; Sam Lévy & Associés Inc. v. Azco Mining Inc., 2001 SCC 92, [2001] 3 S.C.R. 978; Stewart v. LePage (1916), 53 S.C.R. 337; Ostrander v. Niagara Helicopters Ltd. (1973), 1 O.R. (2d) 281; Parsons v. Sovereign Bank of Canada, [1913] A.C. 160; Hayes Forest Services Ltd. v. Weyerhaeuser Co., 2008 BCCA 31, 289 D.L.R. (4th) 230; Rosenberg v. Minster, 2014 ONSC 845, 119 O.R. (3d) 27; Alberta (Attorney General) v. Moloney, 2015 SCC 51, [2015] 3 S.C.R. 327; Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453; 3GS Inc. v. Altus Group Ltd., 2011 ONSC 5755, 96 B.L.R. (4th) 268; Hosting Metro Inc. v. Poornam Info Vision Pvt, Ltd., 2016 BCSC 2371; Sum Trade Corp. v. Agricom International Inc., 2018 BCCA 379, 18 B.C.L.R. (6th) 322; Gulf Canada Resources Ltd. v. Arochem International Ltd. (1992), 66

B.C.L.R. (2d) 113; Clayworth v. Octaform Systems Inc., 2020 BCCA 117, 446 D.L.R. (4th) 626; Dalimpex Ltd. v. Janicki (2000), 137 O.A.C. 390, aff'd (2003), 228 D.L.R. (4th) 179; Ives & Barker v. Willans, [1894] 2 Ch. 478; Central Investments & Development Corp. v. Miller (1982), 133 D.L.R. (3d) 440; ABN Amro Bank Canada v. Krupp Mak Maschinenbau GmbH (1996), 135 D.L.R. (4th) 130; Petro-Canada v. 366084 Ontario Ltd. (1995), 25 B.L.R. (2d) 19; Therrien (Re), 2001 SCC 35, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 3; Canada (Attorney General) v. Reliance Insurance Co. (2007), 87 O.R. (3d) 42; Heyman v. Darwins, Ld., [1942] A.C. 356; Kaverit Steel and Crane Ltd. v. Kone Corp. (1992), 87 D.L.R. (4th) 129; James v. Thow, 2005 BCSC 809, 5 B.L.R. (4th) 315; Prince George (City) v. McElhanney Engineering Services Ltd. (1995), 9 B.C.L.R. (3d) 368; MacKinnon v. National Money Mart Co., 2004 BCCA 473, 50 B.L.R. (3d) 291; Third Eye Capital Corporation v. Dianor Resources Inc., 2019 ONCA 508, 435 D.L.R. (4th) 416; Cantore v. Nemaska Lithium Inc., 2020 QCCA 1333; DGDP-BC Holdings Ltd. v. Third Eye Capital Corporation, 2021 ABCA 226, 459 D.L.R. (4th) 538; Canada (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) v. Curragh Inc. (1994), 114 D.L.R. (4th) 176; GMAC Commercial Credit Corp. — Canada v. T.C.T. Logistics Inc., 2006 SCC 35, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 123; Orphan Well Association v. Grant Thornton Ltd., 2019 SCC 5, [2019] 1 S.C.R. 150; Endean v. British Columbia, 2016 SCC 42, [2016] 2 S.C.R. 162.

By Jamal J.

Referred to: Dell Computer Corp. v. Union des consommateurs, 2007

SCC 34, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 801; Seidel v. TELUS Communications Inc., 2011 SCC 15, [2011] 1 S.C.R. 531; Uber Technologies Inc. v. Heller, 2020 SCC 16.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Arbitration Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 55, ss. 1 "arbitration agreement", 15, 22.

Arbitration Act, S.B.C. 2020, c. 2, s. 4(a).

Arbitration Act, 1991, S.O. 1991, c. 17, ss. 7(2), 17(2).

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, ss. 71, 72(1), 183, 243.

Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36.

International Commercial Arbitration Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 233, s. 2(1) "party".

Treaties and Other International Instruments

Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards, Can. T.S. 1986 No. 43, art. II(3).

United Nations. Commission on International Trade Law. UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration, U.N. Doc. A/40/17, Ann. I, June 21, 1985, arts. 8(1), 16.

Authors Cited

Bennett, Frank. Bennett on Receiverships, 3rd ed. Toronto: Carswell, 2011.

British Columbia. Legislative Assembly. Official Report of Debates of the Legislative Assembly (Hansard), vol. 16, No. 7, 4th Sess., 33rd Parl., April 21, 1986, p. 7865.

Casey, J. Brian. Arbitration Law of Canada: Practice and Procedure, 3rd ed. Huntington, N.Y.: Juris, 2017.

Chan, Darius, and Sidharrth Rajagopal. “To Stay or Not to Stay? A Clash of Arbitration and Insolvency Regimes” (2021), 38 J. Int’l Arb. 457.

DaRe, Vern W., and Teodora Prpa. “Imagine One Restructuring Act in Canada” (2021), 36 B.F.L.R. 363.

Esslinger, Heidi. “Creditors Over Contract: A Case Comment on Chandos”, in Jill Corraini and D. Blair Nixon, eds., Annual Review of Insolvency Law 2021. Toronto: Thomson Reuters, 2022, 747.

Fortier, L. Yves. “Delimiting the Spheres of Judicial and Arbitral Power: ‘Beware, My Lord, of Jealousy’” (2001), 80 Can. Bar Rev. 143.

Houlden, L. W., G. B. Morawetz and Janis Sarra. Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law of Canada, 4th ed. rev. Toronto: Thomson Reuters, 2022 (loose-leaf updated March 2022, release 3).

Jackson, Georgina R., and Janis Sarra. “Selecting the Judicial Tool to get the Job Done: An Examination of Statutory Interpretation, Discretionary Power and Inherent Jurisdiction in Insolvency Matters”, in Janis P. Sarra, ed., Annual Review of Insolvency Law 2007. Toronto: Thomson Carswell, 2008, 41.

Joseph, David. Jurisdiction and Arbitration Agreements and Their Enforcement, 2nd ed. London: Thomson Reuters, 2010.

Kirgis, Paul F. “Arbitration, Bankruptcy, and Public Policy: A Contractarian Analysis” (2009), 17 Am. Bankr. Inst. L. Rev. 503.

Kröll, Stefan. “The ‘Incapable of Being Performed’ Exception in Article II(3) of the New York Convention”, in Emmanuel Gaillard, Domenico Di Pietro and Nanou Leleu-Knobil, eds., Enforcement of Arbitration Agreements and International Arbitral Awards: The New York Convention in Practice. London: Cameron May, 2008, 323.

Kühn, Wolfgang. “Arbitration and Insolvency” (2011), 5 Disp. Res. Int’l 203.

Lamm, Carolyn B., and Jeremy K. Sharpe. “Inoperative Arbitration Agreements Under the New York Convention”, in Emmanuel Gaillard, Domenico Di Pietro and Nanou Leleu-Knobil, eds., Enforcement of Arbitration Agreements and International Arbitral Awards: The New York Convention in Practice. London: Cameron May, 2008, 297.

McElcheran, Kevin P. Commercial Insolvency in Canada, 4th ed. Toronto: LexisNexis, 2019.

McEwan, J. Kenneth, and Ludmila B. Herbst. Commercial Arbitration in Canada: A Guide to Domestic and International Arbitrations. Toronto: Thomson Reuters, 2022 (loose-leaf updated February 2022, release 1).

Meshel, Tamar. "Petrowest v. Peace River Hydro: The Revocability and Separability of Commercial Arbitration Agreements" (2022), 65 Can. Bus. L.J. 329.

Pavlović, Marina, and Anthony Daimsis. "Arbitration", in John C. Kleefeld et al., eds., Dispute Resolution: Readings and Case Studies, 4th ed. Toronto: Emond Montgomery, 2016, 483.

Salzberg, Mark A., and Gary M. Zinkgraf. "When Worlds Collide: The Enforceability of Arbitration Agreements in Bankruptcy" (2007), 27 Franchise L.J. 37.

Schramm, Dorothee, Elliott Geisinger and Philippe Pinsolle. "Article II", in Herbert Kronke et al., eds., Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards: A Global Commentary on the New York Convention. Alphen aan den Rijn, The Netherlands: Kluwer Law International, 2010, 37.

St. John Sutton, David, Judith Gill and Matthew Gearing. Russell on Arbitration, 24th ed. London: Thomson Reuters, 2015.

Sullivan, Ruth. The Construction of Statutes, 7th ed. Toronto: LexisNexis, 2022.

Swan, Angela, Jakub Adamski and Annie Y. Na. Canadian Contract Law, 4th ed. Toronto: LexisNexis, 2018.

van den Berg, Albert Jan. The New York Arbitration Convention of 1958: Towards a Uniform Judicial Interpretation. Hingham, Mass.: Kluwer Law and Taxation, 1981.

Wood, Roderick J. Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law, 2nd ed. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2015.

APPEAL from a judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (Bennett, Dickson and Grauer JJ.A.), 2020 BCCA 339, 43 B.C.L.R. (6th) 8, 452 D.L.R. (4th) 535, 5 C.L.R. (5th) 31, 84 C.B.R. (6th) 174, 9 B.L.R. (6th) 163, [2021] 7 W.W.R. 195, [2020] B.C.J. No. 1940 (QL), 2020 CarswellBC 3008 (WL), affirming a decision of Iyer J., 2019 BCSC 2221, 5 C.L.R. (5th) 14, 74 C.B.R. (6th) 53, 100 B.L.R. (5th) 128, [2019] B.C.J. No. 2489 (QL), 2019 CarswellBC 3819 (WL). Appeal dismissed.

David de Groot, Joanne Luu, Robert Martz and Alison Scott, for the appellants.

Kelsey Meyer, Ciara Mackey, Stephanie Clark and Paul Romaniuk, for the respondents.

Laurent Debrun and Charles Côté-De Lagrave, for the intervener the Canadian Commercial Arbitration Center.

Lisa C. Munro and Cynthia B. Kuehl, for the intervener Arbitration Place.

Christina Doria, Michael Nowina and Brendan O'Grady, for the intervener the Chartered Institute of Arbitrators (Canada) Inc.

Kibben Jackson, Tom Posyniak and Glen Nesbitt, for the intervener the Insolvency Institute of Canada.

Anthony Daimsis, for the intervener the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

The judgment of Wagner C.J. and Moldaver, Côté, Rowe and Kasirer JJ. was delivered by

CÔTÉ J. —

[64] Further, procedural flexibility is a hallmark of both arbitration law and insolvency law.

[65] Chief among the reputed advantages of arbitration is the freedom of parties to choose their own procedural rules rather than being bound by rules of court (Seidel, at para. 22; Wellman, at paras. 48-56; L. Y. Fortier, "Delimiting the Spheres of Judicial and Arbitral Power: 'Beware, My Lord, of Jealousy'" (2001), 80 Can. Bar Rev. 143). This enhances expediency and cost-effectiveness in arbitral proceedings, where discovery procedures can be curtailed, written submissions can be used instead of witness testimony, and strict evidentiary rules can be relaxed (McEwan and Herbst, at §§ 2:1 and 7:12).

[66] Flexibility is likewise a characteristic of Canadian insolvency law. But in the insolvency context, both the court and the parties can tailor proceedings to fit a particular case. Indeed, the BIA and the CCAA both accord broad judicial discretion to, among other things, authorize the assignment and disclaimer of contracts and the sale of assets, impose and lift stays of proceedings, grant extensions of time, terminate proceedings, and approve creditor proposals (Wood, at pp. 432-33). Much like arbitration law does for arbitrating parties, Canadian insolvency law thus allows debtors, creditors, and courts "to design a process and [an] outcome that is appropriate for individual . . . cases" (McElcheran, at ¶¶5.11-5.12).

(c) Decision Makers With Specialized Expertise

[67] Finally, both arbitration law and insolvency law often rely on specialized decision makers to achieve their respective objectives.

[68] One "great merit" of arbitration is that parties are able to select a decision maker with "special expertise in the field of their dispute" (3GS Inc. v. Altus Group Ltd., 2011 ONSC 5755, 96 B.L.R. (4th) 268, at para. 19; McEwan and Herbst, at § 4:1).

[69] Similarly, specialized judicial expertise is essential to meet the challenges of complex restructuring and insolvency proceedings, often called the "hothouse of real-time litigation" (Century Services, at para. 58, quoting R. B. Jones, "The Evolution of Canadian Restructuring: Challenges for the Rule of Law", in J. P. Sarra, ed., Annual Review of Insolvency Law 2005 (2006), 481, at p. 484).

[70] The interests of expediency and procedural flexibility inform the need for judicial specialization in the realm of bankruptcy and insolvency. Indeed, in many provinces, there are specialist judges who take carriage of restructuring proceedings and all related issues. Their expertise and "file knowledge" allow them to find the right balance of procedural formality while meeting the need for timely resolution of disputes within the overall restructuring process (McElcheran, at ¶5.85).

[71] In sum, reliance on a decision maker with expertise in the relevant field is a core feature of both arbitration law and insolvency law, and for good reason. Specialized expertise can assist in capitalizing on other attributes that are also common to both bodies of law, such as expediency and procedural flexibility.

(d) Conclusion on the Interplay Between Arbitration Law and Insolvency Law

[72] In many cases, the shared interests in expediency, procedural flexibility, and specialized expertise will converge through arbitration. In such a scenario, the parties should be held to their agreement to arbitrate notwithstanding ongoing insolvency proceedings. In other words, the court should grant a stay of legal proceedings in favour of arbitration, and any dispute as to the scope of the arbitration agreement or the arbitrator's jurisdiction should be left to the arbitrator to resolve. As is evident from the foregoing, valid arbitration agreements are generally to be respected. This presumption in favour of arbitral jurisdiction is supported by this Court's longstanding jurisprudence, the pro-arbitration stance adopted in provincial and territorial legislation nationwide, and the foundational principle that contracting parties are free to structure their affairs as they see fit.

[73] However, in certain insolvency matters, it may be necessary to preclude arbitration in favour of a centralized judicial process. This may occur when arbitration would compromise the orderly and efficient conduct of a court-ordered receivership. In such a scenario, a court may assert control over the proceedings, both to ensure the timely resolution of the parties' dispute and to protect the public interest in the orderly restructuring or dissolution of the debtor and the equal treatment of its creditors. This authority arises from the statutory jurisdiction conferred on superior courts under ss. 243(1) and 183(1) of the BIA.

Valentin Pintea Appellant

v.

Dale Johns and Dylan Johns Respondents

and

National Self-Represented Litigants Project,
Pro Bono Ontario and Access Pro Bono Interveners

Indexed as: Pintea v. Johns

2017 SCC 23

File No.: 37109.

2017: April 18.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Wagner, Gascon, Côté, Brown and Rowe JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL OF ALBERTA

Civil procedure — Contempt of court — Required knowledge — Self-represented plaintiff failing to comply with case management orders and failing to attend case management meetings after having moved without filing change of address with court as required — Case management judge striking claim, finding plaintiff in contempt of court and awarding costs to defendants — Majority of Court of Appeal affirming decision — Dissenting judge finding that plaintiff's failure to attend case management meetings not act of contempt and that costs award significantly disproportionate consequence for failing to file change of address — Actual knowledge of impugned orders necessary for plaintiff to be found in contempt — Action restored and costs award vacated — Alberta Rules of Court, Alta. Reg. 124/2010, r. 10.52(3)(a)(iii).

Valentin Pintea Appelant

c.

Dale Johns et Dylan Johns Intimés

et

National Self-Represented Litigants Project,
Pro Bono Ontario et Access Pro Bono Intervenants

Répertorié : Pintea c. Johns

2017 CSC 23

N° du greffe : 37109.

2017 : 18 avril.

Présents : La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Wagner, Gascon, Côté, Brown et Rowe.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE L'ALBERTA

Procédure civile — Outrage au tribunal — Connaissance requise — Défaut par un demandeur non représenté de se conformer à des ordonnances relatives à la gestion de l'instance et de se présenter à des rencontres de gestion d'instance après avoir déménagé sans communiquer au tribunal son changement d'adresse comme il était tenu de le faire — Décision de la juge chargée de la gestion de l'instance radiant la demande, déclarant le demandeur coupable d'outrage au tribunal et adjugeant les dépens en faveur des défendeurs — Arrêt de la Cour d'appel confirmant cette décision à la majorité — Opinion dissidente concluant que le défaut du demandeur de se présenter aux rencontres de gestion d'instance ne représentait pas un outrage au tribunal et que la condamnation aux dépens constituait une conséquence disproportionnée par rapport à l'omission d'avoir communiqué le changement d'adresse — Preuve de la connaissance réelle par le demandeur des ordonnances en cause requise pour justifier sa condamnation pour outrage au tribunal — Rétablissement de l'action en justice et annulation de la condamnation aux dépens — Alberta Rules of Court, Alta. Reg. 124/2010, art. 10.52(3)(a)(iii).

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Alberta Rules of Court, Alta. Reg. 124/2010, r. 10.52(3)(a)(iii).

Authors Cited

Canadian Judicial Council. Statement of Principles on Self-represented Litigants and Accused Persons, September 2006 (online: https://www.cjc-ccm.gc.ca/cmslib/general/news_pub_other_PrinciplesStatement_2006_en.pdf; archived version: http://www.scc-csc.ca/cso-dce/2017SCC-CSC23_1_eng.pdf).

APPEAL from a judgment of the Alberta Court of Appeal (Martin, McDonald and Veldhuis JJ.A.), 2016 ABCA 99, [2016] A.J. No. 432 (QL), 2016 CarswellAlta 772 (WL Can.), affirming a decision of the Court of Queen's Bench (Kenny J.). Appeal allowed.

Colin Feasby, Sean Sutherland and Adam LaRoche, for the appellant.

Duncan C. Boswell and Alyssa J. Duke, for the respondents.

Ilan Ishai and Ranjan Agarwal, for the intervener the National Self-Represented Litigants Project.

Andrew Bernstein, Jeremy Opolsky and Leora Jackson, for the interveners Pro Bono Ontario and Access Pro Bono.

The judgment of the Court was delivered orally by [1] KARAKATSANIS J. — The common law of civil contempt requires that the respondents prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Mr. Pintea had actual knowledge of the Orders for the case management meetings he failed to attend.

[2] The case management judge failed to consider whether Mr. Pintea had actual knowledge of two of the three Orders upon which she based her

Lois et règlements cités

Alberta Rules of Court, Alta. Reg. 124/2010, art. 10.52(3)(a)(iii).

Doctrine et autres documents cités

Conseil canadien de la magistrature. Énoncé de principes concernant les plaideurs et les accusés non représentés par un avocat, septembre 2006 (en ligne : https://www.cjc-ccm.gc.ca/cmslib/general/news_pub_other_PrinciplesStatement_2006_fr.pdf; version archivée : http://www.scc-csc.ca/cso-dce/2017SCC-CSC23_1_fra.pdf).

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de l'Alberta (les juges Martin, McDonald et Veldhuis), 2016 ABCA 99, [2016] A.J. No. 432 (QL), 2016 CarswellAlta 772 (WL Can.), qui a confirmé une décision de la Cour du Banc de la Reine (juge Kenny). Pourvoi accueilli.

Colin Feasby, Sean Sutherland et Adam LaRoche, pour l'appelant.

Duncan C. Boswell et Alyssa J. Duke, pour les intimés.

Ilan Ishai et Ranjan Agarwal, pour l'intervenant National Self-Represented Litigants Project.

Andrew Bernstein, Jeremy Opolsky et Leora Jackson, pour les intervenantes Pro Bono Ontario et Access Pro Bono.

Version française du jugement de la Cour rendu oralement par

[1] LA JUGE KARAKATSANIS — Suivant les règles de la common law relatives à l'outrage au tribunal en matière civile, les intimés doivent prouver hors de tout doute raisonnable que M. Pintea connaissait réellement l'existence des ordonnances fixant la tenue des rencontres de gestion d'instance auxquelles il a omis d'assister.

[2] La juge chargée de la gestion de l'instance a omis de se demander si M. Pintea connaissait réellement l'existence de deux des trois ordonnances decision. The respondents concede that the requirements of Rule 10.52(3)(a)(iii) of the Alberta Rules of Court, Alta. Reg. 124/2010, were not met with respect to these two Orders.

[3] As a result, the finding of contempt cannot stand.

[4] We would add that we endorse the Statement of Principles on Self-represented Litigants and Accused Persons (2006) (online) established by the Canadian Judicial Council.

[5] The appeal is allowed, the action is restored and the costs award vacated.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitors for the appellant: Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt, Calgary.

Solicitors for the respondents: Gowling WLG (Canada), Calgary.

Solicitors for the intervener the National Self-Represented Litigants Project: Bennett Jones, Toronto.

Solicitors for the interveners Pro Bono Ontario and Access Pro Bono: Torys, Toronto.

sur lesquelles elle a basé sa décision. Les intimés concèdent que les conditions d'application du sous-al. 10.52(3)(a)(iii) des Alberta Rules of Court, Alta. Reg. 124/2010, n'étaient pas réunies à l'égard de ces deux ordonnances.

[3] En conséquence, la conclusion selon laquelle il y a eu outrage au tribunal ne saurait être maintenue.

[4] Nous tenons à souligner que nous souscrivons à l'Énoncé de principes concernant les plaideurs et les accusés non représentés par un avocat (2006) (en ligne) établi par le Conseil canadien de la magistrature.

[5] L'appel est accueilli, l'action en justice est rétablie et la condamnation aux dépens est annulée.

Jugement en conséquence.

Procureurs de l'appelant : Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt, Calgary.

Procureurs des intimés : Gowling WLG (Canada), Calgary.

Procureurs de l'intervenant National Self-Represented Litigants Project : Bennett Jones, Toronto.

Procureurs des intervenantes Pro Bono Ontario et Access Pro Bono : Torys, Toronto.

CITATION: R. v. Liu, 2024 ONSC 2022
COURT FILE NO.: CR-23-30000629-0000
DATE: 20240405

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:	)
	)
HIS MAJESTY THE KING	)	Ben Snow, Counsel for the Crown Respondent
Respondent	)
	)
– and –	)
	)
GUO-XIONG LIU	)	Brian Brody, Counsel for the Applicant Liu
Applicant	)
	)
	)	HEARD: March 22, 2024
	)

M.A. CODE J.

REASONS FOR JUDGEMENT ON SECTION 11(B) CHARTER APPLICATION

A. OVERVIEW

[1] The Applicant Guo-Xiong Liu (hereinafter, Liu) is charged in an Indictment alleging sexual interference, invitation to sexual touching, possession of child pornography, sexual assaults, and extortion. The information charging these offences was sworn on February 21, 2019 and the Indictment is presently set to be tried in this Court on June 10, 2024. The case is scheduled as a seven day jury trial which is anticipated to conclude on June 18, 2024.

[2] Liu brought a pre-trial Application seeking to stay the trial proceedings on the basis of an alleged violation of his s. 11(b) Charter right to trial within a reasonable time. It can be seen that the total delay in the case is 1944 days (or about 64 months, or five years and four months). Needless to say, this total delay is well beyond the Jordan presumptive ceiling of 30 months. See: R. v. Jordan (2016), 335 C.C.C. (3d) 403 (S.C.C.); R. v. Cody (2017), 349 C.C.C. (3d) 488 (S.C.C.).

[3] The parties substantially agreed that significant parts of the total delay which occurred in the Ontario Court of Justice must be deducted because of the Covid-19 pandemic, which is an "exceptional circumstance" under the Jordan framework. The parties also substantially agreed, by the end of oral argument, that some part of the delay that occurred in the Superior Court of Justice must be deducted as "defence delay" under the Jordan framework. In the result, the case ends up being very close to the 30 month presumptive ceiling.

[4] After hearing a full day of oral argument on March 22, 2024, I reserved judgement on the s. 11(b) Application. These are my reasons for judgement.

B. FACTS

[5] The parties filed a substantial documentary record which included all of the relevant transcripts, numerous emails between counsel and the Trial Coordinators, and other relevant documents such as the JPT form and the Trial Confirmation forms. The Crown also summarized the allegations against Liu as involving alleged sexual abuse of his niece, from a time when she was four or five years old until she was 16 years old. Liu was in his 20s and 30s at the time. He is alleged to have taken sexual photographs of her when she was six years old and then to have used the photographs to extort various sexual acts in the following years. The gravity of these allegations is relevant to the s. 11(b) Application only because it helps to explain why the case was given a "priority" designation when it was being scheduled in this Court.

[6] There are five specific periods of delay that are in dispute. The first two are relatively short. The last three are much longer. These five periods will be analysed in detail in the next section of these Reasons, when characterizing the cause of particular delays. By way of overview, the history of the proceedings can be summarized as falling into five broad blocks of time, as follows:

- First, there was an intake period of just over six months, from February 21, 2019 until August 27, 2019. During this period the Crown made disclosure, the accused retained counsel (and changed counsel), a Crown pre-trial was held, a Judicial Pre-Trial (JPT) was held, and a date was set for the preliminary inquiry. The only dispute concerning this initial period is whether the change in defence counsel caused any delay;

- Second, there was substantial delay in completing the preliminary inquiry because of the Covid-19 pandemic. The parties had scheduled a one day preliminary inquiry at the JPT on August 27, 2019. The scheduled date was April 14, 2020. This was about seven and a half months after the JPT, which is reasonably expeditious. Had the preliminary inquiry proceeded as scheduled, the Ontario Court of Justice part of the case would have concluded in less than 14 months (which is under the applicable 18 month Jordan presumptive ceiling for this stage of the proceedings). However, the Ontario Court of Justice closed on March 15, 2020, because of the pandemic. As a result, the preliminary inquiry did not proceed on its scheduled April 14, 2020 date. The Ontario Court of Justice slowly reopened later in the year, a new JPT was held on December 7, 2020, and new preliminary inquiry dates were set for September 15 and 16, 2021 (the anticipated length of the preliminary inquiry had now expanded to one and a half days). The preliminary inquiry proceeded as scheduled on the new dates, the complainant testified for two full days, and the accused was committed for trial. This entire second period of delay was just over two years, from the first JPT on August 27, 2019 until the committal for trial on September 16, 2021. The parties agree that most of this period should be characterized as a "discrete event" under the Jordan "exceptional circumstance" category, due to the pandemic. That "discrete event" extends from the first preliminary inquiry date on April 14, 2020 until the date of committal on September 16, 2021. The only dispute about this 17 month "discrete event" is whether there was 36 days of unreasonable Crown delay during this period when the parties were rescheduling a post-Covid JPT (the assigned Crown had been appointed a judge and the new assigned Crown rescheduled the JPT);

- Third, the first period of delay in the Superior Court of Justice was just over a year, extending from the committal on September 16, 2021 until the trial date on October 3, 2022. During this period, a JPT was held before Himel J. on October 14, 2021. Five days later, on October 19, 2021, the case was scheduled in Practise Court as a seven day jury trial starting on October 3, 2022. There is considerable dispute between the parties as to whether defence counsel's unavailability contributed to this period of delay and, if so, by how much;

- Fourth, the second period of delay in the Superior Court of Justice was also a year, from October 5, 2022 when the first scheduled trial did not proceed, until October 3, 2023 which became the second scheduled trial date. The reason why the trial did not proceed is clear. The parties appeared on three consecutive days, from October 3 to 5, 2022, and Kelly J. advised that there were no judges available to preside over the trial that week. Considerable efforts were made to reschedule the case, including in the following week when the Court and Crown were both available. At this point, defence counsel's unavailability became a significant issue, which will be discussed in some detail in the next section of these Reasons. In the end, a second trial date was set for October 3, 2023; and

- Fifth, the third and last period of delay in the Superior Court of Justice was just over eight months. This period extended from October 5, 2023, when the second scheduled trial did not proceed, until June 10, 2024 which now became the third scheduled trial date. Once again, the reason why the trial did not proceed is clear. The parties appeared on three consecutive days, from October 3 to 5, 2023, and Forestell J. advised that there were no judges available that week to preside at the trial. Once again, considerable efforts were made to reschedule the case, including in the following weeks and months when numerous dates were offered by the Crown and the Court. As on the prior occasion, defence counsel's unavailability because a serious issue. The case is still scheduled as a seven day jury trial and so it is now anticipated to conclude on June 18, 2024.

C. ANALYSIS

[7] The Jordan framework for analysing s. 11(b) delay is well-known and I need not recite it in these Reasons. Each of the five periods of delay that are in dispute in this case raise discrete factual and legal issues. I will discuss those issues in the next five sub-sections of these Reasons. As noted previously, the first two disputed periods are relatively short. The last three periods are far more significant.

(i) The change in counsel during the intake period

[8] There were five court appearances during the initial six month intake period. Mr. Lee appeared as counsel for the Applicant Liu on the first three appearances. No disclosure was available on the first appearance. Mr. Lee picked up two packages of disclosure on the second and third appearances. He was in the process of reviewing the disclosure and scheduling a Crown pretrial with the assigned Crown, Mr. Fraser, at the time of the third appearance. Shortly after this appearance, the Applicant Liu changed counsel and Mr. Brody was retained, prior to the fourth court appearance. At that fourth appearance, counsel from Mr. Brody's office advised the Court that their firm was now on the record, that they had already conducted a Crown pre-trial with Mr. Fraser, and that they had already scheduled a JPT for August 27, 2019. The matter was then put over to the fifth court appearance, for the scheduled JPT. This was the last appearance during the six month intake period.

[9] The Crown submits that the change in counsel caused some delay and seeks to quantify that "defence delay" as 42 days. This is the time between the third appearance on May 16, 2019, when Mr. Lee last appeared on the record, and the fourth appearance on June 27, 2019, when Mr. Brody's firm first appeared.

[10] It is well established in the s. 11(b) case law that a change in counsel can be a cause of delay, usually because it leads to an adjournment in order to allow the new counsel to prepare and/or to become available. In these circumstances, the period of this adjournment is deducted from the total delay and is characterized as "defence delay". See, eg: R. v. Jordan, supra at para. 120; R. v. Cody, supra at para. 40; R. v. Gandhi, 2016 ONSC 5612 at paras. 42-45. I am not persuaded that the change in counsel in this case actually caused any delay. When Mr. Brody's firm came on the record at the fourth appearance, he did not seek an adjournment in order to obtain the Crown disclosure from Mr. Lee's file, in order to review that disclosure, or in order to arrange a Crown pre-trial. Indeed, Mr. Brody's law firm had already taken all these steps and had taken the further step of scheduling a JPT. During oral argument, it became clear that the Crown's real criticism of the initial intake process was that the first lawyer, Mr. Lee, had been unreasonably slow in picking up and reviewing disclosure and in scheduling a Crown pre-trial. I have read the transcripts of Mr. Lee's three court appearances and I cannot properly assess this issue on the present record.

[11] In the result, there should be no deduction for "defence delay" due to the change in counsel. The entire six month intake period, although not a model of expedition, should be included in the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling.

(ii) Delay in scheduling the post-Covid JPT due to Mr. Fraser's judicial appointment

[12] As summarized above, the parties are in substantial agreement as to the proper s. 11(b) characterization of the second block of time in the Ontario Court of Justice. It totals just over two years, from the August 27, 2019 date of the JPT until the September 16, 2021 date of the committal for trial. The first seven and a half months of this period, from the JPT until the initial April 14, 2020 date set for the preliminary inquiry, is undoubtedly part of the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling. However, the remaining 17 month period is a "discrete event" because the pandemic intervened and prevented the preliminary inquiry from proceeding, from its first scheduled date on April 14, 2020 until its second scheduled date on September 16, 2021. See: R. v. Agpoon, 2023 ONCA 449. The only dispute is whether 36 days should be carved out of this "discrete event" because the Crown unreasonably delayed the scheduling of the post-Covid JPT. Mr. Brody's submission to this effect is factually detailed and it relates to the timing of Mr. Fraser's judicial appointment and the timing of the post-Covid JPT.

[13] I have read the relevant emails between counsel. The Ontario Court of Justice required a new JPT for cases like the present one that had not proceeded during the pandemic and that had to be rescheduled. These were substantive post-Covid JPTs, and not just pro forma rescheduling JPTs. The Ontario Court of Justice now had a serious pandemic backlog and efforts were being made to either resolve the delayed cases or to shorten and streamline these cases. Mr. Fraser sent an email on October 5, 2020, suggesting dates for this new JPT. Mr. Brody replied the next day, on October 6, 2020. He accepted one of Mr. Fraser's suggested dates, namely, October 27, 2020. Three days later, on October 9, 2020, Mr. Fraser was appointed to the Ontario Court of Justice. A series of emails ensued, between October 13 and 16, 2020, in which Mr. Fraser advised of his judicial appointment and the need to assign a new Crown, and the new assigned Crown advised that he was available to attend the JPT "in early December." The parties then agreed on December 2, 2020 as the date for the post-Covid JPT.

[14] Mr. Brody submits that the 36 days between the October 27, 2020 JPT date, that counsel had agreed to prior to Mr. Fraser's appointment, and the December 2, 2020 JPT date that counsel agreed to after Mr. Fraser's appointment, is unreasonable or unjustified Crown delay. Mr. Brody submits that a new Crown should have been able to attend a JPT on the previously agreed October 27, 2020 date. The Crown, on the other hand, submits that Mr. Fraser's judicial appointment was an unforeseen "discrete event" that justifies this 36 day period of delay. Mr. Snow, in his submissions on behalf of the Crown, stresses the importance of having an assigned Crown attend the new JPT, after first learning the file, in order to be able to engage in substantive resolution and/or streamlining discussions at the JPT.

[15] I agree with the Crown. The main premise of Mr. Brody's position is that any Crown could and should have been prepared to attend an October 27 JPT on 18 days notice, after Mr. Fraser's judicial appointment on October 9, 2020. In my view, it was necessary in the exigent circumstances of the pandemic backlog, to have an assigned Crown who was fully briefed on the case attend the JPT, in order to make substantive decisions about how to resolve or streamline the case. Mr. Fraser's judicial appointment was an unforeseen "discrete event" that justified this short 36 day period of delay, by allowing sufficient time to assign a new Crown who could read the file and schedule the JPT on a reasonably early date that was available in the newly assigned Crown's calendar. See: R. v. Cody, supra at paras. 48-49.

[16] In the result, the entire 17 month period from April 14, 2020 (the first scheduled preliminary inquiry date) until September 16, 2021 (the second scheduled preliminary inquiry date) should be characterized as an "exceptional circumstance", due to the Covid-19 pandemic and due to Mr. Fraser's judicial appointment. On the other hand, the period from February 21, 2019 (when the information was sworn) until April 14, 2020 (when the pandemic prevented the preliminary inquiry from proceeding), is all included in the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling. This period is approximately 13 months and three weeks. It means that the case was under the 18 month Jordan ceiling for Ontario Court of Justice proceedings at the time of committal.

(iii) The first period of delay in the Superior Court of Justice

[17] The parties initially proceeded expeditiously in this Court by arranging a JPT before Himel J. on October 14, 2021, which was less than a month after committal. It is noted on the JPT Form that the parties estimated there had been about 13 months of justifiable or deductible delay in the Ontario Court of Justice. Accordingly, they estimated that the normal 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling (which would have ended on August 21, 2021, if there were no justifiable deductions) should be extended to September 21, 2022. It can be seen from my above analysis of delay in the Ontario Court of Justice that the period of "discrete event" delay caused by the pandemic and by Mr. Fraser's judicial appointment was in fact 17 months. Counsel cannot be faulted for their conservative estimate of 13 months of justifiable or deductible delay, given that they did not have the benefit of the post-pandemic jurisprudence. In particular, R. v. Agpoon, supra was not decided until 2023. As a result of counsel's conservative estimate, to the effect that September 21, 2022 was the "Net Jordan date", Himel J. went on to note on the JPT Form that "depending on trial date, defence may bring s. 11(b)." In other words, it was known from the time of the JPT that the case was in potential s. 11(b) Charter jeopardy, depending on the scheduled trial date.

[18] The record is clear that the Crown took this potential s. 11(b) jeopardy seriously and sought a "priority date" from the Court, "given delay issues." This is how Ms. Garrity put it, when scheduling the trial in Practise Court. Ms. Garrity is the Superior Court administrative Crown for the Scarborough Crown Office and her efforts in this matter were exemplary. She stated the above, on the record before Brown J. when setting the trial date. She went on to state that the Trial Coordinator's Office had assigned "our priority slot" for the case, namely, March 14, 2022. However, Mr. Brody was not available on this date. His earliest available date was July 11, 2022. After that, he had availability from late September and into October 2022. I have reviewed the Trial Confirmation Form and the email correspondence between the Crown, Mr. Brody, and the Trial Coordinator's Office and they all confirm the above statements made by Ms. Garrity. The emails also state that the Court's earliest "non-priority slot would be December 5, 2022." These references to "priority dates" and "priority slots" and "non-priority slots" reflect the scheduling practices that the Court adopted after the pandemic, in order to cope with the very significant post-pandemic backlog that had built up. It was a form of "triage" in which certain particularly serious cases, and/or particularly delayed cases, and/or in custody cases, were offered the earliest trial dates. The Court of Appeal referred to these practices with approval in R. v. Agpoon, supra at paras. 32-34. It is telling that the earliest "non-priority" date for the case was December 5, 2022, which was more than 14 months after Liu's committal. This "non-priority" date was almost nine months later than the Court's earliest "priority" date of March 14, 2022. In other words, the "triage" practice of offering early dates to certain "priority" cases had a dramatic impact on available trial dates.

[19] Mr. Brody's earliest available date for a seven day jury trial was July 11, 2022. This was a date in the summer sittings, when fewer judges are available because of summer holidays. The Trial Coordinator's Office advised that "the Court cannot offer a summer date for this matter". The Trial Coordinator went on to state that, "The next available date in a priority slot that would be in line with the availability provided by counsel would be October 3, 2022 for seven days jury." Accordingly, the trial date was set for October 3, 2022.

[20] The delay between committal on September 16, 2021 and the October 3, 2022 trial date is about 12 and a half months. During the course of oral argument on the s. 11(b) Application, Mr. Brody eventually conceded that some portion of this period should be characterized as "defence delay", because of his unavailability on the early "priority" date of March 14, 2022, when the Court and the Crown were both ready to proceed. The only issue was how much of this period should be characterized as "defence delay". I agree with this concession.

[21] The s. 11(b) law in this area, concerning defence unavailability, has become subtle and complex. In both Jordan and Cody, the Court stated the following: "the defence will have directly caused the delay if the Court and the Crown are ready to proceed, but the defence is not. The period of delay resulting from that unavailability will be attributed to the defence" (Jordan, supra at para. 64); and "where the Court and Crown are ready to proceed, but the defence is not, the resulting delay should also be deducted" (Cody, supra at para. 30). In the subsequent case law, applying this principle, a line of authority held that defence counsel's unavailability on an earlier date offered by the Court and the Crown meant that all of the ensuing delay until the date when all parties were available was "defence delay". See, e.g. R. v. Mallozzi, 2018 ONCA 312; R. v. Safdar (2021), 403 C.C.C. (3d) 91 at paras. 44-45 (Ont. C.A.). The simple logic of these authorities was that, but for defence counsel's unavailability on the earlier date, none of the ensuing delay until the actual date when all parties were available would have occurred. It was, therefore, "resulting delay" pursuant to Jordan and Cody. In the present case, applying the principle from Mallozzi and Safdar, the approximately five and a half months of delay, from April 14, 2022 until October 3, 2022, would all be "defence delay".

[22] In my view, the Mallozzi and Safdar approach to delay caused by defence counsel's unavailability appears to have been overtaken by more recent authorities. A more nuanced "contextual approach" has developed in which, "All relevant circumstances should be considered to determine how delay should be apportioned." It could be argued that this apparent change in the law detracts from the clarity, simplicity, and predictability that Jordan and Cody intended. See: R. v. Hanan (2023), 426 C.C.C. (3d) 1 at para. 9 (S.C.C.); R. v. Hanan (2022), 412 C.C.C. (3d) 233 at paras. 47-59 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Boulanger (2022), 411 C.C.C. (3d) 279 at paras. 8-10 (S.C.C.); R. v. Albinowski (2018), 371 C.C.C. (3d) 190 at para. 46 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Bowen-Wright, 2024 ONSC 293 at paras. 38-43. In the latter case, my colleague Schreck J. helpfully summarized some of the more important factors to consider when assessing "resulting delay" caused by defence counsel's unavailability, under this modern "contextual approach".

[23] In this case, the March 14, 2022 "priority date" offered by the Crown and the Court was exactly five months after the JPT that was held before Himel J. on October 14, 2021. Defence counsel had advised Himel J. at the JPT that a s. 11(b) Application may be brought, "depending on the trial date". As a result, the Crown and the Court made significant efforts to offer a "priority slot" to this case, which gave it real precedence in the pandemic backlog, because it was a serious case and because it was potentially in some s. 11(b) jeopardy. At the time of the JPT, in the fall of 2021, there were very few jury trials proceeding in the Superior Court in Toronto, because of pandemic restrictions. Indeed, jury trials were once again completely suspended on December 17. 2021. Over two months later, on February 28. 2022, jury trials resumed in Toronto. This was exactly two weeks before the "priority date" of March 14, 2022 that was offered to this case for a jury trial. See: R v. Agpoon, supra at paras.27-29 (and the attached Appendix); R. v. Buick and Marsh, 2023 ONSC 42 at paras. 39-36; R. v. Andrew, 2024 ONSC 607 at paras. 12-17; R. v. Nikiforos, 2024 ONSC 456 at paras. 12 and 20. All of these cases discuss the severely restricted access to jury trials in Toronto during this period, due to the pandemic. Mr. Brody's earliest available date was July 11, 2022, during the summer sittings when fewer judges were available. There was nothing stated on the record by Mr. Brody as to why there was no availability in his calendar for this period of about nine months, from October 14, 2021 until July 11, 2022. Mr. Brody's approach to "availability" in his calendar was to become clearer, once the October 3, 2022 trial date was reached, as will be discussed below. More importantly, Mr. Brody advised me that he is a member of a law firm in which there are three criminal litigators (some of whom appeared on this case from time to time in various roles). Nothing was stated on the record as to whether Mr. Brody and his law firm were willing to make efforts to rearrange their schedules in order to give this case priority, given its gravity and given its s. 11(b) jeopardy. As Schreck J. stated in Bowen-Wright, supra at para. 36, "Counsel's calendars are not written in stone. Matters collapse and availability changes." I agree with Schreck J. Especially in a law firm with three criminal litigators, there is usually flexibility between these three calendars, which often allows criminal defence firms to give a particular case priority. In my view, there is nothing in the record to indicate that Mr. Brody had understood and had incorporated the proactive, cooperative, and preventative change in culture that is expected and required in the post-Jordan world. See: R. v. Jordan, supra at paras. 5, 40-41, 86, and 137-139; R. v. Cody, supra at paras. 31-35; R. v. Albinowski, supra at para. 50; R. v. Bowen-Wright, supra at para. 22.

[24] In conclusion concerning this first period of delay in the Superior Court, the sole cause of the delay between March 14, 2022 (when the Court and the Crown were available on a "priority date") and July 4, 2022 (when the summer sittings began and the Court had less availability), was defence counsel's unavailability. During the July and August summer months, and during September 2022, the Court was unavailable. There was no explanation for Mr. Brody's nine month period of unavailability or for his silence concerning the post-Jordan need to proactively cooperate and prevent delay by at least trying to rearrange the law firm's calendars, especially given the challenges of the pandemic backlog and given the need to prioritize this case. In all the above circumstances, applying the approach set out in Hanan and Boulanger, I would characterize the three and a half month period from March 14, 2022 until July 4, 2022, as "defence delay". The rest of the twelve and a half month period between committal on September 16, 2021 and the October 3, 2022 trial date should be included in the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling.

[25] In the result, by the time the case reached its first trial date on October 3, 2022, the total Jordan delay since the information was sworn on February 21, 2019 was approximately 43 and a half months. However, approximately 17 months was due to the "discrete event" delay in the Ontario Court of Justice and approximately three and a half months was due to "defence delay" in the Superior Court. These two periods must be deducted, leaving net Jordan delay of about 23 months. In other words, the case was still under the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling at this stage when it reached the first trial date on October 3, 2022.

(iv) The second period of delay in the Superior Court of Justice

[26] There is no ambiguity about what happened when this case reached its first scheduled trial date on October 3, 2022. The parties were both ready to proceed. They appeared in what has become known as "Trials in Holding Court". Kelly J., a former leader of the criminal team, was presiding. The role of this Court is to assemble all the cases scheduled for trial in that week and determine which cases are ready for trial, which cases are discussing resolution, and which cases are not ready to proceed for any number of reasons (for example, due to unavailable witnesses, sickness of counsel, or the Crown simply reassessing its case). This phenomenon is known as the "collapse rate" and it has always existed in the criminal courts, at least in my experience over the last 45 to 50 years. After assessing the "collapse rate", the usually experienced judge who is presiding in this Court (which starts at 9:00 a.m.) assigns those cases that are ready to proceed and that have not already been assigned to available judges, sends the cases that are discussing resolution to a further JPT, and orders the remaining cases to return the next day (when they may resolve or be unable to proceed, or when a further judge or judges may become available). This process repeats itself, usually over the first three days of every week.

[27] The corollary of the "collapse rate" on the day of trial, is that trial lists have historically been overbooked. There are almost always excess cases scheduled for trial in a given week because the reality is that a certain number of cases invariably "collapse", either on the trial date, shortly before the trial date, or shortly after the trial date. As a result, trial scheduling involves some art and some science. Trial Coordinators and scheduling judges try to predict the likely "collapse rate". In some weeks these predictions are accurate and in other weeks they are inaccurate. A properly functioning Court will have enough flexibility, in terms of available judges, so that a judge can be called upon to take up a case that has not collapsed and that has not been assigned. When the Court has no such flexibility, because of a shortage of judges, a case that is ready to proceed and that has not been assigned, will not be reached. In other words, the Court must have enough judges to try the cases that do not "collapse".

[28] On Monday, October 3, 2022, Kelly J. inquired about "the Jordan status" of the Liu case and asked, "are there Jordan issues?" Mr. Brody replied, as follows: "As of right now, no … But they're, Jordan is always an issue … But at the moment, we're within the 30 months". Kelly J. advised, "there's not a judge available now" but asked the parties to return at 11:00 a.m. to see if other assigned cases had collapsed. When the parties returned later, Kelly J. advised, "There's still no judge available for your matter" and asked the parties to return the next day.

[29] On Tuesday, October 4, 2022, the current criminal team leader, Forestell J. was presiding. She advised the parties as follows: "We do not yet have a judge for you, I'm afraid. We are doing our very best to see if someone can be located either in this jurisdiction or another. And so I apologize for the inconvenience to you, but I'm going to have you come back again tomorrow morning."

[30] On Wednesday, October 5, 2022, Kelly J. was presiding. There were extensive discussions on the record on this date. I will set them out in some detail because they are important. Kelly J. advised that either she or Forestell J. could start the Liu trial if there was a re-election. Mr. Brody advised that there was no possibility of a re-election. Kelly J. then advised that "there is no court available today." Mr. Snow stated, "The Crown is eager to have it proceed. I hope Mr. Brody is as well. Our witnesses were available. They will remain available next week even, if there were any hope." Kelly J. asked the parties to speak to the Trial Coordinator "to see whether or not they can accommodate you starting [next week] on Tuesday." At this point, Mr. Brody stated, "I have serious 11(b) concerns" and advised that the case was "42 months old". Kelly J. asked, "Why weren't these [s. 11(b) issues] raised on Monday, when things were being assigned?" Mr. Brody explained that he had simply stated that "as of right now, if the trial proceeds, we're under the ceiling." At this point, Kelly J. stated somewhat forcefully, "I think that maybe you should get in the queue for Tuesday then [next week], for a trial." At this point, Mr. Brody stated that he had "other matters". Kelly J. again intervened somewhat forcefully and told counsel to speak to the Trial Coordinator and see whether there was a judge available next week. She also asked Mr.

Brody to "check your schedule and see if you can accommodate this … Let's see if that's available first [a judge next week]. And then we'll talk about whether or not things can be rearranged on your schedule." [Emphasis added].

[31] After speaking to the Trial Coordinator, the parties reappeared before Kelly J. On behalf of the Crown, Mr. Snow advised as follows: "We did hear back that they would be available to set this down again for seven days starting next Tuesday, October 11". Mr. Snow stated that the Crown and its witnesses would be available next week. Mr. Brody then stated the following: "To start a seven day trial on the sixth day of the scheduled trial would cause a lot of chaos in my schedule. Specifically, I have a very serious sex assault at the end of this month involving two young complainants." Kelly J. challenged Mr. Brody on this point, stating "What's the end of the month though? If you start it [the Liu case] on October 11 … you'd be done by the 19." Mr. Brody agreed but stated, "It's a matter of preparation [of the case at the end of the month]." Mr. Brody also stated, "there's no guarantee" the Liu trial would be reached next week. Kelly J. replied, "I'd make sure that you were given some priority." Mr. Brody continued to stress concerns about preparing his other sexual assault case scheduled for the end of the month. He conceded that it was scheduled for trial on October 31st and if the Liu trial ended on October 19th there would still be eleven or twelve days to prepare for the next trial. His only other scheduled case during this period was a "drinking and driving" matter that "could certainly be rescheduled". Nevertheless, he insisted that his preparation of the other sexual assault trial scheduled for October 31st would be prejudiced. He stated: "I have yet to even begin to prepare him or meet with him [the other client]. I have three scheduled prep meetings with him starting on the 12th, all the way up until his trial date … I would have to cancel essentially three preparation meetings with my client who has an incredibly serious matter at the end of the month … if I started this trial [the Liu matter], I'm afraid that I would be neglected in my preparation for a very important matter coming up at the end of the month. [Emphasis added].

[32] At this point, Kelly J. directed the parties to appear in Practice Court in order to obtain a new trial date. What immediately ensued was further efforts by the Crown to secure early trial dates. In a series of emails between October 5 and 7, 2022, Ms. Garrity obtained a number of "priority dates" from the other Superior Court administrative Crowns in the other Toronto boroughs. These dates were in October, November, and December 2022 and in February 2023. Mr. Brody responded by stating simply, "Not available for any of those dates." He followed up by asking, "Is the court available for those dates?" Ms. Garrity responded, "To the best of my knowledge the dates are available to the court." She also offered to explicitly confirm this for Mr. Brody and she received an email back from the Trial Coordinator confirming that the offered dates were available. There was nothing in Mr. Brody's email explaining why he was unavailable or suggesting that he and his law firm were willing to try to rearrange their schedules, in order to accommodate an early trial date in the Liu case. [Emphasis added].

[33] On October 18, 2022, the parties appeared in Practice Court before Presser J. At this appearance, Ms. Garrity confirmed on the record that the early trial dates in October, November, and December of 2022 and February of 2023 had been offered to Mr. Brody but that the "earliest date … available to Mr. Brody's schedule" was October 2, 2023. The Trial Confirmation Form similarly states that defence counsel's "first available date" was October 2, 2023. The parties returned to Practice Court a month later, on November 15, 2022, to again address the possibility of earlier trial dates. Ms. Garrity stated, "I was in communication with Mr. Brody to see if he could provide earlier dates, because this October [2023] date was set based on his schedule, and he's advised me that he does not have any earlier dates." Counsel from Mr. Brody's office confirmed, "my instructions are similar to what my friend stated, Mr. Brody does not have earlier dates currently." On both of these appearances in Practice Court, there was once again no explanation for Mr. Brody's unavailability and no suggestion made that Mr. Brody and his law firm would be willing to try to rearrange their schedules in order to accommodate an early trial date in the Liu case. [Emphasis added].

[34] On the above factual record, there are two legal issues in dispute: first, the characterization of delay due to a shortage of judges; and second, delay due to defence counsel's unavailability. This second legal issue in dispute turns on whether any portion of the 12 month period of delay from October 5, 2022 (when the first trial date did not proceed) until October 2, 2023 (when the second trial date was scheduled to proceed) should be characterized as "defence delay". The relevant legal principles relating to defence counsel's unavailability during this period have already been set out above, based on more recent cases like Hanan, Boulanger, Albinowski, and Bowen-Wright. I need not repeat them.

[35] Many of the circumstances that are relevant to the assessment of defence counsel's unavailability during this second period of delay in the Superior Court are similar to the circumstances previously discussed above in relation to the first period of delay in the Superior Court. However, there are also important differences. First of all, Mr. Brody's earlier period of unavailability was for a somewhat shorter nine month period. On this subsequent occasion, his unavailability was for a longer twelve month period. In this regard, see R. v. Bowen-Wright, supra at para. 42. Second, Mr. Brody offered at least one date on the earlier occasion (July 11, 2022) that was within the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling, albeit the date offered was during the summer sittings and it was unavailable to the Court. On this subsequent occasion, Mr. Brody offered no dates that were within the 30 month ceiling. In other words, the case was now in greater s. 11(b) jeopardy and Mr. Brody's lack of availability was becoming worse. Once again, there was no hint or suggestion that Mr. Brody and his law firm were willing to participate in the new post-Jordan culture of trying to proactively and cooperatively reduce and prevent delays in the justice system. In this regard, Mr. Brody's conduct stands in marked contrast to the conduct of defence counsel in R. v. Bowen-Wright, supra at para. 46, of defence counsel in R. v. Alli, infra at paras. 5-6 and 11, and of defence counsel in R. v. Constantino, infra at paras. 58 and 143, who all actively made efforts to prevent looming trial delays in cases which similarly involved unavailable judges. Furthermore, the Court was now offering a significant number of early trial dates and Mr. Brody was unavailable on all of these dates, with no explanation for his unavailability. In this regard, see R. v. Albinowski, supra at paras. 31-35.

[36] The one new factor that is most damaging to the Applicant Liu is that there is now evidence in the record concerning the reasons for Mr. Brody's unavailability (at least on the one occasion where he addressed this issue). Kelly J. and the Crown worked diligently to make a judge available to commence the Liu trial on October 11 and to conclude the trial by October 19, 2022. Mr. Brody rejected this offer because he was of the view that 11 or 12 days out of court after the anticipated end of the Liu trial would be insufficient time to prepare for his next sexual assault trial, which was scheduled to begin on October 31, 2022. Kelly J. did not accept this explanation, nor do I. Mr. Brody's submissions before Kelly J. were patently unreasonable. He described the trial preparation schedule that would result from Kelly J.'s proposed new trial date for the Liu case as "chaos". He also stated that he would have to "cancel" his preparation meetings with his client in the upcoming October 31 trial and that his trial preparation would be "neglected". I challenged Mr. Brody, during oral argument, as to the good faith of the position he took before Kelly J. He could not add any new insight concerning why he claimed to be "unavailable" for the present trial, if it was rescheduled during the October 11 to 19, 2022 time period. I am satisfied that 11 or 12 full days out of court, after the conclusion of the Liu trial, would have allowed sufficient time to reschedule Mr. Brody's three trial preparation meetings with his client and it would have allowed Mr. Brody to be fully prepared for his client's sexual assault trial. There was simply no reasonable explanation for Mr. Brody's refusal to accept the October 11, 2022 trial date offered by Kelly J. and the Crown.

[37] All of the above circumstances satisfy me that Mr. Brody's conduct at this stage exhibited a "marked indifference toward delay" and amounted to "illegitimate defence conduct", as those terms were explained by the unanimous Court in R. v. Cody, supra at paras. 31-35:

> The determination of whether defence conduct is legitimate is "by no means an exact science" and is something that "first instance judges are uniquely positioned to gauge" (Jordan, at para. 65). It is highly discretionary, and appellate courts must show a correspondingly high level of deference thereto. While trial judges should take care to not second-guess steps taken by defence for the purposes of responding to the charges, they must not be reticent about finding defence action to be illegitimate where it is appropriate to do so.
>
> Defence conduct encompasses both substance and procedure — the decision to take a step, as well as the manner in which it is conducted, may attract scrutiny. To determine whether defence action is legitimately taken to respond to the charges, the circumstances surrounding the action or conduct may therefore be considered. The overall number, strength, importance, proximity to the Jordan ceilings, compliance with any notice or filing requirements and timeliness of defence applications may be relevant considerations. Irrespective of its merit, a defence action may be deemed not legitimate in the context of a s. 11(b) application if it is designed to delay or if it exhibits marked inefficiency or marked indifference toward delay.
>
> As well, inaction may amount to defence conduct that is not legitimate (Jordan, at paras. 113 and 121). Illegitimacy may extend to omissions as well as acts (see, for example in another context, R. v. McQuaid, [1998] 1 S.C.R. 244, at para. 37). Accused persons must bear in mind that a corollary of the s. 11(b) right "to be tried within a reasonable time" is the responsibility to avoid causing unreasonable delay. Defence counsel are therefore expected to "actively advanc[e] their clients' right to a trial within a reasonable time, collaborat[e] with Crown counsel when appropriate and . . . us[e] court time efficiently" (Jordan, at para. 138).
>
> This understanding of illegitimate defence conduct should not be taken as diminishing an accused person's right to make full answer and > defence. Defence counsel may still pursue all available substantive and procedural means to defend their clients. What defence counsel are not permitted to do is to engage in illegitimate conduct and then have it count towards the Jordan ceiling. In this regard, while we recognize the potential tension between the right to make full answer and defence and the right to be tried within a reasonable time — and the need to balance both — in our view, neither right is diminished by the deduction of delay caused by illegitimate defence conduct.

>
> We stress that illegitimacy in this context does not necessarily amount to professional or ethical misconduct on the part of defence counsel. A finding of illegitimate defence conduct need not be tantamount to a finding of professional misconduct. Instead, legitimacy takes its meaning from the culture change demanded in Jordan. All justice system participants — defence counsel included — must now accept that many practices which were formerly commonplace or merely tolerated are no longer compatible with the right guaranteed by s. 11(b) of the Charter. [Italics in the original; underlining added for emphasis].

[38] Turning to the second legal issue in dispute in relation to this period of delay, namely, delay due to a shortage of judges, this is the one new factor that favours the Applicant Liu. In my view, the immediate precipitating cause of this second period of delay in the Superior Court was the lack of available judges in the week of October 3, 2022. There are unjustified systemic reasons for this shortage of judges. The failure of the federal government to fill vacancies on the Superior Court, in a timely way, has been discussed by my three colleagues Forestell J. in R. v. Alli, 2023 ONSC 5829, Schreck J. in R. v. Bowen-Wright, supra, and P. Campbell J. in R. v. Constantino, 2024 ONSC 491. I adopt their reasoning on this point and have little to add.

[39] The Supreme Court of Canada decided Jordan in 2016 and made it clear that the government's neglect of essential "resource issues" related to s. 11(b) was "constitutionally impermissible". As the majority of the Court put it (Jordan, supra at para. 117):

> We are aware that resource issues are rarely far below the surface of most s. 11(b) applications. By encouraging all justice system participants to be more proactive, some resource issues will naturally be resolved because parties will be encouraged to eliminate or avoid inefficient practices. At the same time, the new framework implicates the sufficiency of resources by reminding legislators and ministers that unreasonable delay in bringing accused persons to trial is not merely contrary to the public interest: it is constitutionally impermissible, and will be treated as such. [Emphasis added].

[40] The Minister of Justice must have known that the new Jordan framework for s. 11(b) analysis was less flexible and less forgiving than the old Askov and Morin framework and that the new presumptive ceilings gave the courts much less margin for error. At the same time, rapid unprecedented population growth and increases in certain serious crimes placed increased demands on the Superior Court, particularly in large urban centres like Toronto. Finally, the significant pandemic backlog created an entirely new pressure on the workload of the court. The government must have been aware of these significant new pressures. In all these circumstances, the intransigent ongoing failure to fill judicial vacancies in a timely way is inexplicable and inexcusable. As stated above, the immediate precipitating cause of the delays that occurred from October 3 to 5, 2022, was the systemic failure of the federal Cabinet to appoint judges. As I understand the current state of the law, this one factor, standing alone, would require apportioning of responsibility for the 12 month period of delay from October 5, 2022 until October 2, 2023. See: R. v. Boulanger, supra at paras. 8-9; R. v. Hanan, supra at para. 7 (S.C.C.); and R. v. Hanan, supra at paras. 57-59 (Ont. C.A.). Having said that, Mr. Brody could have immediately mitigated almost all of this delay by reasonably agreeing to Kelly J.'s and the Crown's efforts to reschedule the trial for October 11, 2022.

[41] In all the above circumstances, a "fair and reasonable" apportionment of this 12 month period of delay in the Superior Court, as required by Boulanger and Hanan, is to attribute one third or four months to the systemic failure of the federal government and two thirds or eight months to "defence delay". In the result, by the time the case reached its second trial date on October 2, 2023, the total Jordan delay since the information was sworn on February 21, 2019 was now just over 55 months. However, the 17 month "discrete event" in the Ontario Court of Justice and the two periods of "defence delay" in the Superior Court (three and a half months and eight months), meant that the net Jordan delay was now approximately 27 months. In other words, the trial could still have proceeded within the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling at the time when it reached the second trial date on October 2, 2023.

(v) The third and last period of delay in the Superior Court of Justice

[42] The second trial date had originally been scheduled for Monday, October 2, 2023. However, judges of the Court were directed not to sit that day, in order to respect the National Day for Truth and Reconciliation. In addition, the following Monday, October 9, 2023 was Thanksgiving Day. As a result, both weeks scheduled for the Liu trial were short four day weeks. The seven day trial was effectively scheduled to run from Tuesday, October 3, 2023 until Thursday, October 12, 2023.

[43] The parties appeared on Tuesday, October 3, 2023 before Forestell J. who was presiding in "Trials in Holding Court". She advised as follows: "as with the last matter, we do not have a judge for you today. We are hopeful that maybe we'll have a judge by tomorrow." She asked the parties to appear the next day.

[44] On Wednesday, October 4, 2023, Forestell J. advised the parties: "we do not have a judge for this case." Mr. Brody then stated the following: "I can advise that this is the second time this matter's been up … my perspective is that tomorrow [Thursday] would be sort of the cut-off date, being that it's a seven day trial …. If it would start on Friday even at best, there's no way that I think it would finish by the end of next week. And then I have trials the week after … I'm hoping that we can get a courtroom tomorrow." On behalf of the Crown, Mr. Snow stated that he was "eager to have this matter heard … there is some delay jeopardy, given how outdated it's become. It's a very serious matter with a complainant who wishes to have it heard in court." Forestell J. replied that she was "very conscious of the delay and the impact it's having on all the participants. Unfortunately, we simply don't have enough judges to hear these cases." She noted that there were three juries out deliberating in the Court House and she hoped that one of these judges might become available tomorrow. [Emphasis added].

[45] On Thursday, October 5, 2023, the parties again appeared before Forestell J. She advised: "we don't have a judge available. I'm very sorry." Mr. Brody advised that there would likely be a s. 11(b) Application because "this is now the second trial date that hasn't been reached." Mr. Snow stated that the Crown would "prioritize this" and was "prepared to go into the trials in holding … next Tuesday … we'll do everything we can to offer dates this fall and to prioritize this." Mr. Brody replied: "I'm going to try to do the same. Obviously, my goal is not to bring a s. 11(b) Application. My goal is to have this trial heard in a timely fashion. However … the courts have talked about perpetual availability. Obviously, I can't be available in a week or two from now, I have a schedule that requires … my attention to other clients. However, again, I will do everything that I can to try and accommodate this trial as quickly as possible. And I guess that's something that my friend and I can do between the two of us." The case was then remanded to Tuesday, October 10, 2023 in Practice Court. [Emphasis added].

[46] Over the next three days, prior to the scheduled Practice Court appearance, the parties exchanged an important series of emails about the new trial date, as follows:

- On the afternoon of the final appearance before Forestell J., on October 5, 2023, Ms. Garrity advised Mr. Brody that the Crown was available during three large blocks of time in October to November 2023, in November to December of 2023, and in January of 2024. Each block of time was about a month. Ms. Garrity also stated, "I understand that there is court availability for all of these weeks" subject to "final approval" with the Trial Coordinator;

- Mr. Brody replied that same day: "I'm not available on any of those dates. Defence lawyers are not to be held in perpetual availability. We'll have to canvass dates further down the road, as well as an 11(b) date" [Emphasis added];

- Mr. Brody followed up with another email that same day asking about Crown counsel's availability: "Are you telling me that Ben Snow is available for all of those dates?"

- Ms. Garrity replied that Mr. Snow's "schedule will be reorganized to accommodate the dates offered" and that the case "would be reassigned" for one particular December date if Mr. Snow was not available;

- Mr. Brody then replied, "I am not available for those dates." This was the last email on October 5, 2023 [Emphasis added];

- The next day, October 6, 2023, Ms. Garrity sent an email to Mr. Brody advising of a large number of additional dates when the Crown was available. They were all "further down the road", as Mr. Brody had requested. The five additional blocks of time were as follows: two weeks in early February 2024; two weeks in early March 2024; nine days in late April and early May 2024; two weeks in late May 2024; and 25 days in June 2024. Ms. Garrity stated: "To the best of my knowledge, there is court time available on all of these dates at this time";

- Mr. Brody replied that same day asking the following: "Are you telling me that the Court has now been unavailable on two occasions to hear this matter and now will be available that many dates for the third trial? I want confirmation that the court is available for all of those dates" [Emphasis added];

- In response, Ms. Garrity exchanged emails the next day (October 7, 2023) with the Trial Coordinator confirming the Court's availability in the five additional blocks of time between early February and late June 2024. These emails also confirmed the Court's availability in the three earlier blocks of time between mid-October 2023 and late January 2024;

- Mr. Brody was copied on these October 7, 2023 emails. Although the emails were in response to his request for "confirmation" that the Court was available during the eight blocks of time being offered by the Crown, he did not respond during October 7, 8, or 9, 2023 [Emphasis added].

[47] On October 10, 2023, the parties appeared in Practice Court, pursuant to Forestell J.'s remand, in order to set a new date for trial. Spies J. was presiding. Ms. Garrity advised that she had confirmed with Mr. Brody, pursuant to his request, that "all of the dates that I had provided to him … were also available to the court." She then stated, "we're not in a position to be able to set the trial date today because we have not received Mr. Brody's available dates." Counsel appearing for Mr. Brody stated, "Yes, and that's all correct." Accordingly, the case was remanded for another week in order to obtain Mr. Brody's available dates and then set the new trial date in Practice Court [Emphasis added].

[48] A further chain of emails ensued on October 10, 2023, shortly after the above appearance in Practice Court. The Trial Coordinator again offered an early trial date on November 14, 2023. Mr. Brody replied, "I'm available on August 26, 2024. I would also like an 11(b) date." Ms. Garrity responded, stating that the Crown was available on Mr. Brody's suggested August 26, 2024 date, although it was in the summer sittings. Ms. Garrity also offered a number of dates for the s. 11(b) Application. There was also discussion about potential dates in the fall of 2024. Finally, Mr. Brody sent an email stating, "I believe I will have the week of June 10th [2024] available." This eventually led to an exchange of emails on October 17, 2023 in which both Mr. Brody and the Crown confirmed their availability for trial on June 10, 2024 as the new trial date [Emphasis added].

[49] The Trial Confirmation Form is generally consistent with the above history. It states that the Crown's first available date was October 10, 2023, that the Court's first available date was November 27, 2023, and that Mr. Brody's first available date was June 10, 2024. [Emphasis added].

[50] This final period of delay in the Superior Court, from October 5, 2023 (when the second scheduled trial date did not proceed) until June 10, 2024 (the new trial date), is just over eight months. The legal principles that apply to the proper characterization of this period of delay have been set out above, when analysing the two previous periods of Superior Court delay. Many of the same circumstances that characterized the two earlier periods of Superior Court delay continued to apply. However, there were also some differences.

[51] The first important difference is that the systemic failure of the federal government to fill judicial vacancies in a timely way had now continued for another full year. In other words, the government had knowingly allowed the Court to continue without its full judicial complement during an unprecedented crisis of rapid population growth, increasing numbers of certain serious crimes, and a pandemic backlog. The judgement of Forestell J. in R. v. Alli, supra at paras. 18-25, was written in late 2023 and it was released on December 11, 2023. She described the situation in the Court between April and December 2023, that is, during this same final period of delay that is at issue in the Liu case. She stated the following, which I adopt:

> This jurisdiction has a very high volume of serious and complex cases. The volume of cases in this jurisdiction has increased appreciably in recent years. As noted by Molloy J. in R. v. R.D., Toronto has a higher percentage of complex trials and long trials than other jurisdictions. There are more homicide trials in Toronto than in any other jurisdiction in Canada. There are also more large 'project' cases in Toronto than in other jurisdictions. The 'project' cases can involve hundreds of accused and multiple, complex applications. The length and complexity of trials has increased with no increase in the number of judges and no increase in the number of courtrooms.
>
> In addition, this jurisdiction continues to deal with a backlog of cases created by the suspension of jury trials for a total of approximately 11 months during periods of the COVID-19 pandemic. While the last jury suspension ended about twenty months ago, the completion of backlogged trials in addition to the normal caseload has created ongoing systemic delay.
>
> …
>
> In April of 2023 when this trial was not reached because there was no judge available to hear it, this jurisdiction had seven judicial vacancies. There are still seven vacancies in this jurisdiction. The number of vacancies has remained essentially unchanged for at least a year.
>
> On May 3, 2023, 20 days after this trial was not reached because of a lack of judicial resources, Chief Justice Wagner expressed his concern about the chronic shortage of federally appointed judges. He pointed out that courts were operating with 10 to 15 per cent of their judicial positions vacant. These comments are applicable to this jurisdiction.
>
> Had the judicial positions in Toronto been filled, this case and others would not have been delayed.
>
> …
>
> Judges of this Court are working at capacity. It is common for judges on the criminal team in Toronto to work through scheduled non-sitting weeks and even through vacation weeks to attempt to ensure that trials > are heard in a timely fashion. All participants in the process have done everything possible to avoid delay. This case has taken longer than it should have because this court lacked the judicial resources to hear the case in a timely manner. [Emphasis added].

[52] In my view, it was unacceptable for the federal government to have ignored the May 2023 written warning from the Chief Justice of Canada, set out above in R. v. Alli, supra. This kind of stubborn institutional refusal to respond to a crisis in the justice system is inexcusable and it is "constitutionally impermissible", as the Supreme Court put it in Jordan, supra at para. 117.

[53] The second possible difference from the earlier periods of delay is that Mr. Brody was now using the language of the new post-Jordan culture, at least during one appearance before Forestell J. on October 5, 2023. I have underlined the more important passages above, for emphasis, where Mr. Brody agreed with the Crown to "prioritize" the case and to do "everything that I can to try to accommodate this trial as quickly as possible." Unfortunately, Mr. Brody's actions were not consistent with these words. The tone and content of his scheduling emails with the Crown was aggressive, adversarial, rigid, and uncooperative. They also give the appearance of a lawyer who was trying to build a s. 11(b) record, as opposed to a lawyer who was trying to prevent delay. He was preoccupied with proof or "confirmation" of the court's availability. He was firmly "unavailable" on the numerous blocks of time that were offered by the Court and the Crown for an early trial. He never responded with a willingness to try to rearrange his schedule, for example, by working with the members of his law firm and with all their calendars, in order to give the Liu case priority. He never explained why he was consistently and firmly "unavailable" for another lengthy eight month period of time. The closest he came to any such explanation was when he told Forestell J., "I have trials the week after", in reference to the week of October 16, 2023. He did not elaborate as to whether these "trials" were, for example, drinking and driving cases that could easily be adjourned if he had started a serious Superior Court jury trial on October 10, 2023 and that trial was continuing, which is what the Crown was suggesting. Once again, Mr. Brody's conduct stands in stark contrast to those cases where defence counsel's unavailability on a particular date has been found to be reasonable. For example, in R. v. Safdar, supra at para. 50, Feldman J.A. stated the following on behalf of the Court:

> In my view, based on the trial judge's factual findings, he was entitled to conclude that this period of delay was not solely or directly caused by the defence. First, and importantly, the April dates were offered as continuation dates in the midst of the ongoing trial. The inadequacy of the trial estimate was therefore part of the cause of the delay. Second, these dates were offered on relatively short notice. Third, as the trial judge found, defence counsel had agreed to all other dates that were offered, including other dates offered with little notice. The April dates were the only exception. Finally, defence counsel had legitimate reason to decline these continuation dates. One counsel was booked on a serious Superior Court matter for a client who was in custody, while another was scheduled for medical treatment. The trial judge appropriately recognized that counsel could not, in good faith, "compromise one client's interests for another". [Emphasis added].

[54] In my view, Mr. Brody's conduct continued to display the kind of "marked inference to delay" and "illegitimate defence conduct", as described by the Supreme Court in Cody, supra at paras. 31-35. That conduct contributed significantly to this final eight month period of delay in the Superior Court, together with the federal government's ongoing and aggravated failure to appoint judges in a timely way.

[55] Applying the "contextual approach" to apportioning this period of delay, as described in Hanan and in Boulanger, I would divide it equally between the above two causes of delay. In other words, one half or about four months should be deducted from the total Jordan delay as "defence delay". The remaining half or approximately four months of delay should be included when calculating compliance or non-compliance with the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling. As a result, the net Jordan delay when the presently scheduled trial concludes will be approximately 31 months.

D. CONCLUSION

[56] When analysing the above five periods of delay in this case, I have used rough approximations of the net Jordan delay, as each of the five periods progressed. These approximations have been expressed in months. It can be seen that the result of this analysis is that the net Jordan delay will be approximately 31 months when the presently scheduled trial concludes on June 18, 2024.

[57] Given that the approximate period of net delay is just over the 30 month Jordan ceiling, out of an abundance of caution, I have done a more detailed calculation of the net delay using days rather than months. That more detailed calculation is as follows:

- The first period of delay is the intake period. It extended from February 21 until August 27, 2019. As explained above (at paras. 8-11), this entire period is included in the 30 month Jordan ceiling. It is a total of 188 days;

- The second period of delay is the time spent in the Ontario Court of Justice, between the JPT on August 27, 2019 until committal for trial on September 16, 2021. As explained above (at paras. 12-16), this period of delay is separated into two distinct parts. The time from the JPT on August 27, 2019 until the April 14, 2020 date set for the preliminary inquiry is included in the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling. It is a total of 231 days. The remainder of this period, from April 14, 2020 (when the preliminary inquiry did not proceed) until the committal on September 16, 2021, is "discrete event" delay due to the pandemic and it is not included in the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling;

- The third period of delay is the time spent in the Superior Court of Justice, between the committal on September 16, 2021 and the first trial date on October 3, 2022. As explained above (at paras. 17-25), after deducting the "defence delay" between March 14, 2022 and July 4, 2022, this period should be included in the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling. It is a total of 271 days;

- The fourth period of delay is the time spent in the Superior Court of Justice between October 3, 2022 (when the first trial date did not proceed) and the second trial date on October 2, 2023. As explained above (at paras. 26-41), this 364 day period was apportioned such that two thirds was "defence delay". As a result, one third of this period is included in the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling. It is a total of 121 days; and

- The fifth period of delay is the time spent in the Superior Court of Justice between October 3, 2023 (when the second trial date did not proceed) and June 18, 2024 (when it is anticipated the third scheduled trial period will conclude). As explained above (at paras. 42-55), this 260 day period was apportioned such that one half was "defence delay". As a result, one half of this period is included in the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling. It is a total of 130 days.

[58] The five periods of delay set out above, that are included in the 30 month Jordan presumptive ceiling, total 941 days. This is clearly over the 30 month presumptive ceiling, which is 913 days. As a result, the s. 11(b) Application is allowed and the trial proceedings in this case are stayed pursuant to s. 24(1) of the Charter.

[59] I cannot leave this Application without saying, in conclusion, that it is an embarrassment to the administration of justice that this serious "priority" case, involving alleged sexual abuse of a child, cannot be tried in accordance with the constitutional standard of trial "within a reasonable time".

M.A. Code J.

Released: April 5, 2024

CITATION: R. v. Liu, 2024 ONSC 2022
COURT FILE NO.: CR-23-30000629-0000
DATE: 20240405

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

HIS MAJESTY THE KING

Respondent

– and –

GUO-XIONG LIU

Applicant

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT
ON SECTION 11(B) CHARTER APPLICATION

M.A. Code J.

Released: April 5, 2024

CITATION: R. v. Bowen-Wright, 2024 ONSC 293
COURT FILE NO.: CR-23-50000298-0000
DATE: 20240115

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:
HIS MAJESTY THE KING	Respondent	I. Islow, for the respondent
– and –
GIVONN BOWEN-WRIGHT	Applicant	R. Handlarski, for the applicant
		HEARD: December 5, 2023

RULING
(Application Pursuant to ss. 11(b) and 24(1) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms)

SCHRECK J.:

[1] On May 29, 2023, Givonn Bowen-Wright attended the Superior Court of Justice ("SCJ") in Toronto to begin his trial on firearm possession charges. As is often the case in this jurisdiction, the trial could not proceed because no judge was available. Despite the best efforts of counsel for the Crown and Mr. Bowen-Wright, the trial could not be rescheduled until the first week of December, and was scheduled to end about 30 months and 43 days after Mr. Bowen-Wright was first charged. As this period exceeds the 30-month ceiling for trials in the SCJ established in R. v. Jordan, 2016 SCC 27, [2016] 1 S.C.R. 631, Mr. Bowen-Wright has applied to have the proceedings stayed on the basis that his s. 11(b) Charter right to a trial within a reasonable time has been infringed.

[2] The Crown opposes the application and submits that there were periods of defence delay, in particular arising out of the defence counsel's unavailability during the fall of 2023. Once the defence delay is deducted, the Crown submits, the net delay is below the ceiling. In the alternative, the Crown submits that any delay over the ceiling is justified on the basis that this was a particularly complex case.

[3] The central issue on this application is the treatment of defence unavailability where a trial has to be adjourned through no fault of the defence. In this case, both the Crown and the defence had availability at various periods between the end of May and December, but the December date was the earliest on which both parties and the court were available. Nonetheless, the Crown submits that because it was available as early as September, all subsequent delay should be attributed to the defence, even though the defence had available dates earlier than that.

[4] As the Supreme Court of Canada made clear in Jordan, at para. 111, the days of determining s. 11(b) applications by engaging in "complicated micro-counting" are over. Courts must instead conduct a global assessment based on a "bird's eye-view" of the case: Jordan, at para. 97. In this case, the trial did not proceed as scheduled because, as is frequently the case in this jurisdiction, no judge was available. This is not an acceptable state of affairs which can be remedied by expecting defence counsel to make themselves available on short notice. Counsel for both parties did everything they could to protect Mr. Bowen-Wright's s. 11(b) rights, which were imperilled solely because of institutional shortcomings. The fact that they were unable to do so is not the fault of the defence, nor was this a particularly complex case. The delay in this case was unreasonable. The charges are stayed.

I. FACTS

A. Arrest – The Murder Charge and Appearances in the Ontario Court of Justice

[5] The applicant was arrested on April 26, 2021 and charged together with three co-accused with second degree murder and various firearm possession charges. He appeared in the Ontario Court of Justice ("OCJ") several times over the course of a few months while the defence awaited disclosure. A judicial pre-trial ("JPT") was held on September 3, 2021. On September 23, 2021, the parties scheduled a preliminary inquiry to commence on May 30, 2022.

[6] On the first day of the preliminary inquiry, Crown counsel advised the court that he had concluded that there was no reasonable prospect of conviction on the murder charge or any of the other charges faced by the co-accused. As a result, those charges were withdrawn, leaving the applicant charged alone with the firearm possession offences. As he was no longer eligible to have a preliminary inquiry, the matter was adjourned to June 22, 2022 so that the applicant could consider how to elect his mode of trial. He ultimately elected to have his trial in the SCJ before a judge and jury.

B. Initial Appearances in the Superior Court

[7] The applicant's first appearance in the SCJ was on July 15, 2022, at which time the matter was adjourned to August 12, 2022 as a JPT had been scheduled for July 22.

[8] On August 12, 2022, an agent appearing on behalf of the applicant's counsel requested that the matter be adjourned for three weeks to seek instructions on whether to re-elect the mode of trial:

> AGENT: Your Honour, [defence counsel] has been on vacation for the past two weeks. He needs to discuss the potential of the election.

> So I have instructions to request to adjourn this matter for three weeks to September 2nd to allow for that discussion.
>
> CROWN COUNSEL: That's agreeable, thank you.

The matter was accordingly adjourned to September 2, 2022. As will be seen, the respondent takes the position that this was not a legitimate request and that this period of time ought to be deducted as defence delay.

[9] On September 2, 2022, a seven-day trial before a judge and jury was scheduled to begin on May 29, 2023.

C. Adjournment of the May Trial

[10] On May 29, 2023, the parties appeared before Goldstein J., who advised the parties that there was no judge available to conduct the trial. The parties were advised that this was "the next matter in priority" and it was adjourned to the following day.

[11] On May 30, 2023, the parties advised Goldstein J. that the applicant was prepared to re-elect his mode of trial and that they had agreed on a number of facts and now believed that the trial could be done in three days. Goldstein J. advised them that there were still two trials for which no judge was available and that it was very unlikely that the matter would be reached. The matter was adjourned to June 2, 2023 on the understanding that the parties would be contacted if a judge became available that week. This did not occur.

D. Efforts to Find New Dates

[12] On the same day that the trial was adjourned, counsel began corresponding about finding new trial dates. Defence counsel advised the Crown that he expected another matter of his to resolve, in which case he would be available during the weeks of June 12 and June 19.

[13] Later that day, Crown counsel proposed the weeks of September 18 and October 2 and inquired whether defence counsel had any available dates in July or August. Defence counsel replied that he was unavailable during the weeks of September 18 and October 2, but was available the week of July 31. The Crown does not appear to have responded to the suggestion of the July date.

[14] On June 2, 2023, defence counsel advised the Crown that he was now available during the weeks of June 12 and 19. On June 6, Crown counsel responded in an e-mail as follows:

> The TC [Trial Coordinator] will not permit us to set this matter the week of June 19-23/23. As I understand it has been very challenging getting matters on recently. Please advise whether you have any other dates in the fall. The previous dates provided (Sept 18/23 [7 > days]; Oct 2/23 [5 days]) were specific to Toronto West but we will canvass with the other Boroughs if you have other dates to suggest.[1]

Defence counsel responded the same day:

> I have no other dates in the fall. The next dates I have are February 5, 2024, to February 16, 2024. I am going to write an e-mail to the trial coordinator to explain the situation. I had a two-week trial that collapsed in that timeframe. Unless they have already filled that slot, it is difficult for me to understand why the trial cannot be that week.
>
> I am not sure I mentioned this date before, but I can also do August 21, 2023 to August 25, 2023. Any chance this can work?

Crown counsel responded that the week of August 21 did not work because of "witness issues" and said, "I'm going to suggest we start canvassing other dates. If you get traction with the Trial Coordinator, we can circle back." On June 6, 2023, the Trial Co-Ordinator confirmed that the June dates were not available.

[15] On June 15, 2023, Crown counsel advised defence counsel that she had checked the Etobicoke trial calendar and could offer the week of September 18, 2023 (which had been offered earlier) as well as weeks in late December 2023 and January to March 2024. Defence counsel responded that the only week he was available was February 19, 2024 and that "I currently do not have any availability in the fall, but will be in touch with you if anything collapses."

[16] On June 16, 2023, the parties appeared before Presser J. and explained the efforts that had been made to find trial dates. Crown counsel stated:

> So Ms. Culp [Crown counsel who had been corresponding with defence counsel] had indicated that she tried to make the summer dates work. Unfortunately, there was nothing that worked for the Crown's schedule and Mr. Handlarksi's [defence counsel] schedule. She is suggesting that we bring this back some time in the early fall, maybe early September to see whether anything has opened up. And the Crown will do their best to try and find earlier dates that work for everybody.

A trial was scheduled to begin on February 20, 2024 and the matter was adjourned to September 15, 2023 to canvass earlier dates.

E. Selection of the New Trial Date

[1] At the time, there were four Crown Attorney's offices in Toronto: Etobicoke (which was prosecuting the applicant's matter), North York, Scarborough and Downtown. Trial time in the SCJ was allotted to each, as well as the Federal Crown.

[17] On September 13, 2023, Crown counsel advised defence counsel that the weeks of October 23, October 30, November 14 and December 4 (all of which would have the trial end after the Jordan ceiling date of October 26) had become available. Defence counsel responded that he had "just had a matter collapse" and was available on the week of December 4. The trial was accordingly scheduled to begin on that date on the next court appearance on September 15, 2023.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Overview of Applicable Legal Principles

(i) The Jordan Analysis

[18] Since 2016, applications pursuant to s. 11(b) of the Charter have been governed by the approach set out in R. v. Jordan, which is centred on the concept of a presumptive ceiling, that is, a period of time after which delay is presumably unreasonable unless the Crown can justify the length of time the case has taken to come to trial. In this court, that ceiling is 30 months. The period to which the ceiling must be compared is the time from when the charge is first laid until the end of the trial, less any defence delay: Jordan, at paras. 63-64.

[19] If the net delay after defence delay is deducted exceeds the ceiling, the delay is presumptively unreasonable unless the Crown can demonstrate that there are exceptional circumstances, which include discrete, unforeseen events and particularly complex cases: Jordan, at para. 71.

[20] If the net delay is below the ceiling, the delay is presumptively reasonable unless the defence can show that it took meaningful steps demonstrating a sustained effort to expedite the proceedings and that the case took markedly longer than it reasonably should have: Jordan, at paras. 82-91.

(ii) Shared Responsibility

[21] The Supreme Court of Canada had very specific objectives in establishing the new framework in Jordan. The Court wished to address a "culture of complacency towards delay" that permeated the criminal justice system, which had "come to tolerate excessive delays": Jordan, at paras. 4, 40-41. It made it clear that the attitude and conduct of parties and courts had to change (at para. 107):

> … [T]he ceiling will not permit the parties or the courts to operate business as usual. The ceiling is designed to encourage conduct and the allocation of resources that promote timely trials. The jurisprudence from the past decade demonstrates that the current approach to s. 11(b) does not encourage good behaviour. Finger pointing is more common than problem solving.

[22] Preventing delay is a shared responsibility. Crown counsel, defence counsel and the courts all have a role to play and are expected to cooperate with a view to ensuring that trials occur within a reasonable time: Jordan, at paras. 86, 137-139. The legislative and executive branches of government also have a role to play, as was made clear in Jordan, at para. 117:

> We are aware that resource issues are rarely far below the surface of most s. 11(b) applications. By encouraging all justice system participants to be more proactive, some resource issues will naturally be resolved because parties will be encouraged to eliminate or avoid inefficient practices. At the same time, the new framework implicates the sufficiency of resources by reminding legislators and ministers that unreasonable delay in bringing accused persons to trial is not merely contrary to the public interest: it is constitutionally impermissible, and will be treated as such.

(iii) Defence Delay

[23] As will be seen, the concept of defence delay plays a central role in this application. It was explained in R. v. Cody, 2017 SCC 31, [2017] 1 S.C.R. 659, at paras. 28-30:

> In broad terms, the second component is concerned with defence conduct and is intended to prevent the defence from benefitting from "its own delay-causing action or inaction" (Jordan, at para. 113). It applies to any situation where the defence conduct has "solely or directly" caused the delay (Jordan, at para. 66).
>
> However, not all delay caused by defence conduct should be deducted under this component. In setting the presumptive ceilings, this Court recognized that an accused person's right to make full answer and defence requires that the defence be permitted time to prepare and present its case. To this end, the presumptive ceilings of 30 months and 18 months have "already accounted for [the] procedural requirements" of an accused person's case (Jordan, at para. 65; see also paras. 53 and 83). For this reason, "defence actions legitimately taken to respond to the charges fall outside the ambit of defence delay" and should not be deducted (Jordan, at para. 65).
>
> The only deductible defence delay under this component is, therefore, that which: (1) is solely or directly caused by the accused person; and (2) flows from defence action that is illegitimate insomuch as it is not taken to respond to the charges. As we said in Jordan, the most straightforward example is "[d]eliberate and calculated defence tactics aimed at causing delay, which include frivolous applications and requests" (Jordan, at para. 63). Similarly, where the court and Crown are ready to proceed, but the defence is not, the resulting delay should also be deducted (Jordan, at para. 64).

B. Overall Delay and Positions of the Parties

[24] The applicant was charged on April 26, 2021 and his trial was scheduled to end on December 8, 2021. The parties agree that the total delay is 956 days, which exceeds the 30-month ceiling by 1.4 months, or 43 days.[2]

[25] The parties do not agree on whether there was defence delay. The applicant takes the position that there was none. The respondent submits that there were two periods of defence delay: 21 days resulting from a defence adjournment request on August 9, 2022 for the applicant to consider whether to re-elect and 77 days following the rescheduling of the trial due to defence unavailability.

[26] If the applicant is correct, the net delay exceeds the ceiling. The Crown submits that if this is the case, the delay is justified based on the complexity of the case.

