2000-01	625,131	88,479	713,610	141,873	571,737	51,743	519,994
2001-02	619,752	83,244	702,996	137,684	565,312	53,366	511,946
2002-03	615,830	83,196	699,026	139,456	559,570	54,245	505,325
2003-04	614,882	85,212	700,094	149,092	551,002	54,822	496,180
2004-05	607,232	97,740	704,972	155,385	549,587	54,870	494,717
2005-06	601,073	101,432	702,505	165,559	536,946	55,447	481,499
2006-07	599,252	106,511	705,763	181,858	523,905	56,637	467,268
2007-08	581,864	110,463	692,327	176,046	516,281	58,644	457,637
2008-09	710,163	113,999	824,162	298,949	525,213	61,503	463,710
2009-10	762,783	120,525	883,308	300,836	582,472	63,375	519,097
2010-11	801,811	119,060	920,871	303,963	616,908	66,581	550,327

Due to a break in the series following the introduction of full accrual accounting, data from 1983-84 onward are not directly comparable with earlier years.

Table 16

Unmatured debt held by outside parties

Year	Domestic marketable bonds [1]	Foreign marketable bonds [1, 2]	Total marketable bonds	Treasury bills [1]	Retail debt [3]	Canada Pension Plan bonds	Other unmatured debt	Unamortized discounts and premiums and cross-currency swap revaluation	Less: government's own holdings	Total
					(millions of dollars)
1966-67	11,018	523	11,541	2,310	6,017	2		-121	-200	19,549
1967-68	11,573	318	11,891	2,480	6,096	6		-138	-49	20,286
1968-69	12,294	600	12,894	2,840	6,169	12		-163	-47	21,705
1969-70	12,279	605	12,884	2,895	6,579	16		-183	-107	22,084
1970-71	13,021	495	13,516	3,735	7,804	21		-175	-60	24,841
1971-72	13,385	493	13,878	3,830	9,712	28		-169	-67	27,212
1972-73	13,423	491	13,914	4,290	10,989	35		-157	-60	29,011
1973-74	13,592	415	14,007	4,905	10,406	43		-156	-64	29,141
1974-75	14,311	365	14,676	5,630	12,915	52		-199	-77	32,997
1975-76	15,481	337	15,818	6,495	15,517	62		-257	-87	37,548
1976-77	17,748	335	18,083	8,255	16,304	72		-124	-89	42,501
1977-78	21,182	1,190	22,372	11,295	18,011	84		-191	-98	51,473
1978-79	26,532	7,376	33,908	13,535	19,247	96		-314	-146	66,326
1979-80	32,947	4,860	37,807	16,325	18,081	113		-497	-305	71,524
1980-81	40,849	4,794	45,643	21,770	15,812	136		-711	-223	82,427
1981-82	43,493	5,428	48,921	19,375	24,978	154		-626	-261	92,541
1982-83	48,377	6,385	54,762	29,125	32,641	171		-688	-137	115,874
1983-84	57,036	6,086	63,122	41,700	38,204	189	1,112	-1,016	-314	142,997
1984-85	69,438	9,057	78,495	52,300	41,960	205	1,112	-1,387	-241	172,444
1985-86	81,067	13,797	94,864	61,950	44,245	445	1,112	-1,492	-275	200,849
1986-87	94,426	11,997	106,423	76,950	44,309	1,796	1,112	-1,514	-867	228,209
1987-88	103,899	11,282	115,181	81,050	53,323	2,492	1,112	-2,005	-1,237	249,916
1988-89	115,748	8,320	124,068	102,700	47,756	3,005	1,112	-3,266	-1,228	274,147
1989-90	127,682	5,675	133,357	118,550	40,929	3,072	1,112	-4,029	-1,346	291,645
1990-91	143,600	4,526	148,126	139,150	34,444	3,492	1,112	-4,302	-1,309	320,713
1991-92	158,062	3,444	161,506	152,300	35,598	3,501	1,112	-3,326	-1,020	349,671
1992-93	178,465	5,409	183,874	162,050	34,369	3,505	1,112	-4,156	-1,057	379,697
1993-94	203,445	10,668	214,113	166,000	31,331	3,497	1,112	-2,907	-966	412,180
1994-95	225,747	16,921	242,668	164,450	31,386	3,488	1,838	-5,223	-994	437,613
1995-96	252,766	16,809	269,575	166,100	31,428	3,478	1,885	-3,544	-1,034	467,888
1996-97	282,563	23,016	305,579	135,400	33,493	3,468	1,935	-1,590	-1,088	477,197
1997-98	294,605	27,183	321,788	112,300	30,479	3,456	1,924	-528	-1,231	468,188
1998-99	295,774	36,000	331,774	96,950	28,217	4,063	2,614	-4	-3,312	460,302
1999-00	294,441	32,588	327,029	99,850	26,899	3,552	2,601	-2,823	-3,112	453,996
2000-01	295,487	33,664	329,151	88,700	26,416	3,473	2,591	-1,304	-2,869	446,158
2001-02	294,898	27,547	322,445	94,200	24,021	3,391	2,619	-1,737	-3,129	441,810
2002-03	289,208	21,603	310,811	104,600	22,584	3,371	2,664	-3,760	-2,727	437,543
2003-04	278,962	20,828	299,790	113,400	21,330	3,427	2,774	-5,247	-1,490	433,984
2004-05	266,674	16,543	283,217	127,200	19,080	3,393	2,932	-7,264	-1,134	427,424
2005-06	261,872	14,333	276,205	131,600	17,342	3,102	2,927	-9,038	-989	421,149
2006-07	257,909	10,617	268,526	134,100	15,175	1,743	3,096	-7,750	-698	414,192
2007-08	253,802	9,716	263,518	117,000	13,068	1,042	4,236	-7,633	-534	390,697
2008-09	295,322	10,649	305,971	192,500	12,532	523	4,184	-1,061	-629	514,020
2009-10	368,013	8,298	376,311	175,900	11,855	452	4,090	-9,325	-157	559,126
2010-11	416,411	7,681	424,092	163,000	10,141	27	3,875	-9,576	-404	591,155

[1] Including government holdings of its own debt.

[2] Including Canada bills, Canada notes and Euro medium-term notes.

[3] Includes Canada Savings Bonds and Canada Premium Bonds.

Due to a break in the series following the introduction of full accrual accounting, data from 1983-84 onward are not directly comparable with earlier years.

Provincial and Territorial Governments Public Accounts

Table 17

Newfoundland and Labrador

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal cash transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other[1]	Deficit (-) or surplus	Net debt
				(millions of dollars)
1987-88	1,328	1,218	2,546	2,286	457	2,743	-	-197	3,289
1988-89	1,350	1,315	2,664	2,436	454	2,890	-	-226	3,195
1989-90	1,505	1,426	2,931	2,647	459	3,106	-	-175	3,369
1990-91	1,569	1,398	2,967	2,824	490	3,314	-	-347	3,550
1991-92	1,681	1,427	3,108	2,888	496	3,384	-	-276	3,918
1992-93	1,693	1,500	3,194	2,967	488	3,455	-	-261	4,270
1993-94	1,696	1,462	3,158	2,864	500	3,364	-	-205	6,453
1994-95	1,887	1,710	3,597	3,041	1,004	4,045	74	-374	6,831
1995-96	2,076	1,572	3,647	3,115	822	3,937	100	-190	7,121
1996-97	2,132	1,578	3,711	3,092	819	3,911	93	-107	7,254
1997-98	1,981	2,019	4,000	3,131	865	3,996	129	133	7,301
1998-99	1,961	1,834	3,795	3,131	1,008	4,139	157	-187	7,851
1999-00	2,134	1,620	3,755	3,285	883	4,168	144	-269	8,087
2000-01	2,144	1,757	3,901	3,430	951	4,382	131	-350	8,437
2001-02	2,243	1,657	3,900	3,572	942	4,514	146	-468	8,932
2002-03	2,360	1,589	3,950	3,765	979	4,744	150	-644	10,616
2003-04	2,651	1,543	4,194	4,151	982	5,133	25	-914	11,487
2004-05	2,799	1,513	4,312	4,032	940	4,972	171	-489	11,888
2005-06	3,498	1,880	5,378	4,409	947	5,356	178	199	11,684
2006-07	3,597	1,743	5,340	4,590	777	5,367	181	154	11,558
2007-08	5,154	1,788	6,942	4,969	751	5,720	199	1,421	10,188
2008-09	5,869	2,558	8,427	5,537	745	6,282	205	2,350	7,968
2009-10	5,560	1,545	7,106	6,439	890	7,329	191	-33	8,220
2010-11	6,071	1,760	7,831	6,723	823	7,547	201	485	8,218

Source: Public Accounts of Newfoundland and Labrador. (For 2010-11: 2011 Budget).

[1] Net income of government business entreprises.

Due to a break in the series following accounting changes, data from 1994-95 onward are not directly comparable with earlier years.

Table 18

Prince Edward Island

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal cash transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other[1]	Deficit (-) or surplus	Net debt
				(millions of dollars)
1987-88	312	245	557	503	71	574	-	-17	179
1988-89	344	282	626	556	81	637	-	-11	191
1989-90	374	299	673	594	87	681	-	-8	199
1990-91	395	312	707	632	95	727	-	-20	219
1991-92	416	299	715	662	103	765	-	-50	269
1992-93	408	303	711	692	101	793	-	-82	351
1993-94	457	282	739	699	111	810	-	-71	772
1994-95	480	332	812	704	117	821	7	-1	990
1995-96	481	308	789	669	120	789	4	4	986
1996-97	513	287	800	692	118	810	7	-4	990
1997-98	496	292	788	702	102	804	9	-7	997
1998-99	502	350	852	750	101	852	6	6	990
1999-00	547	353	900	806	103	908	3	-5	1,024
2000-01	568	383	952	855	108	963	0	-12	1,036
2001-02	573	400	974	876	106	982	-9	-17	1,053
2002-03	628	341	969	895	103	998	-26	-55	1,178
2003-04	634	387	1,021	988	106	1,095	-52	-125	1,313
2004-05	673	444	1,116	1,031	105	1,136	-14	-34	1,330
2005-06	726	444	1,170	1,059	110	1,169	-	1	1,323
2006-07	756	474	1,231	1,086	120	1,207	-	24	1,312
2007-08	785	518	1,303	1,188	119	1,307	-	-4	1,347
2008-09	832	558	1,390	1,312	109	1,420	-	-31	1,415
2009-10	868	639	1,507	1,477	104	1,581	-	-74	1,581
2010-11	834	624	1,459	1,407	106	1,512	-	-54	1,720

Source: Public Accounts of Prince Edward Island. (For 2010-11: 2011 Budget).

[1] Pension adjustment, Workforce Renewal Program adjustment (2004-05).

Table 19

Nova Scotia

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal sh transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other[1]	Deficit (-) or surplus	Net debt
				(millions of dollars)
1987-88	1,955	1,253	3,208	2,977	566	3,543	108	-227	3,756
1988-89	2,109	1,438	3,547	3,347	560	3,907	118	-242	3,947
1989-90	2,245	1,530	3,775	3,602	571	4,173	131	-267	4,454
1990-91	2,349	1,599	3,948	3,676	672	4,348	143	-257	4,731
1991-92	2,321	1,602	3,923	3,799	682	4,481	152	-406	5,426
1992-93	2,335	1,591	3,926	3,916	779	4,695	152	-617	7,288
1993-94	2,493	1,567	4,060	3,861	865	4,727	121	-546	8,120
1994-95	2,510	1,858	4,368	3,799	912	4,711	110	-233	8,514
1995-96	2,548	1,938	4,486	3,907	897	4,804	116	-201	8,715
1996-97	2,751	1,757	4,508	3,813	811	4,624	0	-116	9,139
1997-98	2,522	1,927	4,449	4,018	865	4,884	-7	-442	9,290
1998-99	2,637	2,016	4,653	4,414	1,003	5,418	503	-261	10,298
1999-00	2,850	1,972	4,822	4,508	1,060	5,568	-51	-797	11,231
2000-01	3,023	2,040	5,063	4,434	1,115	5,549	633	147	11,370
2001-02	3,203	2,054	5,257	4,555	1,161	5,715	572	113	12,144
2002-03	3,366	1,908	5,274	4,737	1,046	5,782	535	28	12,226
2003-04	3,743	2,024	5,767	5,196	1,040	6,236	507	38	12,328
2004-05	3,932	2,327	6,259	5,604	1,034	6,638	549	170	12,305
2005-06	4,367	2,428	6,795	6,118	988	7,106	508	196	12,239
2006-07	4,602	2,570	7,172	6,579	930	7,508	519	182	12,357
2007-08	5,043	3,023	8,066	7,208	925	8,133	486	419	12,115
2008-09	5,072	2,947	8,018	7,648	867	8,515	522	26	12,318
2009-10	4,871	3,240	8,112	8,047	823	8,870	489	-269	13,045
2010-11	5,585	3,152	8,738	7,897	843	8,740	571	569	12,827

Source: Public Accounts of Nova Scotia.

[1] Includes sinking fund earnings, net income (losses) of government business enterprises, and consolidation, accounting and other adjustments.

Table 20

New Brunswick

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal sh transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other[1]	Deficit (-) or surplus	Net debt
				(millions of dollars)
1987-88	1,918	1,261	3,179	3,100	415	3,515	-	-335	2,919
1988-89	2,167	1,360	3,527	3,179	427	3,606	-	-79	2,993
1989-90	2,214	1,459	3,673	3,260	437	3,697	-	-24	3,013
1990-91	2,297	1,504	3,801	3,507	475	3,982	-	-182	3,236
1991-92	2,352	1,455	3,807	3,686	476	4,162	-	-354	3,603
1992-93	2,268	1,742	4,011	3,737	538	4,275	-	-264	5,297
1993-94	2,507	1,517	4,024	3,705	585	4,290	-	-266	5,810
1994-95	2,672	1,626	4,298	3,732	645	4,377	-	-79	5,889
1995-96	2,803	1,623	4,426	3,791	595	4,386	-	41	5,850
1996-97	2,950	1,521	4,471	3,840	564	4,405	-	66	5,783
1997-98	2,786	1,653	4,439	3,865	574	4,439	-	0	5,788
1998-99	2,325	2,122	4,447	4,034	616	4,651	-	-204	5,992
1999-00	2,974	1,827	4,801	4,219	611	4,830	-	-30	7,056
2000-01	3,068	1,795	4,863	4,082	637	4,719	-100	43	6,915
2001-02	3,216	2,035	5,251	4,421	652	5,073	-100	79	6,759
2002-03	3,331	1,930	5,261	4,710	661	5,371	110	1	6,865
2003-04	3,569	1,918	5,487	5,086	583	5,669	-	-182	6,963
2004-05	3,664	2,355	6,019	5,203	581	5,784	-	235	6,824
2005-06	3,970	2,393	6,363	5,530	591	6,122	-	241	6,710
2006-07	4,202	2,487	6,689	5,883	559	6,443	-	247	6,576
2007-08	4,444	2,578	7,022	6,333	577	6,910	-	112	6,949
2008-09	4,440	2,727	7,166	6,740	603	7,342	-	-176	7,388
2009-10	4,147	2,901	7,048	7,154	617	7,770	-	-722	8,471
2010-11	4,577	2,919	7,497	7,487	643	8,130	-	-633	9,480

Source: Public Accounts of New Brunswick.

[1] Contribution to/from Fiscal Stabilization Fund.

Table 21

Quebec

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal cash transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other[1]	Deficit (-) or surplus	Net debt
				(millions of dollars)
1987-88	21,992	6,117	28,109	26,830	3,675	30,505	-	-2,396	31,115
1988-89	23,366	6,386	29,752	27,654	3,802	31,456	-	-1,704	32,819
1989-90	24,359	6,674	31,033	28,782	4,015	32,797	-	-1,764	34,583
1990-91	26,073	6,972	33,045	31,583	4,437	36,020	-	-2,975	37,558
1991-92	27,720	6,747	34,467	34,102	4,666	38,768	-	-4,301	41,885
1992-93	27,561	7,764	35,325	35,599	4,756	40,355	-	-5,030	46,914
1993-94	28,165	7,762	35,927	35,534	5,316	40,850	-	-4,923	51,837
1994-95	28,815	7,494	36,309	36,248	5,882	42,130	-	-5,821	57,677
1995-96	30,000	8,126	38,126	36,039	6,034	42,073	-	-3,947	61,624
1996-97	30,522	6,704	37,226	34,583	5,855	40,438	-	-3,212	64,833
1997-98	30,415	5,656	36,071	33,037	6,765	39,802	1,574	-2,157	88,597
1998-99	32,936	7,813	40,749	35,440	6,573	42,013	1,390	126	88,810
1999-00	35,417	6,064	41,481	36,074	6,752	42,826	1,352	7	89,162
2000-01	37,447	7,895	45,342	38,394	6,972	45,366	451	427	88,208
2001-02	35,638	8,885	44,523	40,377	6,687	47,064	2,563	22	92,772
2002-03	37,301	8,932	46,233	42,111	6,583	48,694	1,733	-728	95,601
2003-04	38,819	9,370	48,189	43,598	6,655	50,253	1,706	-358	97,025
2004-05	41,069	9,229	50,298	45,619	6,853	52,472	1,510	-664	99,042
2005-06	42,374	9,969	52,343	46,996	6,875	53,871	1,565	37	104,683
2006-07	46,184	11,015	57,199	49,293	7,039	56,332	-758	109	124,297
2007-08	45,881	13,629	59,510	52,080	7,021	59,101	-409	0	124,681
2008-09	45,152	14,023	59,175	55,442	6,504	61,946	2,771	0	134,237
2009-10	44,130	15,161	59,291	58,389	6,117	64,506	2,041	-3,174	150,100
2010-11	46,925	15,451	62,376	59,819	6,934	66,753	177	-4,200	158,995

Source: Public Accounts of Quebec. (For 2010-11: 2011 Budget).

[1] Includes the net results of consolidated organizations, contingency reserve, transactions with the budgetary reserve and transfers to the Generations Fund.

Due to a break in the series following the implementation of the accounting reform, data from 1997-98 onward are not directly comparable with earlier years.

Table 22

Ontario

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal cash transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other	Deficit (-) or surplus	Net debt
				(millions of dollars)
1987-88	27,174	4,984	32,158	31,171	3,476	34,647	-	-2,489	34,020
1988-89	31,878	5,113	36,991	34,703	3,767	38,470	-	-1,479	35,499
1989-90	35,861	5,364	41,225	37,318	3,817	41,135	-	90	35,409
1990-91	37,130	5,762	42,892	42,145	3,776	45,921	-	-3,029	38,438
1991-92	34,429	6,324	40,753	47,487	4,196	51,683	-	-10,930	49,368
1992-93	34,253	7,554	41,807	48,942	5,293	54,235	-	-12,428	61,796
1993-94	36,603	7,071	43,674	47,747	7,129	54,876	-	-11,202	80,599
1994-95	38,432	7,607	46,039	48,336	7,832	56,168	-	-10,129	90,728
1995-96	41,857	7,880	49,737	50,062	8,475	58,537	-	-8,800	101,864
1996-97	43,936	5,778	49,714	48,012	8,607	56,619	-	-6,905	108,769
1997-98	47,684	5,098	52,782	48,019	8,729	56,748	-	-3,966	112,735
1998-99	51,535	4,515	56,050	49,036	9,016	58,052	-	-2,002	114,737
1999-00	59,157	5,885	65,042	53,347	11,027	64,374	-	668	134,398
2000-01	60,165	6,129	66,294	53,519	10,873	64,392	-	1,902	132,496
2001-02	64,553	7,754	72,307	61,595	10,337	71,932	-	375	132,121
2002-03	65,781	8,894	74,675	64,864	9,694	74,558	-	117	132,647
2003-04	64,376	9,893	74,269	70,148	9,604	79,752	-	-5,483	138,816
2004-05	71,979	11,882	83,861	76,048	9,368	85,416	-	-1,555	140,921
2005-06	77,054	13,251	90,305	80,988	9,019	90,007	-	298	149,928
2006-07	82,604	14,036	96,640	85,540	8,831	94,371	-	2,269	150,618
2007-08	86,982	16,597	103,579	94,065	8,914	102,979	-	600	156,616
2008-09	80,342	16,591	96,933	94,776	8,566	103,342	-	-6,409	169,585
2009-10	77,173	18,620	95,793	106,336	8,719	115,055	-	-19,262	193,589
2010-11	83,617	23,041	106,658	111,189	9,480	120,669	-	-14,011	214,511

Source: Public Accounts of Ontario.

Due to a break in the series following the line-by-line consolidation of the Ontario Electricity Financial Corporation, data from 1999-2000 onward are not directly comparable with earlier years.

Due to a break in the series, data from 2001-2002 onward are not directly comparable with earlier years. Notably, Education Property Taxes are reported as revenue starting with the 2010 Budget, whereas previously they were netted against expenditures.

Table 23

Manitoba

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal cash transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other[1]	Deficit (-) or surplus	Net debt
				(millions of dollars)
1987-88	2,726	1,313	4,039	3,848	490	4,338	0	-300	4,415
1988-89	2,975	1,568	4,543	4,045	439	4,484	-200	-141	4,332
1989-90	2,949	1,657	4,606	4,261	487	4,748	0	-142	4,449
1990-91	2,983	1,695	4,678	4,536	501	5,037	67	-292	4,773
1991-92	3,146	1,821	4,967	4,779	492	5,271	-30	-334	5,216
1992-93	2,882	1,816	4,698	4,905	559	5,464	200	-566	6,378
1993-94	3,247	1,629	4,876	4,752	585	5,337	30	-431	6,806
1994-95	3,310	1,895	5,205	4,804	597	5,401	0	-196	6,901
1995-96	3,789	1,873	5,662	4,913	592	5,505	0	157	6,854
1996-97	4,107	1,716	5,823	4,929	539	5,468	-264	91	6,474
1997-98	3,920	1,884	5,804	5,232	520	5,752	25	77	9,719
1998-99	4,393	1,560	5,953	5,442	515	5,957	36	32	9,926
1999-00	4,335	2,073	6,408	6,042	465	6,507	110	11	10,046
2000-01	4,739	2,091	6,830	6,182	511	6,693	-96	41	9,888
2001-02	4,623	2,206	6,829	6,406	414	6,820	54	63	10,001
2002-03	4,874	2,230	7,104	6,705	321	7,026	-74	4	10,341
2003-04	5,775	2,716	8,491	8,271	799	9,070	0	-579	11,052
2004-05	7,037	3,156	10,193	8,813	818	9,631	0	562	11,101
2005-06	7,625	3,103	10,728	9,474	860	10,334	0	394	10,952
2006-07	8,113	3,320	11,433	10,155	793	10,948	0	485	10,800
2007-08	8,899	3,597	12,496	11,074	864	11,938	0	558	10,550
2008-09	8,897	3,866	12,763	11,482	830	12,312	0	451	11,468
2009-10	8,723	3,924	12,647	12,092	756	12,848	0	-201	11,794
2010-11	9,044	4,086	13,130	12,905	762	13,667	70	-467	13,244

Source: Public Accounts of Manitoba. (For 2010-11: 2011 Budget).

[1] Includes the contribution to/from the Fiscal Stabilization Fund and contributions to the Debt Retirement Fund.
Due to a break in the series following the move to summary account budgeting, data from 2003-04 onward are not directly comparable with earlier years.

Table 24

Saskatchewan

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal cash transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other[1]	Deficit (-) or surplus	Net debt
				(millions of dollars)
1987-88	2,382	914	3,296	3,556	282	3,838	-	-542	2,517
1988-89	2,628	1,067	3,695	3,700	320	4,020	-	-324	2,885
1989-90	2,927	1,231	4,158	4,013	523	4,536	-	-378	3,316
1990-91	3,169	1,489	4,658	4,544	475	5,019	-	-361	3,688
1991-92	2,789	1,260	4,049	4,390	502	4,892	-	-843	5,999
1992-93	3,072	1,304	4,376	4,228	740	4,968	-	-592	6,587
1993-94	3,432	1,248	4,680	4,079	873	4,952	-	-272	7,769
1994-95	3,928	1,297	5,225	4,215	882	5,097	-	128	7,641
1995-96	4,157	975	5,132	4,264	849	5,113	-	19	7,622
1996-97	4,742	761	5,503	4,302	794	5,096	-	407	7,215
1997-98	4,609	553	5,162	4,372	755	5,127	-	35	7,180
1998-99	4,642	961	5,603	4,830	745	5,575	-	28	7,152
1999-00	4,648	1,209	5,857	5,077	696	5,773	-	83	7,069
2000-01	5,881	872	6,754	5,257	664	5,921	-775	58	7,011
2001-02	4,822	1,237	6,059	5,721	617	6,338	280	1	7,010
2002-03	5,656	801	6,457	5,762	611	6,374	-82	1	7,009
2003-04	5,525	1,033	6,558	6,166	603	6,768	211	1	7,054
2004-05	6,126	1,666	7,792	6,448	579	7,027	-383	383	6,880
2005-06	6,952	1,265	8,218	7,133	545	7,678	-139	400	6,636
2006-07	7,254	1,389	8,643	7,707	538	8,245	-105	293	6,446
2007-08	8,263	1,603	9,866	8,036	547	8,583	-641	641	6,049
2008-09	10,616	1,709	12,325	9,835	520	10,355	419	2,389	3,848
2009-10	8,662	1,604	10,266	9,619	480	10,099	257	425	3,638
2010-11	9,460	1,600	11,061	10,541	424	10,965	-48	47	3,676

Source: Public Accounts of Saskatchewan.

[1] Contribution from/to (-) the Fiscal Stabilization Fund and to the Saskatchewan Infrastructure Fund.

Table 25

Alberta

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal cash transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other	Deficit (-) or surplus	Net debt
				(millions of dollars)
1987-88	9,993	1,912	11,905	12,698	572	13,270	-	-1,365	1,527
1988-89	9,765	2,135	11,900	13,110	797	13,907	-	-2,007	3,592
1989-90	10,896	1,943	12,839	13,840	1,115	14,955	-	-2,116	5,947
1990-91	11,820	2,365	14,185	14,735	1,282	16,017	-	-1,832	5,692
1991-92	11,587	2,150	13,737	15,052	1,314	16,366	-	-2,629	7,939
1992-93	11,814	2,457	14,271	16,176	1,419	17,595	-	-3,324	11,824
1993-94	13,316	2,090	15,406	15,123	1,654	16,777	-	-1,371	13,379
1994-95	14,235	1,929	16,164	13,480	1,746	15,226	-	938	12,707
1995-96	13,767	1,748	15,515	12,681	1,683	14,364	-	1,151	11,607
1996-97	15,301	1,351	16,652	12,701	1,462	14,163	-	2,489	8,709
1997-98	16,571	1,183	17,754	13,773	1,322	15,095	-	2,659	5,979
1998-99	15,484	1,335	16,819	14,346	1,379	15,725	-	1,094	4,876
1999-00	18,463	1,640	20,103	16,356	956	17,312	-	2,791	2,074
2000-01	23,714	1,813	25,527	17,976	980	18,956	-	6,571	-4,300
2001-02	19,662	2,264	21,926	20,071	774	20,845	-	1,081	-5,043
2002-03	20,588	2,074	22,662	20,053	476	20,529	-	2,133	-6,769
2003-04	22,961	2,926	25,887	21,480	271	21,751	-	4,136	-10,548
2004-05	26,109	3,219	29,328	23,851	302	24,153	-	5,175	-15,160
2005-06	32,150	3,392	35,542	26,743	248	26,991	-	8,551	-22,883
2006-07	34,940	3,077	38,017	29,292	215	29,507	-	8,510	-30,454
2007-08	35,121	3,048	38,169	33,218	214	33,432	-	4,737	-31,527
2008-09	31,620	4,185	35,805	36,455	208	36,663	-	-858	-26,873
2009-10	30,717	4,941	35,658	36,327	363	36,690	-	-1,032	-23,738
2010-11	29,829	5,025	34,854	37,969	295	38,264	-	-3,410	-18,398

Source: Public Accounts of Alberta.

Table 26

British Columbia

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal cash transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other[1]	Deficit (-) or surplus	Net debt
				(millions of dollars)
1987-88	9,072	2,054	11,126	10,530	525	11,055	0	71	3,762
1988-89	10,615	2,149	12,764	11,304	530	11,834	0	930	3,533
1989-90	11,575	2,121	13,696	12,743	457	13,200	0	496	5,538
1990-91	12,247	2,096	14,343	14,532	478	15,010	0	-667	6,312
1991-92	12,564	2,198	14,762	16,511	590	17,101	0	-2,339	8,843
1992-93	13,967	2,416	16,382	17,122	736	17,858	0	-1,476	10,529
1993-94	15,665	2,269	17,934	17,989	844	18,833	0	-899	11,507
1994-95	17,264	2,463	19,726	19,023	931	19,954	0	-228	11,954
1995-96	17,343	2,394	19,737	19,167	887	20,054	0	-317	12,162
1996-97	17,755	1,955	19,710	19,596	867	20,463	0	-753	12,338
1997-98	18,131	1,837	19,968	19,301	834	20,135	0	-167	12,515
1998-99	22,823	2,549	25,372	23,284	3,049	26,333	0	-961	21,914
1999-00	23,627	3,180	26,807	23,884	2,936	26,820	0	-13	22,966
2000-01	26,393	3,296	29,689	25,459	2,980	28,439	-52	1,198	23,136
2001-02	24,849	3,320	28,169	27,573	2,748	30,321	1,117	-1,035	24,797
2002-03	23,952	3,823	27,775	27,687	2,540	30,227	-169	-2,621	27,691
2003-04	25,536	3,619	29,155	27,926	2,448	30,374	-123	-1,342	28,876
2004-05	28,133	5,222	33,355	28,360	2,306	30,666	0	2,689	27,152
2005-06	30,121	5,825	35,946	30,038	2,203	32,241	-710	2,995	25,910
2006-07	32,047	6,387	38,434	32,187	2,270	34,457	-264	3,713	23,411
2007-08	33,812	5,932	39,744	34,762	2,236	36,998	-444	2,302	22,638
2008-09	32,360	5,985	38,345	36,060	2,158	38,218	18	145	24,912
2009-10	30,551	6,917	37,468	37,128	2,204	39,332	0	-1,864	28,112
2010-11	31,929	7,997	39,926	37,982	2,253	40,235	0	-309	30,637

Source: Public Accounts of British Columbia.

[1] Includes the impacts of the joint trusteeship of pension plans, restructuring exit expenses, negociating framework incentive payments and climate action dividend.

Due to a break in the series following the move to fully comply with generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP), data from 1998-99 onward are not directly comparable with earlier years.

Table 27

Yukon Territory

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal cash transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other[1]	Deficit (-) or surplus	Net debt
				(millions of dollars)
1987-88	92	184	276	279	0	279	-	-3	-45
1988-89	111	191	302	297	0	297	-	5	-50
1989-90	112	199	311	308	0	308	-	3	-54
1990-91	104	229	333	344	0	344	-	-12	-64
1991-92	108	243	351	365	0	365	-	-14	-50
1992-93	89	267	356	419	1	420	-	-64	13
1993-94	154	307	461	445	1	446	-	15	-2
1994-95	172	310	482	452	1	453	-	29	-31
1995-96	168	321	489	460	0	460	-	29	-60
1996-97	157	286	443	454	0	455	-	-12	-48
1997-98	153	302	455	450	0	451	-	4	-51
1998-99	115	371	485	455	0	455	-	30	-80
1999-00	153	330	483	499	0	500	-	-16	-64
2000-01	166	386	552	518	0	518	1	35	-99
2001-02	129	374	503	524	0	525	1	-21	-85
2002-03	148	402	550	555	0	556	1	-5	-80
2003-04	140	456	597	585	0	586	1	12	-76
2004-05	154	506	659	654	0	655	1	5	-48
2005-06	158	584	742	668	0	668	1	75	-100
2006-07	175	610	784	727	0	727	1	57	-132
2007-08	128	650	778	769	0	769	1	10	-140
2008-09	250	632	882	890	0	890	1	-7	-136
2009-10	279	656	935	1,007	0	1,007	46	-26	-67
2010-11	355	690	1,046	1,128	0	1,128	62	-20	-18

Source: Public Accounts of the Yukon Territory. (For 2010-11: 2011 Budget).

[1] Includes changes in tangible capital assets, estimated year-end lapses, recoveries of prior years' expenditures, net profits of restricted funds and items transferred to the balance sheet.

Table 28

Northwest Territories

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal cash transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other	Deficit (-) or surplus	Net debt
				(millions of dollars)
1987-88	120	649	769	798	0	798	-	-29	-41
1988-89	130	747	877	854	5	858	-	19	-66
1989-90	167	796	962	967	5	972	-	-10	-55
1990-91	163	879	1,042	1,045	5	1,050	-	-8	-55
1991-92	216	900	1,116	1,140	4	1,144	-	-28	-31
1992-93	222	911	1,133	1,123	4	1,127	-	6	-56
1993-94	215	973	1,188	1,207	3	1,210	-	-22	-19
1994-95	214	1,004	1,218	1,244	0	1,244	-	-26	12
1995-96	234	1,026	1,260	1,277	5	1,282	-	-22	28
1996-97	219	963	1,182	1,189	5	1,194	-	-12	21
1997-98	244	1,066	1,311	1,175	5	1,180	-	131	-85
1998-99	203	1,016	1,220	1,253	0	1,253	-	-33	-43
1999-00	140	572	712	747	2	749	-	-37	17
2000-01	268	615	883	765	0	766	-	118	-66
2001-02	642	315	957	837	0	837	-	120	-127
2002-03	438	408	846	880	0	880	-	-34	-29
2003-04	-43	914	871	936	0	936	-	-65	76
2004-05	201	780	981	998	0	998	-	-17	133
2005-06	224	877	1,101	1,065	0	1,065	-	36	124
2006-07	324	879	1,204	1,116	0	1,116	-	88	105
2007-08	346	959	1,306	1,211	0	1,212	-	94	54
2008-09	337	919	1,256	1,297	0	1,297	-	-41	132
2009-10	306	988	1,294	1,341	0	1,341	-	-48	245
2010-11	298	1,022	1,320	1,314	0	1,314	-	6	N/A

Source: Public Accounts of the Northwest Territories. (For 2010-11: 2011 Budget).

Starting in 1999-2000, the figures represent the Northwest Territories Budget after the division of the territories.

Table 29

Nunavut

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal cash transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other[1]	Deficit (-) or surplus	Net debt
				(millions of dollars)
1999-00	55	591	646	574	-	574	0	72	-23
2000-01	88	652	740	678	-	678	0	62	-7
2001-02	79	654	733	731	-	731	0	2	25
2002-03	95	713	809	797	-	797	0	12	43
2003-04	90	754	844	837	-	837	0	7	100
2004-05	84	848	932	877	-	877	0	55	99
2005-06	97	946	1,043	933	-	933	0	109	9
2006-07	94	1,176	1,270	1,124	-	1,124	0	146	-100
2007-08	134	1,042	1,177	1,155	-	1,155	0	21	-75
2008-09	145	1,115	1,260	1,283	-	1,283	0	-23	-17
2009-10	144	1,096	1,241	1,186	-	1,186	0	54	24
2010-11	133	1,171	1,305	1,211	-	1,211	-48	48	101

Source: Public Accounts of Nunavut. (For 2010-11: 2011 Budget).

[1] Supplementary requirements

Table 30

All provinces and territories (millions of dollars)

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal cash transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other	Deficit (-) or surplus	Debt
				(millions of dollars)
1987-88	79,064	22,104	101,168	98,576	10,529	109,105	108	-7,829	87,412
1988-89	87,438	23,750	111,188	105,184	11,182	116,366	-82	-5,259	92,869
1989-90	95,184	24,699	119,883	112,334	11,974	124,308	131	-4,294	100,168
1990-91	100,299	26,299	126,598	124,104	12,686	136,790	210	-9,981	108,078
1991-92	99,329	26,426	125,755	134,861	13,521	148,382	122	-22,505	132,385
1992-93	100,564	29,625	130,189	139,826	15,414	155,240	352	-24,698	161,191
1993-94	107,950	28,177	136,127	138,005	18,466	156,471	151	-20,193	193,032
1994-95	113,918	29,525	143,443	139,078	20,549	159,627	192	-15,992	209,813
1995-96	119,222	29,785	149,006	140,345	20,959	161,304	221	-12,077	224,374
1996-97	125,085	24,657	149,742	137,203	20,442	157,646	-165	-8,068	231,476
1997-98	129,511	23,471	152,982	137,076	21,337	158,413	1,730	-3,701	259,966
1998-99	139,556	26,442	165,998	146,416	24,006	170,422	2,092	-2,332	272,423
1999-00	154,500	27,316	181,816	155,418	25,491	180,910	1,558	2,465	293,044
2000-01	167,664	29,725	197,389	161,550	25,792	187,342	192	10,240	284,024
2001-02	164,233	33,155	197,388	177,260	24,437	201,697	4,624	315	290,359
2002-03	168,519	34,045	202,564	183,520	23,015	206,535	2,179	-1,792	297,339
2003-04	173,777	37,554	211,331	195,369	23,091	218,460	2,275	-4,854	304,465
2004-05	191,958	43,147	235,105	207,538	22,886	230,424	1,834	6,516	302,467
2005-06	209,315	46,358	255,673	221,156	22,386	243,543	1,403	13,533	307,215
2006-07	224,893	49,163	274,056	235,280	22,073	257,353	-426	16,277	316,794
2007-08	234,993	54,963	289,957	256,069	22,168	278,236	-809	10,911	319,445
2008-09	225,931	57,813	283,744	268,756	21,109	289,864	3,943	-2,177	346,247
2009-10	216,132	62,233	278,365	286,542	21,073	307,615	3,025	-26,225	395,014
2010-11	228,659	68,540	297,199	297,571	22,563	320,135	988	-21,947	434,994

Sources: Provincial/territorial Public Accounts and 2011 Budgets.

Table 31

All provinces and territories (per cent of GDP)

Year	Own-source revenues	Federal cash transfers	Total revenues	Total program expenditures	Debt charges	Total expenditures	Other	Deficit (-) or surplus	Debt
				(per cent of GDP)
1987-88	14.1	4.0	18.1	17.6	1.9	19.5	0.0	-1.4	15.6
1988-89	14.3	3.9	18.1	17.2	1.8	19.0	0.0	-0.9	15.1
1989-90	14.5	3.8	18.2	17.1	1.8	18.9	0.0	-0.7	15.2
1990-91	14.8	3.9	18.6	18.3	1.9	20.1	0.0	-1.5	15.9
1991-92	14.5	3.9	18.3	19.7	2.0	21.6	0.0	-3.3	19.3
1992-93	14.4	4.2	18.6	20.0	2.2	22.2	0.1	-3.5	23.0
1993-94	14.8	3.9	18.7	19.0	2.5	21.5	0.0	-2.8	26.5
1994-95	14.8	3.8	18.6	18.0	2.7	20.7	0.0	-2.1	27.2
1995-96	14.7	3.7	18.4	17.3	2.6	19.9	0.0	-1.5	27.7
1996-97	14.9	2.9	17.9	16.4	2.4	18.8	0.0	-1.0	27.7
1997-98	14.7	2.7	17.3	15.5	2.4	17.9	0.2	-0.4	29.5
1998-99	15.3	2.9	18.1	16.0	2.6	18.6	0.2	-0.3	29.8
1999-00	15.7	2.8	18.5	15.8	2.6	18.4	0.2	0.3	29.8
2000-01	15.6	2.8	18.3	15.0	2.4	17.4	0.0	1.0	26.4
2001-02	14.8	3.0	17.8	16.0	2.2	18.2	0.4	0.0	26.2
2002-03	14.6	3.0	17.6	15.9	2.0	17.9	0.2	-0.2	25.8
2003-04	14.3	3.1	17.4	16.1	1.9	18.0	0.2	-0.4	25.1
2004-05	14.9	3.3	18.2	16.1	1.8	17.8	0.1	0.5	23.4
2005-06	15.2	3.4	18.6	16.1	1.6	17.7	0.1	1.0	22.4
2006-07	15.5	3.4	18.9	16.2	1.5	17.7	0.0	1.1	21.9
2007-08	15.4	3.6	19.0	16.7	1.4	18.2	-0.1	0.7	20.9
2008-09	14.1	3.6	17.7	16.8	1.3	18.1	0.2	-0.1	21.6
2009-10	14.1	4.1	18.2	18.7	1.4	20.1	0.2	-1.7	25.8
2010-11	14.1	4.2	18.3	18.3	1.4	19.7	0.1	-1.4	26.8

Sources: Provincial/territorial Public Accounts and 2011 Budgets and National Income and Expenditure Accounts (13-001).

National Accounts

Table 32

Total government income

National Economic and Financial Accounts

Year	Taxes on incomes, persons	Taxes on incomes, corporations	Taxes on incomes, non-residents	Contributions to social insurance plans	Taxes on production and imports	Other transfers from persons	Investment income	Sales of goods and services	Total income[1]
				(millions of dollars)
1966	4,114	2,355	195	1,324	8,638	446	1,510	1,308	19,890
1967	5,106	2,396	211	1,489	9,448	488	1,684	1,511	22,333
1968	6,145	2,852	200	1,608	10,260	653	2,038	1,630	25,386
1969	7,697	3,221	222	1,818	11,337	897	2,510	1,754	29,456
1970	9,069	3,070	260	1,883	12,040	1,126	2,762	1,956	32,166
1971	10,417	3,346	272	1,995	13,131	1,163	3,146	2,240	35,710
1972	11,611	3,920	276	2,306	14,796	1,099	3,678	2,494	40,180
1973	13,618	5,079	324	2,738	16,815	1,149	4,607	2,865	47,195
1974	16,602	7,051	434	3,844	21,048	1,228	6,172	3,210	59,589
1975	18,538	7,494	464	4,741	21,728	1,249	7,274	3,746	65,234
1976	21,400	7,128	500	5,895	25,376	1,619	8,396	4,518	74,832
1977	23,811	7,238	532	6,357	27,863	1,812	9,957	4,927	82,497
1978	24,728	8,188	570	7,067	29,576	2,007	12,087	5,997	90,220
1979	27,774	10,038	764	7,571	32,321	2,251	14,790	6,889	102,398
1980	32,139	12,078	1,013	8,446	36,520	2,469	17,519	7,672	117,856
1981	38,565	12,796	1,113	10,863	47,870	2,755	19,995	8,924	142,881
1982	43,098	11,755	1,196	11,980	50,320	3,222	20,975	10,273	152,819
1983	45,667	12,320	1,052	14,184	52,780	3,633	22,441	11,314	163,391
1984	48,721	14,984	1,019	15,612	57,354	3,831	24,377	12,848	178,746
1985	53,262	15,563	955	17,633	61,339	3,974	25,381	13,512	191,619
1986	61,618	14,573	1,683	19,601	67,495	4,135	22,900	14,837	206,842
1987	69,288	16,990	1,222	21,721	74,613	4,508	22,786	16,015	227,143
1988	77,568	17,586	1,678	24,775	82,565	4,982	25,114	17,243	251,511
1989	83,222	18,566	1,545	24,849	90,939	5,481	28,025	18,632	271,259
1990	96,171	16,834	1,727	28,944	94,693	4,051	29,257	20,073	291,750
1991	97,154	15,015	1,514	31,071	100,693	4,588	28,207	21,425	299,667
1992	97,283	14,517	1,576	35,011	104,677	4,989	27,824	22,562	308,439
1993	96,379	16,263	1,649	36,545	107,609	5,191	28,057	23,351	315,044
1994	100,311	19,342	1,698	38,938	110,658	5,421	29,571	24,574	330,513
1995	106,190	22,138	1,964	40,489	113,945	5,844	31,295	26,115	347,980
1996	113,608	26,239	2,844	39,980	116,876	5,832	31,763	26,994	364,136
1997	120,790	32,250	2,958	42,029	123,207	6,510	31,887	28,499	388,130
1998	128,935	30,800	2,817	43,465	127,238	7,155	31,823	30,549	402,782
1999	134,197	39,410	3,386	45,721	133,273	6,915	33,038	32,368	428,308
2000	143,951	48,175	3,755	49,748	138,998	7,116	43,512	33,414	468,669
2001	145,926	36,352	4,530	53,178	143,651	8,171	40,824	34,771	467,403
2002	138,655	35,746	4,381	57,303	151,426	8,875	37,377	36,687	470,450
2003	140,803	39,909	4,157	60,404	158,093	9,711	43,014	37,975	494,066
2004	151,364	46,244	4,643	62,122	165,484	10,216	43,428	40,471	523,972
2005	165,051	48,687	5,478	65,374	172,548	10,892	48,360	43,392	559,782
2006	174,237	57,177	7,001	68,122	177,116	11,283	53,211	46,137	594,284
2007	190,753	55,285	6,890	70,394	183,239	11,902	54,374	49,191	622,028
2008	190,994	54,761	7,810	71,895	182,302	11,905	61,121	51,881	632,669
2009	176,658	53,320	5,868	74,571	182,283	11,204	44,429	54,116	602,449
2010	179,394	55,160	5,966	75,258	191,247	11,492	49,428	57,097	625,042

Source: Statistics Canada, National Economic and Financial Accounts (Table 380-0007).

[1] Includes Canada Pension Plan and Québec Pension Plan. Excludes intergovernmental transfers.