[27] If the respondent is correct, the net delay is below the ceiling. The applicant submits that if this is the case, the delay is nonetheless unreasonable because he made sustained efforts to expedite the proceedings and the matter took markedly longer than it reasonably should have.

C. Defence Delay – The Adjournment Request to Obtain Instructions

[28] As noted, the respondent submits that 21 days should be deducted for the period between August 9, 2022 and September 22, 2022, an adjournment requested by the defence in order to obtain instructions as to electing the mode of trial.

[29] The respondent's submission that this was an illegitimate defence request appears to be based on a handwritten note made by the JPT judge on the JPT form that was completed on July 22, 2022. At the top corner of the first page of the form, the JPT judge had written and underlined "Practice Ct. Aug 12/22." Immediately below this, she wrote, "will get instructions to elect 5 day judge or set 7 day jury." The respondent submits that this should be taken to mean that defence counsel had undertaken to get instructions on the election prior to the August 12, 2022 practice court appearance and because he did not do so, the adjournment he requested for that purpose should be deducted as defence delay.

[30] There are two reasons why I do not accept the respondent's submission. First, while the JPT judge noted that the next court appearance was on August 12 and also noted that the defence would obtain instructions on re-election, it is not clear that the two are related. I am not prepared to infer from these notations that defence counsel made an undertaking to obtain instructions by that date. The possibility of re-election is always discussed at JPTs because trials by judge alone are more expeditious and less time consuming than jury trials. The note on the JPT form indicates that the issue was discussed and counsel indicated that he would obtain instructions, but it is not clear that he said that he would do so by August 12.

[2] In accordance with R. v. Shaikh, 2019 ONCA 895, 148 O.R. (3d) 369, at fn.1, I have converted days to months and vice versa by treating each month as consisting of 30.417 days, which is approximately 365 divided by 12. Month figures are rounded to one decimal point and days are rounded to whole days.

[31] Second, it is not clear on this record that an earlier trial date would have been set if the defence had made a decision about the election earlier. The JPT notes suggest that the election had a bearing on the length of the trial, but it is not clear that it had any bearing on its timing.

[32] As discussed later in these reasons, the defence behaved responsibly throughout the proceedings and made repeated efforts to prevent delay. The adjournment was requested on the second appearance in the Superior Court in a case that had dramatically shifted from a murder charge to a firearm possession charge only a few months earlier. Given this history, I am not prepared to conclude that this request for a brief adjournment to consider the applicant's election was not "defence actions legitimately taken to respond to the charges." The election is an important step in the proceedings and an accused who takes times to consider it should not risk losing his right to a trial within a reasonable time: R. v. Barrett, 2022 ONSC 6334, at para. 30.

D. Defence Delay – Defence Unavailability Between September and December

(i) Overview of the Issue

[33] The second period that the respondent submits should be deducted as defence delay is between September 18, 2023, the first date offered by the Crown and the court after the trial did not proceed on May 29, and the trial date of December 4, 2023, a period of 77 days. The Crown submits that this entire period is defence delay based on dicta in Jordan and other cases that "the defence will have directly caused the delay if the court and the Crown are ready to proceed, but the defence is not": Jordan, at para. 64; R. v. Williamson, 2016 SCC 28, [2016] 1 S.C.R. 741, at para. 22; R. v. Thanabalasingham, 2020 SCC 18, 447 D.L.R. (4th) 310, at para. 9; R. v. Coulter, 2016 ONCA 704, 133 O.R. (3d) 433, at para. 44; R. v. Mallozzi, 2017 ONCA 644, 390 C.R.R. (2d) 57, at para. 34.

[34] The respondent argues that because the trial would have been completed in the week of September 18 but for the defence's unavailability, all of the subsequent delay was caused by the defence. There are several reasons why I cannot accept this submission.

(ii) Crown and Court Unavailability

[35] First, the portion in para. 65 of Jordan on which the respondent relies was immediately qualified by the observation that "[h]owever, periods of time during which the court and the Crown are unavailable will not constitute defence delay, even if defence counsel is also unavailable." The Crown submits that I should conclude that the Crown and the court were available for the entire period after September 18 because defence counsel had said that he did not have availability in the fall, so there would have been no point in the Crown looking for additional dates. In my view, that is not a reasonable inference on this record.

[36] The fact that defence counsel said that he was unavailable in the fall did not relieve the Crown of the responsibility of looking for new dates. Counsel's calendars are not written in stone. Matters collapse and availability changes. Defence counsel had already offered two weeks because another matter had resolved, and eventually accepted the December 4 date for the same reason. The Crown has far greater access to court scheduling information than did the defence.

[37] In any event, the Crown did not stop looking for dates after defence counsel said that he had no availability in fall. Rather, in September the Crown offered four additional weeks that had not been offered earlier. It is reasonable to conclude that at the time the Crown offered those weeks, those were the only weeks that were available. As a result, I can and do infer that the Crown and/or the court were not available during the weeks of September 25, October 9, October 16, November 6, November 20 and November 27. It follows that it would be unfair to attribute the entire 77-day period to the defence.

(iii) The Need for a Contextual Approach

(a) No "Bright Line" Rule

[38] Second, the dicta in Jordan must be read in light of several recent authorities, the latest of which is R. v. Hanan, 2023 SCC 12, rev'g 2022 ONCA 229, 161 O.R. (3d) 161. There, the Court stated, at para. 9:

> Like the majority and the dissent below, we reject the Crown's proposed "bright-line" rule according to which all of the delay until the next available date following defence counsel's rejection of a date offered by the court must be characterized as defence delay. We agree with van Rensburg J.A. and Tulloch J.A., as he then was, at para. 56, that this approach is inconsistent with this Court's understanding of defence delay. Defence delay comprises "delays caused solely or directly by the defence's conduct" or "delays waived by the defence" (Jordan, at para. 66). Furthermore, "periods of time during which the court and the Crown are unavailable will not constitute defence delay, even if defence counsel is also unavailable" (para. 64). All relevant circumstances should be considered to determine how delay should be apportioned among the participants (R. v. Boulanger, 2022 SCC 2, at para. 8). We share the view of the majority and dissenting judges in the Court of Appeal that, in the circumstances of this case, it is unfair and unreasonable to characterize the entire period between June and October 2019 as defence delay (paras. 59 and 136).

[39] It is now clear from Hanan and other cases that rather than apply a "bright line" rule, a "contextual approach" that considers all of the relevant circumstances of the case must be applied to determine how delay should be apportioned: R. v. Boulanger, 2022 SCC 2, 469 D.L.R. (4th) 63, at para. 8; R. v. Albinowski, 2018 ONCA 1084, 371 C.C.C. (3d) 190, at para. 46; Hanan (C.A.), at paras. 54-56, per van Rensburg J.A., at paras. 136-137, per Nordheimer J.A., dissenting; R. v. Zahor, 2022 ONCA 449, at paras. 101-102.

(b) Relevant Factors

[40] The factors that must be considered when applying the "contextual approach" will vary depending on the circumstances of each case. In determining what delay, if any, should be attributed to the defence because of defence unavailability, the following factors will usually be relevant:

- the reason for the need to reschedule and whether it was caused by the defence;
- the extent to which the defence was available;
- the reasons for defence unavailability;
- the extent of the notice given of the new available date.

(c) The Reasons for Rescheduling

[41] Why a trial had to be rescheduled will be important in determining how to apportion subsequent delay. Where the defence is responsible for the need to reschedule, it is more likely that delay caused by defence unavailability will be found to be "caused solely or directly by the defence's conduct."

[42] The principle established in R. v. M.(N.N.) (2006), 209 C.C.C. (3d) 436 (Ont. C.A.), at para. 23, that "a party who causes an adjournment is responsible for the entire period of delay until the matter can be rescheduled, unless the other party is unavailable for an unreasonable length of time" continues to apply after Jordan: R. v. Picard, 2017 ONCA 692, 137 O.R. (3d) 401, at para. 117. There is no principled reason why the same approach should not be taken where the Crown or the court causes an adjournment. In such a case, the subsequent delay should not be attributed to the defence unless the defence is unavailable for an unreasonable length of time.

[43] In this case, the issue of the defence's availability in the fall only arose because the trial did not proceed in May, an event for which the defence bears no responsibility: R. v. Bailey, 2023 ONSC 2814, at para. 39; R. v. Arth, 2022 ONCJ 216, 512 C.R.R. (2d) 233, at paras. 27-28.

(d) The Extent to Which the Defence Was Unavailable

[44] As the defence did not cause the adjournment, an application of the principle in M.(N.N.) results in the defence not being responsible for the subsequent delay unless the defence was "unavailable for an unreasonable length of time."

[45] In R. v. Godin, 2009 SCC 26, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 3, at para. 23, the court stated: "Scheduling requires reasonable availability and reasonable cooperation; it does not, for s. 11(b) purposes, require defence counsel to hold themselves in a state of perpetual availability." The respondent submits that Godin, which was decided before Jordan, no longer represents the law. I do not agree. Nordheimer J.A. relied on Godin at para. 136 of his dissent in Hanan and the Supreme Court of Canada specifically adopted that paragraph: Hanan (S.C.C.), at para. 9. See also R. v. Safdar, 2021 ONCA 207, 469 D.L.R. (4th) 447, at paras. 49-50; R. v. Cohen, 2023 ONSC 5713, at paras.

30-33; R. v. Joseph, 2023 ONSC 2833, at para. 33, R. v. Aden, 2023 ONSC 766, 523 C.R.R. (2d) 28, at para. 99; Barrett, at paras. 52-53.

[46] In this case, the defence was available on four different weeks on which the Crown and/or court were not: the weeks of June 12, June 19, July 31 and August 21. The Crown and the court were available on five different weeks on which the defence was not: the weeks of September 18, October 2, October 23, October 30 and November 13. However, assuming the trial would take five days, only the first two of these would have resulted in the trial finishing before the 30-month ceiling. In my view, both parties were reasonably available, and it certainly cannot be said that the defence was "unavailable for an unreasonable length of time."

(e) Reasons for Unavailability

[47] Although the record is not entirely clear, I am prepared to infer that defence counsel was unavailable throughout the fall because he had matters scheduled for other clients. When he was offered the December date, he accepted it because one of those matters had fallen through. As was observed in Safdar, at para. 50, counsel cannot be expected to "compromise one client's interests for another."

(f) Notice

[48] When determining the extent to which a party is reasonably available, regard must be had to the degree of notice given to that party: Barrett, at paras. 51-54. Counsel are much more likely to be booked up nearer in the future. In this case, immediately after the May trial was adjourned, the Crown offered only the weeks of September 18 and October 2. It was not until September 13, 2023 that the weeks of October 23, October 30 and November 14 were offered, at which point they were only a month or two in the future.

(iv) Systemic Institutional Issues

[49] Jordan requires the court to take a "bird's eye view" of the case. That view reveals that the trial in this matter was scheduled to end on June 6, 2023, almost five months before the Jordan ceiling date, but did not proceed because of institutional issues over which the defence had no control and which plague this court on an ongoing basis. Subsequently, the defence suggested four different weeks on which it could conduct the trial, none of which were acceptable to the Crown and/or the court. The Crown initially offered only two weeks. While it later offered three more, none of them would have resulted in the trial finishing before the Jordan ceiling date.

[50] While both parties behaved reasonably and cooperated in attempting to reschedule the trial, the fact remains that the need to reschedule was not the fault of the defence but, rather, systemic problems which continue to plague this jurisdiction. In R. v. Alli, 2023 ONSC 5829, another case where the trial did not proceed because no judge was available, Forestell J. stated (at paras. 21-25):

> In April of 2023 when this trial was not reached because there was no judge available to hear it, this jurisdiction had seven judicial vacancies. There are still seven vacancies in this jurisdiction. The > number of vacancies has remained essentially unchanged for at least a year.[3]

>
> On May 3, 2023, 20 days after this trial was not reached because of a lack of judicial resources, Chief Justice Wagner expressed his concern about the chronic shortage of federally appointed judges. He pointed out that courts were operating with 10 to 15 per cent of their judicial positions vacant.[4] These comments are applicable to this jurisdiction.
>
> Had the judicial positions in Toronto been filled, this case and others would not have been delayed.
>
> There is nothing in the nature of this simple case that could be said to justify an exceptional period of delay. The Crown and the defence acted responsibly and cooperatively to move the case forward. The judge who heard the applications ensured that the ruling was delivered in time for the trial to proceed on the first scheduled trial date.
>
> Judges of this Court are working at capacity. It is common for judges on the criminal team in Toronto to work through scheduled non-sitting weeks and even through vacation weeks to attempt to ensure that trials are heard in a timely fashion. All participants in the process have done everything possible to avoid delay. This case has taken longer than it should have because this court lacked the judicial resources to hear the case in a timely manner.

[51] I am aware that Alli was not followed in R. v. Martins, 2024 ONSC 146, where the court concluded that an adjournment caused by judicial unavailability was an "unexpected discrete event" (at para. 31). That conclusion appears to have been based on an assumption that the Trial Coordinator intentionally scheduled more trials than there were judges available in order to "chip away at the backlog" caused by the COVID-19 pandemic: Martin, at para. 33. In doing so, the court noted that the number of judicial vacancies was approximately the same as it had been prior to the pandemic.

[52] I am respectfully unable to agree with the reasoning in Martins for two reasons. First, as noted, trials in this jurisdiction are routinely adjourned because of judicial unavailability, so it is difficult to see how this can be viewed as an "unexpected discrete event." Second, the Crown and the justice system have a duty to mitigate delay caused by discrete events: Jordan, at para. 75; Cody, at para. 48. Regardless of how many judicial vacancies there were before the pandemic, one

---

[3] There has been one judicial appointment to the Toronto Superior Court since the release of Alli on December 11, 2023.

[4] https://www.cbc.ca/news/politics/supreme-court-wagner-trudeau-judicial-vacancies-1.6836145 obvious way to reduce the backlog of cases is to make sure that judicial vacancies are filled so that trials do not get adjourned. The state has failed to do this.[5]

[53] In my view, in the circumstances of this case, it would be unfair to apportion the majority of the delay occasioned by these systemic problems to the defence, as the Crown submits I should. As noted in Jordan, at para. 117, delay caused by the insufficiency of resources "is not merely contrary to the public interest: it is constitutionally impermissible, and will be treated as such." The remedy for ongoing systemic delay cannot be an expectation that the members of the defence bar will compensate for it by making themselves available on short notice. To do so would be to allow delay to become part of "business as usual": Jordan, at para. 107.

(v) Apportioning the Delay

[54] I am not persuaded that any of the 77-day period between September 18 and December 8 should be apportioned to the defence because it was unavailable to conduct a trial within the following two and half months. If I am wrong and some portion should be apportioned to the defence, it should be no more than a third to a half of that period, or approximately 26 to 39 days. This would bring the net delay to between 30.2 and 30.6 months. On any of these scenarios, the delay exceeded the ceiling. As a result, the delay is presumptively unreasonable unless the Crown can demonstrate that there were exceptional circumstances.

E. Particularly Complex Case

[55] The Crown submits that any delay in excess of the ceiling was justified on the basis that this was a particularly complex case. Crown counsel acknowledges that there is nothing complex about the case now, but submits that it was complex in its early stages when there were four co-accused charged with second degree murder.

[56] The circumstances in which the complexity of a case creates an exceptional circumstance justifying delay in excess of the ceiling were described in Zahor, at para. 105:

> A case may be particularly complex where it requires a great deal of trial time or preparation time "because of the nature of the evidence or the nature of the issues": Jordan, at para. 77 (emphasis in original). Voluminous disclosure, a large number of witnesses, significant expert evidence, charges extending over a prolonged period of time, multiple charges, several pre-trial applications, novel or complicated legal issues, numerous significant issues in dispute, multiple co-accused tried together, and an international dimension to the case are all examples of particular complexity: Jordan, at para. 77; R. v. Bulhosen, 2019 ONCA 600, 377 C.C.C. (3d) 309, at para.

[5] Since both Alli and Martins were released after this application was argued, counsel were invited to and did provide written submissions with respect to the impact of those decisions.

79, leave to appeal refused, [2019] S.C.C.A. No. 423 (Bulhosen), and [2019] S.C.C.A. No. 370 (Kompon).

[57] While complex cases often involve serious charges, the fact that a charge is serious does not, on its own, establish complexity: R. v. Bulhosen, 2019 ONCA 600, 377 C.C.C. (3d) 309, at para. 49. Indeed, as observed in Jordan, at para. 78, "[a] typical murder trial will not usually be sufficiently complex to comprise an exceptional circumstance."

[58] The Crown bears the burden of rebutting the presumption that delay in excess of the ceiling was unreasonable. The Crown has attempted to do so in this case on the basis that there were initially four co-accused and that there was "voluminous disclosure." When I asked Crown counsel during submissions to elaborate on this, she replied that "there would have been" expert reports and cell tower evidence and pointed out that it took some time for complete disclosure to be made.

[59] A mere assertion by the Crown that the disclosure was "voluminous" is not sufficient to establish complexity. There is nothing in the record before this court to indicate the volume of the disclosure, the number of anticipated witnesses, or whether there were any legal issues that required extensive preparation. It appears that the disclosure that was provided by September 9, 2021, a little over four months after the charge was laid, was sufficient to allow the parties to schedule a preliminary inquiry. The preliminary inquiry was scheduled to take only seven days, and did not actually take place as the Crown withdrew the murder charge.

[60] This case bears none of the hallmarks of complexity. As a result, the Crown has failed to justify the delay in excess of the ceiling.

F. Delay Below the Ceiling

[61] Given my conclusion that the delay in this case exceeded the ceiling, it is unnecessary for me to consider whether this was one of the rare and clear cases where delay below the ceiling was unreasonable. However, I would note that the defence did appear to make sustained efforts to expedite the proceedings, and but for the systemic issues, the trial would have proceeded on May 29, 2023: Alli, at para. 26.

III. DISPOSITION

[62] The application is granted. There will be an order pursuant to ss. 11(b) and 24(1) of the Charter staying the proceedings.

Justice P.A. Schreck

Released: January 15, 2024

CITATION: R. v. Bowen-Wright, 2024 ONSC 293
COURT FILE NO.: CR-23-50000298-0000
DATE: 20240115

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

HIS MAJESTY THE KING

– and –

GIVON BOWEN-WRIGHT

RULING

P.A. Schreck J.

Released: January 15, 2024

R. v. Campbell

Alberta Judgments

Alberta Court of Queen's Bench

Judicial Districts of Calgary and Edmonton

McDonald J.

Judgment: November 15, 1994.

[1994] A.J. No. 866 | [1995] 2 W.W.R. 469 | 25 Alta. L.R. (3d) 158 | 160 A.R. 81 | 25 W.C.B. (2d) 397

Between Her Majesty the Queen, respondent, and Shawn Carl Campbell, applicant And between Her Majesty the Queen, respondent, and Ivica Ekmecic, applicant And between Her Majesty the Queen, respondent, and Percy Dwight Wickman, applicant

(227 pp.)

Case Summary

Statutes, Regulations and Rules Cited:

Act of Settlement, 1701, 12 & 13 William III, c. 2. Alberta Regulation 116/94. An Act for the Further Limitation of the Crown, and better securing the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, relating to the Commissions and Salaries of Judges, 1760, 1 Geo. III, c. 23. Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, 1982, s. 7, 11(a), 11(b), 11(c), 11(d), 14, 24. Civil Procedure Acts Repeal, 1879, c. 59. Constitution Act, 1867, ss. 96, 99, 100. Courts Act, 1971, c. 23, s. 18(2). Courts of Justice Act, S.O. 1984, c. 11, s. 56(1). Criminal Code, ss. 90(1), 145(5). Environmental Protection Act. Highway Traffic Act. Income War Tax Act, S.C. 1932, c. 44. International Bar Association Code of Minimum Standards, "the Jerusalem Code", s. 4 Judges Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. J-1, ss. 25(1), 29.1, 55. Management Employees Pension Plan Regulation, A.R. 366/93, s. 75. Narcotic Control Act. Oaths of Office Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. O-1, s. 3. Pension Act. Provincial Courts Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 398, ss. 5(4), 10(4), 12. Provincial Court Judges Act, S.A. 1981, c. P-20.1, ss. 1(a), 1(b), 2(1), 2(5)(b), 6(1), 6(2), 7(1), 7(2), 7(3), 10(1), 10(1)(a), 10(1)(b), 10(1)(c), 10(1)(d), 10(1)(e), 10(2), 10(3), 10(4), 11, 11(1), 11(1)(b), 11(1)(c), 11(1)(e), 11(2), 11(3), 11(4), 11(5), 11(6), 13, 13(1)(a), 13(1)(b), 17, 17(1). Provincial Judges and Masters Statute Law Amendment Act, S.O. 1983, c. 78, s. 35. Provincial Judges and Masters in Chambers Pension Plan Regulation, A.R. 265/88, s. 25. Provincial Judges and Masters in Chambers Pension Plan Amendment Regulation, A.R. 29/92. Supreme Court Act, 1981, c. 54, s. 12(3). United States Constitution, Art. 3. Universal Declaration on the Independence of Justice, s. 2.21, 2.2(1)(a). Young Offenders Act.

Courts — Judges — Independence of judiciary — Financial security — Disqualification — Bias.

Motions for stays of various criminal charges against three accused on the basis of reasonable apprehension of bias. Defence counsel in several routine criminal matters submitted that an Alberta Order-in-Council rolling back judges' salaries by five percent compromised the independence of the judiciary and therefore deprived the accused persons of the right to be tried before "an independent tribunal" as guaranteed by section 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The provincial judges in question referred the matter to the Queen's Bench Court. HELD: Applications dismissed.

The independence of the judiciary rested on three essential conditions: Security of tenure, financial security and institutional or administrative independence. The "purposive" analysis required for Charter section 11(d) meant that the Order-in-Council reducing judges' salaries violated the constitutional guarantee of judges' financial security, and was therefore of no force and effect. This guarantee applied to both federally and provincially appointed judges.

There was a "constitutional obligation" to maintain judges' financial security by increasing their salaries to correspond with the cost of living and by maintaining their pensions as well. Moreover, certain sections of the Alberta Provincial Court Judges Act (PCJA) dealing with supernumerary judges, the judicial council and statutory grounds for removal of judges were of no force and effect because they infringed the "security of tenure" requirement for judicial independence under Charter section 11(d). As well, certain powers of the Attorney General in the PCJA to designate days of sitting and residence of a judge were declared invalid and a violation of Charter section 11(d) because they restricted the "institutional independence" of the judiciary. Since the court had declared invalid both the offending statute sections and Order-in-Council, judicial independence was no longer compromised and the accused persons at Bar could therefore receive trial before an independent tribunal pursuant to Charter section 11(d).

R.F. Taylor and P.B. Michalyshyn, for the Crown. J.A. Legge, for the Accused, Campbell and Ekmecic. P.B. Gunn, B.S. Pannu and L.H.L. Nelson, for the Accused Wickman.

Table of contents and Executive summary of the Reasons for Judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice D.C. McDonald.

(This does not form part of the judgment, and its contents should not be regarded as a pronouncement by the court. The contents are intended only to be an aid to the reader.)

A. The Origins of the Present Motion in the Cases of R. v. Campbell and R. v. Ekmecic.

B. The Origins of the Present Motion in the Case of R. v. Wickman:.

C. The Relationship of the Arguments put Forward in the Calgary Cases and Wickman Case.

D. The Functions of the Provincial Court of Alberta.

E. The Interpretive Approach to Judicial Independence as Guaranteed by s. 11(d) of the Charter.

F. "Financial Security" - general.

-The effect of the Act of settlement 1701 and the Act of 1760 is that in England judges' salaries may not be reduced.

-"Fixed and provided: s. 100 of the Constitution Act 1867.

The court held that the effect of this provision is that the salaries of Canadian superior court judges

(for example, Court of Queen's Bench) may not be reduced. The guarantee of judicial independence in

s. 11(d) of the Charter of Rights must guarantee the same financial security to Provincial Court judges, for persons charged with an of fence must receive the same guarantee of independence in the Provincial Court.

-International Standards

-The position in the United States

-A purposive analysis of the s. 11(d) guarantee of "financial security" as a condition of judicial independence in Canada: such an analysis of the purpose of "security" leads to the conclusion that a reduction in the salaries of Provincial Court Judges could reasonably be perceived as an infringement of judicial independence.

-The March 31, 1994 Order in Council reducing the judges' salaries by 5% violates the constitutional guarantee of financial security which the court holds is applicable to federally-appointed judges and to Provincial Court judges. The court held that the reduction cannot be supported as being part of an "overall economic measure" unless it is the result of a statutory provision applicable to all citizens, such as provincial income tax. Thus it is not constitutionally permissible to defend a reduction in judges' salaries on the basis that it is part of a measure applicable to all other person who are paid from the public purse. The Order in Council is held to be invalid. But the defence cannot succeed in obtaining an order staying proceedings, or an order of prohibition and certiorari, because, the Order in Council having been declared to be invalid, the reduction in salaries no longer exists in law. So there is no longer a violation of financial security.

-The court held further that there is a constitutional obligation to maintain the financial security of the judges by increasing their salaries to correspond with increases in the cost of living. However, the information placed before the court does not permit it to decide in these cases whether this obligation has not been met.

-The court rejected the defence argument that s. 11(d) of the Charter, in guaranteeing financial security as an essential condition of judicial independence, requires either the existence of a statutory committee to decide or make recommendations about judges' salaries, or the application of the formula used between 1980 and 1989 (809 of the salaries of judge of the Court of Queen's Bench): That formula might or might not result in attaining the minimum guaranteed constitutionally.

- The court also rejected the defence argument that there may be a perception that, because the judges may be seen to be negotiating salaries, they lack independence.

- The salaries of judges of the Court of Queen's Bench are indexed up to an annual limit, and in addition a report is made every three years to Parliament by a "Triennial Commission" of non-judges. But the recommendations of the Triennial Commissions as to salaries have not been implemented, and in any case the Commissions make recommendations on the adequacy of salaries which reflect other considerations than increases in the cost of living. As a result imposition constitutionally of a formula requiring Provincial Court judges' salaries to be increased to the same degree as those of Queen's Bench judges (less a 20 per cent discount) might require the province to pay salaries in an amount exceeding the minimum which is required constitutionally.

- The court rejected several miscellaneous attacks on the statutory power to fix salaries.

-Security of pension

G. Security of Tenure - supernumerary judges
- The Court held that supernumerary judges are not appointed at pleasure. The Court held that they may be removed from office only on the same grounds as full-time judges.

H. Security of Tenure - provisions for removal of judges
- The Court held that some of the statutory grounds for removal are invalid.

- The Court held that the Provincial Judges Act provision for inclusion of non-judges in the Judicial Council or a committee of the Council for disciplinary purposes renders the provisions invalid.

- But the defence in these cases may not invoke the invalidity of these provisions, for, these provisions having been held to be invalid, they no longer infringe judicial independence.

I. Institutional Independence of the Provincial Court:
Designation of days of sittings: The Court held that the Provincial Court Judges Act provision empowering the Attorney General to designate the days of sittings is invalid.

Designation of residence of a judge: The Court held that the Provincial Court Judges Act provision empowering the Attorney General to designate the place of residence of a judge is invalid.

But the defence in these cases may not invoke the invalidity of these provisions, as they no longer exist in law and therefore they do not impair the independence of the Provincial Court

J. Remarks Made by Premier Klein:

- The Court held that certain remarks made by Premier Klein did not constitute a direct attack on the independence of the Provincial Court.

- The Court rejected the defence argument that the Premier's remarks were made for an "ulterior motive".

K. Implications of the Action Recently Commenced by Some Individual Provincial Court Judges and by the Alberta Provincial Court Judges' Association:

- The Court held that to some extent the allegations made in that case have been considered in this judgment, and to that extent any perception of lack of independence has been removed.

- The Court held that in any event the allegations of law made by the judges in their Statement of Claim would be mere evidence of their opinion, and hearsay and therefore could not form the basis for a conclusion that a reasonable, informed person would perceive the Provincial Court as lacking independence.

L. Do the violations of Judicial Independence vitiate the Trial Proceedings Before Judge Ayotte in Which the Evidence has Already Been Heard?

- The Court held that they do not.

M. Conclusion.

McDONALD J.

1 These reasons for judgment apply to all three cases: R. v.Campbell; R v. Ekmecic; and R. v. Wickman.

A. The Origins of the Present Motion in the Cases of R. v. Campbell and R. v. Ekmecic:

2 The cases of Campbell and Ekmecic were brought in Calgary. I shall refer to them as "the Calgary cases". Counsel for the defence in both cases is Mr. Legge. Otherwise the two cases are unrelated. Mr. Campbell is charged that he:

> On or about the 19th day of July, 1993, at or near Calgary, Alberta, being a person named in an appearance notice that was confirmed by a Justice, did fail, without lawful excuse, to attend court in accordance therewith, contrary to Section 145(5) of the Criminal Code of Canada.
>
> On or about the 4th day of May, 1993, at or near Calgary, Alberta, did unlawfully have in his possession a prohibited weapon, to wit: Nunchukas, contrary to Section 90(1) of the Criminal Code of Canada.

The Crown proceeded summarily. Mr. Campbell pleaded not guilty, and a trial date was set for May 4, 1994, at, 9:30 am. before the presiding Provincial Court Judge in Court Room 406.

3 Mr. Ekmecic was charged that he:

> On or about the 24th day of November, 1993, at or near Calgary, Alberta, did unlawfully assault Jozo Ekmecic, contrary to section 266 of the Criminal Code of Canada.

The Crown proceeded summarily. Mr. Ekmecic pleased not guilty, and a trial date was scheduled for May 4, 1994, at 2:00 pm., before the presiding Provincial Court Judge in Court Room 406. On May 4, in another case before The Honourable Judge James of the Provincial Court, in Calgary, Mr. Legge was representing one John David Tandberg. The Crown sought the detention of the accused on two break and enter charges, and that existing judicial interim release on other charges be revoked. Mr. Legge made a submission that the Provincial Court of Alberta lacked independence as required by s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which states:

> 11. Any person charged with an of fence has the right
>
> (d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal.

> not insulate a direct diminution in judges' salaries from the clear mandate of that Clause; the Constitution makes no exceptions for "nondiscriminatory" reductions.

69 The Framers of the United States Constitution did not expressly guarantee judicial independence, as does s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. They did include art. 3's prohibition against discrimination of judicial salaries, of which Burger C.J. said in United States v. Will (at p. 221):

> As well as promoting judicial independence, it ensures a prospective judge that, in abandoning private practice - more often than not more lucrative than the bench - the compensation of the new post will not diminish. Beyond doubt, such assurance has served to attract able lawyers to the bench and thereby enhances the quality of justice. (Emphasis added.)

However, the Framers left the question of increases in judicial salaries, "to meet such contingencies as inflation" (p. 219), to "the integrity and sound judgment of the elected representatives [in Congress] to enact increases when changing conditions demand" (p. 227).

(f) A purposive analysis of the s. 11(d) guarantee of "financial security" as a condition of judicial independence in Canada:

70 So far, under the title "financial security', I have reviewed the history of this component of judicial independence. I turn now to undertake a purposive analysis.

71 The "financial security" condition of the guarantee of judicial independence must receive "a large and liberal interpretation" (the phrase used by Viscount Sankey in Edwards v. Attorney General for Canada, [1929] 3 W.W.R. 479 at 489 (P.C.), held in Hunter v. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145 at 155 to be applicable to the Charter. Indeed what is required is > a generous interpretation avoiding what has been called "the austerity of tabulated legalism" suitable to give individuals the full measure of the fundamental rights and freedoms referred to (per Lord Wilberforce, in Minister of Home Affairs v. Fisher, [1980] A.C. 319 (P.C.) referring to the Bill of Rights incorporated in the Bermudian Constitution; the passage was cited with approval by Dickson J. (as he then was) in Hunter v. Southam Inc., supra at 156.)

72 The purpose of a constitutional guarantee of financial security to judges is to ensure that judges are provided adequate salaries, pensions and other benefits and thus to relieve them of concern that they and their families will suffer materially from having accepted a judicial appointment. No doubt a judge upon accepting a judicial appointment has thus accepted that the salary and pension then established by law will apply to him or her in the beginning; if the new judge's previous earnings exceeded the judicial salary, he or she was prepared to endure reduced earnings for' the sake of an opportunity to perform an important public service for a salary and pension which he or she may reasonably assume will not be changed significantly to his or her disadvantage. The judge is not permitted to "moonlight"; the Provincial Court Judges Act s. 12 prohibits a judge from carrying on or practising 'any other business, profession, trade or occupation" as does s. 55 of the federal Judges Act, R.S.C. 1985 c.J-1. If the government (or legislature) of the day fails to increase judicial salaries from time to time at least in proportion to the increase in the cost of living (or the increase in some similar index), judges and their families may find it more difficult to meet their obligations, some of which may have been incurred before the judicial appointment. The problem is particularly serious in the case of young judges, appointed when they are in their thirties or forties, especially if they have young children. In turn, this aspect is even more serious because more women judges are being appointed than was the case in past years, for those judges are often appointed when they are young (younger than the average male appointee) and have young children.

73 The course of wisdom and sound policy points to the maintenance of judicial salaries at least in correspondence with increases in living costs. Judges who feel that they are unfairly treated are, even unconsciously, less likely than would otherwise be the case to respond unhesitatingly and vigorously to the dictates of heavy caseloads. They are likely to become, even unconsciously, more exposed to the physical and mental jadedness that can too easily occur from being overburdened by the workload. A judge who feels protected against the ravages of inflation and thus feels fairly treated by the system, and who is not pressed daily by concerns about his or her financial security, is more likely to work above and beyond the call of duty, than if his or her income is allowed to wither in real terms. As Justice Lorna E. Lockwood of the Supreme Court of Arizona said in "An Independent Judiciary", an article published in Winters, Handbook for Judges (1975: American Judicature Society), at p. 54:

> Another threat [to independence] is economic. As a public employee a state judge is frequently at a disadvantage because of inadequate salary. He cannot enter into competition with practising lawyers, even if he possesses superior ability, and public salaries almost never equal private compensation. The judge usually has a family to support and educate. If he is beset with tensions and worries over his personal problems. it is difficult to maintain a calm. impartial judicial attitude at all times. (Emphasis added)

74 In Canada it is inaccurate to refer to a judge as a "public employee" because an employee or, to use legal terminology, a "servant", is subject to the control of his or her employer or "master" as to the manner in which he or she performs his or her duties. A judge is not subject to the control of the Crown (the executive government) or of the legislature as to the manner in which he or she performs his or her judicial functions: that is the essence of judicial independence. Allowing for the inappropriateness of that phrase in Canada, everything else Justice Lockwood said is applicable to Canadian judges and in particular to the judges of the Provincial Court of Alberta.

75 A separate and distinct point is that if the judges of a court are not protected as to their incomes in relation to living costs, the prospect of a judicial appointment will lose its attractiveness to lawyers of great ability and first-class reputation. There will be a greater likelihood that the persons who are available as prospective appointees will not include lawyers whose appointment would lend stature and distinction to the court. Those lawyers will prefer to remain in private practice. There will be an increased risk that a court which has not attracted the best possible candidates will no longer be resistant to interference by the executive government to the extent that one may expect of a truly independent tribunal. Later in this section I shall return to the subject of the effects of a failure to increase judges' salaries to meet increases in the cost of living.

76 The argument advanced by defence counsel in these cases is that those concerns have not been positively addressed by the successive governments of Alberta in very recent years, in regard to judges of the Provincial Court. It is not for me, in the context of the issues raised in this case, to make any comments which could be interpreted as being critical of the successive provincial governments or as suggesting that on the part of those governments there has been a lack of wisdom or a failure to adopt sound policies. Whether a policy is wise or sound is a matter which lies in the realm of the executive and legislative branches of government, not that of the judiciary. Assuming (without deciding) that the policies of the provincial governments have been unwise and have not been sound, that is irrelevant to the issue of law which I must decide, namely, whether the salaries paid to Provincial Court judges, and especially the manner in which they are fixed, fail (when viewed in the context of financial benefits as a whole) to measure up to that "financial security" which is a condition of the independence of the judges of the Provincial Court.

77 In Valente, at p. 704, Le Dain J. spoke of the condition of "financial security" as follows (I have already quoted this passage, but I reproduce it here for the convenience of the reader):

> The second essential condition of judicial independence for purposes of s.ll(d) of the charter is, in my opinion, what may be referred to as financial security. That means security of salary or other remuneration, and, where appropriate, security of pension. The essence of such security is that the right to salary and pension should be established by law and not be subject to arbitrary interference by the Executive in a manner that could affect judicial independence. In the case of pension, the essential distinction is between a right to a pension and a pension that depends on the grace or favour of the Executive.

At p. 705-6 he added:

> The principal objections to the manner in which the salaries of provincial court judges are provided for is [sic] that they are not fixed by the legislature and they are not made a charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund. These two requirements have traditionally been regarded as affording the highest degree of security in respect of judicial salaries. Section 100 of the constitution Act, 1867 requires that the salaries of superior, district and county court judges be fixed by Parliament. The salaries of these and other federally-appointed > judges are fixed by Parliament in the Judges Act, which provides in s. 33(1) that the salaries payable under the Act shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. In all of the other provinces the salaries of provincial judges are, as in Ontario, fixed by the executive government by regulation. In some, but not all Provinces, they are paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

>
> Although it may be theoretically preferable that judicial salaries should be fixed by the legislature rather than the executive government and should be made a charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund rather than requiring annual appropriation, I do not think that either of these features should be regarded as essential to the financial security chat may be reasonably perceived as sufficient for independence under s. 11(d)of the charter. At the present time in Canada the amount of judges' salaries is a matter for the initiative of the Executive, whether they are fixed by act of the legislature or by regulation. Moreover, it is far from clear that having to bring proposed increases to judges' salaries before the legislature is more desirable from the point of view of judicial independence, and indeed adequate salaries, than having the question determined by the Executive alone, pursuant to a general legislative. authority. In the case of the salaries of provincial court judges in Ontario, assurance that proper consideration will be given to the adequacy of judicial salaries is provided by the role assigned to the Ontario Provincial Courts Committee, although I do not consider the existence of such a committee to be essential to security of salary for purposes of s. 11(d). The essential point, in my opinion, is that the right to salary of. a provincial court judge is established by law, and there is no way in which the Executive could interfere with that right in a manner to affect the independence of the individual judge.

78 The position stated by Le Dain J. must be assumed to have taken into account the purposive approach to interpretation of the constitutional guarantee, and the need to give that guarantee a large, liberal and generous interpretation. But his decision in Valente focused upon the procedure by which Provincial Court judges' salaries are fixed. His decision related to the "principal objections" which had been made "to the manner in which the salaries of Provincial Court judges are provided for", namely, "that they are not fixed by the legislature and they are not made a charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund." The Provincial courts Act, R.S.O. 1980, c.398, and its successor, the courts of Justice Act, 1984, provided that the salaries of provincial court judges be fixed by regulation made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council after the latter received recommendations concerning the salaries from the Ontario Provincial Courts Committee, which was a body established statutorily pursuant to a 1983 statute, the Provincial Judges and Masters statute Law Amendment Act, 1983, 1983 (Ont.), c.78. Pursuant to 5.35 of that Act, the Committee had three members: one appointed by provincial court and family court judges' associations; one appointed by the government; and the third, the chairman, appointed jointly by the associations and the government. The annual report and recommendations of the Committee were to be laid before the Legislative Assembly.

79 Le Dain J. noted that in all the provinces, as in Ontario, the salaries of provincial court judges were fixed by the executive government by regulation. He had said (at pp. 693-4) that the constitutional guarantee of security of salary and pension is not the same in the case of provincial court judges as it is in the case of superior court judges (i.e. federally-appointed judges). In the case of federally-appointed judges, there is an express provision in s. 100 of the constitution Act, 1867, that their "salaries, allowances and pensions shall be fixed and provided by the Parliament of Canada". He added, in regard to s. 100 and s. 99 (which deals with security of tenure):

> These provisions are generally regarded as representing the highest degree of constitutional guarantee of security of tenure and security of salary and pension. They find their historical inspiration in the provisions of the Act of settlement of 1701 [12 & 13 Will. 3, c.2], which provided that judges should hold office during good behaviour, subject to removal on an address of both Houses of Parliament, and that their salaries should be "ascertained and established".

He held that if the same level of constitutional guarantee were to be accorded to Provincial Court judges by interpretation of s.ll(d) of the Charter, that "would be, in effect, to amend the judicature provisions of the Constitution." He then continued:

CITATION: R. v. Downey, 2024 ONSC 2157
COURT FILE NO.: CR-22-10000121-0000
DATE: 20240415

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:	)
	)
HIS MAJESTY THE KING	)	P. Leishman for the Crown
	)
– and –	)
	)
MARLON DOWNEY	)	M. Anevich and C. Angelini for Marlon Downey
	)
Applicant	)
	)
	)	HEARD at Toronto: April 4th, 2024
	)

J. K. PENMAN J.

Overview

[1] On November 25, 2020, Marlon Downey was charged with a series of human trafficking charges in relation to one complainant. On the same day he was arrested for a separate set of similar offences. That case has since been stayed for delay although I understand that decision is currently under appeal. Mr. Downey has been in custody since his arrest.

[2] Mr. Downey's first appearance in provincial court was on November 26, 2020. Mr. Downey's first trial was scheduled to take place June 19, 2023, but could not be reached because a judge was not available. His trial is now currently scheduled to take place April 22, 2024, through May 3, 2024, a delay of 41 months and 8 days.

[3] As this period exceeds the 30-month ceiling for trials in the Superior Court established in R. v. Jordan, 2016 SCC 27, Mr. Downey now applies to have the proceedings stayed on the basis that his s. 11(b) Charter right to a trial within a reasonable time has been infringed.

[4] The defence position is that the main reason for delay is a lack of judicial resources. Delays in providing disclosure and securing a direct indictment also contributed. They argue that the Covid-19 pandemic cannot account for the delay as the system had since adapted to the 'new normal' post covid. Nor were there any delays caused by adjournments due to covid related court closures or jury blackout periods.

[5] The Crown opposes the application and submits that the delay is under the 30-month ceiling. As per Jordan, they argue that the periods of delay are largely due to a 'discrete exceptional circumstance', namely the pandemic and should not be counted within the 30-month time frame. The Crown points out that Mr. Downey chose trial by judge and jury and that the jury blackout period was in place resulting in his case not being scheduled. Second, the COVID-19 pandemic created scheduling challenges. Finally, there is a period of defence delay related to counsel's unavailability when rescheduling the trial dates.

[6] On April 8th I advised counsel that I was granting the defence application. These are my reasons.

Appearances in Provincial Court

[7] Mr. Downey made his first appearance in provincial court on November 26, 2020. It was not until early of April 2021 that disclosure was provided. On May 11, 2021, a judicial pre-trial was held and on June 1, 2021, the parties met with the trial coordinator to set two days for the preliminary hearing.

[8] The earliest date available to the court was in August of 2021, but the Crown was unavailable for the entire month. Dates were available in September for the court and the Crown but the defence was not available. The Crown was not available after that from October 2021 until March of 2022. March 7th and 8th, 2022 were selected for the preliminary hearing.

[9] Efforts were made by the defence to secure earlier dates given Mr. Downey was in custody, including trying to arrange a judicial pre-trial. The Crown's first availability for a pre-trial was six weeks later. The defence then had the matter brought before a judge on June 15th, 2021. The assigned Crown did not attend, and the matter then came back on July 14th, 2021, and the issues were discussed. Between this appearance and July 27th, 2021, the Crown decided to seek a direct indictment.

Appearances in Superior Court

[10] The matter appeared for the first time in Superior Court in February of 2022.

[11] On April 1, 2022, a JPT was held, and it was agreed the trial would take ten days with five days of pre-trial motions. Those motions were to be vacated on agreement of counsel if they were heard earlier in Mr. Downey's other matter.

[12] Dates were set with the trial coordinator on April 20, 2022. The pre-trial motions were set for October 30th, 2023, for five days, and the trial proper for December 11, 2023, for two weeks. The assigned Crown and court were available July 4th for the motions and August 22nd for the trial dates. The Crown was available July 4th – September 16th, November 7th-31st. Defence counsel was not available until December 5th, 2022.

[13] When the matter appeared in court on April 25th, 2022, Mr. Angelini indicated that when he had filled out the trial confirmation form, he had done so assuming the motions and trial would be set as one three-week block, and that had he provided dates for a five day and then two-week block, his dates might have been earlier. He indicated he would redo the form with his availability adjusted accordingly. The matter was then put to May 16th, 2022, to see about earlier dates.

[14] The matter returned on May 16th, May 30th and then June 6th, 2022, to see if there were earlier dates. In August of 2022 earlier dates were obtained. The dates of February 6-10, 2023, for the pre-trial motions, and June 19th, 2023, for the trial proper was put on the record on September 12, 2022.

[15] Th pretrial motions were ultimately dealt with during Mr. Downey's other matter, and on January 16th the matter was adjourned directly to the trial date of June 19th, 2023.

[16] On June 19th, 2023, the matter appeared before Justice Goldstein who indicated there was not a judge available but adjourned the matter one day in the hopes that one would become available. It is worthy of note that at this point the matter was already over the prescribed Jordan time limit at 30 months and 24 days.

[17] On June 20th, 2023, the matter appeared again before Justice Goldstein who indicated:

> Well, the bottom line is, unfortunately we're not going to be in a position to proceed with this trial. I don't have a trial judge for you, unfortunately. So we have – _I mean, there's a whole bunch of reasons for that. We have outstanding appointments, vacancies here, but also we still have a hangover from COVID as I think, I think you both know, which is causing – _we're trying to get as many things on as we can, but of course the COVID backlog is still there. So I'm going to say, approach your administrative Crown for a new trial date and maybe just put this into practice court next week.

[18] On June 23rd, the Crown contacted Mr. Angelini and offered a trial date of July 10th, just over two weeks later. Mr. Angelini was not available. The matter then appeared again on July 17th, August 14th, August 28th, and September 11th with the parties indicating that efforts were being made to secure dates as quickly as possible.

[19] The parties then appeared before Justice Forestell on September 28th, 2023. A trial date of November 14th was offered and available to both the court and the Crown. Mr. Angelini indicated that date had just been offered to him the day before and he was not available. December 4th was also offered but both the Crown and Mr. Angelini indicated they might be able to accommodate the date but were in other matters. January 8th was offered as a 'possibility' if another four-week matter were to resolve. The Crown inquired if January 22nd was available instead. Mr. Angelini indicated he was not available as he had another Superior Court trial. February 19th was offered, but Mr. Angelini was not available. April 2nd was offered but the Crown was not available. April 22nd, 2024, was the date ultimately agreed upon by all parties.

Legal Framework

[20] In evaluating an application made under s. 11 (b) of the Charter, a court must identify and characterize the periods of delay occasioned throughout the trial. This requires an application of the R. v. Jordan framework: calculating the total delay, subtracting any defence delay in determining net delay.: see paras 47, 61-64. The court must then consider any exceptional circumstances including any discrete exceptional circumstances.: see para 69 and 75.

[21] Defence delay for the purposes of this analysis consists of two types of delay. First delay that is waived by the defence. That is not an issue in this case. Second, delay "that is caused solely or directly by the defence's conduct".: Jordan para 66. This does not include legitimate actions taken by the defence to respond to the charges.: see para 64-65. I would include in this second category the election by the accused to have their matter tried by a judge and jury.

[22] Recent caselaw has modified the notion of a 'bright line' rule in assessing defence delay. R. v. Boulanger, 2022 SCC 2 at para 8 makes clear that all relevant circumstances should be considered to determine how delay should be apportioned among the participants. This approach has been followed in several cases.: R. v. Hanan, 2023 SCC 12 at para 9, 54-56; R. v. Albinowski, 2018 ONCA 1084 at para 46; R. v. Zahor, 2022 ONCA 449 at para 101-102; R. v. Bowen-Wright, 2024 ONSC 293 at para 38-39.

[23] Exceptional circumstances include events beyond the Crown's control in that they are reasonably unforeseen or unavoidable, and result in delay that cannot reasonably be remedied by the Crown.: Jordan para 69. Discrete exceptional circumstances are unexpected, uncontrolled events that happen which lead to delay. These engage a quantitative analysis in that the delay is subtracted from the net delay for the purpose of determining whether the remaining delay continues to exceed the presumptive ceiling.: Jordan para 75.

[24] The pandemic falls within a category of "discrete exceptional circumstance" as defined in Jordan. It satisfies the criteria of i) being reasonably unforeseen and ii) Crown counsel cannot reasonably remedy the delay emanating from these circumstances. Given the systemic perspective within which the pandemic must be seen, "the reasonableness of a period of time to prosecute a case takes its colour from the surrounding circumstances.": Jordan para 103; R. v. Agpoon, 2023 ONCA 449 at para 19, 21.

[25] It is within this framework that "trial judges should not parse each day or month…[but] should step back from the minutiae and adopt a bird's-eye view of the case.: Jordan at para 91; Agpoon para 22.

Overall Delay Analysis

[26] There are two main questions in this application. First, how much delay should be attributed to pandemic related delay, specifically in this case jury blackout delay and general court scheduling/backlog delay indirectly related to covid. Second, how much defence delay was there in scheduling the trial dates and how to apportion any ‘resulting defence delay’ when the first trial date could not proceed due to judicial unavailability.

i) Court Closures

[27] The Crown argued that 13 days should be deducted for court closures from November 25th, 2020, to December 8th, 2020. The difficulty with this argument is that the courts were not closed at this point and Mr. Downey’s matter was clearly at the intake stage in any event. Disclosure was not provided until April of 2021.

[28] I pause here to note that, in this case, there appeared to have been no trickle-down effect relating to the COVID-19 closures and dates being set while this matter was in the provincial court. When preliminary hearing dates were being set on June 1, 2021, the first dates that were offered were on August 18 and 19th, 2021, just over two months away. The Crown was not available for those dates.

[29] I agree with counsel for Mr. Downey that if anything, the delay in provincial court was because of slow disclosure roll out, the Crown being unavailable for many of the preliminary hearing dates, and the Crown’s decision to then seek a direct indictment.

[30] The 13 days for court closures as argued by the Crown will not be deducted from the overall delay.

ii) Jury Blackout Delay

[31] The Crown argues that 3 months and 21 days should be deducted from the overall delay during the time frames of May 11, 2021, to September 2021 given the jury blackout that was in place. In fairness to the Crown there was an additional moratorium on new jury selections from December 7th, 2021, until February 28th, 2022.: see Agpoon.

[32] I am unable to find that there was any delay that should be attributed to the jury blackout period specifically. This matter was not even in the Superior Court ready to set a date until after the blackout period was over, and notwithstanding the pandemic backlog issues, this matter was eventually scheduled to proceed within a reasonable time.

[33] The Crown argued that the issue of the jury blackout periods was evident throughout the lifespan of this file point to the adjournment of the trial on June 19th and 20th, 2023. They argued it was clear from Justice Goldstein’s comments that the matter could be reached on the priority list if it remained a jury trial.

[34] The difficulty with this argument is twofold. First, an accused person is entitled to elect to have their matter tried before a judge and jury, and this fact cannot be used against them in assessing delay. Secondly, Justice Goldstein said nothing about the matter not being reached because it was proceeding with a jury. It is clear when looking at Justice Goldstein’s comments that the matter could not be reached because a judge was not available in combination with covid created backlog.

[35] While I do not accept the argument about specific jury blackout delay, I am satisfied that there was delay attributable to general covid backlog in setting the first trial date. Mr. Downey appeared for the first time in Superior Court, February 17th of 2022. His first trial was eventually scheduled to proceed June 19th, 2023, some 487 days or 16 months later. While not entirely out of the range for this jurisdiction, it is at the longer end particularly for what I understand is a straightforward case.

[36] In the circumstances I will deduct 3 months for 'covid backlog' delay.

iii) Defence Delay in Setting the First Trial Date

[37] The Crown also argues that there should be defence delay when counsel was not available from July 4th until December 5th, 2022, when the first trial dates were being set.

[38] It was conceded by counsel for Mr. Downey that some of the delay in setting this first trial date should be attributable to the defence. Specifically, the time frame from September 16th, 2022, to December 5th, 2022, a period of 2 months and 20 days or 80 days. This is a fair concession and a reasonable one taking into account the defence efforts to secure earlier dates.

[39] I would apportion 2 months and 20 days (80 days) to defence delay.

iv) Setting of the 2nd Trial Date

[40] The Crown argues that the period of delay from June 30, 2023, until May 3, 2024 (10 months and 3 days), should be apportioned in its entirety to covid related delay. This period accounts for the anticipated end of the original trial on June 30, 2023, to the anticipated end of the new trial on May 3, 2024. In the alternative they argue that the portion from July 10, 2023, until April 2, 2024 (8 months and 23 days), should be characterized entirely as defence delay.

[41] The Crown based this submission on Mr. Downey's election to be tried by a jury, and the comments of Justice Goldstein that the trial could not be reached because of judicial vacancies and "covid backlog is still there". I am not satisfied that the entire period of delay from the time of the original trial date in June of 2023 to April of 2024 should be attributed to covid related delay. The reason for the need to reschedule in this case was that there was no judge available.

[42] In R. v. Alli, 2023 ONSC 5829, which was released on December 11, 2023, Forestell J., at para 18-25 described the situation in this court between April and December of 2023 as follows:

> This jurisdiction has a very high volume of serious and complex cases. The volume of cases in this jurisdiction has increased appreciably in recent years. As noted by Molloy J. in R. v. R.D., Toronto has a higher percentage of complex trials and long trials than other jurisdictions.

There are more homicide trials in Toronto than in any other jurisdiction in Canada. There are also more large 'project' cases in Toronto than in other jurisdictions. The 'project' cases can involve hundreds of accused and multiple, complex applications. The length and complexity of trials has increased with no increase in the number of judges and no increase in the number of courtrooms.

In addition, this jurisdiction continues to deal with a backlog of cases created by the suspension of jury trials for a total of approximately 11 months during periods of the COVID-19 pandemic. While the last jury suspension ended about twenty months ago, the completion of backlogged trials in addition to the normal caseload has created ongoing systemic delay.

In spite of the high volume of cases and the effects of the COVID-19 backlog however, simple trials were generally being set in 2022 within 12 months of indictments being filed. The trials were set with the expectation that the court would have a full complement of judges at the time of the trials.

In April of 2023 when this trial was not reached because there was no judge available to hear it, this jurisdiction had seven judicial vacancies. There are still seven vacancies in this jurisdiction. The number of vacancies has remained essentially unchanged for at least a year.

On May 3, 2023, 20 days after this trial was not reached because of a lack of judicial resources, Chief Justice Wagner expressed his concern about the chronic shortage of federally appointed judges. He pointed out that courts were operating with 10 to 15 per cent of their judicial positions vacant. These comments are applicable to this jurisdiction.

Had the judicial positions in Toronto been filled, this case and others would not have been delayed.

...

Judges of this Court are working at capacity. It is common for judges on the criminal team in Toronto to work through scheduled non-sitting weeks and even through vacation weeks to attempt to ensure that trials are heard in a timely fashion. All participants in the process have done everything possible to avoid delay. This case has taken longer than it should have because this court lacked the judicial resources to hear the case in a timely manner.

[43] I adopt those comments and note that the issue of judicial unavailability in this jurisdiction has also been discussed in Bowen-Wright, R. v. Constantino, 2024 ONSC 491 and R. v. Liu, 2024 ONSC 2022.

[44] The comments of Code J., in Liu at para 52 are also apposite:

> In my view it was unacceptable for the federal government to have ignored the May 2023 written warning from the Chief Justice of Canada. This kind of stubborn institutional refusal to respond to a crisis in the justice system is inexcusable and it is "constitutionally impermissible" as the Supreme Court put it in Jordan, supra at para 117.

[45] As Schreck J: said in Bowen-Wright at para 52:

> ….the Crown and the justice system have a duty to mitigate delay caused by discrete events.: Jordan para 75; Cody at para 48. Regardless of how many judicial vacancies there were before the pandemic, one obvious way to reduce the backlog of cases is to make sure that judicial vacancies are filled so that trials do not get adjourned. The state failed to do this.

[46] The effect of the pandemic on the system in causing backlog has been well known and was certainly obvious in June of 2023. There was no moratorium on judicial vacancies being filled during the pandemic. There is no reason why vacancies which have existed since before the pandemic could not have been filled at a faster pace than what we have seen.

[47] This leads to the alternative argument with respect to whether the 'resulting' delay in scheduling the second trial should be attributed to the defence. Schreck J., in Bowen-Wright summarizes some of the more important factors to consider when assessing the kind of delay under the modern 'contextual approach'.: see para 38-43. Consideration must be given to all the circumstances including:

a. The reason for the need to reschedule.
b. The extent to which the defence was unavailable.
c. The reasons for defence unavailability.
d. The extent of notice given of the new available date.

[48] The extent to which the defence was unavailable, the reasons for that unavailability and the notice given are inextricably bound up in the factual circumstances of this case. After the June 19th trial was adjourned the Crown emailed Mr. Angelini on June 23rd, advising that dates beginning July 10th were available for trial, just over two weeks later. Understandably Mr. Angelini was not available.

[49] In R. v. Godin, 2009 SCC 26 at para 23, the court stated: "scheduling requires reasonable availability and reasonable cooperation; it does not, for s. 11(b) purposes, require defence counsel to hold themselves in a state of perpetual availability". It is not reasonable to expect that the defence should have been available some two weeks later. There is no delay attributable to the defence for this part of the delay.

[50] The matter then appeared again on July 17th, August 14th, August 28th, and September 11th but no dates were available. To be clear, this is not an issue of Mr. Angelini or the Crown not being available, there were simply no dates being offered. There was no explanation provided as to why no dates were being offered. I am not prepared to apportion any of the time frame between July 19th and September 28th as defence delay.

[51] When the matter appeared on September 28th, a trial date of November 14th was offered. Mr. Angelini was only advised of this date the day before and again, understandably, he was not available. Other dates were offered on December 4th, January 8th (a possible date) and January 22nd. Both Mr. Angelini and the Crown had difficulties with December 4th, given obligations with other Superior Court matters. Mr. Angelini was not available January 22nd or February 19th. Mr. Angelini also indicated that had the January 8th date been offered two weeks earlier, he would have been available.

[52] Defence counsel's unavailability for portions of this time frame were reasonable.: see R. v. Safdar, 2021 ONCA 207. Defence counsel had made consistent efforts through the course of the entire proceedings to have the matter heard as quickly as possible. He was booked on other serious matters and was being given very little notice of new potential dates. The defence acknowledged that the time frame from January 22, 2024, until April 2nd, should be apportioned as defence delay. This is a delay of 2 months and 12 days or 72 days. This is a reasonable concession and one I agree with.

[53] As outlined above, I have not found that COVID-19 related issues were the primary reason for the delay in this case. In provincial court there was no delay caused by Covid-19 related backlog or jury blackout periods, but rather Crown delay in setting the preliminary hearing and the seeking of a direct indictment. At the time of the first trial date this matter was already over the Jordan prescribed limit of 30 months. While COVID-19 backlog may have caused some delay, the most significant contributing factor to the overall delay in this case was a systemic lack of judicial resources.: Alli para 26.

[54] Having regard to all the circumstances of this particular case, I am apportioning the delay as follows:

a. 2 months and 19 days (80 days) defence delay in setting the first trial date;
b. 2 months and 12 days (72 days) defence delay in setting the second trial date;
c. 3 months (90 days) of covid 'backlog delay';

[55] The delay as deducted amounts to 8 months (242 days), bringing the total delay in this case to 33 months and 7 days (1012 days). This clearly exceeds the 30-month ceiling as established by Jordan.

Conclusion

[56] The application is granted. There will be an order pursuant to s. 11(b) and 24(1) of the Charter staying the proceedings.

_____

J.K. Penman J.

Released: April 15, 2024

CITATION: R. v. Downey, 2024 ONSC 2157
COURT FILE NO.: CR-22-10000121-0000
DATE: 20240415

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:

HIS MAJESTY THE KING

– and –

Marlon Downey

Applicant

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT

J. K. Penman J.

Released: April 15, 2024

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

CITATION: R. v. Edwards, 2024 SCC 15

APPEALS HEARD: October 16, 2023
JUDGMENT RENDERED: April 26, 2024
DOCKETS: 39820, 39822, 40046, 40065, 40103

BETWEEN:

Leading Seaman C.D. Edwards, Captain C.M.C. Crépeau, Gunner K.J.J. Fontaine and Captain M.J. Iredale
Appellants

and

His Majesty The King
Respondent

AND BETWEEN:

Sergeant S.R. Proulx and Master Corporal J.R.S. Cloutier
Appellants

and

His Majesty The King
Respondent

AND BETWEEN:

Corporal K.L. Christmas
Appellant

and

His Majesty The King
Respondent

AND BETWEEN:

Lieutenant (Navy) C.A.I. Brown
Appellant

and

His Majesty The King
Respondent

AND BETWEEN:

Sergeant A.J.R. Thibault
Appellant

and

His Majesty The King
Respondent

- and -

Canadian Civil Liberties Association and British Columbia Civil Liberties Association
Interveners

CORAM: Wagner C.J. and Karakatsanis, Côté, Rowe, Kasirer, Jamal and O'Bonsawin JJ.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT: (paras. 1 to 149) Kasirer J. (Wagner C.J. and Côté, Rowe, Jamal and O'Bonsawin JJ. concurring)

DISSENTING REASONS: (paras. 150 to 211) Karakatsanis J.

Leading Seaman C.D. Edwards, Captain C.M.C. Crépeau, Gunner K.J.J. Fontaine and Captain M.J. Iredale Appellants

v.

His Majesty The King Respondent

- and -

Sergeant S.R. Proulx and Master Corporal J.R.S. Cloutier Appellants

v.

His Majesty The King Respondent

- and -

Corporal K.L. Christmas Appellant

v.

His Majesty The King Respondent

- and -

Lieutenant (Navy) C.A.I. Brown Appellant

v.

His Majesty The King Respondent

- and -

Sergeant A.J.R. Thibault Appellant

v.

His Majesty The King Respondent

and

Canadian Civil Liberties Association and British Columbia Civil Liberties Association Interveners

Indexed as: R. v. Edwards

2024 SCC 15

File Nos.: 39820, 39822, 40046, 40065, 40103.

2023: October 16; 2024: April 26.

Present: Wagner C.J. and Karakatsanis, Côté, Rowe, Kasirer, Jamal and O'Bonsawin JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT MARTIAL APPEAL COURT OF CANADA

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Independent and impartial tribunal — Courts martial — Military judges — Whether military status of military judges violates constitutional guarantee of judicial independence and impartiality to which persons tried before courts martial are entitled — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s. 11(d) — National Defence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. N-5, ss. 165.21, 165.24(2).

The nine accused are members of the Canadian Armed Forces who were charged with service offences under the Code of Service Discipline ("CSD"), which forms Part III of the National Defence Act ("NDA"), and were brought before courts martial. Under the CSD, members of the Canadian Armed Forces may be charged with service offences, which are serious and encompass offences specific to military personnel and offences under the Criminal Code or other acts of Parliament. Service offences are tried before a court martial, which is a military court that has the same powers, rights, and privileges as a superior court of criminal jurisdiction. Courts martial are presided over by military judges, who are required under s. 165.21 of the NDA to be barristers or advocates of at least 10 years' standing at the bar of a province and to be military officers and to have been so for at least 10 years. Section 165.24(2) of the NDA further provides that the Chief Military Judge must hold a rank of not less than colonel. The NDA provides that military judges can only be removed for cause by the Governor in Council upon recommendation of the Military Judges Inquiry Committee ("MJIC"). As officers, military judges are part of the chain of command, and therefore are also subject to prosecution for service infractions and service offences under the CSD.

The nine accused challenged the statutory requirement that the military judges presiding over their courts martial be officers, alleging that it violates their right to a hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal under s. 11(d) of the Charter. In the courts martial, some of the military judges held that they lacked judicial independence by reason of their dual status of judge and officer, and therefore that the respective accused's s. 11(d) rights were infringed. The Court Martial Appeal Court ("CMAC") held that an informed person, viewing the matter realistically and practically and having thought the matter through, would conclude that military judges meet the minimum constitutional norms of impartiality and independence, and therefore that the accused's s. 11(d) rights were not infringed.

Held (Karakatsanis J. dissenting): The appeals should be dismissed.

Per Wagner C.J. and Côté, Rowe, Kasirer, Jamal and O'Bonsawin JJ.: The status of military judges as officers under the NDA is not incompatible with their judicial functions for the purposes of s. 11(d) of the Charter. Accused members of the Canadian Armed Forces who appear before military judges are entitled to the same guarantee of judicial independence and impartiality under s. 11(d) as accused persons who appear before civilian criminal courts, but this does not require that the two systems be identical in every respect. As presently configured in the NDA, Canada's system of military justice fully ensures judicial independence for military judges in a way that takes account of the military context, and specifically of the legislative policies of maintaining discipline, efficiency and morale in the Armed Forces and public trust in a disciplined military. Accordingly, the requirement that military judges be officers pursuant to ss. 165.21 and 165.24(2) of the NDA does not fall afoul of s. 11(d) of the Charter.

In R. v. Généreux, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 259, the Court held that the military status of military judges does not violate s. 11(d). While the Court may depart from precedent when a decision's rationale has been eroded by significant societal or legal change, it has not been shown that the rationale in Généreux has been eroded due to such changes, and therefore there is no compelling reason to abandon settled law. The Court in Généreux did acknowledge that the place of military judges in the military hierarchy detracts from absolute judicial independence, but it also confirmed that s. 11(d) does not require absolute judicial independence or a sort of truly independent military judiciary that could only be assured by civilian judges. "Absolute" independence is not the constitutional standard endorsed in the Court's jurisprudence.

Généreux establishes that whatever concerns might arise as a result of Parliament's choice to require that military judges be officers, that model is not inherently unconstitutional under s. 11(d). Other models, such as a military judiciary composed of civilian judges, might also be constitutionally compliant, but Généreux does not stand for the proposition that an independent military judiciary requires civilian judges or that only one policy option would be constitutionally compliant. Law reform initiatives in other countries may assist in setting government policy but do not require Parliament to follow suit. Recommendations made in independent reports that were submitted in these cases may be of value as a matter of government policy, but they do not determine what is required by s. 11(d) of the Charter. The suitability of various policy options, within the bounds of the Constitution, is a matter of legislative choice. The Court's proper role is to decide whether ss. 165.21 and 165.24(2) of the NDA are constitutional. What is at issue is not whether the Canadian military justice system could practically function with civilian judges but whether the impugned requirement under the NDA violates the guarantee set by s. 11(d).

Généreux continues to provide useful guidance as precedent on the following matters: s. 11(d) applies to the military justice system; a parallel system staffed by judges with military status who are sensitive to the needs of military justice does not, in itself, offend s. 11(d); and there may well be different modalities for ensuring that military judges have a degree of independence that meets the constitutional minimum. Adapted to the military context, military justice is different in some respects from civilian criminal justice, but the guarantee of independence is no less Charter-compliant by reason of this difference.

In Généreux, the Court ultimately concluded that military judges did not enjoy a sufficient degree of independence; however, this was based on provisions of the NDA that have since been amended. Accordingly, a fresh analysis is required. To assess the independence of a tribunal, a reviewing court asks whether the tribunal may be reasonably perceived as independent. As explained in Généreux, the exercise for evaluating independence and impartiality under s. 11(d) is the same: the question is whether a reasonable and informed person would perceive the tribunal as independent and impartial. The reasonable and informed person has knowledge of all the relevant circumstances and views the matter realistically and practically. They are alive to the relevant contextual considerations, they are right minded, they think the matter through, they apply themselves to the question and obtain the required information.

In Valente v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673, the Court identified three essential conditions of judicial independence: security of tenure, financial security and administrative independence. Security of tenure requires that the judge hold office whether until an age of retirement, for a fixed term, or for a specific adjudicative task so as to secure against interference by the executive. Financial security requires that the right to salary and pension be established by law and that judicial remuneration be fixed through a process that includes an independent commission. Administrative independence means judicial control over the administrative decisions that bear directly on the exercise of the judicial function. Additionally, even if the reasonable and informed person would conclude that a court is independent because the three essential conditions are met, they may still come to the conclusion that the court is not impartial at either the individual or the institutional level. While independent courts benefit from a strong presumption of impartiality that is not easily displaced, if a reasonable and informed person would think it more likely than not that the court would not decide fairly because of individual or institutional concerns, the impartiality of the court may be challenged.

The three essential conditions of judicial independence for military judges are met through the provisions of the NDA. First, regarding security of tenure, the NDA now provides that military judges are appointed by the Governor in Council, and that unless they are removed for cause, they hold office until they are voluntarily released from the military or resign from the position of military judge, or until they reach the age of 60. Military judges can only be removed from office by the Governor in Council, for cause, upon a recommendation of their judicial peers properly convened as the MJIC. While it is true that military judges, as officers, can be convicted of offences under the CSD and sanctioned to sentences including dismissal from the Armed Forces, a reasonable and informed person, looking at matters practically, including a reading of the NDA as a whole, would not view the risk of there being an indirect means of removing military judges to be a realistic possibility. Second, the requirement of financial security is amply met as military judges have their own remuneration scheme and their compensation is fixed through a process that centres on an independent committee. Third, military judges, including the Chief Military Judge, are responsible for the decisions that must be left to judges in order for there to be sufficient administrative independence, such as assigning military judges to preside at courts martial and establishing procedural rules. These matters are insulated from non-judicial interference by the chain of command.

The place of military judges in the executive branch and their exposure to prosecution for CSD offences do not ground a reasonable perception of a lack of impartiality. First, military judges, as members of the executive, are not in an irretrievable conflict of interest with their judicial role such that the constitutional principle of separation of powers is violated. The manner in which their role as judges is circumscribed makes it plain that they do not act as members of the executive when they perform their judicial duties. Only the Chief Military Judge can assign duties to military judges, and these duties must not be incompatible with their judicial duties, which are also assigned by the Chief Military Judge. Military judges have their own, separate grievance procedure and have protections against interference through performance evaluations by the executive. Like other judges, military judges take a solemn oath to act impartially. They are vested with the same powers, rights and privileges as judges of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction and enjoy the same immunity from liability. The reasonable and informed person would expect that military judges will abide by their oath of office and have confidence that, given their legal training and experience, they will set aside improper influences or recuse themselves if they ever feel that they cannot do so.

Second, a reasonable apprehension of bias is not created by the possible liability of military judges to discipline under the CSD. Military judges are not above the law and can be held accountable when they act outside their judicial functions for their conduct as members of the Armed Forces. As officers, military judges are part of the chain of command and must comply with lawful orders issued by superior officers. If they fail to do so, they could be subject to discipline under the CSD. However, there are sufficient protections against a perception taking hold that the status of military judges as officers exposes them to interference by the executive in the exercise of their judicial functions. Before military judges can be prosecuted, the person laying the charge must receive legal advice concerning the appropriate charge, and the Director of Military Prosecutions, who has an obligation to act independently of partisan concerns, must decide to proceed with charges. Moreover, an order from a superior officer that has the purpose of interfering with a military judge's judicial work would be an unlawful order and an abusive or purely retaliatory prosecution would be an unlawful prosecution. Overall, the reasonable and informed person would not be concerned that the independence or impartiality of military judges can be undermined because of their status as officers that makes them subject to the CSD.

The requirements in ss. 165.21 and 165.24(2) of the NDA therefore meet the standards of judicial independence and impartiality under s. 11(d) of the Charter. A reasonable and informed person, looking at the matter realistically and practically and having thought the matter through, would not conclude that the officer status of military judges raises any apprehension of bias or that it amounts to a lack of sufficient independence such that there is a breach of s. 11(d).

Per Karakatsanis J. (dissenting): The appeals should be allowed and the legislative scheme under the NDA should be declared of no force or effect insofar as it subjects military judges to the disciplinary process administered by military authorities. Members of the Canadian Armed Forces charged with offences are not guaranteed a hearing by an impartial and independent tribunal under s. 11(d) of the Charter due to the pressure military judges face as part of the chain of command, particularly, their disciplinary accountability through a regime that can be launched and prosecuted by their hierarchical superiors. The liability of military judges to the executive under the CSD as currently structured undermines their judicial independence. The breach of s. 11(d) cannot be saved by s. 1.

There is agreement with the majority that the requirement that military judges presiding over courts martial also have the military status of officers does not necessarily contravene the s. 11(d) right of a member of the Armed Forces. Properly designed and protected, the executive and judicial roles of military judges can coexist. There is also acceptance that under the NDA, military judges can, as officers, be accountable for CSD offences. However, the ability of the military executive to impose discipline on military judges would cause a reasonable and informed person facing a court martial to apprehend that the military judge could be unduly influenced by a loyalty to rank and by the position or policies of the military hierarchy, to the detriment of the accused member's individual rights. There are insufficient safeguards in place to alleviate the potential risk of interference by the military chain of command. There is not enough institutional separation — or independence — between the executive and the judicial role.

The separation of powers is fundamentally important in maintaining judicial independence, in particular separation from the executive branch. Judges must be able to render decisions based solely on the requirements of the law and justice according to their own conscience, without outside interference or pressure. Judicial independence and impartiality are distinct concepts but they often overlap. Independence is an underlying condition that contributes to the guarantee of an impartial hearing. The three hallmarks of judicial independence — security of tenure, financial security and administrative independence — do not provide a complete answer to the question of whether judges benefit from sufficient independence. A particular tribunal will still lack institutional independence if there is the appearance that it cannot perform its adjudicative role without interference.

Although judicial discipline and accountability, both important imperatives of broader social policy, can be in tension with judicial independence, civilian judges remain accountable for their conduct through ethical and professional rules of conduct via a judicial oversight committee. This encroachment on their independence is justified by the need to protect the integrity of the administration of justice. However, in matters of discipline, the separation between the judiciary and the other branches of government is necessary to avoid the appearance of any intervention based on public opinion and political expediency. Judicial independence requires that discipline of the judiciary be reserved to an autonomous, apolitical and independent entity.

In the military context, judicial independence is analyzed under these same principles. The standard of independence for military judges is no less than for civilian judges. Military judges, much like civilian judges, are subject to the civilian criminal justice system and are accountable for their misconduct through a judicial oversight committee (the MJIC). However, unlike civilian judges, military judges are also answerable for their conduct to their superiors within the chain of command. By holding a military rank, military judges are subject to service infractions and to the many service offences that can be prosecuted under the CSD for the military objectives of good order and discipline, efficiency and morale. They belong to the same institution responsible for laying charges against them and against the members who appear before them. If convicted of service offences, military judges may face dismissal from the Armed Forces, a criminal record and life-time imprisonment. Moreover, under the NDA, military judges face military prosecution for offences already covered by the Criminal Code and any other act of Parliament, but the decision to proceed under the military justice system can have a significant impact on their rights. Thus, military judges face a unique disciplinary regime that is launched and prosecuted by the executive, which has no equivalent in the civilian world.

The military context matters in determining whether a reasonable and informed person would be concerned about the pressures military judges face given their disciplinary accountability towards their superiors. Independent reports, which provide material insight on the concerns of a reasonable and informed member of the public, have long insisted that military judges, who currently keep the rank they held before their judicial appointment, should be awarded their own distinct rank, or civilianized. Because of a judge's given rank, it is reasonable that military personnel facing a court martial may fear a judge could prioritize allegiance to rank and to the chain of command over their respective individual rights. The possibility of the executive reviewing the military judge's conduct either by summary hearing or by court martial would be perceived by a reasonable and informed person as insufficient independence between the executive and judicial roles.

Because of this reasonable apprehension that military judges may not be institutionally impartial, any safeguards that may reduce those effects must be considered. Here, the safeguards said to alleviate the risk that military judges would feel pressure to be loyal towards the chain of command are insufficient. First, the requirement in the NDA that military judges must take an oath of office, while an important foundation for an individual judge's independence, does little to guard against an apprehension of institutional bias. Second, military judges do not have sufficient security of tenure simply because they may only ultimately be removed as a military judge for cause through the MJIC. On conviction of a disciplinary offence, the NDA allows for sanctions of demotion or dismissal from the Armed Forces, meaning military judges would lose their status as officers and therefore a key qualification for their tenure. In any event, because military judges remain liable for uniquely military disciplinary charges initiated by their superiors, the rationale that animates the need for security of tenure — securing against interference by the executive — is not safeguarded. Third, the presumption that the Director of Military Prosecutions will carry out its functions independently of partisan concerns cannot be relied upon to safeguard judicial independence. The protection of the rule of law should not depend on a belief that institutions are immune from impropriety and, above all, the DMP does not act independently of the chain of command; rather, the DMP performs its functions under the supervision of the Judge Advocate General, who must be totally loyal and partisan to the interests of the military. A reasonable and informed observer would therefore be concerned about institutional bias because military judges could face discipline from their superiors.

Cases Cited

By Kasirer J.

Applied: R. v. Généreux, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 259; Valente v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673; Committee for Justice and Liberty v. National Energy Board, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 369; considered: MacKay v. The Queen, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 370; R. v. Stillman, 2019 SCC 40, [2019] 3 S.C.R. 144; R. v. Pett, 2020 CM 4002; R. v. D'Amico, 2020 CM 2002; referred to: R. v. Lippé, [1991] 2 S.C.R. 114; R. v. Kirkpatrick, 2022 SCC 33; R. v. Chouhan, 2021 SCC 26, [2021] 2 S.C.R. 136; Reference re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alta.), [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313; Re B.C. Motor Vehicle Act, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 486; Wewaykum Indian Band v. Canada, 2003 SCC 45, [2003] 2

S.C.R. 259; Miglin v. Miglin, 2003 SCC 24, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 303; Yukon Francophone School Board, Education Area #23 v. Yukon (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 25, [2015] 2 S.C.R. 282; Cojocaru v. British Columbia Women's Hospital and Health Centre, 2013 SCC 30, [2013] 2 S.C.R. 357; Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) v. Tobiass, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 391; British Columbia (Attorney General) v. Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia, 2020 SCC 20, [2020] 2 S.C.R. 506; Conférence des juges de paix magistrats du Québec v. Quebec (Attorney General), 2016 SCC 39, [2016] 2 S.C.R. 116; Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 3; R. v. Wigglesworth, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 541; 2747-3174 Québec Inc. v. Quebec (Régie des permis d'alcool), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 919; Ell v. Alberta, 2003 SCC 35, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 857; Application under s. 83.28 of the Criminal Code (Re), 2004 SCC 42, [2004] 2 S.C.R. 248; R. v. Leblanc, 2011 CMAC 2, 7 C.M.A.R. 559; Moreau-Bérubé v. New Brunswick (Judicial Council), 2002 SCC 11, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 249; Therrien (Re), 2001 SCC 35, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 3; Canada (Director of Military Prosecutions) v. Canada (Office of the Chief Military Judge), 2020 FC 330, [2020] 3 F.C.R. 411; Nova Scotia (Attorney General) v. Judges of the Provincial Court and Family Court of Nova Scotia, 2020 SCC 21, [2020] 2 S.C.R. 556; R. v. Kokopenace, 2015 SCC 28, [2015] 2 S.C.R. 398; R. v. Teskey, 2007 SCC 25, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 267; President of the Republic of South Africa v. South African Rugby Football Union, [1999] ZACC 9, 1999 (7) B.C.L.R. 725; R. v. Moriarity, 2015 SCC 55, [2015] 3 S.C.R. 485; R. v. Billard, 2008 CMAC 4, 7 C.M.A.R. 238; R. v. Finta, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 701; R. v. Lalande, 2011 CM 2005; R. v. Liwyj, 2010 CMAC 6, 7 C.M.A.R. 481; R. v. Edmunds, 2018 CMAC 2, 8 C.M.A.R. 260; R. v. Cawthorne, 2016 SCC 32, [2016] 1 S.C.R. 983; Boucher v. The Queen, [1955] S.C.R. 16; R. v. Nur, 2015 SCC 15, [2015] 1 S.C.R. 773.

By Karakatsanis J. (dissenting)

R. v. Généreux, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 259; Valente v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673; R. v. Pett, 2020 CM 4002; R. v. D'Amico, 2020 CM 2002; R. v. Bourque, 2020 CM 2008; R. v. MacPherson and Chauhan and J.L., 2020 CM 2012; R. v. Cogswell, 2020 CM 2014; R. v. Jacques, 2020 CM 3010; R. v. Pépin, 2021 CM 3005; Ocean Port Hotel Ltd. v. British Columbia (General Manager, Liquor Control and Licensing Branch), 2001 SCC 52, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 781; Beauregard v. Canada, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 56; 2747-3174 Québec Inc. v. Quebec (Régie des permis d'alcool), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 919; IWA v. Consolidated-Bathurst Packaging Ltd., [1990] 1 S.C.R. 282; Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 3; References re Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act, 2021 SCC 11, [2021] 1 S.C.R. 175; Mackin v. New Brunswick (Minister of Finance), 2002 SCC 13, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 405; MacKeigan v. Hickman, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 796; R. v. Lippé, [1991] 2 S.C.R. 114; British Columbia v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2005 SCC 49, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 473; Application under s. 83.28 of the Criminal Code (Re), 2004 SCC 42, [2004] 2 S.C.R. 248; Moreau-Bérubé v. New Brunswick (Judicial Council), 2002 SCC 11, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 249; Therrien (Re), 2001 SCC 35, [2001] 2 S.C.R. 3; R. v. Golzari, 2017 CMAC 3, 8 C.M.A.R. 106; MacKay v. The Queen, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 370; R. v. Stillman, 2019 SCC 40, [2019] 3 S.C.R. 144; Canada (Director of Military Prosecutions) v. Canada (Office of the Chief Military Judge), 2020 FC 330, [2020] 3 F.C.R. 411; R. v. Cawthorne, 2016 SCC 32, [2016] 1 S.C.R. 983; R. v. Nur, 2015 SCC 15, [2015] 1 S.C.R. 773; R. v. Anderson, 2014 SCC 41, [2014] 2 S.C.R. 167; R. v. Appulonappa, 2015 SCC 59, [2015] 3 S.C.R. 754; R. v. Bain, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 91; R. v. Oakes, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Act to amend the National Defence Act and to make related and consequential amendments to other Acts, S.C. 2019, c. 15, s. 25.

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 7, 11(d), 24(1).

Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, S.C. 1996, c. 19, s. 5(1), (2).

Constitution Act, 1982, s. 52.

Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, ss. 271, 279(2).

Judges Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. J-1, ss. 98(1), 102, 117(1).

National Defence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. N-5, ss. 2 "service offence", 9.2, 9.3(3), 12, 17, 18, 19, 29(2.1), 49, Part III, "Code of Service Discipline", 55, 60, 83, 85, 90, 92, 93, 97, 129, 130, 139, 140.1, 140.2, 141(1.1), 161.1(1), 162.4, 162.5, 162.7, 162.94, 163, 163.6 to 163.91, 164(1.1) [rep. 2019, c. 15, s. 25], (1.3) [idem], Div. 6, 165, 165.11, 165.15, 165.17, 165.21, 165.23, 165.231, 165.24, 165.25, 165.3, 165.31, 165.32, 165.33 to 165.37, 179, 203.1(2)(b), 249.27, 273.601, Sch.

Queen's Regulations and Orders for the Canadian Forces (last modifications on June 20, 2022), arts. 1.13, 3.20, 4.081(1), ch. 15, arts. 19.75(1), 20.04, 26.10, 26.12, 102.02, 102.04, 102.07(2)(b), ch. 120, 204.

Treaties and Other International Instruments

United Nations. Economic and Social Council. Bangalore Principles of Judicial Conduct, U.N. Doc. E/RES/2006/23, July 27, 2006, preamble.

Authors Cited

Brun, Henri, Guy Tremblay et Eugénie Brouillet. Droit constitutionnel, 6e éd. Cowansville, Que.: Yvon Blais, 2014.

Canada. Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia. Dishonoured Legacy: The Lessons of the Somalia Affair — Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia — Executive Summary. Ottawa, 1997.

Canada. Department of National Defence. Report of the Second Independent Review Authority to The Honourable Peter G. MacKay Minister of National Defence, by Patrick J. LeSage. Toronto, 2011.

Canada. Department of National Defence. Report of the Independent External Comprehensive Review of the Department of National Defence and the Canadian Armed Forces, by Louise Arbour. Ottawa, 2022.

Canada. Department of National Defence. Report of the Third Independent Review Authority to the Minister of National Defence, by Morris J. Fish. Ottawa, 2021.

Canada. Department of National Defence. The First Independent Review by the Right Honourable Antonio Lamer P.C., C.C., C.D. of the provisions and operation of Bill C-25, An Act to amend the National Defence Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, as required under section 96 of Statutes of Canada 1998, c. 35, by Antonio Lamer. Ottawa, 2003.

Canada. Director of Military Prosecutions. DMP Policy Directive # 002/00, Pre-Charge Screening, updated September 1, 2018 (online: https://www.canada.ca/content/dam/dnd-mdn/documents/legal-juridique/policies-directives/dmp-dpm-policy-directive-002-00-pre-charge-screening-verification-prealable-accusation.pdf; archived version: https://www.scc-csc.ca/cso-dce/2024SCC-CSC15_1_eng_fra.pdf).

Canada. Special Advisory Group on Military Justice and Military Police Investigation Services. Report of the Special Advisory Group on Military Justice and Military Police Investigation Services. Ottawa, 1997.

Canadian Judicial Council. Ethical Principles for Judges. Ottawa, 2021.

Cloutier, Jean-Bruno. “L’utilisation de l’article 129 de la Loi sur la défense nationale dans le système de justice militaire canadien” (2004), 35 R.D.U.S. 1.

Drapeau, Michel W., and Gilles Létourneau, in collaboration with Joshua Juneau and Stéfanie Bédard. Canada's Military Justice System is in a Meltdown: Will Government Act? Ottawa: Michel Drapeau Law Office, 2021.

Fidell, Eugene R. Military Justice: A Very Short Introduction. New York: Oxford University Press, 2016.

Friedland, Martin L. A Place Apart: Judicial Independence and Accountability in Canada. Ottawa: Canadian Judicial Council, 1995.

Gibson, Michael. "Military justice in operational settings, peacekeeping missions and situations of transitional justice", in Alison Duxbury and Matthew Groves, eds., Military Justice in the Modern Age. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2016, 381.

Huppé, Luc. Histoire des institutions judiciaires du Canada. Montréal: Wilson & Lafleur, 2007.

Huppé, Luc. La déontologie de la magistrature: Droit canadien: perspective internationale. Montréal: Wilson & Lafleur, 2018.

Huppé, Luc. "Les fondements de la déontologie judiciaire" (2004), 45 C. de D. 93.

Létourneau, Gilles. Combattre l'injustice et réformer. Montréal: Wilson & Lafleur, 2015.

Létourneau, Gilles. Introduction to Military Justice: an Overview of the Military Penal Justice System and its Evolution in Canada. Montréal: Wilson & Lafleur, 2012.

Létourneau, Gilles, and Michel W. Drapeau. Military Justice in Action: Annotated National Defence Legislation, 2nd ed. Toronto: Carswell, 2015.

Madden, Mike. "Keeping up with the Common Law O'Sullivans? The Limits of Comparative Law in the Context of Military Justice Law Reforms" (2013), 51 Alta. L. Rev. 125.

McNairn, David. "A Military Justice Primer, Part I" (2000), 43 Crim. L.Q. 243.

Sharpe, Robert J. Good Judgment: Making Judicial Decisions. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2018.

Smith, Lionel. The Law of Loyalty. New York: Oxford University Press, 2023.

Sossin, Lorne. "Judicial Appointment, Democratic Aspirations, and the Culture of Accountability" (2008), 58 U.N.B.L.J. 11.

United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime. Commentary on the Bangalore Principles of Judicial Conduct. Vienna, 2007.

Walker, Janet. "Military Justice: from Oxymoron to Aspiration" (1994), 32 Osgoode Hall L.J. 1.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada (Bell C.J. and Rennie and Pardu JJ.A.), 2021 CMAC 2, [2021] C.M.A.J. No. 2 (Lexis), 2021 CarswellNat 2036 (WL), setting aside decisions of d'Auteuil D.C.M.J., 2020 CM 3006, 2020 CarswellNat 3203 (WL); 2020 CM 3007, 2020 CarswellNat 3502 (WL); and 2020 CM 3008, 2020 CarswellNat 3831 (WL), and a decision of Pelletier M.J., 2020 CM 4011, 2020 CarswellNat 4042 (WL). Appeal dismissed, Karakatsanis J. dissenting.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada (Bell C.J. and Rennie and Pardu JJ.A.), 2021 CMAC 3, [2021] C.M.A.J. No. 3 (Lexis), 2021 CarswellNat 2096 (WL), setting aside decisions of Pelletier M.J., 2020 CM 4012, 2020 CarswellNat 5129 (WL); and 2020 CM 4013, 2020 CarswellNat 6959 (WL). Appeal dismissed, Karakatsanis J. dissenting.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada (Bell C.J. and Phelan and Green JJ.A.), 2022 CMAC 1, [2022] C.M.A.J. No. 1 (Lexis), 2021 CarswellNat 6625 (WL), setting aside a decision of d'Auteuil D.C.M.J., 2020 CM 3009, 2020 CarswellNat 5069 (WL). Appeal dismissed, Karakatsanis J. dissenting.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada (Bell C.J. and Heneghan and Scanlan JJ.A.), 2022 CMAC 2, [2022] C.M.A.J. No. 2

(Lexis), 2022 CarswellNat 773 (WL), setting aside a decision of Pelletier M.J., 2021 CM 4003, 2021 CarswellNat 1303 (WL). Appeal dismissed, Karakatsanis J. dissenting.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada (Bell C.J. and Rennie and Pardu JJ.A.), 2022 CMAC 3, [2022] C.M.A.J. No. 3 (Lexis), 2022 CarswellNat 1088 (WL), affirming a decision of Deschênes M.J., 2020 CM 5005, 2020 CarswellNat 5068 (WL). Appeal dismissed, Karakatsanis J. dissenting.

Mark Létourneau, Patrice Desbiens and Francesca Ferguson, for the appellants.

Dylan Kerr and Karl Lacharité, for the respondent.

Zain Naqi and David Ionis, for the intervener the Canadian Civil Liberties Association.

David McEwan, Greg Allen and Chloe Trudel, for the intervener the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association.

The judgment of Wagner C.J. and Côté, Rowe, Kasirer, Jamal and O'Bonsawin JJ. was delivered by

KASIRER J. —

(1) The Framework for Assessing the Independence of Military Judges

[84] To assess the independence of a tribunal, a reviewing court asks "whether the tribunal may be reasonably perceived as independent" (Valente, at p. 689; see also Committee for Justice and Liberty, at p. 394). In Généreux, at p. 286, Lamer C.J. explained that the exercise for evaluating independence and impartiality under s. 11(d) is the same ("[T]he test for this purpose is the same as the test for determining whether a decision-maker is biased. The question is whether an informed and reasonable person would perceive the tribunal as independent."). There is a strong presumption of judicial impartiality. As this Court has explained, "the presumption of impartiality carries considerable weight, and the law should not carelessly evoke the possibility of bias in a judge" (Wewaykum Indian Band v. Canada, 2003 SCC 45, [2003] 2 S.C.R. 259, at para. 59).

[85] This Court has held that the reasonable and informed person has "knowledge of all the relevant circumstances" and "view[s] the matter realistically and practically" (Miglin v. Miglin, 2003 SCC 24, [2003] 1 S.C.R. 303, at para. 26, cited with approval in Yukon Francophone School Board, Education Area #23 v. Yukon (Attorney General), 2015 SCC 25, [2015] 2 S.C.R. 282, at para. 37; see also Valente, at pp. 684-85). The reasonable and informed person is "apprised of" and "tak[es] into account all relevant circumstances" (Cojocaru v. British Columbia Women's Hospital and Health Centre, 2013 SCC 30, [2013] 2 S.C.R. 357, at paras. 13, 28 and 36) given that they are "well-informed" (Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) v.

Tobiass, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 391, at para. 70). As the CMAC observed in Edwards et al., they are alive to the relevant contextual considerations (para. 9). They are "right minded", they "th[ink] the matter through", and they "appl[y] themselves to the question and obtai[n] thereon the required information" (Committee for Justice and Liberty, at p. 394). Ultimately, this Court's jurisprudence "expect[s] a degree of mature judgment on the part of an informed public" (Yukon Francophone School Board, at para. 61).

[86] In Valente, this Court identified three essential conditions or hallmarks of judicial independence: security of tenure, financial security and administrative independence (pp. 694, 704 and 708; see also British Columbia (Attorney General) v. Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia, 2020 SCC 20, [2020] 2 S.C.R. 506, at para. 31; Conférence des juges de paix magistrats du Québec v. Quebec (Attorney General), 2016 SCC 39, [2016] 2 S.C.R. 116, at para. 33). Security of tenure requires that the judge hold office "whether until an age of retirement, for a fixed term, or for a specific adjudicative task" so as to "secure against interference by the Executive or other appointing authority in a discretionary or arbitrary manner" (Valente, at p. 698). Financial security requires that "the right to salary and pension should be established by law and not be subject to arbitrary interference by the Executive in a manner that could affect judicial independence", which was later held to require that judicial remuneration be fixed through a process that includes an independent commission (p. 704; Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 3 ("Provincial Judges Reference"); Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia). Administrative independence "may be summed up as judicial control over the administrative decisions that bear directly and immediately on the exercise of the judicial function" (Valente, at p. 712).

(2) The Three Essential Conditions of Judicial Independence Are Met Through Provisions of the NDA

[87] The appellants argue that the military status of military judges raises a reasonable apprehension of bias and results in military judges having an insufficient degree of independence.

[88] While they do not systematically ground their grievances in the Valente framework, and while some of their arguments seem to straddle the distinction between independence and impartiality, the appellants focus their challenge on the constitutionality of the impugned sections of the NDA on two broad points.

[89] First, they say, the requirement that military judges be members of both the judicial and executive branches violates the constitutional imperative of the separation of powers. Specifically, s. 11(d) does not permit members of the executive branch — including military officers — to exercise "core judicial functions", but they do (A.F., at para. 81). This gives rise to a perception that military judges labour under a conflict of interest, or of allegiances, between their judicial and their officer roles that could infect the independent and impartial exercise of their judicial duties. The appellants add that deference to the hierarchy within the chain of command also contributes to undermining the independence of military judges (para. 79). These considerations impugn the requirement of administrative independence, which would allow military judges to exercise their duties free from actual or perceived pressure or undue influence from others in the military hierarchy.

[90] The appellants' second argument pertains to the fact that, as officers, military judges are susceptible of being charged with service offences under the CSD. The appellants say that because military judges are themselves subject to prosecution before a court martial, the military hierarchy could bring pressure, or be perceived to be in a position to do so, on the judge as a threat or retaliatory measure for decisions made in the exercise of their judicial duties. This strikes in particular at the requirement that military judges must have security of tenure in order to judge matters with the confidence that they will not lose their positions as a result of the displeasure of others who are superior to them in the chain of command. It touches too on the requirement for administrative independence as that pressure may be reflected in smaller ways that interfere with their judicial work.

[91] Before examining the substance of these arguments, it is useful to dispel some uncertainty in respect of the manner in which the Court interpreted s. 11(d) in Généreux. One of the interveners joins the appellants in submitting that Lamer C.J. failed to follow the usual approach of giving a purposive interpretation to Charter guarantees in applying s. 11(d) to the military judiciary. Regarding the essential conditions for judicial independence established in Valente, Lamer C.J. wrote that "the

Barrett Richard Jordan Appellant

v.

Her Majesty The Queen Respondent

and

Attorney General of Alberta, British Columbia Civil Liberties Association and Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario) Interveners

Indexed as: R. v. Jordan

2016 SCC 27

File No.: 36068.

2015: October 7; 2016: July 8.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and Abella, Cromwell, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Wagner, Gascon, Côté and Brown JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Right to be tried within reasonable time — Delay of more than four years between charges and end of trial — Whether accused's right to be tried within reasonable time under s. 11(b) of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms infringed — New framework for applying s. 11(b).

J was charged in December 2008 for his role in a dial-a-dope operation. His trial ended in February 2013. J brought an application under s. 11(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, seeking a stay of proceedings due to the delay. In dismissing the application, the trial judge applied the framework set out in R. v. Morin, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 771. Ultimately, J was convicted. The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal.

Held: The appeal should be allowed, the convictions set aside and a stay of proceedings entered.

Per Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Côté and Brown JJ.: The delay was unreasonable and J's s. 11(b) Charter right was infringed. The Morin framework for

Barrett Richard Jordan Appelant

c.

Sa Majesté la Reine Intimée

et

Procureur général de l'Alberta, Association des libertés civiles de la Colombie-Britannique et Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario) Intervenants

Répertorié : R. c. Jordan

2016 CSC 27

N° du greffe : 36068.

2015 : 7 octobre; 2016 : 8 juillet.

Présents : La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges Abella, Cromwell, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Wagner, Gascon, Côté et Brown.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE LA COLOMBIE-BRITANNIQUE

Droit constitutionnel — Charte des droits — Procès dans un délai raisonnable — Délai de plus de quatre ans entre le dépôt des accusations et la fin du procès — Y a-t-il eu atteinte au droit de l'accusé d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable que lui garantit l'art. 11b) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés? — Nouveau cadre d'analyse pour l'application de l'art. 11b).

J a été inculpé en décembre 2008 pour avoir participé à une opération de vente de drogue sur appel. Son procès s'est terminé en février 2013. J a présenté une demande fondée sur l'al. 11*b*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés en vue d'obtenir l'arrêt des procédures en raison du délai. En rejetant la demande, le juge du procès a appliqué le cadre d'analyse établi dans l'arrêt R. c. Morin, [1992] 1 R.C.S. 771. En fin de compte, J a été déclaré coupable. La Cour d'appel a rejeté l'appel.

Arrêt : Le pourvoi est accueilli, les déclarations de culpabilité sont annulées et l'arrêt des procédures est ordonné.

Les juges Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Côté et Brown : Le délai était déraisonnable et le droit de J protégé par l'al. 11*b*) de la Charte a été violé. Le cadre d'analyse applying s. 11(b) has given rise to both doctrinal and practical problems, contributing to a culture of delay and complacency towards it. Doctrinally, the Morin framework is too unpredictable, too confusing, and too complex. It has itself become a burden on already overburdened trial courts. From a practical perspective, the Morin framework's after-the-fact rationalization of delay does not encourage participants in the justice system to take preventative measures to address inefficient practices and resourcing problems.

A new framework is therefore required for applying s. 11(b). This framework is intended to focus the s. 11(b) analysis on the issues that matter and encourage all participants in the criminal justice system to cooperate in achieving reasonably prompt justice, with a view to fulfilling s. 11(b)'s important objectives.

At the heart of this new framework is a presumptive ceiling beyond which delay — from the charge to the actual or anticipated end of trial — is presumed to be unreasonable, unless exceptional circumstances justify it. The presumptive ceiling is 18 months for cases tried in the provincial court, and 30 months for cases in the superior court (or cases tried in the provincial court after a preliminary inquiry). Delay attributable to or waived by the defence does not count towards the presumptive ceiling.

Once the presumptive ceiling is exceeded, the burden is on the Crown to rebut the presumption of unreasonableness on the basis of exceptional circumstances. If the Crown cannot do so, a stay will follow. Exceptional circumstances lie outside the Crown's control in that (1) they are reasonably unforeseen or reasonably unavoidable, and (2) they cannot reasonably be remedied.

It is obviously impossible to identify in advance all circumstances that may qualify as exceptional for the purposes of adjudicating a s. 11(b) application. Ultimately, the determination of whether circumstances are exceptional will depend on the trial judge's good sense and experience. The list is not closed. However, in general, exceptional circumstances fall under two categories: discrete events and particularly complex cases.

établi dans Morin pour l'application de l'al. 11*b*) a engendré des problèmes sur les plans tant théorique que pratique, concourant ainsi à une culture des délais et de complaisance à l'endroit de cette culture. Sur le plan théorique, ce cadre d'analyse est trop imprévisible, trop difficile à saisir et trop complexe. Il est devenu lui-même un fardeau pour des tribunaux de première instance déjà surchargés. D'un point de vue pratique, la justification après coup du délai sur laquelle débouche le cadre établi dans Morin n'incite pas les participants au système de justice à prendre des mesures préventives pour remédier aux pratiques inefficaces et au manque de ressources.

Il faut donc recourir à un nouveau cadre d'analyse pour appliquer l'al. 11*b*). Ce cadre vise à ce que l'analyse d'une demande fondée sur cette disposition se concentre sur les questions qui importent et à inciter tous les participants au système de justice criminelle à collaborer pour administrer la justice d'une manière qui soit raisonnablement prompte afin de réaliser les objectifs importants visés par l'al. 11*b*).

Au cœur de ce nouveau cadre se trouve un plafond présumé au-delà duquel le délai entre le dépôt des accusations et la conclusion réelle ou anticipée du procès est présumé déraisonnable, à moins que des circonstances exceptionnelles le justifient. Ce plafond présumé est fixé à 18 mois pour les affaires instruites devant une cour provinciale et à 30 mois pour celles instruites devant une cour supérieure (ou celles instruites devant une cour provinciale à l'issue d'une enquête préliminaire). Le délai imputable à la défense ou celui qu'elle renonce à invoquer ne compte pas dans le calcul visant à déterminer si ce plafond est atteint.

Une fois que le plafond présumé a été dépassé, il incombe au ministère public de réfuter la présomption du caractère déraisonnable du délai en invoquant des circonstances exceptionnelles. S'il ne peut le faire, un arrêt des procédures doit suivre. Des circonstances exceptionnelles sont des circonstances indépendantes de la volonté du ministère public, c'est-à-dire (1) qu'elles sont raisonnablement imprévues ou raisonnablement inévitables, et (2) qu'on ne peut raisonnablement y remédier.

Il est manifestement impossible de déterminer a priori toutes les circonstances qui peuvent se qualifier d'exceptionnelles lorsqu'il s'agit de trancher une demande fondée sur l'al. 11*b*). En fin de compte, la réponse à cette question du caractère exceptionnel des circonstances dépendra du bon sens et de l'expérience du juge de première instance. Une liste des circonstances de ce type ne saurait être exhaustive. Elles se divisent toutefois généralement en deux catégories : les événements distincts et les affaires particulièrement complexes.

If the exceptional circumstance relates to a discrete event (such as an illness or unexpected event at trial), the delay reasonably attributable to that event is subtracted from the total delay. If the exceptional circumstance arises from the case's complexity, the delay is reasonable and no further analysis is required.

An exceptional circumstance is the only basis upon which the Crown can discharge its burden to justify a delay that exceeds the ceiling. The seriousness or gravity of the offence cannot be relied on, nor can chronic institutional delay. Most significantly, the absence of prejudice can in no circumstances be used to justify delays after the presumptive ceiling is breached. Once so much time has elapsed, only circumstances that are genuinely outside the Crown's control and ability to remedy may furnish a sufficient excuse for the prolonged delay.

Below the presumptive ceiling, however, the burden is on the defence to show that the delay is unreasonable. To do so, the defence must establish that (1) it took meaningful steps that demonstrate a sustained effort to expedite the proceedings, and (2) the case took markedly longer than it reasonably should have. Absent these two factors, the s. 11(b) application must fail. Stays beneath the presumptive ceiling should only be granted in clear cases.

As to the first factor, while the defence might not be able to resolve the Crown's or the trial court's challenges, it falls to the defence to show that it attempted to set the earliest possible hearing dates, was cooperative with and responsive to the Crown and the court, put the Crown on timely notice when delay was becoming a problem, and conducted all applications (including the s. 11(b) application) reasonably and expeditiously. At the same time, trial judges should not take this opportunity, with the benefit of hindsight, to question every decision made by the defence. The defence is required to act reasonably, not perfectly.

Turning to the second factor, the defence must show that the time the case has taken markedly exceeds the reasonable time requirements of the case. These requirements derive from a variety of factors, including the complexity of the case and local considerations. Determining the time the case reasonably should have taken is Si la circonstance exceptionnelle concerne un événement distinct (comme une maladie ou un imprévu au procès), le délai raisonnablement attribuable à cet événement est soustrait du délai total. Si la circonstance exceptionnelle résulte de la complexité de l'affaire, le délai est raisonnable et aucune autre analyse n'est nécessaire.

Une circonstance exceptionnelle est le seul fondement permettant au ministère public de s'acquitter du fardeau qui lui incombera de justifier un délai qui excède le plafond établi. Ni la gravité de l'infraction ni les délais institutionnels chroniques ne peuvent servir à justifier le délai. Fait plus important encore, l'absence de préjudice ne peut en aucun cas servir à justifier des délais lorsque le plafond est dépassé. Quand il s'est écoulé autant de temps, seules des circonstances véritablement indépendantes de la volonté du ministère public et auxquelles celui-ci ne pouvait remédier peuvent donner une excuse suffisante pour justifier le délai prolongé.

Lorsque le délai est inférieur au plafond présumé, il incombe toutefois à la défense de démontrer le caractère déraisonnable du délai. Pour ce faire, elle doit démontrer (1) qu'elle a pris des mesures utiles qui font la preuve d'un effort soutenu pour accélérer l'instance, et (2) que le procès a été nettement plus long que ce qu'il aurait dû raisonnablement être. En l'absence de l'un ou l'autre de ces deux facteurs, la demande fondée sur l'al. 11*b*) doit être rejetée. Dans les cas où le délai est inférieur au plafond, l'arrêt des procédures ne doit être prononcé que dans les cas manifestes.

Quant au premier facteur, bien que la défense puisse être incapable de résoudre les défis auxquels sont confrontés le ministère public ou le tribunal de première instance, elle doit démontrer qu'elle a essayé d'obtenir les dates les plus rapprochées possible pour la tenue de l'audience, qu'elle a collaboré avec le ministère public et le tribunal et a répondu à leurs efforts, qu'elle a avisé le ministère public en temps opportun que le délai commençait à poser problème, et qu'elle a mené toutes les demandes (y compris celle fondée sur l'al. 11*b*)) de manière raisonnable et expéditive. Cela dit, le juge du procès ne doit pas profiter de l'occasion, avec l'avantage du recul, pour remettre en question chacune des décisions de la défense. Cette dernière est tenue d'agir raisonnablement, non pas à la perfection.

Quant au second facteur, la défense doit démontrer que le temps qu'a pris la cause excède de manière manifeste le délai qui aurait été raisonnablement nécessaire pour juger l'affaire. Ces exigences dépendent d'une panoplie de facteurs, y compris la complexité du dossier et des considérations de nature locale. Le fait de déterminer not a matter of precise calculation, as has been the practice under the Morin framework.

For cases currently in the system, a contextual application of the new framework is required to avoid repeating the post-Askov situation, where tens of thousands of charges were stayed as a result of the abrupt change in the law. Therefore, for those cases, the new framework applies, subject to two qualifications. First, for cases in which the delay exceeds the ceiling, a transitional exceptional circumstance may arise where the charges were brought prior to the release of this decision. This transitional exceptional circumstance will apply when the Crown satisfies the court that the time the case has taken is justified based on the parties' reasonable reliance on the law as it previously existed. This requires a contextual assessment, sensitive to the manner in which the previous framework was applied, and the fact that the parties' behaviour cannot be judged strictly, against a standard of which they had no notice.

The second qualification applies to cases currently in the system in which the total delay (minus defence delay) falls below the ceiling. For these cases, the two criteria — defence initiative and whether the time the case has taken markedly exceeds what was reasonably required — must also be applied contextually, sensitive to the parties' reliance on the previous state of the law. Specifically, the defence need not demonstrate having taken initiative to expedite matters for the period of delay preceding this decision. Since defence initiative was not expressly required by the Morin framework, it would be unfair to require it for the period of time before the release of this decision. Further, if the delay was occasioned by an institutional delay that was, before this decision was released, reasonably acceptable in the relevant jurisdiction under the Morin framework, that institutional delay will be a component of the reasonable time requirements of the case for cases currently in the system.

In this case, the total delay between the charges and the end of trial was 49.5 months. As the trial judge found, four months of this delay were waived by J when he le temps qu'aurait dû raisonnablement prendre une affaire à être jugée n'est pas une question de calculs précis, comme le veut la pratique instaurée par le cadre d'analyse établi dans Morin.

Pour les affaires en cours d'instance, une application contextuelle du nouveau cadre s'impose pour éviter que se reproduise ce qui s'est passé après le prononcé de l'arrêt Askov, alors que des dizaines de milliers d'accusations ont fait l'objet d'un arrêt des procédures en raison de la modification soudaine du droit. Par conséquent, le nouveau cadre s'applique à ces affaires, sujet à deux réserves. Premièrement, dans les cas où le délai excède le plafond, une mesure transitoire exceptionnelle peut s'appliquer lorsque les accusations ont été portées avant le prononcé du présent jugement. C'est le cas lorsque le ministère public convainc la cour que le temps qui s'est écoulé est justifié du fait que les parties se sont raisonnablement conformées au droit tel qu'il existait au préalable. Cela suppose qu'il faille procéder à un examen contextuel, eu égard à la manière dont l'ancien cadre a été appliqué et au fait que la conduite des parties ne peut être jugée rigoureusement en fonction d'une norme dont ils n'avaient pas connaissance.

La deuxième réserve s'applique aux affaires déjà en cours pour lesquelles le délai total (moins celui imputable à la défense) est inférieur au plafond. Pour ces causes, les tribunaux doivent appliquer les deux critères — soit celui relatif à l'initiative dont a fait preuve la défense et celui de la question de savoir si le temps qu'a mis la cause pour être entendue a excédé de manière manifeste le temps qui était raisonnablement requis — en fonction du contexte et en étant sensibles au fait que les parties se sont fiées à l'état du droit qui prévalait auparavant. Plus précisément, la défense n'a pas à démontrer qu'elle a pris des initiatives pour accélérer les choses au cours de la période qui a précédé le prononcé du présent jugement. Puisque de telles initiatives n'étaient pas expressément requises par le cadre d'analyse prévu dans Morin, il serait injuste d'exiger qu'elles aient été prises avant le prononcé de la présente décision. En outre, si le retard a été causé par un délai institutionnel raisonnablement acceptable dans le ressort en cause selon le cadre d'analyse prévu dans Morin qui prévalait avant le prononcé de la présente décision, ce retard institutionnel sera un des éléments du délai raisonnable nécessaire de la cause pour les affaires déjà en cours d'instance.

En l'espèce, le délai total qui s'est écoulé entre le dépôt des accusations et la fin du procès a été de 49 mois et demi. Comme l'a conclu le juge du procès, J a renoncé à changed counsel shortly before the trial was set to begin, necessitating an adjournment. In addition, one and a half months of the delay were caused solely by J for the adjournment of the preliminary inquiry because his counsel was unavailable for closing submissions on the last day. This leaves a remaining delay of 44 months, an amount that vastly exceeds the presumptive ceiling of 30 months in the superior court. The Crown has failed to discharge its burden of demonstrating that the delay of 44 months (excluding defence delay) was reasonable. While the case against J may have been moderately complex given the amount of evidence and the number of co-accused, it was not so exceptionally complex that it would justify such a delay.

Nor does the transitional exceptional circumstance justify the delay in this case. Since J's charges were brought prior to the release of this decision, the Crown was operating without notice of the new framework within a jurisdiction with some systemic delay issues. But a total delay of 44 months (excluding defence delay), of which the vast majority was either Crown or institutional delay, in an ordinary dial-a-dope trafficking prosecution is simply unreasonable regardless of the framework under which the Crown was operating. Therefore, it cannot be said that the Crown's reliance on the previous state of the law was reasonable. While the Crown did make some efforts to bring the matter to trial more quickly, these efforts were too little and too late. And the systemic delay problems that existed at the time cannot justify the delay either. Much of the institutional delay could have been avoided had the Crown proceeded on the basis of a more reasonable plan by more accurately estimating the amount of time needed to present its case. To the extent that the trial judge held that this delay was reasonable, he erred.

All the parties were operating within the culture of complacency towards delay that has pervaded the criminal justice system in recent years. Broader structural and procedural changes, in addition to day-to-day efforts, are required to maintain the public's confidence by delivering justice in a timely manner. Ultimately, all participants in the justice system must work in concert to achieve speedier trials. After all, everyone stands to benefit from these invoquer une période de quatre mois lorsqu'il a changé d'avocat peu de temps avant le début du procès, ce qui a nécessité un ajournement. En outre, un mois et demi du retard est exclusivement attribuable à J pour l'ajournement de l'enquête préliminaire parce que son avocat n'était pas disponible pour présenter ses observations finales la dernière journée. Il reste donc un délai de 44 mois, soit un délai qui excède considérablement le plafond présumé fixé à 30 mois pour les affaires instruites devant une cour supérieure. Le ministère public ne s'est pas acquitté de son fardeau de démontrer que le délai de 44 mois (excluant le délai attribuable à la défense) était raisonnable. Si le dossier opposé à J a pu être modérément complexe compte tenu de la somme d'éléments de preuve et du nombre de coaccusés, il n'était pas exceptionnellement complexe au point de justifier pareil délai.

L'application d'une mesure transitoire exceptionnelle ne justifie pas non plus le délai en l'espèce. Puisque les accusations contre J ont été portées avant le prononcé de la présente décision, le ministère public agissait sans connaissance du nouveau cadre d'analyse dans un ressort aux prises avec certains problèmes de retard systémique. Un total de 44 mois (excluant le délai attribuable à la défense) dont la majeure partie était imputable au ministère public ou d'ordre institutionnel pour une poursuite ordinaire pour vente de drogue sur appel est néanmoins tout simplement déraisonnable, quel qu'ait été le cadre d'analyse suivant lequel agissait le ministère public. On ne peut donc affirmer que le ministère public s'est fié d'une manière qui soit raisonnable à l'état du droit qui prévalait auparavant. Même si le ministère public a fait certains efforts pour que le procès se tienne plus rapidement, c'était trop peu trop tard. Les problèmes de retard systémique vécus à l'époque ne sauraient non plus justifier le temps qu'il a fallu pour instruire la cause. Le délai institutionnel aurait pu être évité en bonne partie si le ministère public avait procédé sur la base d'un plan plus raisonnable en estimant avec plus d'exactitude le temps qu'il lui fallait pour présenter sa preuve. Le juge du procès a commis une erreur en concluant que, en l'espèce, le délai était raisonnable.

Toutes les parties travaillaient dans une culture de complaisance à l'égard des délais qui s'est répandue dans le système de justice criminelle ces dernières années. Pour permettre aux tribunaux de maintenir la confiance du public en rendant justice en temps utile, il faut apporter des changements structurels et procéduraux supplémentaires au système en plus de fournir des efforts quotidiens. En fin de compte, tous les participants efforts. Timely trials are possible. More than that, they are constitutionally required.

Per McLachlin C.J. and Cromwell, Wagner and Gascon JJ.: This Court's jurisprudence for dealing with alleged breaches of s. 11(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms over the last 30 years supplies a clear answer to this appeal. Striking out in the completely new direction adopted by the majority is unnecessary. A reasonable time for trial under s. 11(b) cannot and should not be defined by numerical ceilings, as the majority concludes.

The right to be tried in a reasonable time is multi-factored, fact-sensitive, and case-specific; its application to specific cases is unavoidably complex. The relevant factors and general approach set out in R. v. Morin, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 771, respond to these complexities. With modest adjustments to make the analysis more straightforward and with some additional clarification, a revised Morin framework will continue to ensure that the constitutional right of accused persons to be tried in a reasonable time is defined and applied in a way that appropriately balances the many relevant considerations. In order to do so, the Morin considerations should be regrouped under four main analytical steps.

First, the accused must establish that there is a basis for the s. 11(b) inquiry. The court should look to the overall period between the charge and the completion of the trial to determine whether its length merits further inquiry.

Second, the court must determine on an objective basis what would be a reasonable time for the disposition of a case like the one under review — that is, how long a case of this nature should reasonably take. The objective standard of reasonableness has two components: institutional delay and inherent time requirements of the case. Both of these periods of time are to be determined objectively. The acceptable period of institutional delay is the period that is reasonably required for the court to be ready to hear the case once the parties are ready to proceed, and is determined in accordance with the administrative guidelines for institutional delay set out by this Court in Morin: eight to ten months before the provincial au système de justice doivent travailler de concert pour accélérer le déroulement des procès. Après tout, c'est l'ensemble de la société qui bénéficiera de ces efforts. Instruire les procès en temps utile est possible. Mais plus encore, la Constitution l'exige.

La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges Cromwell, Wagner et Gascon : La jurisprudence élaborée par la Cour au cours des 30 dernières années pour traiter des allégations de violation de l'al. 11*b*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés permet de répondre clairement à la question posée par le présent pourvoi. Il n'est pas nécessaire d'aller dans la direction entièrement nouvelle empruntée par les juges majoritaires. Le délai raisonnable pour juger un accusé, au sens où il faut l'entendre pour l'application de l'al. 11*b*), ne peut ni ne devrait être défini par des plafonds numériques, comme le concluent les juges majoritaires.

Le droit d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable est fonction de nombreux facteurs, des faits et des particularités de chaque cas; son application à une affaire donnée est inévitablement complexe. Les facteurs pertinents et l'approche générale décrits dans R. c. Morin, [1992] 1 R.C.S. 771, tiennent compte de cette complexité. Sous réserve de quelques rajustements pour simplifier l'analyse et de certains éclaircissements supplémentaires, le cadre de l'arrêt Morin révisé permettra de continuer de veiller à ce que la définition et l'application du droit constitutionnel de l'accusé d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable mettent comme il se doit en balance les nombreux facteurs pertinents. Pour ce faire, il y a lieu de regrouper les facteurs énumérés dans Morin en quatre grandes étapes analytiques.

Premièrement, l'accusé doit nécessairement faire la preuve de l'opportunité de procéder à une analyse fondée sur l'al. 11*b*) de la Charte. Le tribunal doit examiner l'ensemble de la période écoulée entre le dépôt des accusations et la clôture du procès pour décider si le temps qu'il a fallu justifie un examen plus approfondi.

Deuxièmement, le tribunal doit déterminer ce qui, objectivement, constituerait une durée de procès raisonnable dans le cas d'une affaire comme celle qui fait l'objet de l'examen, c'est-à-dire combien de temps devrait raisonnablement prendre une cause de même nature. La norme objective du caractère raisonnable comporte deux volets : le délai institutionnel et le délai inhérent au dossier. Ces deux délais doivent être établis de façon objective. Le délai institutionnel acceptable correspond au temps dont le tribunal a raisonnablement besoin pour être prêt à instruire l'affaire, une fois que les parties sont prêtes pour le procès. Il est déterminé selon les lignes directrices administratives applicables à ce type de délais que la Cour a énoncées dans courts and six to eight months before the superior courts. These guidelines set some rough limits on the point at which inadequacy of state resources will be accepted as an excuse. The guidelines should not be understood as precluding allowance for any sudden and temporary strain on resources that causes a temporary congestion in the courts. The inherent time requirements of a case, on the other hand, represent the period of time that is reasonably required for the parties to be ready to proceed and to conclude the trial for a case similar in nature to the one before the court, and are to be determined on the basis of judicial experience, supplemented by submissions of counsel and evidence. In estimating a reasonable time period, the court should also take into account the liberty interests of the accused.

Third, the court must consider how much of the actual delay in the case counts against the state. This is done by subtracting the periods attributable to the defence, including any waived time periods, from the overall period of delay. When the accused consents to a date for trial offered by the court or to an adjournment sought by the Crown, that consent, without more, does not amount to waiver. The onus is on the Crown to demonstrate that this period is waived, that is, that the accused's conduct reveals something more than mere acquiescence in the inevitable, and that it meets the high bar of being clear, unequivocal, and informed acceptance. Delay resulting from unreasonable actions solely attributable to the accused must also be subtracted from the period for which the state is responsible, such as last-minute changes in counsel or adjournments flowing from a lack of diligence. It is also necessary to subtract from the actual delay any periods that, although not fairly attributable to the defence, are nonetheless not fairly counted against the state, including unavoidable delays due to inclement weather or illness of a trial participant.

Fourth, the court must determine whether the actual period of time that fairly counts against the state exceeds the reasonable time by more than can be justified on any acceptable basis. Where the actual time exceeds what would have been reasonable for a case of that nature, the result will be a finding of unreasonable delay unless l'arrêt Morin, en l'occurrence, de huit à dix mois pour les instances qui se déroulent devant une cour provinciale et de six à huit mois pour celles qui se déroulent devant une cour supérieure. Ces lignes directrices établissent des limites approximatives en deçà desquelles l'insuffisance des ressources de l'État sera considérée comme une excuse acceptable. L'interprétation des lignes directrices devrait permettre de tenir compte de toute pression soudaine et temporaire sur les ressources qui cause un engorgement passager des tribunaux. En revanche, le délai inhérent à l'affaire correspond au délai raisonnablement nécessaire pour que les parties soient prêtes à procéder à l'instruction et pour mener l'affaire jusqu'à son dénouement, dans un dossier d'une nature semblable à celle du dossier dont la cour est saisie. Il est calculé en fonction de l'expérience judiciaire, complétée par les observations des avocats et par des éléments de preuve. Pour estimer une période de temps raisonnable, le tribunal devrait également tenir compte du droit à la liberté de la personne garanti à l'accusé.

Troisièmement, le tribunal doit se demander quelle portion du délai est imputable à l'État. Pour ce faire, il soustrait toute période attribuable à la défense — y compris les périodes qu'elle a renoncé à invoquer — de la totalité du délai. Lorsque l'accusé donne son consentement à la date de procès proposée par le tribunal ou à un ajournement réclamé par le ministère public, ce consentement, s'il est isolé, ne constitue pas une renonciation. Il incombe au ministère public de démontrer que l'accusé a renoncé à invoquer ce délai. Le ministère public doit prouver que, par sa conduite, l'accusé a signifié qu'il ne s'agissait pas de sa part d'une simple reconnaissance de l'inévitable. Ensuite, il doit satisfaire au critère rigoureux qui l'oblige à établir que l'accusé a accepté le délai de façon claire, non équivoque et éclairée. Les délais résultant de mesures déraisonnables imputables uniquement aux agissements de l'accusé doivent aussi être soustraits de la période dont l'État est responsable, comme les changements d'avocats survenus à la dernière minute ou les ajournements résultant d'un manque de diligence. Il est également nécessaire de soustraire du temps effectivement écoulé toute période qui, bien qu'elle ne soit pas légitimement imputable à la défense, ne peut néanmoins être reprochée légitimement non plus à l'État, y compris les délais inévitables attribuables aux intempéries ou à la maladie d'un des participants au procès.

Quatrièmement, le tribunal doit déterminer si la période qui peut légitimement être imputée à l'État excède le délai raisonnable d'une période plus longue que ce qui peut être justifié de quelque façon acceptable. Lorsque le temps qui s'est réellement écoulé excède ce qui aurait été raisonnable pour une cause de même nature, il faut the Crown can show that the delay was justified. Even substantial excess delay may be justified and therefore reasonable where, for example, there is a particularly strong societal interest in the prosecution proceeding on its merits, or where the delay results from temporary and extraordinary pressures on counsel or the court system. However, it does not follow that in these conditions the excess period is invariably justified. The accused still may be able to demonstrate actual prejudice. Although actual prejudice need not be proved to find an infringement of s. 11(b), its presence would make unreasonable (in the particular circumstances of the case) a delay that might otherwise be objectively viewed as reasonable. As a result, justification may be found to be lacking.

Under this revised Morin framework, any delay in excess of the reasonable time requirements and any actual prejudice arising from the overall delay must be evaluated in light of societal interests: on one hand, fair treatment and prompt trial of accused persons and, on the other, determination of cases on their merits. If there are exceptionally strong societal interests in the prosecution of a case against an accused which substantially outweigh the societal interest and the interest of the accused person in prompt trials, these can serve as an acceptable basis upon which exceeding the inherent and institutional requirements of a case can be justified.

This approach is a slight reorientation of the Morin framework because the focus is more explicitly on the period of delay which exceeds what would have been reasonable. But there is no change in principle.

Applying these four steps of the revised Morin framework in this case, J's constitutional right to be tried within a reasonable time was violated. The 49.5-month delay from the charges to the end of the scheduled trial date is sufficient to trigger an inquiry into whether the delay is unreasonable. There were 10.5 months of inherent delay and 18 months of institutional delay. These findings make it appropriate to conclude that the reasonable time requirements for a case of this nature were 28.5 months. The case in fact took 49.5 months. The difference is 21 months. Of that, 4 months are attributable to the defence. The rest — a period of 17 months conclure au caractère déraisonnable du délai, à moins que le ministère public puisse démontrer que ce dernier était justifié. Même les excédents importants peuvent se justifier, et donc être jugés raisonnables lorsque, par exemple, l'intérêt de la société à ce que le dossier soit jugé au fond est particulièrement élevé ou lorsque le délai résulte de pressions temporaires et exceptionnelles sur les avocats ou sur le système judiciaire. Cependant, on ne peut en conclure que, dans ces conditions, la période excédentaire sera systématiquement justifiée. L'accusé peut tout de même prouver qu'il a réellement subi un préjudice. Même s'il n'est pas nécessaire qu'un tel préjudice soit mis en preuve pour que le tribunal conclue à une violation de l'al. 11*b*), sa présence peut (dans les circonstances particulières de la cause) rendre déraisonnable un délai qui, autrement, pourrait être objectivement jugé raisonnable. Par conséquent, le tribunal pourra conclure à l'absence de justification.

Selon ce cadre de l'arrêt Morin révisé, le délai excédant le temps qui aurait raisonnablement été nécessaire pour juger l'affaire et le préjudice qu'a réellement subi l'accusé en raison du délai général doivent être évalués en fonction de l'intérêt qu'a la société, d'une part, à ce que les accusés soient jugés rapidement et équitablement et, d'autre part, à ce que les causes soient jugées au fond. Si la société a un intérêt particulièrement pressant à ce que l'accusé soit traduit en justice et que cet intérêt l'emporte nettement sur celui de la société et de l'accusé à ce que le procès ait lieu rapidement, cet intérêt pressant peut être considéré comme une raison acceptable justifiant un délai plus long que les délais inhérent et institutionnel propres à l'affaire.

Cette démarche intellectuelle se veut une légère réorientation du cadre d'analyse prescrit par l'arrêt Morin parce qu'il met l'accent plus explicitement sur la portion du délai qui excède ce qui aurait été raisonnable. Cette nouvelle approche ne constitue pas pour autant un changement de principe.

Appliquant en l'espèce ces quatre volets du cadre d'analyse de l'arrêt Morin révisé, il est conclu que le droit constitutionnel de J d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable a été violé. Le délai de 49 mois et demi écoulé entre le dépôt des accusations et la date prévue de la fin du procès suffit pour justifier l'examen du caractère raisonnable ou non du délai. Le délai inhérent était de 10 mois et demi et le délai institutionnel était de 18 mois. Vu ces conclusions, il y a lieu de conclure que c'est un délai de 28 mois et demi qui aurait été raisonnable pour juger une affaire comme la présente espèce. Or, c'est en réalité 49 mois et demi qu'il a fallu pour le faire. Cela correspond à un écart de 21 mois.

— counts against the state. In other words, this case took almost a year and a half longer than what would be a reasonable period to prosecute a case of this nature. This is not a close case. The time to the end of trial greatly exceeds what would be a reasonable time to prosecute a similar case. While there are societal interests in the trial on the merits of the serious drug crimes alleged against J, these cannot make reasonable the grossly excessive time that it took society to bring him to trial.

In contrast, the majority's new framework is not an appropriate approach to interpreting and applying the s. 11(b) right, for several reasons. First, the new approach reduces reasonableness to numerical ceilings. Reasonableness cannot be judicially defined with precision or captured by a number. As well, the majority's judicially created ceilings largely uncouple the right to be tried within a reasonable time from the bedrock constitutional requirement of reasonableness, which is the core of the right.

Moreover, this approach unjustifiably diminishes the right to be tried within a reasonable time. When the elapsed time is below the ceiling, an accused would have to show not only that the case took markedly longer than it reasonably should have but also that he or she took meaningful steps that demonstrate a sustained effort to expedite the proceedings. This requirement has no bearing on whether the delay was unreasonable.

The majority's approach also exceeds the proper role of the Court. Creating fixed or presumptive ceilings is a task better left to legislatures. The ceilings place new limits on the exercise of the s. 11(b) right to a trial within a reasonable time for reasons of administrative efficiency that have nothing to do with whether the delay in a given case was or was not excessive. This is inconsistent with the judicial role.

As well, the ceilings have no support in the record in this case. What evidence there is in the record suggests that it would be unwise to establish these sorts of ceilings. For the vast majority of cases, the ceilings are so high that they risk being meaningless. They are unlikely

De cette période, 4 mois sont attribuables à la défense. Le reste — soit une période de 17 mois — est imputable à l'État. Autrement dit, la présente affaire a duré presque un an et demi de plus que ce qui aurait été raisonnable pour instruire le procès dans une cause de même nature. Il ne s'agit pas d'un cas limite. En effet, le délai qu'il a fallu pour traduire l'accusé en justice a été de loin supérieur à celui qui aurait été raisonnablement nécessaire pour juger une affaire semblable. Bien qu'il soit dans l'intérêt de la société qu'il y ait un procès au fond pour les crimes graves relatifs aux stupéfiants reprochés à J, cet intérêt ne saurait rendre raisonnable le délai manifestement excessif qu'il a fallu à la société pour le juger.

Par contre, le nouveau cadre proposé par les juges majoritaires n'est pas la bonne manière d'interpréter ou d'appliquer le droit garanti par l'al. 11*b*), et ce, pour plusieurs raisons. Premièrement, la nouvelle approche ramène la question du caractère raisonnable à des plafonds numériques. Le caractère raisonnable est un concept qui ne peut être défini avec précision par les tribunaux et qu'on ne peut ramener à une valeur numérique. En outre, les plafonds que la majorité propose de créer par voie judiciaire dissocient en grande partie le droit d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable de l'exigence constitutionnelle fondamentale du caractère raisonnable qui est au cœur de ce droit.

Cette approche restreint en outre de manière injustifiable le droit d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable. Lorsque le temps écoulé sera inférieur au plafond fixé, l'accusé sera tenu de démontrer non seulement que l'affaire a duré beaucoup plus longtemps que ce qu'elle aurait raisonnablement dû, mais également qu'il a pris des mesures utiles qui font la preuve d'un effort soutenu pour accélérer l'instance. Cette exigence n'a aucune incidence sur la question de savoir si le délai a été déraisonnable.

L'approche des juges majoritaires outrepasse également le rôle dévolu à la Cour. La décision de créer des plafonds fixes ou présumés est une tâche qu'il vaut mieux laisser au législateur. Les plafonds assortissent de nouvelles restrictions l'exercice du droit d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable garanti par l'al. 11*b*) pour des raisons d'efficacité administrative qui n'ont rien à voir avec la question du caractère excessif ou non du délai dans un cas déterminé. L'imposition de tels plafonds est incompatible avec le rôle dévolu aux tribunaux.

De plus, le dossier en l'espèce n'appuie pas l'établissement des plafonds. Les éléments de preuve versés au dossier donnent en fait à penser qu'il serait imprudent de fixer ce type de plafonds. Dans la grande majorité des cas, les plafonds sont tellement élevés qu'ils risquent de to address the culture of delay that is said to exist and are more likely to feed such a culture.

The majority's approach also risks negative consequences for the administration of justice. The presumptive ceilings are unlikely to improve the pace at which the vast majority of cases move through the system. As well, if this new framework were applied immediately, the majority's transitional provisions would not avoid the risk of thousands of judicial stays.

Moreover, the increased simplicity which is said to flow from the majority's new framework is likely illusory. Even if creating ceilings were an appropriate task for the courts and even if there were an appropriate evidentiary basis for them, there is little reason to think these ceilings would avoid the complexities inherent in deciding whether a particular delay is unreasonable. The majority's framework simply moves the complexities of the analysis to a new location: deciding whether to rebut the presumption that a delay is unreasonable if it exceeds the ceiling in particular cases.

Ultimately, the majority's new framework casts aside three decades of the Court's jurisprudence when no participant in the appeal called for such a wholesale change, has not been the subject of adversarial scrutiny or debate, and risks thousands of judicial stays. In short, the new framework is wrong in principle and unwise in practice.

Cases Cited

By Moldaver, Karakatsanis and Brown JJ.

Overruled: R. v. Morin, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 771; referred to: R. v. Askov, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 1199; R. v. Pidskalny, 2013 SKCA 74, 299 C.C.C. (3d) 396; R. v. Godin, 2009 SCC 26, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 3; R. v. Williamson, 2016 SCC 28, [2016] 1 S.C.R. 741; Ontario (Attorney General) v. Fraser, 2011 SCC 20, [2011] 2 S.C.R. 3; R. v. Henry, 2005 SCC 76, [2005] 3 S.C.R. 609; R. v. MacDougall, [1998] 3 S.C.R. 45; R. v. Conway, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1659; R. v. Elliott (2003), 114 C.R.R. (2d) 1; R. v. Vassell, 2016 SCC 26, [2016] 1 S.C.R. 625; R. v. Auclair, 2014 SCC 6, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 83; R. v. Rodgerson, 2015 SCC 38, [2015]

perdre tout leur sens. Ils risquent de ne contribuer d'aucune façon à pallier le problème de la soi-disant culture des délais. En fait, des plafonds aussi élevés risquent davantage d'alimenter une telle culture.

L'approche des juges majoritaires risque aussi d'entraîner des conséquences néfastes pour l'administration de la justice. Il est improbable que les plafonds présumés accélèrent le traitement de l'immense majorité des affaires judiciaires. En outre, si ce nouveau cadre était appliqué immédiatement, les dispositions transitoires proposées par les juges majoritaires ne permettraient pas d'éviter le risque que des milliers d'arrêts des procédures soient ordonnés par les tribunaux.

De plus, la simplicité accrue qui découlerait soi-disant du nouveau cadre proposé par les juges majoritaires est vraisemblablement illusoire. Même si la création de plafonds entrait dans les attributions des tribunaux et que la preuve présentée en l'espèce la justifiait, il y a peu de raison de penser que ces plafonds permettraient d'éviter les complexités inhérentes à l'obligation de décider si un délai particulier est déraisonnable. Le cadre élaboré par les juges majoritaires ne fait que déplacer la complexité de l'analyse : une décision sur l'opportunité de réfuter, dans des cas particuliers, la présomption selon laquelle un délai est déraisonnable s'il excède le plafond.

En fin de compte, le nouveau cadre proposé par les juges majoritaires met au rencart une trentaine d'années de jurisprudence de la Cour alors qu'aucun des participants au présent pourvoi n'a réclamé une telle transformation radicale de notre droit, que ce cadre n'a fait l'objet ni d'un débat contradictoire ni d'une analyse de la part des parties et qu'il risque d'entraîner des milliers d'arrêts des procédures ordonnés par les tribunaux. Bref, le nouveau cadre est erroné sur le plan théorique et peu judicieux sur le plan pratique.

Jurisprudence

Citée par les juges Moldaver, Karakatsanis et Brown

Arrêt renversé : R. c. Morin, [1992] 1 R.C.S. 771; arrêts mentionnés : R. c. Askov, [1990] 2 R.C.S. 1199; R. c. Pidskalny, 2013 SKCA 74, 299 C.C.C. (3d) 396; R. c. Godin, 2009 CSC 26, [2009] 2 R.C.S. 3; R. c. Williamson, 2016 CSC 28, [2016] 1 R.C.S. 741; Ontario (Procureur général) c. Fraser, 2011 CSC 20, [2011] 2 R.C.S. 3; R. c. Henry, 2005 CSC 76, [2005] 3 R.C.S. 609; R. c. MacDougall, [1998] 3 R.C.S. 45; R. c. Conway, [1989] 1 R.C.S. 1659; R. c. Elliott (2003), 114 C.R.R. (2d) 1; R. c. Vassell, 2016 CSC 26, [2016] 1 R.C.S. 625; R. c. Auclair, 2014 CSC 6, [2014] 1 R.C.S. 83; R. c. Rodgerson, 2015

2 S.C.R. 760; R. v. Tremblay, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 435; Canada (Attorney General) v. Hislop, 2007 SCC 10, [2007] 1 S.C.R. 429; R. v. Brydges, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 190; R. v. Feeney, [1997] 2 S.C.R. 117; Mills v. The Queen, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 863; R. v. Fearon, 2014 SCC 77, [2014] 3 S.C.R. 621; Lavallee, Rackel & Heintz v. Canada (Attorney General), 2002 SCC 61, [2002] 3 S.C.R. 209; Canada (Attorney General) v. Federation of Law Societies of Canada, 2015 SCC 7, [2015] 1 S.C.R. 401; R. v. Omar, 2007 ONCA 117, 84 O.R. (3d) 493; R. v. Ghavami, 2010 BCCA 126, 253 C.C.C. (3d) 74.

By Cromwell J.

Applied: R. v. Morin, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 771, aff'g (1990), 55 C.C.C. (3d) 209; referred to: Mills v. The Queen, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 863; R. v. Rahey, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 588; R. v. Conway, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1659; R. v. Smith, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1120; R. v. Askov, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 1199; R. v. Godin, 2009 SCC 26, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 3; R. v. Beason (1983), 36 C.R. (3d) 73; R. v. Sharma, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 814; R. v. Brassard, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 287; R. v. Nuosci, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 283; R. v. Ghavami, 2010 BCCA 126, 253 C.C.C. (3d) 74; Beavers v. Haubert, 198 U.S. 77 (1905).

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 10(b), 11(b).
Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, s. 561.
International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Can. T.S. 1976 No. 47, art. 14(3)(c).
Magna Carta (1215), clause 40.
Speedy Trial Act of 1974, 18 U.S.C. § 3161 (2012).

Authors Cited

Alberta Justice and Solicitor General. Criminal Justice Division. "Injecting a Sense of Urgency: A new approach to delivering justice in serious and violent criminal cases", report by Greg Lepp, April 2013 (online: https://justice.alberta.ca/programs_services/criminal_pros/Documents/InjectingSenseUrgency.pdf).
Amsterdam, Anthony G. "Speedy Criminal Trial: Rights and Remedies" (1975), 27 Stan. L. Rev. 525.
B.C. Justice Reform Initiative. A Criminal Justice System for the 21st Century: Final Report to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General Honourable Shirley Bond, report by D. Geoffrey Cowper, Q.C., Chair. Victoria: The Initiative, 2012.

CSC 38, [2015] 2 R.C.S. 760; R. c. Tremblay, [1987] 2 R.C.S. 435; Canada (Procureur général) c. Hislop, 2007 CSC 10, [2007] 1 R.C.S. 429; R. c. Brydges, [1990] 1 R.C.S. 190; R. c. Feeney, [1997] 2 R.C.S. 117; Mills c. La Reine, [1986] 1 R.C.S. 863; R. c. Fearon, 2014 CSC 77, [2014] 3 R.C.S. 621; Lavallee, Rackel & Heintz c. Canada (Procureur général), 2002 CSC 61, [2002] 3 R.C.S. 209; Canada (Procureur général) c. Fédération des ordres professionnels de juristes du Canada, 2015 CSC 7, [2015] 1 R.C.S. 401; R. c. Omar, 2007 ONCA 117, 84 O.R. (3d) 493; R. c. Ghavami, 2010 BCCA 126, 253 C.C.C. (3d) 74.

Citée par le juge Cromwell

Arrêt appliqué : R. c. Morin, [1992] 1 R.C.S. 771, conf. (1990), 55 C.C.C. (3d) 209; arrêts mentionnés : Mills c. La Reine, [1986] 1 R.C.S. 863; R. c. Rahey, [1987] 1 R.C.S. 588; R. c. Conway, [1989] 1 R.C.S. 1659; R. c. Smith, [1989] 2 R.C.S. 1120; R. c. Askov, [1990] 2 R.C.S. 1199; R. c. Godin, 2009 CSC 26, [2009] 2 R.C.S. 3; R. c. Beason (1983), 36 C.R. (3d) 73; R. c. Sharma, [1992] 1 R.C.S. 814; R. c. Brassard, [1993] 4 R.C.S. 287; R. c. Nuosci, [1993] 4 R.C.S. 283; R. c. Ghavami, 2010 BCCA 126, 253 C.C.C. (3d) 74; Beavers c. Haubert, 198 U.S. 77 (1905).

Lois et règlements cités

Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 10*b*), 11*b*).
Code criminel, L.R.C. 1985, c. C-46, art. 561.
Magna Carta (1215), clause 40.
Pacte international relatif aux droits civils et politiques, R.T. Can. 1976 nº 47, art. 14(3)c).
Speedy Trial Act of 1974, 18 U.S.C. § 3161 (2012).

Doctrine et autres documents cités

Alberta Justice and Solicitor General. Criminal Justice Division. « Injecting a Sense of Urgency : A new approach to delivering justice in serious and violent criminal cases », report by Greg Lepp, April 2013 (online : https://justice.alberta.ca/programs_services/criminal_pros/Documents/InjectingSenseUrgency.pdf).
Amsterdam, Anthony G. « Speedy Criminal Trial : Rights and Remedies » (1975), 27 Stan. L. Rev. 525.
B.C. Justice Reform Initiative. A Criminal Justice System for the 21st Century : Final Report to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General Honourable Shirley Bond, report by D. Geoffrey Cowper, Q.C., Chair, Victoria, The Initiative, 2012.

British Columbia. Provincial Court. "Justice Delayed: A Report of the Provincial Court of British Columbia Concerning Judicial Resources", September 14, 2010 (online: www.provincialcourt.bc.ca/downloads/pdf/Justice_Delayed_-_A_Report_of_the_Provincial_Court_of_British_Columbia_Concerning_Judicial_Resource.pdf).

British Columbia. Provincial Court. "The Semi-Annual Time to Trial Report of the Provincial Court of British Columbia to March 31, 2015" (online: www.provincialcourt.bc.ca/downloads/pdf/Time%20to%20Trial%20-%20Update%20(as%20at%20March%2031,%202015).pdf).

Canada. Department of Justice. "The Final Report on Early Case Consideration of the Steering Committee on Justice Efficiencies and Access to the Justice System", 2006 (online: www.justice.gc.ca/eng/rp-pr/csj-sjc/esc-cde/).

Canada. Law Reform Commission. Working Paper 67. Trial Within a Reasonable Time: A Working Paper Prepared for the Law Reform Commission of Canada. Ottawa: Canada Communication Group, 1994.

Code, Michael A. Trial Within a Reasonable Time: A Short History of Recent Controversies Surrounding Speedy Trial Rights in Canada and the United States. Scarborough, Ont.: Carswell, 1992.

Hill, Casey, and Jeremy Tatum. "Re-Chartering an Old Course Rather than Staying Anew in Remedying Unreasonable Delay under the Charter", paper presented at the Crown Defence Conference, Winnipeg, September 2012 (online: www.crowndefence.ca/wp-content/uploads/2011/05/Justice-Casey-Hill_Remedying-Unreasonable-Delay1.pdf).

Hogg, Peter W. Constitutional Law of Canada, 5th ed. Supp. Toronto: Carswell, 2007 (updated 2015, release 1).

Hopwood, Shon. "The Not So Speedy Trial Act" (2014), 89 Wash. L. Rev. 709.

LaFave, Wayne R., et al. Criminal Procedure, 5th ed. St. Paul, Minn.: West, 2009.

Lamer, Antonio. "The Role of Judges", address to the Empire Club of Canada, 1995 (online: http://speeches.empireclub.org/61076/data?n=1).

LeSage, Patrick J., and Michael Code. Report of the Review of Large and Complex Criminal Case Procedures. Toronto: Ontario Ministry of the Attorney General, 2008.

McLachlin, Beverley. "The Challenges We Face" (2007), 40 U.B.C. L. Rev. 819.

Ruby, Clayton C. "Trial Within a Reasonable Time under Section 11(b): the Ontario Court of Appeal

Canada. Commission de réforme du droit. Document de travail 67. La tenue du procès dans un délai raisonnable : un document de travail préparé pour la Commission de réforme du droit du Canada, Ottawa, Groupe Communication Canada, 1994.

Canada. Ministère de la Justice. « Rapport final sur l'examen prioritaire des dossiers du comité directeur sur l'efficacité et l'accès en matière de justice », 2006 (en ligne : www.justice.gc.ca/fra/pr-rp/sjc-csj/cde-esc/).

Code, Michael A. Trial Within a Reasonable Time : A Short History of Recent Controversies Surrounding Speedy Trial Rights in Canada and the United States, Scarborough (Ont.), Carswell, 1992.

Colombie-Britannique. Provincial Court. « Justice Delayed : A Report of the Provincial Court of British Columbia Concerning Judicial Resources », September 14, 2010 (online : www.provincialcourt.bc.ca/downloads/pdf/Justice_Delayed_-_A_Report_of_the_Provincial_Court_of_British_Columbia_Concerning_Judicial_Resource.pdf).

Colombie-Britannique. Provincial Court. « The Semi-Annual Time to Trial Report of the Provincial Court of British Columbia to March 31, 2015 » (online : www.provincialcourt.bc.ca/downloads/pdf/Time%20to%20Trial%20-%20Update%20(as%20at%20March%2031,%202015).pdf).

Commission de Venise (Commission européenne pour la démocratie par le droit). Can excessive length of proceedings be remedied? Strasbourg, Council of Europe Publishing, 2007.

Hill, Casey, and Jeremy Tatum. « Re-Chartering an Old Course Rather than Staying Anew in Remedying Unreasonable Delay under the Charter », paper presented at the Crown Defence Conference, Winnipeg, September 2012 (online : www.crowndefence.ca/wp-content/uploads/2011/05/Justice-Casey-Hill_Remedying-Unreasonable-Delay1.pdf).

Hogg, Peter W. Constitutional Law of Canada, 5th ed. Supp., Toronto, Carswell, 2007 (updated 2015, release 1).

Hopwood, Shon. « The Not So Speedy Trial Act » (2014), 89 Wash. L. Rev. 709.

LaFave, Wayne R., et al. Criminal Procedure, 5th ed., St. Paul (Minn.), West, 2009.

Lamer, Antonio. « The Role of Judges », address to the Empire Club of Canada, 1995 (online : http://speeches.empireclub.org/61076/data?n=1).

LeSage, Patrick J., et Michael Code. Rapport sur l'examen de la procédure relative aux affaires criminelles complexes, Toronto, ministère du Procureur général de l'Ontario, 2008.

Disconnects from the Supreme Court" (2013), 2 C.R. (7th) 91.

Venice Commission (European Commission for Democracy through Law). Can excessive length of proceedings be remedied? Strasbourg: Council of Europe Publishing, 2007.

APPEAL from a judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (Newbury, MacKenzie and Stromberg-Stein JJ.A.), 2014 BCCA 241, 357 B.C.A.C. 137, 611 W.A.C. 137, 313 C.R.R. (2d) 1, [2014] B.C.J. No. 1263 (QL), 2014 CarswellBC 1760 (WL Can.), affirming a decision of Verhoeven J., 2012 BCSC 1735, [2012] B.C.J. No. 2448 (QL), 2012 CarswellBC 3655 (WL Can.). Appeal allowed.

Eric V. Gottardi and Tony C. Paisana, for the appellant.

Croft Michaelson, Q.C., and Peter R. LaPrairie, for the respondent.

Jolaine Antonio, for the intervener the Attorney General of Alberta.

Tim A. Dickson and Martin Twigg, for the intervener the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association.

Frank Addario and Erin Dann, for the intervener the Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario).

The judgment of Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Côté and Brown JJ. was delivered by

MOLDAVER, KARAKATSANIS AND BROWN JJ. —

I. Introduction

[1] Timely justice is one of the hallmarks of a free and democratic society. In the criminal law context, it takes on special significance. Section 11(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms attests to this, in that it guarantees the right of accused persons "to be tried within a reasonable time".

McLachlin, Beverley. « The Challenges We Face » (2007), 40 U.B.C. L. Rev. 819.

Ruby, Clayton C. « Trial Within a Reasonable Time under Section 11(b) : the Ontario Court of Appeal Disconnects from the Supreme Court » (2013), 2 C.R. (7th) 91.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique (les juges Newbury, MacKenzie et Stromberg-Stein), 2014 BCCA 241, 357 B.C.A.C. 137, 611 W.A.C. 137, 313 C.R.R. (2d) 1, [2014] B.C.J. No. 1263 (QL), 2014 CarswellBC 1760 (WL Can.), qui a confirmé une décision du juge Verhoeven, 2012 BCSC 1735, [2012] B.C.J. No. 2448 (QL), 2012 CarswellBC 3655 (WL Can.). Pourvoi accueilli.

Eric V. Gottardi et Tony C. Paisana, pour l'appelant.

Croft Michaelson, c.r., et Peter R. LaPrairie, pour l'intimée.

Jolaine Antonio, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Alberta.

Tim A. Dickson et Martin Twigg, pour l'intervenante l'Association des libertés civiles de la Colombie-Britannique.

Frank Addario et Erin Dann, pour l'intervenante Criminal Lawyers' Association (Ontario).

Version française du jugement des juges Abella, Moldaver, Karakatsanis, Côté et Brown rendu par

LES JUGES MOLDAVER, KARAKATSANIS ET BROWN —

I. Introduction

[1] La justice rendue en temps utile est l'une des caractéristiques d'une société libre et démocratique. Elle revêt une importance particulière en matière criminelle. L'alinéa 11*b*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés en est la preuve, puisqu'il garantit à l'inculpé le droit « d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable ».

[2] Moreover, the Canadian public expects their criminal justice system to bring accused persons to trial expeditiously. As the months following a criminal charge become years, everyone suffers. Accused persons remain in a state of uncertainty, often in pre-trial detention. Victims and their families who, in many cases, have suffered tragic losses cannot move forward with their lives. And the public, whose interest is served by promptly bringing those charged with criminal offences to trial, is justifiably frustrated by watching years pass before a trial occurs.

[3] An efficient criminal justice system is therefore of utmost importance. The ability to provide fair trials within a reasonable time is an indicator of the health and proper functioning of the system itself. The stakes are indisputably high.

[4] Our system, however, has come to tolerate excessive delays. The circumstances in this appeal are illustrative. Notwithstanding a delay of over four years in bringing a drug case of modest complexity to trial, both the trial judge and the Court of Appeal were of the view that the appellant was tried within a reasonable time. Their analyses are reflective of doctrinal and practical difficulties plaguing the current analytical framework governing s. 11(b). These difficulties have fostered a culture of complacency within the system towards delay.

[5] A change of direction is therefore required. Below, we set out a new framework for applying s. 11(b). At the centre of this new framework is a presumptive ceiling on the time it should take to bring an accused person to trial: 18 months for cases going to trial in the provincial court, and 30 months for cases going to trial in the superior court. Of course, given the contextual nature of reasonableness, the framework accounts for case-specific factors both above and below the presumptive ceiling. This framework is intended to focus the s. 11(b) analysis on the issues that matter and encourage all participants in the criminal justice system to cooperate in achieving reasonably prompt justice,

[2] La population canadienne s'attend en outre à ce que son système de justice criminelle juge les inculpés de manière diligente. Quand les mois suivant une inculpation au criminel deviennent des années, tout le monde en pâtit. Les inculpés demeurent dans l'incertitude et souvent détenus avant leur procès. Les victimes et leurs familles, qui dans bien des cas ont subi des pertes tragiques, ne peuvent tourner la page. Le public, quant à lui, dont l'intérêt est servi lorsque les inculpés sont traduits rapidement en justice, est frustré avec raison de voir des années passer avant la tenue d'un procès.

[3] L'efficacité du système de justice criminelle est donc de la plus haute importance. La capacité de tenir des procès équitables dans un délai raisonnable est indicative de la santé et du bon fonctionnement du système lui-même. Les enjeux sont indubitablement élevés.

[4] Notre système en est cependant venu à tolérer les délais excessifs, comme en font foi les circonstances du présent pourvoi. Même s'il a fallu plus de quatre ans aux autorités pour porter une affaire de drogue moyennement complexe devant les tribunaux, tant le juge du procès que la Cour d'appel ont estimé que l'appelant avait été jugé dans un délai raisonnable. Leurs analyses respectives traduisent les difficultés sur les plans théorique et pratique qui pèsent sur le test actuel applicable aux demandes fondées sur l'al. 11*b*). Ces difficultés ont fait naître au sein du système une culture de complaisance vis-à-vis des délais.

[5] Un changement d'orientation s'impose donc. Nous exposerons ci-après un nouveau cadre d'analyse pour l'application de l'al. 11*b*). Au cœur de ce nouveau cadre se trouve un plafond présumé quant au temps maximal que cela devrait prendre pour traduire un inculpé en justice : 18 mois pour les procès instruits devant une cour provinciale et 30 mois pour ceux instruits devant une cour supérieure. Bien entendu, compte tenu de la nature contextuelle du caractère raisonnable, le cadre d'analyse prend en considération des facteurs propres à chaque cas, que le délai ait été supérieur ou inférieur au plafond. Il vise par ailleurs à faire en sorte que l'analyse d'une demande fondée sur with a view to fulfilling s. 11(b)'s important objectives.

[6] Applying this new framework, including its transitional features, we conclude that the appellant was not brought to trial within a reasonable time. We would allow the appeal, set aside his convictions and direct a stay of proceedings.

II. Facts

[7] The appellant, Mr. Jordan, was arrested in December 2008 following an RCMP investigation into a "dial-a-dope" operation in Langley and Surrey, British Columbia. He was eventually charged with nine other co-accused on a 14-count information alleging various offences relating to possession and trafficking. Mr. Jordan remained in custody until February 2009, when he was released under strict house arrest and other restrictive bail conditions.

[8] The 10 co-accused made numerous appearances through the early months of 2009 as they obtained counsel, made their elections, and coordinated schedules. By May 2009, all counsel had agreed that the preliminary inquiry would require approximately four days, and it was eventually set for May 13, 14, 17 and 18, 2010. Several of the co-accused entered guilty pleas or were severed from the information. By the time the preliminary inquiry commenced, there were five co-accused left on the information, including Mr. Jordan.

[9] At the preliminary inquiry, it quickly became apparent that the initial time estimate of four days was too low. Crown counsel advised the preliminary inquiry judge that the Crown would be able to present all of the evidence against the four co-accused, but that the Crown would require significantly more l'al. 11*b*) se concentre sur les questions qui importent et à inciter tous les participants au système de justice criminelle à collaborer pour que l'administration de la justice soit raisonnablement prompte afin de réaliser les objectifs importants visés par l'al. 11*b*).

[6] Après avoir appliqué ce nouveau cadre, y compris ses modalités transitoires, nous concluons que l'appelant n'a pas été traduit en justice dans un délai raisonnable. Nous sommes donc d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi, d'annuler les déclarations de culpabilité et d'ordonner l'arrêt des procédures.

II. Faits

[7] L'appelant, M. Jordan, a été arrêté en décembre 2008, à la suite d'une enquête menée par la GRC sur une opération de « vente de drogue sur appel » à Langley et à Surrey, en Colombie-Britannique. Il a par la suite été inculpé en compagnie de neuf coaccusés dans une dénonciation comportant 14 chefs d'accusation leur reprochant plusieurs infractions relatives à la possession et au trafic de drogues. M. Jordan a été détenu jusqu'en février 2009, lorsqu'il a été libéré sous réserve de conditions strictes de détention à domicile et d'autres conditions restrictives de mise en liberté sous caution.

[8] Les 10 coaccusés ont comparu à maintes reprises durant les premiers mois de 2009, période pendant laquelle ils ont obtenu les services d'un avocat, choisi leur mode de procès et coordonné les horaires. Au mois de mai 2009, tous les avocats avaient convenu que l'enquête préliminaire allait durer environ quatre jours, et il a finalement été prévu qu'elle se déroulerait les 13, 14, 17 et 18 mai 2010. Plusieurs des coaccusés ont plaidé coupables ou vu leur nom être retiré de la dénonciation. À l'ouverture de l'enquête préliminaire, cinq coaccusés, dont M. Jordan, étaient toujours visés par la dénonciation.

[9] À l'enquête préliminaire, il est vite devenu évident que l'estimation initiale de quatre jours était insuffisante. Le procureur du ministère public a informé le juge présidant l'enquête préliminaire que le ministère public serait en mesure de produire toute la preuve pesant contre quatre des coaccusés, mais

CITATION: R. v. Villanti, 2018 ONSC 4259
COURT FILE NO.: CR-17-00000029-0000
DATE: 20180712

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:	)
	)
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN	)	Michael Lockner and Helen Song, for the Respondent	)	Respondent Crown
	)
	)
- and -	)
	)
	)
VINCENT VILLANTI,	)	Paul Riley, for the Applicant Vincent Villanti
RAVENDRA CHAUDHARY,	)	Ravendra Chaudhary, Appearing in Person
SHANE SMITH, DAVID PRENTICE and	)	Shane Smith, Appearing in Person
ANDREW LLOYD	)	Thomas Mathews, for the Applicant
Applicants	)	David Prentice
	)	Stephen White, for the Applicant
	)	Andrew Lloyd
	)
	)
	)	HEARD: June 22, 2018

CROLL J.

RULING ON 11(B) APPLICATION

Introduction

[1] The Applicants Vincent Villanti, Ravendra Chaudhary, Shane Smith, David Prentice and Andrew Lloyd are charged with fraud over a value of $5,000 and conspiracy to commit an indictable offence. They were arrested on or about March 26, 2014, and the period of the offences runs from January 31, 2009 up to and including December 31, 2014.

[2] The Applicants have brought an application pursuant to sections 11(b) and 24(1) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, Part I of the Constitution Act, 1982, being Schedule B to the Canada Act, 1982 (UK), 1982, c. 11, to stay the charges against them because of unreasonable delay. While it was initially unclear from his written material whether Mr. Chaudhary was also participating in this application, in oral submissions at the start of the hearing he confirmed that he too is seeking this relief.

Background

[3] This case involves a $13 million fraud. The nature of the case is summarized in paras. 3-5 of R. v. Villanti, 2017 ONSC 7130 ["Villanti"], a decision of Justice A. O'Marra, in which he dismissed the first s. 11(b) application brought by the Applicants in mid-September 2017. He stated as follows:

> 3. With respect to the nature of the allegations, as I understand from the material submitted by the Crown respondent, in April 2012, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police commenced an investigation into an alleged tax avoidance scheme said to have been conducted by the applicants between 2009 and 2013. Earlier a search warrant had been executed June 6, 2013 at two of the accused's office locations, which led to the arrests in March 2014. Further investigation of the continuance of the alleged scheme and execution of another search warrant at the accused's business premises resulted in the time frame being expanded to December, 2014.
>
> 4. The basic allegation is that the accused, in various roles, conducted and developed an investment program through a firm called the Integrated Business Consultants Association (IBCA), and a related company, Synergy, that raised over $13,000,000 from investors on the promise that their investment would be used to provide small businesses with start-up capital. The investors were told they would be able to claim any business losses against their personal income taxes.
>
> 5. It is alleged that little to no such investments were made, but used, rather to pay commissions, salaries and expenses of the accused and companies. Investors were informed of inflated losses which, when claimed by them on their personal taxes, were subsequently disallowed by the Canada Revenue Agency, which in turn subjected the investors to ongoing assessments.

[4] The trial in this case was originally scheduled to begin on September 25, 2017 [the "First Trial"]. It was set for 12 weeks. As stated, the s. 11(b) application brought prior to the September 25, 2017 trial date was dismissed. At that time, the time between the arrest of the Applicants and the anticipated completion of the trial was approximately 44 months, which exceeded the presumptive ceiling of 30 months set out in R. v. Jordan, 2016 SCC 27 ["Jordan"]. However, O'Marra J. found that both the complexity of the case and the transitional exceptional circumstances, as explained in Jordan, justified the time the case had taken to that point.

[5] Following the dismissal of the s. 11(b) application, O'Marra J. granted adjournment applications brought by the Applicants Villanti, Chaudhary and Lloyd. All three sought to adjourn the September trial in order to retain counsel.

[6] Following this, O'Marra J. then dismissed the severance application brought by the Applicants Smith and Prentice, who sought to have their trial go ahead separately from the others. On the facts of this case, O'Marra J. held that severance was not in the interests of justice, despite the delays it would obviously occasion to Messrs. Smith and Prentice.

[7] A new trial date was then set for February 26, 2018 [the "Second Trial"] which was the first date agreeable to all parties.

Period between First Trial date of September 25, 2017 and January 25, 2018

[8] On January 25, 2018 counsel for Mr. Prentice advised the Court that he would be bringing a third party records application seeking production of material from the Canada Revenue Agency. Also within this time period, Mr. Smith apparently indicated to the Crown that he would be calling a large number of witnesses, such that the 12 weeks scheduled for trial would not be sufficient.

[9] The Applicants Prentice and Smith also brought a second s. 11(b) application to be heard at the start of the February 26, 2018 trial, arguing that when the additional 5 months between the First and Second trial dates were added to the delay, their right to be tried within a reasonable time was violated.

January 25, 2018 to date

[10] On January 25, 2018 Justice McMahon, the head of the criminal long trial team at the Ontario Superior Court of Justice in Toronto, indicated for the first time there was no judge available to try this case. The matter was adjourned to the week before the scheduled start of the Second Trial to see if a judge could be made available.

[11] On February 21, 2018 McMahon J. confirmed that there was, in fact, a judge available, and the name could be provided to counsel within a day or so, noting then that counsel may wish to consider the possibility of re-election. In response to the information that Mr. Smith would be calling a large number of witnesses such that the trial time of 12 weeks might not be sufficient, McMahon J. indicated that the trial would be done in a timely manner and expressed assurance that the trial judge would effectively manage the trial time.

[12] However, on February 26, 2018 McMahon J. advised the parties that he had lost two judges from the criminal team for medical reasons and that there were no other judges available to try this case.

[13] The first trial date that McMahon J. could offer for a 12-week jury trial was in January 2019. The trial was rescheduled to January 11, 2019.

[14] As a result, the Applicants bring this current s. 11(b) application.

The s. 11(b) Application

[15] The Jordan framework for assessing whether delays in criminal matters are reasonable was summarized in R. v. Coulter, 2016 ONCA 704, at paras. 34-41:

> 34 Calculate the total delay, which is the period from the charge to the actual or anticipated end of trial (Jordan, at para. 47).
>
> 35 Subtract defence delay from the total delay, which results in the "Net Delay" (Jordan, at para. 66).
>
> 36 Compare the Net Delay to the presumptive ceiling (Jordan, at para. 66).
>
> 37 If the Net Delay exceeds the presumptive ceiling, it is presumptively unreasonable. To rebut the presumption, the Crown must establish the presence of exceptional circumstances (Jordan, para. 47). If it cannot rebut the presumption, a stay will follow (Jordan, para. 47). In general, exceptional circumstances fall under two categories: discrete events and particularly complex cases (Jordan, para. 71).
>
> 38 Subtract delay caused by discrete events from the Net Delay (leaving the "Remaining Delay") for the purpose of determining whether the presumptive ceiling has been reached (Jordan, para. 75).
>
> 39 If the Remaining Delay exceeds the presumptive ceiling, the court must consider whether the case was particularly complex such that the time the case has taken is justified and the delay is reasonable (Jordan, at para. 80).
>
> 40 If the Remaining Delay falls below the presumptive ceiling, the onus is on the defence to show that the delay is unreasonable (Jordan, para. 48).
>
> 41 The new framework, including the presumptive ceiling, applies to cases already in the system when Jordan was released (the "Transitional Cases") (Jordan, para. 96).
>
> [Emphasis original]

[16] In this case, the total time between the arrest of the Applicants on or around March 26, 2014 and the anticipated completion of a 12-week trial around April 5, 2019 is 60.5 months, more than double the presumptive Jordan ceiling.

[17] Where there are multiple accused, the s. 11(b) calculation should be an individualized exercise (see: R. v. Ny and Phan, 2016 ONSC 8031; R. v. Manasseri, 2016 ONCA 703).

[18] As stated, at the time of the first s. 11(b) application in September 2017, the time period from arrest to the anticipated end of trial was approximately 44 months. In his Jordan analysis, O'Marra J. found that as of September 25, 2017, defence delay at its highest amounted to approximately 9.25 months. While he found that there was some period of delay attributable to each Applicant, it varied among them largely due to the circumstances of their respective counsel or lack of counsel at different times in the process. It appears that O'Marra J. found that the greatest amount of defence delay was attributable to Mr. Villanti, given his counsel's unavailability to start the preliminary inquiry, and the least amount of defence delay was attributable to Mr. Chaudhary. In considering the defence delay, O'Marra J. stated, at para. 29 of Villanti: "None of the defence delay, even if viewed cumulatively, resulted in net delay that in any way quantitatively reduces the delay below the presumptive ceiling of 30 months fixed by the Supreme Court in Jordan."

[19] After September 25, 2017 the delay attributable to each Applicant varies. Messrs. Villanti, Lloyd and Chaudhary requested the adjournment. The 154 days (approximately 5 months) between the First Trial Date of September 25, 2017 and February 26, 2018, the Second Trial Date, is considered defence delay for those three Applicants. As a result, the defence delay at its highest, for the Applicants Villanti, Lloyd and Chaudhary, is 14.5 months (9.5 + 5).

[20] There is no further defence delay on account of the Applicants Smith and Prentice. Their defence delay, at its highest, is 9.5 months.

[21] Accordingly, for the Applicants Villanti, Lloyd and Chaudhary, the net delay is 46 months, or just short of 4 years (60.5 - 14.5).

[22] The net delay for the Applicants Smith and Prentice is 51 months, or approximately 4 years, 3 months (60.5 - 9.5).

[23] The Crown submits that the further 11-month delay between the second and third trial dates should be deducted from the net delay because the 11 months stems from exceptional circumstances, as considered in Jordan. This would amount to remaining delay for the Applicants Villanti, Lloyd and Chaudhary of 35 months, and remaining delay for the Applicants Smith and Prentice of 40 months.

[24] Even after deducting the 11-month adjournment period, as submitted by the Crown, the remaining delay for all Applicants continues to be presumptively unreasonable.

Analysis

[25] Exceptional circumstances generally fall into two categories: discrete events and particularly complex cases (see: Jordan, at para. 81).

[26] A medical emergency affecting an accused, counsel, or the judge is an example of a discrete event that could amount to an exceptional circumstance (see: Jordan, at para. 81).

[27] Particularly complex cases are those that require an inordinate amount of trial or preparation time, given the nature of the issues and/or the nature of the evidence. Voluminous disclosure and charges that cover a long period of time are factors that could contribute to complexity (see: Jordan, at para. 77). Co-accused delay has also been analyzed under the complexity exceptional circumstance, provided it is in the interests of justice to proceed jointly (see: Jordan, at para. 77; R. v. Gopie, 2017 ONCA 728, 140 O.R. (3d) 171, at paras. 142, 169-174).

[28] In his analysis on the first s. 11(b) application, O'Marra J. found this was a complex case. He stated, at para. 40 of Villanti:

> In my assessment, considering the comments of preliminary inquiry justice that the matter is a complex circumstantial case that required twenty days to complete at the preliminary inquiry stage with only one of five accused participating, voluminous disclosure, a trial anticipated to take length of five to six weeks, later revised to require ten to twelve weeks when all but one accused no longer had counsel to represent them at trial set to start September 25, 2017 qualifies this case as particularly complex one.

[29] As well, O'Marra J. was satisfied that, up to the September 2017 trial date, reasonable efforts to prioritize the case had been undertaken (see the requirement set out in Jordan, para. 79). He stated as follows at para. 41:

> I accept, as well, that the Crown effectuated a plan and took steps to mitigate delay. It was perhaps not a perfect plan, but it was a reasonable plan during which adjustments were made.
>
> - The accused were charged jointly, appropriate for the original criminal organization charges, which was later altered and simplified to conspiracy.
>
> - The voluminous digital disclosure was reformatted for easier accessibility.
>
> - After the accused were originally charged, when the police conducted further investigations as a result of suspected continuation of the alleged fraud, the time frame of the allegations was expanded, rather than re-arresting the accused, laying new charges and thereby instituting a separate process.

- The Crown severed three accused whose counsel fell ill in order to avoid the delay of the preliminary inquiry, later preferring an indictment to rejoin all accused in the Superior Court in order to move the matter forward, prevent a multiplicity of proceedings and to minimize its complexity.

[30] The Crown submits that these reasonable efforts continued once it was known that there would be further delay after February 2018. The Crown looked into whether this case could take priority over other scheduled cases, and whether this case could be heard in the time slotted for cases that had resolved. The Crown also points to efforts made by the Court. In this regard, McMahon J. carefully reviewed the list of long trials scheduled for the 361 University Avenue courthouse to determine priority, and contacted two other judicial regions in the GTA to inquire whether there was any excess judicial capacity that could be "loaned" to Toronto for a 12-week trial.

[31] None of these efforts were successful to allow the trial to commence on its scheduled date, or to reduce the time out to the next trial date.

[32] The Crown rejects any suggestion that withdrawing, severing or changing its case would result in any significant time savings. Its position throughout this case has been that it is a large-scale conspiracy, and all of the evidence that would be required to prove it would need to be called against each of the Applicants. In this regard, the Crown points to R. v. Nguyen, 2013 ONCA 169, at para. 61:

> …..But these decisions about how to proceed, against whom, upon what charges, and on what evidence, for that matter, whether or when to do so or to withdraw charges, are contingent upon interdependent circumstances and factors far removed from the knowledge of presiding judges. Courts should be hesitant to scrutinize the Crown's decisions absent clear reason to do so: Khan, at para. 30.

Exceptional Circumstances

[33] I accept that the illness of two judges is a discrete event that could amount to an exceptional circumstance as outlined in Jordan. As McMahon J. informed counsel in January and February 2018, one judge would be unavailable for an extended period; the other for some 4 to 6 weeks.

[34] I also agree with the characterization of the case as complex, leading O'Marra J. to find that the 44-month delay he had to consider was not unreasonable. I do not, however, accept that the potential increase in documents flowing from Mr. Prentice's third party records application, which would be heard and determined in advance of the trial, or the large number of defence witnesses proposed by Mr. Smith, are additional complexities justifying the remaining delay. In my view, the 12 weeks scheduled for trial is sufficiently long for the trial judge to manage issues that may arise from the third party records or the number of potential defence witnesses. In other words, I am not convinced that there are any additional complexities beyond those found by O'Marra J. in the original s. 11(b) application. All parties were ready to proceed to trial as of the Second Trial date in February 2018. None of the new issues raised by the Crown in this application amount to a novel or fresh complexity that justify the delay.

[35] Rather, the relevant complexity arises from the challenges in scheduling a trial of this length, and is inextricably linked to the discrete event of two judicial illnesses.

[36] However, the amount of time - 11 months - that the Crown seeks to deduct from net delay due to exceptional circumstances is not acceptable in this post-Jordan world. Had this trial been adjourned for some 4 to 6 weeks or for some other modest period until a judge was available, I accept that the period should be deducted from net delay as a discrete event. That would be a reasonable approach, in accordance with the Jordan framework.

[37] That being said, a trial judge's illness, as a discrete event, is distinct from the delay caused by scarce judicial resources. In explaining, and indeed, apologizing, to counsel for the unavailability of a judge to hear this case from February 2018 to January 2019, McMahon J. stated the following:

> On January 25, 2018: Okay, so the one thing I will give people the heads up on in relation to it is with the number of judges they've given me for the criminal matters scheduled. Right now, that was why I was hoping that other case might turn into a resolution. Quite practically speaking with the number of homicides, attempt murders and gun cases I have going, right now I do not have a trial judge to do this case. This will be the first case right now. That may very well change between now and then, but I thought in fairness to counsel, this is the first time I've had to say this post Jordan, but in relation to this indictment right now, unless they somehow give another judge or a new appointment or one of the long trials resolves in the next few weeks, that's where we're at……
>
> ….So, I'll do the best we can…..And if we could just free up four or five murder cases to help out we would, but I can't……
>
> On February 26, 2018: …..So I've lost two criminal judges in a couple of days and right now because of those medical challenges they're facing I had to pull a judge off this case to deal with a person who is in custody on a six- week trial and I don't have anybody to replace that judge. So it is frustrating because everybody should get to trial in a timely fashion…..
>
> On March 1, 2018: It's just the frustration of this Court with not having sufficient resources to do the job, despite everybody's best effort.

> So despite my efforts of getting an additional resource from another region, quite frankly, unless, as we talked about yesterday – I just added up, we have 44 homicides scheduled this year in Toronto to be tried. And we've been resolving some of them and what we've been doing it, but I can only do what I can do and Mr. Lockner, I'm out of, I'm out of options. The first time I have trial time for this is January of 2019 and the reason for the delay would be the unavailability of this court to be able to provide a judge to do the case. So it's not something we've had to do before in a long trial, but that's where we are. We're hoping to get additional judges to complement. We've asked the Federal government for that. We don't have those. It is frustrating, but we can only do with what we got. So….
>
> ….And I understand all the accused are ready, able and go to trial as is the Crown, and the fault lies with myself and the Court for not providing a judge.

[38] There is a heavy and challenging caseload of criminal and other cases at the Superior Court in Toronto. Given the existing complement of judges, there is very little, if any, flexibility to respond to sudden absences. Pursuant to the Jordan framework, an exceptional circumstance is one that must be reasonably unforeseen or unavoidable. It is, of course, the case that the illness of any particular judge is not reasonably foreseeable. However, it is reasonably foreseeable that, from time to time, judges will be unavailable. In a system that is already experiencing enormous pressure, it is no surprise that such unavailability will trigger serious and challenging scheduling issues, especially when 12 weeks of trial time is required. These scheduling issues include making difficult decisions about the priority in which cases proceed. The delay was also avoidable had there been the proper judicial complement.

[39] The adjournment of the second trial date from February 2018 to January 2019 added an 11-month delay to a case that already exceeded the Jordan ceiling. To reiterate, for the Applicants Villanti, Lloyd and Chaudhary, the net delay they have experienced is almost 4 years. For the Applicants Smith and Prentice, the net delay is approximately 4 years, 4 months. Even if the 11-month delay is abridged by 2 to 3 months to account for the exceptional circumstance of judges' illness, the net delay for all Applicants still significantly exceeds the Jordan presumptive timeline of 30 months or 2 ½ years.

[40] Jordan established a new approach to bringing matters to trial in a timely manner. It did so, the Court explained at para. 19, because:

> …[T]he right to be tried within a reasonable time is central to the administration of Canada's system of criminal justice. It finds expression in the familiar maxim: 'Justice delayed is justice denied.' An unreasonable delay denies justice to the accused, victims and their families, and the public as a whole.

[41] To meet the Jordan timeline, it is axiomatic that courts must be properly resourced with the appropriate complement of judges. In this case, despite serious and creative efforts made to find a solution, resource issues prevented the Court from being able to meet its Jordan obligation. The delay was simply too long to be considered reasonable.

[42] On all of the facts, I find that the 11-month adjournment period is not an exceptional circumstance that can be deducted from the delay. The Crown has not rebutted the presumption that the delay is unreasonable on a Jordan analysis.

Transitional Exceptional Circumstances

[43] Jordan provides that transitional exceptional circumstances may justify delay above the ceiling, if the Crown shows that the delay is justified because of a reasonable reliance on the law as it existed at the time the delay was accumulating (see: Jordan, para. 126). The Crown quite properly submitted that the transitional exceptional circumstances have no application here, given that the delay that is the focus of this application occurred well after the release of Jordan in July 2016.

Conclusion

[44] For these reasons, the s. 11(b) application(s) are granted and the proceedings against the Applicants Vincent Villanti, Ravendra Chaudhary, Shane Smith, David Prentice and Andrew Lloyd are stayed.

Croll J.

Released: July 12, 2018

CITATION: R. v. Villanti, 2018 ONSC 4259
COURT FILE NO.: CR-17-00000029-0000
DATE: 20180712

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
Respondent

- and -

VINCENT VILLANTI,
RAVENDRA CHAUDHARY, SHANE SMITH, DAVID PRENTICE and ANDREW LLOYD
Applicants

RULING ON 11(B) APPLICATION

Croll J.

Released: July 12, 2018

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Citation: Sissons v. Canadian Tire Corporation Limited, 2023 BCSC 1134

Date: 20230704
Docket: S1911663
Registry: Vancouver

Between:

Clifford Frank Sissons

Plaintiff

And

Canadian Tire Corporation Limited, Home Hardware Stores Limited, and Quad City Building Materials Ltd.

Defendants

Before: The Honourable Madam Justice Sharma

Reasons for Judgment

Counsel for the Plaintiff:	J.S. Stanley A. Brine
Counsel for the Defendants:	N. Mantini M. McGreevey W. McNamara
Place and Date of Trial/Hearing:	Vancouver, B.C. May 23, 2023
Place and Date of Judgment:	Vancouver, B.C. July 4, 2023

I. INTRODUCTION

[1] This is an application brought by the defendants to strike the plaintiff's notice requiring trial by jury (dated August 5, 2022) such that the trial would be heard by judge alone. In the alternative, the defendants seek an order deferring the hearing of this application until after all the expert evidence has been exchanged by the parties. Lastly, the defendants ask that if neither order is granted, they have leave to reapply for the same relief under R. 12–6(5) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules to strike out the notice after the exchange of expert evidence.

[2] This matter came before me in general chambers. Despite the limited time available when this matter was called, I invited counsel to attempt to finish. I am grateful to them for being largely successful in doing so, but a continuation of the hearing had to be scheduled for another date outside normal court hours.