Table 33

Total government outlay

National Economic and Financial Accounts

Year	Goods and services	Transfers to persons	Transfers to business	Transfers to non-residents	Interest on the public debt	Total outlay[1]
			(millions of dollars)
1966	11,977	3,016	685	228	1,883	17,789
1967	13,910	3,746	669	250	2,110	20,685
1968	15,708	4,397	681	200	2,433	23,419
1969	17,717	4,867	732	208	2,816	26,340
1970	20,498	5,552	785	295	3,309	30,439
1971	22,702	6,526	860	301	3,751	34,140
1972	25,197	7,930	929	326	4,244	38,626
1973	28,600	9,052	1,178	369	4,910	44,109
1974	34,456	11,412	2,920	468	5,488	54,744
1975	41,649	14,207	4,371	670	6,639	67,536
1976	48,017	16,082	3,984	637	8,242	76,962
1977	54,276	18,389	4,078	728	9,432	86,903
1978	59,488	20,675	4,146	925	11,741	96,975
1979	65,934	21,448	5,686	960	14,057	108,085
1980	74,755	24,848	8,628	1,084	17,033	126,348
1981	85,372	28,392	9,934	1,152	22,530	147,380
1982	97,212	36,210	9,635	1,386	27,419	171,862
1983	104,731	41,839	10,487	1,489	29,858	188,404
1984	110,933	45,075	12,295	1,854	35,147	205,304
1985	119,577	48,668	12,129	1,919	40,585	222,878
1986	126,248	52,136	11,174	2,223	43,222	235,003
1987	133,883	56,068	11,028	2,606	46,279	249,864
1988	145,155	59,923	10,611	2,875	50,806	269,370
1989	157,093	64,724	9,818	2,785	58,285	292,705
1990	171,491	73,004	10,052	2,969	64,286	321,802
1991	183,659	83,830	12,854	3,177	64,526	348,046
1992	191,349	93,077	12,323	3,196	65,241	365,186
1993	194,514	98,323	10,382	2,997	66,851	373,067
1994	196,164	98,495	9,608	2,899	69,597	376,763
1995	198,574	98,512	8,746	2,867	77,527	386,226
1996	198,155	98,865	8,710	2,800	76,284	384,814
1997	200,255	100,431	9,361	2,716	74,035	386,798
1998	209,866	104,558	9,900	2,634	75,476	402,434
1999	218,422	106,006	9,853	2,852	75,030	412,163
2000	233,498	110,487	10,658	2,770	76,491	433,904
2001	246,477	117,633	15,130	3,033	73,219	455,492
2002	261,115	121,047	13,371	3,207	67,081	465,821
2003	276,391	124,775	17,641	3,587	65,413	487,807
2004	287,868	130,153	16,662	3,834	63,807	502,324
2005	303,249	136,247	17,264	4,718	62,630	524,108
2006	323,745	145,754	16,528	4,419	62,971	553,417
2007	342,799	154,609	16,523	4,632	63,510	582,073
2008	367,858	165,101	17,526	5,135	62,041	617,661
2009	391,851	176,630	18,219	5,308	58,361	650,369
2010	410,666	185,601	18,619	5,683	60,210	680,779

Source: Statistics Canada, National Economic and Financial Accounts (Table 380-0007).

[1] Includes Canada Pension Plan and Québec Pension Plan. Excludes intergovernmental transfers.

Table 34

Total government saving and capital and financial account

National Economic and Financial Accounts

Year	Saving	Capital consumption allowances	Net capital transfers	Non-financial capital acquisition	Net lending[1]
			(millions of dollars)
1966	2,101	1,241	-98	3,289	-45
1967	1,648	1,360	-125	3,457	-574
1968	1,967	1,456	-137	3,627	-341
1969	3,116	1,616	-176	3,553	1,003
1970	1,727	1,787	-214	3,625	-325
1971	1,570	2,012	-290	4,292	-1,000
1972	1,554	2,231	-383	4,472	-1,070
1973	3,086	2,595	-455	4,454	772
1974	4,845	3,290	-477	5,967	1,691
1975	-2,302	3,839	-645	7,035	-6,143
1976	-2,130	4,230	-763	6,904	-5,567
1977	-4,406	4,671	-1,394	7,925	-9,054
1978	-6,755	5,148	-2,174	7,905	-11,686
1979	-5,687	5,744	-1,193	8,406	-9,542
1980	-8,492	6,492	-1,300	9,487	-12,787
1981	-4,499	7,621	-2,330	10,987	-10,195
1982	-19,043	8,498	-3,638	12,510	-26,693
1983	-25,013	9,015	-5,346	12,269	-33,613
1984	-26,558	9,581	-4,807	13,173	-34,957
1985	-31,259	10,249	-5,231	15,470	-41,711
1986	-28,161	10,673	-4,086	15,031	-36,605
1987	-22,721	11,318	-3,370	15,534	-30,307
1988	-17,859	12,186	-4,265	16,634	-26,572
1989	-21,446	13,195	-2,995	18,989	-30,235
1990	-30,052	14,180	-3,013	20,748	-39,633
1991	-48,379	14,250	-2,081	21,047	-57,257
1992	-56,747	14,690	-1,215	20,656	-63,928
1993	-58,023	15,282	-726	19,887	-63,354
1994	-46,250	16,181	-364	21,251	-51,684
1995	-38,246	17,004	-278	21,661	-43,181
1996	-20,678	17,441	-816	19,368	-23,421
1997	1,332	18,100	2,525	20,317	1,640
1998	348	18,649	1,956	20,188	765
1999	16,145	19,236	607	20,133	15,855
2000	34,765	20,145	1,505	24,710	31,705
2001	11,911	20,884	1,945	27,448	7,292
2002	4,629	21,830	997	28,544	-1,088
2003	6,259	22,227	612	30,122	-1,024
2004	21,648	23,300	-1,277	32,525	11,146
2005	35,674	24,626	-1,958	37,094	21,248
2006	40,867	26,494	-2,471	41,110	23,780
2007	39,955	28,650	-1,718	45,336	21,551
2008	15,008	31,760	-934	52,151	-6,317
2009	-47,920	33,896	-3,566	57,134	-74,724
2010	-55,737	36,237	-3,456	67,288	-90,244

Source: Statistics Canada, National Economic and Financial Accounts (Table 380-0007).

[1] Includes Canada Pension Plan and Québec Pension Plan.

Table 35

Federal government income

National Economic and Financial Accounts

Year	Taxes on incomes, persons	Taxes on incomes, corporations	Taxes on incomes, non-residents	Contributions to social insurance plans	Taxes on production and imports	Other transfers from persons	Transfers from other levels of government	Investment income	Sales of goods and services	Total income
					(millions of dollars)
1966	2,952	1,774	195	342	3,572	3	0	542	194	9,574
1967	3,569	1,758	211	350	3,713	3	0	629	259	10,492
1968	4,279	2,107	200	399	3,770	4	0	699	290	11,748
1969	5,519	2,402	222	494	4,038	2	0	939	304	13,920
1970	6,413	2,276	260	490	4,045	2	0	1,051	328	14,865
1971	7,217	2,477	272	530	4,492	4	0	1,179	377	16,548
1972	7,969	2,901	276	696	5,134	5	0	1,326	455	18,762
1973	9,250	3,643	324	903	5,850	6	0	1,488	473	21,937
1974	11,131	5,012	434	1,542	8,513	8	0	1,832	517	28,989
1975	12,284	5,380	464	1,952	7,987	8	87	2,081	625	30,868
1976	14,489	5,061	500	2,476	8,747	10	128	2,347	739	34,497
1977	14,305	5,135	532	2,551	9,249	12	126	2,638	743	35,291
1978	13,707	5,737	570	2,814	9,866	14	130	3,016	895	36,749
1979	16,336	6,860	764	2,799	10,788	16	147	3,160	1,158	42,028
1980	19,132	8,406	1,013	3,125	12,312	17	167	3,791	1,106	49,069
1981	22,977	9,323	1,113	4,717	19,126	14	184	4,648	1,321	63,423
1982	25,747	9,212	1,196	4,793	17,724	14	233	4,661	1,566	65,146
1983	26,809	9,536	1,052	7,017	16,483	15	224	4,557	1,732	67,425
1984	28,189	11,319	1,019	7,627	18,310	17	222	4,632	2,207	73,542
1985	32,141	11,586	955	8,753	19,113	21	260	4,814	2,522	80,165
1986	37,898	10,302	1,683	9,615	21,413	22	290	4,606	2,744	88,573
1987	42,143	11,864	1,222	10,250	23,921	23	317	4,499	3,054	97,293
1988	46,511	11,857	1,678	11,637	26,057	19	354	5,238	3,220	106,571
1989	51,130	12,132	1,545	10,315	28,922	32	382	5,769	3,480	113,707
1990	58,636	10,442	1,727	13,027	27,160	34	256	5,937	3,660	120,879
1991	59,039	9,892	1,514	15,064	30,367	40	461	5,613	3,843	125,833
1992	60,056	9,981	1,576	17,922	30,998	61	523	5,224	3,728	130,069
1993	58,400	10,695	1,649	18,619	31,055	53	539	4,151	3,554	128,715
1994	58,723	12,200	1,698	19,940	30,632	27	555	4,142	3,994	131,911
1995	63,582	13,372	1,964	19,497	31,447	25	757	5,439	4,230	140,313
1996	67,712	16,225	2,844	18,824	32,383	52	667	4,750	4,497	147,954
1997	73,735	20,229	2,958	20,212	34,936	52	662	5,240	4,532	162,556
1998	80,043	19,416	2,817	19,005	35,457	22	712	5,657	4,321	167,450
1999	82,573	25,798	3,386	18,659	36,237	14	785	6,158	4,074	177,684
2000	90,220	31,763	3,755	18,751	38,339	28	739	7,597	4,534	195,726
2001	93,446	24,223	4,530	18,344	39,841	33	796	7,959	4,763	193,935
2002	87,484	24,258	4,381	18,213	43,229	62	906	7,118	4,797	190,448
2003	88,511	27,893	4,157	17,833	45,084	57	789	7,083	4,819	196,226
2004	94,943	31,744	4,643	17,172	46,551	69	997	6,419	5,130	207,668
2005	102,450	32,201	5,478	17,830	48,516	93	1,049	6,455	5,693	219,765
2006	105,705	38,409	7,001	16,949	48,315	55	837	7,143	6,160	230,574
2007	116,950	37,096	6,890	17,001	48,768	53	1,061	9,631	6,773	244,223
2008	117,449	35,303	7,810	16,663	44,445	106	997	11,592	7,048	241,413
2009	107,378	32,745	5,868	16,790	43,634	107	899	8,598	7,301	223,320
2010	108,853	33,418	5,966	17,366	45,611	69	939	8,828	7,582	228,632

Source: Statistics Canada, National Economic and Financial Accounts (Table 380-0007).

Table 36

Federal government outlay

National Economic and Financial Accounts

Year	Goods and services	Transfers to persons	Transfers to business	Transfers to non-residents	Transfers to other levels of government	Interest on the public debt	Total outlay
			(millions of dollars)
1966	3,577	2,214	521	228	2,071	1,151	9,762
1967	3,957	2,678	544	250	2,327	1,245	11,001
1968	4,276	3,020	569	200	2,739	1,409	12,213
1969	4,610	3,293	577	208	2,947	1,589	13,224
1970	4,922	3,707	635	295	3,637	1,862	15,058
1971	5,401	4,289	553	301	4,680	1,974	17,198
1972	6,029	5,738	584	326	4,709	2,253	19,639
1973	6,706	6,538	758	365	4,959	2,518	21,844
1974	8,137	8,199	2,253	464	6,340	2,961	28,354
1975	9,369	10,056	3,543	666	8,025	3,705	35,364
1976	10,832	10,842	2,898	632	8,975	4,519	38,698
1977	12,362	12,271	2,710	720	10,294	5,101	43,458
1978	13,279	13,670	2,640	916	11,276	6,410	48,191
1979	14,215	13,469	3,675	948	12,087	8,080	52,474
1980	15,335	15,043	6,193	1,071	13,307	9,897	60,846
1981	18,183	17,039	7,042	1,136	14,583	13,739	71,722
1982	20,567	22,488	5,995	1,366	16,516	16,675	83,607
1983	21,725	25,960	6,094	1,464	18,303	17,463	91,009
1984	23,771	27,368	7,390	1,826	20,876	21,006	102,237
1985	26,657	29,190	7,074	1,885	22,774	24,738	112,318
1986	27,276	30,816	5,741	2,183	22,185	26,216	114,417
1987	28,370	31,635	6,263	2,555	23,899	27,883	120,605
1988	29,878	33,048	5,357	2,814	26,132	31,711	128,940
1989	31,813	34,923	4,579	2,715	27,016	37,424	138,470
1990	34,965	38,997	4,293	2,887	28,466	41,880	151,488
1991	35,803	45,385	6,604	3,086	29,276	41,053	161,207
1992	36,386	49,317	4,587	3,091	31,496	39,558	164,435
1993	37,575	51,600	3,586	2,886	32,320	39,219	167,186
1994	37,797	50,166	3,439	2,784	31,545	40,157	165,888
1995	37,777	48,879	3,270	2,747	33,463	46,254	172,390
1996	36,610	48,752	3,252	2,671	29,449	45,352	166,086
1997	35,019	49,234	4,135	2,577	25,697	43,407	160,069
1998	36,268	50,739	3,825	2,490	26,452	43,910	163,684
1999	37,909	51,575	3,587	2,704	32,458	43,632	171,865
2000	42,137	53,479	3,537	2,613	32,239	45,299	179,304
2001	43,189	57,965	3,682	2,867	34,937	41,830	184,470
2002	46,427	60,857	2,969	3,032	33,316	36,767	183,368
2003	47,979	62,949	4,313	3,402	40,191	35,169	194,003
2004	49,274	65,603	5,083	3,538	39,596	33,458	196,552
2005	51,904	67,903	4,887	4,400	56,819	32,103	218,016
2006	54,645	70,547	4,293	4,076	51,690	32,122	217,373
2007	56,233	76,578	3,638	4,262	56,177	31,543	228,431
2008	61,509	81,119	3,782	4,737	62,423	30,034	243,604
2009	65,404	88,051	4,484	4,875	64,611	26,850	254,275
2010	66,762	90,670	4,210	5,222	73,854	27,544	268,262

Source: Statistics Canada, National Economic and Financial Accounts (Table 380-0007).

Table 37

Federal government saving and capital and financial account

National Economic and Financial Accounts

Year	Saving	Capital consumption allowances	Net capital transfers	Non-financial capital acquisition	Net lending
			(millions of dollars)
1966	-188	322	-95	499	-460
1967	-509	350	-107	525	-791
1968	-465	368	-115	682	-894
1969	696	399	-154	516	425
1970	-193	429	-188	469	-421
1971	-650	476	-236	521	-931
1972	-877	517	-269	655	-1,284
1973	93	589	-317	505	-140
1974	635	731	-308	1,033	25
1975	-4,496	850	-395	1,174	-5,215
1976	-4,201	923	-485	1,072	-4,835
1977	-8,167	1,006	-1,132	1,212	-9,505
1978	-11,442	1,094	-1,898	1,280	-13,526
1979	-10,446	1,195	-873	1,038	-11,162
1980	-11,777	1,306	-898	1,176	-12,545
1981	-8,299	1,500	-1,866	1,336	-10,001
1982	-18,461	1,649	-2,834	1,695	-21,341
1983	-23,584	1,706	-4,010	1,992	-27,880
1984	-28,695	1,824	-3,784	3,022	-33,677
1985	-32,153	1,963	-4,085	3,723	-37,998
1986	-25,844	2,064	-2,556	2,597	-28,933
1987	-23,312	2,201	-2,079	2,800	-25,990
1988	-22,369	2,353	-3,112	3,164	-26,292
1989	-24,763	2,542	-1,841	3,635	-27,697
1990	-30,609	2,733	-1,835	3,598	-33,309
1991	-35,374	2,720	-950	3,610	-37,214
1992	-34,366	2,772	-251	3,942	-35,787
1993	-38,471	2,923	137	4,285	-39,696
1994	-33,977	3,179	62	4,352	-35,088
1995	-32,077	3,311	691	3,625	-31,700
1996	-18,132	3,288	-22	2,091	-16,957
1997	2,487	3,427	3,837	3,275	6,476
1998	3,766	3,509	3,374	2,973	7,676
1999	5,819	3,460	3,041	3,550	8,770
2000	16,422	3,451	3,668	3,513	20,028
2001	9,465	3,575	2,919	3,949	12,010
2002	7,080	3,840	2,014	3,538	9,396
2003	2,223	3,717	1,722	3,541	4,121
2004	11,116	3,726	-118	3,894	10,830
2005	1,749	3,780	-535	3,975	1,019
2006	13,201	3,866	-508	4,081	12,478
2007	15,792	4,051	-483	3,985	15,375
2008	-2,191	4,333	383	4,546	-2,021
2009	-30,955	4,557	-1,721	4,838	-32,957
2010	-39,630	4,789	-1,725	6,019	-42,585

Source: Statistics Canada, National Economic and Financial Accounts (Table 380-0007).

Table 38

Provincial and territorial government income

National Economic and Financial Accounts

Year	Taxes on incomes, persons	Taxes on incomes, corporations	Contributions to social insurance plans	Taxes on production and imports	Other transfers from persons	Transfers from other levels of government	Investment income	Sales of goods and services	Total income
				(millions of dollars)
1966	1,162	581	263	2,599	400	2,060	863	722	8,650
1967	1,537	638	289	2,976	435	2,346	887	815	9,923
1968	1,866	745	287	3,405	607	2,745	1,093	894	11,642
1969	2,178	819	315	3,879	854	2,986	1,241	969	13,241
1970	2,656	794	336	4,269	1,080	3,678	1,275	1,083	15,171
1971	3,200	869	362	4,681	1,111	4,725	1,398	1,260	17,606
1972	3,642	1,019	420	5,378	1,043	4,714	1,679	1,369	19,264
1973	4,368	1,436	535	6,343	1,087	4,997	2,299	1,597	22,662
1974	5,471	2,039	694	7,379	1,162	6,384	3,315	1,739	28,183
1975	6,254	2,114	884	7,747	1,177	8,031	3,986	2,056	32,249
1976	6,911	2,067	1,215	9,469	1,531	8,935	4,549	2,478	37,155
1977	9,506	2,103	1,367	10,499	1,713	10,303	5,612	2,772	43,875
1978	11,021	2,451	1,527	10,757	1,895	11,331	7,052	3,307	49,341
1979	11,438	3,178	1,685	12,172	2,101	12,171	9,113	3,625	55,483
1980	13,007	3,672	1,782	13,437	2,310	13,369	10,664	4,067	62,308
1981	15,588	3,473	2,175	16,400	2,585	14,683	11,478	4,644	71,026
1982	17,351	2,543	2,443	19,407	3,041	16,572	11,827	5,437	78,621
1983	18,858	2,784	2,609	22,261	3,436	18,350	13,145	5,999	87,442
1984	20,532	3,665	2,842	24,038	3,626	20,883	14,386	6,625	96,597
1985	21,121	3,977	3,176	26,211	3,758	22,760	14,797	6,987	102,787
1986	23,720	4,271	3,741	28,626	3,896	22,174	12,196	7,554	106,178
1987	27,145	5,126	4,340	31,655	4,231	23,800	11,900	7,733	115,930
1988	31,057	5,729	5,202	35,822	4,656	26,011	12,945	8,344	129,766
1989	32,092	6,434	5,733	39,047	5,108	26,753	14,585	9,009	138,761
1990	37,535	6,392	5,800	42,685	3,661	28,145	15,175	9,671	149,064
1991	38,115	5,123	5,160	43,744	4,174	29,135	14,600	10,478	150,529
1992	37,227	4,536	5,464	45,114	4,533	31,232	14,857	11,486	154,449
1993	37,979	5,568	5,718	47,049	4,710	32,130	16,179	12,045	161,378
1994	41,588	7,142	6,067	50,419	4,928	31,120	17,772	12,518	171,554
1995	42,608	8,766	6,536	52,737	5,372	33,162	17,928	13,377	180,486
1996	45,896	10,014	6,395	54,071	5,327	28,996	19,496	14,049	184,244
1997	47,055	12,021	6,217	56,685	5,987	25,392	19,620	14,766	187,743
1998	48,892	11,384	6,180	60,262	6,617	26,399	19,000	16,216	194,950
1999	51,624	13,612	6,062	64,295	6,331	32,644	19,753	17,461	211,782
2000	53,731	16,412	6,076	67,715	6,404	32,404	28,183	18,201	229,126
2001	52,480	12,129	6,213	69,842	7,383	34,903	25,817	18,924	227,691
2002	51,171	11,488	6,563	73,218	8,042	33,294	23,192	20,321	227,289
2003	52,292	12,016	7,363	76,458	8,843	40,160	28,854	21,422	247,408
2004	56,421	14,500	8,145	80,357	9,294	39,553	29,679	22,822	260,771
2005	62,601	16,486	8,710	83,181	9,895	56,545	34,472	24,373	296,263
2006	68,532	18,768	10,186	86,108	10,241	51,133	37,899	25,612	308,479
2007	73,803	18,189	10,317	89,029	10,777	55,532	35,831	26,967	320,445
2008	73,545	19,458	10,587	89,988	10,730	61,896	40,693	28,442	335,339
2009	69,280	20,575	10,889	89,087	9,762	63,521	27,034	29,822	319,970
2010	70,541	21,742	11,149	93,755	10,026	72,614	31,636	31,293	342,756

Source: Statistics Canada, National Economic and Financial Accounts (Table 380-0007).

Table 39

Provincial and territorial government outlay

National Economic and Financial Accounts

Year	Goods and services	Transfers to persons	Transfers to business	Transfers to other levels of government	Interest on the public debt	Total outlay
			(millions of dollars)
1966	4,436	735	129	1,829	359	7,488
1967	5,423	959	89	2,072	435	8,978
1968	6,270	1,216	73	2,290	548	10,397
1969	7,212	1,365	98	2,541	710	11,926
1970	8,884	1,510	82	3,194	856	14,526
1971	9,934	1,782	222	3,605	1,049	16,592
1972	11,093	1,673	255	4,050	1,243	18,314
1973	12,619	1,886	314	4,544	1,534	20,897
1974	15,416	2,464	532	5,453	1,681	25,546
1975	19,461	3,139	669	6,957	1,992	32,218
1976	22,096	3,859	901	7,660	2,503	37,019
1977	24,793	4,452	1,147	9,502	2,888	42,782
1978	27,579	4,948	1,240	9,654	3,693	47,114
1979	31,034	5,483	1,719	10,673	4,196	53,105
1980	36,296	6,783	2,023	12,937	5,150	63,189
1981	41,393	7,693	2,479	13,751	6,534	71,850
1982	47,570	9,244	3,102	16,117	8,200	84,233
1983	52,145	10,439	3,857	16,887	9,558	92,886
1984	54,300	11,316	4,334	17,367	11,126	98,443
1985	58,278	12,111	4,459	18,346	12,549	105,743
1986	62,548	12,966	4,797	19,386	13,693	113,390
1987	66,499	14,111	4,090	20,361	15,056	120,117
1988	73,113	15,045	4,533	21,903	15,730	130,324
1989	79,643	16,530	4,465	23,049	17,366	141,053
1990	86,545	18,925	4,866	25,590	18,684	154,610
1991	93,956	20,937	5,307	27,979	19,587	167,766
1992	97,988	23,651	6,541	30,687	21,594	180,461
1993	98,567	24,603	5,553	30,653	23,337	182,713
1994	99,106	24,815	4,963	31,247	25,221	185,352
1995	100,835	25,406	4,264	32,233	26,957	189,695
1996	101,092	25,576	4,242	30,085	26,756	187,751
1997	103,936	25,945	4,025	29,594	26,679	190,179
1998	109,514	26,717	5,069	30,962	27,978	200,240
1999	114,799	27,170	5,171	31,594	27,986	206,720
2000	122,292	28,574	6,043	31,959	28,017	216,885
2001	131,201	29,662	10,289	33,459	28,044	232,655
2002	139,247	29,781	8,836	34,885	27,096	239,845
2003	148,120	30,066	11,651	35,808	27,048	252,693
2004	155,137	30,981	9,809	38,778	26,992	261,697
2005	162,800	33,297	10,498	42,305	27,275	276,175
2006	173,808	38,570	10,223	46,904	27,522	297,027
2007	187,864	39,446	10,813	48,691	28,588	315,402
2008	202,092	42,922	11,459	51,772	28,541	336,786
2009	214,664	45,030	11,325	54,203	27,996	353,218
2010	226,596	49,675	11,927	56,399	28,976	373,573

Source: Statistics Canada, National Economic and Financial Accounts (Table 380-0007).

Table 40

Provincial and territorial government saving and capital and financial account

National Economic and Financial Accounts

Year	Saving	Capital consumption allowances	Net capital transfers	Non-financial capital acquisition	Net lending
			(millions of dollars)
1966	1,162	518	-3	1,486	191
1967	945	559	-18	1,571	-85
1968	1,245	602	-22	1,519	306
1969	1,315	672	-22	1,612	353
1970	645	753	-26	1,622	-250
1971	1,014	833	-54	2,113	-320
1972	950	934	-64	2,137	-317
1973	1,765	1,094	-99	2,164	596
1974	2,637	1,420	-137	2,635	1,285
1975	31	1,668	-214	3,194	-1,709
1976	136	1,836	-221	2,991	-1,240
1977	1,093	2,033	-196	3,596	-666
1978	2,227	2,249	-181	3,537	758
1979	2,378	2,517	-236	4,053	606
1980	-881	2,879	-310	4,423	-2,735
1981	-824	3,458	-338	5,338	-3,042
1982	-5,612	3,846	-630	5,926	-8,322
1983	-5,444	4,087	-1,090	5,675	-8,122
1984	-1,846	4,359	-787	5,588	-3,862
1985	-2,956	4,668	-867	6,502	-5,657
1986	-7,212	4,842	-1,212	6,810	-10,392
1987	-4,187	5,099	-990	6,680	-6,758
1988	-558	5,472	-894	6,505	-2,485
1989	-2,292	5,888	-853	7,517	-4,774
1990	-5,546	6,302	-874	8,233	-8,351
1991	-17,237	6,288	-836	8,529	-20,314
1992	-26,012	6,466	-629	7,980	-28,155
1993	-21,335	6,670	-543	7,238	-22,446
1994	-13,798	6,982	-44	7,804	-14,664
1995	-9,209	7,267	-481	8,191	-10,614
1996	-3,507	7,450	-322	7,853	-4,232
1997	-2,436	7,626	-702	7,667	-3,179
1998	-5,290	7,779	-4,330	7,845	-9,686
1999	5,062	8,070	-3,650	6,646	2,836
2000	12,241	8,535	-1,623	11,004	8,149
2001	-4,964	8,919	-586	11,892	-8,523
2002	-12,556	9,246	-667	13,054	-17,031
2003	-5,285	9,436	-1,780	13,955	-11,584
2004	-926	9,856	-870	14,600	-6,540
2005	20,088	10,425	-1,002	16,548	12,963
2006	11,452	11,321	-1,697	18,497	2,579
2007	5,043	12,355	-918	20,823	-4,343
2008	-1,447	13,821	-622	23,670	-11,918
2009	-33,248	14,791	-1,152	26,078	-45,687
2010	-30,817	15,994	-951	32,154	-47,928

Source: Statistics Canada, National Economic and Financial Accounts (Table 380-0007).

Table 41

Local government income

National Economic and Financial Accounts

Year	Indirect taxes	Transfers from persons	Transfers from other levels of government	Investment income	Sales of goods and services	Total income
			(millions of dollars)
1966	2,467	43	1,881	95	392	4,878
1967	2,759	50	2,112	113	437	5,471
1968	3,085	42	2,326	131	446	6,030
1969	3,420	41	2,552	147	481	6,641
1970	3,726	44	3,199	163	545	7,677
1971	3,958	48	3,607	194	603	8,410
1972	4,284	51	4,098	207	670	9,310
1973	4,622	56	4,553	250	795	10,276
1974	5,156	58	5,453	320	954	11,941
1975	5,994	64	6,918	345	1,065	14,386
1976	7,160	78	7,626	432	1,301	16,597
1977	8,115	87	9,421	442	1,412	19,477
1978	8,953	98	9,538	527	1,795	20,911
1979	9,361	134	10,548	737	2,106	22,886
1980	10,771	142	12,827	935	2,499	27,174
1981	12,344	156	13,665	1,308	2,959	30,432
1982	13,189	167	15,975	1,421	3,270	34,022
1983	14,036	182	16,777	1,280	3,583	35,858
1984	15,006	188	17,281	1,485	4,016	37,976
1985	16,015	195	18,204	1,577	4,003	39,994
1986	17,456	217	19,230	1,615	4,539	43,057
1987	19,037	254	20,267	1,659	5,228	46,445
1988	20,686	307	21,797	1,877	5,679	50,346
1989	22,970	341	23,038	2,303	6,143	54,795
1990	24,848	356	25,793	2,543	6,742	60,282
1991	26,582	374	27,790	2,366	7,104	64,216
1992	28,565	395	30,573	2,251	7,348	69,132
1993	29,505	428	30,484	2,284	7,752	70,453
1994	29,607	466	31,289	2,331	8,062	71,755
1995	29,761	447	31,888	2,553	8,508	73,157
1996	30,422	453	30,056	2,482	8,448	71,861
1997	31,586	471	29,541	2,288	9,201	73,087
1998	31,519	516	30,787	2,514	10,012	75,348
1999	32,741	570	31,059	2,591	10,833	77,794
2000	32,944	684	31,397	2,977	10,679	78,681
2001	33,968	755	32,795	2,983	11,084	81,585
2002	34,979	771	34,096	2,759	11,569	84,174
2003	36,551	811	35,151	3,096	11,734	87,343
2004	38,576	853	37,925	3,192	12,519	93,065
2005	40,851	904	41,647	3,190	13,326	99,918
2006	42,693	987	46,756	3,380	14,365	108,181
2007	45,442	1,072	48,420	3,739	15,451	114,124
2008	47,869	1,069	51,456	3,598	16,391	120,383
2009	49,562	1,335	54,548	3,940	16,993	126,378
2010	51,881	1,397	56,855	4,022	18,222	132,377

Source: Statistics Canada, National Economic and Financial Accounts (Table 380-0007).

Table 42

Local government outlay

National Economic and Financial Accounts

Year	Goods and services	Transfers to persons	Transfers to businessgove	Transfers to other levels of rnment	Interest on the public debt	Total outlay
			(millions of dollars)
1966	3,949	67	35	41	373	4,465
1967	4,513	109	36	59	430	5,147
1968	5,140	146	39	42	476	5,843
1969	5,869	158	57	50	517	6,651
1970	6,662	231	68	46	591	7,598
1971	7,339	283	85	47	728	8,482
1972	8,041	271	90	53	748	9,203
1973	9,238	276	106	47	858	10,525
1974	10,860	254	135	44	846	12,139
1975	12,774	303	159	54	942	14,232
1976	15,031	345	185	54	1,220	16,835
1977	17,057	322	221	54	1,443	19,097
1978	18,562	368	266	69	1,638	20,903
1979	20,611	407	292	106	1,781	23,197
1980	23,034	469	412	119	1,986	26,020
1981	25,675	521	413	198	2,257	29,064
1982	28,958	610	538	147	2,544	32,797
1983	30,733	744	536	161	2,837	35,011
1984	32,721	802	571	143	3,015	37,252
1985	34,481	850	596	104	3,298	39,329
1986	36,266	939	636	123	3,313	41,277
1987	38,835	1,045	675	124	3,340	44,019
1988	41,971	1,129	721	127	3,365	47,313
1989	45,426	1,250	774	108	3,495	51,053
1990	49,764	1,713	893	138	3,722	56,230
1991	53,675	2,700	943	131	3,886	61,335
1992	56,740	3,410	1,195	145	4,089	65,579
1993	58,145	3,899	1,243	180	4,295	67,762
1994	59,018	3,949	1,206	172	4,219	68,564
1995	59,712	3,738	1,212	111	4,316	69,089
1996	60,187	2,950	1,216	185	4,176	68,714
1997	60,989	2,640	1,201	304	3,949	69,083
1998	63,692	3,523	1,006	484	3,588	72,293
1999	65,396	2,990	1,095	436	3,412	73,329
2000	68,705	3,248	1,078	342	3,175	76,548
2001	71,634	3,641	1,159	98	3,345	79,877
2002	75,006	2,637	1,566	95	3,218	82,522
2003	79,800	2,747	1,677	101	3,196	87,521
2004	82,976	2,940	1,770	101	3,357	91,144
2005	88,058	3,026	1,879	117	3,252	96,332
2006	94,775	2,976	2,012	132	3,327	103,222
2007	98,150	3,305	2,072	145	3,379	107,051
2008	103,713	3,827	2,285	154	3,466	113,445
2009	111,030	4,268	2,410	154	3,515	121,377
2010	116,425	4,510	2,482	155	3,690	127,262

Source: Statistics Canada, National Economic and Financial Accounts (Table 380-0007).

Table 43

Local government saving and capital and financial account

National Economic and Financial Accounts

Year	Saving	Capital consumption allowances	Net capital transfers	Non-financial capital acquisition	Net lending
			(millions of dollars)
1966	413	401	0	1,304	-490
1967	324	451	0	1,361	-586
1968	187	486	0	1,426	-753
1969	-10	545	0	1,425	-890
1970	79	605	0	1,534	-850
1971	-72	703	0	1,658	-1,027
1972	107	780	-50	1,680	-843
1973	-249	912	-39	1,785	-1,161
1974	-198	1,139	-32	2,299	-1,390
1975	154	1,321	-36	2,667	-1,228
1976	-238	1,471	-57	2,841	-1,665
1977	380	1,632	-66	3,117	-1,171
1978	8	1,805	-95	3,088	-1,370
1979	-311	2,032	-84	3,315	-1,678
1980	1,154	2,307	-92	3,888	-519
1981	1,368	2,663	-126	4,313	-408
1982	1,225	3,003	-174	4,889	-835
1983	847	3,222	-246	4,602	-779
1984	724	3,398	-236	4,563	-677
1985	665	3,618	-279	5,245	-1,241
1986	1,780	3,767	-318	5,624	-395
1987	2,426	4,018	-301	6,054	89
1988	3,033	4,361	-259	6,965	170
1989	3,742	4,765	-301	7,837	369
1990	4,052	5,145	-304	8,917	-24
1991	2,881	5,242	-295	8,908	-1,080
1992	3,553	5,452	-335	8,734	-64
1993	2,691	5,689	-320	8,364	-304
1994	3,191	6,020	-382	9,095	-266
1995	4,068	6,426	-488	9,845	161
1996	3,147	6,703	-472	9,424	-46
1997	4,004	7,047	-610	9,375	1,066
1998	3,055	7,361	2,912	9,370	3,958
1999	4,465	7,706	1,216	9,937	3,450
2000	2,133	8,159	-540	10,193	-441
2001	1,708	8,390	-388	11,607	-1,897
2002	1,652	8,744	-350	11,952	-1,906
2003	-178	9,074	670	12,626	-3,060
2004	1,921	9,718	-289	14,031	-2,681
2005	3,586	10,421	-421	16,571	-2,985
2006	4,959	11,307	-266	18,532	-2,532
2007	7,073	12,244	-317	20,528	-1,528
2008	6,938	13,606	-695	23,935	-4,086
2009	5,001	14,548	-693	26,218	-7,362
2010	5,115	15,454	-780	29,115	-9,326

Source: Statistics Canada, National Economic and Financial Accounts (Table 380-0007).

Table 44

Total Canada Pension Plan and Québec Pension Plan

National Economic and Financial Accounts

Year	Income	Contributions to social insurance plans	Investment income	Outlay	Gross current expenditure on goods and services	Current transfers to persons	Current transfers to non-residents	Saving
				(millions of dollars)
1966	729	719	10	15	15	0	0	714
1967	905	850	55	17	17	0	0	888
1968	1,037	922	115	37	22	15	0	1,000
1969	1,192	1,009	183	77	26	51	0	1,115
1970	1,330	1,057	273	134	30	104	0	1,196
1971	1,478	1,103	375	200	28	172	0	1,278
1972	1,656	1,190	466	282	34	248	0	1,374
1973	1,870	1,300	570	393	37	352	4	1,477
1974	2,313	1,608	705	542	43	495	4	1,771
1975	2,767	1,905	862	758	45	709	4	2,009
1976	3,272	2,204	1,068	1,099	58	1,036	5	2,173
1977	3,704	2,439	1,265	1,416	64	1,344	8	2,288
1978	4,218	2,726	1,492	1,766	68	1,689	9	2,452
1979	4,867	3,087	1,780	2,175	74	2,089	12	2,692
1980	5,668	3,539	2,129	2,656	90	2,553	13	3,012
1981	6,532	3,971	2,561	3,276	121	3,139	16	3,256
1982	7,810	4,744	3,066	4,005	117	3,868	20	3,805
1983	8,017	4,558	3,459	4,849	128	4,696	25	3,168
1984	9,017	5,143	3,874	5,758	141	5,589	28	3,259
1985	9,897	5,704	4,193	6,712	161	6,517	34	3,185
1986	10,728	6,245	4,483	7,613	158	7,415	40	3,115
1987	11,859	7,131	4,728	9,507	179	9,277	51	2,352
1988	12,990	7,936	5,054	10,955	193	10,701	61	2,035
1989	14,169	8,801	5,368	12,302	211	12,021	70	1,867
1990	15,719	10,117	5,602	13,668	217	13,369	82	2,051
1991	16,475	10,847	5,628	15,124	225	14,808	91	1,351
1992	17,117	11,625	5,492	17,039	235	16,699	105	78
1993	17,651	12,208	5,443	18,559	227	18,221	111	-908
1994	18,257	12,931	5,326	19,923	243	19,565	115	-1,666
1995	19,831	14,456	5,375	20,859	250	20,489	120	-1,028
1996	19,796	14,761	5,035	21,982	266	21,587	129	-2,186
1997	20,339	15,600	4,739	23,062	311	22,612	139	-2,723
1998	22,932	18,280	4,652	24,115	392	23,579	144	-1,183
1999	25,536	21,000	4,536	24,737	318	24,271	148	799
2000	29,676	24,921	4,755	25,707	364	25,186	157	3,969
2001	32,686	28,621	4,065	26,984	453	26,365	166	5,702
2002	36,835	32,527	4,308	28,382	435	27,772	175	8,453
2003	39,189	35,208	3,981	29,690	492	29,013	185	9,499
2004	40,943	36,805	4,138	31,406	481	30,629	296	9,537
2005	43,077	38,834	4,243	32,826	487	32,021	318	10,251
2006	45,776	40,987	4,789	34,521	517	33,661	343	11,255
2007	48,249	43,076	5,173	36,202	552	35,280	370	12,047
2008	49,883	44,645	5,238	38,175	544	37,233	398	11,708
2009	51,749	46,892	4,857	40,467	753	39,281	433	11,282
2010	51,685	46,743	4,942	42,090	883	40,746	461	9,595

Source: Statistics Canada, National Economic and Financial Accounts (Table 380-0007).

Table 45

Actual, cyclically adjusted and primary-cyclically adjusted budget balances

National Economic and Financial Accounts

	Federal government			Total government
Year	Actual	Cyclically adjusted[1]	Primary-cyclically adjusted[1]	Actual	Cyclically adjusted[1]	Primary-cyclically adjusted[1]
	(millions of dollars)
1975	-5,215	-5,553	-3,020	-6,143	-6,570	-3,782
1976	-4,835	-5,840	-2,695	-5,567	-7,127	-3,508
1977	-9,505	-10,822	-7,249	-9,054	-11,199	-7,084
1978	-13,526	-15,186	-10,495	-11,686	-14,542	-9,118
1979	-11,162	-13,897	-7,541	-9,542	-13,931	-7,427
1980	-12,545	-14,446	-6,390	-12,787	-15,532	-7,606
1981	-10,001	-11,361	169	-10,195	-12,254	-1,252
1982	-21,341	-14,673	-159	-26,693	-15,175	-788
1983	-27,880	-19,009	-3,732	-33,613	-19,643	-3,572
1984	-33,677	-29,698	-10,808	-34,957	-29,090	-8,658
1985	-37,998	-38,214	-15,551	-41,711	-42,625	-17,815
1986	-28,933	-30,134	-5,920	-36,605	-38,628	-11,361
1987	-25,990	-29,972	-4,025	-30,307	-37,435	-7,308
1988	-26,292	-37,005	-7,082	-26,572	-43,978	-10,185
1989	-27,697	-39,497	-3,888	-30,235	-48,797	-9,227
1990	-33,309	-39,305	826	-39,633	-48,392	-3,432
1991	-37,214	-31,010	8,300	-57,257	-42,844	1,658
1992	-35,787	-25,531	12,267	-63,928	-41,256	4,164
1993	-39,696	-28,786	8,731	-63,354	-39,581	7,314
1994	-35,088	-28,603	9,903	-51,684	-37,907	12,086
1995	-31,700	-26,559	17,822	-43,181	-31,733	24,890
1996	-16,957	-7,767	35,920	-23,421	-3,891	52,214
1997	6,476	13,526	54,799	1,640	16,193	69,943
1998	7,676	14,558	56,522	765	16,111	71,375
1999	8,770	10,568	51,914	15,855	19,440	74,119
2000	20,028	14,852	57,242	31,705	19,763	73,657
2001	12,010	12,715	51,648	7,292	10,001	62,407
2002	9,396	13,463	47,825	-1,088	8,761	56,208
2003	4,121	8,138	40,582	-1,024	8,633	53,148
2004	10,830	12,051	43,021	11,146	12,824	55,725
2005	1,019	-1,677	27,536	21,248	14,286	54,320
2006	12,478	7,915	36,961	23,780	13,878	51,332
2007	15,375	12,503	39,083	21,551	14,357	48,946
2008	-2,021	298	23,299	-6,317	-1,385	30,621
2009	-32,957	9,383	31,252	-74,724	15,563	46,623
2010	-42,585	203	22,395	-90,244	-4,179	27,736

Sources: Statistics Canada, Sector Accounts (Table 380-0007); Government of Canada Budgetary Revenues and Expenditures (Table 183-0014); Department of Finance.

Estimates are based on an update of the methodology developed in the Department of Finance working paper "Fiscal Policy and the Business Cycle: A New Approach to Identifying the Interaction" (2003), Stephen Murchison and Janine Robbins. In particular, this update incorporates the effects from terms of trade in the calculation of the cyclical component.

[1] For 2009 and 2010, temporary counter-cyclical fiscal measures are included in the cyclical component of the balance and therefore excluded from the cyclically-adjusted budgetary balance.

Table 46

Actual, cyclically adjusted and primary-cyclically adjusted budget balances as a percentage of GDP at market prices

National Economic and Financial Accounts

	Federal government			Total government
Year	Actual	Cyclically adjusted[1]	Primary-cyclically adjusted[1]	Actual	Cyclically adjusted[1]	Primary-cyclically adjusted[1]
	(per cent of potential GDP)
1975	-3.0	-3.2	-1.7	-3.5	-3.8	-2.2
1976	-2.4	-2.9	-1.4	-2.8	-3.6	-1.8
1977	-4.4	-5.0	-3.3	-4.1	-5.1	-3.2
1978	-5.7	-6.4	-4.4	-4.9	-6.1	-3.8
1979	-4.1	-5.1	-2.8	-3.5	-5.1	-2.7
1980	-4.0	-4.7	-2.1	-4.1	-5.0	-2.5
1981	-2.8	-3.2	0.0	-2.8	-3.4	-0.4
1982	-5.3	-3.7	0.0	-6.6	-3.8	-0.2
1983	-6.5	-4.4	-0.9	-7.8	-4.5	-0.8
1984	-7.4	-6.5	-2.4	-7.6	-6.4	-1.9
1985	-7.9	-7.9	-3.2	-8.7	-8.8	-3.7
1986	-5.7	-5.9	-1.2	-7.2	-7.6	-2.2
1987	-4.8	-5.5	-0.7	-5.6	-6.9	-1.3
1988	-4.5	-6.3	-1.2	-4.5	-7.5	-1.7
1989	-4.4	-6.3	-0.6	-4.8	-7.7	-1.5
1990	-5.0	-5.9	0.1	-5.9	-7.2	-0.5
1991	-5.3	-4.4	1.2	-8.1	-6.1	0.2
1992	-4.9	-3.5	1.7	-8.7	-5.6	0.6
1993	-5.2	-3.8	1.2	-8.4	-5.2	1.0
1994	-4.5	-3.6	1.3	-6.6	-4.8	1.5
1995	-3.8	-3.2	2.1	-5.2	-3.8	3.0
1996	-2.0	-0.9	4.1	-2.7	-0.5	6.0
1997	0.7	1.5	6.1	0.2	1.8	7.7
1998	0.8	1.6	6.1	0.1	1.7	7.7
1999	0.9	1.1	5.3	1.6	2.0	7.5
2000	1.9	1.4	5.4	3.0	1.9	6.9
2001	1.1	1.1	4.6	0.7	0.9	5.6
2002	0.8	1.2	4.1	-0.1	0.8	4.9
2003	0.3	0.7	3.3	-0.1	0.7	4.3
2004	0.8	0.9	3.3	0.9	1.0	4.3
2005	0.1	-0.1	2.0	1.5	1.0	4.0
2006	0.9	0.5	2.6	1.6	1.0	3.6
2007	1.0	0.8	2.6	1.4	0.9	3.2
2008	-0.1	0.0	1.4	-0.4	-0.1	1.9
2009	-2.0	0.6	1.9	-4.6	1.0	2.9
2010	-2.5	0.0	1.3	-5.3	-0.2	1.6

Sources: Statistics Canada, Sector Accounts (Table 380-0007); Government of Canada Budgetary Revenues and Expenditures (Table 183-0014); Gross Domestic Product, Income Based (Table 380-0001); Department of Finance.

Estimates are based on an update of the methodology developed in the Department of Finance working paper "Fiscal Policy and the Business Cycle: A New Approach to Identifying the Interaction" (2003), Stephen Murchison and Janine Robbins. In particular, this update incorporates the effects from terms of trade in the calculation of the cyclical component.