[3] The plaintiff's action is for personal injury. He claims he contracted Non-Hodgkin's Lymphoma ("NHL") after buying and using an herbicide called Roundup.

[4] The plaintiff filed a notice of civil claim in October 2019. However, that was substantially amended in January 2023. The amendment removed claims of negligence as against the manufacturer of Roundup, Monsanto Canada ULC, which has since been removed as a defendant. What remains is the allegation that the defendants breached s. 18(a) and (d) of the Sale of Goods Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 410 [Act]. Section 18 deals with implied conditions as to quality or fitness in contracts of sale or lease. The relevant portions of s. 18 state as follows:

> 18 Subject to this and any other Act, there is no implied warranty or condition as to the quality or fitness for any particular purpose of goods supplied under a contract of sale or lease, except as follows:
>
> > (a) if the buyer or lessee, expressly or by implication, makes known to the seller or lessor the particular purpose for which the goods are required, so as to show that the buyer or lessee relies on the seller's or lessor's skill or judgment, and the goods are of a description that it is in the course of the seller's or lessor's business to supply, whether the seller or lessor is the manufacturer or not, there is an implied condition that the goods are reasonably fit for that purpose; …
> >
> > …

> (d) an implied warranty or condition as to quality or fitness for a particular purpose may be annexed by the usage of trade;

[5] The plaintiff alleges that he bought the product from the defendants, and because the product caused him to contract NHL, the defendants are liable under s. 18 of the Act.

[6] Apart from other defences, the defendants deny liability on the basis that Roundup is neither unsafe nor dangerous. They also plead that the plaintiff's exposure to Roundup did not cause or contribute to his diagnosis of NHL.

II. BACKGROUND

[7] The litigation history of this matter can be summarized as follows:

a) The notice of trial was issued in April 2022. The trial is scheduled to last 29 days, beginning on September 25, 2023, in Vancouver. (The date and time estimate were set before the plaintiff amended his pleadings to remove the claims of product liability and negligence.)

b) On August 5, 2022, the plaintiff filed a notice of trial requiring a jury.

c) On September 7, 2022, the defendants filed a notice to strike the plaintiff's jury notice.

d) A case planning conference was conducted on November 2, 2022. The resulting case planning order required, among other things, that the plaintiff file his application for leave to amend his notice of civil claim by November 30, 2022, and the amended response be filed within 30 days of that filing. The parties were ordered to make best efforts to complete examinations for discovery by January 31, 2023, and to make best efforts to answer outstanding requests for information by February 28, 2023. The defendants were given leave to amend their applications to strike the jury notice following service of the amended notice of civil claim. The master also ordered that the defendants' amended application to strike out "may be rescheduled to a mutually convenient date but to be before May 2, 2023". The plaintiff says he asked for that stipulation, so he would know the mode of trial with sufficient time to prepare his case and especially instruct the experts.

e) On December 30, 2022, the defendants filed a requisition adjourning the previous hearing date for the application to strike the jury notice—then set for January 10, 2022—to, instead, be heard April 13, 2023.

f) The amended notice of civil claim was filed January 10, 2023. The defendants filed amended responses to the amended civil claim in February 2023.

g) The plaintiff was examined for discovery on January 26 and February 6, 2023.

h) A representative for the defendant Quad City Building Materials Ltd. was examined on March 1, 2023.

[8] The plaintiff also raised a procedural issue: he submits the defendants' application should not proceed because it is contrary to Master Robertson's order because it was being heard after May 2, 2023. Since that order had not been amended, it ought to be treated as binding, precluding the defendants' application being heard.

[9] I am not satisfied that acceding to that argument would be in the overall interest of the parties, or in accordance with the administration of justice. Specifically, I have no reason to doubt that despite best efforts, the parties had difficulty being heard on previous dates in general chambers because presiders were not available for a hearing of this length (over one hour). That situation is an unfortunate and all-too-common reality due, in large part, to the over one dozen current judicial vacancies on the Supreme Court of British Columbia.

III. LAW

[10] Rule 12-6(5) outlines the circumstances in which a party served with a jury notice may seek an order that the trial instead proceed by judge alone:

> Court may refuse jury trial
>
> (5) Except in cases of defamation, false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, a party on whom a notice under subrule (3) has been served may apply
>
> (a) within 7 days after service for an order that the trial or part of it be heard by the court without a jury on the ground that
>
> (i) the issues require prolonged examination of documents or accounts or a scientific or local investigation that cannot be made conveniently with a jury,
>
> (ii) the issues are of an intricate or complex character, or
>
> (iii) the extra time and cost involved in requiring that the trial be heard by the court with a jury would be disproportionate to the amount involved in the action, or
>
> (b) at any time for an order that the trial be heard by the court without a jury on the ground that the trial relates to a fast track action or to one of the proceedings referred to in subrule (2).

[11] The exclusions listed under R. 12-6(5) must be construed narrowly, and the party applying to set aside the jury notice bears the burden of satisfying the court that one of the grounds listed under R. 12-6(5) has been clearly established: Han v. Cho, 2008 BCSC 1192 at paras. 13, 15, 36.

[12] Rule 12-6(2) outlines certain types of proceedings that must be decided by a judge alone. Relevant to this matter is subsection (j) of this rule, which prohibits a jury trial for "a proceeding referred to in R. 2-1(2)", i.e., one that must be started via petition or requisition. Where it is found an action relates to a matter set out in R. 12-6(2), there is no discretion to be exercised and the jury notice must be set aside: Henni v. Food Network Canada Inc., 2022 BCSC 1711 at para. 37. Among the proceedings referred to in R. 2-1(2) are those in which "the sole or principal question at issue is alleged to be one of construction of an enactment, will, deed, oral or written contract or other document": R. 2-1(2)(c).

[13] In the interest of efficiency, the parties agreed to address the issue of appropriateness of a jury trial given the defendants' allegation that the sole issue is the construction of an enactment separately from the complexity issue. Accordingly, I will consider the former issue before turning to the latter.

IV. IS THE CONSTRUCTION OF AN ENACTMENT THE PRINCIPAL QUESTION?

[14] There is no dispute between the parties that the interpretation of a statute is a question of law that cannot be determined by a jury: see Peters v. Co-operators Life Insurance Company, 2007 BCSC 1103 at para. 20; see also Breakaway Futures Ltd. v. Woody Life Village et al., 2003 BCSC 559 at para. 28.

[15] The defendants argue that the principal question before the court is one of statutory interpretation and that the claim is based on a novel allegation of the interpretation of the contractual warranty for fitness for purpose under s.18 of the Act. The defendants submit the plaintiff's claim cannot succeed unless he is correct in this allegedly novel interpretation of the Act, “the sole or principal question at issue is alleged to be one of construction of an enactment” such that the jury notice should be struck pursuant to R. 12-6(5)(b): see Henni at para. 47.

[16] The plaintiff disagrees, arguing that the case does not involve the interpretation of the legislation, but rather the application of s. 18 to the facts of the case, which he says is a matter separate from the Act's construction. To the extent that there is any issue about the interpretation of s. 18, the plaintiff notes that it is the trial judge's duty to instruct the jury on questions of law whether those question rise from the statute or the common law. The jury is then left to determine whether the facts of the case are sufficient to apply the law to it. In that way, the plaintiff argues, there is nothing unusual about this case that would preclude a jury from deciding it.

[17] The plaintiff also emphasizes that the right to a trial by jury is “a substantive right of great importance” that should be denied only for clear, cogent reasons: King v. Colonial Homes Limited and Others, [1956] 2 S.C.R. 528 at 533, 1956 CanLII 13; MacKinnon v. Ebner, 1997 CanLII 644 (B.C.S.C.) at para. 28, [1997] B.C.J. No. 364

(Chambers); see also Gladwell v. Busletta, 2018 BCSC 1934 at para. 65 (Chambers). Further, as noted in Bartram v. GlaxoSmithKline Inc., 2016 BCSC 1409 at para. 7, the effect of R. 12-6(5) "is to create a presumptive right to a civil jury trial". Because the person applying to strike the jury notice bears the onus of clearly demonstrating that a jury could not hear the case, the plaintiff relies on Sartore v. Beckley, 2002 BCSC 21 at para. 18, to submit that if a jury could probably hear the case, the application to strike the jury notice must fail.

[18] I do not understand the defendants to disagree with these propositions of law. Rather, the defendants' argument centres on what they say is the plaintiff's novel argument about how the legislation works, which is, in their submission, cogent reason for denying the plaintiff a jury trial pursuant to R. 12-6(5)(b).

[19] The plaintiff further argues that even if he is raising a completely novel interpretation of s. 18 of the Act (a point he does not concede), it is premature to strike out the jury notice because there is always the possibility that a trial judge could determine (whether on application or not) that there is no appropriate question to put to the jury during the course of the trial. Even after all evidence has been adduced, the plaintiff points out that the parties will need to make submissions to the trial judge about the charge and questions to be put to the jury. It may be at that point (although, again, this is not conceded) that it becomes apparent that the case is only about interpretation and, therefore, the case should not be submitted to the jury.

[20] Obviously, the approach described by the plaintiff is not ideal, as it may result in the unnecessary expenditure of a great deal of judicial resources to empanel a jury that is never used. It is also appropriate to consider the unnecessary inconvenience to individual jurors resulting from having to potentially attend part or all of a trial only to be dismissed before deciding the matter. That said, these considerations are not determinative.

[21] The more compelling point is that the wording of R. 12-6(2) is mandatory, stating that "[a] trial must be heard without a jury if trial relates to" any of the listed prescribed circumstances. Thus, if it is found that an action falls within the ambit of R. 12-6(2) (which includes the matters listed in R. 2-1(2)), the court has no discretion, and the jury notice must be set aside: Henni at para. 37.

[22] It is also important to focus on the language of R. 2-1(2)(c), which, when read in conjunction with R. 12-6(2), prohibits a jury trial where "the sole or principal question at issue is alleged to be one of construction of an enactment" (emphasis added).

[23] Recently, in Henni Justice Hughes stated the test for whether construction of an enactment is alleged to be the sole principal question at issue at para. 36:

> [36] Whether a trial "relates to" a matter pursuant to Rule 12-6(2) means something more than "touches on or is in any way concerned with" one of the excluded matters. An excluded matter must be the main or central focus of the trial: Han at para. 37. If the findings of fact will substantially dispose of the issues to be tried, Rule 12-6(2) ought not to be applied. However, if after the facts are found there remains a genuine question as to the significance of those facts when construing a contract, it will be the "principle question in issue" regardless of the relative length or complexity of the fact-finding exercise: Nelson Marketing International v. Royal & Sun Alliance Insurance, 2003 BCSC 439 at para. 20 [Nelson Marketing].

[24] I agree with the defendants that this case ought to proceed without a jury because the principal question is the construction of an enactment. While there are clearly substantial factual issues that will also have to be determined, I find there remains a genuine question as to their significance in light of the proper construction of s. 18(a) and (d) of the Act, whatever that may be. The interpretation of this provision will be determinative regardless of the relative length or complexity of the fact-finding exercise: see Henni at para. 36. Thus, the construction of the statute that the plaintiff urges is the principal question to be determined at trial.

[25] That the construction of s. 18 will be the principal question at trial is illustrated by the fact that even if all factual questions are resolved in the plaintiff's favour, success hinges on the court adopting his preferred interpretation of the provision. If the defendants eventually prevail on their interpretation of the legislation, the plaintiff's claim will not succeed; however, if the plaintiff is successful in his interpretation of the legislation, he may or may not succeed against the defendants on some or all of his claims. That the interpretation of the legislation operates in this binary manner indicates that it the principal question to be tried: see Henni at para. 47.

[26] The plaintiff submits a number of cases that he relies on show that courts have easily distinguished the interpretation of a statute from its applicability, but I am not persuaded that these precedents are sufficiently analogous to this situation. For instance, in Bartram, there was no dispute about the interpretation of the operative statutory provision; the main issue revolved around the complexity of the scientific issues involved.

[27] I also have doubts about the plaintiff's reliance on Ter Neuzen v. Korn, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 674, 1995 CanLII 72, for this purpose. That case involved an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from a jury's assessment of damages suffered after the plaintiff contracted HIV from an unsuccessful artificial insemination procedure. Justice Sopinka, writing for the majority, noted that it was somewhat problematic that the trial judge had left it to the jury to decide if the procedure could be characterized as the sale of goods such that the Act was applicable, "Only once [the court] has determined that the [Act] has any application in the circumstances should the jury be instructed to determine whether the statutory warranty was breached on the facts": para. 70.

[28] There are two problems with the plaintiff's reliance on this case. First, there was no indication that either party had applied to strike the jury notice in order to proceed by judge alone. Based on jurisprudence that I discuss later, it seems likely such an application may have been successful. Second, while the specific comments of the majority seem to imply the trial judge likely could have decided the issue of the contract's construction before putting it to the jury, that comment was obiter dicta because the majority explicitly noted that it was an issue that it "need not determinatively settle": para. 70.

[29] The plaintiff also argues that the defendants' application should not be granted because, he submits, his interpretation of the Act is not novel. However, that is not persuasive. In R. 2-1(2)(c), it is not the actual construction of an enactment that is relevant to determining whether a jury trial is appropriate; instead, the question is whether the sole or principal question at issue is alleged to be one of construction. Therefore, the presence of opposing pleadings with regard to the construction of one or more of the legal instruments listed in that rule—not the relative merit of the duelling interpretations—is what is relevant to deciding whether or not the jury trial is appropriate: Peters at para. 20.

[30] Relatedly, the fact that a judge could determine the correct interpretation of the legislation and could, if necessary, not put the case to the jury is similarly irrelevant. The controlling issue is whether or not the case is alleged to be one where the principal issue is the construction of the statute. Having found that it is, it is mandatory that the jury notice be struck.

[31] As noted previously, the plaintiff argues the court should not accept the argument about the novelty of the interpretation in light of the presumptive right to a civil jury trial. The concern is that someone wanting to avoid a jury trial could simply raise the spectre of an issue of statutory interpretation in order to strike the jury notice through the operation of R. 12-6(5), R.12-6(2)(j), and R. 2-1(2)(c). I was not guided to any case law that articulated whether there was a minimum standard for the strength of legal arguments regarding the construction of an enactment to invoke the rule.

[32] However, again, the answer is found in looking to the wording of the rule in light of the overall structure of the rules. As noted above, a jury notice must be struck where the principal or sole question is alleged to be one of construction. The use of the word “alleged” implies a lower bar for establishing the strength of any arguments regarding statutory interpretation. That seems consistent with para. 20 of Peters.

[33] In any event, I do not find that in this case the defendants’ framing of the statutory construction issue has no merit or is purely tactical.

[34] I am aware that there is some tension in the case law about whether the applicability of a statute is part of its construction for the purpose of R. 2-1(2)(c). In Henni at paras. 49–50, Justice Hughes appears to imply that both interpretation and application of a statute are relevant to construction:

> [49] Similarly in this case, even if the plaintiffs are successful in establishing copyright infringement, that will not dispose of the litigation in their favour. The proper construction and application of the Release, including whether it releases proprietary rights and which of the defendants—if any—it applies to, then comes into play. These issues will remain to be determined after the facts are found with respect to whether copyright infringement is made out. The plaintiffs cannot succeed unless and until the Release is interpreted in their favour so as not to bar some or all of their claims, or not to apply to some or all of the defendants who may be found liable to the plaintiffs. In this way, it is the interpretation of the Release and its application to the facts as found that will determine the litigation.
>
> [50] When considered from this perspective, it becomes clear that interpretation of the Release is the central issue in the litigation. Neither party can succeed without that issue being resolved largely in their favour. In the result, I am of the view that the principal issue in this case is the construction and application of the Release. As such, the jury notice must be struck pursuant to Rule 12-6(2).

[35] Justice Hughes' reasoning on this point draws upon Justice McEwan's treatment of the issue in Nelson Marketing International v. Royal & Sun Alliance Insurance, 2003 BCSC 439, where he articulated the relevant legal test as follows:

> [20] … [I]f the findings of fact substantially dispose of the issues to be tried then [the current R. 12-6(2)] should not be applied. But if, after the facts have been found, a genuine question remains as to the significance of those facts within a [current R. 2-1(2)(c)] issue, it will be the "principle question in issue" within the meaning of the Rule, regardless of the relative length or complexity of the fact finding exercise itself.

[36] Importantly, in the cases McEwan J. considered to derive this test—Manley v. Chilliwack Hospital et al., 2000 BCSC 649, and Penner v. The Great-West Life Assurance Company, 2002 BCSC 1131—the court drew a distinction between the interpretation and application of a legal document, with the former being deemed a matter of construction for the purpose of Rule 2-1(2)(c) while the latter was not.

[37] In Manley at para. 32, Justice Bauman (as he then was) adopted the distinction drawn by Master Horn in Genesis Industries Corp. v. Century Oils

(Canada) Inc., 1993 CanLII 1563, [1993] B.C.J. No. 1030 (S.C.), between the construction of a contract and its application or enforcement. In Penner at para. 16, the court adopted Manley's reasoning on this point, stating that of the various provisions the plaintiff relied on to make out their claim, only some would require interpretation. For most, "the issue w[ould] likely turn on whether the provision applies, not what, in the context of the contract, does the provision mean": para. 16. As a result, Justice Koenigsberg concluded that the principal issues were matters that were suitable for a jury trial: para. 16.

[38] In Peters, the court referred with approval to both Manley and Penner, although Justice Frankel reached a different conclusion as to how central to a matter the construction of a statute must be in order to render it inappropriate to proceed with a jury trial:

> [24] Where I differ from Mr. Justice Bauman and Madam Justice Koenigsberg is that I am of the view that if a case involves an issue of interpretation, then a jury trial is not available. It does not matter how central that question is to the litigation.

[39] While it might appear that there is some difference of opinion in these cases, in my view, when taken together, they are consistent because they demonstrate the enquiry is fact and pleading specific. In other words, how precisely the line is drawn between interpretation and application for the purposes of R. 2-1(2)(c)—and how this distinction impacts the appropriateness of a jury trial in the circumstances—will ultimately fall to the particular facts, pleadings, and circumstances of the case because of the wide variety of scenarios that could potentially be captured by the rule.

[40] Accordingly, I conclude the jury notice should be struck as the principal question is one of the constructions of a statute.

[41] This conclusion is sufficient to dispose of the matter. However, if I am wrong, I would have found that a jury trial would not be appropriate due to the matter's complexity for the following reasons.

V. DO CONVENIENCE, COMPLEXITY & PROPORTIONALITY OF TIME AND COST MAKE A JURY TRIAL INAPPROPRIATE?

[42] Regardless of the statutory interpretation issue, the defendants also say that the jury notice should be struck because of the need of the jury to conduct a prolonged examination of documents of a scientific nature, the complexity and intricacy of the issues, and the disproportionality between the amount involved and the extra time and cost of a jury trial.

[43] I appreciate counsel referring me to a number of authorities that discuss how the court should approach the issues of prolonged examination of documents by a jury and complexity; however, I do not intend on going through those cases at length. Again, the issue will turn on the particular facts and pleadings in the case. The case law establishes that that juries are deemed to be sophisticated, and counsel are under a duty to present a case in a manner to assist the jury along with the guidance of instructions from the trial judge: Sartore at paras. 8, 12–13, 19; MacKinnon at para. 26; Bartram at paras. 10–11. It is also true that the obligation of counsel to assist the jury extends to the presentation of expert evidence. Counsel needs to ensure that expert evidence is presented in such a way that a jury can understand it: MacKinnon at para. 24; Cliff v. Dahl, 2012 BCSC 276 at para. 38.

[44] The defendants point to several factors that they say contribute to the complexity and intricacy of the case as well as the requirement that jurors will have to examine lengthy scientific documents. They submit that this complexity comes, in part, from the strict regulatory framework imposed by the federal legislation governing pesticides. It was not immediately clear to me why all of that evidence would be relevant in a case centred on the sale of goods. However, the defendants argue that this information goes to the issue of whether the product is defective. It is too early at this stage for me to say that information would not be admissible and relevant.

[45] More compelling is that the case necessarily involves a complex issue relating to the causes of NHL. The plaintiff's list of documents includes medical records from a number of healthcare providers spanning a 33-year period during which the plaintiff claims to have used Roundup. The defendants say they are still seeking production of additional medical records. I accept that the issue of whether the plaintiff's NHL was caused by the use of pesticides would be complex, requiring extensive expert evidence and scientific documents that could, on their own, preclude the case from going to a jury.

[46] The plaintiff claims the case is very simple and that he can complete his case in six days. The problem with this submission is that it fails to take into account the pleadings as a whole. The defendants plead that Roundup is safe for use when used as directed on the product's label and specifically deny that exposure to the product, or one of its chemical constituent ingredients when used as directed, can cause NHL. On that basis, the defendants deny that Roundup is unfit or unsafe for its intended use. The defendants are allowed to adduce evidence to substantiate their claim. I am unable to say at this point that the extensive regulatory evidence is irrelevant and would be inadmissible. In addition, there is at least some possibility that extended review of the plaintiff’s medical history may be admissible and relevant. That review could span over 30 years, making it a potentially onerous task.

[47] Thus, while the plaintiff believes he can present a simplified case to the jury, he cannot prevent the defendants from raising the issue of causation, which is in addition to the question of the applicability and construction of the legislation. The defendants’ arguments are not speculative nor frivolous; their position arises naturally and fairly from the pleadings and the evidence.

[48] As I understood the plaintiff's case, if the defendants succeed on their interpretation of the legislation, the case would not go to the jury. In my respectful view, it would be inefficient as well as imprudent for the court to allow a jury to be empaneled for an extensive, complicated trial where there is a possibility that it would not ultimately be used to decide the matter.

[49] The plaintiff seeks to have the application to strike the jury notice concluded far enough in advance of the trial because he said he needs to tailor his expert evidence to whether it was going to be a jury trial or a judge-alone trial. In my respectful view, that raises the possibility that, while wanting to keep his presentation of his case simplified for a jury, he may well have a larger case in reply, especially given the issues that the defendants intend to raise and the evidence that will be adduced to support their arguments.

[50] Furthermore, I agree with the defendants that the mode of trial ought not to be significant in terms of instructing an expert. If an expert can provide an opinion that is relevant, admissible, and helpful, it should not matter whether that opinion is going before a jury or a judge.

[51] Accordingly, even if I had not found that the trial is one that involves the construction of a statute, I would have struck the jury notice under R. 12-6(5)(a).

VI. CONCLUSION

[52] For all those reasons, the jury notice is struck.

"Sharma J."

Her Majesty The Queen Appellant

v.

Marc Beauregard Respondent

INDEXED AS: BEAUREGARD v. CANADA

File No.: 17884.

1985: October 4; 1986: September 16.

Present: Dickson C.J. and Beetz, Estey, McIntyre and Lamer JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE FEDERAL COURT OF APPEAL

Constitutional law — Judicial independence — Financial security of federally appointed judges — Pensions — Federal legislation requiring superior court judges to contribute to pension — Whether federal legislation plan violated s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 — Judges Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. J-1 as amended, s. 29.1.

Civil rights — Equality before the law — Federal legislation requiring superior court judges to contribute to pension plan — Legislative distinction on the basis of the appointment date of judges — Higher contributions required from judges appointed after the date of first reading of the bill — Whether federal legislation violated s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights — Judges Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. J-1 as amended, s. 29.1.

Respondent, a Quebec Superior Court judge appointed on July 24, 1975, challenged the constitutional validity of s. 29.1 of the Judges Act. This section was introduced in Parliament on February 17, 1975 and was enacted December 20, 1975. Section 29.1(1) provided that judges appointed before February 17, 1975 would contribute one and one-half per cent of their salary toward the cost of pensions, while s. 29.1(2) provided that judges appointed after February 16, 1975 would contribute six and one-half per cent prior to January 1, 1977, and seven per cent thereafter. Prior to the enactment of s. 29.1, superior court judges were not required to contribute to their pension plan. The Federal Court, at trial and on appeal, accepted respondent's allegation, but for different reasons, that s. 29.1 violated s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 but rejected his argument that s. 29.1 was inoperative in that it violated his right to equality before the law recognized by s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. This appeal is to determine whether s. 29.1 of the Judges Act infringes (1) s. 100 of

Sa Majesté La Reine Appelante

c.

Marc Beauregard Intimé

RÉPERTORIÉ: BEAUREGARD c. CANADA

N° du greffe: 17884.

1985: 4 octobre; 1986: 16 septembre.

Présents: Le juge en chef Dickson et les juges Beetz, Estey, McIntyre et Lamer.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL FÉDÉRALE

Droit constitutionnel — Indépendance de la magistrature — Sécurité financière des juges nommés par le fédéral — Pensions — Loi fédérale exigeant que les juges des cours supérieures contribuent à leur régime de pensions — La loi fédérale viole-t-elle l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867? — Loi sur les juges, S.R.C. 1970, chap. J-1 et modifications, art. 29.1.

Libertés publiques — Égalité devant la loi — Loi fédérale exigeant que les juges des cours supérieures contribuent à leur régime de pensions — Distinction dans la loi fondée sur la date de nomination des juges — Contributions plus élevées exigées des juges nommés après la date de la première lecture du projet de loi — La loi fédérale viole-t-elle l'art. 1b) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits? — Loi sur les juges, S.R.C. 1970, chap. J-1 et modifications, art. 29.1.

L'intimé, un juge de la Cour supérieure du Québec nommé le 24 juillet 1975, a contesté la constitutionnalité de l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges. Déposé devant le Parlement le 17 février 1975, cet article a été adopté le 20 décembre 1975. Le paragraphe 29.1(1) prévoyait que les juges nommés avant le 17 février 1975 contribueraient un et demi pour cent de leur traitement au paiement du coût des pensions, tandis que le par. 29.1(2) disposait que les juges nommés après le 16 février 1975 y contribueraient, antérieurement au 1er janvier 1977, six et demi pour cent de leur traitement et sept pour cent par la suite. Avant l'adoption de l'art. 29.1, les juges des cours supérieures n'étaient pas tenus de contribuer à leur régime de pensions. En première instance et en appel, la Cour fédérale a retenu, mais pour des motifs différents, l'allégation de l'intimé que l'art. 29.1 violait l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. Elle a cependant rejeté son argument selon lequel l'art. 29.1 était inopérant puisqu'il violait son droit à l'égalité devant la loi reconnu par l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration the Constitution Act, 1867 and (2) s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Held (Beetz and McIntyre JJ. dissenting in part): The appeal should be allowed.

(1) Section 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867

Per curiam: The principle of judicial independence is fundamental to our Constitution. The role of our courts as resolver of disputes, interpreter of the law and defender of the Constitution, requires that they be completely separate in authority and function from all other participants in the justice system, in particular, from the executive and the legislative branches of government. One of the essential components of the principle of judicial independence is financial security. In the present case, the scheme for contributory pensions established in s. 29.1 of the Judges Act does not interfere with the independence of superior court judges. All s. 29.1 does is treat judges, pursuant to the constitutional obligation imposed by s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867, in accordance with standard, widely used and generally accepted pension schemes in Canada. Canadian judges are Canadian citizens and must bear their fair share of the financial burden of administering the country. Parliament's power to fix the salaries and pensions of superior court judges, however, is not unlimited. If there were any hint that a federal law dealing with these matters was enacted for an improper or colourable purpose, or if there were discriminatory treatment of judges vis-à-vis other citizens, then serious issues relating to judicial independence would arise and the law might well be held to be ultra vires of s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867. There is no suggestion of any of these considerations in the present appeal.

There is no "federalism" limitation on Parliament's capacity to change the basis of superior court judges' pensions from non-contributory to contributory. Provincial legislatures under s. 92(14) of the Constitution Act, 1867 have no jurisdiction with respect to these pensions. Section 100 explicitly subtracts them from provincial jurisdiction respecting the administration of justice. This section states clearly that the salaries and pensions of superior court judges shall be fixed and provided by the Parliament of Canada.

canadienne des droits. Le pourvoi vise à déterminer si l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges contrevient (1) à l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 et (2) à l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits.

Arrêt (les juges Beetz et McIntyre sont dissidents en partie): Le pourvoi est accueilli.

(1) L'article 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867

La Cour: Le principe de l'indépendance de la magistrature est un élément fondamental de notre Constitution. Le rôle de nos tribunaux en tant qu'arbitres des litiges, interprètes du droit et défenseurs de la Constitution exige qu'ils soient complètement séparés, sur le plan des pouvoirs et des fonctions, de tous les autres participants du système judiciaire et en particulier des pouvoirs exécutif et législatif du gouvernement. La sécurité financière est une composante essentielle du principe de l'indépendance judiciaire. Dans la présente espèce, le régime de pensions avec participation des intéressés établi à l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges ne porte pas atteinte à l'indépendance des juges des cours supérieures. L'article 29.1 ne fait que traiter les juges, en vertu de l'obligation constitutionnelle imposée par l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, d'une manière conforme aux régimes de pensions normaux qui sont largement répandus et généralement acceptés au Canada. Les juges canadiens sont des citoyens canadiens et doivent assumer leur juste part du fardeau financier de l'administration du pays. Le pouvoir du Parlement de fixer les traitements et les pensions des juges des cours supérieures n'est cependant pas illimité. S'il y avait un indice qu'une loi fédérale traitant de ces questions avait été adoptée dans un but malhonnête ou spécieux, ou si les juges étaient traités d'une manière discriminatoire par rapport aux autres citoyens, de graves questions se poseraient alors concernant l'indépendance judiciaire et la loi pourrait très bien être jugée ultra vires de l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. Ces considérations ne sont nullement proposées dans le présent pourvoi.

Il n'y a aucune restriction fondée sur le «fédéralisme» à l'égard du pouvoir du Parlement de modifier les fondements des pensions des juges des cours supérieures en les faisant passer de pensions sans participation à des pensions avec participation. Le paragraphe 92(14) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 ne confère aux législatures provinciales aucune compétence relativement à ces pensions. L'article 100 les soustrait explicitement au pouvoir provincial en matière d'administration de la justice. Cet article prévoit clairement que les traitements et les pensions des juges des cours supérieures doivent être fixés et payés par le Parlement du Canada.

Further, Parliament's ability to implement a widely used and accepted latter-day pension model is not constrained by the words of s. 100. The word "pensions" is not limited to the type of pensions known and in existence for the judiciary in 1867 and the word "provided" does not impose on Parliament an obligation to pay the full cost of judicial pensions.

Finally, although it might well be unconstitutional in most contexts for Parliament to direct how judges are to spend their salaries, the word "pensions" in s. 100 specifically authorizes Parliament to deal with this subject matter. In exercising that jurisdiction Parliament must legislate with respect to both the quantum and the scheme of judicial pensions. The 1975 law enacting s. 29.1 of the Judges Act dealt with the scheme. There can be no objection here to Parliament's action since the scheme chosen was a widely used and accepted one and since it was introduced in conjunction with a substantial increase in judicial salaries and other benefits in 1975.

Cases Cited

Referred to: Valente v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673; Toronto Corporation v. York Corporation, [1938] A.C. 415; McEvoy v. Attorney General for New Brunswick, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 704; Judges v. Attorney-General of Saskatchewan, [1937] 2 D.L.R. 209; Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245 (1920); O'Malley v. Woodrough, 307 U.S. 277 (1939); Di Iorio v. Warden of the Montreal Jail, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 152; Re Residential Tenancies Act, 1979, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 714; Crevier v. Attorney General of Quebec, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 220.

(2) Section 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights

Per Dickson C.J. and Estey and Lamer JJ.: Section 29.1 of the Judges Act does not violate s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. Once it is accepted that the general substance of the law is consistent with a valid federal objective—here, to provide for remuneration of s. 96 judges—and that it is not discriminatory for Parliament to draw some line between present incumbents and future appointees, the cases under the Canadian Bill of Rights do not permit the courts to be overly critical in reviewing the precise line drawn by Parliament. Some line is fair and is not discriminatory. Thus, while from the respondent's perspective a line drawn on the date of passage of the bill would have been preferable, it cannot be said that the choice of the date

De plus, le pouvoir du Parlement d'appliquer un modèle de pension moderne largement utilisé et accepté n'est pas limité par le texte de l'art. 100. Le mot «pensions» ne se limite pas au genre de pensions connues pour les juges en 1867 et qui existaient à ce moment-là et le mot «payés» n'impose pas au Parlement l'obligation de payer la totalité des pensions des juges.

Finalement, même s'il pourrait bien être inconstitutionnel dans la plupart des contextes que le Parlement dicte aux juges la façon de dépenser leur traitement, le terme «pensions» à l'art. 100 autorise expressément le Parlement à traiter de cette question. En exerçant ce pouvoir, le Parlement doit légiférer en ce qui a trait à la fois au montant et au régime des pensions des juges. La loi de 1975 adoptant l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges traitait du régime. Étant donné que le régime choisi était généralement utilisé et accepté et puisqu'il a été introduit conjointement avec une augmentation sensible des traitements et des autres prestations des juges en 1975, il n'y a en l'espèce rien à reprocher à ce qu'a fait le Parlement.

Jurisprudence

Arrêts mentionnés: Valente c. La Reine, [1985] 2 R.C.S. 673; Toronto Corporation v. York Corporation, [1938] A.C. 415; McEvoy c. Procureur général du Nouveau-Brunswick, [1983] 1 R.C.S. 704; Judges v. Attorney-General of Saskatchewan, [1937] 2 D.L.R. 209; Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245 (1920); O'Malley v. Woodrough, 307 U.S. 277 (1939); Di Iorio c. Gardien de la prison de Montréal, [1978] 1 R.C.S. 152; Re Loi de 1979 sur la location résidentielle, [1981] 1 R.C.S. 714; Crevier c. Procureur général du Québec, [1981] 2 R.C.S. 220.

(2) L'alinéa 1b) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits

Le juge en chef Dickson et les juges Estey et Lamer: L'article 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges ne viole pas l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Une fois que l'on a admis que l'esprit général de la loi est compatible avec un objectif fédéral régulier—en l'occurrence, pourvoir à la rémunération de juges visés par l'art. 96—et que le Parlement n'établit pas de distinction injuste en traçant une certaine ligne entre les juges qui sont actuellement en fonction et ceux qui seront nommés à l'avenir, les affaires relevant de la Déclaration canadienne des droits n'autorisent pas les tribunaux à être trop critiques en examinant la ligne précise tracée par le Parlement. Une certaine ligne est juste et n'est pas discriminatoire. Donc, quoique, du point de vue de l'intimé, il eût été préférable de tracer une ligne à la date de l'adoption du projet de loi, on ne saurait prétendre que le choix de la date de la première lecture comme of first reading as the cut-off date was contrary to the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Per Beetz and McIntyre JJ. (dissenting): The forms of discrimination prohibited by s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights are not limited to the specifically mentioned grounds such as race, national origin, colour, religion or sex. This Court is also not bound by the Diceyan concept of equality nor is it prevented from adopting a more egalitarian approach.

A legislation passed by Parliament does not offend against the principle of equality before the law if passed in pursuance of a valid federal objective. The question which must be resolved in each case is whether an inequality that may be created by legislation affecting a special class is arbitrary, capricious or unnecessary, or whether it is rationally based and acceptable as a necessary variation from the general principle of the universal application of law to meet special conditions and to attain a necessary and desirable social objective. Where variation from the principle of universal application of the law is justified, the principle cannot be tampered with to a degree or to an extent which goes beyond what is necessary to reach a desirable social objective. This test, including its element of proportionality, clearly extends to the manner or means chosen to achieve a valid federal objective, particularly where this manner or these means introduce the very inequality complained of. This manner or these means must then be carefully scrutinized by the courts and they must be struck down whenever they do not meet the test.

In the case at bar, s. 29.1(2) of the Judges Act is inconsistent with s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. The policy decision reflected in s. 29.1 of the Judges Act is that judges' pension plans should be on a contributory basis in order to reduce the financial burden on future taxpayers. Parliament chose to phase in the contributory requirement, by requiring contributions at the higher rate only from newly appointed judges so that, through the attrition of senior appointees as a result of death or resignation, the whole body of the judiciary would eventually participate in the contributory scheme. However, in choosing the date of first reading of the bill as the cut-off date to implement the phasing-in feature of the federal legislation, the new measure "grandfathered" certain incumbent superior court judges, but did not "grandfather" them all. A small minority of them—those appointed after February 16, 1975 but before December 20, 1975—were not grandfathered. Applying the test to s. 29.1, it cannot be said that the distinction between incumbent judges, which resulted from the date limite était contraire à la Déclaration canadienne des droits.

Les juges Beetz et McIntyre (dissidents): L'alinéa 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits n'interdit pas que les types de discrimination fondés sur un motif expressément mentionné, tel que la race, l'origine nationale, la couleur, la religion ou le sexe. De plus, la Cour n'est pas liée par le concept d'égalité énoncé par Dicey et rien ne l'empêche d'adopter un point de vue plus égalitaire.

Une loi adoptée par le Parlement ne contrevient pas au principe de l'égalité devant la loi si elle est adoptée dans la recherche d'un objectif fédéral régulier. La question à résoudre dans chaque cas est celle de savoir si l'inégalité qui peut être créée par la loi vis-à-vis d'une catégorie particulière est arbitraire, fantaisiste ou superflue, ou si elle a un fondement rationnel et acceptable en tant que dérogation nécessaire au principe général de l'application universelle de la loi pour faire face à des conditions particulières et atteindre un objectif social nécessaire et souhaitable. Lorsque la dérogation au principe de l'application universelle de la loi est justifiée, on ne peut déroger au principe plus que ce qui est nécessaire pour atteindre un objectif social souhaitable. Ce critère, y compris son élément de proportionnalité, vise clairement la manière ou les moyens choisis pour atteindre un objectif fédéral régulier, particulièrement lorsque cette manière ou ces moyens introduisent l'inégalité même dont on se plaint. Cette manière ou ces moyens doivent alors être examinés soigneusement par les tribunaux et ils doivent être écartés lorsqu'ils ne satisfont pas au critère.

En l'espèce, le par. 29.1(2) de la Loi sur les juges est incompatible avec l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits. La décision de principe qui ressort de l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges porte que les régimes de pensions des juges devraient être des régimes avec participation de manière à réduire le fardeau financier des futurs contribuables. Le Parlement a choisi d'introduire l'exigence de la participation, en demandant seulement aux juges nouvellement nommés de contribuer au taux plus élevé de manière que, par suite du décès ou de la démission des juges exempts, l'ensemble de la magistrature participe éventuellement au régime de retraite avec contribution. Toutefois, par le choix de la date de la première lecture du projet de loi comme date limite pour procéder à l'introduction progressive de la mesure législative fédérale, celle-ci préservait le statu quo à l'égard de certains juges des cours supérieures déjà en fonction, mais ne le faisait pas pour tous. Dans le cas d'une faible minorité de juges—ceux nommés après le 16 février 1975 mais avant le 20 décembre 1975—on ne préservait selection of the date of first reading as the cut-off point, was necessary to achieve the federal objective. No rational motives were advanced or appear to exist for the selection of that date as the cut-off point which, with its discriminatory effect, is entirely arbitrary and capricious.

Cases Cited

By the majority

Referred to: MacKay v. The Queen, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 370; Curr v. The Queen, [1972] S.C.R. 889; R. v. Drybones, [1970] S.C.R. 282; Attorney General of Canada v. Lavell, [1974] S.C.R. 1349; Attorney General of Canada v. Canard, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 170; R. v. Burnshine, [1975] 1 S.C.R. 693; Prata v. Minister of Manpower and Immigration, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 376; Bliss v. Attorney General of Canada, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 183.

By the minority

By the minority

MacKay v. The Queen, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 370; Curr v. The Queen, [1972] S.C.R. 889; Attorney General of Canada v. Lavell, [1974] S.C.R. 1349; R. v. Burnshine, [1975] 1 S.C.R. 693; Roncarelli v. Duplessis, [1959] S.C.R. 121; Attorney General of Canada v. Canard, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 170; Prata v. Minister of Manpower and Immigration, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 376; Bliss v. Attorney General of Canada, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 183.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Act of Settlement, 1700 (Engl.), 12 & 13 Will. 3, c. 2.
Act to amend the Judges Act and certain other Acts or related purposes and in respect of the reconstitution of the Supreme Courts of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 48.
Canadian Bill of Rights, R.S.C. 1970, App. III, s. 1(b).
Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.
Constitution Act, 1867, preamble, ss. 55, 91(8), (27), 92(14), 96, 99, 100, 129.
Judges Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. J-1, s. 29.1 [en. S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 81, s. 100].
Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 81, s. 100.
Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, R.S.C. 1970 (1st Supp.), c. 43 as amended.

Authors Cited

Lane, Lord. "Judicial Independence and the Increasing Executive Role in Judicial Administration". In Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate. Edited pas le statu quo. Si l'on applique le critère à l'art. 29.1, on ne peut pas dire que la distinction entre les juges en fonction, résultant du choix de la date de la première lecture comme date limite, était nécessaire pour atteindre l'objectif fédéral. Aucun motif rationnel n'a été présenté ou ne semble exister pour le choix de cette date comme date limite, laquelle, avec ses effets discriminatoires, est entièrement arbitraire et fantaisiste.

Jurisprudence

Citée par la majorité

Arrêts mentionnés: MacKay c. La Reine, [1980] 2 R.C.S. 370; Curr c. La Reine, [1972] R.C.S. 889; R. c. Drybones, [1970] R.C.S. 282; Procureur général du Canada c. Lavell, [1974] R.C.S. 1349; Procureur général du Canada c. Canard, [1976] 1 R.C.S. 170; R. c. Burnshine, [1975] 1 R.C.S. 693; Prata c. Ministre de la Main-d'œuvre et de l'Immigration, [1976] 1 R.C.S. 376; Bliss c. Procureur général du Canada, [1979] 1 R.C.S. 183.

Citée par la minorité

MacKay c. La Reine, [1980] 2 R.C.S. 370; Curr c. La Reine, [1972] R.C.S. 889; Procureur général du Canada c. Lavell, [1974] R.C.S. 1349; R. c. Burnshine, [1975] 1 R.C.S. 693; Roncarelli v. Duplessis, [1959] R.C.S. 121; Procureur général du Canada c. Canard, [1976] 1 R.C.S. 170; Prata c. Ministre de la Main-d'œuvre et de l'Immigration, [1976] 1 R.C.S. 376; Bliss c. Procureur général du Canada, [1979] 1 R.C.S. 183.

Lois et règlements cités

Act of Settlement, 1700 (Engl.), 12 & 13 Will. 3, chap. 2.
Charte canadienne des droits et libertés.
Déclaration canadienne des droits, S.R.C. 1970, app. III, art. 1*b*).
Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, préambule, art. 55, 91(8), (27), 92(14), 96, 99, 100, 129.
Loi de 1975 modifiant le droit statutaire (Pensions de retraite), S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 81, art. 100.
Loi modifiant la Loi sur les juges, et certaines autres lois connexes par suite de la réorganisation de la Cour suprême de Terre-Neuve et de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 48.
Loi sur les juges, S.R.C. 1970, chap. J-1, art. 29.1 [adj. S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 81, art. 100].
Loi sur les prestations de retraite supplémentaires, S.R.C. 1970 (1er Supp.), chap. 43 et modifications.

Doctrine citée

Lane, Lord. «Judicial Independence and the Increasing Executive Role in Judicial Administration». In Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate. Edited

by Shimon Shetreet and Jules Deschênes. Dordrecht, The Netherlands: Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, 1985, pp. 525-528.

Lederman, W. R. "The Independence of the Judiciary" (1956), 34 Can. Bar Rev. 769, 1139.

Shetreet, Shimon. "The Emerging Transnational Jurisprudence on Judicial Independence: The IBA Standards and Montreal Declaration". In Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate. Edited by Shimon Shetreet and Jules Deschênes. Dordrecht, The Netherlands: Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, 1985, pp. 393-402.

Tarnopolsky, Walter S. The Canadian Bill of Rights. 2nd ed., Toronto: McClelland and Stewart Ltd., 1975.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Federal Court of Appeal, [1984] 1 F.C. 1010, 148 D.L.R. (3d) 205, 48 N.R. 252, dismissing appellant's appeal and respondent cross-appeal from a judgment of the Trial Division, [1981] 2 F.C. 543, 130 D.L.R. (3d) 433. Appeal allowed, Beetz and McIntyre JJ. dissenting in part.

W. I. C. Binnie, Q.C., and D. M. Low, for the appellant.

David W. Scott, Q.C., and Carole Brown, for the respondent.

The judgment of Dickson C.J. and Estey and Lamer JJ. was delivered by

THE CHIEF JUSTICE—This appeal concerns the financial position and security of federally appointed judges. Relatively narrow amendments by Parliament to a federal law relating to pension benefits for judges, and pensions for their dependants, gave rise to the case. The legal issues which must be addressed are, however, quite broad. They involve careful consideration of at least three important relationships—the federal Parliament and the judiciary, the executive branch of the federal government and the judiciary, and the federal government and provincial governments. Moreover, it is crucial to the resolution of this appeal to develop a proper understanding and application of the fundamental constitutional principle of judicial independence.

by Shimon Shetreet and Jules Deschênes. Dordrecht, The Netherlands: Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, 1985, pp. 525-528.

Lederman, W. R. «The Independence of the Judiciary» (1956), 34 R. du B. can. 769, 1139.

Shetreet, Shimon. «The Emerging Transnational Jurisprudence on Judicial Independence: The IBA Standards and Montreal Declaration». In Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate. Edited by Shimon Shetreet and Jules Deschênes. Dordrecht, The Netherlands: Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, 1985, pp. 393-402.

Tarnopolsky, Walter S. The Canadian Bill of Rights. 2nd ed., Toronto: McClelland and Stewart Ltd., 1975.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel fédérale, [1984] 1 C.F. 1010, 148 D.L.R. (3d) 205, 48 N.R. 252, qui a rejeté l'appel de l'appelante et l'appel incident de l'intimé d'une décision de la Division de première instance, [1981] 2 C.F. 543, 130 D.L.R. (3d) 433. Pourvoi accueilli, les juges Beetz et McIntyre sont dissidents en partie.

W. I. C. Binnie, c.r., et D. M. Low, pour l'appelante.

David W. Scott, c.r., et Carole Brown, pour l'intimé.

Version française du jugement du juge en chef Dickson et des juges Estey et Lamer rendu par

LE JUGE EN CHEF—Le présent pourvoi porte sur la situation et la sécurité financières des juges nommés par le gouvernement fédéral. Le litige résulte de modifications relativement mineures apportées par le Parlement à une loi fédérale portant sur les prestations de retraite pour les juges et sur les pensions pour les personnes à leur charge. Toutefois, les questions de droit qui doivent être examinées sont très vastes. Elles exigent une étude attentive d'au moins trois genres de relations importantes — savoir celles qui existent respectivement entre le Parlement fédéral et la magistrature, entre le pouvoir exécutif du gouvernement fédéral et la magistrature, et enfin entre le gouvernement fédéral et les gouvernements provinciaux. En outre, il est très important pour régler le présent pourvoi d'élaborer une interprétation et une application appropriées du principe constitutionnel fondamental de l'indépendance judiciaire.

I

Facts

The law attacked in this appeal, the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 81, came into force on December 20, 1975. But the events relevant to the appeal started a year and a day earlier, and there are other important dates in the chronology.

On December 19, 1974 the federal Government introduced a bill to amend the Judges Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. J-1. At that time the Judges Act provided provincial superior court judges with salaries of $38,000, pensions* after retirement, and pensions for surviving spouses and children of deceased judges. Judges were not required to pay for, or contribute toward, the costs of these pensions. The bill introduced by the Government on December 19, 1974 dealt with only the first and third components of the regime then in existence. The bill made provision for a 39 per cent increase in the salaries of superior court judges and a 50 per cent increase in the pensions for their surviving spouses and children. But further changes were foreshadowed; on the date the bill was introduced the federal Minister of Justice wrote to all federally appointed judges, stating in part:

However, these improvements were achieved in the context of a comprehensive review of federal policies in relation to pensions which has just recently been concluded. As a result, it may become necessary at some future time to ask judges now in office to make a modest

* In the English version of the Judges Act, ss. 23-29 are found under the heading «Annuities» and the benefits to judges, spouses and children provided in these sections are referred to as 'annuities'. The heading at the start of the French version of these sections is Pensions and the word pension is used throughout the sections. In this judgment I have used the word 'pension' because I think it corresponds more closely to the ordinary understanding of the benefits being considered. Furthermore, s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867, which is the pivotal constitutional provision in this appeal, uses the word 'Pensions'; in the interests of consistency and ease of understanding I will use it to describe the benefits conferred by the Judges Act and in issue in this appeal.

I

Les faits

La loi contestée dans le présent pourvoi, savoir la Loi de 1975 modifiant le droit statutaire (Pensions de retraite), S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 81, est entrée en vigueur le 20 décembre 1975. Toutefois, les événements pertinents ont commencé un an et un jour plus tôt et leur succession comporte d'autres dates importantes.

Le 19 décembre 1974, le gouvernement fédéral a déposé un projet de loi visant à modifier la Loi sur les juges, S.R.C. 1970, chap. J-1. À cette époque, la Loi sur les juges accordait aux juges des cours supérieures des provinces des traitements de 38 000 $, des pensions* de retraite et des pensions pour les conjoints survivants et les enfants de juges décédés. Les juges n'étaient pas obligés de contribuer aux coûts de ces pensions. Le projet de loi déposé par le gouvernement le 19 décembre 1974 ne visait que les première et troisième composantes du régime alors en existence. Le projet de loi prévoyait une augmentation de 39 pour cent du traitement des juges des cours supérieures et une augmentation de 50 pour cent des pensions de leurs conjoints survivants et de leurs enfants. Toutefois, d'autres modifications étaient annoncées; à la date où le projet de loi a été déposé, le ministre fédéral de la Justice a écrit une lettre à tous les juges nommés par le gouvernement fédéral, dans laquelle il affirme notamment:

[TRADUCTION] Toutefois, ces améliorations ont été apportées dans le cadre de la révision globale des politiques fédérales en matière de pensions que l'on vient tout juste de terminer. En conséquence, il est possible que l'on doive dans l'avenir demander aux juges qui exercent contribution towards the cost of the improved pensions for widows, and to ask persons who are in the future appointed to judicial office to contribute in some measure to pension benefit costs.

* Dans la version anglaise de la Loi sur les juges, les art. 23 à 29 se trouvent sous la rubrique Annuities et les prestations à l'intention des juges, conjoints et enfants que prévoient ces articles sont désignées comme des annuities. La rubrique qui se trouve au début de la version française de ces articles est «Pensions» et le terme «pension» est utilisé dans tous ces articles. Dans le présent jugement, j'ai utilisé le terme «pension» parce que je crois qu'il correspond mieux à la conception ordinaire qu'on a des prestations qui sont examinées. En outre, l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, qui est la disposition constitutionnelle centrale dans le présent pourvoi, utilise le terme «pensions»; pour des motifs d'uniformité et de facilité de compréhension, je l'utiliserai pour décrire les prestations que confère la Loi sur les juges et qui sont en cause dans le présent pourvoi.

On February 17, 1975 the judicial contribution to pension costs, signalled in the Minister's letter, was initiated. On that date the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1975 was introduced. It provided that judges appointed before February 17, 1975 would contribute 1.5 per cent of salary toward the cost of pensions (this was intended to be a contribution toward improved pensions for the spouses and children of judges), and judges appointed after that date would contribute 6 per cent of salary toward the cost of pensions plus ½ per cent, rising later to 1 per cent, toward indexing them to keep pace with inflation. The relevant portion of this amendment, which became s. 29.1 of the Judges Act, reads:

29.1(1) Every judge appointed before the 17th day of February, 1975 to hold office as a judge of a superior or county court shall, by reservation from his salary under this Act, contribute to the Consolidated Revenue Fund one and one-half per cent of his salary.

(2) Every judge appointed after the 16th day of February, 1975 to hold office as a judge of a superior or county court, to whom subsection (1) does not apply, shall, by reservation from his salary under this Act,

(a) contribute to the Consolidated Revenue Fund an amount equal to six per cent of his salary; and

(b) contribute to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account established in the accounts of Canada pursuant to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act,

(i) prior to 1977, an amount equal to one-half of one per cent of his salary, and

(ii) commencing with the month of January 1977, an amount equal to one per cent of his salary.

The next relevant date is July 4, 1975. On that date the bill amending the Judges Act to increase salaries by 39 per cent and pensions to surviving spouses and children by 50 per cent became law.

actuellement leur fonction de participer modestement à l'amélioration du régime de pensions pour les conjoints survivants, et aux personnes qui seront à l'avenir nommées à des postes de juge, de contribuer dans une certaine mesure aux coûts du régime de prestations de retraite.

Le 17 février 1975, la contribution des juges aux coûts des pensions, qui avait été mentionnée dans la lettre du Ministre, a été instaurée. La Loi de 1975 modifiant le droit statutaire (Pensions de retraite) a été présentée à cette date. Elle prévoyait que les juges nommés avant le 17 février 1975 verseraient une contribution égale à 1,5 pour cent de leur traitement pour les pensions (ce devait être là une participation à l'amélioration des pensions pour les conjoints et les enfants des juges), et que les juges nommés après cette date verseraient une contribution égale à 6 pour cent de leur traitement pour les pensions, plus un demi pour cent qui augmenterait par la suite à 1 pour cent de manière à les indexer en fonction de l'indice d'inflation. La partie pertinente de cette modification, qui est devenue l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges prévoit:

29.1 (1) Les juges nommés avant le 17 février 1975 à une cour supérieure ou de comté versent au Fonds du revenu consolidé une contribution égale à un et demi pour cent de leur traitement, faite sous forme de retenue.

(2) Les juges nommés après le 16 février 1975 à une cour supérieure ou de comté versent, sous forme de retenue,

a) au Fonds du revenu consolidé une contribution égale à six pour cent de leur traitement; et

b) au Compte de prestations de retraite supplémentaires, établi dans les Comptes du Canada conformément à la Loi sur les prestations de retraite supplémentaires, une contribution égale

(i) à un demi de un pour cent de leur traitement, avant 1977, et

(ii) à un pour cent de leur traitement, à compter de 1977.

La date suivante qui nous intéresse est le 4 juillet 1975. À cette date, le projet de loi modifiant la Loi sur les juges visant à augmenter les traitements de 39 pour cent et les pensions aux conjoints survivants et aux enfants de 50 pour cent est devenu loi.

On July 24, 1975 the respondent, Marc Beauregard, was appointed a judge of the Superior Court of Quebec. The financial arrangements for a superior court judge in Quebec on that date were a salary of $53,000 (an increase of 39 per cent from the salary in effect just three weeks before), entitlement to a non-contributory retirement pension and a pension, in certain circumstances, for his widow and children. When the respondent assumed his position on July 24, 1975 the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1975 had not been enacted. It was still before Parliament and had been before Parliament since the previous February. The respondent contended, however, and the Crown conceded, that he did not know of its existence when he accepted his judicial appointment. In other words, on July 24, 1975 the 'salary and increased benefits' component of the proposed amendments to the Judges Act was in place but the negative aspect of the package (from the perspective of the respondent and, presumably, other superior court judges) was not.

The contributory requirement of the pension scheme became effective on the last relevant date in the chronology, December 20, 1975. On that date the amendments introduced on February 17, 1975 were enacted. Although the respondent's salary remained at $53,000, as a consequence of the amendments he was required to contribute 6½ per cent of his total salary to his pension plan until 1977 and 7 per cent thereafter.

The respondent, as plaintiff, challenged the constitutionality of the new s. 29.1 of the Judges Act. His challenge was two-pronged. First, he alleged that s. 29.1 violated s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 which provides:

100. The Salaries, Allowances, and Pensions of the Judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts (except the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick), and of the Admiralty Courts in Cases where the Judges thereof are for the Time being paid by Salary, shall be fixed and provided by the Parliament of Canada.

Le 24 juillet 1975, l'intimé, Marc Beauregard, a été nommé juge de la Cour supérieure du Québec. Les conditions pécuniaires liées au poste de juge d'une cour supérieure au Québec à cette date comportaient un traitement de 53 000 $ (une augmentation de 39 pour cent par rapport au traitement en vigueur juste trois semaines auparavant), le droit à une pension de retraite sans participation et à une pension, sous réserve de certaines conditions, pour son épouse et ses enfants à son décès. Lorsque l'intimé est entré en fonction le 24 juillet 1975, la Loi de 1975 modifiant le droit statutaire (Pensions de retraite) n'avait pas été adoptée. Elle était toujours devant le Parlement, et ce, depuis le mois de février précédent. Toutefois, l'intimé a soutenu, ce qui a été reconnu par le ministère public, qu'il n'en connaissait pas l'existence lorsqu'il a accepté sa nomination comme juge. En d'autres termes, le 24 juillet 1975 la composante «rémunération et augmentation de prestations» du projet de modification de la Loi sur les juges était en place, mais l'aspect négatif du programme (du point de vue de l'intimé et, présumément, d'autres juges de cours supérieures) ne l'était pas.

L'exigence en matière de participation au régime de pensions est entrée en vigueur à la dernière date pertinente de la suite des événements, savoir le 20 décembre 1975. À cette date, les modifications présentées le 17 février 1975 ont été adoptées. Bien que son traitement soit demeuré à 53 000 $, l'intimé s'est vu, à la suite de ces modifications, obligé de contribuer 6,5 pour cent de sa rémunération totale à son régime de retraite jusqu'en 1977 et 7 pour cent par la suite.

L'intimé, en tant que demandeur, a contesté la constitutionnalité du nouvel art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges. Sa contestation comportait deux volets. Premièrement, il a allégué que l'art. 29.1 violait l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 qui prévoit:

100. Les salaires, allocations et pensions des juges des cours supérieures, de district et de comté (sauf les cours de vérification dans la Nouvelle-Écosse et le Nouveau-Brunswick) et des cours de l'Amirauté, lorsque les juges de ces dernières sont alors salariés, seront fixés et payés par le parlement du Canada.

Secondly, the respondent contended that the words "before the 17th day of February, 1975" in s. 29.1(1) of the Judges Act and the whole of s. 29.1(2) were inoperative because they violated his right to equality before the law recognized by s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights which provides:

1. It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely

. . .

(b) the right of the individual to equality before the law and the protection of the law;

II

Judgments

Federal Court, Trial Division

In his judgment, reported at [1981] 2 F.C. 543, Addy J. held that s. 29.1(2) of the Judges Act was ultra vires in so far as it applied to the respondent. He said that the effect of this provision was to reduce the salaries of incumbent judges and that this was unconstitutional for two reasons: first, because it intruded into provincial jurisdiction under s. 92(14) of the Constitution Act, 1867 with respect to the 'administration of justice' (i.e. reductions in salary for superior court judges would require a constitutional amendment in which both the federal and provincial governments would participate); and secondly, because non-reduction of the salaries of incumbent judges is a fundamental principle of constitutional law which Canada inherited from the United Kingdom.

Addy J. dismissed the respondent's argument based on s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. He said that that provision was not concerned with issues relating to the "mere quantum of remuneration for services rendered". Additionally, following the language of McIntyre J. of this Court in MacKay v. The Queen, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 370 at p. 406, he held that the requirement of making contributions for pension and survivor benefits was not Deuxièmement, l'intimé a soutenu que les termes «avant le 17 février 1975», que l'on trouve au par. 29.1(1) de la Loi sur les juges, et l'ensemble du par. 29.1(2) étaient inopérants parce qu'ils violaient le droit à l'égalité devant la loi que lui reconnaît l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits qui prévoit:

1. Il est par les présentes reconnu et déclaré que les droits de l'homme et les libertés fondamentales ci-après énoncés ont existé et continueront à exister pour tout individu au Canada quels que soient sa race, son origine nationale, sa couleur, sa religion ou son sexe:

. . .

b) le droit de l'individu à l'égalité devant la loi et à la protection de la loi;

II

Les jugements

Cour fédérale, Division de première instance

Dans son jugement, publié à [1981] 2 C.F. 543, le juge Addy a conclu que le par. 29.1(2) de la Loi sur les juges était ultra vires dans la mesure où il s'appliquait à l'intimé. Il a dit que cette disposition avait pour effet de réduire le traitement des juges qui étaient en fonction et que cela était inconstitutionnel pour deux motifs: premièrement parce que cela empiétait sur la compétence que confère aux provinces le par. 92(14) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 en ce qui a trait à «l'administration de la justice» (c'est-à-dire que les réductions du traitement des juges des cours supérieures exigeraient une modification constitutionnelle à laquelle devraient participer à la fois les gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux); et deuxièmement parce que la non-réduction du traitement des juges en fonction est un principe fondamental de droit constitutionnel que le Canada a hérité du Royaume-Uni.

Le juge Addy a rejeté l'argument de l'intimé fondé sur l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Il a dit que cette disposition ne visait pas les questions portant sur le «simple quantum de rémunération pour services rendus». De plus, reprenant les termes utilisés par le juge McIntyre de cette Cour dans l'arrêt MacKay c. La Reine, [1980] 2 R.C.S. 370, à la p. 406, il a conclu que l'exigence de verser des contributions pour les "arbitrary, capricious or unnecessary" and therefore did not constitute a denial of equality before the law.

Federal Court of Appeal

The majority of the Federal Court of Appeal, in a decision reported at [1984] 1 F.C. 1010, agreed with the conclusion of Addy J. but disagreed with his reasoning (and with the reasoning of each other).

Thurlow C.J. held that Parliament had the power under s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 to fix the salaries of superior court judges. He further held that the power to fix salaries included the power to reduce them and that this reduction could be achieved by federal statute and did not require constitutional amendment. Thurlow C.J. concluded, however, that s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 does not give Parliament the power to dictate how judges use their salaries. Both parts of s. 29.1 of the Judges Act impermissibly do this by compulsorily taking from judges part of their salaries to help pay for their pension and survivor benefits.

Heald J. concluded that the clear wording of s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 meant that Parliament had to pay the total cost of the pensions of superior court judges. It followed that s. 29.1(2) of the Judges Act was ultra vires because it compelled a contribution to the pensions of judges by the judges themselves. Section 29.1(1) of the Judges Act, however, was intra vires because it was dedicated exclusively to the cost of the improved pensions for widowed spouses and other dependants of judges.

Pratte J. dissented. He held that the words "fixed and provided" in s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 gave Parliament a plenary power with respect to the salaries of superior court judges. This included the power to change them.

pensions et les prestations des survivants n'était pas «arbitraire, fantaisiste ou superflue» et, par conséquent, ne constituait pas un déni de l'égalité devant la loi.

Cour d'appel fédérale

La Cour d'appel fédérale à la majorité, dans un arrêt publié à [1984] 1 C.F. 1010, s'est dite d'accord avec la conclusion du juge Addy mais non avec son raisonnement (chacun des juges formant la majorité ayant formulé son propre raisonnement).

Le juge en chef Thurlow a conclu que le Parlement avait, en vertu de l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, le pouvoir de fixer les traitements des juges des cours supérieures. Il a en outre conclu que le pouvoir de fixer les traitements comprenait le pouvoir de les réduire et que cette réduction pouvait être accomplie au moyen d'une loi fédérale et n'exigeait pas une modification constitutionnelle. Toutefois, le juge en chef Thurlow a conclu que l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 ne donne pas au Parlement le pouvoir de dicter aux juges comment ils doivent utiliser leur traitement. Les deux parties de l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges le font d'une manière inadmissible en retenant obligatoirement une partie du traitement des juges pour aider à payer une partie de leurs pensions et des prestations des survivants.

Le juge Heald a conclu que le texte clair de l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 a pour but d'obliger le Parlement à payer la totalité des pensions des juges des cours supérieures. Il s'ensuit que le par. 29.1(2) de la Loi sur les juges est ultra vires parce qu'il oblige les juges à contribuer eux-mêmes à leurs propres pensions. Toutefois, le par. 29.1(1) de la Loi sur les juges est intra vires parce qu'il est consacré exclusivement au coût de l'amélioration des pensions destinées aux conjoints et autres personnes à charge des juges décédés.

Le juge Pratte a exprimé une dissidence. Il a conclu que les mots «fixés et payés» employés à l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 confèrent au Parlement un pouvoir absolu en ce qui a trait aux traitements des juges des cours supérieures. Cela comprenait le pouvoir de les modifier.

Although the three justices of the Federal Court of Appeal disagreed sharply on the interpretation of s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and its application to s. 29.1 of the Judges Act they were in agreement, both amongst themselves and with Addy J., that the respondent's argument based on s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights failed.

In summary, the respondent's Canadian Bill of Rights attack on s. 29.1 of the Judges Act failed in both the Federal Court, Trial Division and the Federal Court of Appeal. He was, however, successful in both courts in his argument based on s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867. Addy J. held that s. 100 prevented Parliament from reducing the compensation paid to incumbent judges. The majority of the Court of Appeal held that it would be unconstitutional for Parliament to require any superior court judge to contribute to his or her pension plan.

III

Issues

Although there are a myriad of legal issues to be addressed, they are all subsumed in the two constitutional questions stated by this Court on March 22, 1984:

1. Is section 29.1 of the Judges Act, as amended by s. 100 of the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 81, inconsistent with s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and, therefore, in whole or in part, ultra vires the Parliament of Canada?

2. Is section 29.1 of the Judges Act as amended by s. 100 of the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 81, inconsistent with s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights and to the extent of the inconsistency is it of no force or effect?

IV

Section 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and s. 29.1 of the Judges Act

For convenience of reference I set out again s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867:

Bien que les trois juges de la Cour d'appel fédérale aient été nettement en désaccord quant à l'interprétation de l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 et à son application à l'égard de l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges, ils ont été d'accord, à la fois entre eux et avec le juge Addy, pour dire que l'argument de l'intimé fondé sur l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits devait échouer.

En résumé, l'intimé a échoué tant devant la Division de première instance de la Cour fédérale que devant la Cour d'appel fédérale dans sa contestation de l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges, fondée sur la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Toutefois, il a eu gain de cause devant ces deux cours quant à son argument fondé sur l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. Le juge Addy a conclu que l'art. 100 interdit au Parlement de réduire la rémunération versée aux juges en fonction. La Cour d'appel à la majorité a statué qu'il serait inconstitutionnel pour le Parlement d'exiger que tout juge d'une cour supérieure contribue à son régime de retraite.

III

Les questions en litige

Bien qu'un grand nombre de questions juridiques doivent être tranchées, elles sont toutes subsumées dans les deux questions constitutionnelles formulées par cette Cour le 22 mars 1984:

1. L'article 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges, telle que modifiée par l'art. 100 de la Loi de 1975 modifiant le droit statutaire (Pensions de retraite), S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 81, est-il incompatible avec l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 et, par conséquent, en totalité ou en partie ultra vires du Parlement du Canada?

2. L'article 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges, telle que modifiée par l'art. 100 de la Loi de 1975 modifiant le droit statutaire (Pensions de retraite), S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 81, est-il incompatible avec l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits et inopérant dans la mesure de cette incompatibilité?

IV

L'article 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 et l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges

Afin de faciliter le renvoi, je cite de nouveau l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867:

100. The Salaries, Allowances, and Pensions of the Judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts (except the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick), and of the Admiralty Courts in Cases where the Judges thereof are for the Time being paid by Salary, shall be fixed and provided by the Parliament of Canada.

In the context of this appeal, it seems to me that three introductory points can be made about this provision. First, it deals explicitly with both judicial salaries and pensions. Secondly, it stands as a constitutional affirmation that superior, district and county court judges will receive at least some salary and pension benefits. Thirdly, it assigns the responsibility, in both a federalism sense and a separation of powers sense, for providing judicial salaries and pensions. In the federalism sense, the assignment is to Parliament, not the provincial governments. In the separation of powers sense, the assignment is to the federal legislative branch, Parliament, not to any component of the executive branch.

The respondent makes three distinct arguments about the relationship between s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and s. 29.1 of the Judges Act. These arguments correspond quite closely to the different bases for decision in the judgments of Addy J. at trial and Thurlow C.J. and Heald J. on appeal. They include:

(1) Under the Constitution, Parliament could not, on December 20, 1975, diminish, reduce or impair the established benefits of the respondent.

(2) Section 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 requires Parliament to provide to superior court judges non-contributory retirement pensions.

(3) Section 100 does not authorize Parliament to compel superior court judges to contribute to a fund through deductions from their salaries.

100. Les salaires, allocations et pensions des juges des cours supérieures, de district et de comté (sauf les cours de vérification dans la Nouvelle-Écosse et le Nouveau-Brunswick) et des cours de l'Amirauté, lorsque les juges de ces dernières sont alors salariés, seront fixés et payés par le parlement du Canada.

Dans le contexte du présent pourvoi, il me semble qu'on peut souligner trois points en guise d'introduction au sujet de cette disposition. Premièrement, elle traite de manière explicite des salaires et des pensions des juges. Deuxièmement, elle constitue une affirmation constitutionnelle que les juges des cours supérieures, de district et de comté recevront au moins un certain salaire et des prestations de retraite. Troisièmement, elle attribue la responsabilité, tant dans le sens du fédéralisme et que dans celui de la séparation des pouvoirs, d'assurer les traitements et les pensions des juges. Dans le sens du fédéralisme, cette responsabilité incombe au Parlement et non aux gouvernements provinciaux. Dans le sens de la séparation des pouvoirs, elle incombe au pouvoir législatif fédéral, le Parlement, et non à une composante du pouvoir exécutif.

L'intimé soumet trois arguments distincts au sujet du rapport qui existe entre l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 et l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges. Ces arguments correspondent de très près aux différents fondements sur lesquels s'appuient les jugements du juge Addy en première instance et du juge en chef Thurlow et du juge Heald en appel. Ce sont les suivants:

(1) En vertu de la Constitution, le Parlement ne pouvait pas, le 20 décembre 1975, diminuer, réduire ou modifier les prestations établies de l'intimé.

(2) L'article 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 exige que le Parlement verse aux juges des cours supérieures des pensions de retraite sans participation des intéressés.

(3) L'article 100 n'autorise pas le Parlement à obliger les juges des cours supérieures à verser dans un fonds des contributions faites sous forme de retenues.

Although different points are made under each of these arguments, there is a common thread running through all three. This common thread is the principle of judicial independence. The respondent contends that judicial independence is an important principle of Canadian constitutional law which must be interpreted to invalidate the legislation under review. Before assessing the merits of the specific arguments above, it is important to examine the principle of judicial independence.

V

Judicial Independence

1. General Considerations

Historically, the generally accepted core of the principle of judicial independence has been the complete liberty of individual judges to hear and decide the cases that come before them: no outsider—be it government, pressure group, individual or even another judge—should interfere in fact, or attempt to interfere, with the way in which a judge conducts his or her case and makes his or her decision. This core continues to be central to the principle of judicial independence. Nevertheless, it is not the entire content of the principle.

Of recent years the general understanding of the principle of judicial independence has grown and been transformed to respond to the modern needs and problems of free and democratic societies. The ability of individual judges to make decisions in discrete cases free from external interference or influence continues, of course, to be an important and necessary component of the principle. Today, however, the principle is far broader. In the words of a leading academic authority on judicial independence, Professor Shimon Shetreet: "The judiciary has developed from a dispute-resolution mechanism, to a significant social institution with an important constitutional role which participates along with other institutions in shaping the life of its community" ("The Emerging Transnational Jurisprudence on Judicial Independence: The IBA Standards and Montreal Declaration", in S. She-

Bien que ces trois arguments soulèvent différents points, ils sont reliés par un trait commun. Ce trait commun est le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire. L'intimé soutient que l'indépendance judiciaire constitue un principe important du droit constitutionnel canadien qui doit être interprété de manière à invalider la mesure législative faisant l'objet de l'examen. Avant d'évaluer le bien-fondé de chacun des arguments mentionnés ci-dessus, il importe d'examiner le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire.

V

L'indépendance judiciaire

1. Considérations d'ordre général

Historiquement, ce qui a généralement été accepté comme l'essentiel du principe de l'indépendance judiciaire a été la liberté complète des juges pris individuellement d'instruire et de juger les affaires qui leur sont soumises: personne de l'extérieur—que ce soit un gouvernement, un groupe de pression, un particulier ou même un autre juge—ne doit intervenir en fait, ou tenter d'intervenir, dans la façon dont un juge mène l'affaire et rend sa décision. Cet élément essentiel continue d'être au centre du principe de l'indépendance judiciaire. Néanmoins, ce n'est pas là tout le contenu du principe.

Ces dernières années, la conception générale du principe de l'indépendance judiciaire a évolué et s'est transformée de manière à répondre aux besoins et aux problèmes modernes des sociétés libres et démocratiques. La possibilité pour les juges pris individuellement de rendre des décisions dans des affaires distinctes en étant libres de toute intervention ou influence de l'extérieur continue évidemment d'être une composante importante et nécessaire du principe qui, de nos jours, est cependant beaucoup plus large. Selon les termes d'un des auteurs les plus importants en matière d'indépendance judiciaire, le professeur Shimon Shetreet: [TRADUCTION] «Le système judiciaire est passé d'un mécanisme de règlement des litiges pour devenir une institution sociale essentielle dotée d'un rôle constitutionnel important, qui participe avec d'autres institutions au façonnement de treet and J. Deschênes (eds.), Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate (1985), at p. 393).

There is, therefore, both an individual and a collective or institutional aspect to judicial independence. As stated by Le Dain J. in Valente v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673, at pp. 685 and 687:

[Judicial independence] connotes not merely a state of mind or attitude in the actual exercise of judicial functions, but a status or relationship to others, particularly to the executive branch of government, that rests on objective conditions or guarantees.

. . .

It is generally agreed that judicial independence involves both individual and institutional relationships: the individual independence of a judge, as reflected in such matters as security of tenure, and the institutional independence of the court or tribunal over which he or she presides, as reflected in its institutional or administrative relationships to the executive and legislative branches of government.

The rationale for this two-pronged modern understanding of judicial independence is recognition that the courts are not charged solely with the adjudication of individual cases. That is, of course, one role. It is also the context for a second, different and equally important role, namely as protector of the Constitution and the fundamental values embodied in it—rule of law, fundamental justice, equality, preservation of the democratic process, to name perhaps the most important. In other words, judicial independence is essential for fair and just dispute-resolution in individual cases. It is also the lifeblood of constitutionalism in democratic societies.

2. Foundations of Judicial Independence in Canada

It is trite history that the Canadian court system has its primary antecedents in the United Kingdom. (This is not true of our substantive law which la vie de sa société» («The Emerging Transnational Jurisprudence on Judicial Independence: The IBA Standards and Montreal Declaration», dans S. Shetreet et J. Deschênes (éd.), Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate (1985), à la p. 393).

Par conséquent, l'indépendance judiciaire comporte à la fois un aspect individuel et un aspect collectif ou institutionnel. Comme l'affirme le juge Le Dain dans l'arrêt Valente c. La Reine, [1985] 2 R.C.S. 673, aux pp. 685 et 687:

[L'indépendance judiciaire] connote non seulement un état d'esprit ou une attitude dans l'exercice concret des fonctions judiciaires, mais aussi un statut, une relation avec autrui, particulièrement avec l'organe exécutif du gouvernement, qui repose sur des conditions ou garanties objectives.

. . .

On admet généralement que l'indépendance judiciaire fait intervenir des rapports tant individuels qu'institutionnels: l'indépendance individuelle d'un juge, qui se manifeste dans certains de ses attributs, telle l'inamovibilité, et l'indépendance institutionnelle de la cour ou du tribunal qu'il préside, qui ressort de ses rapports institutionnels ou administratifs avec les organes exécutif et législatif du gouvernement.

La raison d'être de cette conception moderne à deux volets de l'indépendance judiciaire est la reconnaissance que les tribunaux ne sont pas chargés uniquement de statuer sur des affaires individuelles. Il s'agit là évidemment d'un rôle. C'est également le contexte pour un second rôle différent et également important, celui de protecteur de la constitution et des valeurs fondamentales qui y sont enchâssées—la primauté du droit, la justice fondamentale, l'égalité, la préservation du processus démocratique, pour n'en nommer peut-être que les plus importantes. En d'autres termes, l'indépendance judiciaire est essentielle au règlement juste et équitable des litiges dans les affaires individuelles. Il constitue également l'élément vital du caractère constitutionnel des sociétés démocratiques.

2. Fondement de l'indépendance judiciaire au Canada

Il est bien établi dans l'histoire que le système judiciaire canadien tire ses origines du Royaume-Uni. (Ce n'est pas vrai en ce qui concerne notre has deep roots in both the United Kingdom and France.) In the United Kingdom the cornerstone of the constitutional system has been for centuries, and still is today, the principle of parliamentary supremacy. But it is not the only principle. The rule of law is another. Judicial independence is a third. The history of the Constitution of the United Kingdom reveals continuous growth towards independent judicial authority. That history is well-described in Professor Lederman's classic article, "The Independence of the Judiciary" (1956), 34 Can. Bar Rev. 769-809 and 1139-1179. Judicial authority in the United Kingdom has matured into a strong and effective means of ensuring that governmental power is exercised in accordance with law. Judicial independence is the essential prerequisite for this judicial authority. In the recent words of Lord Lane: "Few constitutional precepts are more generally accepted there in England, the land which boasts no written constitution, than the necessity for the judiciary to be secure from undue influence and autonomous within its own field" ("Judicial Independence and the Increasing Executive Role in Judicial Administration", in S. Shetreet and J. Deschênes (eds.), Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate (1985), at p. 525).

droit positif qui a des racines profondes à la fois au Royaume-Uni et en France.) Au Royaume-Uni, la pierre angulaire du système constitutionnel a été pendant des siècles, et est toujours aujourd'hui, le principe de la suprématie du Parlement. Toutefois, ce n'est pas le seul principe. La primauté du droit en est un autre. L'indépendance judiciaire en est un troisième. L'histoire de la Constitution du Royaume-Uni révèle une évolution continue vers l'indépendance du pouvoir judiciaire. Cette histoire est bien décrite dans l'article classique du professeur Lederman, intitulé «The Independence of the Judiciary» (1956), 34 R. du B. can., aux pp. 769 à 809 et 1139 à 1179. Le pouvoir judiciaire au Royaume-Uni est devenu un moyen solide et efficace d'assurer que le pouvoir gouvernemental est exercé en conformité avec la loi. L'indépendance judiciaire est la condition préalable essentielle de ce pouvoir judiciaire. Comme l'a dit récemment lord Lane: [TRADUCTION] «Peu de préceptes constitutionnels sont plus généralement acceptés en Angleterre, le pays qui se glorifie de n'avoir aucune constitution écrite, que la nécessité pour le pouvoir judiciaire d'être à l'abri de toute influence indue et d'être autonome dans son propre domaine de compétence» («Judicial Independence and the Increasing Executive Role in Judicial Administration», dans S. Shetreet et J. Deschênes (éd.), Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate (1985), à la p. 525).

In Canada, the constitutional foundation for the principle of judicial independence is derived from many sources. Because the sources for the principle are both varied and powerful, the principle itself is probably more integral and important in our constitutional system than it is in the United Kingdom.

Au Canada, le fondement constitutionnel du principe de l'indépendance judiciaire découle de plusieurs sources. Étant donné que les sources du principe sont à la fois diverses et importantes, le principe lui-même est probablement plus complet et important dans notre système constitutionnel qu'il ne l'est au Royaume-Uni.

Indeed, two of the sources of, or reasons for, judicial independence in Canada do not exist in the United Kingdom. First, Canada is a federal country with a constitutional distribution of powers between federal and provincial governments. As in other federal countries, there is a need for an impartial umpire to resolve disputes between two levels of government as well as between governments and private individuals who rely on the distribution of powers. In most federal countries

En fait, deux des sources ou raisons d'être de l'indépendance judiciaire au Canada n'existent pas au Royaume-Uni. Premièrement, le Canada est un État fédéral doté d'un partage constitutionnel des compétences entre le gouvernement fédéral et les gouvernements provinciaux. Comme dans d'autres États fédéraux, il est nécessaire d'avoir un arbitre impartial pour régler les litiges aussi bien entre les deux paliers de gouvernement qu'entre les gouvernements et les citoyens qui invoquent le partage the courts play this umpiring role. In Canada, since Confederation, it has been assumed and agreed that the courts would play an important constitutional role as umpire of the federal system. Initially, the role of the courts in this regard was not exclusive; in the early years of Confederation the federal government's disallowance power contained in s. 55 of the Constitution Act, 1867 was also central to federal-provincial dispute-resolution. In time, however, the disallowance power fell into disuse and the courts emerged as the ultimate umpire of the federal system. That role, still fundamental today, requires that the umpire be autonomous and completely independent of the parties involved in federal-provincial disputes.

Secondly, the enactment of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (although admittedly not relevant to this case because of its date of origin) conferred on the courts another truly crucial role: the defense of basic individual liberties and human rights against intrusions by all levels and branches of government. Once again, in order to play this deeply constitutional role, judicial independence is essential.

Beyond these two fundamental sources of, or reasons for, judicial independence there is also textual recognition of the principle in the Constitution Act, 1867. The preamble to the Constitution Act, 1867 states that Canada is to have a Constitution "similar in Principle to that of the United Kingdom". Since judicial independence has been for centuries an important principle of the Constitution of the United Kingdom, it is fair to infer that it was transferred to Canada by the constitutional language of the preamble. Furthermore, s. 129 of the Constitution Act, 1867 continued the courts previously in existence in the federating provinces into the new Dominion. The fundamental traditions of those courts, including judicial independence, were also continued. Additionally, the judicature provisions of the Constitution Act, 1867, especially ss. 96, 99 and 100, des compétences. Dans la plupart des États fédéraux, les tribunaux jouent ce rôle d'arbitre. Au Canada, depuis la Confédération, on admet que les tribunaux jouent un rôle constitutionnel important en tant qu'arbitres du système fédéral. Au départ, le rôle des tribunaux à cet égard n'était pas exclusif; au cours des premières années de la Confédération, le pouvoir de désaveu que confère au gouvernement fédéral l'art. 55 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 jouait également un rôle capital en matière de règlement des litiges entre le gouvernement fédéral et les provinces. Avec le temps toutefois, le pouvoir de désaveu est tombé en désuétude et les tribunaux sont devenus les arbitres ultimes du système fédéral. Ce rôle, qui est toujours fondamental à l'heure actuelle, exige que l'arbitre soit autonome et complètement indépendant des parties concernées dans les litiges entre le gouvernement fédéral et les provinces.

Deuxièmement, l'adoption de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés (bien que, de toute évidence, elle ne soit pas pertinente en l'espèce à cause de sa date d'entrée en vigueur) a conféré aux tribunaux un autre rôle vraiment important: la défense des libertés individuelles fondamentales et des droits de la personne contre les ingérences de tout palier et organe de gouvernement. Encore une fois, l'indépendance judiciaire est essentielle pour jouer ce rôle profondément constitutionnel.

Outre ces deux sources fondamentales ou raisons d'être de l'indépendance judiciaire, il y a également une reconnaissance écrite du principe dans la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. Le préambule de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 établit que le Canada doit avoir une constitution «reposant sur les mêmes principes que celle du Royaume-Uni». Étant donné que l'indépendance judiciaire est depuis des siècles un principe important de la Constitution du Royaume-Uni, on peut à juste titre déduire que ce principe a été transféré au Canada par le texte constitutionnel du préambule. En outre, en vertu de l'art. 129 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, les tribunaux qui existaient déjà dans les provinces qui se fédéraient ont continué d'exister dans le nouveau Dominion. Les traditions fondamentales de ces tribunaux, y compris l'indépendance judiciaire, ont également été maintenues.

support judicial authority and independence, at least at the level of superior, district and county courts. As Lord Atkin said in Toronto Corporation v. York Corporation, [1938] A.C. 415 at p. 426:

> While legislative power in relation to the constitution, maintenance and organization of Provincial Courts of Civil Jurisdiction, including procedure in civil matters, is confided to the Province, the independence of the judges is protected by provisions that the judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts shall be appointed by the Governor-General (s. 96 of the British North America Act, 1867), that the judges of the Superior Courts shall hold office during good behaviour (s. 99), and that the salaries of the judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts shall be fixed and provided by the Parliament of Canada (s. 100). These are three principal pillars in the temple of justice, and they are not to be undermined.

(Emphasis added.)

In summary, Canadian constitutional history and current Canadian constitutional law establish clearly the deep roots and contemporary vitality and vibrancy of the principle of judicial independence in Canada. The role of the courts as resolver of disputes, interpreter of the law and defender of the Constitution requires that they be completely separate in authority and function from all other participants in the justice system.

I emphasize the word 'all' in the previous sentence because, although judicial independence is usually considered and discussed in terms of the relationship between the judiciary and the executive branch, in this appeal the relevant relationship is between the judiciary and Parliament. Nothing turns on this contextual difference. Although particular care must be taken to preserve the independence of the judiciary from the executive branch (because the executive is so often a litigant before the courts), the principle of judicial independence must also be maintained against all other potential intrusions, including any from the legislative branch. In McEvoy v. Attorney General for New

De plus, les dispositions de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 relatives aux juges, particulièrement les art. 96, 99 et 100, appuient le pouvoir et l'indépendance judiciaire, du moins au niveau des cours supérieures, de district et de comté. Comme l'affirme lord Atkin dans l'arrêt Toronto Corporation v. York Corporation, [1938] A.C. 415, à la p. 426:

> [TRADUCTION] Alors que le pouvoir législatif relatif à la création, au maintien et à l'organisation de tribunaux de justice pour la province, y compris la procédure en matière civile dans ces tribunaux, est confié à la province, l'indépendance des juges est protégée par les dispositions prévoyant que les juges des cours supérieures, de district et de comté sont nommés par le gouverneur général (art. 96 de l'Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867), que les juges des cours supérieures seront inamovibles (art. 99), et que les salaires, allocations et pensions des juges des cours supérieures, de district et de comté seront fixés et payés par le Parlement du Canada (art. 100). Ce sont là trois piliers principaux du temple de la justice, et il ne faut pas les détruire.

(C'est moi qui souligne.)

En résumé, l'histoire de la Constitution du Canada et le droit constitutionnel canadien actuel établissent clairement les racines profondes, la vitalité et le caractère vibrant contemporains du principe de l'indépendance judiciaire au Canada. Le rôle des tribunaux en tant qu'arbitres des litiges, interprètes du droit et défenseurs de la Constitution exige qu'ils soient complètement séparés, sur le plan des pouvoirs et des fonctions, de tous les autres participants au système judiciaire.

Je mets l'accent sur le mot «tous» dans la phrase précédente parce que, bien que l'indépendance judiciaire soit habituellement étudiée et analysée en fonction du rapport qui existe entre le pouvoir judiciaire et le pouvoir exécutif, dans le présent pourvoi le rapport pertinent est celui qui existe entre le pouvoir judiciaire et le Parlement. Rien ne dépend de cette différence contextuelle. Bien qu'un soin particulier doive être pris pour préserver l'indépendance de la magistrature vis-à-vis du pouvoir exécutif (du fait que le pouvoir exécutif soit si souvent partie aux litiges devant les tribunaux), le principe de l'indépendance judiciaire doit également être maintenu face à toute autre ingérence

Brunswick, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 704, the Court said, at p. 720:

> The judicature sections of the Constitution Act, 1867 guarantee the independence of the Superior Courts; they apply to Parliament as well as to the Provincial Legislatures.

In a similar vein, these sections, including s. 100, apply to both the executive and legislative branches of government.

3. Content of the Principle of Judicial Independence

Turning from the general definition and constitutional foundations of judicial independence, it becomes necessary to consider its content or conditions in a Canadian setting. In the context of this appeal, it is particularly important to discuss the question of financial security as a component of judicial independence.

There is, and has been at least since the Act of Settlement, 1700 (Engl.), 12 & 13 Will. 3, c. 2, agreement that judicial independence requires security of tenure and financial security. In recent years, important international documents have fleshed out in more detail the content of the principle of judicial independence in free and democratic societies: see, for example, the thirty-two articles in the Syracuse Draft Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary (1981), the forty-seven standards enunciated in the International Bar Association Code of Minimum Standards of Judicial Independence (1982), and, especially, the Universal Declaration of the Independence of Justice (adopted at the final plenary session of the First World Conference on the Independence of Justice held in Montréal in 1983). Invariably, financial security has been recognized as a central component of the international concept of judicial independence. For a recent example, the Universal Declaration of the Independence of Justice (the Montreal Declaration) provides:

possible, y compris celle du pouvoir législatif. Dans l'arrêt McEvoy c. Procureur général du Nouveau-Brunswick, [1983] 1 R.C.S. 704, la Cour affirme à la p. 720:

> Les articles de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 qui portent sur l'organisation judiciaire garantissent l'indépendance des cours supérieures; ils s'appliquent aussi bien au Parlement qu'aux législatures provinciales.

Dans le même sens, ces articles, y compris l'art. 100, s'appliquent aux organes exécutif et législatif du gouvernement.

3. Contenu du principe de l'indépendance judiciaire

Si l'on s'écarte de la définition générale et du fondement constitutionnel de l'indépendance judiciaire, il devient nécessaire d'examiner son contenu ou ses modalités dans le contexte canadien. Dans le cadre du présent pourvoi, il est particulièrement important d'analyser la question de la sécurité financière en tant que composante de l'indépendance judiciaire.

On s'accorde et on s'est toujours accordé, du moins depuis l'Act of Settlement, 1700 (Engl.), 12 & 13 Will. 3, chap. 2, pour dire que l'indépendance judiciaire exige l'inamovibilité et la sécurité financière. Au cours des dernières années, des documents internationaux importants ont établi d'une manière plus détaillée le contenu du principe de l'indépendance judiciaire dans les sociétés libres et démocratiques: voir, par exemple, les trente-deux articles du Syracuse Draft Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary (1981), les quarante-sept normes énoncées dans International Bar Association Code of Minimum Standards of Judicial Independence (1982), et, particulièrement la Déclaration universelle sur l'indépendance de la Justice (adoptée lors de la session plénière finale de la Première conférence mondiale sur l'indépendance de la Justice tenue à Montréal en 1983). Invariablement, la sécurité financière a été reconnue comme une composante essentielle du concept international de l'indépendance judiciaire. À titre d'exemple récent, la Déclaration universelle sur l'indépendance de la Justice (la Déclaration de Montréal) prévoit:

2.21 a) During their terms of office, judges shall receive salaries and after retirement, they shall receive pensions.

b) The salaries and pensions of judges shall be adequate, commensurate with the status, dignity and responsibility of their office, and be regularly adjusted to account fully for price increases.

c) Judicial salaries shall not be decreased during the judges' term of office, except as a coherent part of an overall public economic measure.

This international understanding of one of the essential features of judicial independence is, in my opinion, given powerful expression in a Canadian context by s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867, earlier quoted. Speaking of financial security in Valente, Le Dain J. said, at p. 704:

> The second essential condition of judicial independence ... is ... what may be referred to as financial security. That means security of salary or other remuneration, and, where appropriate, security of pension. The essence of such security is that the right to salary and pension should be established by law and not be subject to arbitrary interference by the Executive in a manner that could affect judicial independence.

I agree with this passage, although I believe it requires a somewhat broader expression by reason of the circumstances of this appeal. Valente dealt substantially, although not exclusively, with the relationship between the executive branch of a provincial government and a statutory court. In that context, Le Dain J.'s discussion of judicial independence in terms of the prevention of arbitrary interference "by the Executive" is, in my opinion, both apposite and correct. In this appeal, the relevant relationship is different; it is between the legislative branch of the federal government and a superior court with its combination of a constitutional position and statutory and equitable jurisdiction. In the context of this appeal it must be declared that the essence of judicial independence for superior court judges is complete freedom from arbitrary interference by both the executive and the legislature. Neither the executive nor the legislature can interfere with the financial security of superior court judges. That

2.21 a) Durant leur mandat, les juges reçoivent un traitement et, à leur retraite, ils touchent une pension;

b) Les traitements et pensions des juges sont adéquats, correspondent à leur situation ainsi que la dignité et la responsabilité de leur poste et sont régulièrement ajustés en fonction de l'augmentation de l'indice des prix;

c) Le traitement des juges ne peut être réduit au cours de leur mandat, sauf dans le cadre de mesures économiques touchant l'ensemble des citoyens.

Cette conception internationale de l'une des caractéristiques essentielles de l'indépendance judiciaire est, à mon avis, exprimée vigoureusement dans le contexte canadien par l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, précité. Voici ce qu'affirme le juge Le Dain au sujet de la sécurité financière, à la p. 704 de l'arrêt Valente:

> La deuxième condition essentielle de l'indépendance judiciaire [...] est [...] ce que l'on pourrait appeler la sécurité financière. Cela veut dire un traitement ou autre rémunération assurés et, le cas échéant, une pension assurée. Cette sécurité consiste essentiellement en ce que le droit au traitement et à la pension soit prévu par la loi et ne soit pas sujet aux ingérences arbitraires de l'exécutif, d'une manière qui pourrait affecter l'indépendance judiciaire.

Je suis d'accord avec ce passage, bien que j'estime qu'il exige une expression un peu plus large en raison des circonstances du présent pourvoi. L'arrêt Valente traitait principalement, quoique non exclusivement, du rapport qui existait entre l'organe exécutif d'un gouvernement provincial et un tribunal créé par la loi. Dans ce contexte, l'analyse de l'indépendance judiciaire qu'a faite le juge Le Dain en termes de prévention des ingérences arbitraires «de l'exécutif» est, à mon avis, pertinente et juste. En l'espèce, le rapport pertinent est différent; il s'agit du rapport qui existe entre l'organe législatif du gouvernement fédéral et une cour supérieure qui comporte un mélange de statut constitutionnel et de compétence en vertu de la loi et de l'equity. Dans le contexte du présent pourvoi, il faut déclarer que l'indépendance des juges des cours supérieures réside essentiellement dans le fait qu'ils doivent être complètement libres de toute ingérence arbitraire tant de la part du pouvoir exécutif que de la législature. Ni le pouvoir security is crucial to the very existence and preservation of judicial independence as we know it.

Against this background of the historical foundations for, and contemporary content of, judicial independence in Canada it is now possible to consider the three specific grounds of attack on s. 29.1 of the Judges Act.

VI

Grounds of Attack

1. Parliament cannot diminish, reduce or impair established salary or remunerative benefits

Of the three arguments made by the respondent this is the one, in my opinion, deserving of special consideration. It is contended that Parliament cannot impair or diminish the established salary or benefits of incumbent judges because this might interfere in fact, or be perceived as interfering, with the independence of those judges. Since I have already concluded that judicial independence is an important constitutional value in Canada, the relevant question becomes: does the scheme for contributory pensions established in s. 29.1 of the Judges Act violate this principle?

The starting point in this inquiry is recognition that someone must provide for judicial salaries and benefits and that, by virtue of s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867, that someone is, explicitly, Parliament.

What then can Parliament do and not do in meeting its constitutional obligation to provide salaries and pensions to superior court judges? As a general observation, Canadian judges are Canadian citizens and must bear their fair share of the financial burden of administering the country. Thus, for example, judges must pay the general taxes of the land. See Judges v. Attorney-General of Saskatchewan, [1937] 2 D.L.R. 209 (P.C.) Judges also have an amount deducted from their salaries as a contribution to the Canada Pension exécutif ni la législature ne peuvent toucher à la sécurité financière des juges des cours supérieures. Cette sécurité est d'une importance cruciale pour ce qui est de l'existence même et de la préservation de l'indépendance judiciaire telle que nous la connaissons.

Compte tenu de cet exposé du fondement historique et du contenu contemporain de l'indépendance judiciaire au Canada, il est maintenant possible d'examiner les trois moyens précis de contestation de l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges.

VI

Moyens de contestation

1. Le Parlement ne peut diminuer, réduire ou modifier un traitement ou des prestations de rémunération établis

Des trois arguments soumis par l'intimé c'est celui qui, à mon avis, mérite une attention spéciale. On soutient que le Parlement ne peut modifier ou diminuer le traitement ou les prestations établis des juges en fonction pour le motif que cela pourrait en fait porter atteinte ou être perçu comme portant atteinte à l'indépendance de ces juges. Étant donné que j'ai déjà conclu que l'indépendance judiciaire est une valeur constitutionnelle importante au Canada, la question qu'il faut se poser devient: le régime de pensions avec participation des intéressés établi à l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges viole-t-il ce principe?

Tout d'abord dans cette enquête il faut reconnaître que quelqu'un doit payer les traitements et les prestations des juges et que, en vertu de l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, ce quelqu'un est explicitement le Parlement.

Alors qu'est-ce que le Parlement a le droit de faire ou de ne pas faire pour remplir son obligation constitutionnelle de payer des traitements et des pensions aux juges des cours supérieures? À titre d'observation générale, les juges canadiens sont des citoyens canadiens et doivent assumer leur juste part du fardeau financier de l'administration du pays. Ainsi, par exemple, les juges doivent payer les taxes générales du pays. Voir Judges v. Attorney-General of Saskatchewan, [1937] 2 D.L.R. 209 (C.P.) Un montant est également

Plan. These two liabilities are, of course, general in the sense that all citizens are subject to them whereas the contributions demanded by s. 29.1 of the Judges Act are directed at judges only. (Other legislation, federal and provincial, establishes similar pension schemes for a substantial number of other Canadians.) Conceding the factual difference that s. 29.1 of the Judges Act is directed only at judges, I fail to see that this difference translates into any legal consequence. As I have earlier indicated, the essential condition of judicial independence at the individual level is the necessity of having judges who feel totally free to render decisions in the cases that come before them. On the institutional plane, judicial independence means the preservation of the separateness and integrity of the judicial branch and a guarantee of its freedom from unwarranted intrusions by, or even intertwining with, the legislative and executive branches. It is very difficult for me to see any connection between these essential conditions of judicial independence and Parliament's decision to establish a pension scheme for judges and to expect judges to make contributions toward the benefits established by the scheme. At the end of the day, all s. 29.1 of the Judges Act does, pursuant to the constitutional obligation imposed by s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867, is treat judges in accordance with standard, widely used and generally accepted pension schemes in Canada. From that factual reality it is far too long a stretch, in my opinion, to the conclusion that s. 29.1 of the Judges Act violates judicial independence.

I want to qualify what I have just said. The power of Parliament to fix the salaries and pensions of superior court judges is not unlimited. If there were any hint that a federal law dealing with these matters was enacted for an improper or colourable purpose, or if there was discriminatory treatment of judges vis-à-vis other citizens, then serious issues relating to judicial independence would arise and the law might well be held to be ultra vires s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

déduit du salaire des juges à titre de cotisation au Régime de pensions du Canada. Évidemment, ces deux obligations sont générales en ce sens que tous les citoyens y sont assujettis, alors que les contributions imposées par l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges ne visent que les juges. (D'autres mesures législatives, fédérales et provinciales, établissent des régimes de pensions semblables pour de nombreux autres Canadiens.) Tout en reconnaissant la différence factuelle que l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges ne vise que les juges, je ne vois pas comment cette différence entraîne des conséquences juridiques. Comme je l'ai indiqué précédemment, la condition essentielle de l'indépendance judiciaire au niveau individuel est la nécessité que les juges se sentent tout à fait libres de rendre des décisions dans les affaires dont ils sont saisis. Sur le plan institutionnel, l'indépendance judiciaire s'entend de la préservation de l'indépendance et de l'intégrité du pouvoir judiciaire et d'une garantie de son immunité contre toute ingérence injustifiée des pouvoirs législatif et exécutif ou même contre toute cohabitation trop étroite avec ceux-ci. Il m'est très difficile de voir un lien entre ces conditions essentielles de l'indépendance judiciaire et la décision du Parlement d'établir un régime de pensions pour les juges et de s'attendre à ce que les juges contribuent aux prestations établies par le régime. En fin de compte, l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges, en vertu de l'obligation constitutionnelle imposée par l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, ne fait que traiter les juges à la manière des régimes de pensions normaux qui sont généralement répandus et acceptés au Canada. À mon avis, cette réalité factuelle est bien loin de justifier la conclusion que l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges viole l'indépendance judiciaire.

Je tiens à nuancer ce que je viens tout juste de dire. Le pouvoir du Parlement de fixer les traitements et les pensions des juges des cours supérieures n'est pas illimité. S'il y avait un indice qu'une loi fédérale traitant de ces questions avait été adoptée dans un but malhonnête ou spécieux, ou si les juges étaient traités d'une manière discriminatoire par rapport aux autres citoyens, de graves questions se poseraient alors concernant l'indépendance judiciaire et la loi en question pourrait très bien être jugée ultra vires de l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867.

There is no suggestion, however, of any of these considerations in the present appeal. First, the motive underlying s. 29.1 of the Judges Act, especially when viewed in the context of the substantial increase in salaries received by superior court judges at virtually the same time, was, without question, to try to deal fairly with judges and with judicial salaries and pensions. Secondly, although superior court judges were required to contribute to their pension benefits commencing December 20, 1975, the contributory scheme was effectively introduced as part of a remuneration package which included a 39 per cent salary increase and a 50 per cent increase in pensions to dependants. The salary and pension changes were intended to be complementary and, as a comprehensive package, did not diminish, reduce or impair the financial position of federally-appointed judges. Thirdly, there was no discriminatory treatment of judges. Contributory pension schemes are now widespread in Canada; s. 29.1 of the Judges Act merely moved superior court judges into the mainstream of Canadian pension schemes. Recognition of that reality draws me, by way of conclusion on this point, to the words of Holmes and Frankfurter JJ. in two American cases. Article III, section 1 of the Constitution of the United States also protects judicial tenure and financial security. Speaking generally about this article, and admittedly in the context of a 'taxation', not a 'pension', fact situation, Holmes J. (dissenting) said in Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245 (1920), at p. 265:

I see nothing in the purpose of this clause of the Constitution to indicate that the judges were to be a privileged class, free from bearing their share of the cost of the institutions upon which their well-being if not their life depends.

In the same vein, Frankfurter J. said in O'Malley v. Woodrough, 307 U.S. 277 (1939), at p. 282:

Toutefois, ces considérations ne sont nullement proposées dans le présent pourvoi. Premièrement, le motif sous-jacent à l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges, particulièrement lorsqu'on le considère dans le contexte de l'augmentation importante de traitement qu'ont reçue les juges des cours supérieures pratiquement au même moment, était, sans aucun doute, d'essayer de traiter d'une manière équitable les juges ainsi que leurs traitements et pensions. Deuxièmement, bien que les juges des cours supérieures aient été tenus de contribuer à leurs prestations de retraite à compter du 20 décembre 1975, le régime avec participation des intéressés a été présenté en fait dans le cadre d'un programme de rémunération qui comportait une augmentation de traitement de 39 pour cent et une augmentation de 50 pour cent des pensions versées aux personnes à charge. Les modifications apportées aux traitements et aux pensions étaient destinées à être complémentaires et, dans l'ensemble, ne diminuaient ni ne modifiaient la situation financière des juges nommés par le gouvernement fédéral. Troisièmement, les juges n'étaient pas traités de manière discriminatoire. Les régimes de pensions avec participation sont maintenant très répandus au Canada; l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges mettait simplement les juges des cours supérieures au diapason des régimes de pensions canadiens. La reconnaissance de cette réalité m'amène, en guise de conclusion sur ce point, aux propos tenus par les juges Holmes et Frankfurter dans deux affaires américaines. La section 1 de l'article III de la Constitution des États-Unis protège aussi l'inamovibilité et la sécurité financière des juges. Parlant d'une manière générale au sujet de cet article et certes dans le contexte d'une situation de fait relative à un «impôt» et non à une «pension», le juge Holmes (dissident) affirme ceci dans Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245 (1920), à la p. 265:

[TRADUCTION] Je ne vois rien dans l'objet de cette clause de la Constitution qui indique que les juges doivent constituer une catégorie privilégiée de personnes qui ne soient pas tenues d'assumer leur part du coût des institutions dont dépend leur bien-être sinon leur vie.

Dans le même sens, le juge Frankfurter affirme dans O'Malley v. Woodrough, 307 U.S. 277 (1939), à la p. 282:

To suggest that it makes inroads upon the independence of judges who took office after Congress had thus charged them with the common duties of citizenship, by making them bear their aliquot share of the cost of maintaining the Government, is to trivialize the great historic experience on which the framers based the safeguards of Article III, s. 1. To subject them to a general tax is merely to recognize that judges are also citizens, and that their particular function in government does not generate an immunity from sharing with their fellow citizens the material burden of the government whose Constitution and laws they are charged with administering.

[TRADUCTION] Laisser entendre que cela empiète sur l'indépendance des juges qui sont entrés en fonction après que le Congrès leur a ainsi imposé les obligations ordinaires de la citoyenneté, en leur faisant assumer leur quote-part du coût de l'administration du gouvernement, a pour effet de diminuer l'importance de la grande expérience historique sur laquelle les législateurs ont fondé les garanties de la section 1 de l'article III. Les assujettir à un impôt général revient simplement à reconnaître que les juges sont également des citoyens et que, en raison de leurs fonctions particulières dans le gouvernement, ils ne sont pas exemptés de partager avec leurs concitoyens le lourd fardeau du gouvernement dont ils sont chargés d'appliquer la Constitution et les lois.

2. Section 100 mandates non-contributory retirement pensions

There are two separate arguments that have been advanced in support of the claim that Parliament must provide non-contributory retirement pensions to superior court judges. I would label one the 'federalism' argument and the other the 'strict construction' argument.

The 'federalism' argument is that s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 must be read against the backdrop of s. 92(14) of the Constitution Act, 1867 which gives provincial legislatures jurisdiction to make laws in relation to 'the administration of justice in the province'. Since that phrase includes matters relating to the judiciary, it follows that Parliament alone cannot change the basis of judicial pensions from non-contributory to contributory. Such a change would require a constitutional amendment following on from the proper degree of legal participation and consent of the federal and provincial governments.

It is true that s. 92(14) of the Constitution Act, 1867 gives the provincial governments jurisdiction over the field of the administration of justice. It is also true that, even more specifically, s. 92(14) entrusts to the provinces "the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts" which, without question, includes superior courts. Without more, it would not be a large step to move

2. L'article 100 attribue des pensions de retraite sans participation

Deux arguments distincts ont été présentés à l'appui de l'affirmation selon laquelle le Parlement doit fournir aux juges des cours supérieures des pensions de retraite sans participation. Je désignerais l'un comme étant l'argument du «fédéralisme» et l'autre, comme l'argument de l'«interprétation stricte».

L'argument du «fédéralisme» porte que l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 doit être interprété en fonction de la toile de fond du par. 92(14) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 qui confère aux législatures provinciales le pouvoir de légiférer relativement à «l'administration de la justice dans la province». Étant donné que cette expression comprend des questions qui se rapportent aux juges, il s'ensuit que le Parlement seul ne peut modifier le fondement des pensions des juges en les faisant passer de pensions sans participation à pensions avec participation. Une telle modification nécessiterait une modification constitutionnelle découlant d'un degré approprié de participation juridique et de consentement des gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux.

Il est vrai que le par. 92(14) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 confère aux gouvernements provinciaux la compétence dans le domaine de l'administration de la justice. Il est également vrai que, encore plus précisément, le par. 92(14) confère aux provinces «la création, le maintien et l'organisation de tribunaux de justice pour la province», ce qui comprend incontestablement les cours supéfrom these constitutional foundations to recognition of a provincial role in setting salaries and providing benefits, including pensions, to superior court judges. But s. 92(14) of the Constitution Act, 1867 cannot be read in isolation. Although it is "intended to have [a] wide meaning" (Di Iorio v. Warden of the Montreal Jail, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 152 at p. 204), it must be read in light of other provisions of the Constitution. There are subtractions from what would appear, without more, to be complete provincial jurisdiction with respect to the justice system. One such subtraction, and it is a major one, is federal jurisdiction by virtue of s. 91(27) of the Constitution Act, 1867 over criminal law and criminal procedure. See Di Iorio, at p. 199. A second subtraction flows from s. 96 of the same Act. Although provincial governments have the power to establish, maintain and organize provincial superior courts, s. 96 explicitly provides that only the Governor General, in effect the Governor General in Council, has power to appoint the judges of those courts. See, among many cases, Re Residential Tenancies Act, 1979, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 714; Crevier v. Attorney General of Quebec, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 220.

rieures. Sans plus, il serait facile de passer de ce fondement constitutionnel à la reconnaissance d'un rôle provincial dans la fixation des traitements et le paiement de prestations, y compris de pensions, aux juges des cours supérieures. Toutefois, le par. 92(14) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 ne peut être interprété de manière isolée. Bien qu'il soit «destiné [. . .] à avoir une portée étendue» (Di Iorio c. Gardien de la prison de Montréal, [1978] 1 R.C.S. 152, à la p. 204), nous devons l'interpréter en fonction des autres dispositions de la Constitution. Il existe des restrictions à ce qui paraîtrait, sans plus, être la plénitude des pouvoirs de la province en ce qui a trait au système de justice. Une de ces restrictions, non la moindre, est la compétence que le par. 91(27) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 confère au Parlement fédéral relativement au droit criminel et à la procédure en matière criminelle. Voir l'arrêt Di Iorio, à la p. 199. Une deuxième restriction découle de l'art. 96 de la même Loi. Bien que les gouvernements provinciaux aient le pouvoir de constituer, de maintenir et d'organiser les cours supérieures des provinces, l'art. 96 prévoit expressément que seul le gouverneur général, en fait le gouverneur général en conseil, a le pouvoir de nommer les juges de ces tribunaux. Voir notamment Re Loi de 1979 sur la location résidentielle, [1981] 1 R.C.S. 714, Crevier c. Procureur général du Québec, [1981] 2 R.C.S. 220.

Section 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 provides a third, and particularly explicit, subtraction from provincial jurisdiction with respect to the administration of justice. It states that the salaries and pensions of superior court judges shall be fixed and provided by the Parliament of Canada. It is difficult to conceive of clearer words. To attempt to create a provincial role in the determination of the salaries and pensions of superior court judges is blithely to ignore this clear mandate. Indeed, it turns s. 100 on its head. Just as s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 provides for federal appointment of superior court judges, so s. 100 provides for federal jurisdiction over their salaries and pensions. Both the intent and the actual wording of s. 100 are clear. There is no 'federalism' limitation on Parliament's capacity to change the basis of pensions for superior court judges from non-contributory to contributory.

L'article 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 prévoit une troisième restriction, particulièrement explicite, à la compétence provinciale en matière d'administration de la justice. Il déclare que les traitements et les pensions des juges des cours supérieures seront fixés et payés par le Parlement du Canada. Il est difficile de concevoir des termes plus clairs. Tenter de créer un rôle pour les provinces dans la détermination des traitements et des pensions des juges des cours supérieures revient à ignorer allègrement ce mandat clair. En fait, on ferait dire à l'art. 100 le contraire de ce qu'il dit. Tout comme l'art. 96 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 prévoit la nomination des juges des cours supérieures par le fédéral, l'art. 100 prescrit la compétence fédérale en ce qui a trait à leurs traitements et pensions. L'intention et le texte

I turn now to what I have labelled the 'strict construction' argument. It has two dimensions. First, it is contended that, since judges received non-contributory pensions before and at Confederation, the word 'pensions' in s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 meant then, and must continue to mean today, non-contributory pensions. Secondly, it is contended that the words 'fixed and provided' mean that Parliament must pay for the full cost of the pensions of superior court judges, which rules out a contributory scheme.

With respect to the first of these arguments, I do not think s. 100 imposes on Parliament the duty to continue to provide judges with precisely the same type of pension they received in 1867. The Canadian Constitution is not locked forever in a 119-year old casket. It lives and breathes and is capable of growing to keep pace with the growth of the country and its people. Accordingly, if the Constitution can accommodate, as it has, many subjects unknown in 1867—airplanes, nuclear energy, hydroelectric power—it is surely not straining s. 100 too much to say that the word 'pensions', admittedly understood in one sense in 1867, can today support federal legislation based on a different understanding of 'pensions'.

The second 'strict construction' argument is, as noted above, that the words "Pensions ... shall be fixed and provided" in s. 100 impose on Parliament an obligation to pay the full cost of the pension. This is the argument which Heald J. accepted in the Federal Court of Appeal. He was particularly drawn to this argument because of the contrast he saw between the wording of s. 100 dealing with judicial pensions ("shall be fixed and provided") and s. 91(8) dealing with pensions for même de l'art. 100 sont clairs. Il n'y a aucune restriction fondée sur le «fédéralisme» à la capacité du Parlement de modifier le fondement des pensions des juges des cours supérieures en les faisant passer de pensions sans participation à pensions avec participation.

J'examine maintenant ce que j'ai désigné comme étant l'argument de l'«interprétation stricte». Il comporte deux volets. D'abord on soutient que, puisque les juges recevaient des pensions sans participation au moment de la Confédération et avant celle-ci, le terme «pensions» que l'on trouve à l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 désignait alors et doit continuer de désigner aujourd'hui des pensions sans participation. Ensuite, on soutient que les termes «fixés et payés» signifient que le Parlement doit assumer le coût total des pensions des juges des cours supérieures, ce qui écarte un régime avec participation.

En ce qui a trait au premier volet de cet argument, je ne crois pas que l'art. 100 impose au Parlement l'obligation de continuer à assurer aux juges précisément le même genre de pension qu'ils recevaient en 1867. La Constitution canadienne n'est pas enfermée pour toujours dans un cercueil de 119 ans. Elle vit et respire et est capable de se développer pour tenir compte de la croissance du pays et de sa population. Par conséquent, si la Constitution peut viser, comme elle le fait, un grand nombre de sujets inconnus en 1867, comme les avions, l'énergie nucléaire, l'énergie hydro-électrique, ce n'est certainement pas trop élargir le sens de l'art. 100 que de dire que le terme «pensions», qui était de toute évidence interprété dans un sens en 1867, peut aujourd'hui appuyer une loi fédérale fondée sur une interprétation différente de ce même terme.

Le second volet de l'argument de l'«interprétation stricte» porte, comme je l'ai déjà souligné, que les termes «pensions [...] seront fixé[e]s et payé[e]s», que l'on trouve à l'art. 100, imposent au Parlement l'obligation d'assumer le coût total de la pension. C'est l'argument que le juge Heald a adopté en Cour d'appel fédérale. Il a particulièrement été attiré par cet argument à cause du contraste qu'il a vu entre le texte de l'art. 100 qui traite des pensions des juges («seront fixé[e]s et federal public servants ("The fixing of and providing for the Salaries and Allowances of Civil and other Officers of the Government of Canada"). In his words, at p. 1040:

> In my view, subsection 91(8) is in no way analogous or comparable to section 100. Subsection 91(8) is an enabling section. It empowers Parliament to provide for the salaries of civil servants but does not require it to do so. There is no provision in the subsection at all for the pensions of civil servants. Section 100, on the other hand, imposes a responsibility, inter alia, to provide the pensions of judges. The word "for" in subsection 91(8) is absent from section 100. In my view, the obligation imposed by section 100 to provide pensions imposes a duty on Parliament to provide the total amount of those pensions.

I accept Heald J.'s description of the mandatory—permissive distinction between ss. 100 and 91(8). Section 100 makes it clear that superior court judges will have some salary and pension benefits. Section 91(8) does not go that far. It merely authorizes, in a federalism sense, Parliament to make laws respecting salaries and pensions for federal public servants; it does not require Parliament to legislate.

Agreement with the mandatory—permissive distinction between the two provisions, however, does not necessarily entail acceptance of the conclusion which Heald J. suggests flows from it, namely that Parliament must pay the total cost of the pensions of superior court judges. I fail to see how the absence of the word 'for' in s. 100 leads to this conclusion. My view is that what emerges clearly from the word 'provided' in s. 100 is that Parliament must provide salaries and pensions to superior court judges. What does not emerge clearly from this word is any constitutional qualification on the type, scheme or even amount of these salaries or pensions. In light of the modern-day reality that a great many people pay for a portion of their pension benefits, it is, in my opinion, construing too literally the word 'provided' to say payé[e]s») et celui du par. 91(8) qui traite des pensions des fonctionnaires fédéraux («La fixation et le paiement des salaires et honoraires des officiers civils et autres du gouvernement du Canada»). Voici ce qu'il affirme à la p. 1040:

> À mon avis, le paragraphe 91(8) n'est en aucune façon analogue ou comparable à l'article 100. Le paragraphe 91(8) est une disposition habilitante qui confère au Parlement le pouvoir de payer (provide for) les traitements des fonctionnaires mais ne l'oblige pas à le faire. Ce paragraphe ne renferme aucune disposition concernant les pensions des fonctionnaires. En revanche, l'article 100 impose au fédéral la responsabilité, notamment, de payer les pensions des juges. Le mot «for» du texte anglais du paragraphe 91(8) n'apparaît pas à l'article 100. À mon avis, l'obligation imposée par l'article 100 de payer les pensions impose au Parlement le devoir de payer le montant total desdites pensions.

Je souscris à la description qu'a faite le juge Heald de la distinction entre le caractère impératif et facultatif qui existe entre l'art. 100 et le par. 91(8). L'article 100 prévoit clairement que les juges des cours supérieures auront un certain traitement et des prestations de retraite. Le paragraphe 91(8) ne va pas aussi loin. Il autorise simplement, dans un sens fédéraliste, le Parlement à adopter des lois concernant les traitements et les pensions des fonctionnaires fédéraux; il n'oblige pas le Parlement à légiférer.

Toutefois, le fait d'être d'accord avec la distinction entre le caractère impératif et facultatif qui existe entre les deux dispositions n'entraîne pas nécessairement l'acceptation de la conclusion qui selon le juge Heald en découle, savoir que le Parlement doit assumer le coût total des pensions des juges des cours supérieures. Je ne vois pas comment l'absence du mot for dans le texte anglais de l'art. 100 entraîne cette conclusion. À mon avis, ce qui ressort clairement du mot «payés» à l'art. 100, c'est que le Parlement doit payer des traitements et des pensions aux juges des cours supérieures. Ce qui ne ressort pas clairement de ce terme, c'est une restriction constitutionnelle applicable au genre, au régime ou même au montant de ces traitements ou pensions. Compte tenu de la réalité d'aujourd'hui, suivant laquelle un grand nombre de personnes payent une partie de leurs prestations de retraite, j'estime que c'est donner that it means that Parliament must pay every cent of the pensions of superior court judges.

In my view, strict construction is rarely controlling in constitutional interpretation. My conclusion on the respondent's 'strict construction' arguments is simply that the word 'pensions' in s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 is not limited to the type of pensions known and in existence for the judiciary in 1867 and the word 'provided' does not necessarily mean that Parliament must pay the total cost of judicial pensions. Parliament's ability to implement a widely used and accepted latter-day pension model is not constrained by either of these words in terms of their strict construction.

3. Parliament cannot dictate how judges spend their salaries by requiring pension contributions

The respondent's argument here is that nothing in the Constitution Act, 1867, including s. 100, authorizes Parliament to make any deductions from the salaries of superior court judges because such deductions constitute an unconstitutional direction as to how judges are to spend their salaries and therefore a direct interference on judicial independence. For three reasons, I cannot accept what the respondent tries to read into s. 100.

First, there is a close relationship between salaries and pensions. They are both remunerative benefits. Superior court judges are not in any sense 'employees' of anyone, including the federal government. Yet, as I have noted, they must be paid by someone and that someone, according to s. 100, is Parliament. In fulfilling its constitutional obligation to establish salaries and pensions for superior court judges, it is reasonable that Parliament would ask: what is an appropriate total benefit package and what components should constitute the package? Salary and pension must be two of the components and Parliament must consider the une interprétation trop littérale au mot «payés» que de dire qu'il signifie que le Parlement doit payer chaque cent des pensions des juges des cours supérieures.

À mon avis, une interprétation stricte est rarement déterminante en matière d'interprétation constitutionnelle. Ma conclusion à l'égard des deux volets de l'argument de l'«interprétation stricte» invoqué par l'intimé est simplement que le mot «pensions» à l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 ne se limite pas au genre de pensions connues et qui existaient pour les juges en 1867 et le mot «payés» ne signifie pas nécessairement que le Parlement doit assumer le coût total des pensions des juges. La capacité du Parlement de mettre en œuvre un modèle de pension moderne généralement utilisé et accepté n'est pas limitée par l'un ou l'autre de ces mots sur le plan de leur interprétation stricte.

3. Le Parlement ne peut dicter aux juges la façon de dépenser leurs traitements en exigeant qu'ils contribuent à leurs pensions

L'intimé soutient sur ce point que rien dans la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, y compris l'art. 100, n'autorise le Parlement à effectuer des retenues sur les traitements des juges des cours supérieures parce que de telles retenues constituent une directive inconstitutionnelle sur la manière dont les juges doivent dépenser leurs traitements et, par conséquent, une atteinte directe à l'indépendance judiciaire. Il y a trois motifs pour lesquels je ne puis accepter l'interprétation que l'intimé tente de donner à l'art. 100.

Premièrement, il existe un rapport étroit entre les traitements et les pensions. Il s'agit dans les deux cas de prestations de rémunération. Les juges des cours supérieures ne sont d'aucune façon les «employés» de qui que ce soit, pas même du gouvernement fédéral. Il reste que, comme je l'ai souligné, ils doivent être payés par quelqu'un qui est, selon l'art. 100, le Parlement. En remplissant son obligation constitutionnelle de fixer les traitements et les pensions des juges des cours supérieures, il est raisonnable que le Parlement se pose la question suivante: qu'est-ce qui constitue un programme de prestations complet et convenable et relationship between them. It did this in 1975; the 1975 'package' significantly raised judicial salaries and increased certain benefits but, at the same time, compelled judges to contribute to their own pension schemes. Parliament could have reached precisely the same financial result by leaving the former non-contributory pension scheme in place but not raising salaries as much as it did. No one contests that this would have been constitutional. But if that is so, I see no reason why Parliament cannot achieve the same result in the way it chose. There is nothing in the wording of s. 100 to suggest the limitation on Parliament's jurisdiction contended for by the respondent.

quelles doivent en être les composantes? Les traitements et les pensions doivent être deux des composantes et le Parlement doit examiner le rapport qui existe entre elles. Il l'a fait en 1975; le «programme» de 1975 a augmenté sensiblement les traitements des juges et a augmenté certaines prestations mais, en même temps, il a obligé les juges à contribuer à leur propre régime de pensions. Le Parlement aurait pu obtenir précisément le même résultat financier en maintenant l'ancien régime de pensions sans participation mais sans augmenter les traitements comme il l'a fait. Nul ne conteste qu'une telle mesure aurait été constitutionnelle. Toutefois, s'il en est ainsi, je ne vois pas pourquoi le Parlement ne peut parvenir au même résultat de la manière qu'il a choisie. Rien dans le texte de l'art. 100 ne laisse supposer qu'il y a, comme le soutient l'intimé, une restriction à la compétence du Parlement.

Indeed, there is wording in s. 100 that points the other way, which brings me to the second reason for holding against the respondent on this issue. The fatal defect of the respondent's argument is that it ignores the word 'pensions' in s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867. Although it might well be unconstitutional in most contexts for Parliament to direct how judges are to spend their salaries, the word 'pensions' in s. 100 specifically authorizes Parliament to deal with this subject-matter. In exercising that jurisdiction Parliament must legislate with respect to both the quantum and the scheme of judicial pensions. The 1975 law dealt with the scheme. Since the scheme chosen was a widely used and accepted one and since it was introduced in conjunction with other changes to judicial benefits in 1975, I see no objection to it on the ground contended for by the respondent.

En fait, certains termes utilisés dans l'art. 100 indiquent le contraire, ce qui m'amène au deuxième motif pour lequel je rejette l'argument de l'intimé sur cette question. Le défaut fatal de l'argument de l'intimé est qu'il ne tient pas compte du terme «pensions» que l'on trouve à l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. Même s'il pourrait bien être inconstitutionnel dans la plupart des contextes que le Parlement dicte aux juges la façon de dépenser leur traitement, le terme «pensions» à l'art. 100 autorise expressément le Parlement à traiter de cette question. En exerçant ce pouvoir, le Parlement doit légiférer en ce qui a trait à la fois au montant et au régime des pensions des juges. La loi de 1975 traitait du régime. Étant donné que le régime choisi était généralement utilisé et accepté et puisqu'il a été introduit conjointement avec d'autres modifications aux prestations des juges en 1975, je suis incapable de m'y opposer pour le motif invoqué par l'intimé.

Thirdly, the limitation proposed by the respondent would have nothing to do with my understanding of proper governmental respect for the independent role of the courts; neither would it bear directly upon the relationship between the judiciary and either Parliament or the executive; nor would it have any meaning in a federal-provincial sense. In short, I simply do not see any

Troisièmement, la restriction que propose l'intimé n'aurait rien à avoir avec ma conception du respect que doit avoir le gouvernement à l'égard du rôle indépendant des tribunaux; elle ne porterait pas non plus directement sur le rapport qui existe entre le pouvoir judiciaire et le Parlement ou le pouvoir exécutif; elle serait également vide de sens dans un contexte fédéral-provincial. Bref, je ne conceptual, principled or practical reason for drawing a line in the place contended for by the respondent.

For all of these reasons I conclude that s. 29.1 of the Judges Act does not violate s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

VII

Section 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights and s. 29.1 of the Judges Act

For convenience of reference I set out again the relevant part of s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights:

> 1. It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely,
>
> . . .
>
> (b) the right of the individual to equality before the law and the protection of the law;

I commence by noting that the respondent calls this his subsidiary argument and that it was dismissed by all four of the judges of the Federal Court, Trial Division and Federal Court of Appeal who heard the case.

The respondent's argument is not that he or other superior court judges are being treated differently and more harshly than other Canadians. As discussed above, because of the broad use throughout the country of contributory pension schemes, such an argument would not be possible. Rather, the respondent's argument is that s. 29.1 of the Judges Act treats him more harshly than other superior court judges and that s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights protects him from this treatment.

The fact situation underlying this claim is somewhat complex and needs to be understood clearly before proceeding. There are three, not two, categories of judges affected by s. 29.1 of the Judges Act because, although the section was introduced into Parliament on February 17, 1975 and that date was selected as the cut-off for imposition of the contributory payments on judges, the vois simplement aucune raison pratique, théorique ou de principe de tracer une ligne à l'endroit proposé par l'intimé.

Pour tous ces motifs, je conclus que l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges ne viole pas l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867.

VII

L'alinéa 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits et l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges Afin de faciliter le renvoi je cite de nouveau la partie pertinente de l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits:

> 1. Il est par les présentes reconnu et déclaré que les droits de l'homme et les libertés fondamentales ci-après énoncés ont existé et continueront à exister pour tout individu au Canada quels que soient sa race, son origine nationale, sa couleur, sa religion ou son sexe:
>
> . . .
>
> b) le droit de l'individu à l'égalité devant la loi et à la protection de la loi;

Je commence par souligner que l'intimé appelle cela son argument subsidiaire et qu'il a été rejeté par tous les quatre juges de la Cour fédérale, Division de première instance, et de la Cour d'appel fédérale qui ont entendu l'affaire.

L'argument de l'intimé ne porte pas que lui-même ou les autres juges des cours supérieures sont traités différemment et plus durement que les autres Canadiens. Comme je l'ai déjà mentionné, étant donné l'usage répandu dans tout le pays des régimes de pensions avec participation, un tel argument ne tiendrait pas. L'argument de l'intimé porte plutôt que l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges le traite plus durement que d'autres juges des cours supérieures et que l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits le protège contre ce traitement.

La situation de fait qui est à l'origine de cette affirmation est quelque peu complexe et doit être clarifiée avant de continuer. Il y a trois et non deux catégories de juges touchés par l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges parce que, bien que l'article ait été présentée au Parlement le 17 février 1975 et que cette date ait été choisie comme la date limite pour l'imposition des contributions des juges, l'arsection was not enacted until December 20, 1975. Accordingly, the three categories of judges are:

1. Judges appointed before February 17, 1975 (they are 'grandfathered' from the contributory schemes in s. 29.1(2); they must, however, pay 1½ per cent of their salaries toward improving pension benefits for their spouses and children).

2. Judges appointed after December 20, 1975 (the law would be in force; they must pay under s. 29.1(2) of the Act).

3. Judges appointed after February 17, 1975 but before December 20, 1975 (the law would not be in force when they were appointed but, once enacted, it purports to reach backward and apply to them).

The respondent is in the third category which, I understand, consists of a relatively small number of judges.

The respondent's argument is that "equality before the law" in s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights prohibits the different statutory treatment of some judges vis-à-vis other judges with respect to their pensions. In assessing this argument it is important to be aware of the cases in which s. 1(b) has been considered by this Court and the conclusion reached in each such case.

Only in R. v. Drybones, [1970] S.C.R. 282, did a majority of the Court hold a federal statute to be inconsistent with s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. In that case, a provision of the Indian Act made it an offence for an Indian to be intoxicated outside an Indian reserve. The gist of Ritchie J.'s reasons is summarized in the following passage at p. 297:

> . . . I am therefore of opinion that an individual is denied equality before the law if it is made an offence punishable at law, on account of his race, for him to do something which his fellow Canadians are free to do without having committed any offence or having been made subject to any penalty.

ticle n'a pas été adoptée avant le 20 décembre 1975. Par conséquent, les trois catégories de juges sont les suivantes:

1. Les juges nommés avant le 17 février 1975 (ils sont exclus des régimes de pensions avec participation que prévoit le par. 29.1(2) pour préserver le statu quo; toutefois, ils doivent payer 1,5 pour cent de leur traitement pour améliorer les prestations de pensions pour leurs conjoints et leurs enfants).

2. Les juges nommés après le 20 décembre 1975 (après l'entrée en vigueur de la loi; ils doivent payer en vertu du par. 29.1(2) de la Loi).

3. Les juges nommés après le 17 février 1975, mais avant le 20 décembre 1975 (la loi n'était pas en vigueur lorsqu'ils ont été nommés mais, une fois adoptée, elle leur serait devenue applicable rétroactivement).

L'intimé se situe dans la troisième catégorie qui, d'après ce que je comprends, est composée d'un nombre relativement peu élevé de juges.

L'intimé fait valoir que «l'égalité devant la loi» prévue par l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits interdit au législateur d'accorder à certains juges un traitement en matière de pensions différent de celui réservé à d'autres juges. En appréciant cet argument, il importe d'être au courant des affaires dans lesquelles l'al. 1*b*) a été examiné par cette Cour et de la conclusion tirée dans chacun de ces cas.

Seul dans l'arrêt R. c. Drybones, [1970] R.C.S. 282, cette Cour à la majorité a-t-elle jugé une loi fédérale incompatible avec l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Dans cette affaire, il était question d'une disposition de la Loi sur les Indiens, selon laquelle constituait une infraction le fait pour un Indien d'être ivre hors d'une réserve. L'essentiel des motifs du juge Ritchie est résumé dans le passage suivant, à la p. 297:

> J'en conclus donc qu'une personne est privée de l'égalité devant la loi, si pour elle, à cause de sa race, un acte qui, pour ses concitoyens canadiens, n'est pas une infraction et n'appelle aucune sanction devient une infraction punissable en justice.

There is not the faintest resemblance between Drybones, which involved racial discrimination regarding a quasi-criminal offence, and the present case, which involves a legislative distinction on the basis of the appointment date of judges.

In Attorney General of Canada v. Lavell, [1974] S.C.R. 1349, the Court had occasion to consider another provision of the Indian Act. The legislation under review stipulated that an Indian woman who married a non-Indian man lost her Indian status, although an Indian man who married a non-Indian woman retained his Indian status. A majority of the Court held that this did not offend "equality before the law" under s. 1(b).

A third provision of the Indian Act was assessed against s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights in Attorney General of Canada v. Canard, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 170. In this case the legislation denied the widow of a deceased Indian the right to administer the estate of her late husband. A majority of the Court rejected the claim that such differential treatment of Indians violated the equality provision of the Canadian Bill of Rights, noting that this type of legislative distinction was within federal competence under s. 91(24) of the Constitution Act, 1867.

In R. v. Burnshine, [1975] 1 S.C.R. 693, the majority again found no violation of equality before the law under the Canadian Bill of Rights. A provision in the Prisons and Reformatories Act called for sentences of "indeterminate" length for offenders under the age of twenty-two. A person older than twenty-two would not in the circumstances have been subjected to indeterminate sentences under the Criminal Code. The law had application only in Ontario and British Columbia since the requisite special correctional facilities were unavailable in other provinces. The legislation thus created distinctions on the basis of both Il n'y a pas la moindre ressemblance entre l'affaire Drybones, où il était question de discrimination raciale dans le contexte d'une infraction quasi criminelle, et la présente instance, où il s'agit d'une distinction établie par le législateur en fonction de la date de nomination de juges.

Dans l'arrêt Procureur général du Canada c. Lavell, [1974] R.C.S. 1349, cette Cour a été appelée à étudier une autre disposition de la Loi sur les Indiens. Suivant cette disposition, une Indienne qui épousait un non-Indien perdait son statut d'Indienne, tandis qu'un Indien qui épousait une non-Indienne conservait son statut d'Indien. La Cour à la majorité a conclu que cela ne constituait pas une atteinte au droit à «l'égalité devant la loi» reconnu par l'al. 1*b*).

Dans l'arrêt Procureur général du Canada c. Canard, [1976] 1 R.C.S. 170, une troisième disposition de la Loi sur les Indiens a été examinée en fonction de l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits. La disposition législative en cause dans cette affaire refusait à la veuve d'un Indien le droit d'administrer la succession de celui-ci. La Cour a la majorité a rejeté l'argument selon lequel un tel traitement distinctif réservé aux Indiens constituait une violation du droit à l'égalité énoncé par la Déclaration canadienne des droits et a fait remarquer que le par. 91(24) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 habilitait le Parlement fédéral à établir ce type de distinction dans une loi.

Dans l'arrêt R. c. Burnshine, [1975] 1 R.C.S. 693, la Cour à la majorité a conclu une fois de plus qu'il n'y avait pas eu d'atteinte au droit à l'égalité devant la loi énoncé par la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Une disposition de la Loi sur les prisons et les maisons de correction prévoyait des peines d'emprisonnement d'une durée «indéterminée» pour les contrevenants âgés de moins de vingt-deux ans. Or, dans les mêmes circonstances, le Code criminel ne rendait pas une personne de plus de vingt-deux ans passible d'une peine d'une durée indéterminée. La loi en cause ne s'appliquait qu'en Ontario et en Colombie-Britannique parce que les autres provinces ne disposaient pas des établissements correctionnels spéciaux nécessaires. La Loi établissait donc des distinctions fondées à la fois sur l'âge et sur la province de résidence. Le age and province of residence. Martland J., writing for the majority, noted at p. 702:

> I am not prepared to accept the respondent's submission as to the meaning of the phrase "equality before the law" in s. 1(b) of the Bill of Rights. Section 1 of the Bill declared that six defined human rights and freedoms "have existed" and that they should "continue to exist". All of them had existed and were protected under the common law. The Bill did not purport to define new rights and freedoms. What it did was to declare their existence in a statute, and, further, by s. 2, to protect them from infringement by any federal statute.

He referred with approval to the passage in the judgment of Ritchie J. in Lavell, in which equality before the law was said to mean that the law must apply to all individuals without exemption from the duty to obey it. Martland J. also quoted with approval the following passage from Curr v. The Queen, [1972] S.C.R. 889 at p. 899:

> ... compelling reasons ought to be advanced to justify the Court in this case to employ a statutory (as contrasted with a constitutional) jurisdiction to deny operative effect to a substantive measure duly enacted by a Parliament constitutionally competent to do so, and exercising its powers in accordance with the tenets of responsible government, which underlie the discharge of legislative authority under the British North America Act.

The majority concluded with the observation that in order to have succeeded Burnshine would have to have demonstrated that Parliament was not seeking to achieve a "valid federal objective".

In Prata v. Minister of Manpower and Immigration, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 376, the appellant claimed that a limitation on the discretionary power of the Immigration Appeal Board to quash a deportation order on compassionate grounds was contrary to equality before the law. The limitation was triggered by the filing of a certificate by the Minister, based upon intelligence reports, that it would be contrary to the national interest for the Board to so exercise its discretion. The prospective juge Martland, s'exprimant au nom de la majorité, fait remarquer, à la p. 702:

> Je ne suis pas prêt à accepter la prétention de l'intimé quant à la signification de la phrase «égalité devant la loi» dans l'al. b) de l'art. 1 de la Déclaration des droits. L'art. 1 de la Déclaration déclare que des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales, au nombre de six, «ont existé» et qu'ils devraient «continuer à exister». Tous ces droits et libertés existaient et étaient protégés sous le régime de la common law. Le but de la Déclaration n'est pas de définir de nouveaux droits ou de nouvelles libertés. Ce qu'elle fait est de proclamer leur existence dans une loi, et, de plus, par l'art. 2, de les protéger contre la transgression par une loi fédérale, quelle qu'elle soit.

Il a mentionné en l'approuvant le passage des motifs du juge Ritchie dans l'affaire Lavell, où on dit que l'égalité devant la loi signifie que celle-ci doit s'appliquer à tous sans que personne ne soit exempté de l'obligation d'y obéir. Le juge Martland a également cité en l'approuvant l'extrait suivant de l'arrêt Curr c. La Reine, [1972] R.C.S. 889, aux pp. 899 et 900:

> ... il faudrait avancer des raisons convaincantes pour que la Cour soit fondée à exercer en l'espèce une compétence conférée par la loi (par opposition à une compétence conférée par la constitution) pour enlever tout effet à une disposition de fond dûment adoptée par un Parlement compétent à cet égard en vertu de la constitution et exerçant ses pouvoirs conformément au principe du gouvernement responsable, lequel constitue le fondement de l'exercice du pouvoir législatif en vertu de l'Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique.

La Cour à la majorité a conclu en faisant observer que, pour obtenir gain de cause, il aurait fallu que Burnshine démontre que le Parlement ne cherchait pas à réaliser un «objectif fédéral régulier ou valable».

Dans l'affaire Prata c. Ministre de la Main-d'œuvre et de l'Immigration, [1976] 1 R.C.S. 376, l'appelant a fait valoir qu'une restriction imposée au pouvoir discrétionnaire de la Commission d'appel de l'immigration d'annuler une ordonnance d'expulsion pour des motifs de compassion allait à l'encontre de l'égalité devant la loi. La restriction s'appliquait dès le dépôt par le Ministre d'un certificat, fondé sur des rapports de police, portant qu'il serait contraire à l'intérêt national que la deportee had no statutory right to a hearing to go behind the Minister's certificate to challenge the accuracy of the intelligence reports. The Court disposed of the s. 1(b) claim easily, saying that the limitation sought to achieve a valid federal objective.

Bliss v. Attorney General of Canada, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 183, involved provisions in the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 which denied the standard unemployment insurance benefits to persons whose employment was interrupted by pregnancy. Although the Act provided maternity benefits, it required a longer qualification period for maternity benefits than for standard benefits. Mrs. Bliss had satisfied the qualification period for standard benefits, but not for maternity benefits. In holding that these provisions did not offend the appellant's right to equality before the law, the judgment of the Court, delivered by Ritchie J., emphasized that s. 91 of the British North America Act, 1867 had been amended in 1940 by the addition of unemployment insurance as a class of subjects reserved to Parliament. Since the impugned legislation was an integral part of Parliament's unemployment insurance scheme it was enacted for the purpose of achieving a valid federal objective. Ritchie J. also quoted the excerpt from Curr which I have reproduced above.

The last case is MacKay v. The Queen, supra. The legislation under review created a special criminal procedure and forum for servicemen charged with criminal offences. Amongst other attributes, the court martial procedure deprived the accused serviceman of a preliminary hearing, the right to a jury trial, and in some circumstances the plea of autrefois convict. The majority judgment again relied on the "valid federal objective" test in denying any conflict between the National Defence Act and s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Commission exerce ainsi son pouvoir discrétionnaire. La loi ne conférait à la personne visée par l'ordonnance d'expulsion aucun droit à une audience pour vérifier le certificat du Ministre et pour contester l'exactitude des rapports susmentionnés. Quant à l'argument fondé sur l'al. 1*b*), la Cour a conclu sans difficulté que la restriction visait la réalisation d'un objectif fédéral régulier.

L'arrêt Bliss c. Procureur général du Canada, [1979] 1 R.C.S. 183, concernait des dispositions de la Loi de 1971 sur l'assurance-chômage qui refusait les prestations ordinaires d'assurance-chômage aux personnes qui avaient dû cesser de travailler pour cause de grossesse. La Loi prévoyait des prestations de maternité, mais la période de référence ouvrant droit à celles-ci était plus longue que dans le cas des prestations ordinaires. M^me^ Bliss avait travaillé assez longtemps pour toucher des prestations ordinaires, mais pas assez pour recevoir des prestations de maternité. En concluant que les dispositions en cause ne portaient pas atteinte au droit de l'appelante à l'égalité devant la loi, la Cour, dont le jugement a été rendu par le juge Ritchie, a souligné que l'art. 91 de l'Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867 avait été modifié en 1940 par l'ajout de l'assurance-chômage comme chef de compétence exclusive du Parlement. Puisque les dispositions attaquées faisaient partie intégrante du régime d'assurance-chômage du Parlement, il s'ensuivait qu'elles avaient été adoptées pour atteindre un objectif fédéral régulier. Le juge Ritchie a en outre cité l'extrait de l'arrêt Curr que j'ai déjà reproduit.

Examinons en dernier lieu l'arrêt MacKay c. La Reine, précité. La loi en cause dans cette affaire créait une procédure criminelle et un tribunal spéciaux pour les militaires accusés d'infractions criminelles. La procédure devant la cour martiale avait notamment comme caractéristique de priver les militaires inculpés de la tenue d'une enquête préliminaire, du droit à un procès devant un jury et, dans certaines circonstances, de la possibilité d'invoquer le plaidoyer d'autrefois convict. La Cour à la majorité s'est de nouveau fondée sur le critère de l'«objectif fédéral régulier ou valable» pour affirmer que la Loi sur la défense nationale n'était pas incompatible avec l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits.

This short history of "equality before the law" under s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights demonstrates that a majority of the Court was never prepared to review impugned legislation according to an exacting standard which would demand of Parliament the most carefully tailored, finely crafted legislation. On the contrary, a majority of the Court was consistently prepared to look in a general way to whether the legislation was in pursuit of a valid federal legislative objective. This approach was followed in cases involving legislative distinctions on the basis of race, sex and age, and in cases involving profoundly important interests of the person asserting the equality right. The passages which I have quoted from these cases indicate that the Court was concerned with the merely statutory status of the Canadian Bill of Rights and the declaratory nature of the rights it conferred. I believe the day has passed when it might have been appropriate to re-evaluate those concerns and to reassess the direction this Court has taken in interpreting that document.

Against this background of previous cases under s.1(b), the questions in this appeal are: Was it discriminatory for Parliament to choose any cut-off date in s. 29.1 of the Judges Act? Was the specific cut-off date chosen, February 17, 1975, legal?

I have no trouble with the first question. Parliament could have imposed the new scheme on all superior court judges, including those appointed before 1975. However, taking into account the settled expectations of those earlier appointees, Parliament decided to 'grandfather' them. I can see no objection to this decision. Nor, in fairness, does the respondent. His complaint is not so much against the 'old judge/new judge' line drawn by Parliament. Rather, his complaint is against Parliament's assignment of him, by virtue of the February 17, 1975 cut-off date, to the 'new judge' side of the line.

Il se dégage de ce bref historique du droit à «l'égalité devant la loi» reconnu par l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits que la majorité en cette Cour ne s'est jamais montrée disposée à réviser une loi contestée en fonction d'une norme sévère qui exigerait du législateur fédéral qu'il apporte à la rédaction législative le plus de soin et le plus de minutie possible. Au contraire, la majorité a été toujours prête à se demander si, de façon générale, la loi visait à atteindre un objectif législatif fédéral régulier ou valable. Cette attitude a été adoptée dans des affaires où il était question de distinctions législatives fondées sur la race, le sexe et l'âge, ainsi que dans des affaires mettant en cause des intérêts extrêmement importants de la personne invoquant le droit à l'égalité. Les extraits de ces arrêts, que j'ai cités, révèlent que la Cour s'est préoccupée du statut de simple texte législatif de la Déclaration canadienne des droits et de la nature déclaratoire des droits qu'elle confère. Or, je crois que le temps est révolu où il aurait pu convenir de procéder à une réévaluation de ces préoccupations et de l'orientation que la Cour a adoptée dans l'interprétation de ce document.

Compte tenu de cette jurisprudence relative à l'al. 1*b*), les questions qui se posent dans le présent pourvoi sont les suivantes: Le Parlement pouvait-il sans commettre de discrimination choisir n'importe quelle date limite dans l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges? La date limite précise qui a été choisie, savoir le 17 février 1975, était-elle fondée en droit?

La première question ne me pose aucune difficulté. Le Parlement aurait pu imposer le nouveau régime à tous les juges des cours supérieures, y compris ceux nommés avant 1975. Toutefois, compte tenu des attentes fondées de ces juges, le Parlement a décidé de les exclure pour préserver le statu quo. Je ne vois aucune objection à cette décision, pas plus que l'intimé en toute équité. Celui-ci ne se plaint pas tant de la ligne de démarcation établie par le Parlement entre «les anciens juges et les nouveaux juges». Il se plaint plutôt de ce que le Parlement l'a placé, en vertu de la date limite du 17 février 1975, dans le groupe des «nouveaux juges».

That brings me to the second question, which is whether the February 17, 1975 cut-off date chosen by Parliament and reflected in s. 29.1 of the Judges' Act unlawfully discriminates against the respondent. I cannot see how it does. Once it is accepted that the general substance of the law is consistent with the valid federal objective of providing for remuneration of s. 96 judges and that it is not discriminatory of Parliament to draw some line between present incumbents and future appointees, I do not think the jurisprudence I have summarized above allows the courts to be overly critical in reviewing the precise line drawn by Parliament in Canadian Bill of Rights cases. Some line is fair and is not discriminatory. From the respondent's perspective a line drawn on December 20, 1975 would obviously be preferable. But that does not mean that the choice of a different date, February 17, 1975, is illegal. In light of the validity of the overall policy reflected in the 1975 amendments and the legality and fairness of Parliament's attempt to protect the settled expectations of incumbent judges, I cannot say that the choice of February 17, 1975 as the cut-off date was contrary to the Canadian Bill of Rights.

For these reasons, I conclude that s. 29.1 of the Judges Act does not violate s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. Accordingly, in my view, neither Addy J. at trial nor any of the justices of the Federal Court of Appeal erred in this aspect of their judgments.

VIII

Conclusion

I would answer the constitutional questions stated in this appeal as follows:

1. Question: Is section 29.1 of the Judges Act, as amended by s. 100 of the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 81, inconsistent with s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and,

Cela m'amène à la deuxième question, qui est de savoir si la date limite du 17 février 1975 choisie par le Parlement et indiquée à l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges établit une distinction injuste et illégale contre l'intimé. Je ne puis voir comment cela est possible. Une fois que l'on a admis que l'esprit général de la loi est compatible avec l'objectif fédéral régulier qui consiste à pourvoir à la rémunération des juges visés par l'art. 96 et que le Parlement n'établit pas de distinction injuste en traçant une certaine ligne entre les juges qui sont actuellement en fonction et ceux qui seront nommés à l'avenir, je ne crois pas que la jurisprudence résumée plus haut autorise les tribunaux à être trop critiques en examinant la ligne précise tracée par le Parlement dans les affaires relevant de la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Une certaine ligne est juste et n'est pas discriminatoire. Du point de vue de l'intimé, il aurait été de toute évidence préférable de tracer une ligne le 20 décembre 1975. Mais cela ne signifie pas que le choix d'une date différente, le 17 février 1975, soit illégal. Compte tenu de la validité de la politique globale qui ressort des modifications de 1975, et de la légalité et du caractère équitable de la tentative du Parlement de protéger les attentes fondées des juges qui étaient déjà en fonction, je ne puis dire que le choix du 17 février 1975 comme date limite était contraire à la Déclaration canadienne des droits.

Pour ces motifs, je conclus que l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges ne viole pas l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Par conséquent, j'estime que ni le juge Addy en première instance ni aucun des juges de la Cour d'appel fédérale n'ont commis d'erreur à cet égard dans leurs jugements.

VIII

Conclusion

Je suis d'avis de répondre ainsi aux questions constitutionnelles formulées dans le présent pourvoi:

1. Question: L'article 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges, telle que modifiée par l'art. 100 de la Loi de 1975 modifiant le droit statutaire (Pensions de retraite), S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 81, est-il incompatible avec l'art. 100 de la therefore, in whole or in part, ultra vires the Parliament of Canada?

Answer: No.

2. Question: Is section 29.1 of the Judges Act as amended by s. 100 of the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 81, inconsistent with s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights and to the extent of the inconsistency is it of no force or effect?

Answer: No.

The appeal should be allowed, the judgments below set aside and the action dismissed. There should be no costs payable in this Court or in the courts below.

The reasons of Beetz and McIntyre JJ. were delivered by BEETZ J. (dissenting in part)—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Federal Court of Appeal, [1984] 1 F.C. 1010 (Thurlow C.J., Heald J., concurring in the result but for different reasons, and Pratte J., dissenting), which upheld (but on different grounds) the judgment of the Federal Court, Trial Division, [1981] 2 F.C. 543, wherein Addy J. ordered and declared that s. 29.1(2) of the Judges Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. J-1, as amended by s. 100 of the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 81, is, in so far as the respondent is concerned, ultra vires the Parliament of Canada.

I—The Facts

As was put by the trial judge (at p. 545):

> The facts in this case are undisputed: no witnesses were called and the case was tried on the basis of admissions in the pleadings, an agreed statement of facts and certain exhibits which were filed on consent.

On July 24, 1975, the respondent, now a judge of the Quebec Court of Appeal, accepted to be and was appointed a puisne judge of the Superior Court for the District of Montréal, with, as stated Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 et, par conséquent, en totalité ou en partie ultra vires du Parlement du Canada?

Réponse: Non.

2. Question: L'article 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges, telle que modifiée par l'art. 100 de la Loi de 1975 modifiant le droit statutaire (Pensions de retraite), S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 81, est-il incompatible avec l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits et inopérant dans la mesure de cette incompatibilité?

Réponse: Non.

Je suis d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi, d'annuler les jugements des cours d'instance inférieure et de rejeter l'action. Aucuns dépens ne sont accordés en cette Cour ni dans les cours d'instance inférieure.

Version française des motifs des juges Beetz et McIntyre rendus par

LE JUGE BEETZ (dissident en partie)—Il s'agit d'un pourvoi contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel fédérale, [1984] 1 C.F. 1010 (le juge en chef Thurlow, le juge Heald, qui est arrivé à la même conclusion mais pour des raisons différentes, et le juge Pratte, dissident), qui a confirmé (mais pour des motifs différents) le jugement de la Division de première instance de la Cour fédérale, [1981] 2 C.F. 543, dans lequel le juge Addy a déclaré que le par. 29.1(2) de la Loi sur les juges, S.R.C. 1970, chap. J-1, modifiée par l'art. 100 de la Loi de 1975 modifiant le droit statutaire (Pensions de retraite), S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 81, est, dans la mesure où l'intimé est concerné, ultra vires du Parlement du Canada.

I—Les faits

Comme l'a dit le juge de première instance (à la p. 545):

> Les faits ne sont pas contestés: aucun témoin n'a été cité et l'affaire a été jugée à partir d'admissions faites dans les actes de procédure, d'un exposé conjoint des faits et de certaines pièces qui furent déposées sur consentement.

Le 24 juillet 1975, l'intimé, maintenant juge de la Cour d'appel du Québec, a accepté d'être nommé juge puîné de la Cour supérieure pour le district de Montréal, avec, comme le déclarent les in the commission issued to him under the Great Seal of Canada in the name of Her Majesty the Queen,

> . . . all and every the powers, rights, authority, privileges, profits, emoluments and advantages unto the said office of right and by law appertaining during your good behaviour . . . .

On the date of the respondent's appointment, the Judges Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. J-1, as amended by R.S.C. 1970 (2nd Supp.), c. 16; S.C. 1972, c. 17: S.C. 1973-74, c. 17; S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 19; S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 48, and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, R.S.C. 1970 (1st Supp.), c. 43 as amended by R.S.C. 1970 (2nd Supp.), c. 30 and by S.C. 1973-74, c. 36, provided that puisne judges of the Superior Court in and for the Province of Quebec enjoyed the following "profits, emoluments and advantages":

1. Global salaries of $53,000 (Judges Act, as amended, ss. 9 and 20);
2. Non-contributory retirement annuities (Judges Act, as amended, s. 23);
3. Non-contributory annuities for the judges' widows and children (Judges Act, as amended, s. 25);
4. Non-contributory supplementary retirement benefits (the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act as amended).

The Judges Act was enacted pursuant to s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 which provides:

> 100. The Salaries, Allowances, and Pensions of the Judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts (except the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick), and of the Admiralty Courts in Cases where the Judges thereof are for the Time being paid by Salary, shall be fixed and provided by the Parliament of Canada.

It will be observed that the pensions of judges' widowed spouses and children are not a benefit mentioned in s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

lettres patentes qui lui ont été délivrées sous le Grand Sceau du Canada au nom de Sa Majesté la Reine,

> . . . tous les pouvoirs, droits, autorisations, prérogatives, bénéfices, émoluments et avantages attachés de droit et de par la loi auxdites fonctions durant votre bonne conduite . . .

À la date de la nomination de l'intimé, la Loi sur les juges, S.R.C. 1970, chap. J-1, modifiée par S.R.C. 1970 (2e Supp.), chap. 16; S.C. 1972, chap. 17; S.C. 1973-74, chap. 17; S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 19; S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 48, et la Loi sur les prestations de retraite supplémentaires, S.R.C. 1970 (1er Supp.), chap. 43, modifiée par S.R.C. 1970 (2e Supp.), chap. 30 et par S.C. 1973-74, chap. 36, prévoyaient que les juges puînés de la Cour supérieure de la province de Québec jouissaient des «bénéfices, émoluments et avantages» suivants:

1. Des traitements globaux de 53 000 $ (Loi sur les juges, telle que modifiée, art. 9 et 20);
2. Pensions de retraite sans participation des intéressés (Loi sur les juges, telle que modifiée, art. 23);
3. Des pensions sans participation des intéressés pour les conjoints survivants et les enfants de juges décédés (Loi sur les juges, telle que modifiée, art. 25);
4. Prestations de retraite supplémentaires sans participation des intéressés (Loi sur les prestations de retraite supplémentaires, telle que modifiée).

La Loi sur les juges a été adoptée conformément à l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, dont voici le texte:

> 100. Les salaires, allocations et pensions des juges des cours supérieures, de district et de comté (sauf les cours de vérification dans la Nouvelle-Écosse et le Nouveau-Brunswick) et des cours de l'Amirauté, lorsque les juges de ces dernières sont alors salariés, seront fixés et payés par le parlement du Canada.

On peut constater que les pensions des conjoints survivants et des enfants de juges décédés ne constituent pas un avantage mentionné à l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867.

Subsequent to the date of his appointment, namely from July 24 to December 20, 1975, the respondent's net monthly income was calculated and paid on the basis of the foregoing salary of $53,000 per annum, the same salary as that of all his fellow puisne judges of the Quebec Superior Court. In addition, he was not required any more than any one of them to contribute or pay anything towards the cost of his pension or that of his widow and children.

On December 20, 1975, approximately five months after the respondent's appointment, Parliament enacted the legislative provisions impugned in this case, s. 29.1 of the Judges Act, added to this Act by s. 100 of the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 81, an enactment which, it is important to note, was introduced in the House of Commons and given first reading on February 17, 1975.

Section 29.1 of the Judges Act provides in part:

29.1 (1) Every judge appointed before the 17th day of February, 1975 to hold office as a judge of a superior or county court shall, by reservation from his salary under this Act, contribute to the Consolidated Revenue Fund one and one-half per cent of his salary.

(2) Every judge appointed after the 16th day of February, 1975 to hold office as a judge of a superior or county court, to whom subsection (1) does not apply, shall, by reservation from his salary under this Act.

(a) contribute to the Consolidated Revenue Fund an amount equal to six per cent of his salary; and

(b) contribute to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account established in the accounts of Canada pursuant to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act,

(i) prior to 1977, an amount equal to one-half of one per cent of his salary, and

(ii) commencing with the month of January 1977, an amount equal to one per cent of his salary.

Here is how the trial judge characterized the effect of s. 29.1(2) upon the respondent:

Its effect was to oblige the plaintiff thenceforth to contribute six per cent of his salary toward the cost of his own retirement and the annuities for his widow and children as well as one-half of one per cent prior to the 1st of January, 1977 and thereafter one per cent, for the Postérieurement à la date de sa nomination, plus précisément du 24 juillet au 20 décembre 1975, le traitement mensuel net de l'intimé fut calculé et payé en fonction du traitement annuel susmentionné de 53 000 $, soit le même traitement que celui que touchaient tous ses collègues juges puînés de la Cour supérieure du Québec. De plus, il n'était pas tenu, pas plus qu'eux, de contribuer aux coûts de sa pension ou de celle de son conjoint survivant et de ses enfants.

Le 20 décembre 1975, environ cinq mois après la nomination de l'intimé, le Parlement a adopté les dispositions législatives attaquées en l'espèce, savoir l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges, ajouté à cette loi par l'art. 100 de la Loi de 1975 modifiant le droit statutaire (Pensions de retraite), S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 81, une mesure législative qui, il importe de le souligner, a été déposée devant la Chambre des communes et est passée en première lecture le 17 février 1975.

L'article 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges prévoit notamment:

29.1 (1) Les juges nommés avant le 17 février 1975 à une cour supérieure ou de comté versent au Fonds du revenu consolidé une contribution égale à un et demi pour cent de leur traitement, faite sous forme de retenue.

(2) Les juges nommés après le 16 février 1975 à une cour supérieure ou de comté versent, sous forme de retenue,

a) au Fonds du revenu consolidé une contribution égale à six pour cent de leur traitement; et

b) au Compte de prestations de retraite supplémentaires, établi dans les Comptes du Canada conformément à la Loi sur les prestations de retraite supplémentaires, une contribution égale

(i) à un demi de un pour cent de leur traitement, avant 1977, et

(ii) à un pour cent de leur traitement, à compter de 1977.

Voici comment le juge de première instance a décrit l'effet du par. 29.1(2) sur l'intimé:

[Il] a eu pour effet d'obliger le demandeur à verser désormais six pour cent de son traitement à titre de cotisation à sa propre pension de retraite et aux pensions de son conjoint survivant et de ses enfants ainsi qu'un demi de un pour cent avant le 1er janvier 1977 et de un indexing of retirement annuities under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. He thus suffered a reduction of seven per cent of the salary to which he was entitled as of the date of his appointment and for some five months following that appointment.

The extent of a more global effect upon the respondent has been agreed upon by the parties in the pleadings as amended by the agreed statement of facts:

The Plaintiff's contribution towards his retirement pension plan for the year 1977 will amount to $3,815.00 and for the year of 1978 to $3,955.00 and in subsequent years such contribution, it is to be expected, will be calculated on any and all adjustments to the Plaintiff's salary. On the assumption that the Plaintiff retires at the minimum age of 65, after 27 years in office, his contribution towards such annuities and supplementary retirement benefits will be at least $100,000.00 and in the light of adjustments from time to time to the Plaintiff's salary, his contribution is likely to be in the order of $125,000.00.

. . .

Upon his retirement, the Plaintiff's minimum contribution of $3,815.00 per annum with interest compounded annually using a rate of interest of ten per cent per annum will have established in the hands of the defendant a capital sum in the order of $400,000.00 an amount more than sufficient to take care of the Plaintiff's retirement annuities and the Plaintiff's supplementary retirement benefits.

On the other hand all the respondent's fellow puisne judges of the Superior Court appointed before February 17, 1975 and who until then had received the same salary as that of the respondent and had not been required to contribute and pay anything towards the cost of their pensions or that of their widowed spouses and children, remained entitled to the same salary as well as dispensed from contributions except, under s. 29.1(1), to the extent of one and one-half per cent of their salary, a contribution described as being "in respect of the cost of the improved annuities for widowed spouses and other dependants" in a letter sent on February 17, 1975, by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada to all federally appointed judges.

pour cent par la suite au titre de l'indexation des pensions de retraite conformément à la Loi sur les prestations de retraite supplémentaires. Le traitement auquel il avait droit à la date de sa nomination et pendant quelque cinq mois par la suite a donc subi une réduction de sept pour cent.

Les parties se sont entendues sur l'étendue d'un effet plus global sur l'intimé dans les procédures écrites modifiées par l'exposé conjoint des faits:

[TRADUCTION] La contribution du demandeur à son régime de pension de retraite pour l'année 1977 s'élèvera à 3 815 $ et pour l'année 1978 à 3 955 $. Pour les années subséquentes, on peut s'attendre à ce que cette contribution soit calculée en fonction de tout rajustement du traitement du demandeur. À supposer que le demandeur se retire à l'âge minimal de 65 ans, après 27 années en fonction, sa contribution à ces pensions et à ces prestations de retraite supplémentaires sera d'au moins 100 000 $ et, compte tenu des rajustements apportés à l'occasion au traitement du demandeur, sa contribution atteindra vraisemblablement les 125 000 $.

. . .

Lorsque le demandeur prendra sa retraite, sa contribution annuelle minimale de 3 815 $ avec intérêts composés annuellement calculés au taux de dix pour cent l'an aura permis à la défenderesse d'accumuler un capital de l'ordre de 400 000 $, somme plus que suffisante pour pourvoir aux pensions de retraite et aux prestations de retraite supplémentaires du demandeur.

Par contre, tous ses collègues juges puînés de la Cour supérieure nommés avant le 17 février 1975, qui avaient jusqu'alors touché le même traitement que l'intimé sans être obligés de contribuer aux coûts de leurs pensions ou de celles de leurs conjoints survivants et de leurs enfants, continuaient d'avoir droit au même traitement, tout en étant exemptés de toute contribution, sauf celle de un et demi pour cent de leur traitement prévue au par. 29.1(1), laquelle, dans une lettre en date du 17 février 1975 envoyée par le ministre de la Justice et Procureur général du Canada à tous les juges nommés par le gouvernement fédéral, est décrite comme étant [TRADUCTION] «au titre du coût de l'amélioration des pensions destinées aux conjoints survivants et autres personnes à charge».

In other words, the new measure "grandfathered" incumbent superior court judges, but it did not "grandfather" them all; a small minority of them, including the respondent, that is those appointed after February 16, 1975, but before December 20, 1975, were not so "grandfathered": the impugned provisions were not in force when these judges were appointed, but they were retroactive to the date of first reading and reached the judges in question ex post facto on the date of enactment. Until the latter date, the respondent belonged to the class of incumbent puisne superior court judges, all the members of which were treated equally under the Judges Act. With respect to non-contributory and contributory retirement annuities, the impugned enactment transferred him from that class into the class of judges who were not incumbent judges at the time of the enactment and who were not treated as favourably as judges who had been "grandfathered". The respondent was no longer the equal of his colleagues. Where there had been equality, the impugned provisions introduced inequality.

En d'autres termes, la nouvelle mesure excluait les juges de cour supérieure déjà en fonction pour préserver le statu quo, mais ne faisait pas bénéficier tous les juges de cette exclusion. En effet, une faible minorité de juges, dont l'intimé, c'est-à-dire ceux nommés après le 16 février 1975 mais avant le 20 décembre 1975, n'étaient pas ainsi exclus: les dispositions attaquées n'étaient pas en vigueur au moment où ces juges ont été nommés, mais elles rétroagissaient à la date de la première lecture et, en conséquence, s'appliquaient aux juges en question ex post facto dès la date de leur adoption. Jusqu'à cette dernière date, l'intimé appartenait à la catégorie des juges puînés en fonction de la Cour supérieure, auxquels la Loi sur les juges s'appliquait d'une manière égale. Mais aux fins des pensions de retraite sans participation des intéressés et de celles exigeant leur participation, la mesure législative attaquée faisait passer l'intimé de cette catégorie à la catégorie des juges qui n'étaient pas en fonction au moment de son adoption et qui n'étaient pas traités d'une manière aussi favorable que les juges exclus pour préserver le statu quo. L'intimé n'était plus désormais sur un pied d'égalité avec ses collègues. Là où il y avait eu égalité, les dispositions attaquées créaient l'inégalité.

On the date of his appointment, July 24, 1975, the respondent was unaware of the existence of the bill which was to amend the Judges Act by adding s. 29.1 thereto, and the Minister of Justice did not mention the existence of the bill to the respondent at the time that his appointment was discussed.

À la date de sa nomination, le 24 juillet 1975, l'intimé ignorait l'existence du projet de loi visant à modifier la Loi sur les juges en y ajoutant l'art. 29.1, et le ministre de la Justice n'en avait pas fait mention au moment où il discutait avec l'intimé de sa nomination.

I should state at once however that the respondent's unawareness of the existence of the bill is in my view irrelevant. The bill was before Parliament and was not yet law. One is presumed to know the law and to act accordingly, but not a bill which may or may not become law.

Toutefois, je dois préciser immédiatement que j'estime que l'ignorance par l'intimé de l'existence du projet de loi est sans importance. Le projet de loi était à l'étude devant le Parlement et n'était pas encore devenu loi. Tous sont censés connaître la loi et agir en conséquence, mais non pas un projet de loi qui peut ou non devenir loi.

In November 1977, the respondent launched a declaratory action in the Trial Division of the Federal Court. The statement of claim concludes with the following prayer for relief:

En novembre 1977, l'intimé a intenté, devant la Division de première instance de la Cour fédérale, une action visant à obtenir un jugement déclaratoire. La déclaration se termine par la demande de redressement suivante:

WHEREFORE the Plaintiff claims:

[TRADUCTION] À CES CAUSES le demandeur réclame:

a) A declaration that the words "before February 17, 1975" of Section 29.1 and that the whole of Section 29.1(2) of the Judges Act, as enacted by Section 100 of 1974-75-76, c. 81 are

i) ultra vires of the Parliament of Canada, or, in the alternative:

ii) ultra vires of the Parliament of Canada insofar as the Plaintiff is concerned:

or, in the alternative,

b) A declaration that the words "before February 17, 1975" of Section 29.1 and the whole Section 29.1 (2) of the Judges Act, as enacted by Section 100 of 1974-75-76, c. 81 are inoperative insofar as the Plaintiff is concerned;

c) His costs of the within proceedings;

d) Such further and other relief as to this Honourable Court may seem meet.

The declaration claimed in paragraph a) of the prayer for relief is allegedly founded upon s. 99 of the Constitution Act, 1867, relating to the tenure of office of judges as well as upon s. 100 of the same Act, quoted above and relating to the salaries, allowances, and pensions of judges.

The declaration claimed in paragraph b) of the prayer for relief is allegedly founded upon s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights which provides:

1. It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely,

. . .

(b) the right of the individual to equality before the law and the protection of the law;

II—The Judgments of the Courts Below

In the Trial Division, Addy J. found that the effect of the impugned amendment to the Judges Act was to reduce the salary of the respondent and held that Parliament has no legislative authority to reduce the salary of a judge during his or her tenure of office. However he rejected the submission that s. 29.1 of the Judges Act contravened

a) Un jugement déclarant les mots «avant le 17 février 1975» à l'article 29.1 et la totalité du paragraphe 29.1(2) de la Loi sur les juges, tel qu'édicté par l'article 100 du chap. 81, 1974-75-76,

i) ultra vires du Parlement du Canada, ou, subsidiairement:

ii) ultra vires du Parlement du Canada dans la mesure où le demandeur est concerné;

ou, subsidiairement,

b) Un jugement déclarant que les mots «avant le 17 février 1975» à l'article 29.1 et la totalité du paragraphe 29.1(2) de la Loi sur les juges, tel qu'édicté par l'article 100 du chap. 81, 1974-75-76, sont inopérants dans la mesure où le demandeur est concerné;

c) Ses dépens pour les procédures visées aux présentes;

d) Tout autre redressement que cette Cour peut juger à propos.

Le jugement déclaratoire sollicité à l'alinéa a) de la demande de redressement serait fondé sur l'art. 99 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, portant sur la durée des fonctions des juges, ainsi que sur l'art. 100 précité de la même loi, relatif aux salaires, aux allocations et aux pensions des juges.

Le jugement déclaratoire sollicité à l'alinéa b) de la demande de redressement serait fondé sur l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, qui porte:

1. Il est par les présentes reconnu et déclaré que les droits de l'homme et les libertés fondamentales ci-après énoncés ont existé et continueront à exister pour tout individu au Canada quels que soient sa race, son origine nationale, sa couleur, sa religion ou son sexe:

. . .

b) le droit de l'individu à l'égalité devant la loi et à la protection de la loi;

II—Les jugements des tribunaux d'instance inférieure

En Division de première instance, le juge Addy a conclu que la modification attaquée de la Loi sur les juges avait pour effet de réduire le traitement de l'intimé et que le Parlement n'a pas la compétence législative pour diminuer le traitement d'un juge pendant la durée de ses fonctions. Rejetant toutefois l'argument voulant que l'art. 29.1 de la

s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. He granted the respondent a declaration that s. 29.1(2) of the Judges Act was ultra vires of the Parliament of Canada in so far as the respondent was concerned.

The appellant appealed to the Federal Court of Appeal and the respondent cross-appealed from the refusal of the trial judge to grant him a declaration that the impugned enactment was inoperative because it infringed s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights.

The Federal Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal by a majority judgment but was unanimous in dismissing the cross-appeal. All three judges of the Federal Court of Appeal held, contrarily to the trial judge, that Parliament can reduce judges' salaries, provided it is not for a colourable purpose such, for instance, as to undermine the independance of the judiciary, which nobody has suggested was the case with respect to the impugned legislation. However, the majority of the Federal Court of Appeal held that it is ultra vires of Parliament to require any judge appointed pursuant to s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, whenever appointed, to participate in a contributory pension plan for his own or her own pension, an issue not dealt with by the trial judge.

Thurlow C.J., who characterized the impugned enactment as effecting a forced contribution to a pension scheme rather than a reduction in salary, took the view that whereas under s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 Parliament must fix and provide judges salaries, it "has no authority to dictate how they are to be used by the recipient or to require that they be used for any particular purpose". Thurlow C.J. accordingly held that s. 29.1 of the Judges Act is wholly ultra vires, including s. 29.1(1), which, as stated above, was said to be "in respect of the cost of the improved annuities for widowed spouses and other dependants".

Loi sur les juges contrevienne à l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, il a accordé un jugement déclaratoire portant que le par. 29.1(2) de la Loi sur les juges était ultra vires du Parlement du Canada dans la mesure où l'intimé était concerné.

L'appelante a interjeté appel devant la Cour d'appel fédérale et l'intimé a formé un appel incident contre le refus du juge de première instance de déclarer la mesure législative attaquée inopérante pour le motif qu'elle enfreignait l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits.

La Cour d'appel fédérale à la majorité a rejeté l'appel, mais c'est à l'unanimité qu'elle a rejeté l'appel incident. Chacun des trois juges composant la formation de la Cour d'appel fédérale a conclu, contrairement à ce qu'avait décidé le juge de première instance, que le Parlement peut réduire les traitements des juges, pourvu que ce ne soit pas pour un motif spécieux comme, par exemple, l'affaiblissement de l'indépendance de la magistrature, ce que personne n'a prétendu être le cas pour ce qui est de la mesure législative attaquée en l'espèce. Cependant, la Cour d'appel fédérale à la majorité a conclu qu'il est ultra vires du Parlement d'exiger qu'un juge nommé conformément à l'art. 96 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, peu importe le moment de sa nomination, contribue à sa propre pension dans le cadre d'un régime de retraite avec participation de l'intéressé, une question qui n'a pas été abordée par le juge de première instance.

Le juge en chef Thurlow, qui a dit des dispositions attaquées qu'elles créaient une obligation de contribuer à un régime de retraite plutôt qu'une réduction de traitement, a estimé que le Parlement doit en vertu de l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 fixer et payer les traitements des juges, mais qu'il «n'a aucune autorité pour dicter aux bénéficiaires comment ils doivent les utiliser, ni pour les obliger à s'en servir à des fins particulières». Le juge en chef Thurlow a donc conclu que l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges était entièrement ultra vires, y compris le par. 29.1(1) dont on a dit, comme je l'ai fait remarquer précédemment, qu'il était «au titre du coût de l'amélioration des pensions destinées aux conjoints survivants et autres personnes à charge».

Heald J., for his part, was of the opinion that the obligation set out in s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 imposes a duty on Parliament to provide the total amount of judges' pensions and s. 29.1(2) is contrary to s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and ultra vires in that it requires judges to pay a portion of the cost of their own pension. However, s. 29.1(1) of the Judges Act is not ultra vires in his view since the deduction provided for therein is dedicated to the cost of improved annuities for widowed spouses and other dependants of judges.

Pratte J., dissenting, found that s. 29.1 of the Judges Act does not affect the judges' right to a pension but rather their right to salaries. The real question then was whether Parliament has the power to reduce the salaries of incumbent judges. He held that Parliament has this power.

In the result, the declaration of unconstitutionality granted by the trial judge with respect to s. 29.1(2) of the Judges Act remained undisturbed.

The appellant appealed to this Court by leave of this Court. The respondent cross-appealed pursuant to s. 29(1) of the Rules of this Court asking for the declaration claimed in paragraph b) of his prayer for relief on the basis of s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights.

III—Constitutional Questions

On March 22, 1984, Dickson J., as he then was, stated the two following constitutional questions:

1. Is section 29.1 of the Judges Act, as amended by section 100 of the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 81, inconsistent with s. 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and therefore in whole or in part, ultra vires the Parliament of Canada?
2. Is section 29.1 of the Judges Act as amended by s. 100 of the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 81, inconsistent with s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights and to the extent of the inconsistency is it of no force or effect?

Le juge Heald pour sa part a estimé que l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 impose au Parlement l'obligation de payer la totalité des pensions des juges et que le par. 29.1(2) va à l'encontre de l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 et est ultra vires en ce qu'il exige des juges qu'ils paient une partie du coût de leur propre pension. Toutefois, selon lui, le par. 29.1(1) de la Loi sur les juges n'est pas ultra vires puisque la déduction qu'il prévoit est destinée à subvenir au coût de l'amélioration des pensions destinées aux conjoints survivants et autres personnes à charge des juges décédés.

Le juge Pratte, dissident, a conclu que l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges touche non pas le droit des juges à une pension, mais leur droit à un traitement. La question véritable est alors de savoir si le Parlement est habilité à réduire le traitement de juges en fonction. Il a conclu que le Parlement possède ce pouvoir.

En définitive, le jugement de première instance déclarant inconstitutionnel le par. 29.1(2) de la Loi sur les juges est resté inchangé.

L'appelante s'est pourvue devant cette Cour avec l'autorisation de cette dernière. L'intimé a formé, en vertu du par. 29(1) des Règles de cette Cour, un pourvoi incident en vue d'obtenir, sur le fondement de l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, le jugement déclaratoire sollicité à l'alinéa b) de sa demande de redressement.

III—Les questions constitutionnelles

Le 22 mars 1984, le juge Dickson, maintenant Juge en chef, a formulé les deux questions constitutionnelles suivantes:

1. L'article 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges, telle que modifiée par l'art. 100 de la Loi de 1975 modifiant le droit statutaire (Pensions de retraite), S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 81, est-il incompatible avec l'art. 100 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 et, par conséquent, en totalité ou en partie ultra vires du Parlement du Canada?
2. L'article 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges, telle que modifiée par l'art. 100 de la Loi de 1975 modifiant le droit statutaire (Pensions de retraite), S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 81, est-il incompatible avec l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits et inopérant dans la mesure de cette incompatibilité?

With the greatest of respect for those who hold a contrary view, I have reached the conclusion that, subject to one qualification to be mentioned later, the second constitutional question should receive an affirmative answer. However, this may not be sufficient to dispose of the entire case, given the declaration of unconstitutionality granted by the trial judge. In any event, the variety of opinions expressed in the courts below on the issues raised by the first constitutional question and the need for certainty in this important area of the law make it preferable that I also answer the first constitutional question.

IV—The Constitution Act, 1867 and s. 29.1 of the Judges Act

I have had the advantage of reading the reasons for judgment written by the Chief Justice. I agree with his general considerations on judicial independance, on the foundation of judicial independance in Canada and on the content of the principle of judicial independance. I also agree with him that the first constitutional question should be answered in the negative, and I agree with his reasons for so answering it.

I now turn to the second constitutional question.

V—Section 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights and s. 29.1 of the Judges Act

As was already stated above, all the judges in the courts below held that s. 29.1 of the Judges Act was not inconsistent with s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. They had different reasons for so deciding however.

The reasons of the trial judge read in part as follows at pp. 554 to 557 of the Federal Court Reports:

The plaintiff, in arguing that the words "before the 17th day of February, 1975" in subsection 29.1(1) and "after the 16th day of February, 1975" in subsection 29.1(2) offend the principle of equality before the law, relied on and referred to the following cases: The Queen v. Drybones, [1970] S.C.R. 282; Curr v. The Queen, Avec les plus grands égards pour les tenants du point de vue contraire, je suis arrivé à la conclusion que, sous réserve d'une nuance que je mentionnerai plus loin, la seconde question constitutionnelle doit recevoir une réponse affirmative. Toutefois, étant donné la déclaration d'inconstitutionnalité accordée par le juge de première instance, cela ne suffit peut-être pas pour statuer sur l'affaire dans son ensemble. En tout état de cause, la diversité des opinions exprimées par les tribunaux d'instance inférieure sur les points soulevés par la première question constitutionnelle et le besoin de certitude dans ce domaine important du droit font qu'il est préférable que je réponde aussi à la première question constitutionnelle.