[1] For 2009 and 2010, temporary counter-cyclical fiscal measures are included in the cyclical component of the balance and therefore excluded from the cyclically-adjusted budgetary balance.

Table 47

Change in actual, cyclically adjusted and primary-cyclically adjusted budget balances as a percentage of GDP at market prices

National Economic and Financial Accounts

	Federal government			Total government
Year	Actual	Cyclically adjusted[1]	Primary-cyclically adjusted[1]	Actual	Cyclically adjusted[1]	Primary-cyclically adjusted[1]
	(per cent of potential GDP)
1976	0.6	0.2	0.4	0.7	0.2	0.4
1977	-1.9	-2.0	-2.0	-1.3	-1.5	-1.5
1978	-1.3	-1.4	-1.1	-0.8	-1.0	-0.6
1979	1.5	1.3	1.6	1.4	1.0	1.1
1980	0.1	0.4	0.7	-0.6	0.1	0.3
1981	1.2	1.5	2.1	1.3	1.6	2.1
1982	-2.5	-0.5	-0.1	-3.8	-0.3	0.2
1983	-1.1	-0.7	-0.8	-1.1	-0.8	-0.6
1984	-0.9	-2.1	-1.5	0.1	-1.8	-1.1
1985	-0.5	-1.4	-0.9	-1.0	-2.5	-1.8
1986	2.2	2.0	2.1	1.5	1.2	1.5
1987	0.9	0.4	0.4	1.6	0.7	0.9
1988	0.3	-0.8	-0.5	1.0	-0.6	-0.4
1989	0.1	0.1	0.6	-0.3	-0.2	0.3
1990	-0.6	0.4	0.7	-1.1	0.5	1.0
1991	-0.3	1.5	1.0	-2.2	1.2	0.7
1992	0.4	0.9	0.5	-0.6	0.4	0.3
1993	-0.3	-0.3	-0.5	0.4	0.4	0.4
1994	0.8	0.2	0.1	1.8	0.4	0.6
1995	0.6	0.4	0.9	1.4	1.0	1.5
1996	1.9	2.3	2.0	2.5	3.4	3.0
1997	2.7	2.4	1.9	2.9	2.3	1.7
1998	0.1	0.1	0.0	-0.1	-0.1	-0.1
1999	0.1	-0.5	-0.8	1.5	0.2	-0.1
2000	1.0	0.3	0.1	1.4	-0.1	-0.6
2001	-0.8	-0.3	-0.7	-2.3	-1.0	-1.3
2002	-0.3	0.0	-0.5	-0.8	-0.1	-0.8
2003	-0.5	-0.5	-0.8	0.0	-0.1	-0.5
2004	0.5	0.3	0.0	0.9	0.3	0.0
2005	-0.8	-1.1	-1.3	0.7	0.1	-0.3
2006	0.8	0.7	0.6	0.1	-0.1	-0.4
2007	0.1	0.3	0.0	-0.2	0.0	-0.3
2008	-1.1	-0.8	-1.1	-1.8	-1.0	-1.3
2009	-1.9	0.6	0.5	-4.2	1.0	1.0
2010	-0.5	-0.6	-0.6	-0.7	-1.2	-1.2

Sources: Statistics Canada, Sector Accounts (Table 380-0007); Government of Canada Budgetary Revenues and Expenditures (Table 183-0014); Gross Domestic Product, Income Based (Table 380-0001); Department of Finance.

Estimates are based on an update of the methodology developed in the Department of Finance working paper "Fiscal Policy and the Business Cycle: A New Approach to Identifying the Interaction" (2003), Stephen Murchison and Janine Robbins. In particular, this update incorporates the effects from terms of trade in the calculation of the cyclical component.

A positive sign indicates a move towards smaller deficits or larger surpluses; a negative sign indicates a move towards larger deficits or smaller surpluses.

[1] For 2009 and 2010, temporary counter-cyclical fiscal measures are included in the cyclical component of the balance and therefore excluded from the cyclically-adjusted budgetary balance.

Table 48

Federal government liabilities and assets

National Accounts basis

	2001	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
					(millions of dollars)
Liabilities
Currency and bank deposits	3,901	4,118	4,189	4,293	4,509	4,728	4,900	5,081	5,190	5,320
Trade payables	486	573	854	583	811	750	359	359	879	1,590
Loans	101	101	103	100	101	101	154	55	164	206
Life insurance and pensions	119,903	129,075	130,355	132,141	134,180	136,758	140,541	142,978	145,238	147,942
Government claims	7,717	8,974	8,870	6,604	1,980	819	691	529	228	821
Other liabilities	51,986	33,866	34,784	39,997	56,796	58,425	57,882	61,999	73,978	75,551
Sub-total	184,094	176,707	179,155	183,718	198,377	201,581	204,527	211,001	225,677	231,430
Canada short-term paper	99,729	107,050	118,941	118,762	129,632	126,307	117,712	183,771	186,313	174,891
Canada bonds	339,262	331,079	315,027	295,423	285,530	278,641	267,330	274,235	358,993	409,538
Sub-total: Unmatured debt	438,991	438,129	433,968	414,185	415,162	404,948	385,042	458,006	545,306	584,429
Total liabilities	623,085	614,836	613,123	597,903	613,539	606,529	589,569	669,007	770,983	815,859
Financial assets
Currency and deposits	8,929	5,325	4,291	3,770	3,785	4,528	4,441	28,554	14,279	4,176
Trade receivables	20	20	256	211	207	207	263	265	551	551
Loans	14,357	16,816	21,379	16,045	17,575	16,868	18,207	18,294	14,326	19,411
Short-term paper	590	590	603	2,001	2,255	2,255	2,289	2,224	1,771	1,771
Mortgages	360	360	497	609	686	686	499	431	533	533
Bonds	5,730	5,226	6,401	6,223	6,318	6,310	5,939	5,480	5,069	4,900
Government claims	76,338	80,011	71,531	64,983	66,499	72,022	73,110	132,958	190,063	196,634
Shares	1,320	1,320	1,351	117	134	260	211	205	123	123
Foreign investments	241	241	86	65	63	63	42	39	27	27
Other financial assets	10,598	3,690	9,571	7,733	18,515	19,324	6,946	13,051	25,062	29,652
Total financial assets	118,483	113,599	115,966	101,757	116,037	122,523	111,947	201,501	251,804	257,778
Net financial assets	-504,602	-501,237	-497,157	-496,146	-497,502	-484,006	-477,622	-467,506	-519,179	-558,081
Non-financial assets
Non-residential structures	30,809	30,902	31,348	32,475	33,402	34,936	36,896	38,906	37,956	38,188
Machinery and equipment	9,309	10,158	9,324	9,006	8,805	8,709	9,149	9,684	10,556	10,527
Inventories	396	301	370	406	394	362	377	406	403	372
Land	8,010	8,065	8,245	8,671	8,985	9,502	10,183	10,894	10,742	10,922
Total non-financial assets	48,524	49,426	49,287	50,558	51,586	53,509	56,605	59,890	59,657	60,009
Total assets	167,007	163,025	165,253	152,315	167,623	176,032	168,552	261,391	311,461	317,787
Net worth	-456,078	-451,811	-447,870	-445,588	-445,916	-430,497	-421,017	-407,616	-459,522	-498,072

Source: Statistics Canada, National Balance Sheet Accounts.

Table 49

Provincial and local governments' liabilities and assets

National Accounts basis

	2001	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
	(millions of dollars)
Liabilities
Other deposits	2,620	2,606	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Trade payables	14,993	14,669	16,005	15,549	22,587	26,334	30,287	31,921	33,548	43,748
Loans	14,115	14,885	15,685	18,842	20,613	19,526	20,364	20,810	21,785	24,082
Short-term paper	18,109	21,932	21,066	18,331	15,080	16,475	22,875	36,288	40,801	40,478
Mortgages	2,144	2,095	2,048	2,018	1,925	1,855	1,773	1,745	1,740	1,740
Bonds	344,599	362,934	360,175	376,806	388,447	407,628	410,067	434,363	462,241	501,406
Life insurance and pensions	48,275	50,572	52,511	54,805	56,974	59,921	62,486	65,354	68,171	72,740
Government claims	12,134	11,608	12,804	12,576	11,581	10,756	10,553	11,442	11,561	14,163
Other liabilities	125,394	129,655	140,292	145,586	166,247	194,984	211,941	221,106	233,536	243,976
Total liabilities	582,383	610,956	620,586	644,513	683,454	737,479	770,346	823,029	873,383	942,333
Financial assets
Currency and deposits	16,162	17,273	18,381	19,819	23,105	25,259	28,102	29,132	29,846	30,329
Trade receivables	5,938	6,078	5,980	5,932	6,872	7,096	7,438	7,928	8,236	8,301
Loans	11,646	13,084	14,140	16,219	18,176	23,090	25,467	28,641	33,147	32,508
Short-term paper	24,405	30,733	27,368	36,980	44,773	47,213	50,909	61,000	62,174	72,370
Mortgages	5,511	5,533	6,761	7,170	9,298	11,264	10,435	10,791	10,568	10,604
Bonds	78,544	79,377	83,906	80,549	90,058	103,623	115,669	121,048	122,103	117,035
Government claims	87,397	86,850	93,757	96,177	103,387	99,306	104,549	121,394	122,113	125,187
Shares	49,162	49,661	51,491	51,048	57,548	67,337	69,968	56,545	65,013	71,525
Foreign investments	5,926	7,488	8,870	10,802	12,627	15,291	19,689	20,529	18,988	19,719
Other financial assets	62,993	56,823	56,574	65,514	74,594	93,874	100,897	102,967	100,938	105,708
Total financial assets	347,684	352,900	367,228	390,210	440,438	493,353	533,123	559,975	573,126	593,286
Net financial assets	-234,699	-258,056	-253,358	-254,303	-243,016	-244,126	-237,223	-263,054	-300,257	-349,047
Non-financial assets
Residential structures	7,853	8,098	8,303	8,348	8,530	11,312	12,961	13,575	13,811	14,651
Non-residential structures	272,651	282,116	294,719	313,786	328,785	357,142	388,341	433,687	451,645	470,144
Machinery and equipment	18,326	20,094	20,615	21,299	20,539	22,466	24,328	27,187	30,830	30,514
Land	74,650	77,495	81,508	87,813	92,576	102,641	113,492	128,041	134,538	141,592
Total non-financial assets	373,480	387,803	405,145	431,246	450,430	493,561	539,122	602,490	630,824	656,901
Total assets	721,164	740,703	772,373	821,456	890,868	986,914	1,072,245	1,162,465	1,203,950	1,250,187
Net worth	138,781	129,747	151,787	176,943	207,414	249,435	301,899	339,436	330,567	307,854

Source: Statistics Canada, National Balance Sheet Accounts.

Table 50

Social security funds

National Accounts basis

	2001	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
	(millions of dollars)
Liabilities
Total liabilities	451	19	164	63	266	606	1,273	6,721	3,111	2,540
Financial assets
Bonds:	28,525	26,840	25,238	24,823	25,897	26,066	28,851	26,145	28,430	30,609
Short-term paper	0	446	2,959	8,729	11,837	15,788	18,663	16,151	14,286	16,552
Foreign investments	0	6,737	8,144	11,488	21,617	36,379	34,640	39,937	50,820	51,733
Government claims	20,802	23,626	24,257	26,817	22,923	32,206	35,730	25,772	28,669	33,447
Corporate claims	0	0	0	0	2,821	6,298	10,141	12,880	15,145	22,166
Shares	14,038	13,653	18,256	19,465	18,928	14,553	13,678	13,642	9,954	9,830
Other financial assets	0	1,400	4,209	2,383	2,932	3,973	5,937	14,585	12,468	13,200
Total financial assets	63,365	72,702	83,063	93,705	106,955	135,263	147,640	149,112	159,772	177,537
Net worth	62,914	72,683	82,899	93,642	106,689	134,657	146,367	142,391	156,661	174,997

Source: Statistics Canada, National Balance Sheet Accounts.

Table 51

Total government liabilities and assets

National Accounts basis

	2001	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
	(millions of dollars)
Liabilities
Currency and deposits	6,521	6,724	4,189	4,293	4,509	4,728	4,900	5,081	5,190	5,320
Trade payables	15,479	15,242	16,859	16,132	23,398	27,084	30,646	32,280	34,427	45,338
Loans	14,216	14,986	15,788	18,942	20,714	19,627	20,518	20,865	21,949	24,288
Short-term paper	117,838	128,982	140,007	137,093	144,712	142,782	140,587	220,059	228,417	216,671
Mortgages	2,144	2,095	2,048	2,018	1,925	1,855	1,773	1,745	1,740	1,740
Bonds	683,861	694,013	675,202	672,229	673,977	686,269	677,397	708,598	821,234	910,944
Life insurance and pensions	168,178	179,647	182,866	186,946	191,154	196,679	203,027	208,332	213,409	220,682
Government claims	19,851	20,582	21,674	19,180	13,561	11,575	11,244	11,971	11,789	14,984
Other liabilities	177,831	163,540	175,240	185,646	223,309	254,015	271,096	289,826	309,322	320,765
Total liabilities	1,205,919	1,225,811	1,233,873	1,242,479	1,297,259	1,344,614	1,361,188	1,498,757	1,647,477	1,760,732
Financial assets
Currency and deposits	25,091	22,598	22,672	23,589	26,890	29,787	32,543	57,686	44,125	34,505
Trade receivables	5,958	6,098	6,236	6,143	7,079	7,303	7,701	8,193	8,787	8,852
Loans	26,003	29,900	35,519	32,264	35,751	39,958	43,674	46,935	47,473	51,919
Short-term paper	24,995	31,769	30,930	47,710	58,865	65,256	71,861	79,375	78,231	90,693
Mortgages	5,871	5,893	7,258	7,779	9,984	11,950	10,934	11,222	11,101	11,137
Bonds	112,799	111,443	115,545	111,595	122,273	135,999	150,459	152,673	155,602	152,544
Government claims	184,537	190,487	189,545	187,977	192,809	203,534	213,389	280,124	340,845	355,268
Corporate claims	0	0	0	0	2,821	6,298	10,141	12,880	15,145	22,166
Shares	64,520	64,634	71,098	70,630	76,610	82,150	83,857	70,392	75,090	81,478
Foreign investments	6,167	14,466	17,100	22,355	34,307	51,733	54,371	60,505	69,835	71,479
Other financial assets	73,591	61,913	70,354	75,630	96,041	117,171	113,780	130,603	138,468	148,560
Total financial assets	529,532	539,201	566,257	585,672	663,430	751,139	792,710	910,588	984,702	1,028,601
Net financial assets	-676,387	-686,610	-667,616	-656,807	-633,829	-593,475	-568,478	-588,169	-662,775	-732,131
Non-financial assets
Residential structures	7,853	8,098	8,303	8,348	8,530	11,312	12,961	13,575	13,811	14,651
Non-residential structures	303,460	313,018	326,067	346,261	362,187	392,078	425,237	472,593	489,601	508,332
Machinery and equipment	27,635	30,252	29,939	30,305	29,344	31,175	33,477	36,871	41,386	41,041
Inventories	396	301	370	406	394	362	377	406	403	372
Land	82,660	85,560	89,753	96,484	101,561	112,143	123,675	138,935	145,280	152,514
Total non-financial assets	422,004	437,229	454,432	481,804	502,016	547,070	595,727	662,380	690,481	716,910
Total assets	951,536	976,430	1,020,689	1,067,476	1,165,446	1,298,209	1,388,437	1,572,968	1,675,183	1,745,511
Net worth	-254,383	-249,381	-213,184	-175,003	-131,813	-46,405	27,249	74,211	27,706	-15,221

Source: Statistics Canada, National Balance Sheet Accounts .

Data in this table include Canada Pension Plan and Québec Pension Plan liabilities and assets.

International Fiscal Comparisons

Table 52

G-7 general government total tax and non-tax receipts

National Accounts basis

Year	Canada	United States	Japan	United Kingdom	Germany	France	Italy	G-7 average
				(per cent of GDP)
1970	35.7	30.2	22.0	44.9	-	39.9	29.2	31.5
1971	36.3	29.7	23.0	42.9	-	39.3	29.8	31.2
1972	36.6	30.9	23.0	40.8	-	39.5	29.6	31.5
1973	36.6	31.1	23.8	39.4	-	39.5	29.0	31.6
1974	38.7	31.7	25.9	44.0	-	39.9	28.7	32.8
1975	37.6	29.8	25.6	44.3	-	41.2	29.0	31.9
1976	37.4	30.5	25.2	43.9	-	42.8	30.4	32.4
1977	37.3	30.8	26.4	42.6	-	42.9	31.7	32.7
1978	36.8	30.9	26.3	39.8	-	42.8	32.5	32.5
1979	36.6	31.3	28.2	39.6	-	44.4	32.0	33.1
1980	37.5	31.6	28.8	42.2	-	45.6	33.8	33.9
1981	39.6	32.3	29.9	44.4	-	46.2	33.8	34.7
1982	40.2	32.0	30.2	45.3	-	47.0	36.8	35.1
1983	39.7	31.4	30.4	44.4	-	47.8	38.8	34.9
1984	39.8	31.3	31.0	44.1	-	48.5	37.6	34.9
1985	39.5	31.8	31.3	43.4	-	48.7	37.4	35.0
1986	40.4	32.0	31.4	42.3	-	47.8	38.4	35.1
1987	40.6	32.8	32.9	41.1	-	48.3	38.3	35.7
1988	41.0	32.6	32.9	40.9	-	47.2	39.3	35.6
1989	41.2	32.9	32.7	40.7	-	46.9	40.1	35.8
1990	43.0	32.9	33.6	39.4	-	47.0	41.5	36.0
1991	43.9	32.9	33.3	39.8	43.3	47.6	42.6	37.0
1992	44.2	32.8	33.3	38.7	44.8	47.4	45.0	37.2
1993	43.5	33.0	32.0	37.3	45.3	48.5	46.3	37.1
1994	43.0	33.4	31.2	37.8	45.6	48.8	44.4	37.0
1995	43.2	33.8	31.2	38.2	45.1	48.9	45.1	37.3
1996	43.8	34.3	31.6	38.0	45.9	50.4	45.5	37.7
1997	44.5	34.6	31.7	38.4	45.7	50.8	47.6	38.1
1998	44.9	34.9	31.3	39.4	45.9	50.0	46.2	38.2
1999	44.3	34.9	31.2	39.8	46.7	50.8	46.5	38.3
2000	44.1	35.4	31.4	40.3	46.4	50.1	45.3	38.4
2001	42.6	34.4	32.2	40.6	44.7	50.0	44.9	37.9
2002	41.1	31.9	30.8	39.0	44.4	49.4	44.4	36.2
2003	41.1	31.3	30.5	38.7	44.4	49.1	44.7	35.8
2004	40.7	31.6	30.9	39.6	43.5	49.6	44.2	35.8
2005	40.8	33.0	31.7	40.8	43.6	50.5	43.8	36.8
2006	41.1	33.8	34.5	41.5	43.7	50.3	45.3	37.8
2007	40.8	33.9	33.5	41.2	43.8	49.6	46.4	37.7
2008	39.8	32.6	35.1	42.6	43.9	49.6	46.1	37.4
2009	38.5	30.9	33.3	40.3	44.5	48.7	46.5	36.1
2010	38.3	31.6	32.5	40.7	43.4	49.1	46.1	36.2

Source: OECD Economic Outlook, No. 89 (May 2011).

Table 53

G-7 general government total outlays

National Accounts basis

Year	Canada	United States	Japan	United Kingdom	Germany	France	Italy	G-7 average
				(per cent of GDP)
1970	36.0	32.3	20.2	41.8	-	39.6	32.5	32.2
1971	37.3	32.5	21.8	41.2	-	39.2	34.5	32.7
1972	37.5	32.3	23.1	42.8	-	39.3	36.5	33.1
1973	36.0	31.3	23.3	43.6	-	39.1	35.4	32.5
1974	37.6	32.7	25.5	48.1	-	39.4	34.9	34.1
1975	41.1	35.1	28.5	49.4	-	42.8	39.3	36.8
1976	40.2	34.0	29.1	49.2	-	43.3	38.3	36.2
1977	41.4	33.1	30.4	46.4	-	43.4	38.6	35.8
1978	41.6	32.3	32.1	44.8	-	44.4	41.1	35.8
1979	40.0	32.3	33.2	43.6	-	44.6	40.3	35.7
1980	41.6	34.3	33.5	45.9	-	45.7	40.7	37.2
1981	42.5	34.7	34.0	49.4	-	48.4	44.6	38.4
1982	47.3	37.0	34.2	48.4	-	49.8	46.8	40.1
1983	47.9	37.1	34.5	48.2	-	50.3	48.9	40.4
1984	47.5	36.2	33.8	48.3	-	51.3	49.1	39.8
1985	48.0	36.9	32.7	46.6	-	51.7	49.8	39.9
1986	47.5	37.4	32.8	45.3	-	51.1	50.4	40.0
1987	46.1	37.2	33.2	43.2	-	50.3	49.8	39.6
1988	45.4	36.3	32.4	41.0	-	49.9	50.4	38.8
1989	45.8	36.2	31.4	40.4	-	48.7	51.5	38.5
1990	48.8	37.2	31.6	41.5	-	49.4	52.9	39.4
1991	52.3	38.0	31.6	43.2	46.1	50.5	54.0	40.9
1992	53.3	38.6	32.7	45.2	47.3	52.0	55.4	41.9
1993	52.2	38.1	34.5	45.3	48.3	55.0	56.4	42.3
1994	49.7	37.1	35.0	44.6	47.9	54.2	53.5	41.5
1995	48.5	37.1	36.0	44.1	54.8	54.4	52.5	42.2
1996	46.6	36.6	36.7	42.2	49.3	54.5	52.5	41.3
1997	44.3	35.4	35.7	40.6	48.3	54.1	50.2	40.0
1998	44.8	34.6	42.5	39.5	48.1	52.7	49.3	40.5
1999	42.7	34.2	38.6	38.8	48.2	52.6	48.2	39.4
2000	41.1	33.9	39.0	36.6	45.1	51.6	46.1	38.5
2001	42.0	35.0	38.6	39.9	47.5	51.6	48.0	39.7
2002	41.2	35.9	38.8	40.9	48.0	52.6	47.4	40.3
2003	41.2	36.3	38.4	42.4	48.4	53.2	48.3	40.6
2004	39.9	36.0	37.0	43.1	47.2	53.3	47.8	40.0
2005	39.3	36.2	38.4	44.0	46.9	53.4	48.1	40.4
2006	39.4	36.0	36.2	44.3	45.3	52.7	48.7	39.8
2007	39.4	36.8	35.9	44.1	43.5	52.4	47.9	39.9
2008	39.8	39.0	37.2	47.4	43.8	52.9	48.8	41.6
2009	44.1	42.2	42.0	51.2	47.5	56.2	51.8	45.2
2010	43.8	42.3	40.7	51.0	46.7	56.2	50.6	44.8

Source: OECD Economic Outlook, No. 89 (May 2011).

Table 54

G-7 general government financial balances

National Accounts basis

Year	Canada	United States	Japan	United Kingdom	Germany	France	Italy	G-7 average
				(per cent of GDP)
1970	-0.4	-2.1	1.7	3.0	-	0.7	-3.2	-0.7
1971	-1.0	-2.8	1.2	1.7	-	0.5	-4.7	-1.5
1972	-1.0	-1.4	-0.1	-1.9	-	0.5	-6.9	-1.5
1973	0.6	-0.3	0.6	-4.2	-	0.5	-6.4	-0.9
1974	1.1	-1.1	0.4	-4.1	-	0.2	-6.3	-1.4
1975	-3.5	-5.3	-2.9	-5.2	-	-1.8	-10.3	-4.9
1976	-2.8	-3.4	-3.9	-5.3	-	-0.6	-7.9	-3.8
1977	-4.1	-2.3	-4.0	-3.8	-	-0.6	-7.0	-3.0
1978	-4.8	-1.4	-5.8	-5.0	-	-1.6	-8.5	-3.3
1979	-3.4	-1.0	-5.0	-4.1	-	-0.2	-8.3	-2.7
1980	-4.1	-2.7	-4.7	-3.7	-	-0.1	-7.0	-3.3
1981	-2.8	-2.3	-4.1	-5.0	-	-2.2	-10.9	-3.7
1982	-7.0	-5.0	-4.0	-3.0	-	-2.8	-10.0	-5.0
1983	-8.2	-5.7	-4.2	-3.9	-	-2.5	-10.1	-5.5
1984	-7.8	-4.8	-2.8	-4.1	-	-2.8	-11.5	-4.9
1985	-8.6	-5.1	-1.4	-3.2	-	-3.0	-12.4	-4.9
1986	-7.1	-5.3	-1.4	-3.0	-	-3.2	-11.9	-4.9
1987	-5.4	-4.4	-0.4	-2.1	-	-2.1	-11.5	-3.9
1988	-4.3	-3.7	0.5	-0.1	-	-2.6	-11.0	-3.1
1989	-4.6	-3.3	1.3	0.2	-	-1.8	-11.4	-2.7
1990	-5.8	-4.3	2.0	-2.0	-	-2.4	-11.4	-3.4
1991	-8.4	-5.0	1.8	-3.4	-2.8	-2.9	-11.4	-3.9
1992	-9.1	-5.9	0.6	-6.5	-2.5	-4.5	-10.4	-4.7
1993	-8.7	-5.1	-2.5	-8.0	-3.0	-6.4	-10.1	-5.2
1994	-6.7	-3.7	-3.8	-6.8	-2.3	-5.5	-9.1	-4.4
1995	-5.3	-3.3	-4.7	-5.8	-9.7	-5.5	-7.4	-5.0
1996	-2.8	-2.3	-5.1	-4.2	-3.3	-4.0	-7.0	-3.5
1997	0.2	-0.9	-4.0	-2.2	-2.6	-3.3	-2.7	-2.0
1998	0.1	0.3	-11.2	-0.1	-2.2	-2.6	-3.1	-2.3
1999	1.6	0.7	-7.4	0.9	-1.5	-1.8	-1.8	-1.1
2000	2.9	1.5	-7.6	3.7	1.3	-1.5	-0.9	-0.1
2001	0.7	-0.6	-6.3	0.6	-2.8	-1.6	-3.1	-1.8
2002	-0.1	-4.0	-8.0	-2.0	-3.6	-3.2	-3.0	-4.1
2003	-0.1	-5.0	-7.9	-3.7	-4.0	-4.1	-3.5	-4.8
2004	0.9	-4.4	-6.2	-3.6	-3.8	-3.6	-3.6	-4.2
2005	1.5	-3.3	-6.7	-3.3	-3.3	-3.0	-4.4	-3.6
2006	1.6	-2.2	-1.6	-2.7	-1.6	-2.3	-3.3	-2.0
2007	1.4	-2.9	-2.4	-2.8	0.3	-2.7	-1.5	-2.2
2008	0.0	-6.3	-2.2	-4.8	0.1	-3.3	-2.7	-4.2
2009	-5.5	-11.3	-8.7	-10.8	-3.0	-7.5	-5.3	-9.1
2010	-5.5	-10.6	-8.1	-10.3	-3.3	-7.0	-4.5	-8.6

Source: OECD Economic Outlook, No. 89 (May 2011).

Table 55

G-7 general government net financial liabilities

National Accounts basis

Year	Canada	United States	Japan	United Kingdom	Germany	France	Italy	G-7 average
				(per cent of GDP)
1970	12.7	33.3	-6.5	47.2	-	0.8	31.4	24.3
1971	11.5	33.6	-7.2	46.3	-	1.0	35.3	24.4
1972	10.5	31.9	-6.3	41.4	-	2.1	40.3	23.5
1973	7.9	28.6	-5.9	38.0	-	1.1	41.6	21.3
1974	5.7	27.6	-5.1	34.6	-	0.2	39.0	20.2
1975	8.7	30.6	-1.7	32.8	-	0.9	47.6	22.9
1976	9.6	30.9	2.6	32.1	-	-0.6	48.3	23.8
1977	10.5	29.7	6.4	36.7	-	-1.2	48.0	24.2
1978	12.3	27.7	12.6	32.6	-	0.0	50.1	24.2
1979	13.7	25.4	16.4	29.2	-	-1.7	49.1	23.2
1980	14.5	25.6	15.5	29.8	-	-4.3	45.6	22.6
1981	13.5	25.4	19.2	23.9	-	-0.2	49.5	23.3
1982	19.1	29.5	23.5	29.5	-	1.6	53.2	27.4
1983	25.6	33.0	28.3	30.0	-	3.9	62.8	31.4
1984	29.6	34.2	30.5	25.3	-	6.7	66.5	32.9
1985	35.3	37.3	30.8	26.0	-	9.5	73.0	35.6
1986	39.6	40.8	33.0	26.0	-	12.2	77.7	38.6
1987	39.2	43.0	26.9	6.6	-	13.0	82.3	37.3
1988	38.1	44.1	22.4	-0.1	-	14.7	85.1	36.7
1989	41.1	44.2	15.7	-5.0	-	15.3	79.7	34.8
1990	43.7	45.4	13.4	-3.6	-	17.1	82.5	35.4
1991	50.5	49.1	11.7	-1.4	8.5	18.4	86.2	33.3
1992	59.1	52.5	13.8	6.7	14.9	20.0	93.2	36.9
1993	64.2	54.9	17.1	17.4	18.3	26.8	100.5	40.8
1994	67.9	54.4	19.6	19.7	19.1	29.7	104.5	41.9
1995	70.7	53.8	23.8	26.3	29.7	37.5	99.0	43.2
1996	70.0	51.9	29.2	27.9	32.7	41.8	104.5	44.2
1997	64.7	48.8	34.8	30.6	32.4	42.3	104.6	43.8
1998	60.8	44.9	46.2	32.6	36.2	40.5	107.0	43.9
1999	55.8	40.2	53.8	29.0	34.7	33.5	101.1	41.4
2000	46.2	35.3	60.4	26.8	33.9	35.1	95.6	39.3
2001	44.3	34.6	66.3	23.2	36.2	36.7	96.3	39.7
2002	42.6	37.2	72.6	23.7	40.3	41.8	95.7	42.1
2003	38.7	40.5	76.5	23.9	43.1	44.2	92.7	44.1
2004	35.2	42.1	82.7	25.9	47.2	45.3	92.5	45.9
2005	31.0	42.5	84.6	27.1	49.3	43.2	93.8	46.2
2006	26.3	41.7	84.3	27.5	47.4	37.2	90.7	44.9
2007	22.9	42.6	81.5	28.5	42.2	34.8	87.1	44.4
2008	22.4	48.2	96.5	33.0	43.9	42.7	89.9	50.3
2009	28.4	59.8	110.0	44.0	47.9	49.3	100.5	60.1
2010	30.4	67.3	116.3	56.3	50.1	56.6	99.1	66.2

Source: OECD Economic Outlook, No. 89 (May 2011).

Table 56

G-7 general government gross financial liabilities

National Accounts basis

Year	Canada	United States	Japan	United Kingdom	Germany	France	Italy	G-7 average
				(per cent of GDP)
1970	54.3	46.4	11.2	69.5	-	40.4	55.2	43.7
1971	55.3	47.0	12.5	71.9	-	37.9	59.5	44.6
1972	53.5	45.4	16.6	63.2	-	35.5	65.9	43.6
1973	48.0	42.6	16.1	58.3	-	32.6	70.4	41.4
1974	45.8	41.4	12.7	54.5	-	30.6	70.0	39.7
1975	45.2	44.6	20.1	53.8	-	30.9	82.4	43.4
1976	43.6	44.8	27.0	51.8	-	29.3	82.1	44.2
1977	45.1	43.6	32.4	58.3	-	28.8	85.7	45.4
1978	48.0	42.5	41.0	51.9	-	29.9	90.9	46.4
1979	45.3	41.2	45.5	49.4	-	30.1	89.5	46.1
1980	45.6	41.9	47.1	48.7	-	29.7	86.8	46.5
1981	46.9	41.1	52.8	46.6	-	29.0	91.2	47.3
1982	52.7	45.9	58.8	50.8	-	32.9	95.0	52.2
1983	58.4	48.9	65.0	50.5	-	33.9	79.5	53.8
1984	61.7	50.6	67.0	50.6	-	35.6	82.4	55.5
1985	66.9	55.4	69.4	49.2	-	37.1	88.9	59.3
1986	71.0	58.9	75.1	48.6	-	37.9	92.8	62.6
1987	71.4	60.6	76.8	47.8	-	39.2	96.5	64.2
1988	71.1	61.3	72.8	41.8	-	39.0	98.8	63.5
1989	72.2	61.6	66.7	36.0	-	38.9	95.5	61.7
1990	75.2	63.1	63.9	32.3	-	38.6	97.6	62.0
1991	82.3	67.9	63.2	32.8	37.7	39.5	100.4	57.3
1992	90.2	70.3	67.6	39.0	40.8	43.9	106.9	60.8
1993	96.3	71.9	73.9	48.7	46.2	51.0	116.3	64.9
1994	98.0	71.1	79.0	46.8	46.5	60.2	120.9	66.4
1995	101.6	70.7	86.2	51.6	55.7	62.7	122.5	68.3
1996	101.7	69.9	93.8	51.2	58.8	66.3	128.9	70.0
1997	96.3	67.4	100.5	52.0	60.3	68.8	130.3	70.1
1998	95.2	64.2	113.2	52.5	62.2	70.3	132.6	70.7
1999	91.4	60.5	127.0	47.4	61.5	66.8	126.4	69.6
2000	82.1	54.5	135.4	45.1	60.4	65.6	121.6	67.0
2001	82.7	54.4	143.7	40.4	59.8	64.3	120.8	67.7
2002	80.6	56.8	152.3	40.8	62.2	67.3	119.4	70.1
2003	76.6	60.2	158.0	41.5	65.4	71.4	116.8	72.6
2004	72.6	61.2	165.5	43.8	68.8	73.9	117.3	74.5
2005	71.6	61.4	175.3	46.4	71.2	75.7	120.0	76.5
2006	70.3	60.8	172.1	46.1	69.3	70.9	117.4	74.9
2007	66.5	62.0	167.0	47.2	65.3	72.3	112.8	74.4
2008	71.3	71.0	174.1	57.0	69.3	77.8	115.2	81.2
2009	83.4	84.3	194.1	72.4	76.4	89.2	127.8	93.7
2010	84.2	93.6	199.7	82.4	87.0	94.1	126.8	100.3

Source: OECD Economic Outlook, No. 89 (May 2011).

Advisory Committee

on Senior Level Retention and Compensation

Third Report: December 2000

Prepared for the President of the Treasury Board

Advisory Committee

on Senior Level Retention and Compensation

Third Report: December 2000

Prepared for the President of the Treasury Board

Copies may be obtained from the Distribution Centre
Treasury Board of Canada
Ottawa, Ontario K1A 0R5

Tel: (613) 995-2855

This publication is available via the TBS web site and HR CONNEXIONS.

To access these sites, type one of the following in the address section of your World Wide Web browser:

TBS website:
http://www.tbs-sct.gc.ca/

HR CONNEXIONS:
http://www.tbs-sct.gc.ca/hr_connexions_rh/

Third Report of the Advisory Committee on Senior Level Retention and Compensation

ISBN No.: 0-662-65319-X

Catalogue No.: BT43-104/2000

Table of Contents

Appendices

Illustrations

Preface

The Advisory Committee on Senior Level Retention and Compensation was established in 1997 with a three year mandate to provide the Treasury Board President with independent advice about senior-level human resource strategies and policies for the federal Public Service. The Committee's mandate identified three priorities:

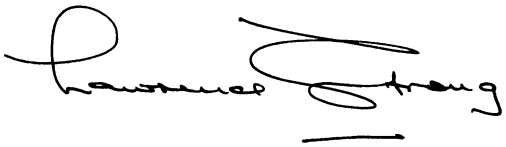
(i) long-term human resource strategies;
(ii) compensation strategies and principles; and
(iii) specific aspects of human resource management, including rates of pay and terms and conditions of employment.

The Committee's First Report raised serious concerns about the federal Public Service of the future and made numerous proposals for dealing with what we judged to be the most pressing issues: the Public Service vision going forward, the need for cultural and human resource renewal, and compensation. The Second Report outlined progress in implementing the earlier recommendations, made specific proposals regarding compensation for the Chief Executive Officers of Crown corporations and reaffirmed the key challenge of Public Service renewal.

While this Third Report makes some further specific proposals on compensation, our major focus is on long-term human resource strategy. It is the Committee's view that the government faces a human capital crisis. As the Public Service talent pool diminishes over the next decade due to the retirement of many long-service public servants, the government must seek to replace them in an increasingly competitive labour market. This demands above all a revitalised workplace which offers challenging work. Ironically, though, the very forces creating the crisis also provide the government with a truly unique opportunity to renew the Public Service, thereby ensuring its continued meaningful contribution to a better quality of life for all Canadians. Achieving this renewal will require some bold actions.

Since the mandate of this Committee concludes with this report, we have one final comment about the possible future role of a similar committee. At the very least, we believe that an independent group should be established for a specific term to make annual recommendations on compensation. This removes from public servants the potential conflict of interest associated with making recommendations that affect their own pay. For simplicity, we have made the assumption of a future committee when writing this report.

Yours sincerely,



Lawrence F. Strong

Long-Term Human Resource Strategy

The Process for Developing Human Resource Strategy

Arguably, the most challenging aspect of the Advisory Committee's mandate has been to make recommendations with respect to the long-term human resource strategy for the senior level Public Service. To do this meaningfully requires a clear understanding of the overall vision of the Public Service as well as its values, the desired mindset of its people, the desired future culture of the organization and the business plans of the government.

This knowledge, supplemented by an understanding of external trends and an objective scrutiny of the Public Service itself, enables the creation of a human resource strategy which is aligned with what the government wants to achieve.

The strategy will establish a human resource vision, set objectives and then identify a series of strategic initiatives designed to meet the objectives and deliver the vision. These initiatives will drive specific implementation plans and the allocation of resources. The suggested process for developing a long-term human resource strategy is shown in the illustration below.

Arguably, the most challenging aspect of the Advisory Committee's mandate has been to make recommendations with respect to the long-term human resource strategy for the senior level Public Service.

The Suggested Process for Developing Human Resource Strategy

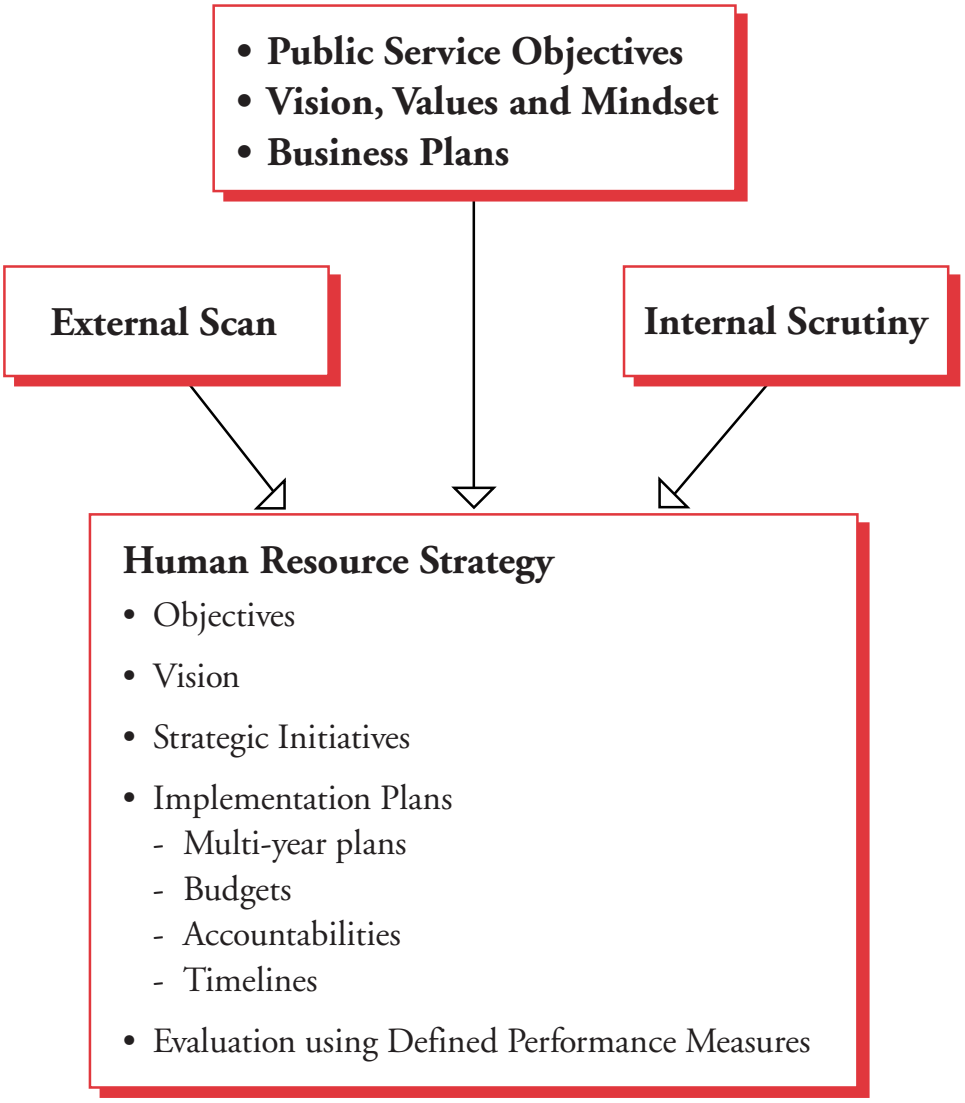


Illustration 1

Public Service Purpose, Values, Vision and Mindset

The Committee in both its First and Second Reports discussed the importance of articulating a vision for the Public Service entering the new millennium. The rationale behind this recommendation was quite simple. Following the fundamental changes in government operation that took place in the 1990s, there was a need to:

(i) ensure clarity and consistency of purpose going forward;

(ii) inspire and re-energize the leadership of the federal Public Service; and

(iii) communicate to outsiders what the federal Public Service is about and to enlist their support.

As noted in the previous section, however, such a statement of vision and values is also a necessary pre-cursor to a long-term human resource strategy.

The Seventh Annual Report to the Prime Minister on the Public Service of Canada by Mel Cappe, Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary to the Cabinet, provides the most comprehensive view seen by the Committee of where the federal Public Service is going in the future. Using this, coupled with a Treasury Board publication entitled Results for Canadians – A Management Framework for the Government of Canada, the Committee has prepared the following summary to serve as a building block for the human resource strategy discussion which follows.

The purpose of the federal Public Service is:

(i) to help ministers under law and the Constitution to serve the public interest;

(ii) to provide high quality, impartial advice to the Government on policy issues; and

(iii) to design and deliver programmes and services to Canadians.

Despite changes in many aspects of how the government does business, the four core values (respect for democracy, professional values, ethical values and people values) have remained unchanged and will continue to serve as the bedrock of the organization into the future.

At the heart of striving to achieve these objectives are a set of four core values embraced by the entire federal Public Service. Despite changes in many aspects of how the government does business, these values have remained unchanged and will continue to serve as the bedrock of the organization into the future.

Respect for democracy recognizes that authority rests with democratically elected officials who are accountable to Parliament, and thereby to the Canadian people. A well-performing public service takes its democratic responsibilities seriously, constantly providing ministers, Parliament and the public with full and accurate information on the results of its work.

Professional values reinforce an unwavering commitment to excellence, merit and, above all, to objective and impartial advice to the Government and service to Canadians.

Ethical values (integrity, trust and honesty) are the personal cornerstone of good governance and democracy. They require public servants to support the common good at all times and recognize the need for openness, transparency and accountability in what they do and how they do it.

People values include courage, decency, responsibility and humanity. In a well-performing workplace they show themselves in respect, civility, fairness and caring. Values-driven organizations support learning and are led through participation, teamwork, openness, communication and a respect for diversity.

These values, which it can be argued, help define Canadian society, influence how the Public Service behaves as well as the actions it takes.

The emerging vision of the Public Service of the future is an exciting one. The following examples of statements have been developed by the Committee from existing government documents and provide an excellent flavour for this:

- be known around the world as the government most connected to its citizens;
- a citizen-focused Public Service concentrating on outcomes and accounting for results;
- a Public Service which promotes value for money in the use of public funds;

- a Public Service which develops innovative policies that contribute to Canada's global competitiveness;
- a Public Service which has the respect of the citizens it serves.

The leadership of the federal Public Service plays a critical role in the delivery of this vision, and has already identified the changes in culture that will be required to achieve the revitalized operating climate necessary for success. These changes in mindset and behaviour are summarized in Illustration 2.

The emerging vision of the Public Service of the future is an exciting one. The leadership of the federal Public Service plays a critical role in the delivery of this vision, and has already identified the changes in culture that will be required to achieve the revitalized operating climate necessary for success.

Changing Public Service Mindset*

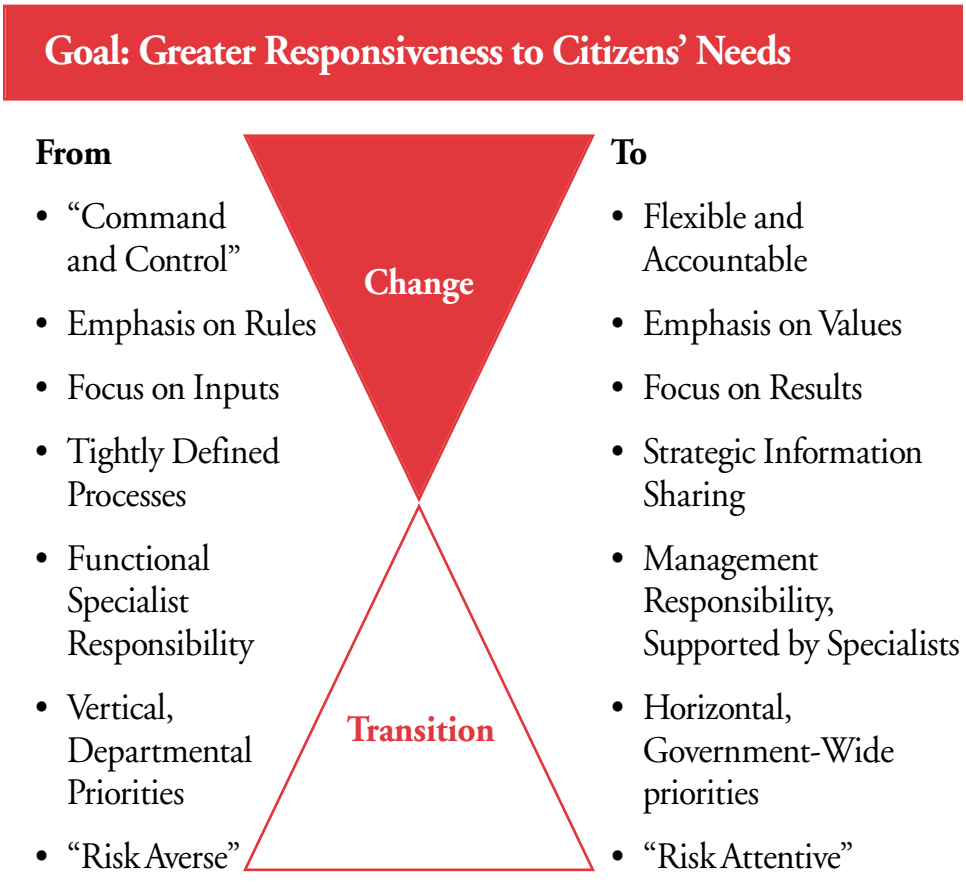

Illustration 2

* Source: Extracted from a presentation made to the Committee by the Public Service Commission.

External Scan

As noted earlier, human resource strategy must reflect not just the business plans of the organization but also the external realities it faces. These are discussed to some degree in the sections which follow but there is one influence which the Committee believes has particular relevance to all aspects of future strategy.

The explosion in technology and the new economics of information will impact the federal Public Service significantly over the next decade.

The explosion in technology and the new economics of information will impact the federal Public Service significantly over the next decade. Specifically:

- they are stimulating, and assisting in, the development of 'electronic government' (e-government);
- traditional concepts of time and distance are collapsing; and
- as connectivity increases, there will be an ever-widening availability of detailed information.

Hierarchies will flatten and decision making will be pushed down lower than in the past, thanks to the ready availability of information.

One consequence of these trends is that the multi-layer organization operating vertically, with span of control (the number of direct reports) primarily a function of the limitations surrounding information flow, will disappear. Hierarchies will flatten and decision making will be pushed down lower than in the past, thanks to the ready availability of information. Management's role in information sharing and decision making will diminish, while the need for steering and coaching will increase.

Internal Scrutiny

Again, most of the Committee's comments on the current strengths and weaknesses of the Public Service are incorporated into later sections which discuss specific areas of human resource management. There is, however, one which is overarching and we believe of critical importance.

In its First Report, the Committee identified that responsibilities for managing human resources were organized in an unnecessarily complex way, a view shared by the Auditor General in his April 2000 report. (See Chapter 9 of that report). According to the Auditor General this has led to inefficiency and lack of clear accountability in the current framework for managing human resources.

The Role of Human Resource Strategy in Delivering the Public Service Vision

The Advisory Committee mandate covers a very broad range of senior level public servants. As a consequence, the Committee has segregated this constituency into three:

(i) the deputy minister and executive community;

(ii) CEOs of Crown corporations; and

(iii) other Governor in Council (GIC) appointees.

The lack of homogeneity amongst this total group, coupled with an incredibly complex framework for managing human resources, makes it very challenging to formulate an integrated and coherent human resource strategy. Thus, this Report focuses primarily on human resource strategy for the executive and deputy minister community where considerable progress has been made since our First Report. Once this human resource strategy is complete, its relevance beyond compensation to the other two groups can be established. In the case of the Crown corporations, this may be restricted to sharing of best practices, since each Crown presumably has in place its own human resource strategy. In the case of the other GIC appointees, it may well be possible to adapt some of the initiatives, although we are once again dealing with many independent organizations – commissions and tribunals – each of which has different circumstances and needs, and will likely need to be treated separately.

This Report focuses primarily on human resource strategy for the executive and deputy minister community where considerable progress has been made since our First Report.

The Committee believes that the role of human resources is best described in such statements as:

- helping the federal Public Service meet its goals;
- ensuring the right calibre of leadership to achieve the Public Service vision; and
- improving the organizational effectiveness of the Public Service through people.

What is critical is that these statements are results oriented rather than activity focussed. The Committee believes that human resources should be integrated into the implementation of the government's mainstream business plans to help achieve the desired results. In the absence of a focus on results, there is the potential for some human resource activities to become ends in themselves.

The Committee believes that human resources should be integrated into the implementation of the government's mainstream business plans to help achieve the desired results.

The Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary to the Cabinet is also the Head of the Public Service and once again it is the Clerk's Seventh Annual Report that has identified a number of the human resource goals, if the Public Service is to achieve its objectives in the new millennium. These include:

- creating a workforce fully representative of the population it serves;
- becoming a learning organization focussed on continuous improvement;
- ensuring decision making authority is located at the right level to achieve results;
- attracting and retaining Canada's best and brightest minds to ensure strengthened policy capacity;
- becoming an employer of choice;
- removing unnecessary bureaucracy from work processes with a focus on outcomes and accounting for results; and
- creating a culture which is innovative and open to new ideas.

The Committee wholeheartedly supports these ambitions and is particularly pleased to note the following paragraph in the Seventh Annual Report:

> "As Head of the Public Service, it is my responsibility to set out the direction for the future, and my challenge is to motivate and inspire public servants in that direction".

The federal Public Service, like many other organizations, is operating in a complex, ever changing and uncertain environment.

Recommended Strategic Initiatives

While developing the strategic initiatives must necessarily be done by the current leadership, the Committee, using a mixture of current Public Service initiatives plus its own input, wishes to suggest some areas for inclusion.

The federal Public Service, like many other organizations, is operating in a complex, ever changing and uncertain environment. However, Human Resource's basic responsibilities remain unchanged – planning, staffing, rewarding, developing and retaining the human capital of the organization. Although these are identified as discrete, there is a high degree of interdependence among these responsibilities. The Committee believes that the future strategy must, at a minimum, set direction for each of these areas. General comments on each follow.

Planning

It is understandable that during the downsizing of the nineties, little attention was paid to workforce planning. However, the Committee sees it as a critical requirement over the next decade. It will require collecting a vast amount of data on the skills and competencies of the current management cadre as well as identifying the skills and competencies which will be required over the next decade. And make no mistake, these will be different from the past. Finally, there is the need to identify the impact of the expected retirements on the experience base.

It is understandable that during the downsizing of the nineties, little attention was paid to workforce planning. However, the Committee sees it as a critical requirement over the next decade.

Done thoroughly, workforce planning can be time consuming, even tedious. And it is all too easy to become embroiled in a debate about definitions. While the core Public Service is not quite at the point of having a system to roll out, there are pockets of best practice that exist today and, with commitment, the necessary tools can be quickly adopted and implemented.

The Committee therefore suggests that the planning initiative needs:

- an agreed definition of future skills and competencies to use throughout the core Public Service;
- a regime for evaluation of all incumbents;
- a Human Resource Information System to ensure that the information can be effectively collected and used; and
- agreed future needs.

The senior level federal Public Service faces a human capital crisis as the demographics of today's managers suggest that retirements alone will create a significant resource gap.

Staffing

The senior level federal Public Service faces a human capital crisis as the demographics of today's managers suggest that retirements alone will create a significant resource gap. By the year 2010, just over 80% of today's executive community will be eligible to retire without actuarial reduction of their pension.

Cumulative Executive Retirement Potential 1999 to 2010

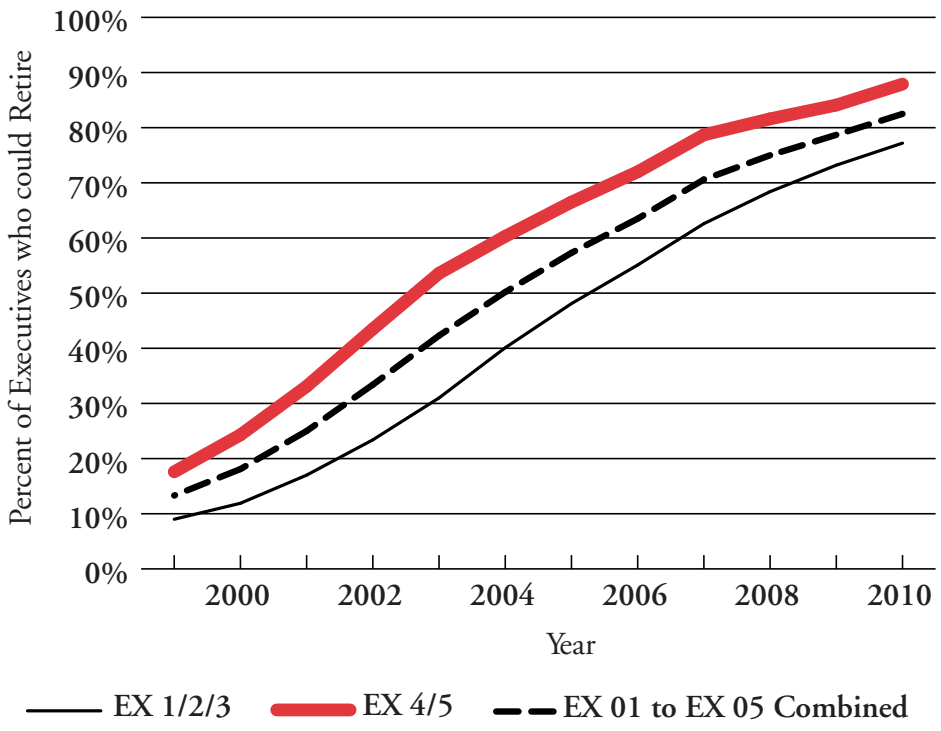

Illustration 3

To aggravate matters, the traditional 'feeder' groups for EX 01 positions have an identical demographic profile. Further, even if that were not so, they have little financial incentive currently to seek promotion. The illustration below shows that the total cash compensation for several of these feeder groups falls within the current EX 01 range. In addition, some also have access to rewards not available to executives, such as pay for overtime, longer vacation leaves, and bilingualism bonuses. Salary ranges plus at risk pay for the EX 01 level must, we feel, be sufficiently higher than cash compensation of traditional feeder groups to offer an inducement to work towards promotion. This is addressed later in the report under compensation in the context of ensuring internal equity.

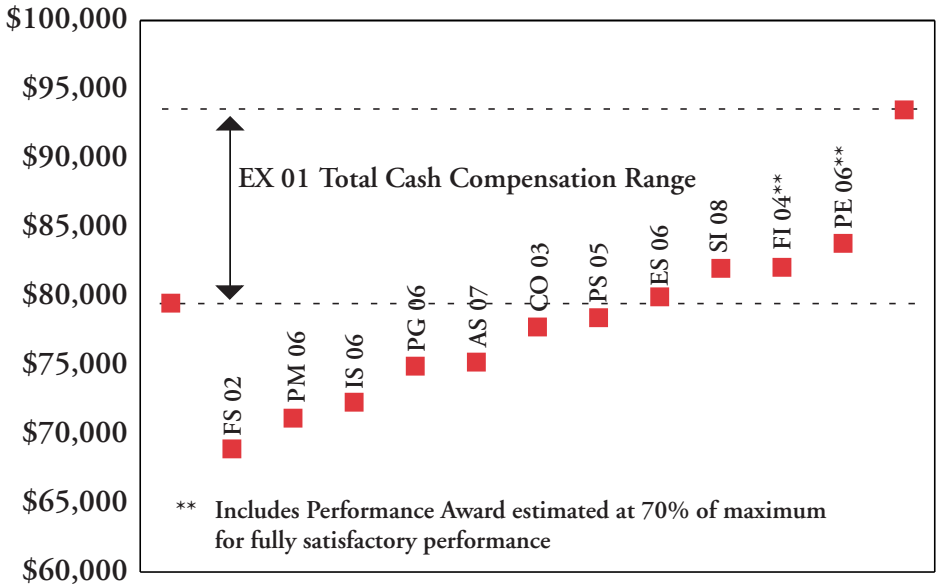
Estimated Total Cash Compensation for Feeder Groups versus EX 01



Traditional Feeder Groups to EX 01 Positions – Key to Occupational Groups

AS	Administrative Services	PE	Personnel Administration
CO	Commerce Officer	PG	Purchasing and Supply
ES	Economics, Sociology and Statistics	PM	Program Administration
FI	Financial Management	PS	Psychology
FS	Foreign Service	SI	Social Science
IS	Information Services

Illustration 4

As the federal Public Service moves to address its resource shortages, it can expect to find itself in a talent war with aggressive private sector and broader public sector competition.

Clearly, given the current demographics of the executive cadre and the traditional feeder groups, there needs to be a major recruitment initiative. However, it is important to recognize that the environment for hiring in the years ahead will be very different from the seventies and eighties when there was a labour surplus. In the emerging knowledge economy, people – talented people – will become an increasingly vital resource. Consequently, as the federal Public Service moves to address its resource shortages, it can expect to find itself in a talent war with aggressive private sector and broader public sector competition.

The Committee again wishes to draw to the government's attention that the most significant under representation amongst the management cadre in purely numerical terms is younger Canadians.

It is no surprise, then, that staffing – recruiting – is one of the three areas in which the Committee of Senior Officials (COSO), a committee of deputy ministers, is currently drawing up plans for the future. In addition to providing the skills and competencies required to meet the goals of the federal Public Service, the Clerk of the Privy Council stresses the importance of ensuring that the work-force is representative of all Canadians and specific reference is made to focussing on women, visible minorities, people with disabilities and aboriginal peoples. Clearly, these initiatives are critical and have been comprehensively reviewed with respect to visible minorities by the Task Force on the Participation of Visible Minorities in the Federal Public Service. (See report entitled Embracing Change in the Federal Public Service – March 2000). However, the Committee again wishes to draw to the government's attention that the most significant under-representation amongst the management cadre in purely numerical terms is younger Canadians. This imbalance must also be addressed as part of the strategy.

Age Distribution of Public Service Senior Management vs Canadian Labour Force Senior Management (1996 Census)

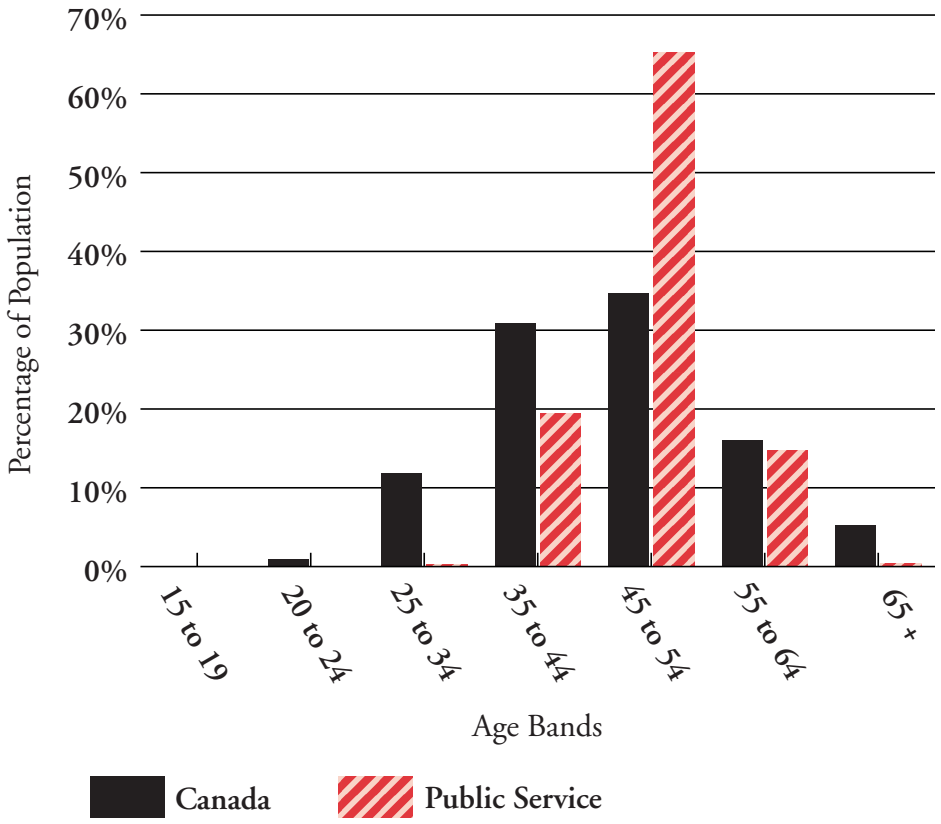


Illustration 5

The Clerk's Seventh Annual Report reiterated that merit will remain central to the Public Service recruitment strategy and that the guardian of merit will remain the Public Service Commission. This is obviously sound. However, the Committee believes that the role of the Commission in staffing operations should be reconsidered. Users consider the existing system complex and inefficient, a view with which the Committee concurs, and there appears to be an inherent conflict between the role of choosing candidates and involvement in the audit and recourse processes. And finally there needs to be a direct link between the authority to choose/hire managers and the accountability for their performance.

There needs to be a direct link between the authority to choose/hire managers and the accountability for their performance.

One of the challenges facing the government is how to become an employer of choice. Interestingly, the Committee does not believe the key issue is about higher pay, although salaries must always be fair and reasonable. Nor is it about job security as part of a massive bureaucracy. It's about challenging work; it's about learning opportunities; it's about the ability to make a difference through their work and it's about Canadians respecting the job done. The government must deliver or people will simply choose to work elsewhere.

Clearly, one of the challenges facing the government is how to become an employer of choice in an environment where competition for talent is increasing and it is here that understanding the attitudes and aspirations of younger Canadians is so critical. Interestingly, the Committee does not believe the key issue is about higher pay, although salaries must always be fair and reasonable. Nor is it about job security as part of a massive bureaucracy. It's about challenging work; it's about learning opportunities; it's about the ability to make a difference through their work and it's about Canadians respecting the job done. Of course, there's nothing new about these thoughts. What is new is that the government must deliver or people will simply choose to work elsewhere. Not only will the next decade be characterized by a shortage of talented managers, but it is estimated that 95% of all professional and management jobs will be posted on the Web. This means that everyone will have easy access to job opportunities and will have detailed information about these jobs. As a consequence, people will be much better informed about their marketability. This will inevitably result in much greater job mobility.

The Committee also believes that the government must become more aggressive at middle and upper-level recruiting into the Public Service. This represents a significant change from the past where promotions have largely been reserved for internal candidates. This change is driven primarily by the need for different skills and competencies than exist in the Public Service today.

In the increasingly complex and rapidly changing environment, the government must access private sector resources more effectively. The Committee therefore recommends that the government find ways to promote two to three year exchanges into the Public Service from the private and broader public sectors.

The Committee's final recommendation in the area of staffing is that a formal policy be established for dealing with poor performers. No matter how many safeguards are built into the recruitment process, there will be managers who fail to meet performance expectations. When taking action in such situations, a clear, fair and overt policy is needed to guide managers and human resource departments.

Rewarding

Compensation, primarily pay and benefits, is at the centre of the rewards strategy. Effective compensation strategy will help the Public Service:

- attract and retain appropriate talent;
- reward superior performers;
- motivate improved performance;
- reinforce core values;
- focus individuals on what they need to deliver.

The Committee's First Report identified key aspects of compensation strategy. First, the total compensation package for the executive and deputy minister cadre should be quite distinct from that offered to unionized employees. Second, this programme needs to support and reward the results and the behaviours necessary for the success of the Public Service. This alignment is critical as the federal government moves to a results oriented management approach. Third, the Committee believes it important to have in place to the greatest extent possible, processes which remove the year-to-year administration of senior level Public Service compensation from the political arena. Establishing clearly defined criteria for assessing market competitiveness and then maintaining appropriate compensation will go a long way to achieving this. Finally, the Committee believes that it will become increasingly important to ensure that there is a meaningful link between results and rewards.

Since compensation strategy is an important part of the Committee's mandate, more detailed recommendations are found in the second Chapter of this report.

Developing

The Committee believes that the development of effective leaders for the future is absolutely critical if the Public Service is to achieve its vision. As a consequence, we are again pleased to see that the Clerk has established a COSO Sub-Committee on learning and development, and that this Committee has completed its First Report in July 2000.

The Committee believes that the development of effective leaders for the future is absolutely critical if the Public Service is to achieve its vision.

Without judging the output from the Sub-Committee, we would make the following observations:

- the principle that managers are responsible for managing their own careers but with proper support from human resources is key;
- meaningful learning and development opportunities represent an important tool for attracting and retaining managers, as well as achieving desired results;
- the expected shortage of talent generally means that management development is mandatory;
- the scale and uniqueness of the Public Service, coupled with its desire for cultural change, reinforces the importance of having leading-edge management development programmes;
- development must focus on the future needs of the knowledge age;
- the goal of creating an organization which looks for best practice, celebrates its successes, and learns from its mistakes is an ambitious one. Whatever the Sub-Committee recommends must be supported by behavioural change at the top of the organization; and
- one of the building blocks of continuous improvement is measurement of outcomes. What to measure depends, of course, on what is important. In the area of human resources, and we suspect elsewhere, such measurement has not always been commonplace. We recommend that COSO agree on and define a common set of measures in human resources. Possible examples are cost per hire, turnover rate, time to fill jobs, days per manager invested in training and development, and so on.

The scale and uniqueness of the Public Service, coupled with its desire for cultural change, reinforces the importance of having leading-edge management development programmes.

Retaining

As the supply of talented people shrinks over the next decade, it is clearly wise to keep those people who are adding value today. As a result, work place well being and retention is the third area being studied by a sub-committee of deputy ministers.

As the supply of talented people shrinks over the next decade, it is clearly wise to keep those people who are adding value today.

Interestingly, there is considerable evidence to suggest that compensation or even opportunity elsewhere are not the major causes of people leaving any organization, although they often tip the scales in that direction. The reasons tend to be problems with one's boss, lack of career or development opportunities, and working conditions. This, in a general sense, was supported by last year's survey of federal public servants which resulted in the establishment of priorities of reducing harassment and discrimination, managing workload, ensuring fairness in the selection process and enhancing career development and learning. The Advisory Committee, looking forward, would add the need for greater flexibility in recognizing the needs of individual managers. We believe that this flexibility will be very important in attracting and retaining young managers.

In addition to these five generic areas of human resource strategy, the Committee recommends including at least two other initiatives, namely:

(i) clarifying accountabilities for human resource management; and

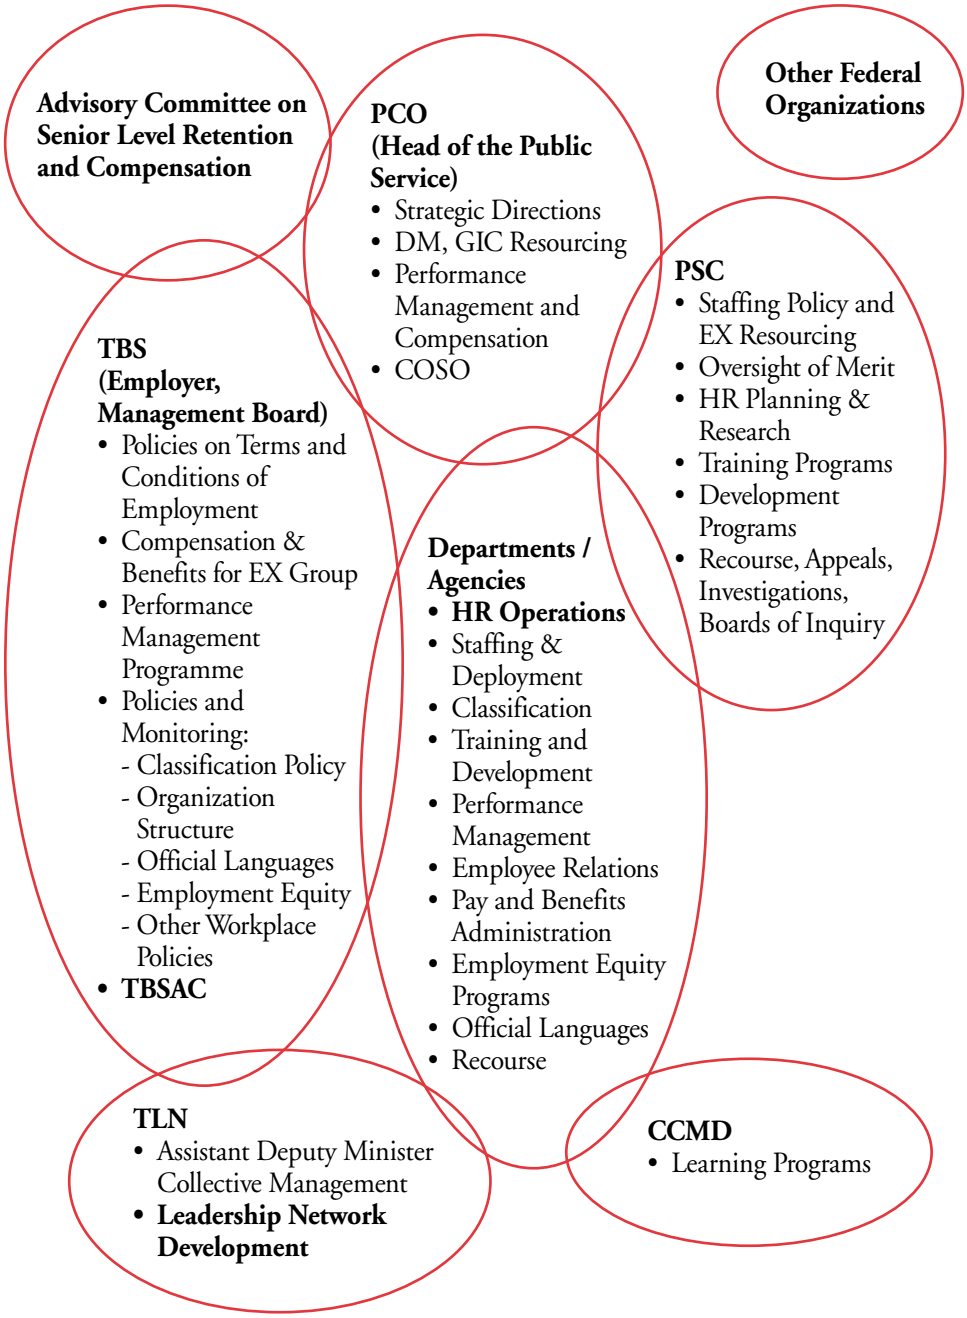
(ii) making it happen.

A discussion of each follows.

Clarifying Accountabilities

In its First Report, the Committee noted that "responsibilities for managing human resources appear to be organized in a way that is unnecessarily complex and administration seems to be overly burdensome. We suspect that one of the reasons behind this lies in the patchwork quilt of historical regulation that impacts human resource management in the public service." If anything, our concerns in this area have grown, as has our understanding of the challenges of making changes. The key players in the human resource management of senior levels form a complex picture.

Key Players in Human Resources Management of Senior Levels (DM, GIC, EX)



TBS: Treasury Board Secretariat

PSC: Public Service Commission

PCO: Privy Council Office

CCMD: Canadian Centre for Management Development

TLN: The Leadership Network

COSO: Committee of Senior Officials

TBSAC: Treasury Board Secretariat Advisory Committee

Illustration 6

To further underline our point, included as Appendix C is an excerpt from the Auditor General's April 2000 Report which provides a more formal review of the framework for all federal public servants.

It is the Committee's view that there is an urgent need for clear accountabilities, matching authorities and a general streamlining of human resource processes if the Public Service is to deliver on its ambitious goals. In this respect, we support the Auditor General's recommendation that the government address the long-standing structural and systemic issues immediately.

However, given that a fundamental review of these issues will inevitably take some time, the Committee also recommends that an interim exercise be undertaken by the government to clarify accountabilities and streamline processes to the greatest extent possible within the context of the current framework.

From a purely pragmatic viewpoint, we are pleased to note that the Head of the federal Public Service, the Clerk of the Privy Council, has assumed the responsibility for development of an overall, integrated human resource strategy for the Public Service. He has sensibly chosen to involve the Treasury Board Secretariat and the Committee of Senior Officials (COSO), and has established three teams to make recommendations in the areas of recruitment, workplace well-being and retention, and learning and development. Compensation strategy is the responsibility of the Treasury Board Secretariat and the Privy Council Office (PCO), and is being developed working primarily through our Committee. Providing everyone is committed to developing a long-term human resource strategy, this structure can work.

Making It Happen

Although the purpose and core values of the Public Service remain unchanged, it is increasingly clear that tomorrow's leaders will behave quite differently from the past. New skills and competencies will be required to become more citizen focused and results oriented. New mindsets will be needed to deliver the exciting vision which is emerging.

It is the Committee's view that there is an urgent need for clear accountabilities, matching authorities and a general streamlining of human resource processes if the Public Service is to deliver on its ambitious goals.

Although the purpose and core values of the Public Service remain unchanged, it is increasingly clear that tomorrow's leaders will behave quite differently from the past. New skills and competencies will be required to become more citizen focused and results oriented. New mindsets will be needed to deliver the exciting vision which is emerging.

Understanding where the Public Service wishes to be in ten years is the vital first step. Making it happen, driving the necessary changes through the organization, is a massive task given both its size and complexity as well as its historical culture. For this reason, the Committee recommends that the Clerk of the Privy Council consider requesting that COSO develop implementation plans to achieve the desired changes in operating climate, mindset and culture. Commitment from the top of the organization as well as "walking the talk" are critical to the success of "making it happen".

The opportunity that exists today is truly unique as the Public Service begins to staff itself with a new generation of managers replacing the many retirees expected over the next decade. New skills and competencies can be added, new flatter structures introduced with minimal threat and disruption and, above all, a new culture created.

Conclusion

Since the Advisory Committee began its work three years ago, considerable progress has been made in formulating an integrated and comprehensive human resource strategy for leading the Public Service into the new millennium. This work must be completed by the government and the new directions clearly agreed. The strategy will then guide the preparation of policies, programmes and implementation plans and will drive questions of resource allocation with respect to human resource management in the senior level federal Public Service. We also recommend that once the strategy is finished, it is widely communicated throughout the Public Service.

The opportunity that exists today is truly unique as the Public Service begins to staff itself with a new generation of managers, replacing the many retirees expected over the next decade. New skills and competencies can be added, new flatter structures introduced with minimal threat and disruption and, above all, a new culture created.

Our Committee has reaffirmed many times our belief in the importance of an effective and efficient Public Service to the well being of all Canadians. Now is the time to invest in the Public Service in terms of its human capital.

Compensation Strategies and Principles

In its Second Report, the Committee identified three discrete populations within the federal Public Service management cadre for purposes of setting compensation. These were:

- the executive and deputy minister community;
- CEOs of Crown corporations: and
- other full time Governor in Council appointees.

Detailed recommendations have been made with respect to cash compensation structures for all three, although the PCO is now leading a review of the remaining GIC positions to test the adequacy of the current structure as well as our proposals. This review will cover approximately 120 different jobs within some 70 organizations (see Appendix D) and will not be complete until early in 2001. The study will include updating the method for evaluating job responsibilities, conducting actual evaluations and then developing an appropriate compensation structure.

In our First Report, the Committee identified that compensation policy needs to be internally equitable, to be responsive to the economic and social environment, and to encourage and reward outstanding performance. Two critical building blocks are therefore:

- the system used to evaluate job responsibilities; and
- the process for external benchmarking.

The following sections make recommendations for addressing each of these.

System for Evaluation of Job Responsibilities

Earlier this year, Treasury Board Secretariat engaged KPMG to make recommendations as to the optimal job evaluation plan for the senior level federal Public Service. A summary of this report is included as Appendix E.

In order to have a basis for comparing plans, KPMG developed through consultation with senior public servants and academics, a list of characteristics and criteria of an ideal job evaluation plan. They also conducted a survey to identify the plans used to evaluate executive positions in other organizations including provincial public sectors, Crown corporations, a select number of private sector organizations in Canada and the public services of the United Kingdom, Australia and the United States.

The Advisory Committee recommends that the current Hay-based position evaluation plan, with the addition of a Working Conditions factor, be used for all senior level federal public servants.

The Advisory Committee recommends that the current Hay-based position evaluation plan, with the addition of a Working Conditions factor, be used for all senior level federal public servants. The reasoning behind this recommendation is as follows:

(i) the current executive group position evaluation plan essentially meets all the criteria established for an ideal plan, except for Working Conditions and up-to-date benchmarks;

(ii) Hay has well-established versions of the plan with a Working Conditions factor measuring physical effort, physical environment, sensory attention and mental stress;

(iii) adopting the Working Conditions factor ensures that the government meets the requirements of the Canadian Human Rights Act;

(iv) there is no other readily available job evaluation system that would do a better job than the Hay Plan;

(v) the benchmark positions can (and should) be updated.

The negative to this recommendation is the work involved in rewriting and evaluating over 4000 positions, especially when it is KPMG's view that it is unlikely to change the classification of the positions significantly. However, including Working Conditions is the right thing to do and the entire exercise, which can be spread over time, can also be used to update the benchmark positions and to ensure that changes discussed elsewhere in this report are properly incorporated, including clarified accountability for human resource management.

KPMG also proposed that the Treasury Board Secretariat consider the collapse of the executive group into three classification levels. The Committee believes this has merit and should be studied further.

Process for Comparing Compensation Externally

Understanding where senior-level Public Service compensation stands in relation to external benchmarks is critical if the government is to have an appropriate compensation strategy. Over the past two years, the Committee's recommendations have focussed on restoring internal equity, introducing a new concept of " at risk" pay together with a new regime for performance management, and improving the competitiveness of cash compensation.

Understanding where senior-level Public Service compensation stands in relation to external benchmarks is critical if the government is to have an appropriate compensation strategy.

Over the course of the next decade, the competition for talented people will increase and will undoubtedly bring upward pressure on compensation. As a result, commencing in the fall of the year 2000, the Committee recommends:

Over the course of the next decade, the competition for talented people will increase and will undoubtedly bring upward pressure on compensation.

(i) the government survey cash compensation amongst the private sector and the broader public sector annually;

(ii) given our earlier recommendations to adopt the Hay job evaluation plan, one of the sources of compensation data should be Hay although at least one other survey should also be used as a cross-check;

(iii) prior to April 1 of each year following, the salary and "at risk" pay structure be adjusted to maintain competitiveness as defined later;

(iv) every third year and commencing in 2000, one of the surveys be expanded to include total compensation; and

(v) to the greatest extent possible, the scope and methodology of these surveys be consistent from year to year.

This annual review process will cover all three senior level populations i.e. executive and deputy minister cadre, CEOs of Crown corporations and other GIC appointees.

While this approach means that the Public Service is lagging their benchmarks by up to a year, it should ensure that government increases are not fuelling inflation. This fact, coupled with the transparent process for arriving at future adjustments and their routine annual nature, will hopefully depoliticize the process of establishing senior level public servants' pay structures.

It should be noted that this proposal covers structure and not annual budgets. Annual budgets are more complex and are a function of movement within the structure, turnover, adding or subtracting managers and so on.

Ensuring Internal Equity

The adoption of a single system for evaluating the positions of all senior level federal public servants, coupled with its rigorous and timely application, should guarantee internal equity within the management cadre. However, there is another factor which must be considered in setting the compensation of EX 01 managers and CEOs of Crown corporations. It is ensuring that there is an appropriate salary difference between a manager and the employees he or she is managing. This is an issue for EX 01s because pay for their direct reports is set as part of the bargaining process and is quite separate from the recommendations of this Committee. Similarly, as noted in our Second Report, the Crown corporations pursue independent compensation policies for managers below the CEO level.

The Committee believes that there should, in principle, be a discernible difference between the EX 01 pay and that of the various groups of typical direct reports.

Thus, when establishing the pay structure for EX 01s and CEOs of Crowns we must test for compression, i.e. where pay for direct reports is very close, typically within 10%, and inversion, i.e. where a subordinate earns more than his or her boss. In the case of EX 01s, the Committee believes that there should, in principle, be a discernible difference between the EX 01 pay and that of the various groups of typical direct reports. Given that there is a clear difference in level of responsibility, we recommend that, in future, consideration be given to this principle. More discussion of the compression/inversion issue is provided in Chapter Three, which deals with specific compensation issues.

In the case of the CEOs of Crown corporations, a similar comparison is appropriate but should be done in the context of total compensation.

Defining Compensation Competitiveness

As part of establishing a framework for managing compensation, any organization needs to define where it wishes to position itself versus its "competitors" in terms of compensation. At present, executive and deputy minister compensation is defined by setting EX 01 total compensation comparable to an external benchmark and then using internal relativities, defined in terms of job responsibilities, to establish compensation for the higher management levels. This same approach (i.e. setting EX 01 total compensation equal to the median total compensation of a defined benchmark) is recommended going forward, with the external benchmark defined as a representative sample of private sector and broader public sector organizations combined. The Committee believes that such a sample is the best starting point for defining the organizations with which the federal Public Service competes in terms of attracting people. This recommendation also has the advantage that most compensation consultants provide such data routinely and it is widely used.

Given the Committee's earlier recommendation to use the Hay-based position evaluation plan, we also recommend that one of the sources for benchmark data is the Hay All Organizations sample. This sample consists of approximately 250 industrial organizations, some 60 financial organizations and about 50 organizations from the public sector. However, a second source of benchmark data should also be used to check competitive positioning.

It is very important that the government analyse its experience recruiting people and quantify where people go when they leave the Public Service in mid-career. This will be input to test the validity of the assumption about the government's competitors for talent. While this policy gives reasonable competitiveness at the management entry level, there will be a widening compensation gap with the predominantly private sector sample as responsibility grows. This has been discussed elsewhere in the report but, again, serves to underline the significance of the nature of the work and the workplace as important factors in attracting and retaining talent.

It is very important that the government analyse its experience recruiting people and quantify where people go when they leave the Public Service in mid-career. This will be input to test the validity of the assumption about the government's competitors for talent.

The competitive positioning for the CEOs of Crown corporations is less clear since the Committee needed to balance a number of competing factors in setting their structure. Thus, the Group 1 job rate recommended in our Second Report equalled the first quartile cash compensation in the Hay All Organizations sample, with bigger jobs based upon internal relativities. This competitive positioning will be revisited in the light of actual experience in recruiting qualified candidates for these CEO positions and following a review of competitiveness based on total compensation. It is also discussed later in this report.

Compensation policies for the balance of the Governor in Council group may need to be re-examined once the study of this group is complete. If required, recommendations should be made prior to April 2001.

Cash Compensation Structures

Following the Committee's first two reports, revised cash compensation structures are now in place as follows.

Executives and Deputy Ministers: 8 salary job rates plus "at risk" pay ranging from a maximum of 10% to a maximum of 20% to be paid annually based upon results.

CEOs of Crown corporations: 10 salary job rates plus "at risk" pay ranging from a maximum of 10% to a maximum of 25% to be paid annually based upon results (Governor of Bank of Canada excepted).

Other GIC appointees: 11 salary job ranges but often no "at risk" pay as this was judged inappropriate to the quasi-judicial/regulatory nature of many of the positions.

As noted earlier, this third group is being reviewed and there may be changes recommended in 2001.

Along with the introduction of "at risk" pay came the introduction of a new performance management regime, with emphasis on target setting and performance assessment. This is in the process of being implemented and will be an important contributor to the government's emphasis on becoming more results oriented. Although it is premature to recommend further changes just yet, it is important to signal that changes are to be expected as compensation strategies increasingly focus public servants on delivering key results and demonstrating key behaviours.

Performance Management

An effective process of performance management is critical to any learning organization seeking to improve continuously. First, there is a need to identify executives' skills and competencies in order to inventory them for the Public Service workforce planning and to identify specific training needs or development opportunities. Second, there is a need to evaluate how each manager is performing overall in his/her position usually based upon the most recent 12 months – this impacts on the speed with which salary movement through the job-range takes place. Third, there is the process of setting specific short term objectives and then measuring achievements – this determines the degree of pay-out in the incentive or "at risk" pay.

An effective process of performance management is critical to any learning organization seeking to improve continuously.

Common processes for each of these steps should be used throughout the senior management cadre and every effort should be made to ensure consistent and regular application throughout all departments and regions. The deputy minister community must lead these initiatives.

As the federal Public Service moves to an increased focus on results, these processes will adapt and grow in importance. It is critical that there is a sharper focus on individual accountability. There needs to be an on-going drive to ensure that objectives – whether corporate, team or personal – are clearly expressed, are quantified where feasible, and are mutually agreed between boss and subordinate. The incentive pay component is designed to reward the desired results and behaviours. This link needs to be as transparent as possible and the application of the programme must be equitable across the senior management cadre.

It is critical that there is a sharper focus on individual accountability.

Benefits

The Committee's First Report recommended that a study of flexible benefits be undertaken. The Committee felt that adopting a 'cafeteria' style approach to non-cash portions of the compensation package would reinforce that the leadership group was being treated as distinct. From a strategic human resources viewpoint, this approach also enables employees the flexibility to design programmes that best fit their individual needs. This, in turn, provides the employer – the government – with a maximum return on its benefit dollars.

The Committee has increasingly come to the view that flexible benefits can be a very positive contributor to the government's strategies to attract and retain the best.

A major survey conducted earlier this year by Watson Wyatt has confirmed the desirability of the notion of flexible benefits. While the specific findings are summarized in Appendix F, the Committee has increasingly come to the view that flexible benefits can be a very positive contributor to the government's strategies to attract and retain the best. We believe that the key is to design a programme that will not only meet the needs of today's management cadre but will also be attractive to the managers of the future.

Although the Committee had originally thought of such a change as broadly cost-neutral, it is highly likely that investment in this area will yield considerable value in contributing to recruitment and retention strategies. As such, the Committee is prepared to consider and recommend options which increase cost. We also recommend that the government investigate ways of introducing greater flexibility in the pension area which we had previously excluded from consideration.

Conclusion

The Committee believes that good progress has been made in the area of compensation. Strategies are evolving, principles are well established and the specifics have been addressed in a completely transparent manner.

The Committee believes that good progress has been made in the area of compensation. Strategies are evolving, principles are well established and the specifics have been addressed in a completely transparent manner. However, there are more recommendations in Chapter 3 which we believe are necessary to maintain competitiveness. And then in the next eighteen months, we would expect more structural recommendations primarily dealing with other GIC appointees and Crown corporations.

Specific Human Resource Matters

This section of our Third Report deals with a series of specific recommendations and reports on progress with respect to certain of our previous recommendations. We revisit pay, following an external benchmarking survey completed early this year, recommend more specifically how to move forward with flexible benefits, address the creation of another Deputy Minister level, provide updates on performance management and job evaluations, provide comment on certain workplace policies and, finally, suggest one approach to the issue of work load.

What is encouraging to the Committee is that we are able to address these specific matters of human resource management against the backdrop of an increasingly well-defined long-term strategy. As a consequence, the Committee is comfortable that our recommendations are fully consistent with the evolving strategy.

What is encouraging to the Committee is that we are able to address these specific matters of human resource management against the backdrop of an increasingly well-defined long-term strategy.

Pay

As indicated in our First and Second Reports, the Committee has again compared Public Service cash compensation externally. Consistent with the recommendations in the previous chapter, the benchmark data was sourced from Hay Management Consultants (All Organizations sample) and a special survey conducted by William M. Mercer Limited amongst 320 private and public sector organizations. The external data was as of December 1999 whereas the Public Service data reflects the April 2000 structure. The implications of this most recent data are now analysed for each of three discrete federal Public Service management communities – executives and deputy ministers, CEOs of Crown corporations and other GIC appointees.

(a) Executives and Deputy Ministers

The illustration below compares federal Public Service total cash compensation (defined as salary job rate plus 70% of the maximum available "at risk" pay) at April 2000 with the 1999 actual cash compensation for equivalent positions in the two benchmark samples. The following conclusions can be drawn:

(i) as would be expected, there are some differences between the two sources of comparative data – both are based upon samples and different methods are used for establishing the equivalency of jobs. However, directionally the external data are largely consistent and show similar pictures;

(ii) the Public Service is behind the benchmarks in both samples at all levels of job responsibility;

(iii) the shortfalls in both absolute and relative terms increase as job responsibility grows. This is consistent with all previous findings.

The disquieting fact about the comparisons is the quite significant shortfall at the EX 01 level, which, only two years ago, was set equivalent to the median of a similarly-defined external benchmark.

The disquieting fact about the comparisons is the quite significant shortfall at the EX 01 level, which, only two years ago, was set equivalent to the median of a similarly defined external benchmark. This is particularly important since the entire executive and deputy minister salary structure is built upon the compensation for an EX 01. In 1998, we set total EX 01 compensation and then created a structure based upon internal relativities in job responsibilities.