IV—La Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 et l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges

J'ai eu l'avantage de lire les motifs de jugement qu'a rédigés le Juge en chef. Je souscris à ses observations générales sur l'indépendance judiciaire, sur le fondement de l'indépendance judiciaire au Canada et sur le contenu du principe de l'indépendance judiciaire. Je suis également d'accord avec lui pour dire qu'il y a lieu de répondre à la première question constitutionnelle par la négative et j'approuve les raisons données à l'appui de cette réponse.

Cela m'amène à la seconde question constitutionnelle.

V—L'alinéa 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits et l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges Comme je l'ai déjà indiqué, tous les juges des tribunaux d'instance inférieure ont conclu que l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges n'était pas incompatible avec l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Cependant, les raisons de leurs conclusions sont différentes.

Les motifs du juge de première instance portent notamment, aux pp. 554 à 557 du Recueil des arrêts de la Cour fédérale:

Dans le cadre de son argumentation pour démontrer que les mots «avant le 17 février 1975» au paragraphe 29.1(1) et «après le 16 février 1975» au paragraphe 29.1(2) sont contraires aux principes de l'égalité devant la loi, le demandeur s'est fondé sur les arrêts suivants qu'il a cités: La Reine c. Drybones, [1970] R.C.S. 282;

[1972] S.C.R. 889; Attorney General of Canada v. Lavell, [1974] S.C.R. 1349; The Queen v. Burnshine, [1975] 1 S.C.R. 693; Prata v. Minister of Manpower and Immigration, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 376; Bliss v. The Attorney General of Canada, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 183; and MacKay v. The Queen, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 370.

All of these cases with the exception of the Bliss case, which dealt with entitlement to unemployment insurance benefits and where in fact the Canadian Bill of Rights was held not to apply, dealt with loss or denial of very substantive fundamental rights of some kind or involved criminal or quasi-criminal responsibility and had nothing to do with the mere quantum of remuneration for services rendered.

"Equality before the law" in the Canadian Bill of Rights has, since its enactment, been interpreted as understood by Dicey, namely, that there are no exemptions from the ordinary law of the land for any privileged class. As Ritchie J. stated in Curr v. The Queen, supra, at page 916:

> . . . I prefer to base this conclusion on my understanding that the meaning to be given to the language employed in the Bill of Rights is the meaning which it bore at the time when the Bill was enacted . . .

The trial judge then referred to and quoted reasons to the same effect written by Ritchie J. in Attorney General of Canada v. Lavell, [1974] S.C.R. 1349, including the second meaning proposed by Dicey for the principle of the "rule of law":

> It means again equality before the law or the equal subjection of all classes to the ordinary law of the land administered by the ordinary courts; the "rule of law" in this sense excludes the idea of any exemption of officials or others from the duty of obedience to the law which governs other citizens or from the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts.

The trial judge noted that these reasons of Ritchie J. had been quoted with approval by Martland J. speaking for the majority in R. v. Burnshine, [1975] 1 S.C.R. 693. The trial judge continued:

> Even section 3 of the Canadian Human Rights Act, S.C. 1976-1977, c. 33 which has been enacted since then (proclaimed in force on the 14th of July, 1977) and by means of which counsel for the plaintiff sought to draw an analogy with the Canadian Bill of Rights, does not Curr c. La Reine, [1972] R.C.S. 889; Le Procureur général du Canada c. Lavell, [1974] R.C.S. 1349; La Reine c. Burnshine, [1975] 1 R.C.S. 693; Prata c. Le Ministre de la Main-d'œuvre et de l'Immigration, [1976] 1 R.C.S. 376; Bliss c. Le procureur général du Canada, [1979] 1 R.C.S. 183; et MacKay c. La Reine, [1980] 2 R.C.S. 370.

À l'exception de l'affaire Bliss qui porte uniquement sur le droit de recevoir des prestations d'assurance-chômage et où il a été jugé que la Déclaration canadienne des droits ne s'appliquait pas, tous ces arrêts portent sur la perte ou la dénégation de divers droits fondamentaux très importants ou sur la responsabilité pénale ou quasi pénale et n'ont rien à voir avec le simple quantum de rémunération pour services rendus.

Le concept d'«égalité devant la loi» que l'on trouve dans la Déclaration canadienne des droits a, depuis son adoption, été interprété dans le sens où l'entendait Dicey, c'est-à-dire qu'aucune classe privilégiée n'est exempte de l'application du droit commun du pays. Voici ce que dit le juge Ritchie dans Curr c. La Reine, précité, à la page 916:

> . . . je préfère fonder ma conclusion sur le fait que, à mon avis, le sens des termes de la Déclaration des droits est le sens qu'ils avaient au Canada au moment de l'adoption de la Déclaration . . .

Le juge de première instance mentionne ensuite et cite les motifs dans le même sens rédigés par le juge Ritchie dans l'arrêt Procureur général du Canada c. Lavell, [1974] R.C.S. 1349, où il est question notamment du deuxième sens proposé par Dicey pour le principe de la «primauté du droit»:

> [TRADUCTION] Un autre sens est celui d'égalité devant la loi ou d'assujettissement égal de toutes les classes au droit commun du pays appliqué par les tribunaux ordinaires; la «primauté du droit», dans ce sens, exclut l'idée d'une exemption de fonctionnaires ou d'autres personnes du devoir d'obéissance à la loi auquel sont assujettis les autres citoyens, ou de la compétence des tribunaux ordinaires.

Le juge de première instance fait remarquer que ce passage du juge Ritchie avait été cité et approuvé par le juge Martland au nom de la Cour à la majorité dans l'arrêt R. c. Burnshine, [1975] 1 R.C.S. 693. Le juge de première instance poursuit:

> Même l'article 3 de la Loi canadienne sur les droits de la personne, S.C. 1976-77, chap. 33, qui a été adoptée depuis (promulguée le 14 juillet 1977), et que l'avocat du demandeur a cité pour tenter d'établir un parallèle entre cette loi et la Déclaration canadienne des droits, prohibit discrimination generally on grounds other than "race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, marital status, conviction for which a pardon has been granted and, in matters related to employment, physical handicap . . . . " It seems obvious that, in the case at bar, there exists no discrimination on any of the above-mentioned grounds.

Counsel for the plaintiff emphasized particularly the following statement of McIntyre J. in the MacKay case, supra, which is found at page 406 of the above-mentioned report:

> The question which must be resolved in each case is whether such inequality as may be created by legislation affecting a special class—here the military—is arbitrary, capricious or unnecessary, or whether it is rationally based and acceptable as a necessary variation from the general principle of universal application of law to meet special conditions and to attain a necessary and desirable social objective.

This statement, in my view, does not support the proposition advanced on behalf of the plaintiff. As Martland J. stated in delivering the judgment for the Supreme Court of Canada in the Prata case, supra, at page 382 of the above-cited report of the case:

> This Court has held that s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights does not require that all federal statutes must apply to all individuals in the same manner. Legislation dealing with a particular class of people is valid if it is enacted for the purpose of achieving a valid federal objective (R. v. Burnshine (1974), 44 D.L.R. (3d) 584).

Since I find that the plaintiff cannot succeed under paragraph 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights because the term "equality before the law" as used in that enactment does not refer and was never intended to refer to a question of equal pay for equal work, I shall refrain from dealing with the further answer advanced on behalf of the defendant to the effect that, even if "inequality" is found to exist, it in effect arises in the pursuit of a valid federal objective and that, in addition, the plaintiff has failed to discharge the onus of establishing that the requirement of making contributions is arbitrary, capricious or unnecessary.

To summarize the trial judge's reasons on this issue, as I understand them, s. 29.1 does not contravene the Canadian Bill of Rights because: first, s. 29.1 does not offend the kind of equality n'interdit que les distinctions illicites qui sont fondées sur «la race, l'origine nationale ou ethnique, la couleur, la religion, l'âge, le sexe, la situation de famille ou l'état de personne graciée et, en matière d'emploi, sur un handicap physique.» Il semble évident qu'en l'espèce, il n'existe aucune distinction illicite fondée sur un des motifs susmentionnés.

L'avocat du demandeur a insisté particulièrement sur les paroles suivantes du juge McIntyre dans l'arrêt MacKay, précité, que l'on trouve à la page 406 du recueil cité:

> La question à résoudre dans chaque cas est celle de savoir si l'inégalité qui peut être créée par la loi vis-à-vis d'une catégorie particulière—ici les militaires—est arbitraire, fantaisiste ou superflue, ou si elle a un fondement rationnel et acceptable en tant que dérogation nécessaire au principe général de l'application universelle de la loi pour faire face à des conditions particulières et atteindre un objectif social nécessaire et souhaitable.

Selon moi, ces paroles ne corroborent pas la proposition mise de l'avant pour le compte du demandeur. Comme le dit le juge Martland dans les motifs du jugement qu'il prononçait au nom de la Cour suprême du Canada dans l'arrêt Prata, précité, à la page 382 du recueil cité:

> Cette Cour a décidé que l'al. b) du par. (1) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits n'exige pas que toutes les lois fédérales doivent s'appliquer de la même manière à tous les individus. Une loi qui vise une catégorie particulière de personnes est valide si elle est adoptée en cherchant l'accomplissement d'un objectif fédéral régulier (R. v. Burnshine (1974), 44 D.L.R. (3d) 584).

Puisque je conclus qu'il ne peut être fait droit à la demande du demandeur en vertu de l'alinéa 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits parce que l'expression «égalité devant la loi» employée dans cette loi ne vise pas et n'a jamais été conçue pour viser des questions de salaire égal pour un travail égal, je n'examinerai pas la réponse soumise pour le compte de la défenderesse selon laquelle même si on concluait à l'existence d'une «inégalité», elle survient dans le cadre de mesures prises pour atteindre un objectif fédéral valable et que, en outre, le demandeur n'a pas réussi à prouver que l'exigence de verser des contributions est arbitraire, déraisonnable ou inutile.

Pour résumer, si je comprends bien, les motifs du juge de première instance sur cette question, l'art. 29.1 ne contrevient pas à la Déclaration canadienne des droits parce que: premièrement, defined by Dicey in the second meaning he gave to the rule of law; second, the provisions of the Canadian Bill of Rights cannot be held to apply to "the mere quantum of remuneration for services rendered" without trivializing these provisions. Furthermore, the trial judge may also have suggested as is indicated by his reference to the Canadian Human Rights Act, that discrimination is not prohibited by the Canadian Bill of Rights, except on specifically mentioned grounds.

In the Federal Court of Appeal, Thurlow C.J. speaking for himself and for Heald J. had this to say on the Canadian Bill of Rights issue, at pp. 1016-17 of the Federal Court Reports:

> The argument on the last-mentioned point, as I understood it, was that inequality before the law was created by the enactment because under it the respondent no longer enjoyed his right to salary without deductions for contributions to the same extent as other judges who held office before December 20, 1975. Reliance was placed on the reasoning of McIntyre J., in MacKay v. The Queen, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 370, at page 406, and it was said that there was no valid federal objective to be attained by discriminating on December 20, 1975 between judges appointed on or before and those appointed after February 16, 1975, and that to do so was arbitrary, capricious and unnecessary.
>
> . . .
>
> The submission is thus based on the assumption that the legislation is within the legislative powers of Parliament. On that basis it seems to me that it cannot be said that Parliament, in requiring judges to participate in and contribute to a contributory pension scheme, was not seeking to achieve a valid federal objective. Moreover, the distinction made in the statute between judges appointed before a fixed date, for whom non-contributory pension provisions were already in existence, and judges to be appointed after that date so as ultimately, by the attrition of senior appointees through deaths and resignations, the whole body of the judiciary would be participants in and contributors to the contributory pension scheme seems to me to be but a manner of achieving the otherwise valid federal objective. Difficulty arises from the fact that the particular date chosen was earlier than the date of the coming into force of the Act but, harsh as the result may seem to be to one who did l'art. 29.1 n'est pas contraire au type d'égalité défini par Dicey dans le deuxième sens qu'il a prêté à la «primauté du droit»; deuxièmement, on ne saurait, sans les banaliser, conclure que les dispositions de la Déclaration canadienne des droits s'appliquent au «simple quantum de rémunération pour services rendus». De plus, le juge de première instance a peut-être aussi laissé entendre, comme l'indique sa référence à la Loi canadienne sur les droits de la personne, que la Déclaration canadienne des droits n'interdit pas la discrimination, si ce n'est dans les cas expressément visés.

En Cour d'appel fédérale, le juge en chef Thurlow, s'exprimant en son propre nom et en celui du juge Heald, affirme ceci au sujet de la question de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, aux pp. 1016 et 1017 du Recueil des arrêts de la Cour fédérale:

> Le dernier argument, si j'ai bien compris, revenait à dire que l'adoption de la loi de 1975 avait eu pour effet de dénier à l'intimé son droit à l'égalité devant la loi parce qu'en vertu de ladite Loi, ce dernier ne perdait pas (sic) dans la même mesure que les juges qui occupaient leur poste avant le 20 décembre 1975 le droit de recevoir son traitement libre de retenue. L'intimé, s'appuyant sur le raisonnement du juge McIntyre dans l'arrêt MacKay c. La Reine, [1980] 2 R.C.S. 370, à la page 406, a allégué que le fait d'établir le 20 décembre 1975 une distinction entre les juges nommés le 16 février 1975 ou avant et ceux nommés après cette date ne visait pas un objectif fédéral valable et que le fait d'agir ainsi était arbitraire, déraisonnable et inutile.
>
> . . .
>
> L'argument est donc fondé sur l'hypothèse que le Parlement avait le pouvoir législatif nécessaire pour adopter ladite Loi. Il me semble donc qu'on ne peut affirmer que le Parlement ne cherchait pas à atteindre un objectif fédéral valable lorsqu'il a obligé les juges à contribuer à un régime de pensions à participation. En outre, la distinction qu'a établie la loi entre les juges nommés avant une date déterminée, en faveur desquels il existait déjà des dispositions prévoyant un régime de pensions sans participation, et les juges nommés après cette date, afin qu'ultimement, à la suite du décès ou de la démission des juges exempts, l'ensemble de la magistrature participe au régime de pensions à cotisation, m'apparaît comme un moyen d'atteindre un objectif fédéral valable. Le problème qui se pose découle du fait que la date choisie est antérieure à la date d'entrée en vigueur de la Loi mais, aussi injuste que puisse sembler le résultat à quiconque n'était pas au courant, contrairenot know, as opposed to one who did know when appointed, that a contributory scheme to be applicable to all judges appointed after the date of the introduction of the bill was to be imposed, I do not think it can on that account be said that it has been established, in the sense referred to by Ritchie J., in the same case (MacKay v. The Queen, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 370, at page 393, citing The Queen v. Burnshine, [1975] 1 S.C.R. 693), that the provisions of the bill, including the choice of the date, were not enacted for the purpose of achieving the valid federal objective or that it was arbitrary or capricious or unnecessary for Parliament to have defined the class required to make contributions by reference to their being appointed after the date of the introduction of the bill. Accordingly, I would reject the contention and dismiss the cross-appeal.

At pages 1035 and 1036 of the Federal Court Reports, Pratte J. agreed with Addy J. that the Dicey concept of equality before the law had not been offended by the impugned provision. He also agreed that the whole of s. 29.1 of the Judges Act has been enacted by Parliament for the purpose of achieving a valid federal objective.

In this Court, counsel for the appellant did not reply upon the reasons of the trial judge to support their submission that the second constitutional question should be answered in the negative. They relied essentially upon the reasons of Thurlow C.J. on this point. They quoted part of these reasons in their factum and amplified them as follows:

> The policy decision reflected in section 29.1 is that all federally funded and administered pension plans should be on a contributory basis, so that all those who might eventually receive retirement benefits from the Consolidated Revenue Fund will have contributed toward the cost of those benefits and thereby reduce the financial burden on future taxpayers. It is submitted that a decision to shift part of the costs of the plan to its beneficiaries cannot be considered arbitrary, capricious or unnecessary.

> If the policy that the beneficiary should contribute is not unreasonable it is submitted that the means chosen to implement that policy do not render it objectionable or invalid in relation to the right to equality before the law. Parliament could have chosen to impose a contribu-ment à celui qui le savait au moment de sa nomination, qu'un régime de pensions à cotisation s'imposerait à tous les juges nommés après la date de présentation du projet de loi, je ne crois pas que l'on puisse en déduire qu'il a été établi, au sens où l'entendait le juge Ritchie dans la même affaire (MacKay c. La Reine, [1980] 2 R.C.S. 370, à la page 393, citant La Reine c. Burnshine, [1975] 1 R.C.S. 693), que les dispositions du projet de loi, y compris le choix de la date, n'ont pas été adoptées en vue d'atteindre un objectif fédéral valable ou que le Parlement a agi de façon arbitraire, déraisonnable ou inutile en établissant que la catégorie de juges obligée de verser des contributions serait formée de juges ayant été nommés après la date de présentation du projet de loi. Je déclarerais donc l'argument irrecevable et rejetterais l'appel incident.

Aux pages 1035 et 1036 du Recueil des arrêts de la Cour fédérale, le juge Pratte s'accorde avec le juge Addy pour dire que la disposition attaquée ne contrevient pas au concept de l'égalité devant la loi énoncé par Dicey. Il est également d'accord pour soutenir que l'ensemble de l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges a été adopté par le Parlement afin de réaliser un objectif fédéral valable ou régulier.

En cette Cour, les avocats de l'appelante n'ont pas invoqué les motifs du juge de première instance pour étayer leur argument selon lequel la seconde question constitutionnelle doit recevoir une réponse négative. Sur ce point, ils se sont appuyés essentiellement sur les motifs du juge en chef Thurlow, qu'ils ont reproduits en partie dans leur mémoire, les étoffant de la manière suivante:

> [TRADUCTION] La décision de principe qui ressort de l'art. 29.1 porte que tous les régimes de retraite financés et administrés par le gouvernement fédéral doivent être des régimes avec participation des intéressés, de manière que toutes les personnes qui pourront éventuellement toucher des prestations de retraite à même le Fonds du revenu consolidé auront contribué au coût de ces prestations, réduisant ainsi le fardeau fiscal des futurs contribuables. Nous soutenons qu'on ne saurait qualifier d'arbitraire, de déraisonnable ou d'inutile une décision de faire assumer une partie des coûts du régime par ses propres bénéficiaires.
>
> À supposer que la politique voulant que le bénéficiaire soit tenu de contribuer ne soit pas déraisonnable, nous soutenons que les moyens retenus pour la mettre en œuvre ne la rendent ni inacceptable ni invalide par rapport au droit à l'égalité devant la loi. Le Parlement tory requirement at the full rate of 6½% and then 7% on all judges. However, it chose to protect the position of judges who were appointed prior to the introduction of the amending legislation and to phase in the contributory requirements progressively, by requiring contributions at the higher rate only from newly appointed judges. This progressive implementation of full contributions protected the legitimate expectations of the judges appointed prior to April [sic] 17, 1975, but it necessarily put them in a different position from that of judges appointed after the "trigger date" for the higher contributions.

While no submissions were made to us by counsel for the appellant with respect to the reasons of the trial judge on the Canadian Bill of Rights issue, I feel that these reasons should be addressed.

I first wish to dispel any suggestion that, in order to offend the Canadian Bill of Rights, a discriminatory provision must be discriminatory on some specifically mentioned ground such as race, national origin, colour, etc. The learned trial judge erred in this respect. In Curr v. The Queen, [1972] S.C.R. 889, Laskin J. as he then was, speaking for himself and six other members of the Court stated at pp. 896-97:

> In considering the reach of ... s. 1(b) ... I do not read it as making the existence of any of the forms of prohibited discrimination a sine qua non of its operation. Rather, the prohibited discrimination is an additional lever to which federal legislation must respond. Putting the matter another way, federal legislation which does not offend s. 1 in respect of any of the prohibited kinds of discrimination may nonetheless be offensive to s. 1 if it is violative of what is specified in any of the clauses (a) to (f) of s. 1. It is, a fortiori, offensive if there is discrimination by reason of race so as to deny equality before the law. That is what this Court decided in Regina v. Drybones and I need say no more on this point.

It is, therefore, not an answer to reliance by the appellant on ... s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights that [a particular provision] does not discriminate against any person by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex. The absence of such discrimination still leaves open the question whether [a particular aurait pu choisir d'imposer à tous les juges une obligation de contribuer au taux plein de 6,5 pour cent et puis de 7 pour cent. Il a toutefois décidé d'exempter les juges nommés avant le dépôt des dispositions modificatives et d'introduire progressivement l'obligation de contribuer en n'assujettissant au taux plus élevé que les juges nouvellement nommés. Cette introduction graduelle de la pleine participation protégeait les attentes légitimes des juges nommés avant le 17 avril (sic) 1975, mais elle les plaçait nécessairement dans une situation différente de celle des juges nommés après la date d'entrée en vigueur des contributions plus élevées.

Bien que les avocats de l'appelante ne nous aient adressé aucune observation concernant ce qu'a dit le juge de première instance relativement à la question de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, j'estime qu'il convient d'examiner cet aspect de ses motifs.

Écartons de prime abord l'idée que, pour enfreindre la Déclaration canadienne des droits, une disposition discriminatoire doit constituer une distinction illicite fondée sur un motif expressément mentionné, tel que la race, l'origine nationale, la couleur, etc. Le savant juge de première instance a commis une erreur à cet égard. Dans l'arrêt Curr c. La Reine, [1972] R.C.S. 889, le juge Laskin, alors juge puîné, s'exprimant en son propre nom et en celui de six autres membres de la Cour, affirme aux pp. 896 et 897:

> En ce qui concerne la portée [de l'alinéa] [...] (b) de l'art. 1 [...], je n'interprète pas cet article comme s'appliquant uniquement lorsque existe l'une ou l'autre forme de discrimination interdite. La discrimination interdite est plutôt une norme supplémentaire que la législation fédérale doit respecter. En d'autres termes, une loi fédérale qui ne viole pas l'article 1 en ce qui concerne l'un ou l'autre des genres interdits de discrimination, peut néanmoins le violer si elle porte atteinte à l'un des droits garantis par les alinéas (a) à (f) de l'art. 1. Elle constitue a fortiori une violation s'il y a discrimination en raison de la race d'une personne, de façon à priver celle-ci du droit à l'égalité devant la loi. C'est ce qu'a décidé cette Cour dans l'arrêt Regina c. Drybones; je n'ai rien d'autre à ajouter sur ce point.

Par conséquent, on ne saurait répondre à l'argument de l'appelant, fondé sur [l'alinéa] [...] (b) de l'art. 1 de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, en disant [qu'une disposition donnée] ne fait aucune distinction entre les particuliers en raison de leur race, de leur origine nationale, de leur couleur, de leur religion ou de leur sexe. En provision] can be construed and applied without abrogating, abridging or infringing the rights of the individual listed in . . . s. 1(b).

See also the Burnshine case, supra, at p. 700, and Bliss v. Attorney General of Canada, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 183, at p. 191.

As for the Diceyan concept of equality and the rule of law, perhaps its most classical application in Canadian jurisprudence was in Roncarelli v. Duplessis, [1959] S.C.R. 121, a case which antedates the Canadian Bill of Rights. It is true that this concept was sometimes adopted for the purposes of the Canadian Bill of Rights, but the early dicta in Curr and in Lavell, supra, to which Addy J. refers, do not represent the opinion of the majority of this Court in those cases. However, that concept was adopted by the majority of this Court in Burnshine, supra, although the extent to which the latter case turned on this adoption is not clear.

The adoption of Dicey's concept of equality for the purposes of the Canadian Bill of Rights was criticized in some doctrinal works. Dicey's concept of equality was said to be outdated, unduly narrow and otherwise inappropriate for the purposes of the Canadian Bill of Rights: W. S. Tarnopolsky, The Canadian Bill of Rights (2nd ed. 1975), pp. 120, 158 to 160, 297 and 298.

Of the five equality cases decided by this Court after the Burnshine case, supra, on the basis of the Canadian Bill of Rights that is, Attorney General of Canada v. Canard, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 170, Prata v. Minister of Manpower and Immigration, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 376, the Bliss case, supra, and MacKay v. The Queen, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 370, only one, the Bliss case, alludes to the Dicey concept of equality, at p. 192. But on the same page, Ritchie J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, mentioned a broader test applied by Pratte J. of the Federal Court of Appeal:

l'absence de pareille discrimination, il reste encore à déterminer si [une disposition donnée] peut s'interpréter et s'appliquer de manière à ne pas supprimer, restreindre ou enfreindre les droits mentionnés [à l'alinéa] [. . .] (b) de l'art. 1.

Voir aussi l'arrêt Burnshine, précité, à la p. 700, et l'arrêt Bliss c. Procureur général du Canada, [1979] 1 R.C.S. 183, à la p. 191.

Quant au concept de l'égalité et de la primauté du droit énoncé par Dicey, son application la plus classique dans la jurisprudence canadienne se trouve peut-être dans l'arrêt Roncarelli v. Duplessis, [1959] R.C.S. 121, qui a précédé la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Il est vrai que ce concept a parfois été adopté pour les fins de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, mais les premières opinions incidentes exprimées dans les arrêts Curr et Lavell, précités, auxquelles se réfère le juge Addy, ne représentent pas l'avis des juges formant la majorité de cette Cour dans ces affaires. Ce concept a toutefois été adopté par cette Cour à la majorité dans l'arrêt Burnshine, précité, quoiqu'il ne soit pas très clair dans quelle mesure cette adoption a pu y être déterminante.

L'adoption du concept de l'égalité de Dicey aux fins de la Déclaration canadienne des droits a été critiquée dans certains ouvrages de doctrine. On a dit que le concept de Dicey était désuet, trop étroit et par ailleurs inadéquat pour les fins de la Déclaration canadienne des droits: W. S. Tarnopolsky, The Canadian Bill of Rights (2nd ed. 1975), aux pp. 120, 158 à 160, 297 et 298.

Sur les cinq arrêts en matière d'égalité que cette Cour a rendus après l'arrêt Burnshine, précité, en se fondant sur la Déclaration canadienne des droits, savoir l'arrêt Procureur général du Canada c. Canard, [1976] 1 R.C.S. 170, l'arrêt Prata c. Ministre de la Main-d'œuvre et de l'Immigration, [1976] 1 R.C.S. 376, l'arrêt Bliss, précité, et l'arrêt MacKay c. La Reine, [1980] 2 R.C.S. 370, seul l'arrêt Bliss, à la p. 192, fait allusion au concept de l'égalité énoncé par Dicey. Mais, à la même page, le juge Ritchie, qui a prononcé le jugement de la Cour, mentionne un critère plus large appliqué par le juge Pratte de la Cour d'appel fédérale:

> ... the right to equality before the law could be defined as the right of an individual to be treated as well by the legislation as others who, if only relevant facts were taken into consideration, would be judged to be in the same situation.

Mr. Justice Pratte concluded that where difference in treatment of individuals is based on a relevant distinction, the right to equality before the law would not be offended.

Not only did Ritchie J. not disapprove this other test but, on p. 193, he proceeded to apply it to decide that the legislation challenged in that case did not offend the Canadian Bill of Rights. Furthermore, in the Canard case, supra, Ritchie J. with whom Martland and Judson JJ. agreed, in concurring reasons allowing the appeal, took at p. 191, at least in terms if not in the result, a much broader approach than the narrow Diceyan test:

> The Bill of Rights was designed to eradicate any discriminatory laws passed by the Parliament of Canada and to guarantee the rights and freedoms therein specified to all Canadian citizens, but these guarantees are expressly declared in the preamble to the Bill to be enacted so as to "reflect the respect of Parliament for its constitution", and s. 91(24) of that document clearly vests in the Parliament of Canada the authority to pass laws concerning Indians which are different from the laws which the provincial legislatures may enact concerning the citizens of the various provinces.

I accordingly think that this Court is not bound by the Dicey test of equality nor prevented from adopting a more egalitarian approach.

Finally I come to the trivialization point made by the trial judge to the effect that the Canadian Bill of Rights should not be applied to "the mere quantum of remuneration for services rendered" and "to a question of equal pay for equal work".

Before I do so however, I should perhaps define my position with respect to the characterization of the impugned enactment. The trial judge and Pratte J. dissenting, held that s. 29.1 of the Judges Act operated a reduction in the respondent's salary whereas Thurlow C.J., and as it seems, Heald J.,

> ... le droit à l'égalité devant la loi pourrait être défini comme le droit de l'individu d'être traité par la loi comme d'autres que l'on jugerait être dans la même situation, si l'on ne s'en tenait qu'à des faits pertinents.

Le juge Pratte conclut que lorsque la différence de traitement entre des individus repose sur une distinction pertinente, il n'y a pas d'atteinte au droit à l'égalité devant la loi.

Non seulement le juge Ritchie ne désapprouve-t-il pas cet autre critère, mais, à la p. 193, il l'applique pour décider que les dispositions législatives attaquées dans cette affaire ne violaient pas la Déclaration canadienne des droits. En outre, dans l'arrêt Canard, précité, à la p. 191, le juge Ritchie, à l'avis duquel ont souscrit les juges Martland et Judson, dans des motifs concordants accueillant le pourvoi, adopte, du moins en théorie sinon en pratique, un point de vue beaucoup plus large que le critère étroit de Dicey:

> La Déclaration des droits a pour but d'éliminer toutes les lois discriminatoires adoptées par le Parlement du Canada et de garantir à tous les citoyens canadiens les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés, mais le préambule de la Déclaration prévoit expressément que ces garanties doivent «respecter la compétence législative du Parlement du Canada», et l'art. 91(24) de la constitution confère clairement au Parlement du Canada l'autorité d'adopter à l'égard des Indiens des lois différentes de celles que les législatures provinciales peuvent adopter à l'égard des citoyens des différentes provinces.

Par conséquent, j'estime que cette Cour n'est pas liée par le critère d'égalité de Dicey et que rien ne l'empêche d'adopter un point de vue plus égalitaire.

Finalement, j'arrive à la question de la banalisation que soulève le juge de première instance selon lequel la Déclaration canadienne des droits ne devrait pas s'appliquer au «simple quantum de rémunération pour services rendus» et aux «questions de salaire égal pour un travail égal».

Toutefois, avant d'aborder cette question, je devrais peut-être définir ma position en ce qui a trait à la caractérisation de la mesure législative contestée. Le juge de première instance et le juge Pratte, dissident, ont conclu que l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges avait pour effet de réduire le held that the provision did not reduce the amount credited to the respondent as salary but forced him to contribute to a pension scheme. Given the form of s. 29.1, I am rather inclined to share the view of Thurlow C.J. on this point although, on the Canadian Bill of Rights issue, it does not matter whether the respondent suffered a reduction in salary or was forced to contribute to a pension scheme with a corresponding reduction of the amount actually paid to him as his salary.

In my view however, this case has nothing to do with the "equal pay for equal work" principle. It does have to do with money and the financial benefits attached to the respondent's office, but I think that the uneven distribution of financial benefits is quite capable of producing the type of inequality forbidden by s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. It was the entitlement of women to unemployment insurance benefits that was in issue in the Bliss case, supra, and nobody suggested that on that ground the case was incapable of or somehow unworthy of giving rise to arguable submissions advanced pursuant to the equality provisions of the Canadian Bill of Rights. More individuals were affected by the Bliss case, than by the case at bar. However, the amounts involved in the case at bar are considerably more substantial than those in the Bliss case.

Furthermore, the benefits involved in the case at bar represent an important incident attached to the status of a high judicial officer and are linked with the dignity of his office, in real as well as in symbolic terms. The following remarks written by Thurlow C.J. are apposite. They are indicative of the gravity of the issues raised by this case, and that is the sole reason I quote them. At pages 1024 and 1025 of the Federal Court Reports, the learned Chief Justice wrote:

> The commission issues upon appointment of a judge by the Governor General under the authority of section 96 and the provincial statute setting up the office. It traitement de l'intimé alors que le juge en chef Thurlow et, semble-t-il, le juge Heald ont conclu que la disposition ne réduit pas le montant crédité à l'intimé à titre de traitement, mais l'oblige plutôt à contribuer à un régime de retraite. Compte tenu de la forme de l'art. 29.1, je suis plutôt porté à partager l'opinion du juge en chef Thurlow sur ce point bien que, en ce qui a trait à la question de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, il n'importe pas de savoir si l'intimé a subi une réduction de traitement ou s'il a été forcé de contribuer à un régime de retraite en se voyant imposer une réduction correspondante du montant qui lui est réellement versé à titre de traitement.

À mon avis toutefois, l'espèce n'a rien à voir avec le principe du «salaire égal pour un travail égal». Elle porte sur l'argent et les avantages financiers qui se rattachent aux fonctions de l'intimé, mais je crois que la répartition inégale des avantages financiers peut très bien engendrer le genre d'inégalité qu'interdit l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits. C'est le droit des femmes aux prestations d'assurance-chômage qui était en cause dans l'arrêt Bliss, précité, et personne n'a laissé entendre que, pour ce motif, l'arrêt n'était pas susceptible ou ne permettait pas de quelque manière de soulever des arguments relatifs aux dispositions en matière d'égalité de la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Un plus grand nombre de personnes étaient touchées par l'arrêt Bliss, que ce n'est le cas dans la présente affaire. Toutefois, les montants visés en l'espèce sont beaucoup plus importants que ceux dont il est question dans l'arrêt Bliss.

En outre, les avantages visés en l'espèce représentent un accessoire important qui se rattache au statut d'un haut officier de justice et sont liés à la dignité de ses fonctions, tant sur le plan réel que sur le plan symbolique. Les observations suivantes du juge en chef Thurlow sont pertinentes. Elles font ressortir la gravité des questions soulevées en l'espèce et c'est la seule raison pour laquelle je les cite. Aux pages 1024 et 1025 du Recueil des arrêts de la Cour fédérale, le savant Juge en chef écrit:

> La commission du juge débute au moment de sa nomination par le gouverneur général en vertu du pouvoir conféré par l'article 96 et de la loi provinciale créant constitutes a grant both of the office with its authority and of the salary and other benefits attached by law at that time to the office as fixed by Parliament under section 99. The grant entitles the appointee to the salary so fixed in much the same way as a grant of money or land vests title to the money or the land in the grantee. It is something that cannot be taken from him except by due process of law. Due process may include expropriation by the authority of the legislature, but it is established principle that the legislature is not, in the absence of a clear expression of intent to the contrary, to be taken as intending to expropriate without due compensation. And a taking without compensation is extraordinary. It is something that Parliament, ordinarily at least, avoids. It is, in my view, the reason why, in a number of statutes relating to judges' salaries, provisions referred to as grandfather clauses to protect the position of incumbent judges have been included. But the fact they have been included is not in itself a basis for saying that Parliament does not have the legal power to expropriate without compensation or to take away rights that have been lawfully granted.

As Parliament has under section 100 the responsibility to fix and provide the salaries of judges, it seems to me that as a matter of interpretation of the language of the section Parliament must have a continuing power to fix such salaries and that that power is not restricted to the fixing of salaries for judges to be subsequently appointed. Plainly Parliament can increase the salaries of judges who are in office and it seems to me that as a matter of naked power it can also decrease them even though such decrease may be regarded by the incumbent judges as confiscatory and unjust and may be in substance a derogation from the grant lawfully made by the Governor General in the judge's commission.

Finally if, as I think, the impugned enactment contravenes s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights, it takes on an added dimension in that it treats unevenly judges who are expected to administer justice with an even hand. Furthermore, it emanates from the very Parliament which is the custodian of judges' independence. While the impugned enactment is not sufficiently severe to impair the independence of judges, it is one that tend to affect the serenity of those concerned for le poste. Par cette commission, le juge se voit octroyer le poste et les pouvoirs y afférents de même que le traitement et les autres avantages fixés par le Parlement en vertu de l'article 99. Le titulaire de la commission acquiert en vertu de cette dernière le droit au traitement ainsi fixé, un peu de la même façon que le cessionnaire d'une somme d'argent ou d'un bien-fonds acquiert le droit de propriété qui s'y rapporte. C'est là quelque chose qu'on ne peut lui retirer sauf par l'application régulière de la loi. L'application régulière de la loi peut prendre la forme de procédures d'expropriation prises par une assemblée législative. Toutefois, suivant un principe reconnu, l'assemblée législative n'est pas, en l'absence d'une disposition expresse au contraire, présumée exproprier sans indemnité appropriée. D'ailleurs, une expropriation sans indemnisation est exceptionnelle. C'est une situation que le Parlement cherche à éviter, du moins normalement. Voilà pourquoi à mon avis on a inséré dans plusieurs lois relatives au traitement des juges des clauses [préservant le statu quo] afin de sauvegarder la position des juges titulaires. Cependant, l'existence de ces clauses ne suffit pas en elle-même pour affirmer que le Parlement n'a pas le pouvoir légal d'exproprier sans indemniser ou de retirer des droits qui avaient été conférés dans le respect de la loi.

Comme le Parlement a, en vertu de l'article 100, la responsabilité de fixer et de payer les traitements des juges, il me semble que, suivant l'interprétation que je donne du libellé de cet article, le Parlement doit avoir un pouvoir continu de fixer ces traitements et que ce pouvoir ne se limite pas uniquement à la fixation des traitements des juges au moment de leur nomination. Manifestement, le Parlement peut hausser les traitements des juges qui sont déjà nommés et il me semble tout aussi évident que, théoriquement, rien ne l'empêche de les réduire même si un tel geste pourrait prendre aux yeux des juges titulaires l'allure d'une confiscation et d'une injustice et qu'il pourrait même constituer en substance une dérogation aux avantages légalement consentis par le gouverneur général dans la commission du juge.

Finalement si, comme je le crois, la mesure législative attaquée contrevient à l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, elle prend une autre dimension en ce qu'elle traite inégalement les juges qui sont censés administrer la justice d'une manière équitable. En outre, elle émane du même Parlement qui est le gardien de l'indépendance des juges. Bien que la mesure législative contestée ne soit pas suffisamment grave pour nuire à l'indépendance des juges, il n'en demeure the rest of their term of office. Judges may be expected to rise above such considerations but it is difficult to see how it could be conducive to the better administration of justice that they should be put to the test.

I now turn to the "valid federal objective" argument retained by the majority of the Federal Court of Appeal and advanced by the appellant in support of the impugned enactment.

Relying on the authority of Burnshine, supra, at pp. 707 and 708, and of Bliss, supra, at p. 194, the appellant submits that the onus lies with the respondent to demonstrate that a valid federal objective was not being sought by Parliament. The extent to which this onus is of an evidentiary or of a persuasive nature, and whether this onus, whatever its weight, can be discharged by inferences drawn from the impugned legislation, are questions which may ultimately require clarification. I should have thought that where a challenged provision prima facie offends against the principle of equality before the law and does so for reasons which neither appear on its face nor can be inferred from its nature, then it would be incumbent upon the Attorney General, who is in a much better position to do so, to demonstrate what valid objective was being sought by the legislation.

Be that as it may, the question of onus does not really arise in the case at bar since I am quite prepared to accept that s. 29.1 of the Judges Act was enacted by Parliament in the pursuit of a valid federal objective, as was held by the Federal Court of Appeal and as is submitted by the appellant.

Paraphrasing the above-quoted reasons of Thurlow C.J. and the submissions of the appellant, I would describe the valid federal objective in question as follows: the policy decision reflected in s. 29.1 of the Judges Act is that judges' pension plans should be on a contributory basis in order to reduce the financial burden on future taxpayers; pas moins qu'elle tend à avoir un effet sur la sérénité de ceux qui sont visés pour le reste de la durée de leurs fonctions. On peut s'attendre à ce que les juges soient au-dessus de telles considérations, mais il est difficile de voir comment le fait de les confronter à une telle situation pourrait entraîner une meilleure administration de la justice.

J'examine maintenant l'argument de l'«objectif fédéral valable» retenu par la Cour d'appel fédérale à la majorité et présenté par l'appelante à l'appui de la mesure législative contestée.

En se fondant sur les arrêts Burnshine, précité, aux pp. 707 et 708, et Bliss, précité, à la p. 194, l'appelante soutient qu'il incombe à l'intimé de démontrer que le Parlement ne cherchait pas à atteindre un objectif fédéral valable ou régulier. La mesure dans laquelle ce fardeau en est un de preuve ou de persuasion et la question de savoir si on peut s'en acquitter, peu importe son poids, au moyen de déductions tirées de la mesure législative contestée, constituent des questions qu'il peut finalement être nécessaire de clarifier. J'aurais pensé que lorsqu'une disposition attaquée contrevient à première vue au principe de l'égalité devant la loi et qu'elle le fait pour des raisons qui ne sont pas manifestes à sa lecture même ou qui ne peuvent être déduites de sa nature, il incomberait alors au procureur général, qui est dans une bien meilleure position pour le faire, de montrer quel objectif valable ou régulier la mesure législative visait à atteindre.

Quoi qu'il en soit, la question du fardeau ne se pose pas vraiment en l'espèce étant donné que je suis tout à fait prêt à admettre que l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges a été adopté par le Parlement en vue d'atteindre un objectif fédéral valable, comme l'a conclu la Cour d'appel fédérale et comme le soutient l'appelante.

Pour paraphraser les motifs précités du juge en chef Thurlow et les arguments de l'appelante, je décrirais ainsi l'objectif fédéral valable en question: la décision de principe qui ressort de l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges porte que les régimes de retraite des juges devraient être des régimes avec participation des intéressés de manière à Parliament chose to phase in the contributory requirement, by requiring contributions at the higher rate only from newly appointed judges so that, through the attrition of senior appointees as a result of death and resignations, the whole body of the judiciary would eventually participate in the contributory scheme.

To repeat, I am prepared to accept that the above-mentioned federal objective is a valid one.

What I am not prepared to agree with, on the other hand, with great respect for those who hold a contrary view, is that the manner or means chosen to achieve this valid federal objective, which manner or means themselves establish a new classification and discriminate between incumbent judges, should be immunized from the principle of universal application of the law. So to dispense altogether such manner or means from the equality provision of the Canadian Bill of Rights would have the effect of emasculating this provision; in my view, it is in part to guard against this danger that McIntyre J., writing for himself and for Dickson J., as he then was, wrote his concurring reasons in the MacKay case, supra. I find it appropriate to quote a substantial portion of those reasons. The main issue in that case was set out in these words at p. 401:

> Whether the provisions of the National Defence Act which authorize the trial by a service tribunal of military personnel charged with criminal offences committed in Canada contrary to the Narcotic Control Act or the Criminal Code are inoperable by reason of the Canadian Bill of Rights.

At page 402, McIntyre J. dealt with the historical background of military law and, at pp. 403 to 405, with the application of s. 2(f) of the Canadian Bill of Rights to the facts of that case. Then, at pp. 405 and following, McIntyre J. dealt with the application of s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights:

> The appellant's second point raises the question of whether the trial of servicemen by court martial under military law for an offence under the criminal law of réduire le fardeau financier des futurs contribuables; le Parlement a choisi d'introduire progressivement l'exigence de la participation en demandant seulement aux juges nouvellement nommés de contribuer au taux plus élevé de manière que, par suite du décès et de la démission des juges exempts, l'ensemble de la magistrature participe éventuellement au régime de retraite avec participation.

Encore une fois, je suis prêt à admettre que l'objectif fédéral susmentionné est valable ou régulier.

Par ailleurs, ce que je ne suis pas prêt à admettre, avec beaucoup d'égards pour les tenants du point de vue contraire, c'est que la manière ou les moyens choisis pour atteindre cet objectif fédéral valable, lesquels établissent eux-mêmes une nouvelle classification et une distinction injuste entre les juges en fonction, devraient être soustraits au principe de l'application universelle de la loi. Le fait de soustraire cette manière ou ces moyens à l'application de la disposition en matière d'égalité de la Déclaration canadienne des droits aurait pour effet d'affaiblir cette disposition; à mon avis, c'est en partie pour prévenir ce danger que le juge McIntyre a rédigé, en son propre nom et en celui du juge Dickson, alors juge puîné, ses motifs concordants dans l'arrêt MacKay, précité. J'estime qu'il est approprié de citer une partie importante de ces motifs. La question principale dans cet arrêt a été énoncée en ces termes à la p. 401:

> Les dispositions de la Loi sur la défense nationale, qui autorisent le procès du personnel militaire accusé d'infractions criminelles commises au Canada en violation de la Loi sur les stupéfiants ou du Code criminel devant des tribunaux militaires, sont-elles inopérantes en raison de la Déclaration canadienne des droits?

À la page 402, le juge McIntyre traite du fondement historique du droit militaire et, aux pp. 403 à 405, de l'application de l'al. 2*f*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits aux faits de l'espèce. Ensuite, aux pp. 405 et suiv., le juge McIntyre traite de l'application de l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits:

> Le deuxième moyen de l'appelant soulève la question de savoir si le fait que les militaires sont jugés par une cour martiale conformément au droit militaire pour une

Canada or as here under the Narcotic Control Act deprives the serviceman of equality before the law contrary to the provisions of s. 1(b) and s. 2 of the Canadian Bill of Rights.

This Court decided in Regina v. Drybones, [1970] S.C.R. 282, that the Canadian Bill of Rights was effective to render inoperative validly enacted federal legislation where such legislation infringed the right of a subject to equality before the law. Judicial construction of the words "equality before the law" found in such cases as The Queen v. Burnshine, [1975] 1 S.C.R. 693, Prata v. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 376, and Bliss v. A.G. Canada, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 183, has advanced the proposition that legislation passed by Parliament does not offend against the principle of equality before the law if passed in pursuance of a "valid federal objective". The significance of these words must be examined.

Prior to the passing of the Canadian Bill of Rights, Parliament could have passed in the exercise of its power under s. 91(7) of the British North America Act without restriction such legislation in respect of the governance and control of the armed forces as it wished. The Canadian Bill of Rights, however, has introduced another dimension and federal legislation must now be construed according to its precepts. Certainly the creation and maintenance of the armed forces of the land constitute a valid federal objective within the legislative competence of the federal Parliament. A valid federal objective, however, must mean something more than an objective which simply falls within the federal legislative competence under the British North America Act. Even in the absence of the Canadian Bill of Rights, a federal enactment could not be supported constitutionally if it did not embody such an objective. The word "valid" in this context must import a concept of validity not only within the field of constitutional legislative competence but also valid in the sense that it does not offend the Canadian Bill of Rights. Our task then is to determine whether in pursuit of an admittedly constitutional federal objective Parliament has, contrary to the provisions of the Canadian Bill of Rights, created for those subject to military law a condition of inequality before the law.

It seems to me that it is incontestable that Parliament has the power to legislate in such a way as to affect one group or class in society as distinct from another without any necessary offence to the Canadian Bill of Rights. The problem arises however when we attempt to determine infraction au droit criminel canadien ou, comme en l'espèce, à la Loi sur les stupéfiants, les prive de l'égalité devant la loi en violation de l'al. 1*b*) et de l'art. 2 de la Déclaration canadienne des droits.

Dans l'arrêt La Reine c. Drybones, [1970] R.C.S. 282, cette Cour a décidé que la Déclaration canadienne des droits rendait inopérante une loi fédérale validement adoptée lorsque celle-ci violait le droit d'un citoyen à l'égalité devant la loi. L'interprétation prétorienne de l'expression «égalité devant la loi» que l'on trouve dans des arrêts comme La Reine c. Burnshine, [1975] 1 R.C.S. 693; Prata c. Le ministre de la Main-d'oeuvre et de l'Immigration, [1976] 1 R.C.S. 376; et Bliss c. Le Procureur général du Canada, [1979] 1 R.C.S. 183, a avancé la proposition qu'une loi adoptée par le Parlement ne contrevient pas au principe de l'égalité devant la loi si elle est adoptée en cherchant l'accomplissement d'un «objectif fédéral régulier». Il faut examiner le sens de cette expression.

Avant l'adoption de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, le Parlement aurait pu, dans l'exercice du pouvoir que lui confère le par. 91(7) de l'Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, adopter sans restriction toute loi relative à l'administration et à la réglementation des forces armées. Cependant, la Déclaration canadienne des droits a introduit une autre dimension et il faut maintenant interpréter les lois fédérales conformément à ses préceptes. La création et le maintien des forces armées du pays constituent sans aucun doute un objectif fédéral régulier relevant de la compétence du Parlement fédéral. Un objectif fédéral régulier doit cependant signifier plus qu'un objectif qui relève simplement de la compétence législative fédérale en vertu de l'Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique. Même en l'absence de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, une loi fédérale serait inconstitutionnelle si elle ne visait pas pareil objectif. Le terme «régulier» dans ce contexte doit introduire un concept de validité non seulement dans le champ de compétence législative constitutionnelle mais aussi de validité dans le sens de respect de la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Notre tâche consiste donc à déterminer si, dans la poursuite d'un objectif fédéral dont on ne conteste pas la constitutionnalité, le Parlement a, contrairement aux dispositions de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, créé pour les personnes assujetties au droit militaire une situation d'inégalité devant la loi.

Il me paraît incontestable que le Parlement a le pouvoir de légiférer de façon à viser un groupe ou une catégorie de la société plutôt qu'un autre sans nécessairement enfreindre pour autant la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Le problème se soulève cependant mine an acceptable basis for the definition of such a separate class, and the nature of the special legislation involved. Equality in this context must not be synonymous with mere universality of application. There are many differing circumstances and conditions affecting different groups which will dictate different treatment. The question which must be resolved in each case is whether such inequality as may be created by legislation affecting a special class—here the military—is arbitrary, capricious or unnecessary, or whether it is rationally based and acceptable as a necessary variation from the general principle of universal application of law to meet special conditions and to attain a necessary and desirable social objective.

There are many such acceptable distinctions recognized in the law. If we are to have safety on the highways, the blind or those with deficient sight must be forbidden to drive. If young people and children are to be protected and their welfare fostered in youth, we have long recognized that special legislative provisions must be made for them imposing restrictions and limitations upon their freedom more stringent than upon adults. In matters of criminology, differences which have been considered conductive to the welfare of society and to young offenders have been considered permissible (see Regina v. Burnshine, supra). There are many such cases where the needs of society and the welfare of its members dictate inequality for the achievement of socially desirable purposes. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to propound an all-embracing test to determine what departures from the general principle of the equal application of law would be acceptable to meet a desirable social purpose without offence to the Canadian Bill of Rights. I would be of the opinion, however, that as a minimum it would be necessary to inquire whether any inequality has been created for a valid federal constitutional objective, whether it has been created rationally in the sense that it is not arbitrary or capricious and not based upon any ulterior motive or motives offensive to the provisions of the Canadian Bill of Rights, and whether it is a necessary departure from the general principle of universal application of the law for the attainment of some necessary and desirable social objective. Inequalities created for such purposes may well be acceptable under the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Applying this test, it seems to me that the creation of a body of military law and the tribunals necessary for its administration, involving as a necessary incident thereto different treatment at law for servicemen in certain cases from that afforded to civilians, does not by itself lorsque l'on tente d'établir un fondement acceptable à la définition de ces catégories distinctes, et la nature de la loi particulière en cause. Dans ce contexte, égalité ne doit pas être synonyme de simple application universelle. Bien des circonstances et conditions différentes touchent des groupes différents ce qui dicte des traitements différents. La question à résoudre dans chaque cas est celle de savoir si l'inégalité qui peut être créée par la loi vis-à-vis d'une catégorie particulière—ici les militaires—est arbitraire, fantaisiste ou superflue, ou si elle a un fondement rationnel et acceptable en tant que dérogation nécessaire au principe général de l'application universelle de la loi pour faire face à des conditions particulières et atteindre un objectif social nécessaire et souhaitable.

Le droit reconnaît de nombreuses distinctions acceptables de cette sorte. Pour la sécurité sur les routes, il faut interdire aux aveugles ou aux personnes dont la vue est insuffisante de conduire. Pour protéger les adolescents et les enfants et favoriser leur bien-être, il est depuis longtemps reconnu qu'il faut adopter à leur égard des dispositions législatives particulières qui imposent à leur liberté des restrictions et des limites plus sévères que celles imposées aux adultes. En criminologie, on a décidé que des distinctions considérées comme favorables au bien-être de la société et des jeunes délinquants sont jugées admissibles (voir La Reine c. Burnshine, précité). Les cas sont légions où les besoins de la société et le bien-être de ses membres exigent une inégalité pour l'accomplissement d'objectifs socialement souhaitables. Il serait difficile, sinon impossible, d'énoncer un critère exhaustif qui déterminerait quelles dérogations au principe général de l'application égale de la loi seraient acceptables pour satisfaire un objectif social souhaitable sans contrevenir à la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Je suis d'avis, cependant, qu'au minimum, il faudrait se demander si l'on a créé l'inégalité en cherchant l'accomplissement d'un objectif fédéral constitutionnel et régulier, si elle a été créée rationnellement en ce sens qu'elle n'est ni arbitraire ni fantaisiste et ne tire son origine d'aucun motif inavoué ou contraire aux dispositions de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, et s'il s'agit d'une dérogation nécessaire au principe général de l'application universelle de la loi dans la recherche d'un objectif social nécessaire et souhaitable. Il se peut bien que les inégalités créées à ces fins soient acceptables aux termes de la Déclaration canadienne des droits.

Si l'on applique ce critère, il me semble que la création d'un droit militaire et des tribunaux que requiert son application, ce qui implique nécessairement que, dans certains cas, le traitement juridique des militaires sera différent de celui des civils, ne constitue pas en soi constitute a denial of equality before the law contrary to the provisions of the Canadian Bill of Rights. It is apparent that the creation of military law and its courts was undertaken in pursuit of a constitutional federal objective. It has been done in my view rationally, not arbitrarily or capriciously, and no ulterior motive has been shown which could be construed as an assault upon any of the rights, liberties and freedoms protected by the Canadian Bill of Rights. It seems abundantly clear to me that the emergence of a body of military law with its judicial tribunals has been made necessary because of the peculiar problems which face the military in the performance of its varied tasks. In my opinion, the recognition of the military as a class within society in respect of which special legislation exists dealing with legal rights and remedies, including special courts and methods of trial, fulfilling as it does a socially desirable objective, does not offend the Canadian Bill of Rights.

It must not however be forgotten that, since the principle of equality before the law is to be maintained, departures should be countenanced only where necessary for the attainment of desirable social objectives, and then only to the extent necessary in the circumstances to make possible the attainment of such objectives. The needs of the military must be met but the departure from the concept of equality before the law must not be greater than is necessary for those needs. The principle which should be maintained is that the rights of the serviceman at civil law should be affected as little as possible considering the requirements of military discipline and the efficiency of the service. With this concept in mind, I turn to the situation presented in this case.

Section 2 of the National Defence Act defines a service offence as "an offence under this Act, the Criminal Code, or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada, committed by a person while subject to the Code of Service Discipline". The Act also provides that such offences will be triable and punishable under military law. If we are to apply the definition of service offence literally, then all prosecutions of servicemen for any offences under any penal statute of Canada could be conducted in military courts. In a country with a well-established judicial system serving all parts of the country in which the prosecution of criminal offences and the constitution of courts of criminal jurisdiction is the responsibility of the provincial governments, I find it impossible to accept the proposition that the legitimate needs of the military extend so far. It is not necessary for the attainment of any socially desirable objective connected with the military service to extend the reach of the military courts to that extent. It may well be said that the military courts will not, as a matter of practice, un déni d'égalité devant la loi contraire aux dispositions de la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Il est clair que la création d'un droit militaire et de tribunaux s'est faite dans le cadre de l'accomplissement d'un objectif fédéral constitutionnel. À mon avis, cela s'est fait rationnellement, sans arbitraire ni caprice, et l'on n'a établi aucun motif inavoué pouvant s'interpréter comme une atteinte à un droit ou à une liberté protégés par la Déclaration canadienne des droits. Il me paraît très clair que l'apparition du droit et des tribunaux militaires est la suite logique des problèmes particuliers que rencontrent les militaires dans l'accomplissement de leurs diverses tâches. Il est socialement souhaitable de reconnaître que les militaires forment une catégorie au sein de la société à l'égard de laquelle existent des lois particulières relatives aux droits et recours, y compris des tribunaux et des procédures particuliers, ce qui, à mon avis, ne contrevient pas à la Déclaration canadienne des droits.

Il ne faut cependant pas oublier que, puisqu'on doit respecter le principe de l'égalité devant la loi, on ne peut y déroger que lorsque cela est nécessaire pour accomplir des objectifs socialement souhaitables et, dans ce cas, seulement dans la mesure nécessaire pour y parvenir dans les circonstances. Il faut répondre aux besoins des forces armées, mais l'on ne doit pas déroger au principe de l'égalité devant la loi plus que cela n'est nécessaire. Le principe à respecter est celui de l'intervention la plus minime possible dans les droits d'un soldat en vertu du droit commun compte tenu des exigences de la discipline militaire et de l'efficacité des forces armées. Avec ce concept à l'esprit, je passe maintenant à la situation présente.

L'article 2 de la Loi sur la défense nationale définit une infraction militaire comme «une infraction visée par la présente loi, par le Code criminel ou par toute autre loi du Parlement du Canada, et commise par une personne pendant son assujettissement au Code de discipline militaire». La Loi porte également que ces infractions pourront faire l'objet de poursuites et de sanctions conformément au droit militaire. Si nous appliquons littéralement la définition d'infraction militaire, toutes poursuites contre des militaires pour toute infraction à toute loi pénale canadienne pourraient être menées devant des tribunaux militaires. Dans un pays doté d'un système judiciaire bien établi desservant toutes les régions du pays et où la poursuite des infractions criminelles et la constitution des tribunaux de juridiction criminelle incombent aux gouvernements provinciaux, il m'est impossible d'accepter la thèse que les besoins légitimes des forces armées aillent aussi loin. Pour atteindre un objectif socialement souhaitable relié à la vie militaire, il n'est pas nécessaire d'étendre autant la seek to extend their jurisdiction over the whole field of criminal law as it affects the members of the armed services. This may well be so, but we are not concerned here with the actual conduct of military courts. Our problem is one of defining the limits of their jurisdiction and in my view it would offend against the principle of equality before the law to construe the provisions of the National Defence Act so as to give this literal meaning to the definition of a service offence. The all-embracing reach of the questioned provisions of the National Defence Act goes far beyond any reasonable or required limit.

. . .

It is of course evident that there are many matters peculiar to the military which require a special code and special courts. I refer to what I would describe as specifically military offences, such as absence without leave, desertion, insubordination, failure to observe and comply with military regulations regarding care and handling and use of military store and equipment, failure to obey lawful commands of officers and a host of other matters dealt with in the National Defence Act which relate to service matters and concerns and which require special military rules and procedures. These form part of the proper field of military law and military courts. There are, in addition, other offences which, while offences under the civil law, are also, when committed by servicemen in relation to military service, properly to be considered within the scope of the military courts. Theft is a criminal offence punishable in the civil courts but it would, I suggest, be impossible to say that theft by one soldier from another in barracks is not as well an offence which could be categorized as a military offence and come within the purview of military law. The same is true of trafficking or possession of forbidden narcotics in barracks, the same is true of many other matters and the military courts must have power to deal with them in addition to those offences which could be categorized as military offences pure and simple.

The question then arises: how is a line to be drawn separating the service-related or military offence from the offence which has no necessary connection with the service? In my view, an offence which would be an offence at civil law, when committed by a civilian, is as well an offence falling within the jurisdiction of the courts martial and within the purview of military law when committed by a serviceman if such offence is so compétence des tribunaux militaires. On peut bien dire qu'en pratique, les tribunaux militaires ne chercheront pas à étendre leur compétence au champ entier du droit pénal applicable aux membres des forces armées. C'est peut-être bien le cas, mais nous n'avons pas à examiner la conduite des tribunaux militaires dans les faits. Notre problème consiste à définir les limites de leur compétence et, à mon avis, ce serait contrevenir au principe de l'égalité devant la loi que d'interpréter les dispositions de la Loi sur la défense nationale de façon à donner ce sens littéral à la définition d'infraction militaire. La portée exhaustive des dispositions en cause de la Loi sur la défense nationale dépasse toute limite raisonnable ou nécessaire.

. . .

Certes, il est évident qu'il y a plusieurs questions particulières aux forces armées qui exigent un code particulier et des tribunaux particuliers. Je pense aux infractions que je qualifierais de proprement militaires, comme l'absence sans permission, la désertion, l'insubordination, le non-respect des règlements militaires relatifs au soin et à la manutention du matériel et de l'équipement militaires, le défaut d'obéir aux ordres licites des officiers et de nombreuses autres questions visées par la Loi sur la défense nationale, qui sont reliées aux problèmes et préoccupations des forces armées et qui exigent des règles et des procédures militaires particulières. Il s'agit là de questions qui relèvent à bon droit de la compétence du droit militaire et des tribunaux militaires. Il y a en outre des infractions qui, bien qu'elles constituent des infractions de droit commun, doivent également relever des tribunaux militaires lorsqu'elles sont commises par des soldats dans le cadre de leur activité militaire. Le vol est une infraction criminelle punissable par les tribunaux civils, mais, à mon avis, il est impossible de dire que lorsqu'un soldat en vole un autre dans une caserne, on ne peut pas également qualifier cette infraction d'infraction militaire relevant du droit militaire. On peut dire la même chose du trafic ou de la possession de stupéfiants prohibés dans une caserne et de nombreuses autres questions; les tribunaux militaires doivent avoir le pouvoir de les juger en plus des infractions que l'on pourrait qualifier d'infractions militaires pures et simples.

La question se pose donc ainsi: comment tracer la ligne de démarcation entre les infractions militaires ou reliées aux forces armées et celles qui n'y sont pas nécessairement reliées. À mon avis, une infraction qui constitue une infraction de droit commun, si elle est commise par un civil, est également une infraction relevant de la compétence des cours martiales et du droit militaire si elle est commise par un soldat, lorsque cette connected with the service in its nature, and in the circumstances of its commission, that it would tend to affect the general standard of discipline and efficiency of the service. I do not consider it wise or possible to catalogue the offences which could fall into this category or try to describe them in their precise nature and detail. The question of jurisdiction to deal with such offences would have to be determined on a case-by-case basis. A serviceman charged in a service court who wished to challenge the jurisdiction of the military court on this basis could do so on a preliminary motion. It seems, by way of illustration, that a case of criminal negligence, causing death resulting from the operation of a military vehicle by a serviceman in the course of his duty, would come within the jurisdiction of the court martial, while the same accident, occurring while the serviceman was driving his own vehicle on leave and away from his military base or any other military establishment, would clearly not. It may be observed that, on an admittedly different constitutional basis, this approach has been taken in American courts where a possible conflict of jurisdiction has arisen between the military tribunals and the civil courts.

I would therefore hold that the provisions of the National Defence Act, in so far as they confer jurisdiction upon courts martial to try servicemen in Canada for offences which are offences under the penal statutes of Canada for which civilians might also be tried, and where the commission and nature of such offences has no necessary connection with the service, in the sense that their commission does not tend to affect the standards of efficiency and discipline of the service, are inoperative as being contrary to the Canadian Bill of Rights in that they create inequality before the law for the serviceman involved.

Turning to the case at bar, I have no difficulty in holding that the offences here under consideration are sufficiently connected with the service to come within the jurisdiction of the military courts. Trafficking and possession of narcotics, in a military establishment, can have no other tendency than to attack the standards of discipline and effeciency of the service and must clearly come within the jurisdiction of the military courts and I would , therefore, dismiss the appeal.

I adopt the above-quoted reasons in MacKay, supra.

The test which is emphasized throughout those reasons is that of the necessity of a specific discrimination with respect to the attainment of a desirable social objective:

infraction est, par sa nature et par les circonstances de sa perpétration, à ce point reliée à la vie militaire qu'elle serait susceptible d'influer sur le niveau général de discipline et d'efficacité des forces armées. Je ne crois pas qu'il soit sage, ni possible, d'énumérer les infractions qui entrent dans cette catégorie ou d'essayer de les décrire en détail. Il faut décider dans chaque cas s'il y a compétence sur ces infractions. Un soldat inculpé devant un tribunal militaire et qui désire en contester la compétence pour ce motif pourra le faire par une requête préliminaire. À titre d'exemple, si par la mise en service d'un véhicule militaire, un soldat dans l'exercice de ses fonctions tue quelqu'un, ce cas de négligence criminelle relèvera de la compétence de la cour martiale, alors que si le même accident se produit quand le soldat conduit son propre véhicule pendant une permission et hors de sa base militaire ou de toute autre installation militaire, il en sera clairement exclu. On peut faire remarquer que, bien que sur un fondement constitutionnel différent, les tribunaux américains ont adopté cette façon de voir dans le cas de conflit de juridiction possible entre les tribunaux militaires et les tribunaux civils.

Je suis donc d'avis que lorsque les dispositions de la Loi sur la défense nationale confèrent aux cours martiales compétence pour juger des soldats au Canada pour des infractions qui constituent des infractions aux lois pénales canadiennes pour lesquelles des civils pourraient également être poursuivis, et lorsque ni la perpétration ni la nature de ces infractions ne sont nécessairement reliées aux forces armées, en ce sens qu'elles ne tendent pas à influer sur les niveaux d'efficacité et de discipline des forces armées, elles sont inopérantes parce que contraires à la Déclaration canadienne des droits, puisqu'elles créent pour le militaire en cause une inégalité devant la loi.

En l'espèce, je n'ai aucune difficulté à conclure que les infractions en cause sont suffisamment reliées à la vie militaire pour relever de la compétence des tribunaux militaires. Le trafic et la possession de stupéfiants, sur une base militaire, ne peuvent avoir d'autre effet que de porter atteinte aux niveaux de discipline et d'efficacité des forces armées et doivent de toute évidence relever de la compétence des tribunaux militaires et, par conséquent, je suis d'avis de rejeter le pourvoi.

Je fais miens les motifs de l'arrêt MacKay, précité, que je viens de reproduire.

Le critère qui ressort de ces motifs veut que la nécessité d'établir une distinction précise soit en vue d'atteindre un objectif social souhaitable:

The question which must be resolved in each case is whether such inequality as may be created by legislation affecting a special class ... is arbitrary, capricious or unnecessary, or whether it is rationally based and acceptable as a necessary variation from the general principle of universal application of law to meet special conditions and to attain a necessary and desirable social objective.

(Emphasis added.)

Furthermore, the test is all the more exacting in that it includes an essential element of proportionality; even where variation from the principle of universal application of the law is justified, the principle cannot be tampered with to a degree or to an extent which goes beyond what is necessary to reach a desirable social objective:

... since the principle of equality before the law is to be maintained, departures should be countenanced only where necessary for the attainment of desirable social objectives, and then only to the extent necessary in the circumstances to make possible the attainment of such objectives. The needs of the military must be met but the departure from the concept of equality before the law must not be greater than is necessary for those needs.

(Emphasis added.)

To the extent that a specific discrimination is unnecessary to achieve a valid social objective, it is arbitrary or capricious and in violation of the principle of equality.

It seems to me that this test, including its element of proportionality, clearly extends to the manner or means chosen to achieve a valid federal objective, particularly where this manner or these means introduce the very inequality complained of. This manner or these means must then be carefully scrutinized by the courts and they must be struck down whenever they do not meet the test.

Applying this test to the facts of the case at bar, it evidently cannot be said that the distinction made by s. 29.1 of the Judges Act between incumbent judges was necessary to achieve the abovementioned federal objective. This distinction was effected by the selection of the date of first reading of the bill as a cut-off point to implement the La question à résoudre dans chaque cas est celle de savoir si l'inégalité qui peut être créée par la loi vis-à-vis d'une catégorie particulière [...] est arbitraire, fantaisiste ou superflue, ou si elle a un fondement rationnel et acceptable en tant que dérogation nécessaire au principe général de l'application universelle de la loi pour faire face à des conditions particulières et atteindre un objectif social nécessaire et souhaitable.

(C'est moi qui souligne.)

En outre, le critère est d'autant plus exigeant qu'il comprend un élément essentiel de proportionnalité; même lorsque la dérogation au principe de l'application universelle de la loi est justifiée, on ne peut déroger au principe plus que ce qui est nécessaire pour atteindre un objectif social souhaitable:

... puisqu'on doit respecter le principe de l'égalité devant la loi, on ne peut y déroger que lorsque cela est nécessaire pour accomplir des objectifs socialement souhaitables et, dans ce cas, seulement dans la mesure nécessaire pour y parvenir dans les circonstances. Il faut répondre aux besoins des forces armées, mais l'on ne doit pas déroger au principe de l'égalité devant la loi plus que cela n'est nécessaire.

(C'est moi qui souligne.)

Dans la mesure où une distinction précise n'est pas nécessaire pour atteindre un objectif social valable ou régulier, elle est arbitraire ou fantaisiste et déroge au principe de l'égalité.

Il me semble que ce critère, y compris son élément de proportionnalité, vise clairement la manière ou les moyens choisis pour atteindre un objectif fédéral valable, particulièrement lorsque cette manière ou ces moyens introduisent l'inégalité même dont on se plaint. Cette manière ou ces moyens doivent alors être examinés soigneusement par les tribunaux, et ils doivent être écartés lorsqu'ils ne satisfont pas au critère.

Si l'on applique ce critère aux faits de l'espèce, on ne peut évidemment pas dire que la distinction établie par l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges entre les juges en fonction était nécessaire pour atteindre l'objectif fédéral susmentionné. Cette distinction a été établie par le choix de la date de la première lecture du projet de loi comme date limite pour phasing-in feature of the federal enactment and there was clearly no necessity to select this date.

In order to prevent hoarding and other type of speculation, budgetary measures are sometimes enforced from the time they are announced in the House of Commons and there might be similar rational motives to make a law retroactive to the time it was introduced in Parliament. But no such rational motives have been advanced or appear to exist in the case at bar where the selection of the cut-off point, with its discriminatory effect, is entirely arbitrary and capricious. The selection of a cut-off point reaching back two or three years earlier for instance would appear even more glaringly arbitrary and in my view, in the circumstances of the case at bar, there is no difference in the date of first reading that makes its selection any less arbitrary and capricious than the selection of an earlier date.

It may well be that if Parliament wanted to phase-in the implementation of the new measure and to abide by s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights, its only choice as to the cut-off date was the date of enactment. The selection of the latter date would admittedly have put all incumbent judges and judges appointed after the date of enactment on a different footing. But that is what "grandfather" clauses are about and it is accepted in the case at bar that "grandfathering" was an essential feature of the valid federal objective pursued by Parliament. The only alternative would be to hold that Parliament could not "grandfather" incumbent judges at all without offending the principle of equality before the law. Nobody has made such a far-reaching submission which would run contrary to a seemingly ancient and constant usage, as was indicated by Addy J. at p. 557 of the Federal Court Reports:

> ... the numerous Canadian statutes effecting judges' salaries enacted since 1846 until 1932 quoted by the defendant ... clearly establish various categories of compensation for judges of equal rank from time to time, without the slightest objection being raised even indirectly on the grounds that the legislation was dis-procéder à l'introduction progressive de la mesure législative fédérale et il n'était nettement pas nécessaire de choisir cette date.

Pour empêcher que la thésaurisation ou d'autre genre de spéculation, les mesures budgétaires entrent parfois en vigueur au moment où elles sont annoncées à la Chambre des communes et il pourrait y avoir des motifs rationnels semblables pour qu'une loi s'applique rétroactivement au moment où elle a été présentée devant le Parlement. Toutefois, aucun motif rationnel de cette nature n'a été présenté ou ne semble exister dans le présent cas où le choix de la date, avec son effet discriminatoire, est entièrement arbitraire et fantaisiste. Le choix d'une date limite remontant à deux ou trois années plus tôt par exemple, paraîtrait arbitraire de manière encore plus flagrante et, à mon avis, dans les circonstances de l'espèce, il n'y a aucune différence dans la date de la première lecture qui rende ce choix moins arbitraire et fantaisiste que le choix d'une date antérieure.

Il se peut bien que si le Parlement avait voulu introduire progressivement la nouvelle mesure et respecter l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits, il n'aurait pu choisir comme date limite que la date de l'adoption. Le choix de cette dernière date aurait certes eu pour effet de classer à des niveaux différents les juges qui étaient déjà en fonction et les juges nommés après la date de l'adoption. C'est ce que visent les clauses d'exclusion fondée sur la protection du statu quo et il est admis en l'espèce qu'une telle exclusion constituait une caractéristique essentielle de l'objectif fédéral valable visé par le Parlement. La seule autre solution serait de conclure que le Parlement ne pouvait pas du tout exclure les juges qui étaient déjà en fonction sans contrevenir au principe de l'égalité devant la loi. Nul n'a présenté un argument allant aussi loin qui serait contraire à un usage apparemment ancien et constant comme l'a indiqué le juge Addy à la p. 557 du Recueil des arrêts de la Cour fédérale:

> ... les nombreuses lois canadiennes citées par la défenderesse concernant le traitement des juges, adoptées depuis 1846 jusqu'en 1932 [...] établissent clairement diverses catégories de traitement pour des juges de rang égal, sans que la moindre objection ait été soulevée, même indirectement, au motif que la loi ait été discrimicriminatory. It is important to note also, however, that in this legislation whenever required to protect the compensation being paid to incumbents, "grandfather" clauses were inserted in the legislation and that, in the one or two cases where that precaution was not taken at the time of the passing of the legislation, an amending statute was subsequently enacted to rectify the situation. (V.g.: S.C. 1927, c. 33 which reduced the retirement annuity of certain judges to two-thirds of salary was amended by S.C. 1930, c. 27 where retirement at full salary of those judges was restored).

Furthermore, judges appointed after the date of enactment know or are presumed to know the law when they freely accept the appointment, and none of them has ever been treated on the same footing as judges who have been "grandfathered": they are members of a new class the creation of which was necessary to attain a valid federal objective.

Assuming that Parliament is under no constitutional obligation to "grandfather" any incumbent judge, it may appear anomalous, at first, that it should be blamed for not "grandfathering" all incumbent judges, but only some of them, albeit the majority in this case. The apparent anomaly is explained however when it is remembered that the principle of equality is capable of being offended against by the uneven granting of favourable treatment within a class, as well as by the uneven imposition of unfavourable treatment.

In the above-quoted passage of their factum, counsel for the appellant write that the > ... progressive implementation of full contributions protected the legitimate expectations of the judges appointed prior to April [sic] 17, 1975 ...

(Emphasis added.)

And I note that in his reasons for judgment, the Chief Justice characterizes the same concept as "the settled expectations" of earlier appointees. With the greatest of respect, I fail to see why the respondent's expectations were any less settled or legitimate than those of his fellow judges appointed before the date of first reading of the bill.

natoire. Il est important de noter également toutefois que, dans cette législation, lorsqu'il était nécessaire de protéger la rémunération versée aux titulaires, les diverses lois comprenaient des clauses [préservant le statu quo] et que, dans un ou deux cas où cette précaution n'avait pas été prise à l'époque de l'adoption de la loi, une loi modificatrice a subséquemment été adoptée pour corriger la situation. (Voir par exemple: S.C 1927, c. 33 qui réduisait la pension de retraite de certains juges à deux tiers de leur traitement fut modifié par S.C. 1930, c. 27 qui rétablissait pour ces juges la pension à plein traitement.)

En outre, les juges nommés après la date de l'adoption connaissent ou sont présumés connaître la loi lorsqu'ils acceptent librement leur nomination, et aucun d'entre eux n'a jamais été traité sur le même pied que les juges exclus pour préserver le statu quo: ils font partie d'une nouvelle classe dont la création était nécessaire pour atteindre un objectif fédéral valable ou régulier.

Si l'on présume que le Parlement n'est pas obligé en vertu de la Constitution d'exclure un juge en fonction afin de préserver le statu quo, il peut sembler anormal au départ qu'on lui reproche d'exclure non pas tous les juges qui étaient en fonction, mais seulement certains d'entre eux quoique ce soit la majorité en l'espèce. Toutefois, cette anomalie apparente s'explique lorsqu'on se rappelle que le principe de l'égalité peut être violé par l'octroi inégal d'un traitement favorable au sein d'une catégorie, de même que par l'imposition inégale d'un traitement défavorable.

Dans le passage précité de leur mémoire, les avocats de l'appelante affirment que

> ... [l']introduction graduelle de la pleine participation protégeait les attentes légitimes des juges nommés avant le 17 avril (sic) 1975 ...

(C'est moi qui souligne.)

De plus, je remarque que, dans ses motifs de jugement, le Juge en chef caractérise le même concept comme les «attentes fondées» des juges qui étaient en fonction. Avec les plus grands égards, je ne vois pas pourquoi les attentes de l'intimé étaient moins fondées ou légitimes que celles de ses collègues nommés avant la date de la première lecture du projet de loi.

Implicit in the position of the appellant is the following proposition: if the respondent, unlike judges appointed before February 17, 1975 could have no expectations susceptible to be protected, it must be because he was put on notice that the Judges Act was likely to be amended by the mere fact of first reading of the bill, and he should have been alerted to the risk of changing his position. It is the only rational explanation that comes to mind for the selection of the cut-off date and it is the only one that is inferentially suggested in appellant's factum. It is also an explanation which must have crossed the mind of the trial judge who, at p. 548 of the Federal Court Reports wrote as follows, and correctly so in my view:

> Although one is deemed to know the law of the land, there is no such presumption in the case of Bills not yet enacted. No one is bound by their contents. Having regard to the substantive and progressive emasculation of certain Bills in their stormy passage through Parliament, such Bills as are finally passed into law frequently bear little resemblance either in substance or in form to the original proposal. It would be grossly unjust to impute to anyone, other than perhaps a Member of Parliament, constructive knowledge of the business of Parliament.

The suggestion that the respondent may have been put on notice by the mere fact of first reading is not only factually erroneous in this case where it is conceded that he was unaware of that fact: it is also founded on a dangerous and far-reaching error in law in that it presumes knowledge of and reliance upon a bill as opposed to knowledge of and reliance upon the law.

On January 27, 1976, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada responded in writing to a letter written to him by the respondent. After stating that the impugned enactment had received Royal Assent on December 20, 1975, with its provisions unchanged, the Minister's letter continues as follows:

> Prior to this event I had raised your concerns with several of my colleagues and indeed, an attempt was

La proposition suivante découle implicitement de la position de l'appelante: à supposer que l'intimé, contrairement aux juges nommés avant le 17 février 1975, ne pouvait avoir aucune attente susceptible d'être protégée, ce doit être parce qu'on l'a avisé que la Loi sur les juges serait probablement modifiée par le simple fait de la première lecture du projet de loi et il aurait dû être prévenu du risque qu'il courait s'il changeait sa position. C'est la seule explication rationnelle qui vient à l'esprit pour expliquer le choix de la date limite et c'est la seule qu'on peut déduire du mémoire de l'appelante. C'est également une explication qui doit avoir traversé l'esprit du juge de première instance qui, à la p. 548 du Recueil des arrêts de la Cour fédérale a écrit ce qui suit et à mon avis à bon droit:

> Si nul n'est censé ignorer la loi, il n'existe pas de présomption semblable dans le cas de projets de loi qui ne sont pas encore adoptés. Nul n'est lié par leur contenu. Si l'on tient compte des modifications importantes et de l'émasculation progressive de certains projets de loi au cours des débats au Parlement, les projets de loi qui sont finalement adoptés ressemblent souvent très peu, tant sur le plan du fond que de la forme, au projet original. Il serait tout à fait injuste que quiconque, sauf peut-être un membre du Parlement, soit, par présomption, tenu de connaître les travaux du Parlement.

La proposition selon laquelle l'intimé peut avoir été avisé par le simple fait de la première lecture n'est pas seulement erronée en ce qui a trait aux faits de l'espèce où l'on reconnaît qu'il n'était pas au courant de ce fait: elle est également fondée sur une erreur de droit dangereuse et d'une grande portée en ce sens qu'elle présume la connaissance de l'existence d'un projet de loi et le fait de se fonder sur celui-ci par opposition à la connaissance de la loi et au fait de se fonder sur celle-ci.

Le 27 janvier 1976, le ministre de la Justice et Procureur général du Canada a répondu par écrit à une lettre que lui avait fait parvenir l'intimé. Après avoir déclaré dans sa lettre que la mesure législative contestée avait reçu sans modification la sanction royale le 20 décembre 1975, le Ministre poursuit de la manière suivante:

> [TRADUCTION] Avant cet événement, j'avais fait part de vos inquiétudes à plusieurs de mes collègues et, en fait, made while the Bill was before the joint House of Commons-Senate Committee to amend the clause so that the higher rate of contributions would apply only to judges appointed to office after the Royal Assent date. Unfortunately, the amendment that would have had this result was ruled out of order on procedural grounds.

In my opinion, this late and unsuccessful attempt to have the bill amended along the lines indicated by the Minister, and the Minister's letter constitute an admission that the bill in question was flawed in that it unnecessarily discriminated against certain incumbent judges.

I have reached the conclusion that s. 29.1(2) of the Judges Act is inconsistent with s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights and that the respondent is entitled to a declaration that this subsection is inoperative in so far as the respondent is concerned.

In addition, the respondent seeks a declaration that the words "before February 17, 1975" in s. 29.1(1) of the Judges Act are inoperative in so far as he is concerned. The reason why the respondent is seeking such a declaration, according to his factum, is to avoid being placed on a higher footing than that of his senior colleagues, appointed before February 17, 1975, who at present, have to contribute one and one-half per cent of their salary to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. In other words, the respondent is asking us to remedy one element of inequality with his colleagues, but not at the cost of creating or leaving another element of inequality within the same class of judges.

On the face of it, we could not grant such a declaration at large without creating an insoluble problem: judges appointed after February 16, 1975 would then have to contribute one and one-half per cent of their salary in addition to the seven per cent they have to contribute under s. 29.1(2). However, no problem would arise, so far as I can see, if the effect of the declaration is limited to the respondent.

on a tenté, pendant que le projet de loi était devant le comité conjoint de la Chambre des communes et du Sénat, de modifier la clause de manière à ce que le taux plus élevé de participation ne s'applique qu'aux juges nommés après la date de la sanction royale. Malheureusement, la modification qui aurait eu cet effet a été écartée pour des motifs de procédure.

À mon avis, cette tentative tardive et infructueuse de faire modifier le projet de loi comme l'indique le Ministre et la lettre du Ministre constituent une reconnaissance que le projet de loi en question était vicié en ce qu'il établissait une distinction inutile à l'égard de certains juges qui étaient en fonction.

J'arrive à la conclusion que le par. 29.1(2) de la Loi sur les juges est incompatible avec l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits et que l'intimé a le droit d'obtenir un jugement déclaratoire portant que ce paragraphe est inopérant dans la mesure où l'intimé est concerné.

De plus, l'intimé cherche à obtenir un jugement déclaratoire portant que les mots «avant le 17 février 1975», que l'on trouve au par. 29.1(1) de la Loi sur les juges, sont inopérants dans la mesure où il est concerné. La raison pour laquelle l'intimé cherche à obtenir un tel jugement déclaratoire, selon son mémoire, est qu'il veut éviter d'être placé dans une meilleure situation que ses collègues déjà en fonction et nommés avant le 17 février 1975 qui, jusqu'à maintenant, ont versé au Fonds du revenu consolidé une contribution égale à un et demi pour cent de leur traitement. En d'autres termes, l'intimé nous demande de remédier à un élément d'inégalité vis-à-vis de ses collègues, mais pas au prix de créer ou de laisser subsister un autre élément d'inégalité au sein de la même catégorie de juges.

À première vue, nous ne pourrions pas accorder un tel jugement déclaratoire général sans créer un problème insoluble: les juges nommés après le 16 février 1975 devraient alors verser une contribution égale à un et demi pour cent de leur traitement en plus du sept pour cent qu'ils doivent verser en vertu du par. 29.1(2). Toutefois aucun problème ne se poserait, je pense, si le jugement déclaratoire avait un effet limité à l'intimé.

The respondent is not asking us to redraft the impugned enactment but simply to declare these few words inoperative in so far as he is concerned, in order to restore complete equality within the class to which he belongs. I have reached the conclusion that it is legitimate for him to seek complete redress in a case of this sort and that he is entitled to the full declaration he is requesting.

Before I reach my final conclusion, I should perhaps state that a short time before the respondent's appointment, judges' salaries were increased by 39 per cent, and pensions to widowed spouses and children by 50 per cent: An Act to amend the Judges Act and certain other Acts for related purposes and in respect of the reconstitution of the Supreme Courts of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 48. These increases together with the subsequent enactment of s. 29.1 of the Judges Act were sometimes referred to as a "package" and may be relevant to a discussion of the first constitutional question. In my view however, these increases are entirely irrelevant in so far as the second constitutional question is concerned since all incumbent judges profited by these increases, including those appointed before February 17, 1975.

VI—Conclusion

I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of the Federal Court of Appeal and the declaration granted by the trial judge. I would allow the cross-appeal and, to the declaration granted by the trial judge, I would substitute the following declaration:

The words "before February 17, 1975" of s. 29.1(1) and the whole of s. 29.1(2) of the Judges Act, as enacted by s. 100 of S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 81, are inoperative in so far as the plaintiff is concerned.

I would answer the first constitutional question in the negative.

L'intimé nous demande non pas de réécrire la disposition législative attaquée, mais simplement de déclarer ces quelques mots inopérants dans la mesure où il est concerné, afin de rétablir une égalité complète au sein de la catégorie dont il fait partie. J'arrive à la conclusion qu'il est en droit de demander un redressement complet dans un cas comme celui dont nous sommes saisis et qu'il a droit à la totalité du jugement déclaratoire qu'il demande.

Avant d'arriver à ma conclusion finale, je devrais sans doute dire que, peu de temps avant la nomination de l'intimé, les salaires des juges ont été augmentés de 39 pour cent et les pensions destinées aux conjoints survivants et aux enfants, de 50 pour cent: Loi modifiant la Loi sur les juges, et certaines autres lois connexes par suite de la réorganisation de la Cour suprême de Terre-Neuve et de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 48. Ces augmentations ainsi que l'adoption subséquente de l'art. 29.1 de la Loi sur les juges ont parfois été mentionnées comme un «programme» et peuvent être utiles pour analyser la première question constitutionnelle. À mon avis toutefois, ces augmentations sont tout à fait hors de propos en ce qui concerne la deuxième question constitutionnelle puisque tous les juges qui étaient en fonction ont bénéficié de ces augmentations, y compris ceux nommés avant le 17 février 1975.

VI—Conclusion

Je suis d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi, d'annuler l'arrêt de la Cour d'appel fédérale et le jugement déclaratoire accordé par le juge de première instance. Je suis d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi incident et de remplacer le jugement déclaratoire accordé par le juge de première instance par le jugement déclaratoire suivant:

Les mots «avant le 17 février 1975» au par. 29.1(1) et la totalité du par. 29.1(2) de la Loi sur les juges, tels qu'édictés par l'art. 100 de S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 81, sont inopérants dans la mesure où le demandeur est concerné.

Je suis d'avis de répondre à la première question constitutionnelle par la négative.

I would answer the second constitutional question as follows:

The words "before February 17, 1975" of s. 29.1(1) and the whole of s. 29.1(2) of the Judges Act as amended by s. 100 of the Statute law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1975, S.C. 1974-75-76, c. 81, are inconsistent with s. 1(b) of the Canadian Bill of Rights and, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect in so far as the respondent is concerned.

I would allow the respondent his costs throughout.

Appeal allowed, BEETZ and MCINTYRE JJ. dissenting in part.

Solicitor for the appellant: Roger Tassé, Ottawa.

Solicitor for the respondent: David W. Scott, Ottawa.

Je suis d'avis de répondre à la seconde question constitutionnelle de la manière suivante:

Les mots «avant le 17 février 1975» au par. 29.1(1) et la totalité du par. 29.1(2) de la Loi sur les juges telle que modifiée par l'art. 100 de la Loi de 1975 modifiant le droit statutaire (Pensions de retraite), S.C. 1974-75-76, chap. 81, sont incompatibles avec l'al. 1*b*) de la Déclaration canadienne des droits et inopérants dans la mesure où l'intimé est concerné.

Je suis d'avis d'accorder à l'intimé ses dépens dans toutes les cours.

Pourvoi accueilli, les juges BEETZ et MCINTYRE sont dissidents en partie.

Procureur de l'appelante: Roger Tassé, Ottawa.

Procureur de l'intimé: David W. Scott, Ottawa.

Judge Richard Therrien, Q.C.J. Appellant

v.

The Minister of Justice Respondent

and

The Attorney General of Quebec Respondent

and

The Attorney General for Ontario, the Attorney General for New Brunswick, Office des droits des détenus and Association des services de réhabilitation sociale du Québec Interveners

INDEXED AS: THERRIEN (RE)

Neutral citation: 2001 SCC 35.