Public Service Total Cash Compensation vs Mercer and Hay Medians

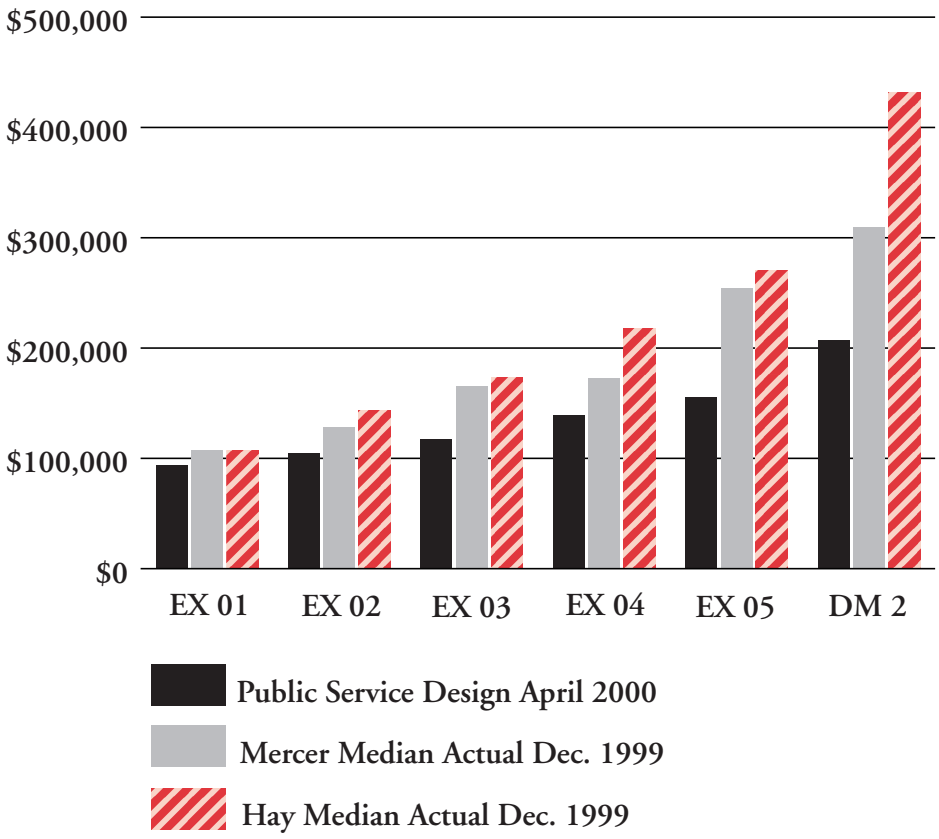

Illustration 7

The results of the external benchmarking have led the Committee to revisit cash compensation. Consistent with the principles outlined in the previous chapter, we first investigated whether there were problems of compression or inversion. The Committee therefore requested that Treasury Board Secretariat conduct a study of actual compression. Based upon a significant sample of EX 01s from 11 of the largest employing departments, salary compression exists for 9% of the positions. In other words 9% of EX 01s have direct reports earning greater than 90% of their own total cash compensation. However, based on a conservative estimate of what might happen in collective bargaining over the balance of this year, the incidence of compression will rise to 21 % by year-end. It is the Committee's view that this is not acceptable. In order to substantially eliminate the problem of salary compression by this year-end, the EX 01 job rate would need to increase by 10%.

Clearly, the market has risen more sharply than anticipated in late 1997. Three factors appear to have caused this – the impact of the new economy, the significant number of mergers and consolidations, and the early stages of the supply shortage.

The Treasury Board Secretariat study also showed evidence of salary inversion. However, the incidence is low, and occurs generally where the direct reports are senior professionals, such as medical officers.

Next, the Committee focused on a more detailed analysis of the benchmark results and, in particular, sought to understand why EX 01 cash compensation had fallen behind.

We started by looking at salaries. The current EX 01 job rate of $87,400 was set using data from a 1997 Mercer Survey adjusted to reflect an estimated movement in 1998. Clearly, the market has risen more sharply than anticipated in late 1997. Three factors appear to have caused this – the impact of the new economy, the significant number of mergers and consolidations, and the early stages of the supply shortage discussed earlier in this report.

The illustration below summarizes salary data from both external surveys. In both cases, the survey data used is the median of the sample.

Public Service Salary Job Rates vs. Median Benchmark Salaries

	Mercer Actual	Hay Actual
Salaries at December 1999	$95,000	$97,800
Difference from EX 01	– $7,600	– $10,400
Job Rate at April 2000	– 8.7%	– 11.9%

Illustration 8

Both Mercer and Hay showed the median Total Cash Compensation for the EX 01 benchmark as $107,000, with the compensation above salary deriving from "at risk" or incentive pay. Consequently, the Committee reviewed the variable pay situation with respect to EX 01s. As noted earlier, an EX 01 can earn between 0 and 10% of salary in incentive pay. A reasonable expectation of average payout in a typical year would be 70% of the maximum or 7% of salary. 7% of even the higher Hay salary benchmark would still leave the Public Service total cash below $107,000, indicating that the "at risk" pay in the Public Service also trails where it should be.

Based upon this analysis, the Committee has concluded that an upward adjustment to salary job rates is needed. Before deciding the precise amount of this increase, the Committee reviewed other elements of total compensation and noted:

(a) the total cash compensation reported earlier does not include long-term incentives such as stock options or performance unit plans. This form of reward has been growing in the private sector, as focus on creating shareholder value has increased. Thus, the difference in total compensation between the Public Service and the benchmarks would be even greater than shown, especially in the jobs with more responsibilities.

(b) we believe there are few material differences in fringe benefits and perquisites between the Public Service and the benchmarks. The only exception is the pension plan for deputy ministers which is likely more valuable than the sample median. However, it is also at these most senior levels that the differences in salary and incentive pay (both short and long-term) are the greatest.

Thus, the Committee is satisfied that the shortfalls in cash compensation carry through to total compensation. The Committee therefore recommends an increase of 8.7% in the job rates structure for all EX and DM levels to be effective April 1, 2000. No changes are recommended to the incentive pay structure at this time. This recommendation:

(1) in large measure eliminates the compression problems noted earlier, although this issue will need to be revisited on a regular basis;

(2) equates the EX 01 salary job rate to the "actual" median salary of the lower of the two benchmark samples;

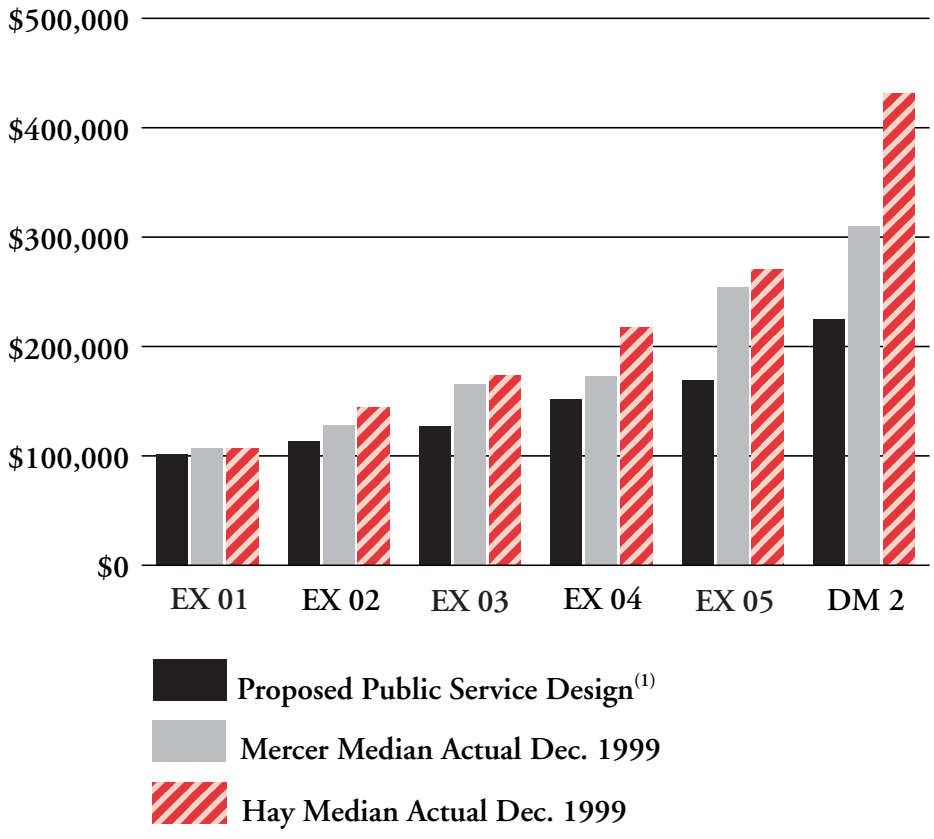
The Committee recommends an increase of 8.7% in the job rates structure for all EX and DM levels to be effective April 1, 2000. No changes are recommended to the incentive pay structure at this time.

(3) moves the salary structure closer to the desired long-term positioning;

(4) leaves a shortfall in incentive and total cash compensation. Given that this is the first year of full implementation of at risk pay, the Committee feels possible adjustments are best considered when this experience has been fully analysed.

The illustration below demonstrates the impact of this proposal. It significantly narrows the gap compared to our benchmark at the EX 01 positioning but it does not address the now familiar widening gap in compensation as job responsibility increases.

Proposed Public Service Total Cash Compensation vs Hay and Mercer Medians



(1) At risk pay included at 70% of maximum

Illustration 9

Given the magnitude of the recommended change to the job rates, the Committee also discussed implementation options. In other words, how quickly should actual salaries be adjusted? Here, the government needs to weigh the cost implications to its various departmental budgets with the human resource risks of slow implementation (poor morale, and impact on attracting and retaining key people). It should also be pointed out that it is highly probable that, following the proposed benchmark surveys, a further adjustment to job rates is likely for April 2001. This is currently estimated in the 3-4% range. Without being overly prescriptive with respect to implementation, the Committee therefore recommends that the government target to have full integrity restored to actual salaries by no later than April 1, 2001.

One final set of comments on the implementation of the "at risk" pay programme. Firstly, its intent is to reward the achievement of results and as a consequence, the Committee would expect to see a well-dispersed distribution of awards ranging from the minimum (no payment) to the maximum (10% or 15% or 20% of salary). In an organization as large and diverse as the federal Public Service there will necessarily be some departments or individuals who have been severely challenged in any given year, while there will be others who have had great success. A heavy concentration of average payouts would suggest that the programme is not working as intended. However, the initial feedback received by the Committee is promising with respect to the distribution of payouts.

Secondly, an observation about budgeting for this at risk pay programme: unlike salary budgets which can be easily prescribed in any year, the "at risk" component is a consequence of results achieved compared to an objective. Thus, while guidance can be given to departments on how best to budget for "at risk" pay, actual payouts should be determined after the year-end on the basis of a rigorous assessment of results achieved. These results cannot, with integrity, be forced to comply with some pre-determined budget number.

It is highly probable that, following the proposed benchmark surveys, a further adjustment to job rates is likely for April 2001. … The committee therefore recommends that the government target to have full integrity restored to actual salaries by no later than April 1, 2001.

While guidance can be given to departments on how best to budget for "at risk" pay, actual payouts should be determined after the year-end on the basis of a rigorous assessment of results achieved.

(B) CEOs OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

The Advisory Committee's Second Report, published in March 2000, recommended a new structure for salary and "at risk" pay of Crown corporation CEOs and was based upon Hay 1999 data. As a consequence, the Committee is not making any further recommendations for changes. We have looked at broad compatibility with this report's proposals and are satisfied that the equity across the Public Sector has, in fact, been enhanced. That said, the Committee proposes a series of actions to be completed over the next eighteen months:

(i) continue to monitor whether the larger Crowns are sufficiently competitive to attract qualified candidates;

(ii) based upon the proposed benchmark survey, adjust the current salary structure for April 1, 2001;

(iii) measure each CEO position in terms of total compensation and test rigorously for compression;

(iv) use the input from (i) and (iii) plus the findings from the proposed survey of total compensation to make changes, if warranted, to the salary structure and "at risk" pay for April 1, 2002. Given the relatively independent nature of the Crowns, special attention should be given to the possibility of increasing the "at risk" component of total cash compensation.

(C) OTHER GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL APPOINTEES

The Committee recommends that the existing GIC job rates be increased by 8.7%. This is consistent with the approach taken in our First Report which tied GIC appointees into the executive/deputy minister structure. Any further changes should await the currently underway Privy Council Office review of this entire group. Implementation should follow the proposals made for Executives and Deputy Ministers.

Benefits

The survey carried out in February by Watson Wyatt confirms a high level of support for the notion of flexible benefits. Interest is particularly high amongst younger managers. A summary of the survey results is included in Appendix F.

As already discussed in the previous chapter, the Committee believes that such a programme will play an important role in attracting and retaining good people in the Public Service and offers the government excellent potential value for dollars invested. The Committee therefore recommends that the government proceed with a full feasibility study including developing and costing a suitable programme.

The Committee believes that a programme of Flexible Benefits … offers the government excellent potential value for dollars invested.

The Committee favours a programme which has a set of core benefits which all executives receive automatically plus a series of optional benefits from which executives may choose to meet their individual needs and lifestyles. Directionally, the core programme should be as narrowly defined as possible while the optional programme should be as broadly defined as possible. The programme should also offer a choice of coverage level – executive only, executive plus one dependant, and executive plus two or more dependants. Managers of the future will want a significant degree of flexibility.

As part of the new flexible benefits programme, the Committee recommends that the government consider phasing out the current sick leave provisions for executives and moving to a regime of short-term salary continuance plus long-term disability coverage. Such programmes are common practice in the private sector and have two major advantages. Firstly, such an approach is more effective and equitable in providing salary protection when a manager is sick and does not tie coverage entitlement to length of service. Secondly, it enables outsourcing the administration, particularly the adjudication of claims. The Committee recognizes that some transition rules may be required.

During the course of our discussions on benefits, it came to the Committee's attention that executives were irritated by the fact that their vacation entitlement was inferior to that of their unionized staff. The Committee therefore investigated the adequacy of the current entitlement. The following chart shows current vacation policy for executives and compares this with current practices as measured in the Hay Group Report on Prevalence of Benefits Practices 1999-2000.

SERVICE NEEDED TO QUALIFY FOR VACATION ENTITLEMENTS PUBLIC SERVICE VS. BENCHMARK

	Required Years of Service
Weeks of Vacation	Public Service Executives	Benchmark[1]	Incidence Amongst Benchmark[2]
3	–	2-5 years	100%
4	On appointment	10-15 years	99%
5	20 years[3]	20 years	92%
6	No provision	25-30 years	60%
7	No provision	30 years	8%

(1) These ranges represent the most common service requirements to earn the vacation amongst those organizations offering that vacation. However, it is based upon all employees, not just executives.

(2) The percentage of organizations offering each vacation. For example, 92% of all organizations in the benchmark sample offer 5 weeks of vacation subject to defined service requirements.

(3) This is the most common criterion – other options do, however, exist which accelerate the entitlement.

ILLUSTRATION 10

As can be seen from Illustration 10 above, 60% of organizations in the benchmark sample do offer a vacation entitlement of six or more weeks. This incidence rises to 77% of public sector organizations in the sample. The Committee has therefore concluded that the addition of a 6 week entitlement for vacation is consistent with the majority practice in our benchmark sample. The remaining issue, then, is the service requirement to earn this vacation. 85% of organizations offering six weeks of vacation have a requirement falling within the 25-30 years of service range, with 25 the most popular. However, as noted above, this needs to be weighed against the fact that there are 40% of organizations which do not offer this entitlement. The Committee therefore recommends that the deputy minister, executive and Governor in Council communities be entitled to 6 weeks of paid vacation after 28 years of service.

However, the Committee also recommends that the proposed total compensation benchmark review study executive vacation entitlements in more detail.

The Committee has also had a lot of discussion about work/life balance and workload. While the Public Service is by no means alone in facing these challenges, the government needs to create a climate in which it is acceptable to take vacation! We propose, therefore, that the government ensure rigorous and consistent application of vacation policy. This will hopefully go some distance to restoring a proper work/life balance. But it is also important for the employer, since vacations are an opportunity to "recharge the batteries", to relax and relieve the stresses of the job. Without them, there is substantial evidence that productivity and managerial effectiveness steadily decline.

The Committee recommends that the deputy minister, executive and Governor in Council communities be entitled to 6 weeks of paid vacation after 28 years of service.

The Committee has had a lot of discussion about work/life balance and workload. While the Public Service is by no means alone in facing these challenges, the government needs to create a climate in which it is acceptable to take vacation!

Deputy Ministers

At the request of the Committee, the Privy Council Office evaluated Deputy Minister responsibilities. This confirmed that certain positions are larger in scope than others.

Recognizing the value and flexibility of the current appointment to level system, the Committee recommends the creation of a DM 4 level. The salary job rate would be 12% higher that DM 3 and the "at risk" pay would be a maximum of 25%. If the earlier changes in structure are accepted by the government this would equate to a job rate of $247,700 with maximum "at risk" pay of $61,900. Even though the number of people impacted by from this proposal (and hence its cost) is small, this recommendation:

- ensures greater equity between the most senior deputy ministers and the CEOs of some of the larger Crowns; and
- sends an important message in terms of the government's willingness to attract and retain qualified and experienced staff.

Performance Management

Indications are that the Performance Management Programme has got off to a good start. Importantly, it is clearly being led from the top.

Indications are that the Performance Management Programme has got off to a good start. Importantly, it is clearly being led from the top. The Committee has had the opportunity to review the Treasury Board Secretariat preliminary evaluation of the 1999-2000 process (see Appendix G for the summary). We were encouraged to see good practices identified as well as a list of lessons learned. Stemming from this review were numerous recommendations for improving the 2000-2001 cycle. We hope that this process for continuous improvement will be institutionalized.

The Committee believes this programme, which supports the "at risk" compensation, is a critical factor in the drive to become more results oriented. From our viewpoint, the key factors in success are:

- continued top management support;
- clear objectives and priorities, quantified where feasible; and
- focus on fewer rather than more key commitments.

Job Evaluation

Job evaluations have now been completed for all executive positions. However, with the adoption of a revised Hay plan incorporating Working Conditions, all positions will need to be revisited.

A fundamental review of all "other" Governor in Council positions, as referenced earlier, is currently commencing.

Work Place Policies

The Committee is pleased to note that the Treasury Board Secretariat is beginning to update a number of workplace policies.

(a) Travel: The purpose of this initiative is to modernize the structures and processes governing travel by federal public servants. Overall recommendations are expected by February 2001 and will focus on streamlining processes and reflecting recent structural and technological changes in the travel industry. While the primary goal should be to leverage the scale of the government to minimize costs, important secondary goals are reducing the administrative burden for travellers and providing public servants more flexibility in areas such as spousal/dependent travel providing the option is cost neutral to the Crown.

(b) Integrated Relocation Programme: An equitable relocation programme for executives will likely become increasingly important as mobility and transfers grow. A revised policy came into effect April 1, 2000 and should continue to be monitored for simplification and modification.

(c) Harassment in the Workplace: Treasury Board Secretariat is currently engaged in a substantive review of the existing Harassment Policy. There are current executive concerns about inconsistent application, the lengthy resolution process and inadequate resources. The only recommendation the Committee would put forward is that Treasury Board Secretariat ensures that any changes are tested for consistency with the new culture which the Public Service is seeking to create.

(d) Legal Representation and Recourse: Executives have expressed concerns about the adequacy of existing policies on legal representation and recourse. While the Committee has not studied this complex area of human resource policy, we believe there is merit in a review by Treasury Board Secretariat. As the Public Service moves to give managers more authority to make decisions and to take risks, it is important that executives feel confident that they have the support of their organization, providing, of course, they have not acted illegally or improperly.

Work Load

Following the downsizing of the early nineties, the Public Service leadership feels they have too much work and too little time to do it. While it probably does not serve as much comfort, the Committee would add that there are many private sector organizations which feel exactly the same.

The Committee has one suggestion for a pilot study, probably in one of the smaller departments. It builds upon the Public Service commitment to continuous improvement and utilizes some well-established techniques used by many private sector organizations. Basically, the approach focuses on analysing the work done and the work processes used. We would recommend working with an outside consultant so that the government can use an established set of tools and measurements.

The results from such studies usually indicate a lot of wasted time doing unnecessary tasks, redoing activities and so on. We have certainly heard enough complaints about bureaucratic processes to know that an opportunity for gain certainly exists. There is also the opportunity to use information technology more effectively to upgrade processes. And finally, as the government becomes more citizen focused, it will be important to test that work done adds value for citizens.

Summary

Over the past three years, our Committee has learned a great deal about the senior levels of the federal Public Service. Despite our private sector roots, we have become more committed than ever to the importance of ensuring that the Public Service of Canada remains strong, representative, professional and non-partisan. But this will not happen, unless the Government takes some bold actions now, and it will not happen unless today's Public Service leaders commit to making significant changes in how human resources are managed and in the culture of the organization going forward.

The Committee is not talking about changing the core values of the Public Service. These have served as the bedrock of the Public Service for decades and will continue to do so for many years to come. However, if the Public Service is to meet the expectations of Canadians, there is a need to develop new mindsets, new skills and new abilities.

First, it is critical that the government recognize that the senior level federal Public Service is facing a human capital crisis. Retirements alone over the next decade could result in the loss of just over 80% of today's cadre. Filling this void will be immensely challenging since we are entering a period where the demand for talented people will exceed the supply.

It is critical that the government recognize that the senior level federal Public Service is facing a human capital crisis.

In order to successfully compete for the high calibre people it requires, the Committee believes that the government needs a clearly articulated human resource strategy. The good news is that in the traditional human resource areas of workforce planning, recruiting, developing and retaining, very good progress is being made, led by the Clerk of the Privy Council and the Committee of

If our proposals in this Third Report are accepted, considerable progress will have been made in the past three years – restored integrity, a transparent policy, improved competitive standing and a start on aligning rewards and performance.

Senior Officials. This strategic work needs to be completed and rigorous implementation plans developed. The fifth basic function of human resources is paying, recommendations for which are part of our Committee's mandate. Again, if our proposals in this Third Report are accepted, considerable progress will have been made in the past three years – restored integrity, a transparent policy, improved competitive standing and a start on aligning rewards and performance. What is important to note, however, is that the Committee does not believe that the government will win the recruiting battle with higher pay alone. Of course, pay must be adequate but we do not believe it is practical, in the short term, to match the private sector at the most senior levels. Given this reality, how will the government become an employer of choice?

The Committee believes the answer lies in the nature of the work and the workplace that the Public Service can offer. Talented managers of the future will want challenging and interesting work; they will want to feel that the results they achieve will make a difference; they want to be pro-active with the freedom to make decisions; they want to work in an innovative and flexible environment. The federal Public Service can offer all of these things but only if there are some significant changes in the organization and culture.

The Committee has therefore recommended that the government add two initiatives to its core human resource strategies. The first is to focus on streamlining the framework for managing human resources. This is by no means a new recommendation as this area has been the subject of numerous studies in the past. However, now is the time for action. The leaders of tomorrow do not want to be part of a slow moving, inefficient bureaucracy. Without reform, the Committee does not believe the Public Service can become an employer of choice.

The second strategic initiative recommended by the Committee addresses cultural renewal – ensuring that the desired mindsets and behaviours become the norm. The Committee is pleased to note that an exciting vision for the Public Service is basically in place. However, the challenge of changing the culture of any organization the size of the federal Public Service is immense. The Committee believes that specific implementation plans covering a broad range of initiatives will be necessary to be successful. Further, the Committee urges the Clerk to establish an aggressive timetable for this implementation.

In closing, the Committee believes that the federal Public Service has reached a unique point in its long and distinguished history. The convergence of a number of factors – workforce demographics, information technology, citizen expectations – demands change. With these changes comes an immense opportunity to modernize and revitalize the Public Service and to ensure that all Canadians continue to be well served both domestically and internationally.

The Committee believes that the federal Public Service has reached a unique point in its long and distinguished history. The convergence of a number of factors – workforce demographics, information technology, citizen expectations – demands change. With these changes comes an immense opportunity to modernize and revitalize the Public Service.

Appendices

Appendix A

Committee Members

Lawrence F. Strong, B.Sc. – Chair
Director, Unilever Canada Limited

Past President and Chief Executive Officer, Unilever Canada Limited. Past President and COO, Unilever Canada. Past Vice-President, Finance, Unilever Canada. Past President, Monarch Fine Foods and Chesebrough-Pond's (Canada). Past Chair, Food and Consumer Products Manufacturers of Canada (FCPMC), Public Policy Forum (PPF) and Electronic Commerce Council of Canada (ECCC). Trustee, Grocery Industry Foundation Together (GIFT) and the Invest in Kids Foundation. Director, Canadian Council of Christians and Jews (CCCJ), Public Policy Forum and Electronic Commerce Council of Canada.

John L. Fryer, C.M., B.Sc.(Econ.), M.A.
Chair, Advisory Committee on Labour Management Relations in the Federal Public Service

Adjunct Professor, School of Public Administration, University of Victoria. President Emeritus, National Union of Public and General Employees (NUPGE).

Marilyn H. Knox, B.Sc., RD
President, Nutrition, Nestlé Canada Inc.

Past Deputy Minister, Tourism and Recreation, Government of Ontario. Past Assistant Deputy Minister, Ministry of Agriculture and Food, Government of Ontario. Past Executive Director, Ontario Premier's Council on Health Strategy. Past Vice-President, Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada. Former consultant, Health Protection Branch, Health and Welfare Canada.

Gaétan Lussier, O.C., B.Sc. (Agr.), M.Sc., Ph.D.
President, Gaétan Lussier and Associates

Past Assistant Deputy Minister and Deputy Minister, Quebec Ministry of Agriculture. Past Deputy Minister of Agriculture Canada. Past Deputy Minister and Chairman, Employment and Immigration Canada. Past President, Les Boulangeries Weston Québec Inc. Past President and Chief Executive Officer, Culinar Inc.

Judith Maxwell, C.M., B.Com., D.Com.
President, Canadian Policy Research Networks

Past Director, Policy Studies, C.D. Howe Institute. Former consultant, Esso Europe Inc. Former consultant, Economics, Coopers & Lybrand. Past Chairman, Economic Council of Canada. Past Associate Director, School of Policy Studies, Queen's University. Past Executive Director, Queen's University of Ottawa Economic Projects. Director, BCE Inc. and Clarica (formerly Mutual Life Assurance of Canada).

Courtney Pratt, C.M., B.A., LLD (Hon)
President and Chief Executive Officer, Hydro One Networks Inc.

Past Chairman and Director, Noranda Inc. Director, The Empire Company and Moosehead Breweries. Chairman, Imagine and Director, The Learning Partnership, Career Edge and The University Health Network. Past Executive Vice-President and Past President, Noranda Inc. Past Senior Vice-President, Human Resources and Administration, Royal Trust Company. Member, Advisory Group on Executive Compensation in the Public Service (Burns Committee). Member, Ontario Advisory Committee on Deputy Minister and Senior Management Compensation.

Appendix B

Committee Mandate

To provide independent advice and recommendations to the President of the Treasury Board concerning executives, deputy ministers and other Governor-in-Council appointees of the federal Public Service and Public sector on:

- developing a long-term strategy for the senior levels of the Public Service that will support the human resource management needs of the next decade,
- compensation strategies and principles, and
- overall management matters comprising among other things human resource policies and programmes, terms and conditions of employment, classification and compensation issues including rates of pay, rewards and recognition.

To present recommendations in a report to the President of the Treasury Board. The report will be made public by the President of the Treasury Board.

Appendix C

Extract from Auditor General of Canada's April 2000 Report Outlining the Basic Legislative Framework for Managing Public Servants*

- The basic framework for managing people in the 20 departments and some 60 agencies that form the "core" public service comprises three pieces of legislation enacted in 1967: the Public Service Staff Relations Act, the Financial Administration Act, and the Public Service Employment Act. A fourth Act, the Public Service Superannuation Act, provides for pensions for the public service of Canada. The legislative framework is designed to uphold basic public service values and to provide for the protection and monitoring of merit.
- The Public Service Staff Relations Act introduced collective bargaining, to which about 85 percent of employees are now subject. In general, the design of the collective bargaining regime adheres to principles and processes established in law to govern relations between other employers and their employees. An important exception in the public service is the exclusion of job classification and staffing from collective bargaining.
- Since 1967, several pieces of legislation have been added to the governing framework. Notable among these are the Official Languages Act, the Canadian Human Rights Act, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Access to Information Act, the Privacy Act, and the Employment Equity Act.

* Source: The April 2000 Report of the Auditor General of Canada – Chapter 9

THE MAIN MANAGEMENT PLAYERS

- Today, key roles in the management of human resources in the core public service are played by Treasury Board, the Privy Council Office, the Public Service Commission and line departments. Federal public sector entities outside the "core" have greater autonomy in managing their people.

- Treasury Board. Under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, the Board acts on behalf of the government as the "employer" for the core public service. The Treasury Board is a Cabinet committee with a number of statutory authorities in the areas of expenditure and financial management, service and innovation, information technology and human resource management. In this domain, Treasury Board ministers are concerned with maintaining a strong, competent and representative work force. Through the Treasury Board Secretariat, the Board consults and negotiates with the public service unions. The Treasury Board also has general responsibility under the Financial Administration Act for administrative policy and for financial and personnel management (except appointments, the domain of the Public Service Commission). Treasury Board, with the support of the Secretariat, sets out policies on such matters as job evaluation, compensation, terms and conditions of employment, training and development, labour relations, work force adjustment, pension programs, employee benefits and insurance, employment equity and official languages.

- The Privy Council Office (PCO). Headed by the Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary to the Cabinet, the PCO is responsible for ensuring the satisfactory performance of the public service in support of the Prime Minister and Cabinet. This includes strategic management of senior people. The PCO provides advice and support in the selection of deputy ministers and other Governor-in-Council appointees, and in the related processes for performance review, compensation and termination. For deputy ministers, it also provides advice and support for career planning. The Clerk became the statutory Head of the Public Service in 1993, and plays a prominent role of leadership to deputy ministers and public servants generally, by establishing strategic direction and management priorities for the public service.

- The Public Service Commission (PSC). Under the Public Service Employment Act, the Commission is an independent parliamentary agent with exclusive statutory authority to appoint or provide for the appointment of "qualified persons" to and within the public service. It ensures that appointments are based on merit "as determined by the Commission." The Commission is also responsible for conducting investigations and audits of matters under its jurisdiction and for administering the staffing recourse mechanisms provided under the Act. It operates staff training and development programs, and assists deputy heads in operating such programs. It also has responsibilities for employment equity, and handles matters assigned to it by the Treasury Board or by the Governor in Council.

- Departments. Ministers are assigned broad powers over the organization and allocation of resources in their departments. Deputy ministers have responsibility and authority to manage the department in support of their ministers. Beyond this, deputy ministers have little statutory authority in human resource management. Instead, their authority is derived primarily from delegation instruments under which the Treasury Board and Public Service Commission delegate powers to them.

The many other players

- There are many other management players. The Canadian Centre for Management Development is responsible for developing a strong management cadre. The Leadership Network is responsible for supporting network development and promoting public service renewal, and for central management of the assistant deputy minister community. This reflects the notion that its members represent a vital corporate resource.

- Various management committees also play an important role. Most prominent are two standing committees of deputy ministers:

  - the Committee of Senior Officials (COSO), which advises the Clerk on senior appointments and other human resource management priorities and issues; and

  - the Treasury Board Secretariat Advisory Committee (TBSAC), which advises the Secretary of the Treasury Board on all administrative matters to be brought before the Board, including those related to "personnel management."

- Other bodies play a role in the co-ordination, debate or review of human resource management issues, or perform administrative functions (see Appendix A). These include various standing or ad hoc bodies, and oversight institutions – the Office of the Commissioner of Official Languages, the offices of the Information Commissioner and the Privacy Commissioner, the Canadian Human Rights Commission and the Public Service Staff Relations Board, which administers the Public Service Staff Relations Act. They also include the 16 unions and various forums for consultation among employer, employees and bargaining agents, such as the National Joint Council and the Public Service Commission Advisory Council.

Appendix A

A Summary of the Roles and Responsibilities of Some of the Many Players in Human Resource Management in the Public Service

The players whose roles are discussed in the chapter are the Treasury Board and its Secretariat, the Privy Council Office under the direction of the Clerk, the Public Service Commission, departments and their deputy ministers, and the two key deputy ministerial committees – the Committee of Senior Officials (COSO) and the Treasury Board Secretariat Advisory Committee (TBSAC). There are numerous others that influence the management of human resources in the core public service. Some are briefly described below.

The National Joint Council (NJC)

The Council is a "consultative" body comprising representatives of the Treasury Board (acting as the "employer" for the core public service), a number of "separate employers," and bargaining agents. Its recommendations must be approved by the appropriate executive body of government. Established before the advent of collective bargaining, the Council is a forum for regular consultation on issues bearing on the efficiency of the public service and the well-being of its employees. The NJC deals with matters on which consultation is more efficient across the public service than at each bargaining table. These matters may include any benefit or condition of work that applies service-wide. Examples include travel, relocation, isolated post allowances, foreign service, work force adjustment, and benefit plans like health care and disability insurance. When the Council agrees to "consult" on a matter it is understood that, on approval, the matter either will be deemed to constitute a part of collective agreements or will result only in recommendations to the employer.

Bargaining Agents

Currently, 16 unions certified by the Public Service Staff Relations Board are authorized to represent particular groups of public servants in collective bargaining. The Public Service Alliance of Canada represents the largest number of public servants (approximately 116,000) and the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada represents another 31,000. No other bargaining agent represents more than 6,000 federal public servants, and most represent fewer than 1,000.

The Public Service Commission Advisory Council

Created in 1998, the Advisory Council provides a forum for Commissioners and senior Commission staff to discuss and consult on issues related to the Public Service Employment Act . The Council includes a representative of each of the public service bargaining agents and more than a dozen representatives of federal departments and agencies, with a Treasury Board observer. Meetings of the Council and its Steering Committee are co-chaired by a representative of the unions and of the departments. The Council has a number of working groups dealing with current issues such as mobility, recourse and merit.

Association of Professional Executives of the Public Services of Canada (APEX)

The Association represents the interests of executives and promotes management excellence and professionalism in the federal public service. It tracks current and emerging issues of concern to its members, gathers members' views and represents them to government decision makers. Membership in the Association is voluntary.

The Public Service Staff Relations Board

The Board is a quasi-judicial statutory tribunal, responsible for administration of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Its responsibilities include such matters as determining bargaining units, unfair labour practices, certifying and decertifying of bargaining agents, adjudication of rights disputes (grievances not resolved satisfactorily in the employee's department) mediation services for grievances, complaints and collective bargaining disputes, and generally providing an administrative structure in which the rights and responsibilities of the employer and employees in the federal public service may be exercised and/or enforced.

The Commissioner of Official Languages

The Treasury Board is responsible for providing a policy framework to ensure that departments and agencies meet the requirements of the Official Languages Act. The Commissioner is an ombudsman, responsible under the Official Languages Act to protect:

- the rights of members of the public to communicate in either official language with federal institutions and to receive services from them as provided for in the Act and its regulations;
- the right of federal employees to work in the official language of their choice in designated regions; and
- the right of English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians to equal opportunities for employment and advancement in federal institutions.

Official language requirements must be established for positions in the public service, and the ability of public servants to meet them must be assessed. The Commissioner's office conducts audits and studies of performance in departments and agencies and investigates individual complaints. It makes recommendations for corrective action, appealing to the Federal Court on behalf of complainants when all other recourse has been exhausted.

The Privacy Commissioner of Canada

The Privacy Commissioner is an ombudsman, appointed by and accountable to Parliament, who monitors the government's collection, use and disclosure of the personal information of individuals, and its handling of individuals' requests to see their records. The Privacy Act gives the Commissioner powers to investigate individual complaints, to launch his own complaints, and to audit compliance with the Act.

The Information Commissioner

The Commissioner deals with complaints from people who believe they have been denied rights under the Access to Information Act. The Commissioner is an independent ombudsman with investigative powers, who mediates between complainants and government institutions. The head of a government institution may, in certain circumstances, refuse to disclose a record that contains plans related to the management of personnel or the administration of the institution. This does not apply to decisions made in exercising a discretionary power or an adjudicative function that affects the rights of a person.

The Canadian Human Rights Commission

The Commission was established as an agency reporting to Parliament to administer the Canadian Human Rights Act and deal with related complaints. An example of the latter is the 1999 pay equity decision, which found that the job classification and evaluation system in the federal public service was discriminatory on the basis of gender, and thus in contravention of the Act. The Commission is also mandated to ensure that the requirements of the Employment Equity Act are met by all federal departments and agencies as well as Crown corporations and federally regulated private sector companies. To that end, the Commission conducts audits of these entities.

The Canadian Centre for Management Development

The Centre was created in 1988 under an order-in-council, and became a departmental corporation under legislation passed in 1991.

Under its Act, the Centre's objectives include:

- encouraging pride and excellence in the management of the public service and fostering among managers a sense of the purposes, values and traditions of the public service; and
- helping to ensure the growth and development of managers and ensuring that they have the skills and knowledge required to manage staff effectively, including leadership, motivational and communications skills.

The minister responsible for the Centre is the Prime Minister. The Centre is managed by a President, having the rank and status of a deputy minister, under the direction of a board of governors. The board comprises up to 15 governors, including the Clerk of the Privy Council as the ex officio chair, and equal numbers of persons who are employed in the public service and persons who are not. The former include, as ex officio members, the President of the Centre, the Secretary of the Treasury Board, and the President of the Public Service Commission.

In developing the programs and studies of the Centre, the President is required to take government policies into consideration, along with public service management training needs and priorities as determined by the Treasury Board.

The Leadership Network

The Leadership Network was created by order-in-council in June 1998 to maintain the momentum of the public service renewal initiative, La Relève. It is included in the portfolio of the Prime Minister. The Head of The Leadership Network receives functional direction from the Committee of Senior Officials (COSO). It has three specific areas of responsibility:

- to facilitate the collective management of the community of assistant deputy ministers (ADMs) as a corporate resource (this includes providing career counselling and advisory services related to entry into the ADM ranks, assignments, personal and career development strategies, and learning and promotion opportunities);

- to facilitate internal communication and dialogue on renewal by promoting, developing and supporting networks of leaders at all levels in the public service (for example, networks of middle managers and of federal regional officials); and
- to help consolidate La Relève successes, share lessons learned and foster change initiatives of departments and agencies, functional communities and regions.

Federal Regional Councils

In the early 1980s, Regional Councils were formed primarily to facilitate coordination of federal economic programs at the regional level. These have evolved considerably, particularly in the last several years, and play a role at the regional level in communication and information sharing, in administrative and human resource management matters, and in liaison with provincial counterparts. Today, there is a Council of senior federal officials in each province. Their roles and the extent of their development vary, and continue to evolve. They now serve as sounding boards for proposed central agency policies. Most have established human resource management subcommittees to deal with work force adjustment and other issues. For example, some regions have created interdepartmental assignment programs, career centres, mentoring and middle managers' programs.

The Human Resources Council

The Council is mandated by the heads of human resources in departments and agencies to contribute to determining strategic direction for the management of human resources in the public service. It provides leadership on the renewal and development of the human resources community and on the development of innovative solutions to human resource management issues. The deputy minister "champion" who acts as spokesperson on human resources at senior management forums looks to the Council for advice, as do others such as the Chief Human Resources Officer of the Treasury Board Secretariat. The Council (formed in 1992 as the Personnel Renewal Council) comprises about 20 officials, including 12 heads of personnel and non-voting, ex officio representatives of the central agencies and other bodies. The members who are heads of personnel represent the interests of all departments and the human resource management community. Ex officio members represent the Treasury Board Secretariat, the Public Service Commission, the Privy Council Office, the Canadian Centre for Management Development, The Leadership Network, the Human Resources Learning Advisory Panel and the Human Resources Community Secretariat (the latter two are described below). The Council relies for funding primarily on contributions by departments and agencies. Its members lead or participate in numerous other committees or working groups.

The Human Resources Community Secretariat

At 31 March 1998, the human resources community in the public service consisted of approximately 7,000 full-time staff (down from about 11,000 in 1990). Some 2,500 were human resource management specialists, supported by about 2,400 clerks and 1,300 administrative officers working in areas such as pay and benefits administration and staffing. A Human Resources Community Secretariat (HRCS) was formed in 1998 to play an advocacy role for the human resources community and to pursue implementation of the community's La Relève action plan. HRCS is a joint initiative of the Human Resources Council, the Treasury Board Secretariat and the Public Service Commission. It operates under the leadership of the Treasury Board Secretariat's Chief Human Resources Officer.

Learning Advisory Panels

Learning Advisory Panels were created as a result of a recommendation by the Treasury Board Secretariat Advisory Committee. The purpose of such panels is to focus on the learning needs of specific public service communities, such as the policy or the communications communities. A Learning Advisory Panel for the Human Resource Community was formed in 1997 to help guide the development of this group's corporate learning agenda. It comprises about a dozen senior officials with human resource management responsibilities in departments and central agencies. It is supported by a working group of more junior officials.

Advisory Committee on Senior Level Retention and Compensation

This Committee (the Strong Committee, named after its chair) comprises seven private sector senior executives. It was established in 1997 for a term of three years, to provide independent advice to the President of the Treasury Board on retention and compensation issues for executives, deputy ministers and other Governor-in-Council appointees in the federal public sector. The Committee is charged with providing reports (to be made public by the Minister) setting out a long-term strategy to meet senior-level human resource management needs, compensation strategies and principles, and recommendations on overall management. This includes such matters as human resource policies and programs, terms and conditions of employment, classification and compensation issues, including rates of pay and rewards and recognition.

Appendix D

Full-Time GIC Positions Being Reviewed

Agriculture and Agri-food

Administrative Monetary Penalties Review Tribunal
Chairperson

Canadian Grain Commission
Chief Commissioner
Commissioner
Assistant Chief Commissioner
Assistant Commissioner

National Farm Products Council
Chairman and Member
Vice-Chairman and Member

Canadian Heritage

Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission
Chairman and Member
Vice-Chairman and Member
Member (Regional)

National Archives of Canada
National Archivist

National Battlefields Commission
Secretary

National Film Board
Chairman and Government Film Commissioner

National Library
National Librarian

Office of the Coordinator (Status of Women Canada) Coordinator

Public Service Commission
Commissioner

Citizenship and Immigration

Citizenship Commission
Senior Judge
Judge

Immigration and Refugee Board
Chairperson
Executive Director
Deputy Chairperson and Member (Convention Refugee Determination Division)
Deputy Chairperson and Member (Appeal Division)
Assistant Deputy Chairperson (Convention Refugee Determination Division)
Assistant Deputy Chairperson and Member (Appeal Division)
Member (Convention Refugee Determination Division)
Coordinating Member
Member (Appeal Division)

Environment

Canadian Environmental Assessment Agency
President / Chief Executive Officer
Executive Vice-President

Finance

Canadian International Trade Tribunal
Chairperson
Vice-Chairperson
Permanent / Temporary Member

Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions
Superintendent

Fisheries and Oceans

Department of Fisheries and Oceans
Commissioner for Aquaculture Development

Foreign Affairs and International Trade

International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development
President

International Joint Commission
Chairman and Commissioner

Health

Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse
Chief Executive Officer

Hazardous Materials Information Review Commission
President

Canadian Institutes of Health Research
President

Human Resources Development

Canada Employment Insurance Commission
Commissioner (Workers / Employers)

Canada Pension Plan / Old Age Security: Review Tribunals
Commissioner
Deputy Commissioner

Indian Affairs and Northern Development

British Columbia Treaty Commission
Chief Commissioner

Canadian Polar Commission
Chairperson

Northwest Territories / Yukon / Nunavut
Commissioner

Office of the Treaty Commissioner in Saskatchewan
Commissioner

Industry

Bankruptcy
Superintendent

Canadian Space Agency
President
Executive Vice-President

Competition Tribunal
Lay Member

Copyright Board
Vice-Chairman
Member

National Research Council of Canada
President

Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council
President

Office of the Commissioner of Competition
Commissioner

Patents and Trade Marks
Commissioner of Patents and Registrar of Trade Marks

Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council
President

International Trade

Canadian Secretariat – North American Free Trade Agreement
Secretary

Justice

Canadian Human Rights Commission
Chief Commissioner

Canadian Human Rights Tribunal
Chairperson
Vice-Chairperson
Member

Law Commission of Canada
President

Office of the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs
Commissioner

Supreme Court of Canada
Registrar
Deputy Registrar

Labour

Canada Industrial Relations Board
Chairperson
Vice-Chairperson
Member (Employees / Employers)

Canadian Artists and Producers Professional Relations Tribunal
Chairperson
Vice-Chairperson

Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety
President

Leader of the Government in the House of Commons

Office of the Chief Electoral Officer
Assistant Chief Electoral Officer

National Defence

Canadian Forces
Chief of Defence Staff

Canadian Forces Grievance Board
Chairperson
Vice-Chairperson

Judge Advocate General of the Canadian Forces
Judge Advocate General

Military Police Complaints Commission
Chairperson
Member

Office of the Ombudsperson for the Department of National Defence and the Canadian Forces
Ombudsperson

Natural Resources

Canadian Nuclear Safety Commission
President and Member

National Energy Board
Chairman and Member
Vice-Chairman and Member
Member

Parliament

House of Commons
Clerk of the House
Sergeant-at-Arms
Deputy Clerk
Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel
Clerk Assistant

Library of Parliament
Parliamentary Librarian
Associate Parliamentary Librarian

Senate
Clerk of the Senate and Clerk of the Parliaments
Usher of the Senate

President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada

Canadian Transportation Accident Investigation and Safety Board
Chairperson and Member
Member

Public Service Staff Relations Board
Chairperson

Vice-Chairperson
Deputy Chairperson
Member (Full-Time)

Prime Minister

Canadian Intergovernmental Conference Secretariat
Secretary

Governor General's Office
Secretary

National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy
Executive Director

Solicitor General of Canada

Department of the Solicitor General Inspector General

National Parole Board
Chairperson and Member
Executive Vice-Chairperson and Member
Vice-Chairperson and Member (Appeal Division)
Vice-Chairperson and Member (Regional Division)
Member (Regional Division)
Member (Appeal Division)

Office of the Correctional Investigator of Canada
Correctional Investigator

Royal Canadian Mounted Police
Commissioner

Royal Canadian Mounted Police External Review Committee
Chairman

Royal Canadian Mounted Police Public Complaints Commission
Chairman

Transport

Canadian Transportation Agency
Chairperson and Member
Vice-Chairperson and Member
Member

Civil Aviation Tribunal
Chairman
Vice-Chairman

Veterans Affairs

Veterans Review and Appeal Board
Chairperson/Member
Deputy Chairperson/Member
Permanent/Temporary Member

Appendix E

Executive Summary of KPMG Review of Job Evaluation

Plans for Executive Positions in the Federal Public Service

Treasury Board Secretariat (TBS) engaged KPMG to undertake a review of the performance of the current Hay-based EX Group Position Evaluation Plan (EGPEP), including suggestions for improvement. We were also to consider the Universal Classification Standard (UCS) and two other "major job evaluation plans" and make recommendations as to the optimal job evaluation (JE) plan for the federal Public Service.

In order to have a common basis for comparability, KPMG developed through consultation with senior public servants and academics, a list of characteristics and criteria of an ideal JE plan for the federal Public Service. The criteria were:

1. Gender neutral
2. Proven
3. Ease of comparability to executive positions in other public and private sector jurisdictions
4. Comprehensive
5. Credible
6. Reliable
7. Flexible
8. A balance between flexibility and reliability
9. Work and results oriented
10. Ease of use
11. Currency

We assessed the EGPEP against these criteria and conclude that the EGPEP meets all but two of the criteria of an ideal job evaluation plan for executive positions in the federal Public Service. The exceptions being that the current plan is likely to be found not gender neutral and the plan lacks the required flexibility because of out-dated benchmarks.

We assessed the Universal Classification Standard against these criteria and concluded that the UCS should not be considered at the present time as a job evaluation plan for executive positions in the federal Public Service.

We conducted a survey of provincial public sectors, Crown Corporations and a select number of private sector organizations in Canada and, through our international KPMG connections, the public services of the United Kingdom, Australia and the United States to identify the JE plans used to evaluate executive positions.

The results of our survey of 24 organizations show:

- 11 use the Hay plan
- 6 use customized plans
- 4 use other plans (Willis, Towers Perrin, KPMG COMP-ETE and Ernst & Young's Decision Band Method)
- 3 have no executive JE plans

We approached Towers Perrin to obtain information about their plan but they declined to participate in this review. In consultation with TBS we agreed to concentrate our efforts on obtaining information on the nature and extent of modifications to the Hay Plan made by the surveyed organizations.

We conclude that there is little to learn from the experiences of these organizations that would help in improving the EGPEP except with respect to the Working Conditions factor, should TBS choose to add this factor to the EGPEP.

Our review concludes with five recommendations:

Recommendation 1: We recommend that EGPEP be maintained as the job evaluation system for federal Public Service executive positions.

Recommendation 2: We recommend that Treasury Board Secretariat assess whether it is in the best interest of the Public Service to implement a Working Conditions factor into the EGPEP.

Recommendation 3: We recommend that Treasury Board Secretariat develop a plan to update within the next two years the benchmark positions in the EGPEP to better reflect the current work realities of Public Service executive jobs and that benchmark positions be regularly reviewed and up-dated on a three to five year cycle.

Recommendation 4: We recommend that Treasury Board Secretariat review the Criticality of Human Relations element to determine whether to leave it as is, make it more discriminating amongst executive positions or remove it as an element in the EGPEP.

Recommendation 5: We recommend that the Treasury Board Secretariat consider the collapse of the Executive Group to three classification levels.

Appendix F

Summary of Watson Wyatt Survey on Flexible Benefits

In February 2000, the Treasury Board Secretariat distributed an excellent information package to Executives and Deputy Ministers describing their benefits and requesting their response to a survey of their interest in flexible benefits. Watson Wyatt Canada collected and analyzed the responses. The survey results have provided a wealth of information.

Nine hundred and forty-six (946) Executives of all ages, gender, marital status, length of service and location responded to the survey to constitute a highly credible base for the purposes of statistical inferences. Responses were provided by 29% of the surveyed group, a participation rate that is average for a survey of this type. This response rate provides a confidence level of 95%, or 19 times out of 20, that the survey results would yield the same responses, within + or – 2.7%. Demographic data provided by the respondents indicate that they are highly representative of the current workforce.

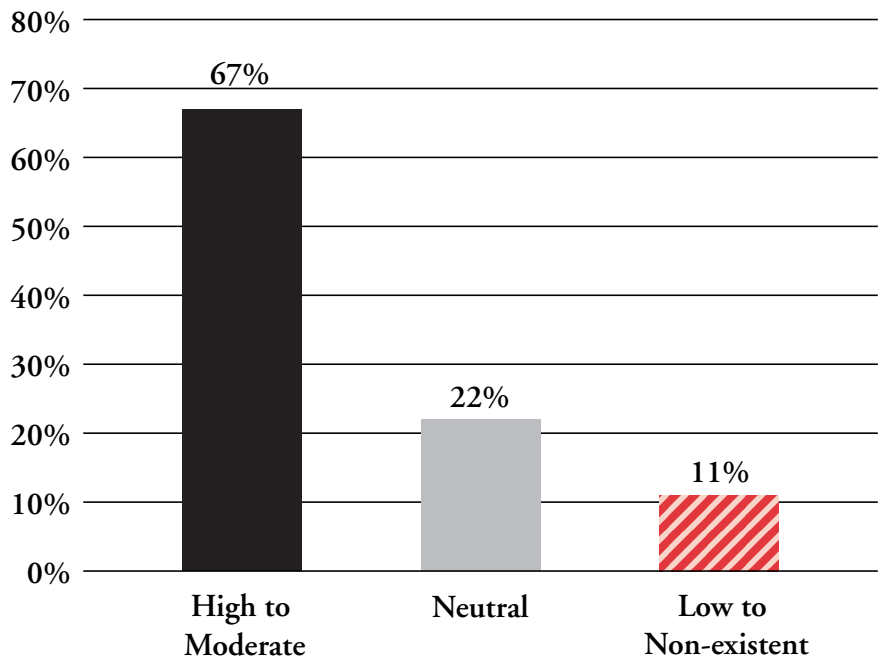
In their responses, 67% of Executives clearly indicated that the ability to tailor, customize, adapt, and change benefit levels as life and work circumstances evolve would meet their needs. It was clear that flexible benefits are viewed as an opportunity to redirect employer benefit dollars from benefits not needed to areas of greater need. Recorded comments showed that there was enthusiastic support for flexible benefits provided that:

- it made their package a distinctive feature of their compensation;
- It reduced perceived and ill-accepted internal inequities (e.g., vacation, severance, overtime, salary inversion);
- their base salary and performance-based incentives were competitive with private and other large public organizations.

Major Findings

While overall, 67% of respondents indicated high to moderate interest, interest was highest for those without dependents (89%) and those younger than age 45 (81%). Many were undecided (22%). Recorded comments showed that the undecided group prefers to evaluate the options, the extent of flexibility offered and the cost/value implications before deciding. Some respondents (11%) were not, or were barely, interested in flexible benefits. Current benefits, they argued, are adequate; others believed the annual selection of complicated benefit choices would be too time-consuming.

Level of Interest in Flexible Benefits



Desirable Plan Design and Plan Elements

Survey responses also provided some preliminary indications of a preferred plan design. A 'core plus options' approach wherein there are mandatory benefits plus an array of options was preferred by 71% of respondents, while 37% preferred an "à la carte" plan, or full cafeteria plan. Younger and single Executives expressed the highest level of interest in having the most flexibility.

The results made it clear that simply flexing traditional insurance-type benefits would not meet the needs of respondents. In fact, overall, there was only a small number who would reduce or opt-out of the traditional group insurance plans. Respondents preferred a broad, more inclusive definition of flexibility, one that extends beyond the spectrum of traditional group insurance plans to include total compensation issues, working conditions, perquisites, and work/life balance.

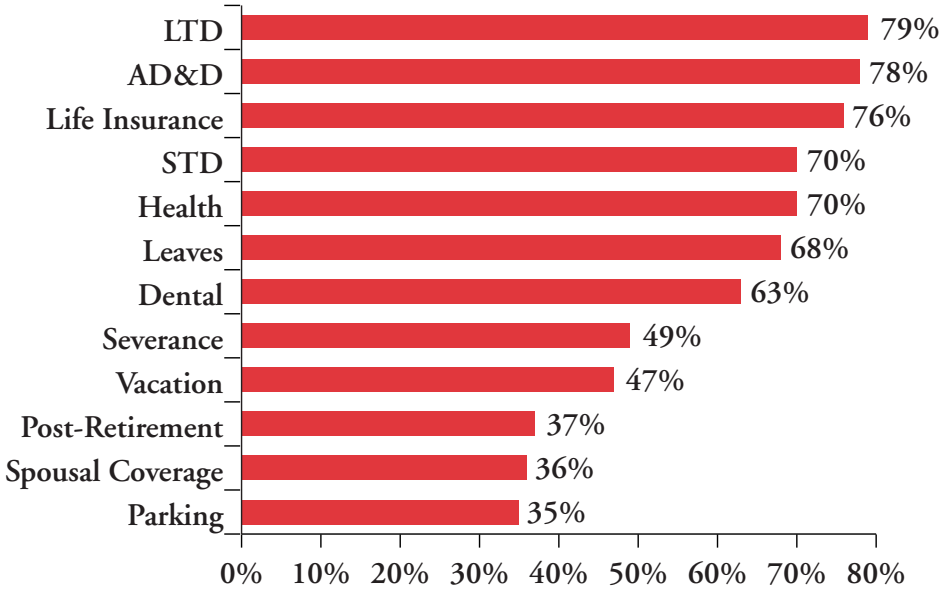
As one respondent said, "flexible benefits, especially if they include the new ones suggested (sabbaticals, HCSA, Health club memberships, etc.), might actually give me the perception I do have some benefits aside from retirement or dying." Based on the results of the survey and supported by the numerous open-ended comments, it appears that for many respondents, flexibility means:

1. the ability/opportunity to access and redirect funds that currently are not available to them, specifically the value of unused sick leave credits, funds earmarked for parking, and uncompensated overtime work; and
2. the ability/opportunity to tailor other benefits and working conditions to help manage the pressures of work and strike a proper balance between work/family/personal priorities.

Adequacy of Current Benefits

Respondents' view of the adequacy of current benefits varies significantly, and ranges from a low of 35% (parking subsidy) to a high of 79% (long-term disability). Generally, respondents indicated that the current traditional group insurance plans offer adequate protection, with the exception of spousal/dependent life insurance. Other benefits, however, such as vacation, severance, parking, and post-retirement benefits are clearly perceived as inadequate. Open-ended comments suggest that those benefits need to be improved.

Perceived Adequacy of Current Benefits



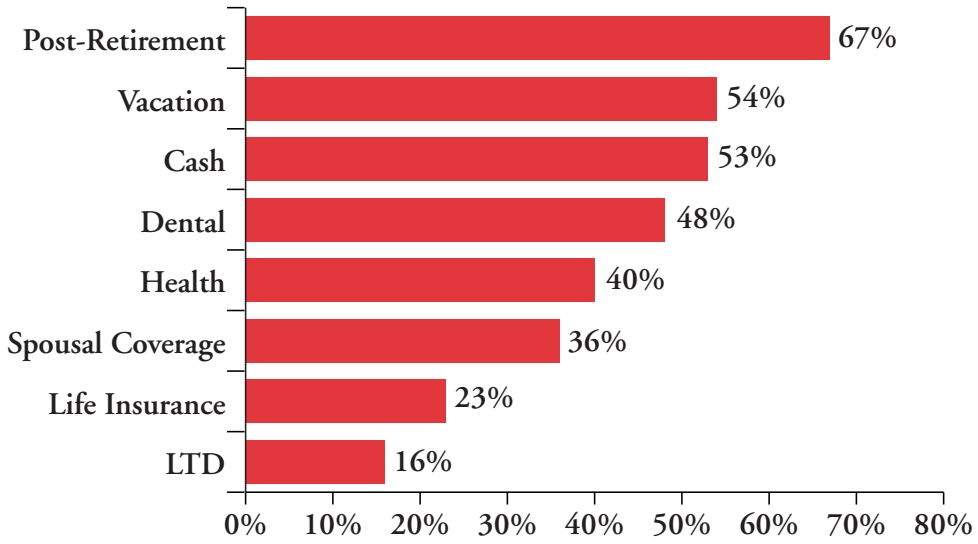
Respondents' Perception of Competitiveness of Current Benefits

Less than a quarter of respondents believed that their benefits were competitive with those offered by other major Canadian employers, particularly in the private sector. For example, there are no-stock accumulation opportunities, less generous pension accrual features, no flexible benefits, lower salaries and bonus arrangements, no air miles, no business class, no expense accounts. However, respondents appear to be as much, if not more, concerned by internal relativities, as their benefits are seen as poorer than those offered to unionized employees, for example, a less generous vacation schedule, lower severance accrual opportunity, no overtime pay, and salary inversion.

Benefits Perceived as Needing Improvement

Responses indicated that some of the current benefits need to be improved, especially post-retirement benefits (67%), vacation entitlements (54%), dental (48%) and health (40%). A significant number of respondents (53%) indicated they would consider receiving additional cash in lieu of benefit dollars allocated to unwanted benefits. The number dramatically increases to 66% for those younger than 45.

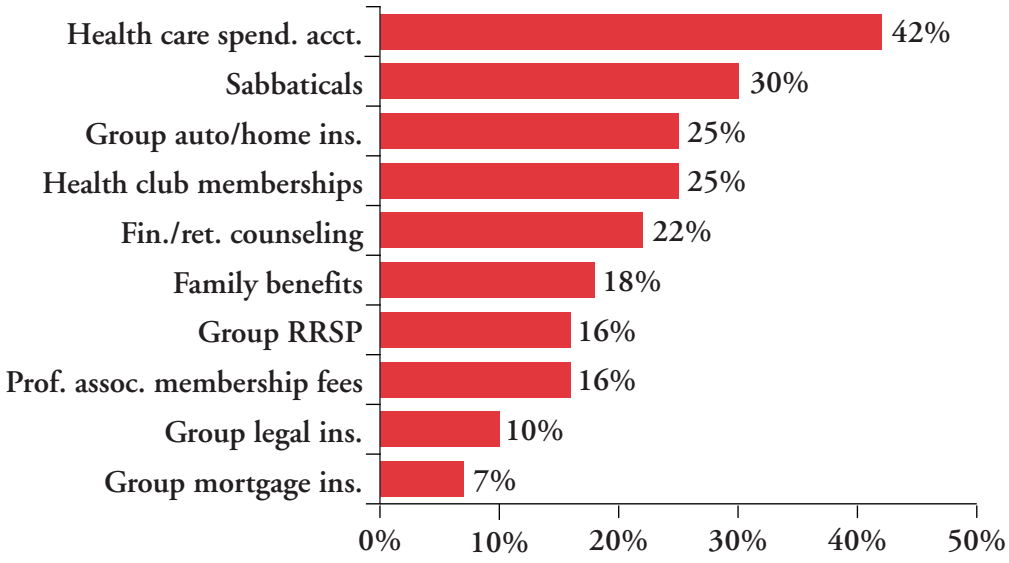
Benefits Perceived as Needing Improvement



Additional Options Desired

The survey asked respondents to choose which benefits, from an array of choices common to many flexible benefits plans, would be of most interest to them. 42% indicated a health care spending account would be an attractive feature. This option was equally attractive to all age groups and to both genders. Notable interest occurred for sabbaticals (30%), health club memberships (29%), group auto/homeowner insurance (25%), and financial/retirement counseling (22%). Younger respondents valued sabbaticals (40%), health club memberships (37%) and family benefits (30%).

Interest in Additional Benefits Options



Other Issues Raised

In response to the opportunity to provide a recorded comment, respondents provided additional information of interest. On pension plan benefits, some respondents indicated they were disappointed that pension benefits were not included in the discussion on flexible benefits. Pension enhancements and pension portability were identified as key issues, for example:

- increase pension accrual percentage from 2% to 2.5%/3% per year of service as an executive;
- increase the survivor pension, from 50% to 60%/75%;
- reduce the formula for full pension entitlement;
- count sick leave as credited service;
- permit opting-out of registered pension plan.

Travel benefits were clearly perceived as inadequate and not in line with private sector offerings; for example, there are no air miles, no business class, no luggage allowance, no airport lounge privileges, no travel with spouses, and restricted hotel accommodations. Respondents, especially those who traveled a lot, believed that they should be compensated for the significant investment in time spent away from home.

Appendix G

Performance Management Program for the Executive Group (PMP)

Preliminary Results for the Learning Year (1999-2000)

Background

The new Performance Management Program for the Executive Group (PMP) was launched April 1,1999. The "learning year" for the program has been completed. The Treasury Board Secretariat (TBS) is responsible for ensuring the consistent and equitable application of the PMP for the Executive Group across departments and agencies. To begin to achieve this objective, it is important that TBS assess the performance agreements developed to date.

Consulting and Audit Canada (CAC) reviewed the level of compliance to the 1999-2000 PMP guidelines related to the development of performance agreements based on a 10% sampling of performance agreements developed by Executives (EX) in departments. CAC made recommendations regarding lessons learned, good practices and tools that could help build a foundation for consistency across organisations in the application of the PMP policy. CAC reviewed 140 out of 285 performance agreements. This number represents a distribution of the EX population by department/agency size, EX level, geographic location and functional area of work.

The PMP guidelines indicate that ongoing commitments and key commitments should be identified within a performance agreement, with specific, results-oriented performance measures clearly linked to the commitments. Progression through the salary range is dependent on satisfactory achievement of ongoing commitments. Ongoing Commitments are recurring, and form part of core operational activities (e.g. financial management, HR management, and program delivery.)

The variable 'at-risk' portion of performance pay is dependent on the achievement of key commitments, which focus on corporate priorities for the annual performance cycle, and are challenging, i.e. they involve "stretch" beyond ongoing commitments.

Good Practices

The following good practices were noted in the sample of performance agreements:

- The average length of performance agreements, number of ongoing and key commitments and respective performance measures follow PMP guidelines;
- Over half of key commitments reviewed are results-oriented, as per the PMP guidelines;
- Almost half of the performance agreements mention Public Service leadership competencies, especially in the ongoing commitment area; and
- Core accountabilities identified in the PMP guidelines are well represented in the ongoing commitments.

Lessons Learned

Some lessons learned from the "learning year" review include:

- Drafting the performance agreement in a non-standard format such as listing goals or objectives or job description elements instead of commitments makes the information presented inconsistent with the policy guidelines, and difficult for managers and review committees to evaluate consistently at the end of the performance cycle;
- Providing more context around the commitments would allow for more informed assessment at the end of the performance cycle;
- Vague and unclear wording impacts on how well performance measures can be quantified, measured or linked to the commitments. Performance measures often do not clearly permit an assessment of level of attainment of the commitments; and

- Several of the agreements either made no mention of the timeframe during which the commitments and related measures would be completed, or went beyond the performance cycle.

Recommendations

1. To address the issue of departmental consistency and equity in the application of the PMP, it is suggested that a standard departmental template be developed. A standard template would reduce some of the inconsistencies noted.

2. To make performance agreements clearer and easier to understand, it is suggested that managers provide a context for their commitments and performance measures.

3. The PMP guidelines should emphasise that commitments be worded in a more results oriented manner, e.g. verbs are written in the past tense, "course outline developed" (more results-oriented) vs. "develop a course outline" (more process-oriented).

4. PMP guidelines should include a clear statement of what constitutes a performance measure i.e. "a performance measure will clearly indicate that a commitment has been achieved, within a certain timeframe and a defined level of quantity and quality". The performance measures should identify "what" is going to be measured, "when" and "how" with expected quantity and quality.

5. The PMP guidelines should indicate a clear requirement to explicitly include the timeframe for the commitments and the performance measures. Also, there is a need to draft commitments that are measurable within the performance cycle. When commitments extend beyond the review cycle, milestones that respect the performance cycle timeframe should be set.

6. More detail may be required on which Public Service leadership competencies to include. Developing a framework and including suggestions and examples of how Public Service leadership competencies can be integrated into the agreements would ensure that they are taken into account when developing a performance agreement.

7. To determine the degree of stretch of key commitments within departments it was recommended that an internal review of the cascade of commitments within a functional level be conducted with feedback obtained on the degree of stretch from departmental review committees.

8. These recommendations could be implemented partly through enhanced PMP guidelines in 2000-2001 and through coaching sessions for Executives.

Catalogue no. 85-002-X
ISSN 1209-6393

Juristat

Profile of family law cases in Canada, 2019/2020

by Lyndsay Ciavaglia Burns

Release date: June 28, 2021

Statistics Canada Statistique Canada

Canada

How to obtain more information

For information about this product or the wide range of services and data available from Statistics Canada, visit our website, www.statcan.gc.ca.

You can also contact us by

Email at STATCAN.infostats-infostats.STATCAN@canada.ca

Telephone, from Monday to Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., at the following numbers:

- Statistical Information Service 1-800-263-1136
- National telecommunications device for the hearing impaired 1-800-363-7629
- Fax line 1-514-283-9350

Depository Services Program

- Inquiries line 1-800-635-7943
- Fax line 1-800-565-7757

Standards of service to the public

Statistics Canada is committed to serving its clients in a prompt, reliable and courteous manner. To this end, Statistics Canada has developed standards of service that its employees observe. To obtain a copy of these service standards, please contact Statistics Canada toll-free at 1-800-263-1136. The service standards are also published on www.statcan.gc.ca under "Contact us" > "Standards of service to the public."

Note of appreciation

Canada owes the success of its statistical system to a long-standing partnership between Statistics Canada, the citizens of Canada, its businesses, governments and other institutions. Accurate and timely statistical information could not be produced without their continued co-operation and goodwill.

Profile of family law cases in Canada, 2019/2020: Highlights

- There were just over 275,000 family law cases active in the 10 provinces and territories reporting to the Civil Court Survey in fiscal year 2019/2020, down 6% from the previous year.
- Divorce applications (39%), cases with custody/access issues (16%), cases with support issues (7%), cases seeking protection (17%), other family cases such as adoptions and estate matters (17%), as well as cases where the family law issues were not identified (4%) made up the total active family caseload in 2019/2020.
- Family cases were more active in the courts in 2019/2020 compared to non-family cases. Family cases reported an average of 11 court events per case, while non-family cases reported 6.
- In 2019/2020, custody/access cases represented 31% of the total family events recorded by the courts and were more active than cases seeking a divorce and resolution of custody, access and/or support issues.
- Cases involving claims for support in 2019/2020 reported more child support issues (63%) than spousal support issues (19%) and 7% reported both issues of child and spousal support.
- The median number of days for family cases involving a civil protection application to reach a first disposition was one week, while newly initiated child protection cases reached a first disposition in nine days.
- Most family cases active in 2019/2020 proceeded through the court system uncontested, though, divorce cases that also involved other issues reported almost even proportions between contested (51%) and uncontested cases (49%).
- There were more female (67%) than male (33%) applicants in the active family cases in 2019/2020 across the provinces and territories reporting to the survey and most respondents were male (66%).
- More family law litigants represented themselves (58%) rather than retained representation (42%) in 2019/2020, continuing the upward trend of self-represented litigants in family law cases since 2014/2015.

Profile of family law cases in Canada, 2019/2020

by Lyndsay Ciavaglia Burns, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics

When a family dynamic breaks down, several decisions need to be made concerning the children of the relationship, finances, housing and property, among other things. Some matters may be resolved privately between the parties, including by way of a separation agreement. However, in some cases, the parties may make use of a family dispute resolution process such as mediation or begin the court process.

Using data from the Civil Court Survey, this Juristat article will examine family law cases active in the Canadian civil courts in the 2019/2020 fiscal year. It will profile various case types where spouses or couples have experienced a family breakdown, which required the assistance of a court to dissolve (i.e. a marriage) or resolve (such as custody, access and/or support issues). Criminal court cases are out of scope for this survey.

Additional analysis is provided on the contentious nature of the case, the sex of the applicant and respondent, whether the parties were represented by legal counsel or self-represented, types of court activity that took place throughout the fiscal year and the average number of days it took a case to reach a first disposition.

It is expected that the COVID-19 pandemic will have had a significant impact on the Canadian civil justice system. The data provided in this article will establish a baseline to enable analysis of the impact of the pandemic on family law cases in the civil courts. This information will be provided in subsequent reports as those data become available.

Further, on March 1, 2021, the Divorce Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 3 (2nd Supp.) was amended to "promote the best interests of the child, address family violence, help reduce child poverty and make the justice system more accessible and efficient". Specifically, terminology around custody and access was removed in favour of parenting arrangements, language some provinces adopted prior to the introduction of the amendments. The data included in this report were collected prior to the implementation of the March 1, 2021 amendments and as a result do not reflect the parenting terminology introduced therein.

This Juristat was produced with the support of the Department of Justice Canada.

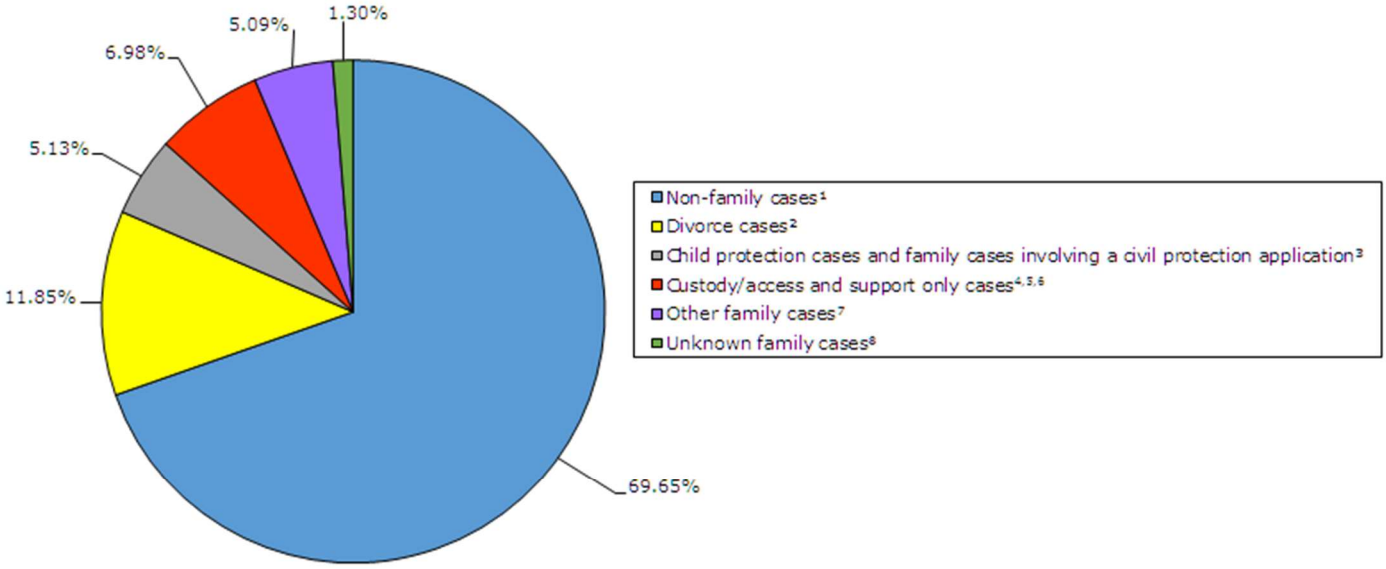
Family cases account for nearly one-third of all civil court cases in Canada

There were just over 907,000 civil court cases active in the courts in 2019/2020, and family law cases accounted for nearly one-third (30%).

Family law cases involve divorces, parenting arrangements, support payments, child protection cases, family cases involving a civil protection application and various other family matters. The larger portion of active cases were non-family cases, including civil disputes, lawsuits for damages, employment actions, probate proceedings, and other claims involving money (Chart 1, Table 1).

There were two active non-family cases for every one family law case each year since 2014/2015.[1] However, while the number of newly initiated non-family cases showed an upward trend, the number of new family cases steadily declined each year. The largest year-over-year decline in new family cases was recorded in 2019/2020 (-7%) (Chart 2).

Chart 1
Distribution of active civil court cases by type, selected provinces and territories, 2019/2020



1. A non-family civil case is any civil action that is not a family-related action, such as contracts, torts, bankruptcy, probate matters and other claims involving money.
2. Divorce cases include applications to the court by one spouse or both spouses to dissolve their marriage.
3. Child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application include applications to family court for protection for a child or protection from an individual.
4. Custody/access cases include cases in which custody and/or access have been recorded as matters requiring resolution. Custody refers to the living arrangements of a child or children and which parent will have decision-making authority. Access allows the parent with whom the child does not primarily reside to apply for parenting time. These case types do not include applications for divorce but may involve other issues such as requests for support.
5. Support only cases include cases in which child or spousal support issues were identified. These case types may include support matters not specifically identified but it is important to note that applications for divorce are not included here.
6. Given that the data are derived from records originally kept for non-statistical purposes, complete survey information is not always available. For example, information related to issues, such as custody, access and support, may not always be available from the court information systems and, as such, may be under reported.
7. Other family cases include issues of parentage, non-parental guardianship matters, enforcement of court orders, estate matters, adoptions, other family-related disputes and cases where issues have not yet been recorded. A portion of the active cases classified as "Other family" may change over time as more issues are identified in the case.
8. Unknown family cases include unidentifiable family-related matters.

Note: Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the year and thus include initiated cases. Additionally, Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba are excluded as they do not report to the Civil Court Survey.

Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Chart 2
Newly initiated civil court cases, selected provinces and territories, 2014/2015 to 2019/2020 number of newly initiated civil court cases

1. 2014/2015 is the first year the Civil Court Survey collected and reported data from ten provinces and territories.
2. A non-family civil case is any civil action that is not a family-related action, such as contracts, torts, bankruptcy, probate matters and other claims involving money.

Note: Initiated cases include all cases that were newly started in the fiscal year. Additionally, Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba are excluded as they do not report to the Civil Court Survey.

Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Text box 1
Classification of family law case types and methodology

This report examines family law cases active in 2019/2020. Multiple family-related issues may be identified throughout the life of a case and are, therefore, included in this analysis regardless of the year in which they were identified.

Family cases in this report have been grouped into several categories:

Divorce cases: Cases where one spouse or both spouses apply to the court to dissolve their marriage. Divorce cases will be differentiated throughout this report as either a divorce case without issues or a divorce case with issues.

- Divorce cases without issues: Cases involving an application to the court to dissolve a marriage where no issues of custody, access or support have been identified, though the couple may have dealt with these issues earlier in a separation agreement. These case types may include issues related to the division of matrimonial property. It is possible that divorce cases initiated late in the fiscal year may be reported as a divorce without issues if an answer is not filed until the next fiscal year.
- Divorce cases with issues: Cases involving an application to the court to dissolve a marriage and resolve custody, access and/or support issues. These case types may include issues related to the division of matrimonial property.

Custody/access cases: Cases in which custody and/or access have been recorded as matters requiring resolution. Custody refers to the living arrangements of a child or children and which parent will have decision-making authority. Access allows the parent with whom the child does not primarily reside to apply for parenting time. These case types do not include applications for divorce but may involve other issues such as requests for support.

Support only cases: Include cases in which child or spousal support issues were identified. These case types may include support matters not specifically identified but it is important to note that applications for divorce are not included here.

Other family cases: Include issues of parentage, non-parental guardianship matters, enforcement of court orders, estate matters, adoptions, other family-related disputes and cases where issues have not yet been recorded. A portion of the active cases classified as “Other family” may change over time as more issues are identified in the case.

Unknown family cases: Unknown family cases include unidentifiable family-related matters.

The family case categories above do not include cases that identified child protection issues or family cases seeking a civil protection order. However, cases seeking protection, as defined below, will be profiled in text boxes.

Child protection cases: Include applications to the court by the government for orders seeking the supervision of parents, guardians or caregivers, or the apprehension of children into government care because of issues of parental abuse, neglect, or incapacity.

Family cases involving a civil protection application: Include applications to the family court by individuals seeking orders to ensure their safety, such as protection orders and restraining orders.

Family law cases declined in 2019/2020

There were 275,296 family law cases active in the 10 provinces and territories[2] reporting to the Civil Court Survey in 2019/2020 (Table 1), 6% fewer than the previous year. When child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are removed, the total active family caseload for 2019/2020 was 228,758 (Table 2), down 7% from the previous year. Unless otherwise specified, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are excluded in further sections of this report due to the nature and specific rules that govern these case types.

Close to half (48%) of the active family law cases in 2019/2020 were newly initiated during the year while the remaining 52% were ongoing from a previous year.

A case is considered to be “active” in any year that court activity is recorded. There are three main types of activity in civil court cases: initiation activity[3] which opens a new case in the civil courts, process events[4, 5] such as document filings,[6] pre-trial events[7, 8] and hearings, adjournments[9, 10] and trial hearings, which move the case forward through the civil process and disposition events,[11, 12] including judgments[13] and settlement agreements, which dispose of part, or all of a case.

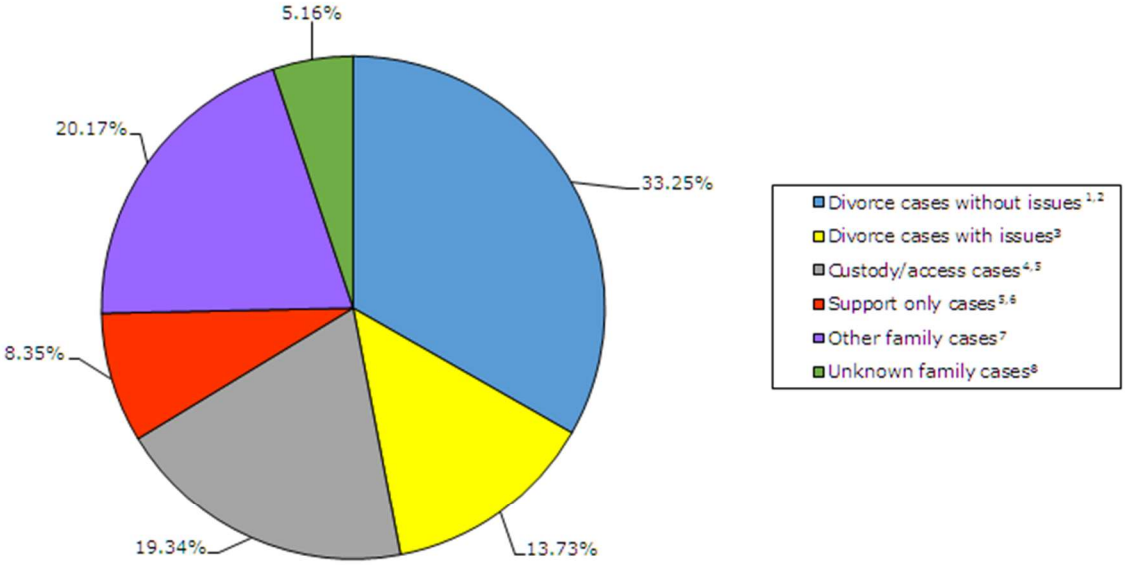
Filing a court document, attending a conference in person or remotely, settling a dispute or receiving a judgment from the court are all events that trigger the active status of a case in a fiscal year. It is important to note that family cases may return to court periodically to amend the terms of a court order.

The family cases examined here recorded court activity in 2019/2020. The cases were either newly initiated or ongoing from a previous year.

Divorce cases represent almost half of the active family caseload in 2019/2020

Overall, divorce cases made up 47% of the active cases in 2019/2020 (Table 3.1). Custody/access cases, support only cases, and other and unknown family cases, accounted for the other 53% (Chart 3).

Chart 3
Distribution of active family court cases by type, selected provinces and territories, 2019/2020



1. Divorce cases without issues involve applications to the court to dissolve a marriage where no issues of custody, access or support have been identified, though the couple may have dealt with these issues earlier in a separation agreement. These case types may include issues related to the division of matrimonial property.
2. Divorce cases initiated late in the fiscal year may be reported as a divorce without issues if an answer is not filed until the next fiscal year.
3. Divorce cases with issues involve applications made to the court to dissolve a marriage and resolve custody, access and/or support issues. These case types may include issues related to the division of matrimonial property.
4. Custody/access cases include cases in which custody and/or access have been recorded as matters requiring resolution. Custody refers to the living arrangements of a child or children and which parent will have decision-making authority. Access allows the parent with whom the child does not primarily reside to apply for parenting time. These case types do not include applications for divorce but may involve other issues such as requests for support.
5. Given that the data are derived from records originally kept for non-statistical purposes, complete survey information is not always available. For example, information related to issues, such as custody, access and support, may not always be available from the court information systems and, as such, may be under reported.
6. Support only cases include cases in which child or spousal support issues were identified. These case types may include support matters not specifically identified but it is important to note that applications for divorce are not included here.
7. Other family cases include issues of parentage, non-parental guardianship matters, enforcement of court orders, estate matters, adoptions, other family-related disputes and cases where issues have not yet been recorded. A portion of the active cases classified as "Other family" may change over time as more issues are identified in the case.
8. Unknown family cases include unidentifiable family-related matters.
Note: For the purposes of this chart, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are excluded from the total active family caseload in 2019/2020. Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the year and thus include initiated cases. Additionally, Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba are exduded as they do not report to the Civil Court Survey.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Divorce cases without issues were the most predominate active case type (33%) during the year (Table 3.2), followed by custody/access (19%) (Table 4) and divorce cases with issues[14, 15, 16] (14%) (Table 3.3). Support only cases represented 8% (Table 5) of the active cases, while other[17] and unknown family cases made up the remaining 25%.

Family cases are more active than non-family cases

Family cases are typically more active in the courts than non-family cases due to the number of issues that require resolution. More court activity is recorded in family cases involving multiple or complex issues which contribute to an increase in the courts caseload, resources and time. Family cases with multiple issues are also more likely to be reactivated when new issues require resolving or a previous order requires amending (Allen 2014).

Family cases active in 2019/2020 reported an average of 11 events per case in 2019/2020, five more events than in non-family cases (6). Process events made up the largest portion of events (9 events) with document filings, whether in person or remotely, representing over three quarters (78%) of those events (Table 2).

Pre-trial events are important steps in a family case that allow the parties to disclose relevant documents, to settle issues that may arise outside of the main application and to provide the parties with an opportunity to resolve some or all of the issues in the case prior to trial. Active family cases reported an average of one pre-trial event each during 2019/2020. It is important to note that the reporting of pre-trial events varies across jurisdictions and therefore, reporting limitations may exist as indicated previously.

Parties in a family case may ask for an appearance date to be re-scheduled or adjourned to a new date with permission from the court. There are also circumstances in which the court will be required to request an adjournment for the case in the event of a scheduling conflict with another case or a court closure. Family cases active in 2019/2020 reported an average of one adjournment per case.

Family cases reached a first disposition faster in 2019/2020 than the year before

When a family dispute is resolved either between the parties or by the court, a verbal or written judgment or order may be rendered by the court and placed on the court file. Depending on the number of issues requiring resolution, it is not uncommon for parties in a family case to receive multiple decisions from the court that either dispose of part, or all, of a case.

Overall, the median length of time for family cases to reach a first disposition was 79 days, two days quicker than in 2018/2019 (81 days). In 2019/2020, family cases reported receiving an average of two judgments per case (Table 2).

Divorce cases

Based on 20 million Canadians surveyed by the General Social Survey in 2017, 56% of adults aged 25 to 64 were married and 6% were separated or divorced at that time (Statistics Canada 2019a; Statistics Canada 2019b).

Finances, infidelity, incompatibility or abuse may be some of the reasons that contribute to a marital breakdown. However, in order to legally end a marriage, the spouses must establish the breakdown of their marriage by providing evidence to the court that they have lived separate and apart for at least one year, one spouse has committed adultery, or one spouse has treated the other spouse with physical or mental cruelty and made it impossible to continue living together, prior to obtaining a divorce order (Divorce Act).

Divorce cases remain the predominate active family case type

As noted above, divorce cases made up almost half (47%) of the total active family cases in 2019/2020 (Chart 3, Table 3.1). Just over two-thirds (71%) of the divorce cases were reported without custody, access or support issues (Table 3.2) while close to one-third (29%) were reported with issues related to custody, access and/or support (Table 3.3).

New divorce cases accounted for 46% of the newly initiated family cases in 2019/2020. Divorce cases without issues represented 40% of the new cases. Similarly, divorce cases ongoing from previous years with activity reported in 2019/2020 composed 48% of the total number of active family cases ongoing from a previous year. More divorce cases without issues continued into 2019/2020 from a previous fiscal year (56%) compared to divorce cases with issues (44%).

Divorce cases with issues reported slightly longer disposition times than divorce cases without issues

If reasonable child support arrangements have been made and other issues resulting from the marital breakdown are resolved privately between the spouses, a divorce may proceed through the court simply on the application and written evidence with no need for the parties to appear before a judge in person or remotely. For these reasons, divorce cases without issues (8 events) (Table 3.2) reported seven fewer events than divorce cases with issues (15 events) (Table 3.3).

There was an average of one pre-trial event and one adjournment event per divorce case with issues, compared to divorce cases without issues which reported an average of less than one pre-trial and adjournment events in the year.

Due to the number of issues that require resolution throughout the case, divorce cases with issues had an average of two more judgments (3) than divorce cases without issues (1) and one more judgment than the average family case (2).

Around half (47%) of divorce cases without issues that reached a first disposition did so within the first three months, a further 40% in over three months to one year and the remaining 13% in over one year. In comparison, divorce cases with issues took a little longer to resolve, with a little over one-third (38%) reaching the first disposition within the first three months, 44% in over three months to one year and 17% in over one year.

Text box 2
Family cases involving a civil protection application

There were almost 9,000 new family court cases involving an application for a civil protection order in 2019/2020 (Table 6).

Family cases involving a civil protection application are distinctly different from child protection applications which involve the government applying to the court for protection of a child. In a family civil protection application, a family member who experiences or is at risk of experiencing family violence, applies for the protection order from the court. In 2% of the active family cases involving a civil protection application examined here, issues relating to the safety of a child were also present.

According to police-reported family violence statistics, 107,810 people experienced intimate partner violence in 2019, 79% of whom were women (Conroy 2021). Criminal offences are out of scope for the Civil Court Survey, yet, it is important to note that there may be situations of family violence that involve a criminal court case as well as a civil case.

In 2019/2020, there were 20,682 family cases active in the civil courts which reported at least one application for a family civil protection order over the lifetime of the case. Just under one-third (30%) of the active cases reported the sex[18] of the applicant. Of those, 73% were female and 27% were male. However, the data excludes Ontario, Alberta and Yukon due to limitations in reporting the sex of the applicant and therefore should be interpreted with caution due to the small number of cases for which this information is available.

Most of the active family cases involving a civil protection application proceeded uncontested (70%) while 30% reported respondent activity at least once during the case.

Due to the safety concerns raised in an application for protection, the process of obtaining a protection order from the court is expedited. In 2019/2020, over three-quarters (79%) of family cases involving a civil protection application reached a first disposition within the first three months, the median amount of days being one week.

Cases involving custody and/or access issues

Determination of custody and access arrangements often both need adjudication. According to the Divorce Act,[19] when determining custody and access issues, a judge shall consider the best interests of the child or children who formed part of the relationship.

Custody issues can be divided into living arrangements, where a child will primarily reside and with which parent, and decision-making, whether one parent will have primary decision-making authority for the child on issues such as health, education and religion or whether this decision-making authority will be shared. A judge may order that custody of a child be granted to one or both parents.

Additionally, access orders can be granted to allow the parent with whom the child does not primarily reside with parenting time. The court order will stipulate who may spend time with the child, how often and for how long. Some access types may include liberal/reasonable, supervised, no access, scheduled/specified or mixed arrangements. Grandparents and non-family members may also apply for access to children.

Cases involving custody/access issues represented 19% of active family cases in 2019/2020 (Table 4). It is important to note that the custody/access case types examined here may include married or common-law couples who are separated but do not include applications for divorce. Requests for support may also be involved in these cases.

Close to one-third (31%) of the active custody/access cases were new in 2019/2020 and 28% were continuing on from 2018/2019, while the remainder (41%) were initiated in 2017/2018 or earlier.

Custody/access cases are the most active type of family case

Custody/access cases tend to involve more court activity and remain in court longer than the other family case types due to the number of issues requiring resolution (Allen 2014). The case length can have a significant impact not only on the courts time and resources but also the families involved.

In 2019/2020, custody/access cases represented just under one-third (31%) of the total family events recorded by the courts.

There was an average of 18 events per case identifying custody and/or access issues, three more events than divorce cases with issues (15) and seven more events than the average in family cases (11) (Table 4).

There was an average of two pre-trial events, one adjournment, and four disposition events per custody/access case.

Of the 39,888 custody/access cases that reported a disposition event such as a judgment, 68% reached the first disposition on one or more of the issues in the case within the first three months, 25% in over three months to one year and 6% took over one year.

Cases involving support issues only

Support is a type of relief that can be requested by a party to a family case following a divorce or separation. Child support obligations must be paid by the parent with whom the child does not primarily reside to ensure that children are supported financially by both parents (Department of Justice Canada 2016). The Child Support Guidelines can help calculate the amount of support that must be paid. However, the amount may be adjusted over time should the financial circumstances of the payor or recipient change.

Spousal support payments can be requested by one spouse for financial support after the breakdown of a marriage or common-law relationship. The Spousal Support Advisory Guidelines can help a judge consider the amount, if any, a spouse is entitled to receive.

It is important to note that the support only case types examined here may include married or common-law couples who are separated but do not include applications for divorce.

There were just over 19,000 support only cases active in the family courts in 2019/2020, representing 8% of the total active family caseload. Similar to custody/access cases, there were more support only cases ongoing (64%) from previous years than newly initiated cases (36%) (Table 5).