File No.: 27004.

2000: October 2; 2001: June 7.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and L'Heureux-Dubé, Gonthier, Iacobucci, Bastarache, Binnie and Arbour JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR QUEBEC

Appeal — Supreme Court of Canada — Jurisdiction — Report of inquiry panel of Quebec Court of Appeal — Judicial ethics — Report of Court of Appeal recommending removal of Judge of Court of Québec — Whether Supreme Court has jurisdiction to hear appeal from report of Court of Appeal — Whether report a "judgment" within meaning of Supreme Court Act — Supreme Court Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. S-26, ss. 2(1), 40(1) — Courts of Justice Act, R.S.Q., c. T-16, s. 95.

Courts — Jurisdiction — Quebec Court of Appeal — Superior Court — Legal ethics — Court of Appeal hearing request by Minister of Justice concerning removal of Judge of Court of Québec — Judge concerned applying to Superior Court to have report of committee of inquiry

Le juge Richard Therrien, j.c.q. Appelant

c.

La ministre de la Justice Intimée

et

La procureure générale du Québec Intimée

et

Le procureur général de l'Ontario, le procureur général du Nouveau-Brunswick, l'Office des droits des détenus et l'Association des services de réhabilitation sociale du Québec Intervenants

RÉPERTORIÉ : THERRIEN (RE)

Référence neutre : 2001 CSC 35.

N° du greffe : 27004.

2000 : 2 octobre; 2001 : 7 juin.

Présents : Le juge en chef McLachlin et les juges L'Heureux-Dubé, Gonthier, Iacobucci, Bastarache, Binnie et Arbour.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DU QUÉBEC

Appel — Cour suprême du Canada — Compétence — Rapport de la formation d'enquête de la Cour d'appel du Québec — Déontologie judiciaire — Rapport de la Cour d'appel recommandant la destitution d'un juge de la Cour du Québec — La Cour suprême a-t-elle compétence pour se saisir de l'appel du rapport de la Cour d'appel? — Ce rapport constitue-t-il un « jugement » au sens de la Loi sur la Cour suprême? — Loi sur la Cour suprême, L.R.C. 1985, ch. S-26, art. 2(1), 40(1) — Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires, L.R.Q., ch. T-16, art. 95.

Tribunaux — Compétence — Cour d'appel du Québec — Cour supérieure — Déontologie judiciaire — Cour d'appel saisie d'une requête du ministre de la Justice concernant la destitution d'un juge de la Cour du Québec — Juge concerné présentant en Cour supérieure of Conseil de la magistrature quashed and challenge constitutionality of provision of provincial statute — Whether Superior Court has jurisdiction to hear application and motion — Whether Court of Appeal has exclusive jurisdiction to decide questions of law and jurisdiction in course of inquiry — Courts of Justice Act, R.S.Q., c. T-16, s. 95.

Courts — Judges — Legal ethics — Conseil de la magistrature — Jurisdiction — Whether Conseil de la magistrature may examine conduct of judge even if breach of ethics occurred prior to appointment.

Constitutional law — Independence of judiciary — Security of tenure of judges — Provincial statute providing for removal of judge of provincial court without address of legislature — Whether provincial statute satisfies requirements of judicial independence — Constitution Act, 1867, preamble — Courts of Justice Act, R.S.Q., c. T-16, s. 95.

Constitutional law — Independence of judiciary — Security of tenure of judges — Provincial statute providing that government may remove judge only on report of Court of Appeal at request of Minister of Justice — Whether judicial office is secure against discretionary interference by Executive — Courts of Justice Act, R.S.Q., c. T-16, s. 95.

Administrative law — Natural justice — Duty to act fairly — Right to be heard — Complaint made to Conseil de la magistrature against Judge of Court of Québec — Committee of inquiry of Conseil recommending judge be removed — Whether judge had sufficient notice of findings that might be made by committee of inquiry — Whether judge had right to separate hearing on question of sanctions.

Administrative law — Natural justice — Duty to act fairly — Right to impartial hearing — Complaint made to Conseil de la magistrature against Judge of Court of Québec — Conseil bound to follow recommendations of committee of inquiry — Committee of inquiry recommending judge be removed — Whether decision-making structure of Conseil and committee of inquiry violates maxim delegatus non potest delegare — Whether presence of persons not members of judiciary at preliminary stage of disciplinary process violates institutional dimension of structural principle of judicial independence — Whether functioning of committee of inquiry, des requêtes pour faire annuler le rapport du comité d'enquête du Conseil de la magistrature et contester la constitutionnalité d'une disposition d'une loi provinciale — La Cour supérieure a-t-elle compétence pour entendre ces requêtes? — La Cour d'appel a-t-elle compétence exclusive pour décider de questions de droit et de compétence dans le cadre de l'enquête? — Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires, L.R.Q., ch. T-16, art. 95.

Tribunaux — Juges — Déontologie judiciaire — Conseil de la magistrature — Compétence — Le Conseil de la magistrature peut-il examiner la conduite d'un juge même si le manquement déontologique est antérieur à sa nomination?

Droit constitutionnel – Indépendance judiciaire — Inamovibilité des juges — Loi provinciale prévoyant la destitution d'un juge d'une cour provinciale sans adresse parlementaire — La loi provinciale est-elle conforme aux exigences de l'indépendance judiciaire? — Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, préambule — Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires, L.R.Q., ch. T-16, art. 95.

Droit constitutionnel — Indépendance judiciaire — Inamovibilité des juges — Loi provinciale prévoyant que le gouvernement ne peut démettre un juge que sur un rapport de la Cour d'appel à la suite d'une requête du ministre de la Justice — La fonction judiciaire est-elle à l'abri de toute intervention discrétionnaire de la part de l'exécutif? — Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires, L.R.Q., ch. T-16, art. 95.

Droit administratif — Justice naturelle — Obligation d'agir équitablement — Droit d'être entendu — Dépôt d'une plainte contre un juge de la Cour du Québec auprès du Conseil de la magistrature — Comité d'enquête du Conseil recommandant la destitution du juge — Le juge a-t-il bénéficié d'un préavis suffisant quant aux conclusions susceptibles d'être tirées par le comité d'enquête? — Le juge avait-il droit à une audition distincte sur la question des sanctions?

Droit administratif — Justice naturelle — Obligation d'agir équitablement — Droit à une audition impartiale — Dépôt d'une plainte contre un juge de la Cour du Québec auprès du Conseil de la magistrature — Conseil contraint de suivre les recommandations de son comité d'enquête — Comité d'enquête recommandant la destitution du juge — La structure décisionnelle du Conseil et de son comité d'enquête viole-t-elle la maxime delegatus non potest delegare? — La présence de personnes non membres de la magistrature au stade préliminaire du processus disciplinaire porte-t-elle atteinte à la dimension institutionnelle du principe structurel de in particular role of committee counsel, raises reasonable fear of institutional bias.

Civil rights — Equality rights — Information relating to employment — Criminal record — Candidate for judicial office — Whether selection committee may question candidate regarding criminal record — Whether question infringes Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms — Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms, R.S.Q., c. C-12, ss. 10, 18.1, 18.2, 20.

Constitutional law — Equality rights — Information relating to employment — Criminal record — Candidate for judicial office — Whether procedure initiated against judge concerned infringes equality rights guaranteed by Canadian Charter — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s. 15.

Courts — Judges — Judicial ethics — Sanctions — Removal of judge of provincial court — Failure by judge to disclose criminal record when candidate for office of judge — Report of Court of Appeal recommending revocation of commission of judge — Whether sanction appropriate.

Criminal law — Effect of granting pardon — Meaning and effect of pardon granted under Criminal Records Act — Whether pardon expunges conviction retroactively — Criminal Records Act, R.S.C. 1970 (1st Supp.), c. 12, s. 5.

In 1970, the appellant was sentenced to imprisonment for one year for unlawfully giving assistance to four members of the Front de libération du Québec. After serving his sentence, he continued his legal studies. From 1976 to 1996, the appellant practised law, and in 1987, on his application, the Governor in Council granted him a pardon under s. 5(b) of the Criminal Records Act. Between 1989 and 1996, the appellant submitted his candidacy in five selection procedures for judicial appointments. In 1991 and 1993, he revealed his previous convictions and stated that he had been pardoned and his candidacy was rejected because of his criminal record. In the last selection procedures, he did not disclose his criminal record, or even that he had been pardoned. In September 1996, as a result of the favourable recommendation of the selection committee, the Minister of Justice recommended that he be appointed as a Judge of the Court of Québec. In late October, the Associate Chief Judge of the Court of l'indépendance judiciaire? — Le fonctionnement du comité d'enquête, en particulier le rôle de son procureur, soulève-t-il une crainte raisonnable de partialité institutionnelle?

Libertés publiques — Droits à l'égalité — Renseignements relatifs à l'emploi — Antécédents judiciaires — Candidat à la magistrature — Le comité de sélection peut-il questionner un candidat sur ses antécédents judiciaires? — Cette question porte-t-elle atteinte aux dispositions de la Charte des droits et libertés de la personne? — Charte des droits et libertés de la personne, L.R.Q., ch. C-12, art. 10, 18.1, 18.2, 20.

Droit constitutionnel — Droits à l'égalité — Renseignements relatifs à l'emploi — Antécédents judiciaires — Candidat à la magistrature — La procédure intentée contre le juge concerné porte-t-elle atteinte aux droits à l'égalité garantis par la Charte canadienne? — Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 15.

Tribunaux — Juges — Déontologie judiciaire — Sanctions — Destitution d'un juge d'une cour provinciale — Omission d'un juge de révéler ses antécédents judiciaires alors qu'il était candidat au poste de juge — Rapport de la Cour d'appel recommandant la révocation de la commission d'un juge — Cette sanction est-elle appropriée?

Droit criminel — Effet de l'octroi d'un pardon — Sens et portée du pardon obtenu en vertu de la Loi sur le casier judiciaire — Un pardon anéantit-il rétroactivement une condamnation? — Loi sur le casier judiciaire, S.R.C. 1970 (1er suppl.), ch. 12, art. 5.

En 1970, l'appelant est condamné à un an d'emprisonnement pour avoir illégalement fourni une aide quelconque à quatre membres du Front de libération du Québec. Après avoir purgé sa peine, il poursuit ses études de droit. De 1976 à 1996, l'appelant pratique le droit et, en 1987, à sa demande, le gouverneur général en conseil lui accorde un pardon en vertu de l'al. 5*b*) de la Loi sur le casier judiciaire. Entre 1989 et 1996, l'appelant soumet sa candidature à cinq concours pour l'obtention d'un poste de juge. En 1991 et 1993, il révèle ses condamnations antérieures et mentionne qu'il a fait l'objet d'un pardon et sa candidature n'est pas retenue à cause de ses antécédents judiciaires. Lors du dernier concours, il ne révèle pas ses antécédents judiciaires ni même l'existence d'un pardon. En septembre 1996, suivant la recommandation favorable du comité de sélection, le ministre de la Justice recommande la nomination de l'appelant comme juge à la Cour du Québec. À la fin d'octobre, le juge en chef adjoint de la Cour du Québec

Québec and chairman of the selection committee which had recommended the appellant's candidacy learned that he had been in trouble with the law. She advised the Minister of Justice of the situation and stated that the appellant had failed to disclose this information to the committee. The Minister lodged a complaint with the Quebec Conseil de la magistrature. A committee of inquiry of the Conseil found that the complaint was justified and recommended that removal procedures be initiated. The Conseil then recommended that the Minister of Justice initiate the process to remove the appellant by making a request to the Court of Appeal in accordance with s. 95 of the Courts of Justice Act ("C.J.A.").

Concurrently with that proceeding, the appellant challenged the removal process and filed an application for judicial review in the Superior Court seeking to have the committee's inquiry report, the recommendation and the order of the Conseil de la magistrature suspending him declared void and of no effect, and seeking to have the request to the Court of Appeal dismissed. At the same time, he filed a motion for declaratory judgment challenging the constitutionality of s. 95. In response to the application and motion, the Minister of Justice filed two motions to dismiss in which he claimed that the Court of Appeal had jurisdiction to dispose of the issues in conducting the inquiry referred to it pursuant to s. 95. The Superior Court dismissed the motions to dismiss. The Minister appealed the decisions. The Court of Appeal allowed the two appeals and dismissed the application for judicial review and motion for declaratory judgment filed by the appellant. In 1998, five judges of the Court of Appeal submitted a report to the Minister of Justice following their inquiry, in which they recommended that the Government revoke the appellant's commission.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed.

(1) Jurisdictional Questions

Because the requirements of s. 40(1) of the Supreme Court Act ("S.C.A.") have been met, the appellant can appeal to this Court from a report of the inquiry panel of the Court of Appeal made pursuant to s. 95 C.J.A., recommending to the government that he be removed. Specifically, the report of the Court of Appeal is a final or other judgment within the meaning of ss. 2(1) and 40(1) S.C.A. The expressions "judgment" and "final judgment" in s. 2(1) both contrast the concept of a decision with the concept of mere opinion or advice. The jurisdiction of this Court under that provision is therefore et présidente du comité de sélection ayant recommandé la candidature de l'appelant apprend que celui-ci a eu des démêlés avec la justice. Elle informe le ministre de la Justice de la situation et indique que l'appelant a omis de révéler ces informations au comité. Le ministre dépose une plainte auprès du Conseil de la magistrature du Québec. Un comité d'enquête du Conseil conclut au bien-fondé de la plainte et recommande d'engager des procédures de destitution. Le Conseil recommande alors au ministre de la Justice d'engager des procédures de destitution à l'endroit de l'appelant en présentant une requête en ce sens à la Cour d'appel, conformément à l'art. 95 de la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires (« L.T.J. »).

Parallèlement, l'appelant conteste la procédure de destitution et présente en Cour supérieure une requête en révision judiciaire demandant de déclarer nuls et sans effet le rapport d'enquête du comité, la recommandation et l'ordonnance de suspension prononcées par le Conseil de la magistrature et demandant de déclarer irrecevable la requête présentée à la Cour d'appel. À la même occasion, il dépose une requête en jugement déclaratoire contestant la constitutionnalité de l'art. 95. Le ministre de la Justice présente à l'encontre de ces deux requêtes des requêtes en irrecevabilité alléguant que la Cour d'appel est compétente pour trancher ces questions dans le cadre de l'enquête dont elle est saisie en vertu de l'art. 95. La Cour supérieure rejette les requêtes en irrecevabilité. Le ministre en appelle des décisions. La Cour d'appel accueille les deux pourvois et déclare irrecevables les requêtes en révision judiciaire et en jugement déclaratoire présentées par l'appelant. En 1998, cinq juges de la Cour d'appel remettent un rapport fait après enquête au ministre de la Justice dans lequel ils recommandent au gouvernement de révoquer la commission de l'appelant.

Arrêt : Le pourvoi est rejeté.

(1) Les questions de compétence

Puisque les conditions prévues au par. 40(1) de la Loi sur la Cour suprême (« L.C.S. ») sont remplies, l'appelant peut interjeter appel devant notre Cour d'un rapport de la formation d'enquête de la Cour d'appel, fait en vertu de l'art. 95 L.T.J., qui recommande au gouvernement sa destitution. En particulier, le rapport de la Cour d'appel constitue un jugement, définitif ou autre, au sens des par. 2(1) et 40(1) L.C.S. Les termes « jugement » et « jugement définitif » au par. 2(1) opposent tous deux la notion de décision à celle de la simple opinion ou consultation. La compétence de notre Cour en connected to the fact that the subject matter of the appeal is in the nature of a decision. In these circumstances, it depends on the nature and effect of the jurisdiction exercised by the Court of Appeal in respect of judicial ethics when it conducts the proceeding set out in s. 95 C.J.A. A careful study of the law and its context and purpose leads to the conclusion that the report of the Court of Appeal is in the nature of a decision. Section 95 does not require that the Court of Appeal make a report of an inquiry, but a report made after inquiry. The report is a judicial report and, moreover, one made by the highest court in the province. Its purpose is not simply to assist the Minister in making a decision; rather, it is an essential condition of the proceeding that may lead to the removal of a provincially appointed judge. The aim of the report is legally to determine a situation, and the wording of s. 95 does not restrict the Court of Appeal to making recommendations. The fact that the report is judicial and in the nature of a decision is fundamental to the constitutionality of the proceeding as a whole. Having regard to the fact that the report of the Court of Appeal is substantially in the nature of a decision, this is sufficient to satisfy the definitions of "judgment" or "final judgment" in s. 40(1) S.C.A. and to enable this Court to review it.

The Superior Court did not have jurisdiction to consider the application for judicial review and motion for declaratory judgment made by the appellant. Under art. 31 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Superior Court hears in first instance every suit not assigned to another court by a specific provision of law. Where a request is properly made to the Court of Appeal under s. 95 C.J.A., it is precisely the intent of the legislature that it determine the matter to the exclusion of any other court. This interpretation is consistent with the legislature's intention of complying with the constitutional requirements regarding tenure of provincial court judges by assigning responsibility to the Court of Appeal, exclusively and in the first instance, for conducting an inquiry and making a report on the conduct of a judge. Any other conclusion would be inimical to the proper administration of justice, since it would encourage a multiplicity of proceedings before various tribunals. In the case at bar, because the Court of Appeal had before it the request made by the Minister under s. 95 C.J.A. before the appellant filed his application and motion in the Superior Court, the appellant's case had been properly referred to the Court of Appeal to the exclusion of any other court. The Superior Court therefore had no jurisdiction to act in the circumstances.

vertu de cette disposition est donc liée au caractère décisionnel de ce qui fait l'objet de l'appel. Dans le présent contexte, elle dépend de la nature et de la portée de la compétence exercée par la Cour d'appel en matière de déontologie judiciaire dans le cadre de la procédure prévue à l'art. 95 L.T.J. Une étude attentive de la loi, du cadre dans lequel elle s'inscrit et de la finalité qu'elle poursuit amène à la conclusion que le rapport de la Cour d'appel a un caractère décisionnel. L'article 95 n'exige pas que la Cour d'appel remette un rapport d'enquête, mais un rapport fait après enquête. Le rapport relève du domaine judiciaire, et de surcroît, du plus haut tribunal de la province. Il n'existe pas simplement pour assister le ministre dans sa prise de décision, mais constitue une condition essentielle de la procédure pouvant mener à la destitution d'un juge de nomination provinciale. Le rapport vise la détermination juridique d'une situation et le texte de l'art. 95 ne restreint pas la Cour d'appel à la formulation de recommandations. Le caractère décisionnel et judiciaire du rapport est un élément fondamental de la constitutionnalité de l'ensemble de la procédure. Vu le caractère décisionnel important du rapport de la Cour d'appel, cela suffit pour répondre aux définitions de « jugement » ou de « jugement définitif » prévues au par. 40(1) L.C.S. et pour permettre à notre Cour de siéger en révision.

La Cour supérieure n'avait pas compétence pour examiner les requêtes en révision judiciaire et en jugement déclaratoire présentées par l'appelant. En vertu de l'art. 31 du Code de procédure civile, la Cour supérieure connaît en première instance de toute demande qu'une disposition formelle de la loi n'a pas attribuée exclusivement à un autre tribunal. Or, lorsque la Cour d'appel est régulièrement saisie d'une requête en vertu de l'art. 95 L.T.J., il est précisément de l'intention du législateur qu'elle le soit à l'exclusion de tout autre tribunal. Cette interprétation est conforme à la volonté du législateur de respecter les exigences constitutionnelles en matière d'inamovibilité des juges de cours provinciales en confiant à la Cour d'appel, exclusivement et en première instance, la responsabilité de faire enquête et d'émettre un rapport sur la conduite d'un juge. Conclure autrement irait à l'encontre d'une saine administration de la justice, puisque cela favoriserait la multiplication des recours devant différentes instances. En l'espèce, puisque la Cour d'appel a été saisie de la requête déposée par le ministre conformément à l'art. 95 L.T.J. avant que l'appelant ne dépose ses deux requêtes en Cour supérieure, la Cour d'appel était régulièrement saisie du dossier de l'appelant à l'exclusion de tout autre tribunal. La Cour supérieure était donc incompétente pour agir dans ces circonstances.

The Conseil de la magistrature had jurisdiction to review the appellant's conduct even though the ethical breach occurred before he was appointed. The Conseil had jurisdiction over the person who was the subject of the complaint and over the subject matter of the complaint. Whether or not the appellant's actions were prior to his appointment is not relevant under the C.J.A. In the interests of judicial independence, it is also important that discipline be dealt with in the first place by peers. The committee of inquiry of the Conseil is responsible for preserving the integrity of the whole of the judiciary. Accordingly, it must be able to examine the past conduct of a judge if, as in this case, it is relevant to the assessment of his candidacy, having regard to his capacity to carry out his judicial functions, and to determine, based on that, whether it may reasonably undermine public confidence in the incumbent of the office. In conclusion on this point, the process of selecting persons for appointment as judges is so closely related to the exercise of the judicial function that it cannot be dissociated from it.

Le Conseil de la magistrature avait compétence pour examiner la conduite de l'appelant même si le manquement déontologique est survenu avant sa nomination. Le Conseil avait compétence sur la personne visée par la plainte et sur l'objet de la plainte. Que les gestes de l'appelant soient antérieurs à sa nomination n'est pas un critère pertinent au sens de la L.T.J. Au nom de l'indépendance judiciaire, il importe aussi que la discipline relève au premier chef des pairs. Le comité d'enquête du Conseil a la responsabilité de veiller à l'intégrité de l'ensemble de la magistrature. En ce sens, il doit pouvoir examiner la conduite passée d'un juge si, comme en l'espèce, celle-ci est pertinente à l'appréciation de sa candidature eu égard à sa capacité d'exercer ses fonctions judiciaires et pour décider si, en conséquence, elle peut raisonnablement porter atteinte à la confiance du public envers le titulaire de la charge. Enfin, le processus de sélection des personnes aptes à être nommées juges est si intimement lié à l'exercice même de la fonction judiciaire qu'il ne saurait en être dissocié.

(2) Constitutional Questions

Section 95 C.J.A. is constitutional. The removal of a judge of a provincial court without an address of the legislature is not contrary to the principle of judicial independence embodied in the preamble to the Constitution Act, 1867. Regarding security of tenure, it does not afford greater protection to judges of the Provincial Court than s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in criminal matters. The functions of the judge are essentially the same whether or not the judge is hearing criminal matters. Requiring that the removal of a provincial court judge follow the procedure of an address of the legislature, as provided by s. 99 of the Constitution Act, 1867 for superior court judges, may indeed be an ideal, but that procedure is not necessary in order to comply with the Constitution. Furthermore, the jurisdiction of provincial legislatures over provincial courts derives expressly from s. 92(14) and (4) of the Constitution Act, 1867. In exercising their jurisdiction, and within the limitations of the constitutional requirements, provincial legislatures are authorized to establish separate rules for the functioning of the various judicial councils they establish. Lastly, although the government makes the final decision regarding removal, it "may remove a judge only upon a report of the Court of Appeal" (s. 95 C.J.A.). The use of that wording indicates a real intention on the part of the legislature that the Executive be bound by a finding of the Court of Appeal exonerating a judge. Because the Executive is bound by a finding exonerating a judge, the judges of

(2) Les questions constitutionnelles

L'article 95 L.T.J. est constitutionnel. La destitution d'un juge d'une cour provinciale sans adresse parlementaire n'est pas contraire au principe de l'indépendance judiciaire enchâssé dans le préambule de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. En matière d'inamovibilité dans un contexte autre que pénal, le préambule n'offre pas une protection supérieure aux juges de la Cour provinciale que l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés en matière pénale. Les fonctions du juge sont essentiellement les mêmes qu'il siège en matière pénale ou non. L'assujettissement de la destitution d'un juge d'une cour provinciale à la procédure d'une adresse parlementaire, comme le prévoit l'art. 99 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 pour les juges des cours supérieures, peut certes constituer un idéal, mais cette procédure n'est pas nécessaire pour se conformer à la Constitution. Par ailleurs, la compétence des législatures provinciales sur les cours provinciales découle expressément des par. 92(14) et (4) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. Dans l'exercice de leurs compétences et dans les limites des exigences constitutionnelles, les législatures provinciales sont autorisées à établir des règles de fonctionnement distinctes pour les différents conseils de la magistrature qu'elles mettent sur pied. Enfin, bien que le gouvernement soit le titulaire de la décision finale en matière de destitution, il « ne peut démettre un juge que sur un rapport de la Cour d'appel » (art. 95 L.T.J.). L'emploi d'une telle formulation indique une volonté réelle du législateur que le pouvoir exécutif soit lié par the Provincial Court are secure against any discretionary interference by the Executive. Section 95 is consistent with the requirements of judicial independence.

une conclusion d'exonération prononcée par la Cour d'appel. Puisque le pouvoir exécutif est lié par une conclusion d'exonération, les juges de la Cour provinciale sont à l'abri de toute intervention discrétionnaire de la part de l'exécutif. L'article 95 est conforme aux exigences de l'indépendance judiciaire.

(3) Substantive Issues

The Conseil de la magistrature and its committee of inquiry are subject to the rules of procedural fairness. Essentially, the duty to act fairly has two components: the right to be heard and the right to an impartial hearing. The nature and extent of the duty may vary with the specific context and the various fact situations dealt with by the administrative body, as well as the nature of the disputes it must resolve. In this case, the right to be heard was respected. First, the appellant had sufficient notice. The committee of inquiry of the Conseil de la magistrature did not hold a general inquiry; it examined a specific complaint made against a particular judge. That judge was therefore a party to the proceedings from the outset and was informed of the allegations made against him. In this case, the appellant received a copy of the complaint in accordance with s. 266 C.J.A. and the respondents filed a further pleading in which they detailed the subject matter of the complaint. In the circumstances, the appellant was well aware of all of the findings of misconduct that might be made against him in the final report. Second, having regard to s. 275 C.J.A., which authorizes the committee of inquiry of the Conseil de la magistrature to make rules of procedure or practice that are necessary for the carrying out of its duties, the committee was fully justified, out of concern for efficiency, in refusing to hold a separate hearing on the question of sanctions. The committee made a genuine effort to allow the appellant to make representations by twice giving him an opportunity to be heard on the question of the various applicable sanctions.

(3) Les questions de fond

Le Conseil de la magistrature et son comité d'enquête sont assujettis aux règles de l'équité procédurale. L'obligation d'agir équitablement comporte essentiellement deux volets, soit le droit d'être entendu et le droit à une audition impartiale. La nature et la portée de cette obligation peuvent varier en fonction du contexte particulier et des différentes réalités auxquelles l'organisme administratif est confronté, ainsi que de la nature des litiges qu'il est appelé à trancher. En l'espèce, le droit d'être entendu a été respecté. Premièrement, l'appelant a bénéficié d'un préavis suffisant. Le comité d'enquête du Conseil de la magistrature ne tient pas une enquête en général, mais il étudie une plainte précise portée à l'encontre d'un juge en particulier. Ce juge est donc partie prenante dès le début des procédures et est informé de ce qui lui est reproché. Dans la présente affaire, l'appelant a reçu une copie de la plainte conformément à l'art. 266 L.T.J. et les intimées ont déposé une procédure supplémentaire qui en précisait l'objet. Dans ce contexte, l'appelant connaissait très bien l'ensemble des conclusions d'inconduite susceptibles d'être tirées contre lui dans le rapport final. Deuxièmement, vu l'art. 275 L.T.J., qui permet au comité d'enquête du Conseil de la magistrature d'adopter les règles de procédure ou de pratique qu'il juge convenir aux circonstances de son enquête, le comité était pleinement justifié, dans un souci d'efficacité, de refuser la tenue d'une audience supplémentaire et distincte pour les sanctions. Le comité a fait un effort réel pour permettre à l'appelant de présenter son point de vue en lui fournissant, et ce, à deux reprises, l'occasion de se faire entendre sur les différentes sanctions applicables.

The right to an impartial hearing was also respected. Although the Conseil de la magistrature does not exercise its decision-making authority itself since it is bound by the conclusions drawn by the committee, decision-making structures of the Conseil and its committee do not violate the maxim delegatus non potest delegare. The terms used in the C.J.A. are mandatory and reflect a clear intent on the part of the legislature to authorize delegation of the powers of inquiry and decision regarding the justification for a complaint to a committee consisting of five persons chosen from among the members of the Conseil (ss. 268, 278 and 279). Even though 4 of the 15 members of the Conseil de la magistrature are not judges, the presence of persons who are not members of the judiciary at a preliminary stage of the disciplinary process does not violate the collective or institutional dimension of the structural principle of judicial independence in that only a body composed of judges may recommend the removal of a judge. The report and recommendations made by a committee of inquiry of the Conseil are merely the first stage of the process put in place by the C.J.A. The final recommendation to remove a provincial court judge is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the highest court in the province. In these circumstances, the composition of the committee of inquiry of the Conseil de la magistrature complies with the structural principle of judicial independence and the rules of procedural fairness. Lastly, the functioning of the committee of inquiry does not raise a reasonable apprehension of institutional bias. Counsel for the committee does not play the role of judge and party. The committee's purpose is to gather the facts and evidence in order, ultimately, to make a recommendation to the Conseil de la magistrature. When he examined and cross-examined witnesses, counsel was not acting as a prosecutor, but rather was providing the committee with assistance in carrying out the mandate assigned to it by the statute. Where there are no judge or parties, counsel for the committee cannot be in a conflict of interest. Because the committee's recommendation is not final with respect to the outcome of the disciplinary process, the role played by the independent counsel neither violates procedural fairness nor raises a reasonable apprehension of bias in a large number of cases in the mind of an informed person viewing the matter realistically and practically and having thought the matter through.

Le droit à une audition impartiale a également été respecté. Bien que le Conseil de la magistrature n'exerce pas lui-même son pouvoir décisionnel puisqu'il est lié par les conclusions tirées par le comité, la structure décisionnelle du Conseil et de son comité ne viole pas la maxime delegatus non potest delegare. Les termes utilisés par la L.T.J. sont impératifs et reflètent une intention claire du législateur d'autoriser la délégation des pouvoirs d'enquête et de décision sur le bien-fondé d'une plainte à un comité formé de cinq personnes choisies parmi les membres du Conseil (art. 268, 278 et 279).

Même si 4 des 15 membres du Conseil de la magistrature ne sont pas des juges, la présence de personnes non membres de la magistrature au stade préliminaire du processus disciplinaire ne porte pas atteinte à la dimension collective ou institutionnelle du principe structurel de l'indépendance judiciaire en ce que seul un organisme composé de juges peut recommander la révocation d'un juge. Le rapport ainsi que les recommandations formulées par le comité d'enquête du Conseil ne constituent que la première étape du processus mis en place par la L.T.J. La recommandation définitive de destitution d'un juge d'une cour provinciale est exclusivement réservée au plus haut tribunal de la province. Dans ce contexte, la composition du comité d'enquête du Conseil de la magistrature est conforme au principe structurel de l'indépendance judiciaire et aux règles de l'équité procédurale. Enfin, le fonctionnement du comité d'enquête ne soulève pas une crainte raisonnable de partialité institutionnelle. Le procureur du comité ne joue pas le rôle de juge et partie. Le but recherché par le comité est de recueillir les faits et les éléments de preuve afin de formuler ultimement une recommandation au Conseil de la magistrature. En interrogeant et contre-interrogeant les témoins, le procureur n'agit pas comme un poursuivant, mais fournit une aide au comité dans l'accomplissement du mandat qui lui est confié par la loi. En l'absence de juge et de parties, le procureur du comité ne peut être en conflit d'intérêts. Puisque la recommandation du comité n'est pas définitive quant à l'issue du processus disciplinaire, le rôle joué par le procureur indépendant ne saurait porter atteinte à l'équité procédurale, ni soulever une crainte raisonnable de partialité dans un grand nombre de cas chez une personne bien renseignée qui étudierait la question en profondeur de façon réaliste et pratique.

The pardon granted to the appellant under the Criminal Records Act did not mean that he could deny his criminal record and answer "no" to the question regarding his "trouble with the law", which the selection committee asks people qualified for appointment as judges. An objective analysis of the Act does not support the argument that the pardon retroactively wipes out his conviction. While a pardon does not make the past go away, it expunges consequences for the future. The integrity of the pardoned person is restored and he or she need not suffer the effects associated with the conviction in an arbitrary or discriminatory manner. Even if the opinion subjectively formed by the appellant had to be considered, the Court of Appeal held that the appellant's record contained sufficient evidence tending to establish that he was aware of the meaning and effect of the Act and that he deliberately subjectively ignored them.

Le pardon obtenu par l'appelant conformément à la Loi sur le casier judiciaire ne l'autorisait pas à nier son dossier judiciaire et à répondre négativement à la question portant sur ses « démêlés avec la justice » posée par le comité de sélection des personnes aptes à être nommées juges. Une analyse objective de cette loi ne permet pas de soutenir que le pardon anéantit rétroactivement sa condamnation. Sans faire disparaître le passé, le pardon en efface les conséquences pour l'avenir. L'intégrité de la personne réhabilitée est rétablie et elle ne doit pas subir les effets liés à sa condamnation de façon arbitraire ou discriminatoire. Même si l'on devait considérer l'opinion que s'est subjectivement formée l'appelant, la Cour d'appel a jugé que le dossier de l'appelant contenait suffisamment d'éléments de preuve tendant à démontrer

The decision by the Minister of Justice to lodge an ethics complaint against the appellant was based primarily, perhaps exclusively, on the appellant's failure to disclose to the members of the selection committee that he had been in trouble with the law. Even though that decision was based in part on the existence of a criminal record, it did not infringe the appellant's equality rights under s. 15(1) of the Canadian Charter. Although there was differential treatment between the appellant and others who did not have a criminal history, and assuming, but without deciding the issue, that a criminal record is an analogous ground of discrimination for the purposes of s. 15(1), the Minister's decision cannot be regarded as discriminatory when we consider the relevant contextual factors. The Minister took into account the appellant's situation as a whole, as well as the situation of people who come before the court and are entitled to the highest degree of integrity, impartiality and independence on the part of the members of the judiciary in whom they place their confidence.

The appellant could have been asked the question about being in trouble with the law by the members of the selection committee without infringing the provisions of the Quebec Charter. Section 18.1 provides that no one may, in an employment interview, require a person to give information regarding any ground mentioned in s. 10 unless the information is useful for the application of s. 20. It is uncertain whether judicial office is included in the expression "employment" in s. 18.1 and a criminal record, even one for which a pardon has been granted, is not included in the grounds listed in s. 10. Even if the information related to one of the grounds listed in s. 10, the question would still be permitted in the selection process for persons qualified for appointment as judges since the distinction is based on the aptitudes or qualifications required for judicial office, which is deemed non-discriminatory by s. 20 of the Quebec Charter. The existence of a police file containing information relating to the appellant's criminal record is a supplementary source of information, but it cannot replace the selection committee and did not justify the appellant in not answering the question asked by the committee.

qu'il connaissait le sens et la portée de la loi et qu'il les a subjectivement ignorés.

La décision du ministre de la Justice de déposer une plainte déontologique contre l'appelant repose principalement, voire exclusivement, sur son omission de révéler l'existence de ses démêlés avec la justice aux membres du comité de sélection. Même si cette décision était fondée en partie sur la présence d'antécédents judiciaires, elle ne porterait pas atteinte au droit à l'égalité de l'appelant garanti par le par. 15(1) de la Charte canadienne. Bien qu'il ait subi une différence de traitement par rapport à d'autres personnes qui n'ont pas de passé pénal, et en tenant pour acquis, sans toutefois en décider, que les antécédents judiciaires constituent un motif de discrimination analogue au sens du par. 15(1), la décision du ministre ne peut être considérée discriminatoire à la lumière des facteurs contextuels pertinents. Le ministre a pris en considération l'ensemble de la situation de l'appelant ainsi que celle des justiciables qui sont en droit d'obtenir la plus grande intégrité, impartialité et indépendance de la part des membres de la magistrature envers lesquels ils accordent leur confiance.

La question des démêlés avec la justice pouvait être posée à l'appelant par les membres du comité de sélection et ce, sans porter atteinte aux dispositions de la Charte québécoise. L'article 18.1 prévoit que nul ne peut, lors d'une entrevue relative à un emploi, requérir d'une personne des renseignements sur les motifs visés dans l'art. 10, sauf si ces renseignements sont utiles à l'application de l'art. 20. Il n'est pas certain que la fonction judiciaire soit visée par le terme « emploi » prévu à l'art. 18.1 et les antécédents judiciaires, même pardonnés, ne font pas partie des motifs énumérés à l'art. 10. Même si l'information portait sur l'un des motifs prévus à l'art. 10, la question serait toujours permise dans le cadre d'un processus de sélection des personnes aptes à être nommées juges puisqu'il s'agit d'une distinction fondée sur les aptitudes ou les qualités requises par la fonction judiciaire laquelle est réputée non discriminatoire en vertu de l'art. 20 de la Charte québécoise. L'existence d'un dossier des forces policières contenant des renseignements relatifs aux antécédents judiciaires de l'appelant constitue un moyen d'information complémentaire, mais il ne saurait remplacer le comité de sélection et ne permettait pas à l'appelant de ne pas répondre à la question posée par le comité.

Section 18.2 of the Quebec Charter, which provides that no one may dismiss, refuse to hire or otherwise penalize a person in his employment owing to the mere fact that he was convicted of a penal or criminal offence, if the offence was in no way connected with the employment or if the person has obtained a pardon for the offence, cannot prevent the appellant from being removed. A careful examination of the conditions that must be met if that section is to apply clearly indicates that this provision does not apply to members of the judiciary. Judicial office is not an employment within the meaning of s. 18.2, by reason of the history of the judiciary and the nature, characteristics and requirements of the office. As well, the recommendations made by the Conseil de la magistrature and the Court of Appeal were not made owing to the mere fact that the appellant had been convicted of a criminal offence; rather, they were made solely because he had failed to disclose his criminal record to the selection committee. Lastly, the legislature, which was concerned about preserving the independence, impartiality and integrity of the judiciary, cannot have intended to deprive the government of its discretion to refuse to vest judicial authority in candidates whose past would be likely to undermine public confidence in its justice system.

Revocation of the appellant's commission is the appropriate sanction. The public's confidence in its justice system, which every judge must strive to preserve, is at the very heart of this case. The Court of Appeal made a thorough study and a balanced assessment of the appellant's situation and focused its decision on upholding the integrity of the judicial office. In the circumstances, and since it is the judicial forum appointed by the legislature to make determinations concerning the conduct of a judge, and a recommendation for removal in this case would not amount to arbitrary interference by the Executive in the exercise of the judicial function, the sanction that the Court of Appeal chose to impose should not be reviewed. The appellant's failure to be candid and to disclose relevant information when he was a candidate for the office of judge sufficiently undermined public confidence that he was incapable of performing the duties of his office.

Cases Cited

Applied: Valente v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673; distinguished: Thomson v. Canada (Deputy Minister of Quant à l'art. 18.2 de la Charte québécoise qui prévoit que nul ne peut congédier, refuser d'embaucher ou autrement pénaliser dans le cadre de son emploi une personne du seul fait qu'elle a été déclarée coupable d'une infraction pénale ou criminelle, si cette infraction n'a aucun lien avec l'emploi ou si cette personne en a obtenu le pardon, il ne peut empêcher la révocation de l'appelant. Un examen attentif des conditions d'application de cet article indique clairement que cette disposition est inapplicable aux membres de la magistrature. La fonction de juge ne constitue pas un emploi au sens de l'art. 18.2 et ce, en raison de l'histoire de la magistrature, la nature, les caractéristiques et les exigences de la fonction. De plus, les recommandations formulées par le Conseil de la magistrature et la Cour d'appel ne l'ont pas été du seul fait que l'appelant a été déclaré coupable d'une infraction criminelle, mais exclusivement parce que celui-ci a omis de révéler ses antécédents judiciaires au comité de sélection. Enfin, le législateur, ayant le souci de préserver l'indépendance, l'impartialité et l'intégrité des membres de la magistrature, ne peut avoir voulu priver le gouvernement du pouvoir discrétionnaire de refuser de confier des pouvoirs judiciaires à certains candidats dont le passé serait susceptible d'ébranler la confiance que porte le public dans son système de justice.

La révocation de la commission de l'appelant est la sanction appropriée. La confiance que porte le public envers son système de justice et que chaque juge doit s'efforcer de préserver est au cœur du présent litige. La Cour d'appel a fait une étude approfondie et une appréciation nuancée de la situation de l'appelant et elle a centré sa décision sur le maintien de l'intégrité de la fonction judiciaire. Dans ces circonstances, et eu égard aux faits qu'elle constitue le forum judiciaire désigné par le législateur pour se prononcer sur la conduite d'un juge et qu'une recommandation de destitution ne saurait équivaloir à une intervention arbitraire de l'exécutif dans l'exercice de la fonction judiciaire, il n'y a pas lieu de revenir sur le choix de la sanction imposée par la Cour d'appel. Le manque de transparence et l'omission de l'appelant à révéler des informations pertinentes alors qu'il était candidat au poste de juge a suffisamment ébranlé la confiance de la population pour le rendre incapable de s'acquitter des fonctions de sa charge.

Jurisprudence

Arrêt appliqué : Valente c. La Reine, [1985] 2 R.C.S. 673; distinction d'avec les arrêts : Thomson c. Canada

Agriculture), [1992] 1 S.C.R. 385; Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) v. Tobiass, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 391; R. v. Kelly, [2001] 1 S.C.R. 741, 2001 SCC 25; Thomas v. The Queen, [1980] A.C. 125; considered: Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 3; Ruffo v. Conseil de la magistrature, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 267; Beauregard v. Canada, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 56; R. v. Généreux, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 259; referred to: Dagenais v. Canadian Broadcasting Corp., [1994] 3 S.C.R. 835; A. (L.L.) v. B. (A.), [1995] 4 S.C.R. 536; Lady Davis v. Royal Trust Co., [1932] S.C.R. 203; Wartime Housing Ltd. v. Madden, [1945] S.C.R. 169; R. v. W. (G.), [1999] 3 S.C.R. 597; Luitjens v. Canada (Secretary of State) (1992), 9 C.R.R. (2d) 149; St. Anne Nackawic Pulp & Paper Co. v. Canadian Paper Workers Union, Local 219, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 704; Weber v. Ontario Hydro, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 929; Maurice v. Priel, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1023; R. v. Lippé, [1991] 2 S.C.R. 114; Nicholson v. Haldimand-Norfolk Regional Board of Commissioners of Police, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 311; Cardinal v. Director of Kent Institution, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 643; Baker v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), [1999] 2 S.C.R. 817; Syndicat des employés de production du Québec et de l'Acadie v. Canada (Canadian Human Rights Commission), [1989] 2 S.C.R. 879; 2747-3174 Québec Inc. v. Quebec (Régie des permis d'alcool), [1996] 3 S.C.R. 919; Canada (Attorney General) v. Canada (Commission of Inquiry on the Blood System), [1997] 3 S.C.R. 440; Pezim v. British Columbia (Superintendent of Brokers), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 557; Peralta v. Ontario, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 1045, aff'g (1985), 49 O.R. (2d) 705; Reference as to the Effect of the Exercise of the Royal Prerogative of Mercy upon Deportation Proceedings, [1933] S.C.R. 269; Reference re: Resolution to amend the Constitution, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 753; Dubois v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 350; Law v. Canada (Minister of Employment and Immigration), [1999] 1 S.C.R. 497; Commission des droits de la personne du Québec v. Cie Price Ltée, J.E. 81-866; Commission des droits de la personne du Québec v. Ville de Beauport, [1981] C.P. 292.

(Sous-ministre de l'Agriculture), [1992] 1 R.C.S. 385; Canada (Ministre de la Citoyenneté et de l'Immigration) c. Tobiass, [1997] 3 R.C.S. 391; R. c. Kelly, [2001] 1 R.C.S. 741, 2001 CSC 25; Thomas c. The Queen, [1980] A.C. 125; arrêts examinés : Renvoi relatif à la rémunération des juges de la Cour provinciale de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, [1997] 3 R.C.S. 3; Ruffo c. Conseil de la magistrature, [1995] 4 R.C.S. 267; Beauregard c. Canada, [1986] 2 R.C.S. 56; R. c. Généreux, [1992] 1 R.C.S. 259; arrêts mentionnés : Dagenais c. Société Radio-Canada, [1994] 3 R.C.S. 835; A. (L.L.) c. B. (A.), [1995] 4 R.C.S. 536; Lady Davis c. Royal Trust Co., [1932] R.C.S. 203; Wartime Housing Ltd. c. Madden, [1945] R.C.S. 169; R. c. W. (G.), [1999] 3 R.C.S. 597; Luitjens c. Canada (Secrétaire d'État) (1992), 9 C.R.R. (2d) 149; St. Anne Nackawic Pulp & Paper Co. c. Syndicat canadien des travailleurs du papier, section locale 219, [1986] 1 R.C.S. 704; Weber c. Ontario Hydro, [1995] 2 R.C.S. 929; Maurice c. Priel, [1989] 1 R.C.S. 1023; R. c. Lippé, [1991] 2 R.C.S. 114; Nicholson c. Haldimand-Norfolk Regional Board of Commissioners of Police, [1979] 1 R.C.S. 311; Cardinal c. Directeur de l'établissement Kent, [1985] 2 R.C.S. 643; Baker c. Canada (Ministre de la Citoyenneté et de l'Immigration), [1999] 2 R.C.S. 817; Syndicat des employés de production du Québec et de l'Acadie c. Canada (Commission canadienne des droits de la personne), [1989] 2 R.C.S. 879; 2747-3174 Québec Inc. c. Québec (Régie des permis d'alcool), [1996] 3 R.C.S. 919; Canada (Procureur général) c. Canada (Commission d'enquête sur le système d'approvisionnement en sang au Canada), [1997] 3 R.C.S. 440; Pezim c. Colombie-Britannique (Superintendent of Brokers), [1994] 2 R.C.S. 557; Peralta c. Ontario, [1988] 2 R.C.S. 1045, conf. (1985), 49 O.R. (2d) 705; Reference as to the Effect of the Exercise of the Royal Prerogative of Mercy upon Deportation Proceedings, [1933] R.C.S. 269; Renvoi: Résolution pour modifier la Constitution, [1981] 1 R.C.S. 753; Dubois c. La Reine, [1985] 2 R.C.S. 350; Law c. Canada (Ministre de l'Emploi et de l'Immigration), [1999] 1 R.C.S. 497; Commission des droits de la personne du Québec c. Cie Price Ltée, J.E. 81-866; Commission des droits de la personne du Québec c. Ville de Beauport, [1981] C.P. 292.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Act of Settlement, 12 & 13 Will. 3, c. 2.
An Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act, S.Q. 1941, c. 50, s. 2.
An Act to amend the Criminal Records Act and to amend another Act in consequence, S.C. 2000, c. 1, s. 4.

Lois et règlements cités

Act of Settlement, 12 & 13 Will. 3, ch. 2.
Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 7, 11, 15.
Charte des droits et libertés de la personne, L.R.Q., ch. C-12, art. 4, 5, 10 [mod. 1982, ch. 61, art. 3], 18.1 [idem, art. 5], 18.2 [idem; mod. 1990, ch. 4, art. 133], Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 7, 11,15.

Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms, R.S.Q., c. C-12, ss. 4, 5, 10 [am. 1982, c. 61, s. 3], 18.1 [idem, s. 5], 18.2 [idem; am. 1990, c. 4, s. 133], 20 [am. 1982, c. 61, s. 6; am. 1996, c. 10, s. 1].
Code of Civil Procedure, R.S.Q., c. C-25, ss. 25, 31, 33 [am. 1992, c. 57, s. 179], 46.
Constitution Act, 1867, preamble, ss. 92(4), (14), 96 to 100, 99.
Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 51.8.
Courts of Justice Act, R.S.Q., c. T-16, ss. 9 [am. 1988, c. 21, s. 12], 10, 86, 95 [am. 1988, c. 21, s. 30], 96, 248, 256 [am. 1988, c. 21, s. 56], 260, 262 [am. 1980, c. 11, s. 99; am. 1988, c. 21, s. 57; am. 1988, c. 74, s. 8; am. 1989, c. 52, s. 138], 263 [am. 1988, c. 21, s. 58], 266, 268 [idem, s. 60; am. 1990, c. 44, s. 24], 269, 272, 275, 277, 278, 279 [am. 1980, c. 11, s. 101; am. 1988, c. 21, s. 62; c. 74, s. 9], 281.
Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46, ss. 690, 748, 748.1, 749.
Criminal Records Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. 12 (1st Supp.), s. 5.
Criminal Records Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-47, ss. 5, 6, 7, 8.
Inquiries Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-11, s. 6.
Interpretation Act, R.S.Q., c. I-16, s. 57.
Judges of the Provincial Court Act, R.S.N.S. 1989, c. 238, s. 6(4).
Judicature Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. J-1, ss. 32.6(2)(h), 32.7(2), 32.91.
Judicial Code of Ethics, R.R.Q. 1981, c. T-16, r. 4.1, ss. 2, 4, 5, 10.
Professional Code, R.S.Q., c. C-26, ss. 45 [am. 1994, c. 40, s. 40], 116 [idem, s. 103].
Provincial Court Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 379, ss. 28(1), 29.
Provincial Court Act, R.S.M. 1987, c. C275, ss. 39.1(1)(h), 39.4.
Provincial Court Act, R.S.N.B. 1973, c. P-21, ss. 6.11(4)(d), 6.11(8).
Provincial Court Act, R.S.P.E.I. 1988, c. P-25, s. 10(7).
Provincial Court Act, 1991, S.N. 1991, c. 15, ss. 22, 23.
Provincial Court Act, 1998, S.S. 1998, c. P-30.11, ss. 62(2)(a), 62(7).
Public Order Regulations, 1970, SOR/70-444, ss. 3, 4(c), 5.
Regulation respecting the procedure for the selection of persons apt for appointment as judges, R.R.Q. 1981, c. T-16, r. 5, ss. 7, 18.
Supreme Court Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. S-26, ss. 2(1) "judgment", "final judgment", 40(1) [am. 1990, c. 8, s. 37], 53.
Territorial Court Act, R.S.N.W.T. 1988, c. T-2, s. 31.8. 20 [mod. 1982, ch. 61, art. 6; mod. 1996, ch. 10, art. 1].
Code criminel, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-46, art. 690, 748, 748.1, 749.
Code de déontologie de la magistrature, R.R.Q. 1981, ch. T-16, r. 4.1, art. 2, 4, 5, 10.
Code de procédure civile, L.R.Q., ch. C-25, art. 25, 31, 33 [mod. 1992, ch. 57, art. 179], 46 [idem, art. 422].
Code des professions, L.R.Q., ch. C-26, art. 45 [mod. 1994, ch. 40, art. 40], 116 [idem, art. 103].
Judges of the Provincial Court Act, R.S.N.S. 1989, ch. 238, art. 6(4).
Judicature Act, R.S.A. 1980, ch. J-1, art. 32.6(2)h), 32.7(2), 32.91.
Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, préambule, art. 92(4), (14), 96 à 100, 99.
Loi d'interprétation, L.R.Q., ch. I-16, art. 57.
Loi modifiant la Loi des tribunaux judiciaires, S.Q. 1941, ch. 50, art. 2.
Loi modifiant la Loi sur le casier judiciaire et une autre loi en conséquence, L.C. 2000, ch. 1, art. 4.
Loi sur la Cour provinciale, L.R.M. 1987, ch. C275, art. 39.1(1)h), 39.4.
Loi sur la Cour provinciale, L.R.N.-B. 1973, ch. P-21, art. 6.11(4)d), 6.11(8).
Loi sur la Cour suprême, L.R.C. 1985, ch. S-26, art. 2(1) « jugement », « jugement définitif », 40(1) [mod. 1990, ch. 8, art. 37], 53.
Loi sur la Cour territoriale, L.R.T.N.-O. 1988, ch. T-2, art. 31.8.
Loi sur la Cour territoriale, L.Y. 1998, ch. 26, art. 49(3)d), 50(2).
Loi sur le casier judiciaire, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-47, art. 5, 6, 7, 8.
Loi sur le casier judiciaire, S.R.C. 1970, ch. 12 (1er suppl.), art. 5.
Loi sur les enquêtes, L.R.C. 1985, ch. I-11, art. 6.
Loi sur les jeunes contrevenants, L.R.C. 1985, ch. Y-1, art. 36(1).
Loi sur les mesures de guerre, S.R.C. 1952, ch. 288.
Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires, L.R.O. 1990, ch. C.43, art. 51.8.
Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires, L.R.Q., ch. T-16 art. 9 [mod. 1988, ch. 21, art. 12; mod. 1995, ch. 42, art. 3, 46], 10 [mod. 1995, ch. 42, art. 4], 86, 95 [mod. 1988, ch. 21, art. 30], 96, 248, 256 [mod. 1988, ch. 21, art. 56], 260, 262 [mod. 1980, ch. 11, art. 99; mod. 1988, ch. 21, art. 57; mod. 1988, ch. 74, art. 8; mod. 1989, ch. 52, art. 138], 263 [mod. 1988, ch. 21, art. 58], 266, 268 [idem, art. 60; mod. 1990, ch. 44, art. 24], 269, 272, 275, 277, 278, 279 [mod. 1980, ch. 11, art. 101; mod. 1988, ch. 21, art. 62; ch. 74, art. 9], 281.

Territorial Court Act, S.Y. 1998, c. 26, ss. 49(3)(d), 50(2).
War Measures Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 288.
Young Offenders Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. Y-1, s. 36(1).

Provincial Court Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 379, art. 28(1), 29.
Provincial Court Act, R.S.P.E.I. 1988, ch. P-25, art. 10(7).
Provincial Court Act, 1991, S.N. 1991, ch. 15, art. 22, 23.
Provincial Court Act, 1998, S.S. 1998, ch. P-30.11, art. 62(2)a), 62(7).
Règlement de 1970 concernant l'ordre public, DORS/70-444, art. 3, 4*c*), 5.
Règlement sur la procédure de sélection des personnes aptes à être nommées juges, R.R.Q. 1981, ch. T-16, r. 5, art. 7, 18.

Authors Cited

Beetz, Jean. Présentation du premier conférencier de la Conférence du 10e anniversaire de l'Institut canadien d'administration de la justice, propos recueillis dans Mélanges Jean Beetz. Montréal: Thémis, 1995.

Brunelle, Christian. "La Charte québécoise et les sanctions de l'employeur contre les auteurs d'actes criminels œuvrant en milieu éducatif" (1995), 29 R.J.T. 313.

Canada. Proposal for Reform of the Criminal Records Act — Explanatory document by the Solicitor General of Canada, Recommendation No. 7. Ottawa: Solicitor General of Canada, July 20, 1991.

Canadian Judicial Council. Ethical Principles for Judges. Ottawa: Canadian Judicial Council, 1998.

Côté, Pierre-André. The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada, 3rd ed. Scarborough, Ont.: Carswell, 2000.

Dumont, Hélène. "Le casier judiciaire: criminel un jour, criminel toujours?", in Les Journées Maximilien-Caron 1995, Le respect de la vie privée dans l'entreprise: de l'affirmation à l'exercice d'un droit. Montréal: Université de Montréal, 1996.

Dumont, Hélène. Pénologie — Le droit canadien relatif aux peines et aux sentences. Montréal: Thémis, 1993.

Friedland, Martin L. A Place Apart: Judicial Independence and Accountability in Canada. Ottawa: Report prepared for the Canadian Judicial Council, 1995.

Gall, Gerald L. The Canadian Legal System. Toronto: Carswell, 1977.

Glenn, H. Patrick. "Indépendance et déontologie judiciaires" (1995), 55 R. du B. 295.

Morissette, Yves-Marie. "Figure actuelle du juge dans la cité" (1999), 30 R.D.U.S. 1.

Nadin-Davis, R. Paul. "Canada's Criminal Records Act: Notes on How Not to Expunge Criminal Convictions" (1980-81), 45 Sask. L. Rev. 221.

Doctrine citée

Beetz, Jean. Présentation du premier conférencier de la Conférence du 10e anniversaire de l'Institut canadien d'administration de la justice, propos recueillis dans Mélanges Jean Beetz. Montréal : Thémis, 1995.

Brunelle, Christian. « La Charte québécoise et les sanctions de l'employeur contre les auteurs d'actes criminels œuvrant en milieu éducatif » (1995), 29 R.J.T. 313.

Canada. Proposition de réforme de la Loi sur le casier judiciaire — Document explicatif du Solliciteur général du Canada, Recommandation no 7. Ottawa : Solliciteur général du Canada, 20 juillet 1991.

Conseil canadien de la magistrature. Principes de déontologie judiciaire. Ottawa : Conseil canadien de la magistrature, 1998.

Côté, Pierre-André. Interprétation des lois, 3e éd. Montréal : Thémis, 1999.

Dumont, Hélène. « Le casier judiciaire : criminel un jour, criminel toujours? », dans Les Journées Maximilien-Caron 1995, Le respect de la vie privée dans l'entreprise : de l'affirmation à l'exercice d'un droit. Montréal : Université de Montréal, 1996.

Dumont, Hélène. Pénologie — Le droit canadien relatif aux peines et aux sentences. Montréal : Thémis, 1993.

Friedland, Martin L. Une place à part : l'indépendance et la responsabilité de la magistrature au Canada. Ottawa : Rapport préparé pour le Conseil canadien de la magistrature, 1995.

Gall, Gerald L. The Canadian Legal System. Toronto : Carswell, 1977.

Glenn, H. Patrick. « Indépendance et déontologie judiciaires » (1995), 55 R. du B. 295.

Morissette, Yves-Marie. « Figure actuelle du juge dans la cité » (1999), 30 R.D.U.S. 1.

Ouellette, Yves. Les tribunaux administratifs au Canada: Procédure et preuve. Montréal: Thémis, 1997.

Oxford English Dictionary, 2nd ed., vol. XIX. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1989.

Quebec. Commission des droits de la personne et des droits de la jeunesse. Lignes directrices pour l'application de l'article 18.2, 12 mai 1988.

Russell, Peter H. The Judiciary in Canada: The Third Branch of Government. Toronto: McGraw-Hill Ryerson, 1987.

Singleton, Thomas J. "La discrimination fondée sur le motif des antécédents judiciaires et les instruments anti-discriminatoires canadiens" (1993), 72 Can. Bar Rev. 456.

Nadin-Davis, R. Paul. « Canada's Criminal Records Act: Notes on How Not to Expunge Criminal Convictions » (1980-81), 45 Sask. L. Rev. 221.

Ouellette, Yves. Les tribunaux administratifs au Canada : Procédure et preuve. Montréal : Thémis, 1997.

Oxford English Dictionary, 2nd ed., vol. XIX. Oxford : Clarendon Press, 1989.

Québec. Commission des droits de la personne et des droits de la jeunesse. Lignes directrices pour l'application de l'article 18.2, 12 mai 1988.

Russell, Peter H. The Judiciary in Canada: The Third Branch of Government. Toronto : McGraw-Hill Ryerson, 1987.

Singleton, Thomas J. « La discrimination fondée sur le motif des antécédents judiciaires et les instruments anti-discriminatoires canadiens » (1993), 72 R. du B. can. 456.

APPEAL from a report of the inquiry panel of the Quebec Court of Appeal, [1998] R.J.Q. 2956, 21 C.R. (5th) 296, [1998] Q.J. No. 3105 (QL), recommending the removal of a judge of the Court of Québec, and from a decision of the Quebec Court of Appeal, [1998] R.J.Q. 1392, [1998] Q.J. No. 1666 (QL), setting aside judgments of the Superior Court, [1998] Q.J. No. 180 (QL), J.E. 98-433, dismissing motions to dismiss applications for judicial review and for declaratory judgment. Appeal dismissed.

POURVOI contre un rapport de la formation d'enquête de la Cour d'appel du Québec, [1998] R.J.Q. 2956, 21 C.R. (5th) 296, [1998] A.Q. nº 3105 (QL), recommandant la révocation de la commission d'un juge de la Cour du Québec, et contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel du Québec, [1998] R.J.Q. 1392, [1998] A.Q. nº 1666 (QL), infirmant les jugements de la Cour supérieure, [1998] A.Q. nº 180 (QL), J.E. 98-433, qui ont rejeté des requêtes en irrecevabilité à l'encontre de requêtes en révision judiciaire et en jugement déclaratoire. Pourvoi rejeté.

Jean-Claude Hébert, Sophie Bourque and Christian Brunelle, for the appellant.

Jean-Claude Hébert, Sophie Bourque et Christian Brunelle, pour l'appelant.

Benoît Belleau, Robert Mongeon and Monique Rousseau, for the respondents.

Benoît Belleau, Robert Mongeon et Monique Rousseau, pour les intimées.

Lori Sterling and Sean Hanley, for the intervener the Attorney General for Ontario.

Lori Sterling et Sean Hanley, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Ontario.

Cedric L. Haines, Q.C., for the intervener the Attorney General for New Brunswick.

Cedric L. Haines, c.r., pour l'intervenant le procureur général du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Julius H. Grey and Elisabeth Goodwin, for the interveners the Office des droits des détenus and the Association des services de réhabilitation sociale du Québec.

Julius H. Grey et Elisabeth Goodwin, pour les intervenants l'Office des droits des détenus et l'Association des services de réhabilitation sociale du Québec.

English version of the judgment of the Court delivered by

GONTHIER J. —

I. Introduction

This appeal raises very important and for the most part novel questions. They are essentially of three types. First, it addresses questions concerning the jurisdiction of this Court and the courts below in relation to the disciplinary procedure for provincially appointed judges put in place by the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.Q., c. T-16 ("C.J.A."). Second, it challenges the constitutionality of s. 95 C.J.A. as regards the principle of the independence of the judiciary. Finally, it raises three sets of allegations relating to compliance with the rules of procedural fairness by the Conseil de la magistrature of Quebec and its committee of inquiry, the application of certain provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Canadian Charter") and the Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms, R.S.Q., c. C-12 ("Quebec Charter") that protect a person who has been pardoned, and the fitness of the sanction imposed on the appellant in the present proceedings.

II. Facts

In October 1970, Quebec was shaken by a serious political crisis. Richard Therrien was then a minor and a first-year law student in the Université de Montréal law faculty. He lived close to the faculty in his sister Colette's apartment on Queen Mary Road. Neither the brother nor the sister was at that time formally a member of the Front de libération du Québec ("F.L.Q."), an association declared to be unlawful by s. 3 of the Public Order Regulations, 1970, SOR/70-444, enacted under the War Measures Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 288. Richard Therrien's sister was, however, a friend of Jacques Rose. From October 17 to November 6, 1970, Paul Rose, Jacques Rose, Francis Simard and Bernard Lortie, the four F.L.Q. members associated with the kidnapping of the minister Pierre Laporte, hid in that apartment. Richard Therrien's involvement

Le jugement de la Cour a été rendu par

LE JUGE GONTHIER —

I. Introduction

Le présent pourvoi soulève des questions fort importantes et, pour la plupart, inédites. Elles sont essentiellement de trois ordres. D'abord, il pose des questions de compétence de notre Cour et des cours inférieures dans le cadre de la procédure disciplinaire des juges de nomination provinciale, mise en place par la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires, L.R.Q., ch. T-16 (« L.T.J. »). Ensuite, il met à l'épreuve la constitutionnalité de l'art. 95 L.T.J. en regard du principe de l'indépendance de la magistrature. Finalement, il soulève trois séries de moyens d'appel concernant le respect des règles de l'équité procédurale par le Conseil de la magistrature du Québec et son comité d'enquête, l'application de certaines dispositions de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés (« Charte canadienne ») et de la Charte des droits et libertés de la personne, L.R.Q., ch. C-12 (« Charte québécoise ») conférant une protection à une personne ayant fait l'objet d'un pardon, et le caractère approprié de la sanction imposée à l'appelant dans le cadre des présentes procédures. 1

II. Les faits

Octobre 1970, le Québec est secoué par une importante crise politique. À cette époque, Richard Therrien est mineur et étudiant en première année de droit à la Faculté de droit de l'Université de Montréal. Il réside à proximité de la Faculté dans l'appartement de sa sœur Colette, rue Queen Mary. Ni l'un ni l'autre n'est alors membre en règle du Front de libération du Québec (« F.L.Q. »), une association déclarée illégale par l'art. 3 du Règlement de 1970 concernant l'ordre public, DORS/70-444, adopté sous l'empire de la Loi sur les mesures de guerre, S.R.C. 1952, ch. 288. La sœur de Richard Therrien est toutefois une amie de Jacques Rose. Entre le 17 octobre et le 6 novembre 1970, Paul Rose, Jacques Rose, Francis Simard et Bernard Lortie, les quatre membres du F.L.Q. associés à l'enlèvement du ministre Pierre Laporte, 2

If it makes the recommendation provided for in paragraph b, the council suspends the judge for a period of thirty days.

Judicial Code of Ethics, R.R.Q. 1981, c. T-16, r. 4.1

2. The judge should perform the duties of his office with integrity, dignity and honour.

4. The judge should avoid any conflict of interest and refrain from placing himself in a position where he cannot faithfully carry out his functions.

5. The judge should be, and be seen to be, impartial and objective.

10. The judge should uphold the integrity and defend the independence of the judiciary, in the best interest of justice and society.

Regulation respecting the procedure for the selection of persons apt for appointment as judges, R.R.Q. 1981, c. T-16, r. 5

7. A candidate is deemed to have accepted that an investigation be carried out with respect to him with the Bar and with police authorities.

18. The committee determines the competence of the candidate for appointment as a judge. For that purpose, it assesses the personal and intellectual qualities of the candidate as well as his experience.

The committee assesses, in particular, the candidate's degree of legal knowledge in the areas of law in which the judge will perform his duties, as well as his capacity for judgment, his insight, his ability for evaluation, his sense of decision and his concept of a judge's duty.

2. Appellant's Arguments

The appellant argues, first, that the pardon he was granted under the Criminal Records Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-47 ("C.R.A.") (formerly R.S.C. 1970, c. 12 (1st Supp.)) retroactively vacated his conviction and allows him to deny its existence when he is asked whether he has "been in trouble with the law". He then claims the protection of the Canadian and Quebec charters. More specifically, he believes that he was discriminated against on the basis of a criminal record, contrary to s. 15 of the Canadian Charter, and was dismissed or other-

S'il fait la recommandation prévue par le paragraphe b, le conseil suspend le juge pour une période de trente jours.

Code de déontologie de la magistrature, R.R.Q. 1981, ch. T-16, r. 4.1

2. Le juge doit remplir son rôle avec intégrité, dignité et honneur.

4. Le juge doit prévenir tout conflit d'intérêt et éviter de se placer dans une situation telle qu'il ne peut remplir utilement ses fonctions.

5. Le juge doit de façon manifeste être impartial et objectif.

10. Le juge doit préserver l'intégrité et défendre l'indépendance de la magistrature, dans l'intérêt supérieur de la justice et de la société.

Règlement sur la procédure de sélection des personnes aptes à être nommées juges, R.R.Q. 1981, ch. T-16, r. 5

7. Un candidat est réputé accepter qu'une vérification soit faite à son sujet auprès du Barreau et des autorités policières.

18. Le comité détermine l'aptitude du candidat à être nommé juge. À cette fin, il évalue les qualités personnelles et intellectuelles du candidat ainsi que son expérience.

Il évalue notamment le degré de connaissance juridique de cette personne dans les domaines du droit dans lesquels le juge exercera ses fonctions, sa capacité de jugement, sa perspicacité, sa pondération, son esprit de décision et la conception qu'elle se fait de la fonction de juge.

2. Les prétentions de l'appelant

106 L'appelant prétend d'abord que le pardon qu'il a obtenu en vertu de la Loi sur le casier judiciaire, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-47 (« L.C.J. ») (auparavant S.R.C. 1970, ch. 12 (1er suppl.)), a annulé rétroactivement sa condamnation et lui permet de nier son existence lorsqu'on lui demande s'il a eu « des démêlés avec la justice ». Il invoque ensuite la protection des chartes canadienne et québécoise. Plus particulièrement, il estime avoir été victime de discrimination fondée sur l'existence d'antécédents judiciaires, contrairement à l'art. 15 de la Charte wise penalized in his employment owing to the mere fact that he was granted a pardon, contrary to s. 18.2 of the Quebec Charter. He also submits that his rights to dignity, honour and reputation, and to private life, which are protected by ss. 4 and 5 of the Quebec Charter, have been infringed, since the existence of his conviction has been disclosed despite the pardon, and he was defamed by members of the legislature. Finally, the appellant questions the application of the test for removal in his specific case. In his view, his conduct has not been so manifestly and profoundly destructive of the impartiality, integrity and independence of the justice system that the confidence of the public in his capacity to carry out his functions would be undermined.

canadienne et avoir été congédié ou autrement pénalisé dans le cadre de son emploi du seul fait qu'il a obtenu un pardon contrairement à l'art. 18.2 de la Charte québécoise. Il soutient également que ses droits à la dignité, à l'honneur et à la réputation, et à la vie privée protégés par les art. 4 et 5 de la Charte québécoise ont été brimés puisque l'existence de sa condamnation a été révélée malgré le pardon et qu'il fut l'objet de diffamation de la part des parlementaires. Finalement, l'appelant remet en question l'application du critère de destitution dans son cas particulier. Selon lui, sa conduite ne porte pas si manifestement et si totalement atteinte aux notions d'impartialité, d'intégrité et d'indépendance de la justice au point d'ébranler la confiance du public en sa capacité d'exercer ses fonctions.

107 By making these arguments, the appellant is inviting this Court to examine the very foundations of our justice system. The decision is, first and foremost, closely connected to the role a judge is called upon to play in that system and to the image of impartiality, independence and integrity he or she must project and strive to maintain.

En soulevant de tels arguments, l'appelant demande que notre Cour se penche sur les fondements mêmes de notre système de justice. La décision est, avant toute chose, intimement liée au rôle que le juge est appelé à y jouer et à l'image d'impartialité, d'indépendance et d'intégrité qu'il doit dégager et s'efforcer de préserver.

3. The Role of the Judge: "A Place Apart"

3. Le rôle du juge : « une place à part »

108 The judicial function is absolutely unique. Our society assigns important powers and responsibilities to the members of its judiciary. Apart from the traditional role of an arbiter which settles disputes and adjudicates between the rights of the parties, judges are also responsible for preserving the balance of constitutional powers between the two levels of government in our federal state. Furthermore, following the enactment of the Canadian Charter, they have become one of the foremost defenders of individual freedoms and human rights and guardians of the values it embodies: Beauregard, supra, at p. 70, and Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court, supra, at para. 123. Accordingly, from the point of view of the individual who appears before them, judges are first and foremost the ones who state the law, grant the person rights or impose obligations on him or her.

La fonction judiciaire est tout à fait unique. Notre société confie d'importants pouvoirs et responsabilités aux membres de sa magistrature. Mis à part l'exercice de ce rôle traditionnel d'arbitre chargé de trancher les litiges et de départager les droits de chacune des parties, le juge est aussi responsable de protéger l'équilibre des compétences constitutionnelles entre les deux paliers de gouvernement, propres à notre État fédéral. En outre, depuis l'adoption de la Charte canadienne, il est devenu un défenseur de premier plan des libertés individuelles et des droits de la personne et le gardien des valeurs qui y sont enchâssées : Beauregard, précité, p. 70, et Renvoi sur la rémunération des juges de cours provinciales, précité, par. 123. En ce sens, aux yeux du justiciable qui se présente devant lui, le juge est d'abord celui qui dit la loi, qui lui reconnaît des droits ou lui impose des obligations.

If we then look beyond the jurist to whom we assign responsibility for resolving conflicts between parties, judges also play a fundamental role in the eyes of the external observer of the judicial system. The judge is the pillar of our entire justice system, and of the rights and freedoms which that system is designed to promote and protect. Thus, to the public, judges not only swear by taking their oath to serve the ideals of Justice and Truth on which the rule of law in Canada and the foundations of our democracy are built, but they are asked to embody them (Justice Jean Beetz, Introduction of the first speaker at the conference marking the 10th anniversary of the Canadian Institute for the Administration of Justice, observations collected in Mélanges Jean Beetz (1995), at pp. 70-71).

109 Puis, au-delà du juriste chargé de résoudre les conflits entre les parties, le juge joue également un rôle fondamental pour l'observateur externe du système judiciaire. Le juge constitue le pilier de l'ensemble du système de justice et des droits et libertés que celui-ci tend à promouvoir et à protéger. Ainsi, pour les citoyens, non seulement le juge promet-il, par son serment, de servir les idéaux de Justice et de Vérité sur lesquels reposent la primauté du droit au Canada et le fondement de notre démocratie, mais il est appelé à les incarner (le juge Jean Beetz, Présentation du premier conférencier de la Conférence du 10e anniversaire de l'Institut canadien d'administration de la justice, propos recueillis dans Mélanges Jean Beetz (1995), p. 70-71).

Accordingly, the personal qualities, conduct and image that a judge projects affect those of the judicial system as a whole and, therefore, the confidence that the public places in it. Maintaining confidence on the part of the public in its justice system ensures its effectiveness and proper functioning. But beyond that, public confidence promotes the general welfare and social peace by maintaining the rule of law. In a paper written for its members, the Canadian Judicial Council explains:

110 En ce sens, les qualités personnelles, la conduite et l'image que le juge projette sont tributaires de celles de l'ensemble du système judiciaire et, par le fait même, de la confiance que le public place en celui-ci. Le maintien de cette confiance du public en son système de justice est garant de son efficacité et de son bon fonctionnement. Bien plus, la confiance du public assure le bien-être général et la paix sociale en maintenant un État de droit. Dans un ouvrage destiné à ses membres, le Conseil canadien de la magistrature explique :

> Public confidence in and respect for the judiciary are essential to an effective judicial system and, ultimately, to democracy founded on the rule of law. Many factors, including unfair or uninformed criticism, or simple misunderstanding of the judicial role, can adversely influence public confidence in and respect for the judiciary. Another factor which is capable of undermining public respect and confidence is any conduct of judges, in and out of court, demonstrating a lack of integrity. Judges should, therefore, strive to conduct themselves in a way that will sustain and contribute to public respect and confidence in their integrity, impartiality, and good judgment.
>
> (Canadian Judicial Council, Ethical Principles for Judges (1998), p. 14)

> La confiance et le respect que le public porte à la magistrature sont essentiels à l'efficacité de notre système de justice et, ultimement, à l'existence d'une démocratie fondée sur la primauté du droit. De nombreux facteurs peuvent ébranler la confiance et le respect du public à l'égard de la magistrature, notamment : des critiques injustifiées ou malavisées; de simples malentendus sur le rôle de la magistrature; ou encore toute conduite de juges, en cour ou hors cour, démontrant un manque d'intégrité. Par conséquent, les juges doivent s'efforcer d'avoir une conduite qui leur mérite le respect du public et ils doivent cultiver une image d'intégrité, d'impartialité et de bon jugement.
>
> (Conseil canadien de la magistrature, Principes de déontologie judiciaire (1998), p. 14)

The public will therefore demand virtually irreproachable conduct from anyone performing a judicial function. It will at least demand that they

111 La population exigera donc de celui qui exerce une fonction judiciaire une conduite quasi irréprochable. À tout le moins exigera-t-on qu'il paraisse give the appearance of that kind of conduct. They must be and must give the appearance of being an example of impartiality, independence and integrity. What is demanded of them is something far above what is demanded of their fellow citizens. This is eloquently expressed by Professor Y.-M. Morissette:

[TRANSLATION] [T]he vulnerability of judges is clearly greater than that of the mass of humanity or of "elites" in general: it is rather as if his or her function, which is to judge others, imposed a requirement that he or she remain beyond the judgment of others.

("Figure actuelle du juge dans la cité" (1999), 30 R.D.U.S. 1, at pp. 11-12)

In The Canadian Legal System (1977), Professor G. Gall goes even further, at p. 167:

The dictates of tradition require the greatest restraint, the greatest propriety and the greatest decorum from the members of our judiciary. We expect our judges to be almost superhuman in wisdom, in propriety, in decorum and in humanity. There must be no other group in society which must fulfil this standard of public expectation and, at the same time, accept numerous constraints. At any rate, there is no question that a certain loss of freedom accompanies the acceptance of an appointment to the judiciary.

avoir un tel comportement. Il devra être et donner l'apparence d'être un exemple d'impartialité, d'indépendance et d'intégrité. Les exigences à son endroit se situent à un niveau bien supérieur à celui de ses concitoyens. Le professeur Y.-M. Morissette exprime bien ce propos :

[L]a vulnérabilité du juge est nettement plus grande que celle du commun des mortels, ou des «élites» en général : c'est un peu comme si sa fonction, qui consiste à juger autrui, lui imposait de se placer hors de portée du jugement d'autrui.

(« Figure actuelle du juge dans la cité » (1999), 30 R.D.U.S. 1, p. 11-12)

Le professeur G. Gall, dans son ouvrage The Canadian Legal System (1977), va encore plus loin à la p. 167 :

[TRADUCTION] Les membres de notre magistrature sont, par tradition, astreints aux normes de retenue, de rectitude et de dignité les plus strictes. La population attend des juges qu'ils fassent preuve d'une sagesse, d'une rectitude, d'une dignité et d'une sensibilité quasi-surhumaines. Sans doute aucun autre groupe de la société n'est-il soumis à des attentes aussi élevées, tout en étant tenu d'accepter nombre de contraintes. De toute façon, il est indubitable que la nomination à un poste de juge entraîne une certaine perte de liberté pour la personne qui l'accepte.

112 The reasons that follow therefore cannot disregard two fundamental premises. First, and following from the foregoing, they cannot be dissociated from the very particular context of the judicial function. The judge is in "a place apart" in our society and must conform to the demands of this exceptional status (Friedland, supra). On the other hand, we also must not forget that this Court is sitting on appeal from the report of the inquiry panel of the Quebec Court of Appeal, to which a specific function has been assigned by s. 95 C.J.A. As I said earlier, the Court of Appeal, when it makes its report under that provision, is called upon to play a fundamental role in terms of both the ethical process itself and the principle of judicial independence. This Court must therefore respect that jurisdiction and show it the proper deference. This is

Les motifs qui suivent ne sauraient donc faire abstraction de deux prémisses fondamentales. D'abord et dans la lignée de ce qui précède, ils ne sauraient être dissociés du contexte très particulier dans lequel la fonction judiciaire s'inscrit. La magistrature occupe une « place à part » dans notre société et elle doit se conformer aux exigences requises par ce statut exceptionnel (Friedland, op. cit.). Par ailleurs, nous ne saurions également perdre de vue que notre Cour siège en appel du rapport de la formation d'enquête de la Cour d'appel du Québec, laquelle est dépositaire d'une fonction particulière qui lui est confiée par l'art. 95 L.T.J. Comme je le mentionnais précédemment, la Cour d'appel, lorsqu'elle rédige son rapport en vertu de cette disposition, est appelée à jouer un rôle fondamental tant au niveau du processus déontologique lui-même qu'à l'égard de l'application du principe de l'indépendance judiciaire. Notre Cour se doit

Trial Lawyers Association of British Columbia and Canadian Bar Association — British Columbia Branch Appellants/Respondents on cross-appeal

v.

Attorney General of British Columbia
Respondent/Appellant on cross-appeal

and

Attorney General of Canada, Attorney General of Ontario, Attorney General of Quebec, Attorney General of Alberta, Advocates' Society, West Coast Women's Legal Education and Action Fund and David Asper Centre for Constitutional Rights Interveners

Trial Lawyers Association of British Columbia et Association du Barreau canadien — Division de la Colombie-Britannique Appelantes/Intimées au pourvoi incident

c.

Procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique Intimé/Appelant au pourvoi incident

et

Procureur général du Canada, procureur général de l'Ontario, procureur général du Québec, procureur général de l'Alberta, Advocates' Society, West Coast Women's Legal Education and Action Fund et David Asper Centre for Constitutional Rights Intervenants

Indexed as: Trial Lawyers Association of British Columbia v. British Columbia (Attorney General)

2014 SCC 59

File No.: 35315.

2014: April 14; 2014: October 2.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell, Moldaver and Karakatsanis JJ.

Répertorié : Trial Lawyers Association of British Columbia c. Colombie-Britannique (Procureur général)

2014 CSC 59

N° du greffe : 35315.

2014 : 14 avril; 2014 : 2 octobre.

Présents : La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges LeBel, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell, Moldaver et Karakatsanis.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Constitutional law — Courts — Access to justice — Court hearing fees — Province enacting regulations establishing graduated court hearing fees — Regulations containing exemption provision from fees for persons who are "indigent" or "impoverished" — Whether province can establish hearing fee scheme under its administration of justice power pursuant to s. 92(14) of Constitution Act, 1867 — Whether regulations imposing hearing fees denying some people access to courts infringing core jurisdiction of s. 96 superior courts — Whether provincial hearing fee scheme constitutionally valid — Constitution

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE LA COLOMBIE-BRITANNIQUE

Droit constitutionnel — Cours — Accès à la justice — Frais d'audience — Règlement provincial fixant des frais d'audience progressifs — Règlement comportant une disposition dispensant des frais d'audience les personnes « indigentes » ("indigent") ou « démunies » ("impoverished") — La province peut-elle établir un régime de frais d'audience en vertu du pouvoir que lui confère l'art. 92(14) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 en matière d'administration de la justice? — Est-ce qu'un règlement qui impose des frais d'audience niant à certaines personnes l'accès aux tribunaux porte atteinte Act, 1867, ss. 92(14), 96 — Court Rules Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 80 — Supreme Court Rules, B.C. Reg. 221/90, as amended by B.C. Reg. 10/96 and B.C. Reg. 75/98 — Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, r. 20-5(1).

This case began as a family action. V and D were involved in a custody dispute. V went to court to have these issues resolved. In order to get a trial date, she had to undertake in advance to pay a court hearing fee. At the outset of the trial, V asked the judge to relieve her from paying the hearing fee. The judge reserved his decision on this request until the end of the trial. The parties were not represented by lawyers, and the hearing took 10 days. The hearing fee amounted to some $3,600 — almost the net monthly income of the family. After legal fees had depleted her savings, V could not afford the hearing fee.

Aware that there was some authority for the proposition that hearing fees are unconstitutional, the judge invited submissions and interventions on the subject from outside parties and stayed V's obligation to pay the hearing fee. Ultimately, the B.C. branch of the Canadian Bar Association ("CBA"), the Trial Lawyers Association of British Columbia ("Trial Lawyers") and the Attorney General of British Columbia (the "Province") intervened.

The Supreme Court Rules, which were in place at the time this case began, were replaced in 2010 by the Supreme Court Civil Rules. The constitutionality of the hearing fees set out in both rules of court is challenged. The current hearing fees escalate from no fee for the first three days of trial, to $500 for days four to ten, to $800 for each day over ten. Rule 20-5(1) of the Supreme Court Civil Rules provides for an exemption from hearing fees if the court finds that a person is "impoverished". The exemption in place at the time of the trial provided that a judge could waive all fees for a person who is "indigent".

The trial judge in this case ruled that the hearing fee provision was unconstitutional. The Court of Appeal agreed that the scheme could not stand as it is, but held that if the exemption provision were expanded by reading in the à la compétence fondamentale des cours supérieures visées à l'art. 96? — Le régime provincial de frais d'audience est-il constitutionnellement valide? — Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, art. 92(14), 96 — Court Rules Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 80 — Supreme Court Rules, B.C. Reg. 221/90, modifiées par B.C. Reg. 10/96 et B.C. Reg. 75/98 — Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, art. 20-5(1).

Au départ, la présente affaire était un litige de droit de la famille. V et D se disputaient la garde d'un enfant, et la première s'est adressée aux tribunaux pour faire trancher cette question et certaines autres. Pour faire fixer la date du procès, V a dû s'engager d'avance à payer des frais d'audience. Au début du procès, elle a demandé au juge de la dispenser du paiement de ces frais. Le juge a mis cette demande en délibéré jusqu'à la fin du procès. Les parties n'étaient pas représentées par avocat et l'audience a duré 10 jours. Les frais d'audience se sont élevés à quelque 3 600 $, une somme pratiquement égale au revenu mensuel net de la famille. Après avoir épuisé ses économies pour payer les honoraires d'avocat, V n'avait plus les moyens de payer les frais d'audience.

Au fait de certaines sources appuyant la thèse de l'inconstitutionnalité des frais d'audience, le juge a invité des tierces parties à intervenir et à présenter des observations sur le sujet et il a suspendu l'obligation de V de payer les frais d'audience. La Division de la Colombie-Britannique de l'Association du Barreau canadien (« ABC »), la Trial Lawyers Association of British Columbia (« Trial Lawyers ») et le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique (la « Province ») sont finalement intervenus.

Les Supreme Court Rules, qui étaient en vigueur au moment où la présente affaire a pris naissance, ont été remplacées en 2010 par les Supreme Court Civil Rules. La présente contestation de la constitutionnalité des frais d'audience vise tant ceux que fixaient les anciennes Règles que ceux établis dans les nouvelles. Les frais d'audience applicables actuellement passent de zéro pour les trois premiers jours d'audience à 500 $ par jour du quatrième au dixième jour, puis à 800 $ pour chaque jour après le dixième. Une dispense des frais d'audience est prévue au par. 20-5(1) des Supreme Court Civil Rules si le tribunal conclut qu'une personne est « impoverished » (« démunie »). L'exemption en vigueur au moment du procès précisait que le juge pouvait dispenser de tous les frais une personne « indigent » (« indigente »).

En l'espèce, le juge du procès a déclaré inconstitutionnelle la disposition relative aux frais d'audience. La Cour d'appel a elle aussi jugé que le régime ne pouvait être maintenu tel quel, mais elle a décidé que, si on élargissait words "or in need", it would pass constitutional muster. The Trial Lawyers and CBA appeal the remedy to this Court. The Province cross-appeals on the issue of the constitutionality of the hearing fees.

Held (Rothstein J. dissenting): The appeal should be allowed and the cross-appeal dismissed.

Per McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Abella, Moldaver and Karakatsanis JJ.: Levying hearing fees is a permissible exercise of the Province's jurisdiction under s. 92(14) of the Constitution Act, 1867; however, that power is not unlimited. It must be exercised in a manner that is consistent with s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and the requirements that flow by necessary implication from s. 96. Section 96 restricts the legislative competence of provincial legislatures and Parliament; neither level of government can enact legislation that removes part of the core or inherent jurisdiction of the superior courts. The historic task of the superior courts is to resolve disputes between individuals and decide questions of private and public law. Measures that prevent people from coming to the courts to have those issues resolved are at odds with this basic judicial function. Therefore, hearing fees that deny people access to the courts infringe the core jurisdiction of the superior courts and impermissibly impinge on s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

The connection between access to justice and s. 96 is further supported by considerations relating to the rule of law. The s. 96 function and the rule of law are inextricably intertwined. As access to justice is fundamental to the rule of law, it is natural that s. 96 provide some degree of constitutional protection for access to justice. Concerns about the rule of law in this case are not abstract or theoretical. If people cannot bring legitimate issues to court, laws will not be given effect, and the balance between the state's power to make and enforce laws and the courts' responsibility to rule on citizen challenges to them may be skewed.

Section 92(14), read in the context of the Constitution as a whole, does not give the provinces the power to administer justice in a way that denies the right of Canadians to access courts of superior jurisdiction. Any la portée de la disposition accordant l'exemption en considérant qu'elle comporte les mots « or in need » (« ou dans le besoin »), cette disposition résisterait à un contrôle de constitutionnalité. Trial Lawyers et l'ABC se pourvoient devant notre Cour à l'encontre de la réparation accordée par la Cour d'appel. Pour sa part, la Province forme un appel incident sur la question de la constitutionnalité des frais d'audience.

Arrêt (le juge Rothstein est dissident) : Le pourvoi est accueilli et le pourvoi incident est rejeté.

La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges LeBel, Abella, Moldaver et Karakatsanis : La perception de frais d'audience représente un exercice acceptable de la compétence reconnue à la Province par le par. 92(14) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. Cependant, ce pouvoir n'est pas illimité. Il doit être exercé conformément à l'art. 96 de cette loi et aux exigences qui découlent de cet article par déduction nécessaire. L'article 96 a pour effet de restreindre le pouvoir de légiférer des législatures et du Parlement; aucun ordre de gouvernement ne peut édicter de lois qui supprimeraient une partie de la compétence fondamentale ou inhérente des cours supérieures. Ces cours ont toujours eu pour tâche de résoudre des différends opposant des particuliers et de trancher des questions de droit privé et de droit public. Des mesures qui empêchent des gens de s'adresser à cette fin aux tribunaux vont à l'encontre de cette fonction fondamentale des cours de justice. Par conséquent, des frais d'audience qui ont pour effet de nier à des gens l'accès aux tribunaux portent atteinte à la compétence fondamentale des cours supérieures et contreviennent de façon inacceptable à l'art. 96 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867.