Child support issues were reported in 63% of the support only cases active in the year, while 19% of cases reported issues of spousal support. Both child and spousal issues were reported in 7% of the active support only cases. More than one type of support may be requested in a case, and therefore, the proportions will not equal 100%.

Text box 3
Just over one-third of support cases enrolled in a maintenance enforcement program were in full compliance in 2019/2020

Child and spousal support payments stipulated in a court order or registered agreement are enforceable. Provincial and Territorial maintenance enforcement programs (MEP's) exist to help secure child and spousal support payments before requesting assistance from the courts. MEP's are available across Canada, however, the participation requirements vary between jurisdictions. MEP's have administrative powers to enforce child and spousal support payment by garnishing the payors wages, suspending their drivers license, seizing their assets, among other administrative actions.

According to results from the most recent Survey of Maintenance Enforcement Programs, 95,200 child and spousal court-ordered financial support cases were registered with a MEP in 2019/2020, in the five provinces and two territories responding to the survey. Of those, 35% were in full compliance, meaning payments were received in all months of the fiscal year, compared to 16% of cases which were never compliant throughout the year. The remainder were compliant at some times during the year (Statistics Canada 2021).

It is important to note that there is no direct link from the support cases reported by the Civil Court Survey to the cases reported by the Survey of Maintenance Enforcement Programs.

Many support issues can be resolved within the first three months

More than two-thirds of events (75%) in support only cases were process events (9), made up primarily by document filings (6). Similar to other family case types, there was an average of one pre-trial event and one adjournment event per support only case and three disposition events (Table 5).

Of the 15,724 support only cases that had a disposition event, over half (55%) reached the first disposition event within the first three months, 31% in over three months to one year and 14% in over one year.

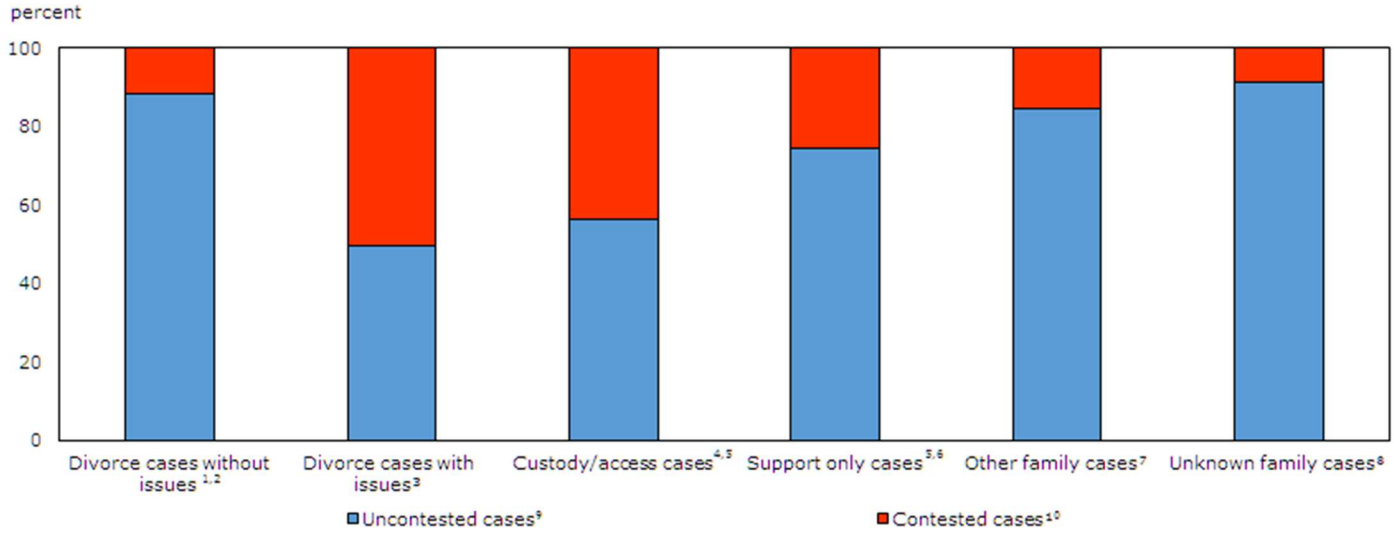
Uncontested versus contested family cases

For the purpose of this analysis, a case was considered contested by the opposing party if a responding document, such as an answer opposing the relief sought in the case, was recorded on this file. Uncontested cases did not report a responding document while contested cases did.

Most family cases are uncontested

Three quarters (75%) of active family cases in 2019/2020 were uncontested,[20] 48% of which were divorce cases[21] (Chart 4).

Chart 4
Proportion of uncontested and contested active family court cases by type, selected provinces and territories, 2019/2020



1. Divorce cases without issues involve applications to the court to dissolve a marriage where no issues of custody, access or support have been identified, though the couple may have dealt with these issues earlier in a separation agreement. These case types may include issues related to the division of matrimonial property.
2. Divorce cases initiated late in the fiscal year may be reported as a divorce without issues if an answer is not filed until the next fiscal year.
3. Divorce cases with issues involve applications made to the court to dissolve a marriage and resolve custody, access and/or support issues. These case types may include issues related to the division of matrimonial property.
4. Custody/access cases include cases in which custody and/or access have been recorded as matters requiring resolution. Custody refers to the living arrangements of a child or children and which parent will have decision-making authority. Access allows the parent with whom the child does not primarily reside to apply for parenting time. These case types do not include applications for divorce but may involve other issues such as requests for support.
5. Given that the data are derived from records originally kept for non-statistical purposes, complete survey information is not always available. For example, information related to issues, such as custody, access and support, may not always be available from the court information systems and, as such, may be under reported.
6. Support only cases include cases in which child or spousal support issues were identified. These case types may include support matters not specifically identified but it is important to note that applications for divorce are not included here.
7. Other family cases include issues of parentage, non-parental guardianship matters, enforcement of court orders, estate matters, adoptions, other family-related disputes and cases where issues have not yet been recorded. A portion of the active cases classified as "Other family" may change over time as more issues are identified in the case.
8. Unknown family cases include unidentifiable family-related matters.
9. Uncontested cases did not report the filing of a responding document, such as an answer, to the original application. Cases initiated close to the end of a fiscal year may be classified as uncontested and reclassified as contested the following fiscal year when more information, such as the filing of an answer, becomes available. Therefore, it is possible that the number of new uncontested cases is over-reported.
10. Contested cases reported the filing of a responding document, such as an answer, to the original application.

Note: For the purposes of this chart, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are excluded from the total active family caseload in 2019/2020. Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the year and thus include initiated cases. Additionally, Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba are exduded as they do not report to the Civil Court Survey.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Divorce cases without issues were mostly uncontested (88%), while divorce cases with issues revealed almost even proportions between contested (51%) and uncontested cases (49%).

Custody/access cases were 56% uncontested and 44% contested compared to support only cases which were mostly uncontested (74%).

Applicant and respondent profiles

The applicant in a family case is generally the party who brought the matter to court. The opposing party to the application is known as the respondent.[22]

While the Civil Court Survey attempts to collect the sex[23] of the parties in civil court cases, in 2019/2020, only 15% of active family cases reported the sex of the applicant and only 16% reported the sex of the respondent. In the remaining cases, the information was unavailable, unknown, or, in a small number of cases, related to a government or an organization.

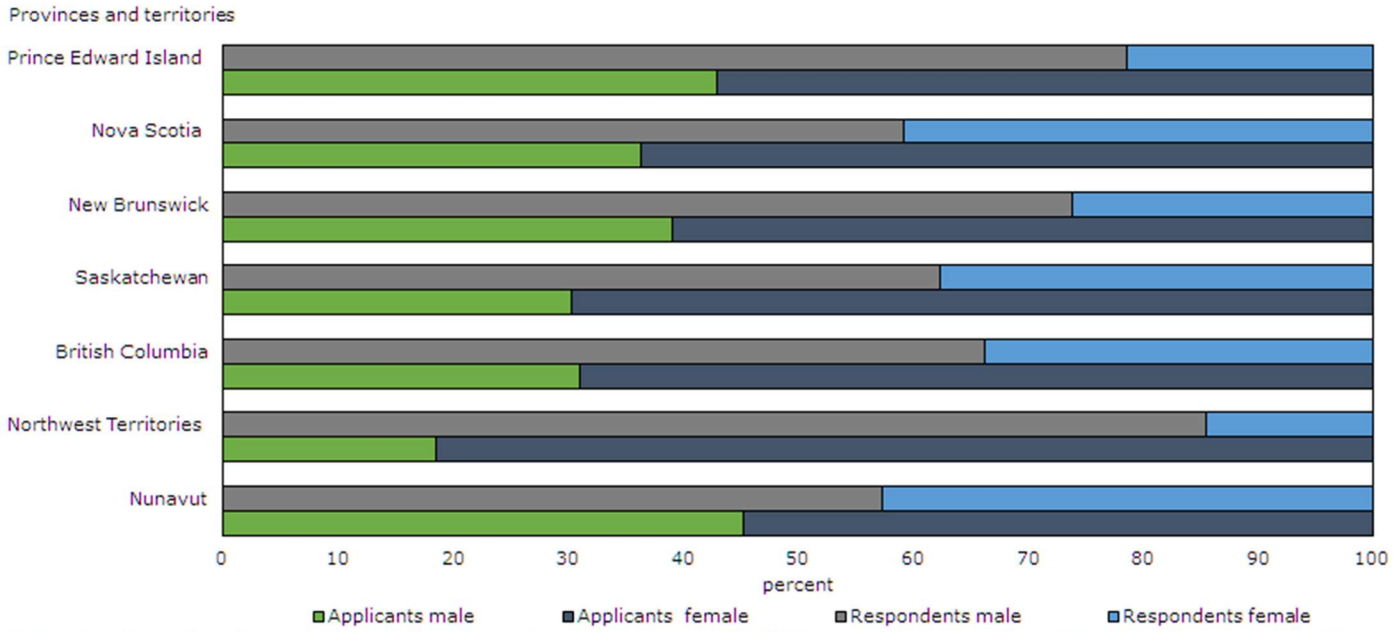
The following analysis is based on reported male and female applicant and respondents only and exclude Ontario, Alberta and Yukon due to reporting limitations. Caution should be exercised when interpreting these data due to the small number of cases for which this information is available. Child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are included here. However, it is important to note that the applicant in a child protection case is most often a government entity.

More applicants are female and more respondents are male

Of the reported male and female applicant and respondent types only in 2019/2020, 67% of applicants in family law cases were female and 66% of respondents were male.

Female applicants were more prominent in family cases than male applicants across the provinces and territories included in this analysis. In contrast, the respondents in family cases were mostly male (Chart 5).

Chart 5
Proportion of male and female litigants in active family court cases by selected provinces and territories, 2019/2020



Note: This chart is based on active cases where the applicant sex was reported (15.39%) and active cases where this information was reported for respondents (16.03%) in 2019/2020. Caution should be exercised when interpreting this data due to the small number of cases for which this information is available. Alberta and Yukon are excluded in the context of all family case types due to limitations in the reporting of this data. Ontario is included in the context of child protection cases but excluded from other family case types. For the purposes of this chart, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are included in the total active family caseload for 2019/2020. However, it is important to note that the applicant in a child protection case is most often a government entity. Alberta, Yukon and Northwest Territories are excluded in the context of child protection cases due to limitations in the reporting of this data. Data collection for the sex of the parties in a civil court case reflects the data entry practices in each reporting province and territory. Therefore, the Civil Court Survey is unable to distinguish between sex and gender. Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the year and thus include initiated cases. Additionally, Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba are exduded as they do not report to the Civil Court Survey. Percentages may not total 100% due to rounding.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Most applicants in child protection cases are a government entity

The following analysis is based on reported applicants and respondents in the context of child protection cases only and exclude applicants and respondents in Alberta and Yukon, as well as respondents in Northwest Territories due to limitations in the reporting of these data.

The applicant in a child protection case is most often a government entity who is made aware of a situation in which a child requires protection and applies to the court for supervision or protection of that child.

Of the known applicants (74%) in child protection cases, nearly all were the government or an organization (99.5%) while slightly more respondents were male (35%) or female (28%).

Legal representation in family cases

The following analysis is based only on cases which reported a known type of representation and should be interpreted with caution due to the small number of cases for which this information in available. Nunavut is excluded due to limitations in the reporting of this data.

While the Civil Court Survey attempts to collect the legal representation status of applicants and respondents in civil court cases, in 2019/2020, only 27% of active family cases reported a representation status other than unknown or not applicable for the applicant and only 12% reported it for the respondent, as at the end of the fiscal year.

Applicants and respondents in family cases can choose whether or not to hire a lawyer for their case. Though it is generally advisable to obtain representation when going to court (Ontario Court of Justice 2018), some litigants may not be able to afford legal representation for part or all of the proceeding and represent themselves.

In the following section, family cases active in 2019/2020 were examined to determine whether the applicant and respondent were represented or self-represented[24] in the fiscal year. However, it is possible for the parties to obtain legal representation later on in the case. Cases involving child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are included in this section.

The majority of applicants and respondents in family cases are self-represented

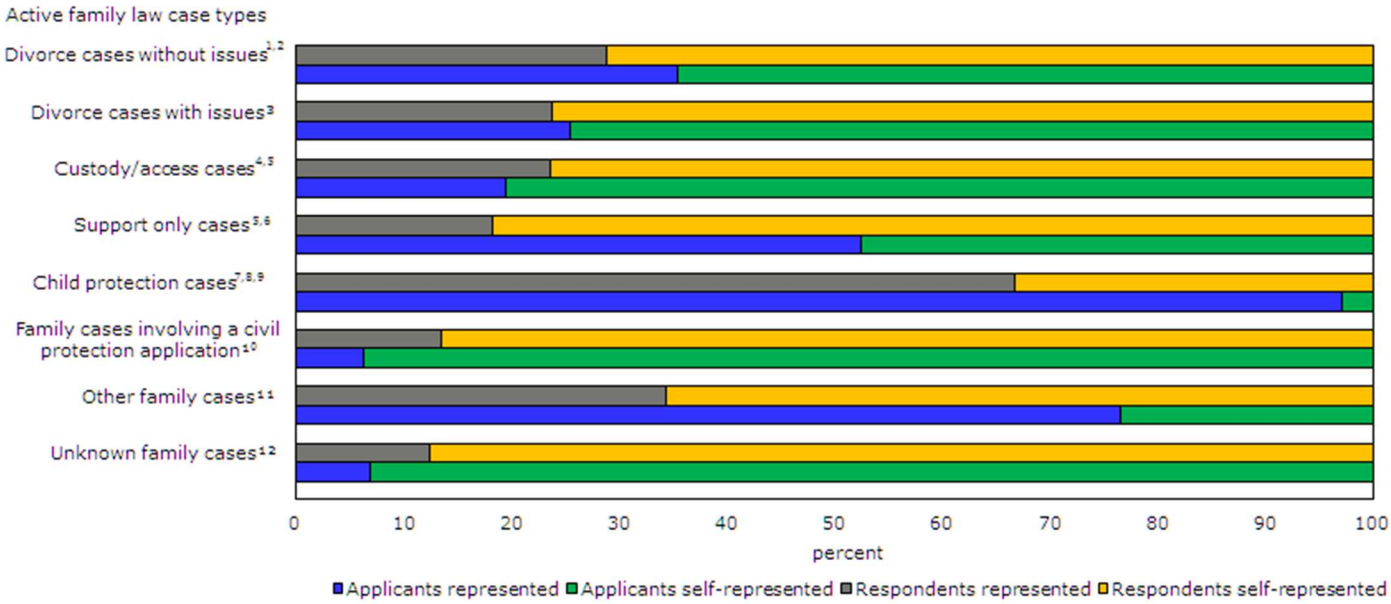
Overall, more family case litigants in active cases were self-represented (58%) than not (42%) in 2019/2020.

When analyzing applicants only, almost half (47%) were represented by a legal-aid lawyer (3%), a non-legal aid lawyer (44%) or duty counsel (0.3%). Another 1% had non-legal representation, such as a family member, which will not be analyzed further in this section. The remaining 53% of applicants were self-represented.

The number of self-represented applicants exceeds the number of represented applicants across the active family case types examined in this report, with the exception of support only, child protection and other family cases.

Similarly, about two-thirds (70%) of respondents in family cases were self-represented and almost one-third (30%) were represented at least one time in the fiscal year (Chart 6).

Chart 6
Proportion of represented and self-represented litigants in active family court cases by case type, selected provinces and territories, 2019/2020



1. Divorce cases without issues involve applications to the court to dissolve a marriage where no issues of custody, access or support have been identified, though the couple may have dealt with these issues earlier in a separation agreement. These case types may include issues related to the division of matrimonial property.
2. Divorce cases initiated late in the fiscal year may be reported as a divorce without issues if an answer is not filed until the next fiscal year.
3. Divorce cases with issues involve applications made to the court to dissolve a marriage and resolve custody, access and/or support issues. These case types may include issues related to the division of matrimonial property.
4. Custody/access cases include cases in which custody and/or access have been recorded as matters requiring resolution. Custody refers to the living arrangements of a child or children and which parent will have decision-making authority. Access allows the parent with whom the child does not primarily reside to apply for parenting time. These case types do not include applications for divorce but may involve other issues such as requests for support.
5. Given that the data are derived from records originally kept for non-statistical purposes, complete survey information is not always available. For example, information related to issues, such as custody, access and support, may not always be available from the court information systems and, as such, may be under reported.
6. Support only cases include cases in which child or spousal support issues were identified. These case types may include support matters not specifically identified but it is important to note that applications for divorce are not included here.
7. Child protection cases include applications to the court by the government for orders seeking the supervision of parents, guardians or caregivers, or the apprehension of children into government care because of issues of parental abuse, neglect, or incapacity.
8. The child protection cases examined in this chart include cases where child protection was identified as an issue and do not include applications for divorce.
9. This chart excludes litigants in the context of child protection cases in Yukon, Northwest Territories and Nunavut due to limitations in the reporting of this data.
10. Family cases involving a civil protection application include applications to the family court by individuals seeking orders to ensure their safety, such as protection orders and restraining orders.
11. Other family cases include issues of parentage, non-parental guardianship matters, enforcement of court orders, estate matters, adoptions, other family-related disputes and cases where issues have not yet been recorded. A portion of the active cases classified as "Other family" may change over time as more issues are identified in the case.
12. Unknown family cases include unidentifiable family-related matters.
Note: For the purposes of this chart, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are included in the total active family caseload for 2019/2020. This chart is based on the representation status of applicants in 27.47% of active family cases and respondents in 11.62% of active family cases as at the end of the 2019/2020 fiscal year. Caution should be exercised when interpreting this data due to the small number of cases for which this information is available. Nunavut is excluded due to limitations in the reporting of this data. For the purposes of this chart, "self-represented" includes both self-represented and unrepresented litigants as classified in the Civil Court Survey National Data Requirements. However, the Civil Court Survey is unable to differentiate between self-represented and unrepresented litigants. Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the year and thus include initiated cases. Additionally, Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba are excluded as they do not report to the Civil Court Survey.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Most applicants and respondents are represented by legal counsel in child protection cases

The applicant, such as the Children's Aid Society in Ontario, and the respondent parent in a child protection application are generally both represented by legal counsel. It is also possible that the child of the application will be represented by counsel from the Office of the Children's Lawyer, or a similar entity in the other provinces and territories, if the court deems it necessary for the child to be represented (Department of Justice 2012). The parent in a child protection application has a right to respond but may choose not to do so.

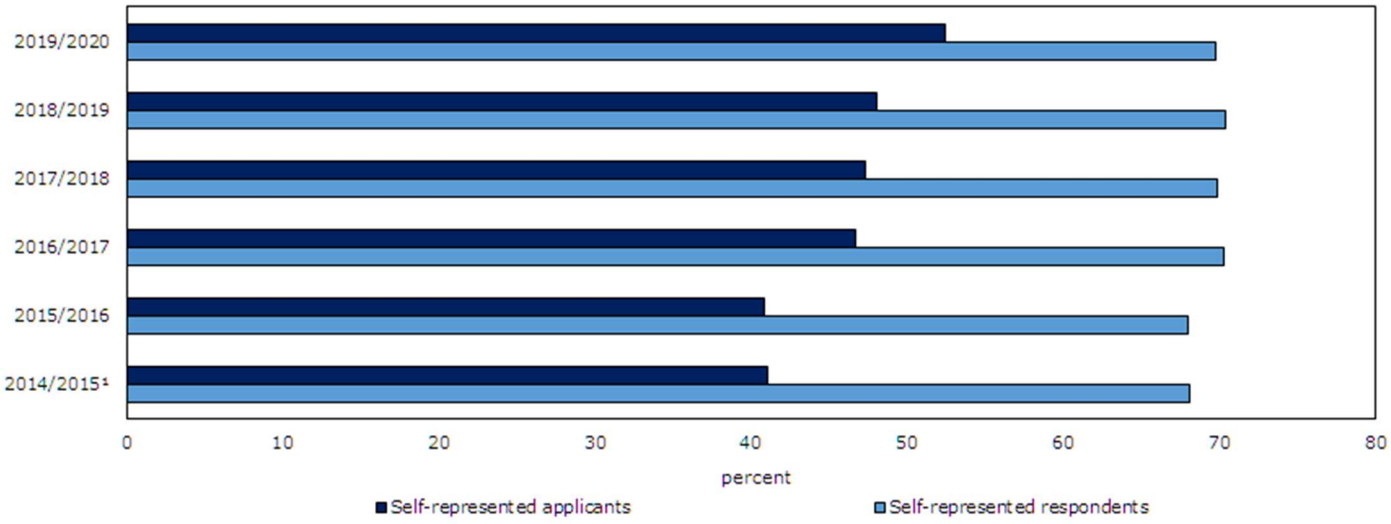
In addition to support only and other family cases, child protection cases also reported more represented parties (91%) than not (9%) in 2019/2020. Based on 72% of active child protection cases that reported a type of legal representation, almost all (97%) of the applicants and close to two-thirds (67%) of respondents were represented during the year. The high proportion of represented parties, compared to other family cases, may reflect the involvement of the government as the applicant. These data exclude litigants in the context of child protection cases in Yukon, Northwest Territories and Nunavut due to limitations in the reporting of this data.

Self-represented litigants in family cases are increasing

In 2020, 57 Ontario judges were surveyed on their perceptions of the number of represented and unrepresented litigants appearing before the courts over the past decade. The survey revealed the judges' perception that more litigants in family law cases appeared before the courts representing themselves rather than with representation (Birnbaum and Bala 2020).

Data from the Civil Court Survey supports the judges' survey. The number of self-represented applicants active in the family courts rose by 11 percentage points between 2014/2015 (41%) and 2019/2020 (52%) while self-represented respondents increased from 68% to 70% in that time (Chart 7).

Chart 7
Proportion of self-represented litigants in active family court cases, selected provinces and territories, 2014/2015 to 2019/2020



1. 2014/2015 is the first year the Civil Court Survey collected and reported data from ten provinces and territories.
Note: For the purposes of this chart, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are included in the total active family caseload for 2019/2020. This chart is based on the representation status of applicants in 27.47% of active family cases and respondents in 11.62% of active family cases as at the end of the 2019/2020 fiscal year. Caution should be exercised when interpreting this data due to the small number of cases for which this information is available. Nunavut is excluded due to limitations in the reporting of this data. For the purposes of this chart, "self-represented" includes both self-represented and unrepresented litigants as classified in the Civil Court Survey National Data Requirements. However, the survey is unable to differentiate between self-represented and unrepresented litigants. Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the year and thus include initiated cases. Additionally, Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba are excluded as they do not report to the Civil Court Survey.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Text box 4
Child protection cases

When the government is made aware that a child is being abused physically, sexually, psychologically or emotionally, an application can be made to the court for an order to have the time that the child spends with their parents or custodians supervised or to have the child removed from the situation all together.

The cases examined here include cases where child protection was identified as an issue and do not include applications for divorce.

In 2019/2020, there were almost 12,000 new applications for child protection orders initiated in the civil courts (Table 7), an 8% decrease from the previous year. Due to the urgency of these case types to ensure the safety of the child, the courts prioritize protection matters (Ontario Superior Court of Justice 2012). As such, the median number of days to reach a first disposition in new child protection cases was 9 days. Northwest Territories and Saskatchewan are excluded from the median number of days to reach a first disposition in 2019/2020.

In 2019, according to police-reported data from the Incident-based Uniform Crime Reporting Survey, 22,299 children were victimized by a family member with almost 60% of the perpetrators being a parent (Conroy 2021). Though criminal cases are out of scope for the Civil Court Survey, there may be family violence situations that involve both criminal court cases and child protection applications. A child protection application may be started after an act of family violence has been reported or before if there is a concern for a child's safety.

As with any other civil case, the respondent has a legal right to respond to the application. However, over two-thirds (77%) of the new child protection applications in 2019/2020 proceeded without respondent activity.

Summary

This report profiles divorce cases, custody/access cases, support only cases, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application active in the civil courts in 2019/2020. The profiles establish a baseline of family law court data which will enable future analysis of the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic, as well as amendments introduced in the March 1, 2021 Divorce Act, on family law cases in the Canadian civil courts.

The 2019/2020 family law caseload was mostly made up of divorce cases with and without issues, followed by child protection cases, family cases involving a civil protection application and cases involving custody, access and support issues.

Family law cases were more active in the courts and reached a first disposition faster than general civil cases in 2019/2020. Overall, most family cases, including protection cases, reached a first disposition within the first three months.

Survey description

In 2019/2020, the Civil Court Survey (CCS) included data for Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon, Northwest Territories and Nunavut. Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba are not yet reporting to the survey. Collection for the year began in June 2020 and covered the April 1, 2019 to March 31, 2020 (2019/2020) fiscal year.

The data examined includes only the provinces and territories that are capable of reporting the information and only the cases that recorded a meaningful value for the variable. Unknown and not applicable values were excluded from some portions of the analysis, as noted.

Data for the CCS are based on the administrative records stored in civil court automated information systems in the ten provinces and territories listed above. Given that the data are derived from records originally kept for non-statistical purposes, complete survey information is not always available for all provinces and territories. In particular, some provinces and territories may not be able to provide full information on secondary issues for a case. For example, information related to issues such as custody, access, support and property may not always be available from the court information systems and, as such, may be under-reported. The degree of under-reporting is unknown. Information is provided by province and territory to support analysis of individual provinces or territories. However, comparisons of data by province and territory are not recommended as reporting is not consistent for all case types.

References

Allen, Mary. 2014. "Family law cases in the civil courts, 2012/2013." Juristat. Statistics Canada Catalogue no. 85-002-X.

Birnbaum, Rachel and Nicholas Bala. 2020. "Judicial perspectives on self-represented litigants in family courts." The Lawyer's Daily. (accessed January 25, 2021).

Conroy, Shana. 2021. "Family violence in Canada: A statistical profile, 2019." Juristat. Statistics Canada Catalogue no. 85-002-X.

Department of Justice Canada. 2012. "Best practices where there is family violence." Criminal Law Perspective. (accessed March 1, 2021).

Department of Justice Canada. 2016. Child Support Fact Sheet. (accessed January 8, 2021).

Divorce Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 3 (2nd Supp.). Parliament of Canada.

Ontario Court of Justice. 2018. Representing Yourself at Your Family Law Trial. A Guide. (accessed February 23, 2021).

Ontario Superior Court of Justice. 2012. Statement of Objectives. Prioritizing Children Initiative. (accessed February 10, 2021).

Statistics Canada. 2019a. "Being married or common-law in Canada." Infographic. Statistics Canada Catalogue no. 11-627-M.

Statistics Canada. 2019b. "Separation or divorced in Canada." Infographic. Statistics Canada Catalogue no. 11-627-M.

Statistics Canada. 2021. "Survey of Maintenance Enforcement Programs: Child and spousal support, 2019/2020." The Daily. Statistics Canada Catalogue no. 11-001-X.

Notes

1. 2014/2015 is the first year the Civil Court Survey collected and reported data from ten provinces and territories.

2. Excludes Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba, not yet reporting to the survey.

3. Initiation events initiate a case in the civil courts by adding a new case to the court's active case inventory.

4. Process events are events that move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event.

5. In New Brunswick, a breakdown of the "Process events" and "Disposition events" for family matters is not available for 2019/2020.

6. Document filed events include any document filed or registered with the courts by the parties or documents issued by the courts. Examples include, among others, separation agreements, financial statements, affidavits and expert witness reports.

7. Pre-trial events include case management conferences, discovery proceedings, pre-trial conference/hearings, motions and default hearings, status hearings and reference hearings.

8. Pre-trial hearing events in Nunavut are under-represented due to limited data entry in the Nunavut civil information system. Other pre-trial events including case management conferences and reference hearings are also not reported.

9. Adjournment events involve the postponement of a court hearing or trial to another date or time or the continuation of a court hearing or trial on another date or time but excludes adjourned sine die.

10. Adjournment data is not available for Northwest Territories.

11. See note 5.

12. A disposition is a court event that disposes part of or all of the civil case (for example, settlement, consent judgment and judgment). Disposition events may also include cases that are transferred permanently to another court location, court level or type of court. Therefore, it is important to note that the case may not necessarily be disposed of but rather continuing in another court.

13. A judgment is a decision made by a judge (or a master), including interim orders, orders, decisions on costs or other decisions that dispose of part of or all of the case, including summary judgments.

14. In Prince Edward Island, the issues of custody, access and support may be under-reported since these issues are typically not captured when cases are first initiated but rather are identified from activity (such as judgments) over the length of the case.

15. In Nova Scotia, divorce cases with issue(s) identified and the subcategories of access, custody and support are under-reported due to limitations in the system capacity to report secondary issues of custody, access and support.

16. In Ontario, the issues of custody, access and support may be under-reported since these issues are typically not captured when cases are first initiated but rather are identified from activity (such as judgments) over the length of the case.

17. A portion of the active cases classified as “Other family” may change over time as more issues are identified in the case. This is particularly true for cases in Ontario where information on issues is not recorded directly, but is determined by the outcome of a case as recorded in the judgment.

18. Data collection for the sex of the parties in a civil court case reflects the data entry practices in each reporting province and territory. Therefore, the Civil Court Survey is unable to distinguish between sex and gender.

19. Divorce Act, R.S.C., 1985, c. 3 (2nd Supp.) (2019), ss. 16(8).

20. Cases initiated close to the end of a fiscal year may be classified as uncontested and reclassified as contested the following fiscal year when more information, such as the filing of an answer, becomes available. Therefore, it is possible that the number of new uncontested cases is over-reported.

21. Ontario represented 43% of the uncontested divorce cases. It is important to note that issues will be added over time as determined from the outcome of the case, as recorded in judgments, therefore, it is possible that there is over-reporting of uncontested divorce cases in Ontario.

22. The Civil Court Survey National Data Requirements labels the left-hand and right-hand parties “plaintiffs” and “defendants”. For the purpose of family cases profiled in this report, “applicant” and “respondent” are used.

23. See note 18.

24. For the purposes of this analysis, “self-represented” includes both self-represented and unrepresented litigants as classified in the Civil Court Survey National Data Requirements. However, the Civil Court Survey is unable to differentiate between self-represented and unrepresented litigants.

Detailed data tables

Table 1
Number of active civil court cases, by type and reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

	P.E.I.[1]	N.S.[2]	N.B.[3]	Ont.[4]	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Y.T.	N.W.T.	Nvt.	Total
Cases						number
Family cases[5]	1,366	12,724	7,553	124,447	9,466	61,892	56,001	429	757	661	275,296
Divorce cases without issues[6, 7]	561	4,159	765	38,481	2,528	15,409	13,922	160	62	21	76,068
Divorce cases with issues[8]	40	107	1,518	6,018	2,658	12,704	8,265	60	34	9	31,413
Custody/access cases[9, 10]	2	912	1,869	20,459	2,079	9,807	8,876	63	127	48	44,242
Support only cases[10, 11]	153	315	1,233	8,760	571	2,841	5,154	32	23	15	19,097
Child protection cases[12, 13]	37	1,636	523	14,012	1,152	4,427	3,899	17	40	113	25,856
Family cases involving a civil protection application[14]	75	186	511	1,729	22	8,232	9,781	14	85	47	20,682
Other and unknown family cases[15, 16]	498	5,409	1,134	34,988	456	8,472	6,104	83	386	408	57,938
Non-family civil cases[17]	2,678	22,722	10,351	295,303	16,310	135,694	146,477	748	1,161	318	631,762
Lawsuits for injury or damage[18]	508	4,183	.	91,797	.	31,479	69,381	162	77	10	197,597
Contract disuptes[19]	779	8,325	6	62,718	1,282	49,264	5,905	226	807	152	129,464
Bankruptcy[20]	220	1,912	886	9,884	1,011	6,950	3,661	17	47	9	24,597
Probate[21]	538	4,807	1,307	5,437	3,604	11,383	14,782	167	62	31	42,118
Other and unknown non-family cases[22]	633	3,495	8,152	125,467	10,413	36,617	52,748	176	168	116	237,985
Total caseload	4,044	35,446	17,904	419,750	25,776	197,586	202,478	1,177	1,918	979	907,058
						percent
Family cases as percentage of total caseload	33.78	35.90	42.19	29.65	36.72	31.32	27.66	36.45	39.47	67.52	30.35

. not available for any reference period

1. In Prince Edward Island, the issues of custody, access and support may be under-reported since these issues are typically not captured when cases are first initiated but rather are identified from activity (such as judgments) over the length of the case.
2. In Nova Scotia, divorce cases with issues identified and the subcategories of access, custody and support are under-reported due to limitations in the system capacity to report secondary issues of custody, access and support.
3. In New Brunswick, "Contract disputes" represent landlord/tenant disputes only.
4. In Ontario, the issues of custody, access and support may be under-reported since these issues are typically not captured when cases are first initiated but rather are identified from activity (such as judgments) over the length of the case.
5. Family cases are cases involving family law-related issues, including divorces, separation, custody and access arrangements, support payments and protection applications.
6. Divorce cases without issues involve applications to the court to dissolve a marriage where no issues of custody, access or support have been identified, though the couple may have dealt with these issues earlier in a separation agreement. These case types may include issues related to the division of matrimonial property.
7. Divorce cases initiated late in the fiscal year may be reported as a divorce without issues if an answer is not filed until the next fiscal year.
8. Divorce cases with issues involve applications made to the court to dissolve a marriage and resolve custody, access and/or support issues. These case types may include issues related to the division of matrimonial property.
9. Custody/access cases include cases in which custody and/or access have been recorded as matters requiring resolution. Custody refers to the living arrangements of a child or children and which parent will have decision-making authority. Access allows the parent with whom the child does not primarily reside to apply for parenting time. These case types do not include applications for divorce but may involve other issues such as requests for support.
10. Given that the data are derived from records originally kept for non-statistical purposes, complete survey information is not always available. For example, information related to issues, such as custody, access and support, may not always be available from the court information systems and, as such, may be under reported.
11. Support only cases include cases in which child or spousal support issues were identified. These case types may include support matters not specifically identified but it is important to note that applications for divorce are not included here.
12. Child protection cases include applications to the court by the government for orders seeking the supervision of parents, guardians or caregivers, or the apprehension of children into government care because of issues of parental abuse, neglect, or incapacity.
13. The child protection cases examined in this table include cases where child protection was identified as an issue and do not include applications for divorce.

Table 1
Number of active civil court cases, by type and reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

14. Family cases involving a civil protection application include applications to the family court by individuals seeking orders to ensure their safety, such as protection orders and restraining orders.
15. Other family cases include issues of parentage, non-parental guardianship matters, enforcement of court orders, estate matters, adoptions, other family-related disputes and cases where issues have not yet been recorded. A portion of the active cases classified as “Other family” may change over time as more issues are identified in the case.
16. Unknown family cases include unidentifiable family-related matters.
17. A non-family civil case is any civil action that is not a family-related action, such as contracts, torts, bankruptcy, probate matters and other claims involving money.
18. Lawsuits for injury or damage include: motor vehicle actions, malpractice, defamation, negligence, other tort and unknown tort.
19. Contract disputes include landlord/tenant, employment, mortgage foreclosure, lien, other contract (contract cases not specifically listed) and unknown contract (contract cases where the details are unknown) cases.
20. Bankruptcy refers to proceedings initiated either by an insolvent individual or business (voluntary bankruptcy) or by creditors (involuntary bankruptcy) seeking to either have the debtor's remaining assets distributed among the creditors or to restructure debt.
21. Probate refers to cases involving the administration and distribution of the estates of deceased persons (whether they left a will or died intestate).
22. Other non family case types include: administrative law, enforcement, adult protection/committeeship, civil protection, constitutional/charter, and other, which includes all non-family action types in a jurisdiction that do not fit into the categories specifically collected by the survey. Unknown cases include all other non-family not specifically identified.
Note: Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the 2019/2020 fiscal year and thus include initiated cases. Based on information provided by Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon, Northwest Territories and Nunavut. Information excludes data from Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba, not yet reporting to the survey.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Table 2
Profile of active family cases, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.[1]	Ont.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Y.T.	N.W.T.	Nvt.[2]	Total
Cases						number
Number of active family cases[3, 4]	1,254	10,902	6,519	108,706	8,292	49,233	42,321	398	632	501	228,758
Number of new family cases[5]	420	3,502	2,598	62,037	3,447	20,193	17,250	157	244	304	110,152
						percent
New family cases as a percentage of active family cases	33.49	32.12	39.85	57.07	41.57	41.02	40.76	39.45	38.61	60.68	48.15
						number
Number of family cases ongoing from a previous year[6]	834	7,400	3,921	46,669	4,845	29,040	25,071	241	388	197	118,606
						percent
Ongoing family cases as a percentage of active family cases	66.51	67.88	60.15	42.93	58.43	58.98	59.24	60.55	61.39	39.32	51.85
						number
Average number of events per active family case[7, 8]	9.83	12.51	6.24	12.33	9.88	10.53	10.68	9.75	7.20	8.58	11.34
Average number of process events per active family case[9, 10]	8.67	11.04	..	9.30	8.43	8.11	7.41	8.17	6.75	7.13	8.71
Average number of document filed events per active family case[11]	8.00	9.80	..	6.70	7.19	6.53	6.26	7.52	5.40	6.50	6.75
Average number of pre-trial events per active family case[12]	0.50	0.20	..	0.99	0.33	0.35	0.45	0.17	1.26	0.00	0.68
Average number of adjournments per active family case[13]	0.07	0.47	..	0.71	0.40	0.49	0.38	0.47	..	0.33	0.57
Average number of dispositions per active family case[14, 15]	0.83	1.06	..	2.35	0.92	1.74	1.79	1.18	0.04	0.85	1.97
Average number of judgments per active family case[16]	0.71	0.97	..	2.22	0.88	1.60	1.22	1.17	0.04	0.67	1.76
						percent
Process events as a percentage of events	88.17	88.29	..	75.45	85.36	77.00	69.38	83.78	93.87	83.07	76.81
Disposition events as a percentage of events	8.49	8.44	..	19.07	9.36	16.57	16.79	12.14	0.59	9.86	17.40
						number
Median days to first disposition in active family case	122.5	138.0	72.0	66.0	112.0	71.0	126.0	66.0	107.0	42.0	79.0

.. not available for a specific reference period
1. In New Brunswick, a breakdown of the "Process events" and "Disposition events" for family matters is not available for 2019/2020.
2. Pre-trial hearing events in Nunavut are under-represented due to limited data entry in the Nunavut civil information system. Other pre-trial events including case management conferences and reference hearings are also not reported.
3. Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the 2019/2020 fiscal year and thus include initiated cases.
4. For the purposes of this table, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are excluded from the total active family caseload in 2019/2020. Therefore, the total active family caseload in this table will not align with Table 1, Table 6 or Table 7.
5. Refers to cases newly started during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
6. Refers to cases initiated in a previous fiscal year with activity recorded during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
7. Events include initiation, process and disposition events. Initiation events initiate a case in the civil courts by adding a new case to the court's active case inventory. Process events move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event. Disposition events include all court events that dispose of a part of, or all of the case.

Table 2
Profile of active family cases, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

8. Initiation events are not displayed in the table and therefore, it is important to note that the average number of process and disposition events will not equal the average number of events.
9. Process events are events that move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event.
10. Other process events not displayed in the breakdown may include trial hearings, enforcement hearings, appeal hearings, other and unknown hearing/conference.
11. Document filed events include any document filed or registered with the courts by the parties or documents issued by the courts. Examples include, among others, separation agreements, financial statements, affidavits and expert witness reports.
12. Pre-trial events include case management conferences, discovery proceedings, pre-trial conference/hearings, motions and default hearings, status hearings and reference hearings. It is important to note that the reporting of pre-trial events varies across jurisdictions and therefore, reporting limitations may exist.
13. Adjournment events involve the postponement of a court hearing or trial to another date or time or the continuation of a court hearing or trial on another date or time but excludes adjourned sine die.
14. A disposition is a court event that disposes part of or all of the civil case (for example, settlement, consent judgment and judgment). Disposition events may also include cases that are transferred permanently to another court location, court level or type of court. Therefore, it is important to note that the case may not necessarily be disposed of but rather continuing in another court.
15. Other disposition events not displayed in the breakdown may include enforcement judgment, time limit expired, transferred permanently to another court, other and unknown disposition events.
16. A judgment is a decision made by a judge (or a master), including interim orders, orders, decisions on costs or other decisions that dispose of part of or all of the case, including summary judgments.
Note: Based on information provided by Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon, Northwest Territories and Nunavut. Information excludes data from Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba, not yet reporting to the survey.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Table 3.1
Profile of active divorce cases, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.[1]	Ont.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Y.T.	N.W.T.	Nvt.[2]	Total
Cases						number
Number of active family cases[3]	1,254	10,902	6,519	108,706	8,292	49,233	42,321	398	632	501	228,758
Number of active divorce cases[4, 5]	601	4,266	2,283	44,499	5,186	28,113	22,187	220	96	30	107,481
						percent
Active divorce cases as a percentage of active family cases	47.93	39.13	35.02	40.94	62.54	57.10	52.43	55.28	15.19	5.99	46.98
						number
Number of new divorce cases[6, 7]	262	1,610	1,150	26,194	2,073	9,519	9,586	82	49	8	50,533
						percent
New divorce cases as a percentage of active family cases	20.89	14.77	17.64	24.10	25.00	19.33	22.65	20.60	7.75	1.60	22.09
New divorce cases as a percentage of active divorce cases	43.59	37.74	50.37	58.86	39.97	33.86	43.21	37.27	51.04	26.67	47.02
						number
Number of divorce cases ongoing from a previous year[8]	339	2,656	1,133	18,305	3,113	18,594	12,601	138	47	22	56,948
						percent
Ongoing divorce cases as a percentage of active family cases	27.03	24.36	17.38	16.84	37.54	37.77	29.77	34.67	7.44	4.39	24.89
Ongoing divorce cases as a percentage of active divorce cases	56.41	62.26	49.63	41.14	60.03	66.14	56.79	62.73	48.96	73.33	52.98
						number
Average number of events per active divorce case[9, 10]	11.01	12.04	6.50	9.73	9.36	10.14	10.02	9.88	7.93	7.43	9.91
Average number of process events per active divorce case[11, 12]	9.82	10.42	..	7.22	8.02	7.94	7.97	8.31	7.18	6.20	7.76
Average number of document filed events per active divorce case[13]	9.28	9.73	..	5.74	7.02	6.79	7.50	7.82	6.09	5.60	6.64
Average number of pre-trial events per active divorce case[14]	0.44	0.15	..	0.49	0.29	0.19	0.26	0.18	1.05	0.00	0.34
Average number of adjournments per active divorce case[15]	0.04	0.18	..	0.26	0.32	0.51	0.12	0.30	..	0.50	0.29
Average number of dispositions per active divorce case[16, 17]	0.76	1.18	..	1.88	0.87	1.64	1.27	1.19	0.24	0.97	1.60
Average number of judgments per active divorce case[18]	0.67	1.13	..	1.83	0.84	1.50	1.00	1.17	0.24	0.73	1.48
						percent
Process events as a percentage of events	89.19	86.53	..	74.22	85.77	78.25	79.62	84.17	90.54	83.41	78.30
Disposition events as a percentage of events	6.89	9.78	..	19.29	9.27	16.13	12.64	12.01	3.02	13.00	16.11
						number
Median days to first disposition in active divorce case	113.0	154.0	55.0	86.0	137.0	114.0	122.0	100.5	107.0	212.5	104.0

.. not available for a specific reference period

1. In New Brunswick, a breakdown of the "Process events" and "Disposition events" for family matters is not available for 2019/2020.
2. Pre-trial hearing events in Nunavut are under-represented due to limited data entry in the Nunavut civil information system. Other pre-trial events including case management conferences and reference hearings are also not reported.