Des considérations relatives à la primauté du droit viennent étayer encore davantage l'existence du lien entre l'accès à la justice et l'art. 96. Le rôle que joue l'art. 96 et la primauté du droit sont inextricablement liés. Puisque l'accès à la justice est essentiel à la primauté du droit, il est naturel que l'art. 96 accorde une certaine protection constitutionnelle à l'accès à la justice. Les inquiétudes concernant la primauté du droit en l'espèce n'ont rien d'abstrait ou de théorique. Si les gens ne sont pas en mesure de saisir les tribunaux de questions légitimes, les lois ne seront pas appliquées, ce qui risque d'altérer l'équilibre entre le pouvoir de l'État de faire et d'appliquer des lois et la responsabilité des tribunaux de statuer sur les contestations de ces lois par des citoyens.

Considéré dans le contexte de l'ensemble de la Constitution, le par. 92(14) ne confère pas aux provinces le pouvoir d'administrer la justice d'une manière qui nie aux Canadiennes et aux Canadiens le droit d'avoir accès attempt to do so will run afoul of the constitutional protection for the superior courts found in s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

Hearing fees are unconstitutional when they deprive litigants of access to the superior courts. That point is reached when the hearing fees in question cause undue hardship to the litigant who seeks the adjudication of the superior court. A hearing fee scheme that does not exempt impoverished people clearly oversteps the constitutional minimum. But providing exemptions only to the truly impoverished may set the access bar too high. A fee that is so high that it requires litigants who are not impoverished to sacrifice reasonable expenses in order to bring a claim may, absent adequate exemptions, be unconstitutional because it subjects litigants to undue hardship, thereby effectively preventing access to the courts. It is the role of the provincial legislatures to devise a constitutionally compliant hearing fee scheme. But as a general rule, hearing fees must be coupled with an exemption that allows judges to waive the fees for people who cannot, by reason of their financial situation, bring non-frivolous or non-vexatious litigation to court. A hearing fee scheme can include an exemption for the truly impoverished, but the hearing fees must be set at an amount such that anyone who is not impoverished can afford them. Higher fees must be coupled with enough judicial discretion to waive hearing fees in any case where they would effectively prevent access to the courts because they require litigants to forgo reasonable expenses in order to bring claims.

The hearing fee scheme at issue in this case places an undue hardship on litigants and impedes the right of British Columbians to bring legitimate cases to court and is unconstitutional. The current exemptions do not provide sufficient discretion to the trial judge to exempt litigants from having to pay hearing fees in appropriate circumstances.

V is excused from paying the hearing fee. The hearing fee scheme prevents access to the courts in a manner inconsistent with s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and the aux cours de juridiction supérieure. Toute tentative en ce sens se heurtera à la protection constitutionnelle dont jouissent les cours supérieures en vertu de l'art. 96 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867.

Des frais sont inconstitutionnels lorsqu'ils privent des plaideurs de l'accès aux cours supérieures. Cette limite est atteinte dans les cas où les frais d'audience en question causent des difficultés excessives à un plaideur qui souhaite s'adresser à la cour supérieure. Un régime de frais d'audience qui ne dispense pas les personnes démunies de l'obligation de payer ces frais outrepasse clairement les limites minimales autorisées par la Constitution. Mais le fait de n'offrir des exemptions qu'aux personnes véritablement démunies pourrait se traduire par un coût d'accès trop élevé. Des frais si considérables qu'ils obligent des plaideurs non démunis à sacrifier des dépenses raisonnables pour présenter une réclamation peuvent, en l'absence d'exemptions adéquates, être inconstitutionnels parce qu'ils causent aux plaideurs des difficultés excessives et, de ce fait, les empêchent effectivement d'avoir accès aux tribunaux. C'est aux législateurs provinciaux qu'il appartient de concevoir des régimes de frais d'audience conformes à la Constitution. Mais, en règle générale, des frais d'audience doivent être assortis d'une exemption habilitant les juges à les écarter dans le cas des personnes qui, en raison de leur situation financière, ne pourraient soumettre aux tribunaux des litiges qui ne sont ni frivoles ni vexatoires. Un régime de frais d'audience peut comporter une exemption en faveur des personnes véritablement démunies, mais ces frais doivent être fixés à un montant tel que toute personne non démunie ait les moyens de les payer. Un régime exigeant le paiement de frais plus élevés doit conférer aux juges un pouvoir discrétionnaire suffisant pour leur permettre d'en dispenser les plaideurs dans tous les cas où ces frais empêcheraient effectivement ces personnes d'avoir accès aux tribunaux parce qu'ils les obligeraient à renoncer à des dépenses raisonnables afin de pouvoir exercer leurs recours.

Le régime de frais d'audience contesté en l'espèce cause des difficultés excessives aux plaideurs de la Colombie-Britannique et il porte atteinte à leur droit d'intenter des recours légitimes devant les tribunaux. Il est inconstitutionnel. Les exemptions actuelles n'accordent pas au juge du procès un pouvoir discrétionnaire suffisant pour dispenser les plaideurs d'avoir à payer les frais d'audience dans les cas qui s'y prêtent.

V est dispensée de payer les frais d'audience. Le régime de frais d'audience empêche l'accès aux tribunaux d'une manière qui contrevient à l'art. 96 de la Loi underlying principle of the rule of law. It therefore falls outside the Province's jurisdiction under s. 92(14) to administer justice.

The proper remedy is to declare the hearing fee scheme as it stands unconstitutional and leave it to the legislature or the Lieutenant Governor in Council to enact new provisions, should they choose to do so. "Reading in" is a remedy sparingly used, and available only where it is clear the legislature, faced with a ruling of unconstitutionality, would have made the change proposed. This condition is not met here. Further, modifying the exemption as suggested might still not cover all litigants who cannot afford the hearing fee and other provisions might be required in order to avoid the onerous or undignified process of proving that one falls within the exception.

Per Cromwell J.: This case can be resolved on administrative law grounds and it is unnecessary to address the broader constitutional issues. There is a common law right of reasonable access to civil justice. This right of reasonable access may only be abrogated by clear statutory language. This common law right is preserved by the Court Rules Act. The common law right of access to civil justice allows court fees, but only if there is an exemption to ensure that no person is prevented from making an arguable claim or defence because he or she lacks the resources to carry on the proceeding. This is a flexible standard: whether a person has the ability to pay the fees depends not only on wealth and income, but also on the amount of their reasonable, necessary expenses and the magnitude of the fees. If the hearing fee exemptions cannot be interpreted to ensure that the common law right of access is not defeated, then the fees are ultra vires the Court Rules Act.

Here, the trial judge found as a fact that the hearing fees are unaffordable and therefore limit access for litigants who do not fall within the exemptions for the indigent and the impoverished. The plain meaning of the exemption, referring to persons who are "impoverished" and "indigent", cannot be interpreted to cover people of modest means who are prevented from having a trial constitutionnelle de 1867 et au principe fondamental de la primauté du droit. Le régime outrepasse donc la compétence conférée à la Province en matière d'administration de la justice par le par. 92(14).

La réparation convenable consiste à déclarer que, dans sa forme actuelle, le régime de frais d'audience est inconstitutionnel et à laisser à la législature ou au lieutenant-gouverneur en conseil le soin d'édicter de nouvelles dispositions, s'ils décident de le faire. L'« interprétation extensive » est une réparation qui est rarement utilisée et qui ne peut l'être que dans les cas où il est clair que le législateur aux prises avec une déclaration d'inconstitutionnalité aurait apporté la modification proposée. Cette condition n'est pas remplie en l'espèce. En outre, il est même possible que la modification de l'exemption proposée ne permette pas d'englober tous les plaideurs qui n'ont pas les moyens de payer les frais d'audience, et il pourrait être nécessaire d'édicter d'autres dispositions pour éviter à un plaideur la démarche lourde ou humiliante de prouver que l'exception s'applique à lui.

Le juge Cromwell : La présente affaire peut être tranchée sur la base de principes de droit administratif et il n'est pas nécessaire de répondre aux questions constitutionnelles plus générales soulevées. Il existe en common law un droit d'accès raisonnable à la justice civile. Ce droit d'accès raisonnable ne peut être aboli que par des dispositions législatives claires. Ce droit reconnu par la common law est maintenu par la Court Rules Act. Le droit d'accès à la justice civile reconnu en common law autorise les frais d'audience, mais seulement s'il existe une exemption faisant en sorte qu'aucun justiciable ne sera empêché de présenter une demande ou une défense soutenable parce qu'il ne dispose pas des ressources nécessaires pour poursuivre l'instance. Il s'agit d'une norme souple : la question de savoir si une personne est en mesure de payer les frais dépend non seulement des biens qu'elle possède et de son revenu, mais également du montant des dépenses raisonnables et nécessaires qu'elle doit assumer, ainsi que de l'ampleur des frais exigés. Si les exemptions relatives aux frais d'audience ne peuvent être interprétées de manière à ne pas faire échec au droit d'accès reconnu en common law, les frais sont ultra vires de la Court Rules Act.

En l'espèce, le juge du procès a estimé, à titre de conclusion de fait, que les frais d'audience sont inabordables et qu'ils ont en conséquence pour effet de limiter l'accès aux tribunaux dans le cas des plaideurs qui n'entrent pas dans le champ d'application des exemptions visant les indigents et les démunis. Le sens ordinaire de l'exemption — qui fait état des personnes « impoverished » because of the hearing fees. The hearing fees do not meet the common law standard preserved by the Court Rules Act. The exemptions under the Court Rules Act cannot be interpreted in a way that is consistent with the common law right of access to civil justice which is preserved by the Court Rules Act. Thus, the fees are ultra vires the regulation-making authority conferred by the Court Rules Act.

Per Rothstein J. (dissenting): The British Columbia hearing fee scheme does not offend any constitutional right. There is no express constitutional right to access the civil courts without hearing fees. Section 92(14) of the Constitution Act, 1867 entrusts the administration of justice in the provinces to provincial legislatures. It is well established that provinces have the power under s. 92(14) to enact laws that prescribe conditions on access to the courts. Legislatures must balance a number of important values, including providing access to courts and ensuring that those same courts are adequately funded. They are accountable to voters for the choices they make. Absent a violation of the Charter and within the bounds of their constitutional jurisdiction, provincial legislatures have leeway to make policy decisions regarding the allocation of funding and the recovery of costs.

The hearing fee scheme in this case cannot be struck down on the basis of a novel reading of s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867. Section 96 protects the core jurisdiction of superior courts that is integral to their operations; however, it does not follow that legislation that places conditions on access to superior courts removes or infringes upon an aspect of their core jurisdiction. This Court has previously established a three-part test for determining whether legislation impermissibly removes an aspect of the core jurisdiction of superior courts. The majority does not apply this test because no aspect of the core jurisdiction of superior courts is removed by legislation that merely places limits on access to superior courts. In the absence of any demonstrated destruction of the core powers of the superior courts, there is no such removal sufficient to find a violation of s. 96. Instead, the majority significantly expands what is meant by the "core jurisdiction" of the superior courts beyond what is contemplated in the text or this Court's jurisprudence (« démunies ») et « indigent » (« indigentes ») — ne permet pas de considérer que cette exemption s'applique aux personnes qui disposent de moyens modestes et sont empêchées de s'adresser aux tribunaux en raison des frais d'audience. Les frais d'audience ne respectent pas la norme de common law qui est maintenue par la Court Rules Act. On ne peut interpréter les exemptions d'une manière compatible avec le droit d'accès à la justice civile que reconnaît la common law et qui est maintenu par la Court Rules Act. Par conséquent, ces frais outrepassent le pouvoir de réglementation conféré par la Court Rules Act.

Le juge Rothstein (dissident) : Le régime de frais d'audience de la Colombie-Britannique ne viole aucun droit constitutionnel. La Constitution ne garantit pas expressément aux justiciables un droit d'accès aux tribunaux civils sans qu'ils aient à verser des frais d'audience. Le paragraphe 92(14) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 confie aux assemblées législatives provinciales l'administration de la justice dans la province. Il est bien établi que les provinces possèdent, en vertu du par. 92(14), le pouvoir d'adopter des lois fixant des conditions régissant l'accès aux tribunaux. Les législatures doivent mettre en balance un certain nombre de valeurs importantes, notamment l'accès aux tribunaux et le financement adéquat de ces institutions. Elles doivent rendre compte aux électeurs des choix qu'elles font. Pourvu qu'ils ne violent pas la Charte et qu'ils agissent dans les limites de la compétence que leur confère la Constitution, les législateurs provinciaux possèdent la latitude voulue pour prendre des décisions de politique générale concernant l'affectation des deniers publics et la récupération des coûts.

Le régime de frais d'audience contesté en l'espèce ne peut être invalidé sur la base d'une interprétation nouvelle de l'art. 96 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. L'article 96 protège la compétence fondamentale des cours supérieures essentielle à leurs activités; toutefois, il ne s'ensuit pas qu'une loi imposant aux justiciables des conditions d'accès aux cours supérieures a pour effet de retirer à ces tribunaux un aspect de leur compétence fondamentale ou encore de porter atteinte à un tel aspect. La Cour a déjà établi un critère à trois volets permettant de décider si un texte de loi prive de façon inacceptable les cours supérieures d'un aspect de leur compétence fondamentale. Les juges majoritaires n'appliquent pas ce critère, car aucun aspect de la compétence fondamentale des cours supérieures n'est retiré par le texte de loi, lequel ne fait qu'imposer des limites à l'accès aux cours supérieures. Vu l'absence de toute démonstration de la destruction des pouvoirs fondamentaux des cours supérieures, nous ne sommes en présence d'aucun retrait de compétence on the scope of s. 96. The hearing fees are a financing mechanism and do not go to the very existence of the court as a judicial body or limit the types of powers it may exercise.

The unwritten principle of the rule of law does not support the striking down of legislation otherwise properly within provincial jurisdiction. The majority uses the rule of law to support reading a general constitutional right to access the superior courts into s. 96. Section 96 requires that the existence and core jurisdiction of superior courts be preserved, but this does not necessarily imply the general right of access to superior courts described by the majority. So long as the courts maintain their character as judicial bodies and exercise the core functions of courts, the demands of the Constitution are satisfied. In using an unwritten principle to support expanding the ambit of s. 96 to such an extent, the majority subverts the structure of the Constitution and jeopardizes the primacy of the written text. This purported constitutional right to access the courts circumvents the careful checks and balances built into the structure of the Charter. Unlike Charter rights, rights read into s. 96 are not subject to s. 1 justification or the s. 33 notwithstanding clause.

This Court has clearly and persuasively cautioned against using the rule of law to strike down legislation. To circumvent this caution, the majority characterizes the rule of law as a limitation on the jurisdiction of provinces under s. 92(14). Dressing the rule of law in division-of-powers clothing does not disguise the fact that the rule of law, an unwritten principle, cannot be used to support striking down the hearing fee scheme. Reading the unwritten principle of the rule of law too broadly would also render many of our written constitutional rights redundant and, in doing so, undermine the delimitation of those rights chosen by our constitutional framers. Provisions such as ss. 11(d) and 24(1) of the Charter would be unnecessary if the Constitution already contained a more general right to access superior courts. The rule of law is a vague and fundamentally disputed concept. To rely on suffisant pour permettre de conclure à une violation de l'art. 96. Les juges majoritaires élargissent plutôt le sens de la notion de « compétence fondamentale » des cours supérieures bien au-delà de ce qu'envisage le texte de l'art. 96 ou la jurisprudence de notre Cour sur la portée de cette disposition. Les frais d'audience constituent un mode de financement, et ils ne touchent pas à l'existence même du tribunal en tant qu'organisme judiciaire, ni ne limitent les types de pouvoirs qu'il peut exercer.

Le principe non écrit de la primauté du droit ne peut être invoqué pour invalider un texte de loi qui relève par ailleurs nettement du pouvoir de légiférer des provinces. S'appuyant sur la primauté du droit, les juges majoritaires considèrent, par voie d'interprétation extensive, que l'art. 96 confère un droit général d'accès aux cours supérieures garanti par la Constitution. Cette disposition requiert que l'existence et la compétence fondamentale des cours supérieures soient protégées, mais cela n'implique pas nécessairement l'existence du droit général d'accès aux cours supérieures décrit par les juges majoritaires. Tant que les cours conservent leur caractère d'organismes judiciaires et qu'elles exercent les fonctions fondamentales relevant des tribunaux, les exigences de la Constitution sont respectées. En invoquant un principe non écrit pour étayer un élargissement aussi grand de la portée de l'art. 96, les juges majoritaires bouleversent la structure de la Constitution et compromettent la primauté du texte écrit. Ce prétendu droit constitutionnel d'accès aux tribunaux élude les délicats mécanismes de poids et de contrepoids intégrés à la structure de la Charte. Contrairement aux droits garantis par celle-ci, les droits qui sont considérés faire partie de l'art. 96 par voie d'interprétation extensive ne sont assujettis à aucun processus de justification fondé sur l'article premier de la Charte ou à la disposition de dérogation de l'art. 33.

La Cour a formulé une mise en garde claire et convaincante contre le recours à la primauté du droit pour invalider une loi. Afin de contourner cette mise en garde, la majorité qualifie la primauté du droit de limite à la compétence conférée aux provinces par le par. 92(14). Intégrer la primauté du droit à une motivation basée sur le partage des compétences ne change toutefois pas le fait que la primauté du droit, un principe non écrit, ne peut être invoquée pour appuyer l'invalidation du régime de frais d'audience. Donner une interprétation trop large du principe non écrit de la primauté du droit aurait également pour effet de rendre superflu un bon nombre de nos droits constitutionnels écrits et, ce faisant, elle compromettrait ainsi la délimitation de ces droits établie par les rédacteurs de notre Constitution. Des dispositions telles l'al. 11*d*) et le par. 24(1) de la Charte seraient inutiles si this nebulous principle to invalidate legislation based on its content introduces uncertainty into constitutional law and undermines our system of positive law.

Even if there were a constitutional basis upon which to challenge the British Columbia hearing fee scheme, it would not be unconstitutional. The majority's approach to determining whether hearing fees prevent litigants from accessing the courts overlooks some important contextual considerations. In particular, the majority does not account for measures that offset the burden of hearing fees or eliminate them altogether. When these measures are taken into consideration, there is no indication that the hearing fees at issue would prevent litigants from bringing meritorious legal claims.

Cases Cited

By McLachlin C.J.

Distinguished: British Columbia (Attorney General) v. Christie, 2007 SCC 21, [2007] 1 S.C.R. 873, rev'g 2005 BCCA 631, 262 D.L.R. (4th) 51; applied: MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Simpson, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 725; Re Residential Tenancies Act, 1979, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 714; Crevier v. Attorney General of Quebec, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 220; referred to: Pleau v. Nova Scotia (Prothonotary) (1998), 186 N.S.R. (2d) 1; British Columbia v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2005 SCC 49, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 473; Reference re Senate Reform, 2014 SCC 32, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 704; Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 3; B.C.G.E.U. v. British Columbia (Attorney General), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 214, aff'g (1985), 20 D.L.R. (4th) 399; Hryniak v. Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 87; Schachter v. Canada, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 679.

By Cromwell J.

Referred to: Polewsky v. Home Hardware Stores Ltd. (2003), 66 O.R. (3d) 600; Fabrikant v. Canada, 2014 FCA 89, 459 N.R. 163; Toronto-Dominion Bank v. Beaton, 2012 ABQB 125, 534 A.R. 132; R. v. Lord Chancellor, Ex parte Witham, [1998] Q.B. 575; R. v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex p. Saleem, [2000] 4 All E.R. 814; Katz Group Canada Inc.

la Constitution garantissait déjà un droit général d'accès aux cours supérieures. La primauté du droit est une notion vague et fondamentalement contestée. S'appuyer sur ce principe nébuleux pour invalider un texte de loi en raison de son contenu introduit de l'incertitude dans le droit constitutionnel et mine notre système de droit positif.

Même s'il existait une assise constitutionnelle permettant de contester le régime de frais d'audience de la Colombie-Britannique, ce régime ne serait pas inconstitutionnel. L'analyse qu'appliquent les juges majoritaires afin de déterminer si les frais d'audience empêchent des plaideurs d'avoir accès aux tribunaux néglige certaines considérations contextuelles importantes. En particulier, les juges majoritaires ne tiennent pas compte des mesures qui permettent soit d'atténuer le fardeau créé par les frais d'audience soit d'éliminer complètement ces frais. Lorsque ces mesures sont prises en considération, rien n'indique que les frais d'audience en cause empêcheraient des plaideurs d'intenter des recours légitimes.

Jurisprudence

Citée par la juge en chef McLachlin

Distinction d'avec l'arrêt : Colombie-Britannique (Procureur général) c. Christie, 2007 CSC 21, [2007] 1 R.C.S. 873, inf. 2005 BCCA 631, 262 D.L.R. (4th) 51; arrêts appliqués : MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. c. Simpson, [1995] 4 R.C.S. 725; Renvoi relatif à la Loi de 1979 sur la location résidentielle, [1981] 1 R.C.S. 714; Crevier c. Procureur général du Québec, [1981] 2 R.C.S. 220; arrêts mentionnés : Pleau c. Nova Scotia (Prothonotary) (1998), 186 N.S.R. (2d) 1; Colombie-Britannique c. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltée, 2005 CSC 49, [2005] 2 R.C.S. 473; Renvoi relatif à la réforme du Sénat, 2014 CSC 32, [2014] 1 R.C.S. 704; Renvoi relatif à la rémunération des juges de la Cour provinciale de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, [1997] 3 R.C.S. 3; B.C.G.E.U. c. Colombie-Britannique (Procureur général), [1988] 2 R.C.S. 214, conf. (1985), 20 D.L.R. (4th) 399; Hryniak c. Mauldin, 2014 CSC 7, [2014] 1 R.C.S. 87; Schachter c. Canada, [1992] 2 R.C.S. 679.

Citée par le juge Cromwell

Arrêts mentionnés : Polewsky c. Home Hardware Stores Ltd. (2003), 66 O.R. (3d) 600; Fabrikant c. Canada, 2014 CAF 89 (CanLII); Toronto-Dominion Bank c. Beaton, 2012 ABQB 125, 534 A.R. 132; R. c. Lord Chancellor, Ex parte Witham, [1998] Q.B. 575; R. c. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex p. Saleem, [2000] 4 All E.R. 814; Katz Group Canada Inc. c.

v. Ontario (Health and Long-Term Care), 2013 SCC 64, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 810.

By Rothstein J. (dissenting)

OPSEU v. Ontario (Attorney General), [1987] 2 S.C.R. 2; British Columbia (Attorney General) v. Christie, 2007 SCC 21, [2007] 1 S.C.R. 873; Ontario v. Criminal Lawyers' Association of Ontario, 2013 SCC 43, [2013] 3 S.C.R. 3; MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Simpson, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 725; Re Residential Tenancies Act, 1979, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 714; Crevier v. Attorney General of Quebec, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 220; Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of Prince Edward Island, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 3; Reference re Secession of Quebec, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217; B.C.G.E.U. v. British Columbia (Attorney General), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 214; Reference re Manitoba Language Rights, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 721; British Columbia v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2005 SCC 49, [2005] 2 S.C.R. 473; Singh v. Canada (Attorney General), [2000] 3 F.C. 185; De Fehr v. De Fehr, 2001 BCCA 485, 156 B.C.A.C. 240; Hryniak v. Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 87; Combined Air Mechanical Services Inc. v. Flesch, 2011 ONCA 764, 108 O.R. (3d) 1.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

A Mean to help and speed poor Persons in their Suits (Eng.), 11 Hen. 7, c. 12 [Statute of Henry VII].
Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 1, 2, 7, 11(d), 24(1), 33.
Constitution Act, 1867, ss. 92(14), 96.
Court Rules Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 80.
Employment and Assistance Act, S.B.C. 2002, c. 40.
Employment and Assistance for Persons with Disabilities Act, S.B.C. 2002, c. 41.
Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, rr. 14-1, 20-5(1), (3), App. C, Sch. 1.
Supreme Court Family Rules, B.C. Reg. 169/2009, App. C, Sch. 1.
Supreme Court Rules, B.C. Reg. 221/90 [rep. 168/2009], App. C, Sch. 1 [rep. & sub. 10/96; idem 75/98].

APPEAL and CROSS-APPEAL from a judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (Donald, Chiasson and Garson JJ.A.), 2013 BCCA 65, 43 B.C.L.R. (5th) 217, 334 B.C.A.C. 71, 572 W.A.C. 71, 359 D.L.R. (4th) 524, [2013] 7 W.W.R. 478, 286 C.R.R. (2d) 26, [2013] B.C.J. No. 243 (QL), 2013 CarswellBC 354, setting aside a decision of McEwan J., 2012 BCSC 748, 260 C.R.R. (2d) 1, Ontario (Santé et Soins de longue durée), 2013 CSC 64, [2013] 3 R.C.S. 810.

Citée par le juge Rothstein (dissident)

SEFPO c. Ontario (Procureur général), [1987] 2 R.C.S. 2; Colombie-Britannique (Procureur général) c. Christie, 2007 CSC 21, [2007] 1 R.C.S. 873; Ontario c. Criminal Lawyers' Association of Ontario, 2013 CSC 43, [2013] 3 R.C.S. 3; MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. c. Simpson, [1995] 4 R.C.S. 725; Renvoi sur la Loi de 1979 sur la location résidentielle, [1981] 1 R.C.S. 714; Crevier c. Procureur général du Québec, [1981] 2 R.C.S. 220; Renvoi relatif à la rémunération des juges de la Cour provinciale de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard, [1997] 3 R.C.S. 3; Renvoi relatif à la sécession du Québec, [1998] 2 R.C.S. 217; B.C.G.E.U. c. Colombie-Britannique (Procureur général), [1988] 2 R.C.S. 214; Renvoi relatif aux droits linguistiques au Manitoba, [1985] 1 R.C.S. 721; Colombie-Britannique c. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltée, 2005 CSC 49, [2005] 2 R.C.S. 473; Singh c. Canada (Procureur général), [2000] 3 C.F. 185; De Fehr c. De Fehr, 2001 BCCA 485, 156 B.C.A.C. 240; Hryniak c. Mauldin, 2014 CSC 7, [2014] 1 R.C.S. 87; Combined Air Mechanical Services Inc. c. Flesch, 2011 ONCA 764, 108 O.R. (3d) 1.

Lois et règlements cités

A Mean to help and speed poor Persons in their Suits (Angl.), 11 Hen. 7, ch. 12 [Statute of Henry VII].
Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 1, 2, 7, 11*d*), 24(1), 33.
Court Rules Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 80.
Employment and Assistance Act, S.B.C. 2002, ch. 40.
Employment and Assistance for Persons with Disabilities Act, S.B.C. 2002, ch. 41.
Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, art. 92(14), 96.
Supreme Court Civil Rules, B.C. Reg. 168/2009, art. 14-1, 20-5(1), (3), app. C, ann. 1.
Supreme Court Family Rules, B.C. Reg. 169/2009, app. C, ann. 1.
Supreme Court Rules, B.C. Reg. 221/90 [abr. 168/2009], app. C, ann. 1 [abr. & rempl. 10/96; idem 75/98].

POURVOI et POURVOI INCIDENT contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique (les juges Donald, Chiasson et Garson), 2013 BCCA 65, 43 B.C.L.R. (5th) 217, 334 B.C.A.C. 71, 572 W.A.C. 71, 359 D.L.R. (4th) 524, [2013] 7 W.W.R. 478, 286 C.R.R. (2d) 26, [2013] B.C.J. No. 243 (QL), 2013 CarswellBC 354, qui a infirmé une décision du juge McEwan, 2012 BCSC 748, 260

[2012] B.C.J. No. 1016 (QL), 2012 CarswellBC 1485. Appeal allowed and cross-appeal dismissed, Rothstein J. dissenting.

Darrell W. Roberts, Q.C., and Chantelle M. Rajotte, for the appellant/respondent on cross-appeal the Trial Lawyers Association of British Columbia.

Sharon D. Matthews, Q.C., Melina Buckley and Michael Sobkin, for the appellant/respondent on cross-appeal the Canadian Bar Association — British Columbia Branch.

Bryant A. Mackey and J. Gareth Morley, for the respondent/appellant on cross-appeal.

Alain Préfontaine, for the intervener the Attorney General of Canada.

Rochelle Fox and Padraic Ryan, for the intervener the Attorney General of Ontario.

Alain Gingras and Dana Pescarus, for the intervener the Attorney General of Quebec.

Donald Padget, for the intervener the Attorney General of Alberta.

Joseph J. Arvay, Q.C., Kelly D. Jordan and Tim A. Dickson, for the intervener the Advocates' Society.

Francesca V. Marzari and Kasari Govender, for the intervener the West Coast Women's Legal Education and Action Fund.

Paul Schabas and Cheryl Milne, for the intervener the David Asper Centre for Constitutional Rights.

C.R.R. (2d) 1, [2012] B.C.J. No. 1016 (QL), 2012 CarswellBC 1485. Pourvoi accueilli et pourvoi incident rejeté, le juge Rothstein est dissident.

Darrell W. Roberts, c.r., et Chantelle M. Rajotte, pour l'appelante/intimée au pourvoi incident Trial Lawyers Association of British Columbia.

Sharon D. Matthews, c.r., Melina Buckley et Michael Sobkin, pour l'appelante/intimée au pourvoi incident l'Association du Barreau canadien — Division de la Colombie-Britannique.

Bryant A. Mackey et J. Gareth Morley, pour l'intimé/appelant au pourvoi incident.

Alain Préfontaine, pour l'intervenant le procureur général du Canada.

Rochelle Fox et Padraic Ryan, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Ontario.

Alain Gingras et Dana Pescarus, pour l'intervenant le procureur général du Québec.

Donald Padget, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Alberta.

Joseph J. Arvay, c.r., Kelly D. Jordan et Tim A. Dickson, pour l'intervenante Advocates' Society.

Francesca V. Marzari et Kasari Govender, pour l'intervenant West Coast Women's Legal Education and Action Fund.

Paul Schabas et Cheryl Milne, pour l'intervenant David Asper Centre for Constitutional Rights.

The judgment of McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Abella, Moldaver and Karakatsanis JJ. was delivered by

THE CHIEF JUSTICE —

I. Overview

[1] The issue in this case is whether court hearing fees imposed by the Province of British Columbia that deny some people access to the courts are constitutional. The trial judge, upheld on appeal, held that the legislation imposing the fees was unconstitutional. I agree.

[2] In my view, the fees at issue here violate s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867. Although the province can establish hearing fees under its power to administer justice under s. 92(14) of the Constitution Act, 1867, the exercise of that power must also comply with s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, which constitutionally protects the core jurisdiction of the superior courts. For the reasons discussed below, the fees impermissibly infringe on that jurisdiction by, in effect, denying some people access to the courts.

II. Facts

[3] This case began as a family action (2009 BCSC 434 (CanLII)). Ms. Vilardell and Mr. Dunham began a relationship in England and came to British Columbia, Canada, with their daughter. The relationship foundered, and the question arose — who should have custody of the child? Ms. Vilardell wanted to return with the child to Spain, her country of origin. Mr. Dunham wanted to keep the child in British Columbia. Ms. Vilardell also claimed an interest in Mr. Dunham's house.

[4] Ms. Vilardell went to court to have these issues resolved. In order to get a trial date, she had to undertake in advance to pay a court hearing fee. At the outset of the trial, Ms. Vilardell asked the Version française du jugement de la juge en chef McLachlin et des juges LeBel, Abella, Moldaver et Karakatsanis rendu par

LA JUGE EN CHEF —

I. Aperçu

[1] En l'espèce, il s'agit de décider de la constitutionnalité des frais d'audience qu'impose la province de la Colombie-Britannique et qui nient à certaines personnes l'accès aux tribunaux. Le juge de première instance, dont la décision a été confirmée en appel, a conclu que le texte de loi établissant les frais était inconstitutionnel. Je partage son avis.

[2] À mon avis, les frais en cause violent l'art. 96 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. Bien que la province puisse imposer des frais d'audience en vertu du pouvoir que lui confère le par. 92(14) de cette même loi en matière d'administration de la justice, elle doit exercer ce pouvoir conformément à l'art. 96, lequel accorde la protection de la Constitution à la compétence fondamentale des cours supérieures. Pour les raisons exposées ci-après, les frais litigieux portent atteinte de façon inacceptable à cette compétence pour le motif que, de par leur effet, ils nient à certaines personnes l'accès aux tribunaux.

II. Faits

[3] Au départ, la présente affaire était un litige de droit de la famille (2009 BCSC 434 (CanLII)). Madame Vilardell et Monsieur Dunham ont amorcé leur relation en Angleterre, puis ils sont venus s'installer en Colombie-Britannique avec leur fille. Leur relation a pris fin et la question suivante s'est posée : Qui devrait avoir la garde de l'enfant? Madame Vilardell voulait retourner avec celle-ci en Espagne, son pays d'origine. Quant à M. Dunham, il souhaitait garder leur fille avec lui en Colombie-Britannique. Madame Vilardell revendiquait également un intérêt dans la demeure de M. Dunham.

[4] Madame Vilardell s'est adressée aux tribunaux pour qu'ils tranchent ces questions. Pour faire fixer la date du procès, elle a dû s'engager d'avance à payer des frais d'audience. Au début du procès, [32] The historic task of the superior courts is to resolve disputes between individuals and decide questions of private and public law. Measures that prevent people from coming to the courts to have those issues resolved are at odds with this basic judicial function. The resolution of these disputes and resulting determination of issues of private and public law, viewed in the institutional context of the Canadian justice system, are central to what the superior courts do. Indeed, it is their very book of business. To prevent this business being done strikes at the core of the jurisdiction of the superior courts protected by s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867. As a result, hearing fees that deny people access to the courts infringe the core jurisdiction of the superior courts.

[33] The jurisprudence under s. 96 supports this conclusion. The cases decided under s. 96 have been concerned either with legislation that purports to transfer an aspect of the core jurisdiction of the superior court to another decision-making body or with privative clauses that would bar judicial review: Re Residential Tenancies Act, 1979, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 714; MacMillan Bloedel; Crevier v. Attorney General of Quebec, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 220. The thread throughout these cases is that laws may impinge on the core jurisdiction of the superior courts by denying access to the powers traditionally exercised by those courts.

[34] In Residential Tenancies, the law at issue unconstitutionally denied access to the superior courts by requiring that a certain class of cases be decided by an administrative tribunal. In Crevier, the law at issue unconstitutionally denied access to the superior courts by imposing a privative clause excluding the supervisory jurisdiction of the superior courts. In MacMillan Bloedel, the legislation at issue unconstitutionally barred access to the superior courts for a segment of society — young persons — by conferring an exclusive power on youth courts to try youths for contempt in the face of superior courts. This Court, per Lamer C.J., relied on Crevier, [32] Les cours supérieures ont toujours eu pour tâche de résoudre des différends opposant des particuliers et de trancher des questions de droit privé et de droit public. Des mesures qui empêchent des gens de s'adresser à cette fin aux tribunaux vont à l'encontre de cette fonction fondamentale des cours de justice. Considérées dans le contexte institutionnel du système de justice canadien, la résolution de ces différends et les décisions qui en résultent en matière de droit privé et de droit public sont des aspects centraux des activités des cours supérieures. De fait, les plaideurs constituent l'« achalandage » de ces tribunaux. Empêcher l'exercice de ces activités attaque le cœur même de la compétence des cours supérieures que protège l'art. 96 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. Par conséquent, des frais d'audience qui ont pour effet de nier à des gens l'accès aux tribunaux portent atteinte à la compétence fondamentale des cours supérieures.

[33] La jurisprudence relative à l'art. 96 étaye cette conclusion. Ces décisions portaient soit sur des textes de loi censés confier un aspect de la compétence fondamentale de la cour supérieure à un autre organisme décisionnel, soit sur des clauses privatives visant à empêcher le contrôle judiciaire : Renvoi relatif à la Loi de 1979 sur la location résidentielle, [1981] 1 R.C.S. 714; MacMillan Bloedel; Crevier c. Procureur général du Québec, [1981] 2 R.C.S. 220. Le dénominateur commun à toutes ces décisions est la possibilité que des lois portent atteinte à la compétence fondamentale des cours supérieures en empêchant certaines personnes de faire appel à elles et aux pouvoirs qu'elles exercent depuis toujours.

[34] Dans l'arrêt Location résidentielle, la loi litigieuse niait de manière inconstitutionnelle l'accès aux cours supérieures en exigeant qu'une certaine catégorie d'affaires soient décidées par un tribunal administratif. Dans Crevier, la loi contestée niait, encore une fois inconstitutionnellement, l'accès aux cours supérieures en imposant une clause privative qui écartait le pouvoir de surveillance de ces tribunaux. Dans MacMillan Bloedel, le texte de loi litigieux refusait inconstitutionnellement à une partie de la population, les jeunes, l'accès aux cours supérieures en conférant aux tribunaux pour adolescents le pouvoir exclusif de juger les concluding that "[it] establishes . . . that powers which are 'hallmarks of superior courts' cannot be removed from those courts" (MacMillan Bloedel, at para. 35).

[35] Here, the legislation at issue bars access to the superior courts in yet another way — by imposing hearing fees that prevent some individuals from having their private and public law disputes resolved by the courts of superior jurisdiction — the hallmark of what superior courts exist to do. As in MacMillan Bloedel, a segment of society is effectively denied the ability to bring their matter before the superior court.

[36] It follows that the province's power to impose hearing fees cannot deny people the right to have their disputes resolved in the superior courts. To do so would be to impermissibly impinge on s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867. Rather, the province's powers under s. 92(14) must be exercised in a manner that is consistent with the right of individuals to bring their cases to the superior courts and have them resolved there.

[37] This is consistent with the approach adopted by Major J. in Imperial Tobacco. The legislation here at issue — the imposition of hearing fees — must conform not only to the express terms of the Constitution, but to the "requirements . . . that flow by necessary implication from those terms" (para. 66). The right of Canadians to access the superior courts flows by necessary implication from the express terms of s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 as we have seen. It follows that the province does not have the power under s. 92(14) to enact legislation that prevents people from accessing the courts.

adolescents en cas d'outrage commis au cours des audiences d'une cour supérieure. Notre Cour, sous la plume du juge en chef Lamer, a cité Crevier et conclue que « [cet arrêt] établit qu'un pouvoir qui constitue une "marque [. . .] distinctive d'une cour supérieure" ne peut être retiré à ce tribunal » (MacMillan Bloedel, par. 35).

[35] En l'espèce, la loi litigieuse nie l'accès aux cours supérieures d'une autre façon — à savoir en établissant des frais d'audience qui empêchent certaines personnes de faire trancher leurs différends de droit privé et de droit public par les cours de juridiction supérieure, activité qui constitue la marque distinctive de la raison d'être de ces tribunaux. Tout comme dans MacMillan Bloedel, une partie de la population se voit effectivement nier la faculté de soumettre sa cause devant la cour supérieure.

[36] Par conséquent, le pouvoir de la province d'imposer des frais d'audience ne peut être exercé d'une manière qui nie aux gens le droit de faire trancher leurs différends par les cours supérieures. Leur nier ce droit reviendrait à porter atteinte de façon inacceptable à l'art. 96 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. La province doit plutôt exercer les pouvoirs que lui confère le par. 92(14) d'une manière compatible avec le droit des justiciables de soumettre leurs différends aux cours supérieures pour qu'elles les règlent.

[37] Cette conclusion est conforme à la démarche adoptée par le juge Major dans Imperial Tobacco. Le texte de loi en litige dans la présente affaire — qui impose des frais d'audience — doit respecter non seulement les termes exprès de la Constitution, mais également les « exigences [. . .] qui découlent [de ceux-ci] par déduction nécessaire » (par. 66). Comme nous l'avons vu, le droit d'accès des Canadiennes et des Canadiens aux cours supérieures découle par déduction nécessaire des termes exprès de l'art. 96 de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867. Il s'ensuit que la province ne dispose pas, en vertu du par. 92(14), du pouvoir d'adopter des lois qui empêchent les gens de s'adresser aux tribunaux.

[38] While this suffices to resolve the fundamental issue of principle in this appeal, the connection between s. 96 and access to justice is further supported by considerations relating to the rule of law. This Court affirmed that access to the courts is essential to the rule of law in B.C.G.E.U. v. British Columbia (Attorney General), [1988] 2 S.C.R. 214. As Dickson C.J. put it, "[t]here cannot be a rule of law without access, otherwise the rule of law is replaced by a rule of men and women who decide who shall and who shall not have access to justice" (p. 230). The Court adopted, at p. 230, the B.C. Court of Appeal's statement of the law ((1985), 20 D.L.R. (4th) 399, at p. 406):

> . . . access to the courts is under the rule of law one of the foundational pillars protecting the rights and freedoms of our citizens. . . . Any action that interferes with such access by any person or groups of persons will rally the court's powers to ensure the citizen of his or her day in court. Here, the action causing interference happens to be picketing. As we have already indicated, interference from whatever source falls into the same category. [Emphasis added.]

As stated more recently in Hryniak v. Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 87, per Karakatsanis J., "without an accessible public forum for the adjudication of disputes, the rule of law is threatened and the development of the common law undermined" (para. 26).

[39] The s. 96 judicial function and the rule of law are inextricably intertwined. As Lamer C.J. stated in MacMillan Bloedel, "[i]n the constitutional arrangements passed on to us by the British and recognized by the preamble to the Constitution Act, 1867, the provincial superior courts are the foundation of the rule of law itself" (para. 37). The very rationale for the provision is said to be "the maintenance of the rule of law through the protection of the judicial role": Provincial Judges Reference, at para. 88. As access to justice is fundamental to the rule of law, and the rule of law is fostered by the continued existence of the s. 96 courts, it is [38] Bien que cela soit suffisant pour trancher la question de principe que soulève le présent pourvoi, des considérations relatives à la primauté du droit viennent étayer encore davantage l'existence du lien entre l'art. 96 et l'accès à la justice. Dans B.C.G.E.U. c. Colombie-Britannique (Procureur général), [1988] 2 R.C.S. 214, notre Cour a confirmé que l'accès aux tribunaux est essentiel à la primauté du droit. Comme l'a dit le juge en chef Dickson, « [i]l ne peut y avoir de primauté du droit sans accès aux tribunaux, autrement la primauté du droit sera remplacée par la primauté d'hommes et de femmes qui décident qui peut avoir accès à la justice » (p. 230). À la p. 230, la Cour a fait sien l'énoncé du droit formulé par la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique ((1985), 20 D.L.R. (4th) 399, p. 406) :

> . . . [l]'accès aux tribunaux constitue sous le régime de la primauté du droit, un des piliers de base qui protège les droits et libertés de nos citoyens. [. . .] Du moment qu'une personne ou un groupe fait obstacle à cet accès, le tribunal exercera ses pouvoirs de manière à assurer aux justiciables leur accès au tribunal. En l'occurrence, l'entrave vient du piquetage. Comme nous l'avons déjà souligné, toutes les entraves, peu importe leur origine, tombent dans la même catégorie. [Je souligne.]

Comme l'a souligné tout récemment la juge Karakatsanis dans Hryniak c. Mauldin, 2014 CSC 7, [2014] 1 R.C.S. 87, « en l'absence d'un forum public accessible pour faire trancher les litiges, la primauté du droit est compromise et l'évolution de la common law, freinée » (par. 26).

[39] Le rôle de protection des tribunaux que joue l'art. 96 et la primauté du droit sont inextricablement liés. Comme l'a indiqué le juge en chef Lamer dans l'arrêt MacMillan Bloedel, « [s]elon les ententes constitutionnelles qui nous ont été transmises par l'Angleterre et qui sont reconnues dans le préambule de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, les cours supérieures provinciales constituent le fondement de la primauté du droit » (par. 37). La raison d'être même de la disposition est, affirme-t-on, « [le] maintien de la primauté du droit par la protection du rôle des tribunaux » : Renvoi relatif aux juges de la Cour provinciale, par. 88. Puisque l'accès only natural that s. 96 provide some degree of constitutional protection for access to justice.

[40] In the context of legislation which effectively denies people the right to take their cases to court, concerns about the maintenance of the rule of law are not abstract or theoretical. If people cannot challenge government actions in court, individuals cannot hold the state to account — the government will be, or be seen to be, above the law. If people cannot bring legitimate issues to court, the creation and maintenance of positive laws will be hampered, as laws will not be given effect. And the balance between the state's power to make and enforce laws and the courts' responsibility to rule on citizen challenges to them may be skewed: Christie v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2005 BCCA 631, 262 D.L.R. (4th) 51, at paras. 68-69, per Newbury J.A.

[41] This Court's decision in Christie does not undermine the proposition that access to the courts is fundamental to our constitutional arrangements. The Court in Christie — a case concerning a 7 percent surcharge on legal services — proceeded on the premise of a fundamental right to access the courts, but held that not "every limit on access to the courts is automatically unconstitutional" (para. 17). In the present case, the hearing fee requirement has the potential to bar litigants with legitimate claims from the courts. The tax at issue in Christie, on the evidence and arguments adduced, was not shown to have a similar impact.

[42] Nor does the argument that legislatures generally have the right to determine the cost of government services undermine the proposition that laws cannot prevent citizens from accessing the superior courts. (Indeed, the Attorney General does not assert such a proposition.) The right of the province à la justice est essentiel à la primauté du droit, et que celle-ci est favorisée par le maintien des cours visées à l'art. 96, il est naturel que cet article accorde une certaine protection constitutionnelle à l'accès à la justice.

[40] En présence d'un texte de loi qui nie effectivement à des gens le droit de soumettre leurs différends aux tribunaux, les inquiétudes concernant le maintien de la primauté du droit n'ont rien d'abstrait ou de théorique. Si les gens ne sont pas en mesure de contester en justice les mesures prises par l'État, ils ne peuvent obliger celui-ci à rendre des comptes — l'État serait alors au-dessus des lois ou perçu comme tel. Si les gens ne sont pas en mesure de saisir les tribunaux de questions légitimes, cela gênera la création et le maintien de règles de droit positif, car les lois ne seront pas appliquées. Et cela risquera d'altérer l'équilibre entre le pouvoir de l'État de faire et d'appliquer des lois et la responsabilité des tribunaux de statuer sur les contestations de ces lois par des citoyens : Christie c. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2005 BCCA 631, 262 D.L.R. (4th) 51, par. 68-69, la juge Newbury.

[41] L'arrêt Christie de notre Cour n'affaiblit pas la proposition voulant que l'accès aux tribunaux constitue un aspect fondamental de nos arrangements constitutionnels. Dans cet arrêt — qui concernait une surtaxe de 7 pour 100 imposée sur les services juridiques — la Cour est partie du principe qu'il existe un droit fondamental à l'accès aux tribunaux, mais elle a conclu que « [les] limite[s] à l'accès aux tribunaux [ne sont pas toutes] automatiquement inconstitutionnelle[s] » (par. 17). En l'espèce, l'obligation de payer les frais d'audience risque d'empêcher des plaideurs dont les réclamations sont légitimes d'avoir accès aux tribunaux. Au vu de la preuve et des arguments présentés dans Christie, il n'a pas été démontré que la taxe en cause dans cette affaire produisait le même effet.

[42] L'argument selon lequel les législatures ont généralement le droit de fixer le coût des services offerts par l'État n'affaiblit pas lui non plus la proposition voulant qu'on ne puisse, par des lois, empêcher les citoyens d'avoir accès aux cours supérieures. (D'ailleurs, le procureur général n'affirme to impose hearing fees is limited by constitutional constraints. In defining those constraints, the Court does not impermissibly venture into territory that is the exclusive turf of the legislature. Rather, the Court is ensuring that the Constitution is respected.

[43] I conclude that s. 92(14), read in the context of the Constitution as a whole, does not give the provinces the power to administer justice in a way that denies the right of Canadians to access courts of superior jurisdiction. Any attempt to do so will run afoul of the constitutional protection for the superior courts found in s. 96.

C. When Do Hearing Fees Become Unconstitutional?

[44] The remaining question is how to determine when hearing fees deny access to superior courts.

[45] Litigants with ample resources will not be denied access to the superior courts by hearing fees. Even litigants with modest resources are often capable of arranging their finances so that, with reasonable sacrifices, they may access the courts. However, when hearing fees deprive litigants of access to the superior courts, they infringe the basic right of citizens to bring their cases to court. That point is reached when the hearing fees in question cause undue hardship to the litigant who seeks the adjudication of the superior court.

[46] A hearing fee scheme that does not exempt impoverished people clearly oversteps the constitutional minimum — as tacitly recognized by the exemption in the B.C. scheme at issue here. But providing exemptions only to the truly impoverished may set the access bar too high. A fee that is so high that it requires litigants who are not impoverished to sacrifice reasonable expenses in order to bring a claim may, absent adequate exemptions, be unconstitutional because it subjects litigants to undue rien de tel.) Le droit de la province d'imposer des frais d'audience est limité par des contraintes d'ordre constitutionnel. En définissant ces contraintes, notre Cour ne s'aventure pas de manière inacceptable dans un domaine relevant exclusivement de la législature. Au contraire, elle veille au respect de la Constitution.

[43] Je conclus que, considéré dans le contexte de l'ensemble de la Constitution, le par. 92(14) ne confère pas aux provinces le pouvoir d'administrer la justice d'une manière qui nie aux Canadiennes et aux Canadiens le droit d'avoir accès aux cours de juridiction supérieure. Toute tentative en ce sens se heurtera à la protection constitutionnelle dont jouissent les cours supérieures en vertu de l'art. 96.

C. Dans quels cas des frais d'audience sont-ils inconstitutionnels?

[44] Il reste à décider dans quels cas des frais d'audience nient l'accès aux cours supérieures.

[45] Des frais d'audience ne nieront pas aux plaideurs bien nantis l'accès aux cours supérieures. De plus, même des plaideurs disposant de ressources modestes sont souvent capables d'organiser leurs finances de façon à pouvoir, moyennant certains sacrifices raisonnables, avoir accès aux tribunaux. Toutefois, lorsque des frais d'audience privent des plaideurs de l'accès aux cours supérieures, ces frais portent alors atteinte au droit fondamental des citoyens de soumettre leurs différends aux tribunaux. Cette limite est atteinte dans les cas où les frais d'audience en question causent des difficultés excessives à un plaideur qui souhaite s'adresser à la cour supérieure.

[46] Un régime de frais d'audience qui ne dispense pas les personnes démunies de l'obligation de payer ces frais outrepasse clairement les limites minimales autorisées par la Constitution — comme en témoigne tacitement l'exemption prévue par le régime de la Colombie-Britannique contesté en l'espèce. Mais le fait de n'offrir des exemptions qu'aux personnes véritablement démunies pourrait se traduire par un coût d'accès trop élevé. Des frais si considérables qu'ils obligent des plaideurs non

Walter Valente Appellant;

and

Her Majesty The Queen Respondent;

and

Attorney General of Canada, Attorney General of Quebec, Attorney General for Saskatchewan, Provincial Court Judges Association (Criminal Division) and Ontario Family Court Judges Association Interveners.

File No.: 17583.

1984: October 9, 10; 1985: December 19.

Present: Dickson C.J. and Beetz, Estey, McIntyre, Chouinard, Lamer and Le Dain JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

Courts — Charter of Rights — Independent tribunal — Provincial Court judge declined jurisdiction on ground Provincial Court (Criminal Division) not an independent tribunal — Whether or not judge of Provincial Court (Criminal Division) an independent tribunal.

Constitutional law — Charter of Rights — Courts — Independent tribunal — Jurisdiction declined on ground Provincial Court (Criminal Division) not an independent tribunal — Whether or not judge of Provincial Court (Criminal Division) an independent tribunal — Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s. 11(d) — Constitution Act, 1982, s. 52(1) — Provincial Courts Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 398 — Public Service Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 418 — Public Service Superannuation Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 419 — Provincial Courts Amendment Act, 1983, 1983 (Ont.), c. 18, s. 1 — Provincial Judges and Masters Statute Law Amendment Act, 1983, 1983 (Ont.), c. 78, s. 2(2) — Courts of Justice Act, 1984, 1984 (Ont.), c. 11.

A judge of the Provincial Court (Criminal Division), sitting on the Crown's appeal against the sentence imposed on the appellant following conviction for careless driving, declined to hear the appeal pending determination by a superior court as to whether the Provincial Court (Criminal Division) was an independent tribunal within the meaning of s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Among the several reasons advanced by counsel in support of the contention

Walter Valente Appelant;

et

Sa Majesté La Reine Intimée;

et

Procureur général du Canada, Procureur général du Québec, Procureur général de la Saskatchewan, Association des juges des Cours provinciales (Division criminelle) et Ontario Family Court Judges Association Intervenants.

N° du greffe: 17583.

1984: 9, 10 octobre; 1985: 19 décembre.

Présents: Le juge en chef Dickson et les juges Beetz, Estey, McIntyre, Chouinard, Lamer et Le Dain.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE L'ONTARIO

Tribunaux — Charte des droits — Tribunal indépendant — Juge de la Cour provinciale déclinant compétence parce que la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) n'est pas un tribunal indépendant — Un juge de la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) est-il un tribunal indépendant?

Droit constitutionnel — Charte des droits — Tribunaux — Tribunal indépendant — Compétence déclinée parce que la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) n'est pas un tribunal indépendant — Un juge de la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) est-il un tribunal indépendant? — Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 11d) — Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, art. 52(1) — Loi sur les cours provinciales, L.R.O. 1980, chap. 398 — Loi sur la fonction publique, L.R.O. 1980, chap. 418 — Loi sur le régime de retraite des fonctionnaires, L.R.O. 1980, chap. 419 — Provincial Courts Amendment Act, 1983, 1983 (Ont.), chap. 18, art. 1 — Provincial Judges and Masters Statute Law Amendment Act, 1983, 1983 (Ont.), chap. 78, art. 2(2) — Loi de 1984 sur les tribunaux judiciaires, 1984 (Ont.), chap. 11.

Dans un appel formé par Sa Majesté contre une peine infligée à l'appelant, reconnu coupable de l'infraction de conduite imprudente, un juge de la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) a décliné compétence pour entendre l'appel tant qu'une cour supérieure n'aurait pas déterminé si la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) était un tribunal indépendant au sens de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés. Parmi les nombreuses raisons soumises par l'avocat à l'appui de la that the Provincial Court (Criminal Division) was not an independent tribunal were the nature of the tenure of provincial court judges, particularly those holding office under a post-retirement reappointment, the manner in which their salaries and pensions were fixed and provided for, and the extent to which they were dependent for certain advantages and benefits on the discretion of the executive government. The Ontario Court of Appeal proceeded on the basis that the provincial court judge had in effect decided that as a matter of law the Provincial Court (Criminal Division) as an institution was not independent. It allowed the appeal, holding that both the Provincial Court Judge and the Provincial Court (Criminal Division) were independent, and remitted the matter to the Provincial Court Judge to determine whether the sentence imposed was a fit and proper sentence.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed and the constitutional question answered as follows: A judge of the Provincial Court (Criminal Division) of Ontario is an independent tribunal within the meaning of s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The concepts of "independence" and "impartiality" found in s. 11(d) of the Charter, although obviously related, are separate and distinct values or requirements. Impartiality refers to a state of mind or attitude of the tribunal in relation to the issues and the parties in a particular case. "Independence" reflects or embodies the traditional constitutional value of judicial independence and connotes not only a state of mind but also a status or relationship to others—particularly to the executive branch of government—that rests on objective conditions or guarantees. Judicial independence involves both individual and institutional relationships: the individual independence of a judge as reflected in such matters as security of tenure and the institutional independence of the court as reflected in its institutional or administrative relationships to the executive and legislative branches of government.

The test for independence for purposes of s. 11(d) of the Charter should be, as for impartiality, whether the tribunal may be reasonably perceived as independent. This perception must be a perception of whether the tribunal enjoys the essential objective conditions or guarantees of judicial independence and not a perception of how it will in fact act regardless of whether it enjoys such conditions or guarantees.

It would not be feasible to apply the most rigorous and elaborate conditions of judicial independence to the prétention que la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) n'est pas un tribunal indépendant, on trouve la nature de la charge des juges de cour provinciale, en particulier ceux qui occupent leur charge en vertu d'une nouvelle nomination après l'âge de la retraite, la manière dont leur traitement et pension sont fixés et versés et la mesure dans laquelle certains de leurs avantages sociaux dépendent du pouvoir discrétionnaire de l'exécutif. La Cour d'appel de l'Ontario a procédé sur le fondement que le juge de la Cour provinciale avait en réalité décidé qu'aux yeux du droit la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle), en tant qu'institution, n'était pas indépendante. Elle a accueilli l'appel, décidant que le juge de la Cour provinciale de même que la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) étaient indépendants et a renvoyé la question au juge de la Cour provinciale pour qu'il statue sur la régularité et l'à-propos de la peine infligée.

Arrêt: Le pourvoi est rejeté et la question constitutionnelle reçoit la réponse suivante: Un juge de la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) de l'Ontario est un tribunal indépendant au sens de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés.

Même s'il existe de toute évidence un rapport étroit entre les notions d'«indépendance» et d'«impartialité» que l'on trouve à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte, ce sont néanmoins des valeurs ou exigences séparées et distinctes. L'impartialité désigne un état d'esprit ou une attitude du tribunal vis-à-vis des points en litige et des parties dans une affaire donnée. Le terme «indépendance» reflète ou consacre la valeur constitutionnelle traditionnelle qu'est l'indépendance judiciaire et connote non seulement un état d'esprit, mais aussi un statut ou une relation avec autrui, particulièrement avec l'organe exécutif du gouvernement, qui repose sur des conditions ou garanties objectives. L'indépendance judiciaire fait intervenir des rapports tant individuels qu'institutionnels: l'indépendance individuelle d'un juge, qui se manifeste dans certains de ses attributs, telle l'inamovibilité, et l'indépendance institutionnelle du tribunal qui ressort de ses rapports institutionnels ou administratifs avec les organes exécutif et législatif du gouvernement.

Le critère de l'indépendance aux fins de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte doit être, comme dans le cas de l'impartialité, de savoir si le tribunal peut raisonnablement être perçu comme indépendant. Cette perception doit être celle d'un tribunal jouissant des conditions ou garanties objectives essentielles d'indépendance judiciaire, et non pas une perception de la manière dont il agira en fait, indépendamment de la question de savoir s'il jouit de ces conditions ou garanties.

Il ne serait pas possible d'appliquer les conditions les plus rigoureuses et les plus élaborées de l'indépendance constitutional requirement of independence in s. 11(d) of the Charter, which may have to be applied to a variety of tribunals. The essential conditions of judicial independence for purposes of s. 11(d) must bear some reasonable relationship to the variety of legislative and constitutional provisions in Canada governing matters which bear on the judicial independence of tribunals trying persons charged with an offence. It is the essence of the security afforded by the essential conditions of judicial independence that is appropriate for application under s. 11(d) of the Charter and not any particular legislative or constitutional formula by which it may be provided or guaranteed. Section 11(d) cannot be construed and applied so as to accord provincial court judges the same constitutional guarantees of security of tenure and security of salary and pension as superior court judges for that construction would, in effect, amend the judicature provisions of the Constitution. The standard of judicial independence cannot be a standard of uniform provisions but rather must reflect what is common to the various approaches to the essential conditions of judicial independence in Canada.

Security of tenure, because of the importance traditionally attached to it, is the first of the essential conditions of judicial independence for purposes of s. 11(d) of the Charter. The essentials of such security are that a judge be removable only for cause, and that cause be subject to independent review and determination by a process at which the judge affected is afforded a full opportunity to be heard. The essence of security of tenure for purposes of s. 11(d) is a tenure, whether until an age of retirement, for a fixed term, or for a specific adjudicative task, that is secure against interference by the Executive or other appointing authority in a discretionary or arbitrary manner.

Notwithstanding the importance of tradition as an objective condition tending to ensure the independence in fact of a tribunal, a provincial court judge who held office during pleasure under a post-retirement reappointment prior to the amendment in 1983 to s. 5(4) of the Provincial Courts Act was not an independent tribunal. The reasonable perception was that by providing for two classes of tenure the Legislature had deliberately, in the case of one category of judges, reserved to the Executive the right to terminate the holding of office without the necessity of any particular jurisdiction and without any inhibition or restraint arising from perceived tradition.

judiciaire à l'exigence constitutionnelle d'indépendance qu'énonce l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte, qui peut devoir s'appliquer à différents tribunaux. Les conditions essentielles de l'indépendance judiciaire, pour les fins de l'al. 11*d*), doivent avoir un lien raisonnable avec cet éventail de dispositions législatives et constitutionnelles qui au Canada régissent les questions touchant à l'indépendance judiciaire des tribunaux qui jugent les personnes accusées d'une infraction. C'est l'essence de la garantie fournie par les conditions essentielles de l'indépendance judiciaire qu'il convient d'appliquer en vertu de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte, et non pas quelque formule législative ou constitutionnelle particulière qui peut l'offrir ou l'assurer. L'alinéa 11*d*) ne peut pas être interprété et appliqué de manière à conférer aux juges de cour provinciale les mêmes garanties constitutionnelles d'inamovibilité et de sécurité de traitement et de pension que les juges des cours supérieures, parce qu'une telle interprétation aurait pour effet de modifier les dispositions de la Constitution relatives à la magistrature. La norme de l'indépendance judiciaire ne peut être l'uniformité des dispositions, mais doit plutôt refléter ce qui est commun aux diverses conceptions des conditions essentielles de l'indépendance judiciaire au Canada.

L'inamovibilité, de par son importance traditionnelle, est la première des conditions essentielles de l'indépendance judiciaire pour les fins de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte. Les conditions essentielles de l'inamovibilité sont que le juge ne puisse être révoqué que pour un motif déterminé, et que ce motif fasse l'objet d'un examen indépendant et d'une décision selon une procédure qui offre au juge visé la possibilité pleine et entière de se faire entendre. L'essence de l'inamovibilité pour les fins de l'al. 11*d*), que ce soit jusqu'à l'âge de la retraite, pour une durée fixe, ou pour une charge ad hoc, est que la charge soit à l'abri de toute intervention discrétionnaire ou arbitraire de la part de l'exécutif ou de l'autorité responsable des nominations.

Nonobstant l'importance de la tradition comme condition objective tendant à assurer l'indépendance de fait d'un tribunal, un juge de cour provinciale qui a occupé sa charge à titre amovible en vertu d'une nouvelle nomination après l'âge de la retraite, avant la modification apportée en 1983 au par. 5(4) de la Loi sur les cours provinciales, ne constituait pas un tribunal indépendant. Il est raisonnable de croire qu'en prévoyant deux genres de charge le corps législatif a délibérément, dans le cas d'une catégorie de juges, réservé à l'exécutif le droit de mettre fin à une charge, sans qu'aucune justification particulière ne soit nécessaire et sans aucune inhibition ou restriction imposée par une certaine perception de la tradition.

The Provincial Court Judge who declined jurisdiction did not hold office under a post-retirement reappointment. The fact that certain judges may have held office during pleasure at that time could not impair or destroy the independence of the Provincial Court (Criminal Division) as a whole. The objection would have to be taken to the status of the particular judge constituting the tribunal.

The second essential condition of judicial independence for purposes of s. 11(d) of the Charter is financial security—security of salary or other remuneration, and, where appropriate, security of pension. The essence of such security is that the right to salary and pension should be established by law and not be subject to arbitrary interference by the Executive in a manner that could affect judicial independence. In the case of pension, the essential distinction is between a right to pension and a pension that depends on the grace or favour of the Executive. Although it may be theoretically preferable that judicial salaries should be fixed by the legislature rather than the executive government and should be made a charge on the consolidated revenue fund rather than requiring annual appropriation, neither of these features should be regarded as essential to the financial security that may be reasonably perceived as sufficient for independence under s. 11(d) of the Charter. The right to salary of a provincial court judge is established by law, and there is no way in which the Executive could interfere with that right in a manner to affect the independence of the individual judge. It is impossible that the legislature would refuse to vote the annual appropriation in order to attempt to exercise some control or influence over a class of judges as a whole. The fact that the provisions respecting the pensions and other benefits of civil servants were made applicable to provincial court judges did not impair the independence of the latter. The provisions established a right to pension and other benefits which could not be interfered with by the Executive on a discretionary or arbitrary basis.

The third essential condition of judicial independence is the institutional independence of the tribunal with respect to matters of administration bearing directly on the exercise of its judicial function. Judicial control over such matters as assignment of judges, sittings of the court and court lists has been considered the essential or minimum requirement for institutional independence. Although an increased measure of administrative autonomy or independence for the courts may be desir-

Le juge de la cour provinciale qui s'est récusé n'occupait pas sa charge en vertu d'une nouvelle nomination postérieure à sa retraite. Le fait qu'à l'époque certains juges aient pu occuper leur charge à titre amovible ne saurait altérer ni détruire l'indépendance de la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) dans son ensemble. L'objection aurait dû viser le statut du juge particulier qui constituait le tribunal saisi.

La deuxième condition essentielle de l'indépendance judiciaire pour les fins de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte est la sécurité financière, c'est-à-dire un traitement ou autre rémunération assurés et, le cas échéant, une pension assurée. Cette sécurité consiste essentiellement en ce que le droit au traitement et à la pension soit prévu par la loi et ne soit pas sujet aux ingérences arbitraires de l'exécutif, d'une manière qui pourrait affecter l'indépendance judiciaire. Dans le cas de la pension, la distinction essentielle est entre un droit à une pension et une pension qui dépend du bon vouloir ou des bonnes grâces de l'exécutif. Bien qu'il puisse être théoriquement préférable que les traitements des juges soient fixés par le corps législatif, plutôt que par le pouvoir exécutif, et qu'ils grèvent le fonds du revenu consolidé, plutôt que d'exiger une affectation de crédit annuelle, ni l'une ni l'autre de ces caractéristiques ne doit être considérée comme essentielle à la sécurité financière qui peut être raisonnablement perçue comme suffisante pour assurer l'indépendance aux termes de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte. Le droit d'un juge de cour provinciale à un traitement est prévu par la loi et l'exécutif ne peut d'aucune manière empiéter sur ce droit de façon à affecter l'indépendance du juge pris individuellement. Il est impossible que le corps législatif refuse de voter l'affectation de crédit annuelle dans le but de tenter d'exercer un contrôle ou d'influer sur une catégorie de juges dans son ensemble. Le fait que les dispositions relatives aux pensions et aux autres avantages offerts aux fonctionnaires ont été rendues applicables aux juges de cour provinciale ne porte pas atteinte à l'indépendance de ces derniers. Ces dispositions créent un droit à une pension et à d'autres avantages qui ne peut faire l'objet d'une atteinte discrétionnaire ou arbitraire de l'exécutif.

La troisième condition essentielle de l'indépendance judiciaire est l'indépendance institutionnelle du tribunal relativement aux questions administratives qui ont directement un effet sur l'exercice de ses fonctions judiciaires. Le contrôle des juges sur des questions comme l'assignation des juges aux causes, les séances de la cour et le rôle de la cour est considéré comme essentiel ou comme une exigence minimale de l'indépendance institutionnelle. Même si une plus grande autonomie ou able it cannot be regarded as essential for purposes of s. 11(d) of the Charter.

While it may be desirable that discretionary benefits or advantages such as leave of absence with pay and permission to engage in extra-judicial employment, to the extent they should exist at all, should be under the control of the judiciary rather than the Executive, their control by the Executive does not touch one of the essential conditions of judicial independence for purposes of s. 11(d) of the Charter. It would not, moreover, be reasonable to apprehend that a provincial court judge would be influenced by the possible desire for one of these benefits or advantages to be less than independent in his or her adjudication.

Cases Cited

MacKay v. The Queen, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 370, considered; Re Evans and Milton (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 129; Committee for Justice and Liberty v. National Energy Board, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 369, referred to.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Act of Settlement, 12 & 13 Will. 3, c. 2.
Canadian Bill of Rights, R.S.C. 1970, App. III, s. 2(f).
Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, s. 11(d).
Constitution Act, 1867, ss. 99(1), (2), 100.
Constitution Act, 1982, s. 52(1).
Courts of Justice Act, 1984, 1984 (Ont.), c. 11, ss. 53(1), (2), 54(4), 56(1), 87(1), 88.
European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, art. 6.
Highway Traffic Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 202, s. 83.
Judges Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. J-1, ss. 33(1), 40, 41.
Provincial Courts Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 398, ss. 2, 5(4), 12(1), (2), 34(1).
Provincial Courts Amendment Act, 1983, 1983 (Ont.), c. 18, s. 1.
Provincial Judges and Masters Statute Law Amendment Act, 1983, 1983 (Ont.), c. 78, s. 2(2).
Provincial Offences Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 400, ss. 99, 114.
Public Service Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 418.
Public Service Superannuation Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 419, s. 26.
O. Reg. 332/84, s. 32(3).
R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 811, ss. 2, 4, 5, 7.
R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 881, ss. 7, 75, 76.

Authors Cited

Canadian Bar Association. Special Committee on the Independence of the Judiciary in Canada. Report.

indépendance administrative des tribunaux peut être souhaitable, elle ne saurait être considérée comme essentielle pour les fins de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte.

Il est peut-être souhaitable que des bénéfices ou avantages discrétionnaires comme les congés payés et l'autorisation de s'adonner à des activités extrajudiciaires, dans la mesure où il devrait y en avoir, soient contrôlés par le pouvoir judiciaire plutôt que par l'exécutif. Toutefois, leur contrôle par l'exécutif ne touche pas à l'une des conditions essentielles de l'indépendance judiciaire pour les fins de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte. De plus, il ne serait pas raisonnable de craindre qu'un juge de cour provinciale, influencé par l'éventuel désir d'obtenir l'un de ces bénéfices ou avantages soit loin d'être indépendant au moment de rendre jugement.

Jurisprudence

Arrêt examiné: MacKay c. La Reine, [1980] 2 R.C.S. 370; arrêts mentionnés: Re Evans and Milton (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 129; Committee for Justice and Liberty c. Office national de l'énergie, [1978] 1 R.C.S. 369.

Lois et règlements cités

Acte d'établissement, 12 & 13 Will. 3, chap. 2.
Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, art. 11*d*).
Code de la route, S.R.O. 1970, chap. 202, art. 83.
Convention de sauvegarde des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales, art. 6.
Déclaration canadienne des droits, S.R.C. 1970, app. III, art. 2*f*).
Loi constitutionnelle de 1867, art. 99(1), (2), 100.
Loi constitutionnelle de 1982, art. 52(1).
Loi de 1983 modifiant la Loi sur les cours provinciales, 1983 (Ont.), chap. 18, art. 1.
Loi de 1984 sur les tribunaux judiciaires, 1984 (Ont.), chap. 11, art. 53(1), (2), 54(4), 56(1), 87(1), 88.
Loi sur la fonction publique, L.R.O. 1980, chap. 418.
Loi sur le régime de retraite des fonctionnaires, L.R.O. 1980, chap. 419, art. 26.
Loi sur les cours provinciales, L.R.O. 1980, chap. 398, art. 2, 5(4), 12(1), (2), 34(1).
Loi sur les infractions provinciales, L.R.O. 1980, chap. 400, art. 99, 114.
Loi sur les juges, S.R.C. 1970, chap. J-1, art. 33(1), 40, 41.
Provincial Judges and Masters Statute Law Amendment Act, 1983, 1983 (Ont.), chap. 78, art. 2(2).
O. Reg. 332/84, art. 32(3).
R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 811, art. 2, 4, 5, 7.
R.R.O. 1980, Reg. 881, art. 7, 75, 76.

Doctrine citée

Association du Barreau canadien. Comité spécial sur l'indépendance de la magistrature au Canada. Rap-

The Independence of the Judiciary in Canada, Ottawa, Canadian Bar Foundation, 1985.
Denning, Sir Alfred. The Road to Justice, London, Stevens & Sons Ltd., 1955.
Deschênes, Jules, in collaboration with Carl Baar. Masters in their own house, Ottawa, Canadian Judicial Council, 1981.
Dickson, Brian. "The Rule of Law: Judicial Independence and the Separation of Powers," Address to the Canadian Bar Association, Halifax, August 21, 1985, unpublished manuscript, The Library, Supreme Court of Canada, Ottawa.
Fawcett, J. E. S. The Application of the European Convention on Human Rights, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1969.
Green, Sir Guy. "The Rationale and Some Aspects of Judicial Independence" (1985), 59 A.L.J. 135, 135-150.
Laskin, Bora. "Some Observations on Judicial Independence," Address to the Canadian Association of Provincial Court Judges, New Judges Programme, Ottawa, November 1, 1980, unpublished manuscript, The Library, Supreme Court of Canada, Ottawa.
Lederman, W. R. "The Independence of the Judiciary" (1956), 34 Can. Bar Rev. 769, 769-809, 1139-1179.
Lederman, W. R. "The Independence of the Judiciary" in The Canadian Judiciary, ed. A. M. Linden, Toronto, Osgoode Hall Law School, York University, 1976.
Shetreet, S. Judges on Trial: A Study of the Appointment and Accountability of the English Judiciary, Amsterdam, North-Holland Publishing Co., 1976.
Shetreet, S. "Judicial Independence: New Conceptual Dimensions and Contemporary Challenges" in Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate, eds. S. Shetreet and J. Deschênes, Dordrecht, The Netherlands, Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, 1985.
Shetreet, S. and J. Deschênes, eds. Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate, Dordrecht, The Netherlands, Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, 1985.
Universal Declaration on the Independence of Justice, adopted by the First World Conference on the Independence of Justice, Montreal, June 1983, in S. Shetreet and J. Deschênes, eds., Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate, Dordrecht, The Netherlands, Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, 1985.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal (1983), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 417, allowing an appeal from a judgment of Sharpe Prov. Ct. J. declining jurisdiction to hear the Crown's appeal as to sentence on appellant's conviction. Appeal dismissed.

port. L'Indépendance de la magistrature au Canada, Ottawa, Fondation du Barreau canadien, 1985.
Denning, Sir Alfred. The Road to Justice, London Stevens & Sons Ltd., 1955.
Déclaration universelle sur l'Indépendance de la Justice, adoptée par la Conférence mondiale sur l'Indépendance de la Justice, Montréal, juin 1983, dans S. Shetreet et J. Deschênes, eds., Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate, Dordrecht, The Netherlands, Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, 1985.
Deschênes, Jules, en collaboration avec Carl Baar. Maîtres chez eux, Ottawa, Conseil canadien de la magistrature, 1981.
Dickson, Brian. «The Rule of Law: Judicial Independence and the Separation of Powers,» Address to the Canadian Bar Association, Halifax, August 21, 1985, unpublished manuscript, The Library, Supreme Court of Canada, Ottawa.
Fawcett, J. E. S. The Application of the European Convention on Human Rights, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1969.
Green, Sir Guy. «The Rationale and Some Aspects of Judicial Independence» (1985), 59 A.L.J. 135, 135-150.
Laskin, Bora. «Some Observations on Judicial Independence,» Address to the Canadian Association of Provincial Court Judges, New Judges Programme, Ottawa, November 1, 1980, unpublished manuscript, The Library, Supreme Court of Canada, Ottawa.
Lederman, W. R. «The Independence of the Judiciary» (1956), 34 R. du B. can. 769, 769-809, 1139-1179.
Lederman, W. R. «The Independence of the Judiciary» in The Canadian Judiciary, ed. A. M. Linden, Toronto, Osgoode Hall Law School, York University, 1976.
Shetreet, S. Judges on Trial: A Study of the Appointment and Accountability of the English Judiciary, Amsterdam, North-Holland Publishing Co., 1976.
Shetreet, S. «Judicial Independence: New Conceptual Dimensions and Contemporary Challenges,» in Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate, eds. S. Shetreet and J. Deschênes, Dordrecht, The Netherlands, Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, 1985.
Shetreet, S. and J. Deschênes, eds. Judicial Independence: The Contemporary Debate, Dordrecht, The Netherlands, Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, 1985.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario (1983), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 417, qui a accueilli un appel contre un jugement du juge Sharpe de la Cour provinciale qui avait décliné compétence pour entendre un appel de Sa Majesté relativement à la peine infligée à l'appelant suite à sa déclaration de culpabilité. Pourvoi rejeté.

B. A. Crane, Q.C., and R. Noel Bates, for the appellant.

W. G. Blacklock, for the respondent.

Derek Aylen, Q.C., and Graham Garton, for the intervener the Attorney General of Canada.

Réal A. Forest and Angeline Thibault, for the intervener the Attorney General of Quebec.

James C. MacPherson, for the intervener the Attorney General for Saskatchewan.

Morris Manning, Q.C., for the interveners the Provincial Court Judges Association (Criminal Division) and Ontario Family Court Judges Association.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

LE DAIN J.—The general question raised by this appeal is what is meant by an independent tribunal in s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which provides:

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

. . .

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

The specific issue in the appeal is whether a provincial judge sitting as the Provincial Court (Criminal Division) in Ontario in December 1982 was an independent tribunal within the meaning of s. 11(d).

I

The appeal is by leave of this Court from the judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal on February 15, 1983, allowing an appeal from the judgment on December 16, 1982 of Sharpe J. of the Provincial Court (Criminal Division) for the Judicial District of Halton, who, sitting on the Crown's appeal, pursuant to s. 99 of the Provincial Offences Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 400, against the sentence imposed on the appellant following his conviction of the offence of careless driving contrary to s. 83 of The Highway Traffic Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 202, declined jurisdiction to hear the

B. A. Crane, c.r., et R. Noel Bates, pour l'appelant.

W. G. Blacklock, pour l'intimée.

Derek Aylen, c.r., et Graham Garton, pour l'intervenant le procureur général du Canada.

Réal A. Forest et Angeline Thibault, pour l'intervenant le procureur général du Québec.

James C. MacPherson, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de la Saskatchewan.

Morris Manning, c.r., pour les intervenants l'Association des juges des Cours provinciales (Division criminelle) et Ontario Family Court Judges Association.

Version française du jugement de la Cour rendu par

LE JUGE LE DAIN — La question générale que soulève ce pourvoi est de savoir ce qu'on entend par tribunal indépendant à l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés, lequel porte:

11. Tout inculpé a le droit:

. . .

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

Le point précis en litige dans ce pourvoi est de savoir si un juge siégeant en Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) de l'Ontario, en décembre 1982, constituait un tribunal indépendant au sens de l'al. 11*d*).

I

On se pourvoit, avec l'autorisation de cette Cour, contre l'arrêt rendu le 15 février 1983 par la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario, qui a accueilli l'appel du jugement rendu le 16 décembre 1982 par le juge Sharpe de la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) du district judiciaire de Halton qui, dans l'appel formé par Sa Majesté conformément à l'art. 99 de la Loi sur les infractions provinciales, L.R.O. 1980, chap. 400, contre la peine infligée à l'appelant, reconnu coupable de l'infraction de conduite imprudente décrite à l'art. 83 du Code de la route, S.R.O. 1970, chap. 202, a décliné compéappeal pending determination by a superior court whether the Provincial Court (Criminal Division) was an independent tribunal.

On the challenge before Sharpe J. to the independence of the Provincial Court (Criminal Division) counsel for the appellant advanced a number of reasons why in his submission the Court, because of the status of its judges as reflected in the provisions of the Provincial Courts Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 398, the Public Service Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 418, and the Public Service Superannuation Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 419, as well as regulations made thereunder, was not one which satisfied the requirement of s. 11(d) of the Charter. These reasons, as summarized by Sharpe J. under the heading "Perceptions of Dependence" and set out in the reasons for judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal, are as follows:

1. In that the salaries of the provincial judges are determined by the executive branch of the government without the benefit of the scrutiny of the legislature.

2. The judicial salaries are not a charge on the consolidated revenue fund, but are subject to annual appropriation.

3. Neither is there a pension charged on the consolidated revenue fund.

4. Nor is there any judicial pension other than one provided for under the Public Service Superannuation Act, and this notwithstanding s. 34 of the Provincial Courts Act.

5. Both the Act and the regulations provide for control of the judge and could be used to influence a judge or to apply real or perceived pressure to judges generally. Some of the sections that are capable of destroying the appearance of independence are as follows:

6. A judge may be appointed to sit during pleasure — s. 5(4) of the Provincial Courts Act. Moreover, any provincial court judge appointed after attaining the age of fifty-five years cannot receive any pension under the Public Service Superannuation Act unless the Cabinet reappoints him during pleasure after he reaches retirement age for a sufficient duration that he attains his minimum years of service to qualify for pension. Under the Judges Act, it is the Judge who chooses whether to retire. Can a provincial court judge under such a disabil-tence pour entendre l'appel, tant qu'une cour supérieure n'aurait pas déterminé si la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) était un tribunal indépendant.

Contestant devant le juge Sharpe l'indépendance de la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle), l'avocat de l'appelant a soumis un certain nombre de raisons pour lesquelles, selon lui, la cour, de par le statut de ses juges qui ressort des dispositions de la Loi sur les cours provinciales, L.R.O. 1980, chap. 398, la Loi sur la fonction publique, L.R.O. 1980, chap. 418, et la Loi sur le régime de retraite des fonctionnaires, L.R.O. 1980, chap. 419, ainsi que de leurs règlements d'application, ne satisferait pas à l'exigence de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte. Voici ces raisons, résumées par le juge Sharpe, sous le titre [TRADUCTION] «Perceptions de dépendance», et exposées dans les motifs de l'arrêt de la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario:

[TRADUCTION] 1. En ce que les traitements des juges de cour provinciale sont fixés par l'organe exécutif du gouvernement, sans droit de regard de l'assemblée législative.

2. Les traitements des juges ne sont pas une charge grevant le fonds du revenu consolidé, mais dépendent d'une affectation annuelle de crédit.

3. Aucune pension ne grève non plus le fonds du revenu consolidé.

4. Il n'existe d'ailleurs aucune autre pension pour les juges que celle que prévoit la Loi sur le régime de retraite des fonctionnaires, et ce, malgré l'art. 34 de la Loi sur les cours provinciales.

5. Tant la Loi que la réglementation prévoient le contrôle du juge et pourraient être utilisées pour influencer un juge ou pour faire pression sur les juges en général, ou être perçues comme telles. Voici certains articles susceptibles de détruire toute apparence d'indépendance:

6. Un juge peut être nommé à titre amovible — par. 5(4) de la Loi sur les cours provinciales. De plus, tout juge de cour provinciale nommé après qu'il a atteint l'âge de cinquante-cinq ans ne peut toucher une pension en vertu de la Loi sur le régime de retraite des fonctionnaires, à moins que le Cabinet ne le nomme à nouveau, à titre amovible, lorsqu'il atteint l'âge de la retraite, pour une période suffisamment longue pour lui permettre de cumuler le nombre minimum d'années de service requis pour avoir droit à une pension. Aux termes de la Loi sur ity be seen to be independent in a cause involving the Attorney General?

7. The Attorney General can appoint senior judges at greater pay than ordinary judges.

8. The executive branch can authorize judges to engage in any business, trade or occupation.

9. The Attorney General may authorize certain judges to do arbitrations, be conciliators, be a member of a police commission for which additional remuneration is received.

10. The executive branch purports to be able to appoint a rules committee composed of persons not necessarily judges for rules under the Criminal Code.

11. The executive branch has the power to make regulations for the inspection and destruction of judges' books, documents and papers (s. 34(1)(b) of the Provincial Courts Act).

12. In the regulations, the Attorney General can grant leave of absence for up to three years and the executive branch can grant it with pay.

13. This last mentioned regulation incorporates regulation 881 wherein judges are referred to as civil servants.

14. The judge has the same sick leave as a civil servant and his salary is reduced in the same manner as a civil servant when sick.

15. The Deputy Attorney General can require the judge to attend for medical examinations and to supply doctors' certificates.

16. A Deputy Attorney General can grant a judge a leave of absence for up to a year for employment with the Government of Canada or other public agency. A provincial judge in Ontario has been made a Deputy Minister while retaining his position as a judge, a matter deplored by Chief Justice Bora Laskin of the Supreme Court of Canada.

17. The judge receives the same financial benefits as the other civil servants as set out in s. 77, namely: (a) a basic life insurance plan, (b) a dependent's life insurance plan, (c) a long-term income protection plan, (d) a supplementary insurance plan, (e) a dental insurance plan. Some of these plans are paid for by the Government and all affect the financial status of the judge.

les juges, c'est le juge qui choisit ou non de prendre sa retraite. Un juge de cour provinciale assujetti à une telle incapacité peut-il être perçu comme indépendant dans une affaire impliquant le procureur général?

7. Le procureur général peut nommer des juges principaux dont le traitement est supérieur à celui des juges ordinaires.

8. Le pouvoir exécutif peut autoriser les juges à exercer tout commerce, métier ou occupation.

9. Le procureur général peut autoriser certains juges à agir à titre d'arbitres, de conciliateurs ou de membres d'une commission de police, auxquels cas ils reçoivent une rémunération supplémentaire.

10. Le pouvoir exécutif est apparemment en mesure de nommer un comité des règles de pratique, auquel ne siègent pas uniquement des juges, pour l'adoption de règles de pratique en vertu du Code criminel.

11. Le pouvoir exécutif peut établir des règlements portant sur l'inspection et la destruction des livres, documents et écrits des juges (al. 34(1)b) de la Loi sur les cours provinciales).

12. Suivant le règlement, le procureur général peut accorder un congé, pouvant aller jusqu'à trois ans, et le pouvoir exécutif peut l'accorder avec traitement.

13. Le dernier règlement mentionné incorpore le règlement 881 où l'on parle des juges comme étant des fonctionnaires.

14. Le juge a droit aux mêmes congés de maladie qu'un fonctionnaire et son traitement est réduit de la même manière qu'un fonctionnaire en cas de maladie.

15. Le sous-procureur général peut exiger d'un juge qu'il subisse des examens médicaux et fournisse des certificats médicaux.

16. Un sous-procureur général peut accorder à un juge un congé, pouvant aller jusqu'à un an, pour lui permettre de travailler pour le gouvernement du Canada ou un autre organisme public. Un juge de cour provinciale en Ontario a été nommé sous-ministre tout en conservant sa charge de juge, ce qu'a déploré le juge en chef Bora Laskin de la Cour suprême du Canada.

17. Le juge reçoit les mêmes bénéfices d'ordre financier que les autres fonctionnaires, comme l'indique l'art. 77, savoir: a) un plan d'assurance-vie de base, b) un plan d'assurance-vie pour les personnes à charge, c) un plan de protection de revenu garanti, d) un plan d'assurance supplémentaire, e) un plan d'assurance dentaire. Certains de ces plans sont payés par le gouvernement et tous influent sur la situation financière du juge.

18. The Provincial Courts Act provides for a procedure to remove a judge after an inquiry but it does not require a vote in the legislature as there is with a supreme court judge. The Public Service Act has a regulation under section [sic] 12 and 13 which includes a provincial court judge. The significance of this is that a provincial judge can be classified as a Crown employee and therefore under some direction by the executive branch of the government and there may be other Acts which have regulations that affect the provincial judges.

18. La Loi sur les cours provinciales établit une procédure de révocation d'un juge, après enquête, mais elle n'exige pas un vote de l'assemblée législative comme c'est le cas pour un juge de cour suprême. Un règlement d'application des art. 12 et 13 de la Loi sur la fonction publique inclut le juge de cour provinciale. Ce qui signifie qu'un juge de cour provinciale peut être classé comme employé de l'État et donc être assujetti jusqu'à un certain point aux directives de l'organe exécutif du gouvernement; il se peut qu'il y ait d'autres lois dont les règlements d'application touchent les juges de cour provinciale.

Counsel for the appellant submitted before Sharpe J. that since the Provincial Court (Criminal Division) was not an independent tribunal within the meaning of s. 11(d) of the Charter, s. 99 of the Provincial Offences Act, which conferred the right of appeal to the Court from the sentence imposed on the appellant, was of no force or effect by operation of s. 52(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, which provides:

52. (1) The Constitution of Canada is the supreme law of Canada and any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect.

L'avocat de l'appelant a fait valoir devant le juge Sharpe que, puisque la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) n'était pas un tribunal indépendant au sens de l'al. 11*d*) de la Charte, l'art. 99 de la Loi sur les infractions provinciales, qui confère le droit d'en appeler à la cour de la sentence imposée à l'appelant, était inopérant en vertu du par. 52(1) de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982 qui porte:

52. (1) La Constitution du Canada est la loi suprême du Canada; elle rend inopérantes les dispositions incompatibles de toute autre règle de droit.

After consideration of the submissions in support of the contention that the Provincial Court (Criminal Division) was not an independent tribunal, Sharpe J. took the position that he was disqualified by interest from determining the question of independence, and he declined jurisdiction in order that the question be determined by a superior court.

Après examen des arguments soumis à l'appui de la prétention que la Cour provinciale (Division criminelle) n'était pas un tribunal indépendant, le juge Sharpe s'est récusé, s'estimant partie intéressée pour ce qui était de statuer sur la question d'indépendance, et il a décliné compétence afin de laisser une cour supérieure trancher cette question.