Table 3.1
Profile of active divorce cases, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

3. For the purposes of this table, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are excluded from the total active family caseload in 2019/2020. Therefore, the total active family caseload in this table will not align with Table 1, Table 6 or Table 7.
4. Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the 2019/2020 fiscal year and thus include initiated cases.
5. Divorce cases include applications to the court by one spouse or both spouses to dissolve their marriage.
6. Refers to cases newly started during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
7. Divorce cases initiated late in the fiscal year may be reported as a divorce without issues if an answer is not filed until the next fiscal year.
8. Refers to cases initiated in a previous fiscal year with activity recorded during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
9. Events include initiation, process and disposition events. Initiation events initiate a case in the civil courts by adding a new case to the court's active case inventory. Process events move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event. Disposition events include all court events that dispose of a part of, or all of the case.
10. Initiation events are not displayed in the table and therefore, it is important to note that the average number of process and disposition events will not equal the average number of events.
11. Process events are events that move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event.
12. Other process events not displayed in the breakdown may include trial hearings, enforcement hearings, appeal hearings, other and unknown hearing/conference.
13. Document filed events include any document filed or registered with the courts by the parties or documents issued by the courts. Examples include, among others, separation agreements, financial statements, affidavits and expert witness reports.
14. Pre-trial events include case management conferences, discovery proceedings, pre-trial conference/hearings, motions and default hearings, status hearings and reference hearings. It is important to note that the reporting of pre-trial events varies across jurisdictions and therefore, reporting limitations may exist.
15. Adjournment events involve the postponement of a court hearing or trial to another date or the continuation of a court hearing or trial on another date or time but excludes adjourned sine die.
16. A disposition is a court event that disposes part of or all of the civil case (for example, settlement, consent judgment and judgment). Disposition events may also include cases that are transferred permanently to another court location, court level or type of court. Therefore, it is important to note that the case may not necessarily be disposed of but rather continuing in another court.
17. Other disposition events not displayed in the breakdown may include enforcement judgment, time limit expired, transferred permanently to another court, other and unknown disposition events.
18. A judgment is a decision made by a judge (or a master), including interim orders, orders, decisions on costs or other decisions that dispose of part of or all of the case, including summary judgments.
Note: Based on information provided by Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon, Northwest Territories and Nunavut. Information excludes data from Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba, not yet reporting to the survey.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Table 3.2
Profile of active divorce cases without issues, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.[1]	Ont.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Y.T.	N.W.T.	Nvt.[2]	Total
Cases						number
Number of active family cases[3]	1,254	10,902	6,519	108,706	8,292	49,233	42,321	398	632	501	228,758
Number of active divorce cases[4]	601	4,266	2,283	44,499	5,186	28,113	22,187	220	96	30	107,481
Number of active divorce cases without issues[5, 6]	561	4,159	765	38,481	2,528	15,409	13,922	160	62	21	76,068
						percent
Active divorce cases without issues as a percentage of active family cases	44.74	38.15	11.73	35.40	30.49	31.30	32.90	40.20	9.81	4.19	33.25
Active divorce cases without issues as a percentage of active divorce cases	93.34	97.49	33.51	86.48	48.75	54.81	62.75	72.73	64.58	70.00	70.77
						number
Number of new divorce cases without issues[7, 8]	261	1,603	650	25,170	1,219	7,782	7,384	78	39	7	44,193
						percent
New divorce cases without issues as a percentage of active family cases	20.81	14.70	9.97	23.15	14.70	15.81	17.45	19.60	6.17	1.40	19.32
New divorce cases without issues as a percentage of active divorce cases	43.43	37.58	28.47	56.56	23.51	27.68	33.28	35.45	40.63	23.33	41.12
New divorce cases without issues as a percentage of active divorce cases without issues	46.52	38.54	84.97	65.41	48.22	50.50	53.04	48.75	62.90	33.33	58.10
						number
Number of divorce cases without issues ongoing from a previous year[9]	300	2,556	115	13,311	1,309	7,627	6,538	82	23	14	31,875
						percent
Ongoing divorce cases without issues as a percentage of active family cases	23.92	23.45	1.76	12.24	15.79	15.49	15.45	20.60	3.64	2.79	13.93
Ongoing divorce cases without issues as a percentage of active divorce cases	49.92	59.92	5.04	29.91	25.24	27.13	29.47	37.27	23.96	46.67	29.66
Ongoing divorce cases without issues as a percentage of active divorce cases without issues	53.48	61.46	15.03	34.59	51.78	49.50	46.96	51.25	37.10	66.67	41.90
						number
Average number of events per active divorce case without issues[10, 11]	11.43	11.81	4.87	7.90	6.75	7.34	7.71	8.16	7.23	4.71	7.92
Average number of process events per active divorce case without issues[12, 13]	10.23	10.19	..	5.83	5.61	5.96	6.64	6.83	6.31	3.95	6.28
Average number of document filed events per active divorce case without issues[14]	9.67	9.54	..	4.78	5.30	5.32	6.63	6.53	5.76	3.90	5.55
Average number of pre-trial events per active divorce case without issues[15]	0.47	0.14	..	0.26	0.10	0.06	0.01	0.17	0.55	0.00	0.16
Average number of adjournments per active divorce case without issues[16]	0.04	0.17	..	0.14	0.10	0.37	0[s]	0.12	..	0.00	0.16
Average number of dispositions per active divorce case without issues[17, 18]	0.74	1.17	..	1.40	0.66	0.75	0.53	0.84	0.29	0.43	1.06
Average number of judgments per active divorce case without issues[19]	0.65	1.12	..	1.37	0.64	0.68	0.51	0.83	0.29	0.38	1.02
						percent
Process events as a percentage of events	89.50	86.31	..	73.83	83.13	81.26	86.21	83.61	87.28	83.84	79.25
Disposition events as a percentage of events	6.47	9.90	..	17.76	9.75	10.27	6.84	10.34	4.02	9.09	13.42
						number
Median days to first disposition in active divorce case without issues	94.0	153.0	11.0	85.0	106.0	98.0	113.0	117.0	92.0	211.0	95.0

Table 3.2
Profile of active divorce cases without issues, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

.. not available for a specific reference period
0[s] value rounded to 0 (zero) where there is a meaningful distinction between true zero and the value that was rounded
1. In New Brunswick, a breakdown of the “Process events” and “Disposition events” for family matters is not available for 2019/2020.
2. Pre-trial hearing events in Nunavut are under-represented due to limited data entry in the Nunavut civil information system. Other pre-trial events including case management conferences and reference hearings are also not reported.
3. For the purposes of this table, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are excluded from the total active family caseload in 2019/2020. Therefore, the total active family caseload in this table will not align with Table 1, Table 6 or Table 7.
4. Divorce cases include applications to the court by one spouse or both spouses to dissolve their marriage.
5. Divorce cases without issues involve applications to the court to dissolve a marriage where no issues of custody, access or support have been identified, though the couple may have dealt with these issues earlier in a separation agreement. These case types may include issues related to the division of matrimonial property.
6. Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the 2019/2020 fiscal year and thus include initiated cases.
7. Refers to cases newly started during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
8. Divorce cases initiated late in the fiscal year may be reported as a divorce without issues if an answer is not filed until the next fiscal year.
9. Refers to cases initiated in a previous fiscal year with activity recorded during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
10. Events include initiation, process and disposition events. Initiation events initiate a case in the civil courts by adding a new case to the court's active case inventory. Process events move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event. Disposition events include all court events that dispose of a part of, or all of the case.
11. Initiation events are not displayed in the table and therefore, it is important to note that the average number of process and disposition events will not equal the average number of events.
12. Process events are events that move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event.
13. Other process events not displayed in the breakdown may include trial hearings, enforcement hearings, appeal hearings, other and unknown hearing/conference.
14. Document filed events include any document filed or registered with the courts by the parties or documents issued by the courts. Examples include, among others, separation agreements, financial statements, affidavits and expert witness reports.
15. Pre-trial events include case management conferences, discovery proceedings, pre-trial conference/hearings, motions and default hearings, status hearings and reference hearings. It is important to note that the reporting of pre-trial events varies across jurisdictions and therefore, reporting limitations may exist.
16. Adjournment events involve the postponement of a court hearing or trial to another date or the continuation of a court hearing or trial on another date or time but excludes adjourned sine die.
17. A disposition is a court event that disposes part of or all of the civil case (for example, settlement, consent judgment and judgment). Disposition events may also include cases that are transferred permanently to another court location, court level or type of court. Therefore, it is important to note that the case may not necessarily be disposed of but rather continuing in another court.
18. Other disposition events not displayed in the breakdown may include enforcement judgment, time limit expired, transferred permanently to another court, other and unknown disposition events.
19. A judgment is a decision made by a judge (or a master), including interim orders, orders, decisions on costs or other decisions that dispose of part of or all of the case, including summary judgments.
Note: Based on information provided by Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon, Northwest Territories and Nunavut. Information excludes data from Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba, not yet reporting to the survey.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Table 3.3
Profile of active divorce cases with issues, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

	P.E.I.[1]	N.S.[2]	N.B.[3]	Ont.[4]	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Y.T.	N.W.T.	Nvt.[5]	Total
Cases						number
Number of active family cases[6]	1,254	10,902	6,519	108,706	8,292	49,233	42,321	398	632	501	228,758
Number of active divorce cases[7]	601	4,266	2,283	44,499	5,186	28,113	22,187	220	96	30	107,481
Number of active divorce cases with issues[8, 9]	40	107	1,518	6,018	2,658	12,704	8,265	60	34	9	31,413
						percent
Active divorce cases with issues as a percentage of active family cases	3.19	0.98	23.29	5.54	32.05	25.80	19.53	15.08	5.38	1.80	13.73
Active divorce cases with issues as a percentage of active divorce cases	6.66	2.51	66.49	13.52	51.25	45.19	37.25	27.27	35.42	30.00	29.23
						number
Number of new divorce cases with issues[10]	1	7	500	1,024	854	1,737	2,202	4	10	1	6,340
						percent
New divorce cases with issues as a percentage of active family cases	0.08	0.06	7.67	0.94	10.30	3.53	5.20	1.01	1.58	0.20	2.77
New divorce cases with issues as a percentage of active divorce cases	0.17	0.16	21.90	2.30	16.47	6.18	9.92	1.82	10.42	3.33	5.90
New divorce cases with issues as a percentage of active divorce cases with issues	2.50	6.54	32.94	17.02	32.13	13.67	26.64	6.67	29.41	11.11	20.18
						number
Number of divorce cases with issues ongoing from a previous year[11]	39	100	1,018	4,994	1,804	10,967	6,063	56	24	8	25,073
						percent
Ongoing divorce cases with issues as a percentage of active family cases	3.11	0.92	15.62	4.59	21.76	22.28	14.33	14.07	3.80	1.60	10.96
Ongoing divorce cases with issues as a percentage of active divorce cases	6.49	2.34	44.59	11.22	34.79	39.01	27.33	25.45	25.00	26.67	23.33
Ongoing divorce cases with issues as a percentage of active divorce cases with issues	97.50	93.46	67.06	82.98	67.87	86.33	73.36	93.33	70.59	88.89	79.82
						number
Average number of events per active divorce case with issues[12, 13]	5.13	21.06	7.32	21.40	11.84	13.54	13.91	14.45	9.21	13.78	14.71
Average number of process events per active divorce case with issues[14, 15]	4.08	19.27	..	16.08	10.32	10.33	10.22	12.28	8.76	11.44	11.48
Average number of document filed events per active divorce case with issues[16]	3.88	17.13	..	11.93	8.66	8.57	8.96	11.25	6.71	9.56	9.39
Average number of pre-trial events per active divorce case with issues[17]	0.10	0.50	..	2.02	0.46	0.34	0.69	0.22	1.97	0.00	0.79
Average number of adjournments per active divorce case with issues[18]	0.00	0.56	..	1.00	0.52	0.67	0.31	0.77	..	1.67	0.62
Average number of dispositions per active divorce case with issues[19, 20]	1.03	1.53	..	4.90	1.07	2.70	2.51	2.10	0.15	2.22	2.94
Average number of judgments per active divorce case with issues[21]	0.95	1.42	..	4.75	1.02	2.51	1.83	2.10	0.15	1.56	2.63

Table 3.3
Profile of active divorce cases with issues, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

Cases	P.E.I.[1]	N.S.[2]	N.B.[3]	Ont.[4]	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Y.T.	N.W.T.	Nvt.[5]	Total
						percent
Process events as a percentage of events	79.51	91.52	..	75.15	87.20	76.26	73.46	85.01	95.21	83.06	78.05
Disposition events as a percentage of events	20.00	7.28	..	22.89	9.01	19.98	18.04	14.53	1.60	16.13	19.96
						number
Median days to first disposition in active divorce case with issues	1280.0	172.0	113.5	99.0	173.0	127.5	140.0	70.5	185.0	299.0	124.0

.. not available for a specific reference period
1. In Prince Edward Island, the issues of custody, access and support may be under-reported since these issues are typically not captured when cases are first initiated but rather are identified from activity (such as judgments) over the length of the case.
2. In Nova Scotia, divorce cases with issues identified and the subcategories of access, custody and support are under-reported due to limitations in the system capacity to report secondary issues of custody, access and support.
3. In New Brunswick, a breakdown of the “Process events” and “Disposition events” for family matters is not available for 2019/2020.
4. In Ontario, the issues of custody, access and support may be under-reported since these issues are typically not captured when cases are first initiated but rather are identified from activity (such as judgments) over the length of the case.
5. Pre-trial hearing events in Nunavut are under-represented due to limited data entry in the Nunavut civil information system. Other pre-trial events including case management conferences and reference hearings are also not reported.
6. For the purposes of this table, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are excluded from the total active family caseload in 2019/2020. Therefore, the total active family caseload in this table will not align with Table 1, Table 6 or Table 7.
7. Divorce cases include applications to the court by one spouse or both spouses to dissolve their marriage.
8. Divorce cases with issues involve applications made to the court to dissolve a marriage and resolve custody, access and/or support issues. These case types may include issues related to the division of matrimonial property.
9. Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the 2019/2020 fiscal year and thus include initiated cases.
10. Refers to cases newly started during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
11. Refers to cases initiated in a previous fiscal year with activity recorded during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
12. Events include initiation, process and disposition events. Initiation events initiate a case in the civil courts by adding a new case to the court's active case inventory. Process events move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event. Disposition events include all court events that dispose of a part of, or all of the case.
13. Initiation events are not displayed in the table and therefore, it is important to note that the average number of process and disposition events will not equal the average number of events.
14. Process events are events that move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event.
15. Other process events not displayed in the breakdown may include trial hearings, enforcement hearings, appeal hearings, other and unknown hearing/conference.
16. Document filed events include any document filed or registered with the courts by the parties or documents issued by the courts. Examples include, among others, separation agreements, financial statements, affidavits and expert witness reports.
17. Pre-trial events include case management conferences, discovery proceedings, pre-trial conference/hearings, motions and default hearings, status hearings and reference hearings. It is important to note that the reporting of pre-trial events varies across jurisdictions and therefore, reporting limitations may exist.
18. Adjournment events involve the postponement of a court hearing or trial to another date or the continuation of a court hearing or trial on another date or time but excludes adjourned sine die.
19. A disposition is a court event that disposes part of or all of the civil case (for example, settlement, consent judgment and judgment). Disposition events may also include cases that are transferred permanently to another court location, court level or type of court. Therefore, it is important to note that the case may not necessarily be disposed of but rather continuing in another court.
20. Other disposition events not displayed in the breakdown may include enforcement judgment, time limit expired, transferred permanently to another court, other and unknown disposition events.
21. A judgment is a decision made by a judge (or a master), including interim orders, orders, decisions on costs or other decisions that dispose of part of or all of the case, including summary judgments.
Note: Based on information provided by Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon, Northwest Territories and Nunavut. Information excludes data from Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba, not yet reporting to the survey.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Table 4
Profile of active custody/access cases, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

	P.E.I.[1]	N.S.[2]	N.B.[3]	Ont.[4]	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Y.T.	N.W.T.	Nvt.[5]	Total
Cases						number
Number of active family cases[6]	1,254	10,902	6,519	108,706	8,292	49,233	42,321	398	632	501	228,758
Number of active custody/access cases[7, 8, 9]	2	912	1,869	20,459	2,079	9,807	8,876	63	127	48	44,242
						percent
Active custody/access cases as a percentage of active family cases	0.16	8.37	28.67	18.82	25.07	19.92	20.97	15.83	20.09	9.58	19.34
						number
Number of new custody/access cases[10]	2	0	664	6,229	852	3,434	2,609	10	60	14	13,874
						percent
New custody/access cases as a percentage of active family cases	0.16	0.00	10.19	5.73	10.27	6.97	6.16	2.51	9.49	2.79	6.06
New custody/access cases as a percentage of active custody/access cases	100.00	0.00	35.53	30.45	40.98	35.02	29.39	15.87	47.24	29.17	31.36
						number
Number of custody/access cases ongoing from a previous year[11]	0	912	1,205	14,230	1,227	6,373	6,267	53	67	34	30,368
						percent
Ongoing custody/access cases as a percentage of active family cases	0.00	8.37	18.48	13.09	14.80	12.94	14.81	13.32	10.60	6.79	13.28
Ongoing custody/access cases as a percentage of active custody/access cases	0.00	100.00	64.47	69.55	59.02	64.98	70.61	84.13	52.76	70.83	68.64
						number
Average number of events per active custody/access case[12, 13]	11.50	12.65	8.16	21.92	12.99	14.46	16.68	11.56	12.27	10.60	17.97
Average number of process events per active custody/access case[14, 15]	9.00	11.52	..	16.11	11.19	10.84	9.10	9.75	11.70	8.21	13.05
Average number of document filed events per active custody/access case[16]	7.00	9.69	..	10.73	9.06	7.85	6.07	8.68	8.21	6.54	8.97
Average number of pre-trial events per active custody/access case[17]	1.50	0.20	..	2.29	0.54	0.69	1.03	0.11	3.16	0.00	1.52
Average number of adjournments per active custody/access case[18]	0.50	0.93	..	1.56	0.70	0.57	1.08	0.95	..	1.19	1.17
Average number of dispositions per active custody/access case[19, 20]	1.50	1.07	..	5.21	1.14	2.79	3.79	1.63	0.02	2.10	4.04
Average number of judgments per active custody/access case[21]	1.00	0.93	..	5.00	1.08	2.64	2.37	1.62	0.02	0.81	3.60
						percent
Process events as a percentage of events	78.26	91.08	..	73.49	86.11	74.95	54.59	84.34	95.38	77.41	72.63
Disposition events as a percentage of events	13.04	8.45	..	23.76	8.78	19.32	22.73	14.15	0.13	19.84	22.48
						number
Median days to first disposition in active custody/access case	79.0	114.0	100.0	55.0	86.0	41.0	106.0	42.0	95.0	44.0	57.0

.. not available for a specific reference period
0 true zero or a value rounded to zero
1. In Prince Edward Island, the issues of custody, access and support may be under-reported since these issues are typically not captured when cases are first initiated but rather are identified from activity (such as judgments) over the length of the case.
2. In Nova Scotia, divorce cases with issues identified and the subcategories of access, custody and support are under-reported due to limitations in the system capacity to report secondary issues of custody, access and support.

Table 4
Profile of active custody/access cases, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

3. In New Brunswick, a breakdown of the “Process events” and “Disposition events” for family matters is not available for 2019/2020.
4. In Ontario, the issues of custody, access and support may be under-reported since these issues are typically not captured when cases are first initiated but rather are identified from activity (such as judgments) over the length of the case.
5. Pre-trial hearing events in Nunavut are under-represented due to limited data entry in the Nunavut civil information system. Other pre-trial events including case management conferences and reference hearings are also not reported.
6. For the purposes of this table, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are excluded from the total active family caseload in 2019/2020. Therefore, the total active family caseload in this table will not align with Table 1, Table 6 or Table 7.
7. Custody/access cases include cases in which custody and/or access have been recorded as matters requiring resolution. Custody refers to the living arrangements of a child or children and which parent will have decision-making authority. Access allows the parent with whom the child does not primarily reside to apply for parenting time. These case types do not include applications for divorce but may involve other issues such as requests for support.
8. Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the 2019/2020 fiscal year and thus include initiated cases.
9. Given that the data are derived from records originally kept for non-statistical purposes, complete survey information is not always available. For example, information related to issues, such as custody, access and support, may not always be available from the court information systems and, as such, may be under reported.
10. Refers to cases newly started during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
11. Refers to cases initiated in a previous fiscal year with activity recorded during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
12. Events include initiation, process and disposition events. Initiation events initiate a case in the civil courts by adding a new case to the court's active case inventory. Process events move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event. Disposition events include all court events that dispose of a part of, or all of the case.
13. Initiation events are not displayed in the table and therefore, it is important to note that the average number of process and disposition events will not equal the average number of events.
14. Process events are events that move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event.
15. Other process events not displayed in the breakdown may include trial hearings, enforcement hearings, appeal hearings, other and unknown hearing/conference.
16. Document filed events include any document filed or registered with the courts by the parties or documents issued by the courts. Examples include, among others, separation agreements, financial statements, affidavits and expert witness reports.
17. Pre-trial events include case management conferences, discovery proceedings, pre-trial conference/hearings, motions and default hearings, status hearings and reference hearings. It is important to note that the reporting of pre-trial events varies across jurisdictions and therefore, reporting limitations may exist.
18. Adjournment events involve the postponement of a court hearing or trial to another date or the continuation of a court hearing or trial on another date or time but excludes adjourned sine die.
19. A disposition is a court event that disposes part of or all of the civil case (for example, settlement, consent judgment and judgment). Disposition events may also include cases that are transferred permanently to another court location, court level or type of court. Therefore, it is important to note that the case may not necessarily be disposed of but rather continuing in another court.
20. Other disposition events not displayed in the breakdown may include enforcement judgment, time limit expired, transferred permanently to another court, other and unknown disposition events.
21. A judgment is a decision made by a judge (or a master), including interim orders, orders, decisions on costs or other decisions that dispose of part of or all of the case, including summary judgments.
Note: Based on information provided by Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon, Northwest Territories and Nunavut. Information excludes data from Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba, not yet reporting to the survey.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Table 5
Profile of active support only cases, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

	P.E.I.[1]	N.S.[2]	N.B.[3]	Ont.[4]	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Y.T.	N.W.T.	Nvt.[5]	Total
Cases						number
Number of active family cases[6]	1,254	10,902	6,519	108,706	8,292	49,233	42,321	398	632	501	228,758
Number of active support only cases[7, 8, 9]	153	315	1,233	8,760	571	2,841	5,154	32	23	15	19,097
						percent
Active support only cases as a percentage of active family cases	12.20	2.89	18.91	8.06	6.89	5.77	12.18	8.04	3.64	2.99	8.35
						number
Number of new support only cases[10]	18	41	455	3,351	279	1,016	1,698	17	18	0	6,893
						percent
New support only cases as a percentage of active family cases	1.44	0.38	6.98	3.08	3.36	2.06	4.01	4.27	2.85	0.00	3.01
New support only cases as a percentage of active support only cases	11.76	13.02	36.90	38.25	48.86	35.76	32.95	53.13	78.26	0.00	36.09
						number
Number of support only cases ongoing from a previous year[11]	135	274	778	5,409	292	1,825	3,456	15	5	15	12,204
						percent
Ongoing support only cases as a percentage of active family cases	10.77	2.51	11.93	4.98	3.52	3.71	8.17	3.77	0.79	2.99	5.33
Ongoing support only cases as a percentage of active support only cases	88.24	86.98	63.10	61.75	51.14	64.24	67.05	46.88	21.74	100.00	63.91
						number
Average number of events per active support only case[12, 13]	6.12	11.95	4.75	14.93	5.74	10.21	11.40	7.78	12.91	9.53	12.20
Average number of process events per active support only case[14, 15]	5.13	11.13	..	10.86	4.46	7.68	7.62	6.31	12.04	8.20	9.16
Average number of document filed events per active support only case[16]	4.63	10.16	..	7.17	3.72	5.97	5.67	5.56	8.74	7.33	6.46
Average number of pre-trial events per active support only case[17]	0.32	0.14	..	1.45	0.15	0.45	0.70	0.13	3.26	0.00	1.00
Average number of adjournments per active support only case[18]	0.07	0.34	..	1.08	0.27	0.38	0.67	0.63	..	0.47	0.80
Average number of dispositions per active support only case[19, 20]	0.86	0.60	..	3.55	0.77	1.92	2.29	0.97	0.04	1.33	2.76
Average number of judgments per active support only case[21]	0.77	0.52	..	3.42	0.73	1.81	1.42	0.97	0.04	0.53	2.42
						percent
Process events as a percentage of events	83.87	93.12	..	72.76	77.68	75.28	66.88	81.12	93.27	86.01	75.10
Disposition events as a percentage of events	14.10	5.05	..	23.81	13.47	18.83	20.12	12.45	0.34	13.99	22.58
						number
Median days to first disposition in active support only case	102.0	219.0	126.5	64.0	54.0	70.0	147.0	42.0	167.0	72.0	78.0

.. not available for a specific reference period
0 true zero or a value rounded to zero
1. In Prince Edward Island, the issues of custody, access and support may be under-reported since these issues are typically not captured when cases are first initiated but rather are identified from activity (such as judgments) over the length of the case.
2. In Nova Scotia, divorce cases with issues identified and the subcategories of access, custody and support are under-reported due to limitations in the system capacity to report secondary issues of custody, access and support.

Table 5
Profile of active support only cases, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

3. In New Brunswick, a breakdown of the “Process events” and “Disposition events” for family matters is not available for 2019/2020.
4. In Ontario, the issues of custody, access and support may be under-reported since these issues are typically not captured when cases are first initiated but rather are identified from activity (such as judgments) over the length of the case.
5. Pre-trial hearing events in Nunavut are under-represented due to limited data entry in the Nunavut civil information system. Other pre-trial events including case management conferences and reference hearings are also not reported.
6. For the purposes of this table, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are excluded from the total active family caseload in 2019/2020. Therefore, the total active family caseload in this table will not align with Table 1, Table 6 or Table 7.
7. Support only cases include cases in which child or spousal support issues were identified. These case types may include support matters not specifically identified but it is important to note that applications for divorce are not included here.
8. Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the 2019/2020 fiscal year and thus include initiated cases.
9. Given that the data are derived from records originally kept for non-statistical purposes, complete survey information is not always available. For example, information related to issues, such as custody, access and support, may not always be available from the court information systems and, as such, may be under reported.
10. Refers to cases newly started during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
11. Refers to cases initiated in a previous fiscal year with activity recorded during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
12. Events include initiation, process and disposition events. Initiation events initiate a case in the civil courts by adding a new case to the court's active case inventory. Process events move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event. Disposition events include all court events that dispose of a part of, or all of the case.
13. Initiation events are not displayed in the table and therefore, it is important to note that the average number of process and disposition events will not equal the average number of events.
14. Process events are events that move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event.
15. Other process events not displayed in the breakdown may include trial hearings, enforcement hearings, appeal hearings, other and unknown hearing/conference.
16. Document filed events include any document filed or registered with the courts by the parties or documents issued by the courts. Examples include, among others, separation agreements, financial statements, affidavits and expert witness reports.
17. Pre-trial events include case management conferences, discovery proceedings, pre-trial conference/hearings, motions and default hearings, status hearings and reference hearings. It is important to note that the reporting of pre-trial events varies across jurisdictions and therefore, reporting limitations may exist.
18. Adjournment events involve the postponement of a court hearing or trial to another date or the continuation of a court hearing or trial on another date or time but excludes adjourned sine die.
19. A disposition is a court event that disposes part of or all of the civil case (for example, settlement, consent judgment and judgment). Disposition events may also include cases that are transferred permanently to another court location, court level or type of court. Therefore, it is important to note that the case may not necessarily be disposed of but rather continuing in another court.
20. Other disposition events not displayed in the breakdown may include enforcement judgment, time limit expired, transferred permanently to another court, other and unknown disposition events.
21. A judgment is a decision made by a judge (or a master), including interim orders, orders, decisions on costs or other decisions that dispose of part of or all of the case, including summary judgments.
Note: Based on information provided by Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon, Northwest Territories and Nunavut. Information excludes data from Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba, not yet reporting to the survey.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Table 6
Profile of active family cases involving applications for civil protection orders, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.[1]	Ont.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Y.T.	N.W.T.	Nvt.[2]	Total
Cases						number
Number of active family cases[3]	1,366	12,724	7,553	124,447	9,466	61,892	56,001	429	757	661	275,296
Number of active family cases involving a civil protection application[4, 5]	75	186	511	1,729	22	8,232	9,781	14	85	47	20,682
						percent
Active family cases involving a civil protection application as a percentage of active family cases	5.49	1.46	6.77	1.39	0.23	13.30	17.47	3.26	11.23	7.11	7.51
						number
Number of new family cases involving a civil protection application[6]	68	112	315	512	19	5,760	1,959	13	62	44	8,864
						percent
New family cases involving a civil protection application as a percentage of active family cases	4.98	0.88	4.17	0.41	0.20	9.31	3.50	3.03	8.19	6.66	3.22
New family cases involving a civil protection application as a percentage of active family cases involving a civil protection application	90.67	60.22	61.64	29.61	86.36	69.97	20.03	92.86	72.94	93.62	42.86
						number
Number of family cases involving a civil protection application ongoing from a previous year[7]	7	74	196	1,217	3	2,472	7,822	1	23	3	11,818
						percent
Ongoing family cases involving a civil protection application as a percentage of active family cases	0.51	0.58	2.59	0.98	0.03	3.99	13.97	0.23	3.04	0.45	4.29
Ongoing family cases involving a civil protection application as a percentage of active family cases involving a civil protection application	9.33	39.78	38.36	70.39	13.64	30.03	79.97	7.14	27.06	6.38	57.14
						number
Average number of events per active family case involving a civil protection application[8, 9]	10.39	12.34	8.37	23.00	6.55	10.68	24.73	8.14	5.93	8.74	18.28
Average number of process events per active family case involving a civil protection application[10, 11]	7.89	9.84	..	16.87	4.00	7.52	13.20	5.07	4.24	6.45	11.08
Average number of document filed events per active family case involving a civil protection application[12]	7.55	8.28	..	11.42	3.64	6.07	9.12	5.07	4.01	6.28	8.02
Average number of pre-trial events per active family case involving a civil protection application[13]	0.33	0.49	..	2.46	0.09	0.36	1.51	0.00	0.22	0.00	1.10
Average number of adjournments per active family case involving a civil protection application[14]	0.01	0.61	..	1.52	0.09	0.23	1.47	0.00	..	0.11	0.94
Average number of dispositions per active family case involving a civil protection application[15, 16]	1.21	1.89	..	5.50	1.64	2.52	5.94	2.14	0.95	1.36	4.41
Average number of judgments per active family case involving a civil protection application[17]	1.19	1.88	..	5.25	1.59	2.41	3.76	2.14	0.74	1.28	3.29
						percent
Process events as a percentage of events	75.99	79.78	..	73.34	61.11	70.47	53.35	62.28	71.43	73.72	60.59
Disposition events as a percentage of events	11.68	15.34	..	23.91	25.00	23.63	24.02	26.32	16.07	15.57	24.15

Table 6
Profile of active family cases involving applications for civil protection orders, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.[1]	Ont.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Y.T.	N.W.T.	Nvt.[2]	Total
Cases						number
Median days to first disposition in active family case involving a civil protection application	2.0	8.0	77.0	4.0	1.0	2.0	50.0	1.0	6.0	1.0	7.0

.. not available for a specific reference period
1. In New Brunswick, a breakdown of the “Process events” and “Disposition events” for family matters is not available for 2019/2020.
2. Pre-trial hearing events in Nunavut are under-represented due to limited data entry in the Nunavut civil information system. Other pre-trial events including case management conferences and reference hearings are also not reported.
3. For the purposes of this table, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are included in the total active family caseload in 2019/2020. Therefore, the total active family caseload in this table will not align with Table 2, Table 3.1, Table 3.2, Table 3.3, Table 4 or Table 5.
4. Family cases involving a civil protection application include applications to the family court by individuals seeking orders to ensure their safety, such as protection orders and restraining orders.
5. Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the 2019/2020 fiscal year and thus include initiated cases.
6. Refers to cases newly started during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
7. Refers to cases initiated in a previous fiscal year with activity recorded during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
8. Events include initiation, process and disposition events. Initiation events initiate a case in the civil courts by adding a new case to the court's active case inventory. Process events move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event. Disposition events include all court events that dispose of a part of, or all of the case.
9. Initiation events are not displayed in the table and therefore, it is important to note that the average number of process and disposition events will not equal the average number of events.
10. Process events are events that move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event.
11. Other process events not displayed in the breakdown may include trial hearings, enforcement hearings, appeal hearings, other and unknown hearing/conference.
12. Document filed events include any document filed or registered with the courts by the parties or documents issued by the courts. Examples include, among others, separation agreements, financial statements, affidavits and expert witness reports.
13. Pre-trial events include case management conferences, discovery proceedings, pre-trial conference/hearings, motions and default hearings, status hearings and reference hearings. It is important to note that the reporting of pre-trial events varies across jurisdictions and therefore, reporting limitations may exist.
14. Adjournment events involve the postponement of a court hearing or trial to another date or the continuation of a court hearing or trial on another date or time but excludes adjourned sine die.
15. A disposition is a court event that disposes part of or all of the civil case (for example, settlement, consent judgment and judgment). Disposition events may also include cases that are transferred permanently to another court location, court level or type of court. Therefore, it is important to note that the case may not necessarily be disposed of but rather continuing in another court.
16. Other disposition events not displayed in the breakdown may include enforcement judgment, time limit expired, transferred permanently to another court, other and unknown disposition events.
17. A judgment is a decision made by a judge (or a master), including interim orders, orders, decisions on costs or other decisions that dispose of part of or all of the case, including summary judgments.
Note: Based on information provided by Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon, Northwest Territories and Nunavut. Information excludes data from Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba, not yet reporting to the survey.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

Table 7
Profile of active child protection cases, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.[1]	Ont.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Y.T.	N.W.T.	Nvt.[2]	Total
Cases						number
Number of active family cases[3]	1,366	12,724	7,553	124,447	9,466	61,892	56,001	429	757	661	275,296
Number of active child protection cases[4 5 6]	37	1,636	523	14,012	1,152	4,427	3,899	17	40	113	25,856
						percent
Active child protection cases as a percentage of active family cases	2.71	12.86	6.92	11.26	12.17	7.15	6.96	3.96	5.28	17.10	9.39
						number
Number of new child protection cases[7]	16	836	316	6,900	439	2,368	1,058	3	6	43	11,985
						percent
New child protection cases as a percentage of active family cases	1.17	6.57	4.18	5.54	4.64	3.83	1.89	0.70	0.79	6.51	4.35
New child protection cases as a percentage of active child protection cases	43.24	51.10	60.42	49.24	38.11	53.49	27.14	17.65	15.00	38.05	46.35
						number
Number of child protection cases ongoing from a previous year[8]	21	800	207	7,112	713	2,059	2,841	14	34	70	13,871
						percent
Ongoing child protection cases as a percentage of active family cases	1.54	6.29	2.74	5.71	7.53	3.33	5.07	3.26	4.49	10.59	5.04
Ongoing child protection cases as a percentage of active child protection cases	56.76	48.90	39.58	50.76	61.89	46.51	72.86	82.35	85.00	61.95	53.65
						number
Average number of events per active child protection case[9 10]	29.95	20.84	18.75	22.05	10.51	15.95	29.91	16.59	12.58	21.13	21.53
Average number of process events per active child protection case[11 12]	26.32	16.96	..	16.39	8.97	11.10	20.39	14.06	12.43	19.01	15.80
Average number of document filed events per active child protection case[13]	21.57	13.74	..	10.25	5.22	6.51	13.42	11.59	7.68	14.41	10.11
Average number of pre-trial events per active child protection case[14]	2.62	1.58	..	2.05	1.01	1.35	2.53	0.18	4.35	0.00	1.92
Average number of adjournments per active child protection case[15]	1.65	1.20	..	2.04	1.33	0.52	2.79	2.29	..	3.07	1.80
Average number of dispositions per active child protection case[16 17]	3.11	3.37	..	4.65	1.14	3.10	6.38	2.35	..	1.74	4.38
Average number of judgments per active child protection case[18]	2.86	3.33	..	4.40	0.99	2.83	4.08	2.24	..	1.64	3.83
						percent
Process events as a percentage of events	87.91	81.37	..	74.33	85.31	69.55	68.18	84.75	98.81	89.95	73.40
Disposition events as a percentage of events	10.38	16.16	..	21.07	10.81	19.40	21.33	14.18	..	8.25	20.33
						number
Median days to first disposition in active child protection case	24.0	24.0	7.0	10.0	..	3.0	18.0	25.0	..	32.5	10.0

.. not available for a specific reference period

1. In New Brunswick, a breakdown of the "Process events" and "Disposition events" for family matters is not available for 2019/2020.
2. Pre-trial hearing events in Nunavut are under-represented due to limited data entry in the Nunavut civil information system. Other pre-trial events including case management conferences and reference hearings are also not reported.
3. For the purposes of this table, child protection cases and family cases involving a civil protection application are included in the total active family caseload in 2019/2020. Therefore, the total active family caseload in this table will not align with Table 2, Table 3.1, Table 3.2, Table 3.3, Table 4 or Table 5.

Table 7
Profile of active child protection cases, by reporting jurisdiction, 2019/2020

4. Child protection cases include applications to the court by the government for orders seeking the supervision of parents, guardians or caregivers, or the apprehension of children into government care because of issues of parental abuse, neglect, or incapacity.
5. The child protection cases examined in this table include cases where child protection was identified as an issue and do not include applications for divorce.
6. Active cases include all cases with activity (at least one court event, which moves all or part of the case through the court process) during the 2019/2020 fiscal year and thus include initiated cases.
7. Refers to cases newly started during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
8. Refers to cases initiated in a previous fiscal year with activity recorded during the 2019/2020 fiscal year.
9. Events include initiation, process and disposition events. Initiation events initiate a case in the civil courts by adding a new case to the court's active case inventory. Process events move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event. Disposition events include all court events that dispose of a part of, or all of the case.
10. Initiation events are not displayed in the table and therefore, it is important to note that the average number of process and disposition events will not equal the average number of events.
11. Process events are events that move the case forward through the civil process, but are not the initiating event.
12. Other process events not displayed in the breakdown may include trial hearings, enforcement hearings, appeal hearings, other and unknown hearing/conference.
13. Document filed events include any document filed or registered with the courts by the parties or documents issued by the courts. Examples include, among others, separation agreements, financial statements, affidavits and expert witness reports.
14. Pre-trial events include case management conferences, discovery proceedings, pre-trial conference/hearings, motions and default hearings, status hearings and reference hearings. It is important to note that the reporting of pre-trial events varies across jurisdictions and therefore, reporting limitations may exist.
15. Adjournment events involve the postponement of a court hearing or trial to another date or the continuation of a court hearing or trial on another date or time but excludes adjourned sine die.
16. A disposition is a court event that disposes part of or all of the civil case (for example, settlement, consent judgment and judgment). Disposition events may also include cases that are transferred permanently to another court location, court level or type of court. Therefore, it is important to note that the case may not necessarily be disposed of but rather continuing in another court.
17. Other disposition events not displayed in the breakdown may include enforcement judgment, time limit expired, transferred permanently to another court, other and unknown disposition events.
18. A judgment is a decision made by a judge (or a master), including interim orders, orders, decisions on costs or other decisions that dispose of part of or all of the case, including summary judgments.
Note: Based on information provided by Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon, Northwest Territories and Nunavut. Information excludes data from Newfoundland and Labrador, Quebec and Manitoba, not yet reporting to the survey.
Source: Statistics Canada, Canadian Centre for Justice and Community Safety Statistics, Civil Court Survey.

2023 ANNUAL REPORT

Law Society of Saskatchewan

Regulating the Practice of Law in the Public Interest

Contents

About the Law Society of Saskatchewan

CORE PURPOSE:

The Law Society of Saskatchewan regulates the practice of law in the public interest.

MISSION:

The Law Society serves the public interest and advances the administration of justice by regulating competence and integrity in the practice of law, safeguarding the independence of the legal profession, and promoting access to legal services and justice.

VALUES:

ETHICAL
the Law Society acts honestly and with integrity.

ACCOUNTABLE
the Law Society is transparent, provides timely communication and processes and makes informed decisions.

FAIR
the Law Society treats all people respectfully and is consistent in the application of policies, procedures and practices.

INCLUSIVE
the Law Society embraces and promotes equity, diversity and inclusion.

COLLABORATIVE
the Law Society works cooperatively to achieve efficiencies and increase impact.

RESPONSIVE
the Law Society remains educated and aware and considers changes in the environment to achieve continuous improvement, innovation and effective regulatory outcomes.

Land Acknowledgement

The Law Society regulates the practice of law in the public interest in the province of Saskatchewan, which includes the shared lands of Treaties 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 10, and the Homeland of the Métis Nation. The Law Society pays respect to past, present and future generations of all Indigenous Peoples and pledges to continue a path of Truth and Reconciliation for as long as "the sun shines, the rivers flow, and the grass grows."

The Law Society has received permission from the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation to use its logo in connection with Truth and Reconciliation initiatives. As explained by the National Centre, the logo symbolizes the seven fires representing the Seven Sacred Teachings of respect, honesty, courage, love, humility, wisdom and truth. The fire represents a collective responsibility to care for and ensure that the fires of reconciliation stay bright.

As one looks into this fire, the image of two birds appears. These birds represent spirits being set free when the truth is told. The two birds also represent the relationships necessary for the process of healing and reconciliation: the relationships between Survivors and intergenerational Survivors, between Indigenous and non-Indigenous people, and between parents and children.

Andrea Argue, K.C.
President

Law Society of Saskatchewan

President's Message

The work of the Law Society of Saskatchewan for the year 2023, at its broadest retrospective characterization, may be described as considerable forward "thinking," in the midst of much "doing."

We are pleased to report that the Law Society progressed many of its initiatives, including matters pertinent to Truth and Reconciliation and attending to other core work integral to public protection through trust safety, insurance and firm regulation matters; addressing specific lawyer ethics, discipline and competency matters; and the like.

As to the forward thinking that preoccupied much of the organization's energy: unprecedented technological advances in the area of artificial intelligence (AI) have potentially astonishing impacts on the delivery of legal services. Will AI result in enhanced access to legal services? How may regulators continue to ensure that the public interest of safe and effective legal services is protected in a delivery landscape unlike any we have known before?

Thematically related in access to legal services, but in the context of different delivery model(s) than AI, the Law Society continued to build on the work of the Future of Legal Services Initiative. We were pleased to robustly engage with external stakeholders to foster the development and success of this initiative. We appreciate the good working relationship with the Ministry of Justice and Attorney General in this province in all things, but the collaborative advancement of this initiative is a particular example of note.

Engagement with external stakeholders was not limited to the sphere of Future of Legal Services. At various points this past year we were pleased to meet with and learn from our Law Society counterparts in Alberta, British Columbia and Manitoba as to matters, respectively, of continuing professional development and competency, shifting legal regulatory regimes, and the interplay of wellness and discipline.

Additionally, our engagement with the Federation of Law Societies presented opportunities to enhance our capacity to protect the public in relation to lawyer wellness (building on the learnings from the National Study) and, once again, AI.

The year ended with celebratory engagement with the Law Foundation, as we joined them in marking that organization's 50th anniversary. We are thankful for the Law Foundation, as through its important continued financial support, we are able to advance our efforts to protect the public.

In closing, I wish to extend my personal gratitude to the external stakeholders with whom I have had the pleasure to interact during my time in the office of President. These experiences enriched and informed much of my work at the Board table. Last, but not least, I wish to specifically address those around the "Board table": my sincere thanks go to the Benchers, Executive Committee, Law Society staff and Executive Director, Tim Brown, K.C., each for their diligent and capable work in service to the public of Saskatchewan.

Tim Brown, K.C.
Executive Director

Law Society of Saskatchewan

Executive Director's Message

In 2023, the Law Society introduced its new Strategic Plan (2023-2026). This renewed plan builds on many of the same themes expressed in our Strategic Plan (2019-2022). It establishes a forward-looking suite of accountabilities for the organization and is based on the ongoing work of our Board to understand the trends and developments which will influence the future of the profession in the rapidly evolving context in which these services are (and will be) delivered.

2023 served as a stark reminder of the speed of change with the rise of technologies such as large language models and generative artificial intelligence (AI) capturing the attention and imagination of professionals across various sectors, including law. These technologies have the potential for significant benefits like improving workflows, simplifying routine tasks and increasing the public's access to legal information. They also come with several early limitations and challenges, things like potential biases, inaccuracies, and so-called "AI hallucinations" – a phrase none of us were familiar with until last year. Like the internet, it is easy to predict that over time these technologies will become a seamless part of our everyday lives.

In 2023, the Law Society closely monitored these advancements to assess their safe application within legal practice. By the end of the year, this led to the formulation of Guidelines for the Use of Artificial Intelligence in the Practice of Law, published in early 2024, outlining good practices for incorporating AI technologies responsibly in legal work.

We remain vigilant and committed to continuously evaluating the impact and regulatory implications of these technological advancements on the legal profession, as we do in all aspects of our mission to regulate the practice of law in the public interest. As you will see in the report that follows, work towards the strategic objectives that support this aim is well underway. We also hope that our commitment to presenting supporting data in transparent ways will be helpful to today's readers, and on a comparative basis, to readers over time.

None of the work presented in this report, or otherwise, would be possible without the very significant effort of our committed staff, our Board, our volunteers from the profession and our collaborative partners at the Ministry of Justice, the College of Law, the Law Foundation of Saskatchewan and other law societies in Canada, including the Federation of Law Societies of Canada, who help us to make big ideas happen within the confines of a relatively modest budget.

Special thanks go to my staff colleagues on the Executive Leadership Team and to my colleagues on the Executive Committee: Past President James Korpan, K.C., Vice-President Suzanne Lalonde K.C. and, of course, to my devoted governance partner and learned friend, President Andrea Argue, K.C. Collectively, their wisdom and commitment to the mission of the organization cannot be overstated.

Strategic Plan (2023-2026)

GOAL 1: STRENGTHEN REGULATION

The Law Society demonstrates transparent, timely, fair and informed decision-making to build stakeholder understanding, trust and confidence in the regulation of the practice of law.

OBJECTIVES:

1. Increase stakeholder awareness of the role of the Law Society.
2. Improve Law Society communications regarding regulatory matters, including the public interest basis for decisions.
3. Increase dialogue with stakeholders and the use of data to regulate proactively and better inform decisions.
4. Increase timeliness and quality of regulatory processes and decisions.
5. Enhance effectiveness of Law Society governance.

GOAL 2: ENHANCE COMPETENCY

The Law Society supports members[1] in acquiring and maintaining the competencies necessary to provide quality legal services to meet the evolving needs of the public.

OBJECTIVES:

1. Increase awareness and understanding of the current and evolving range of competencies required to deliver quality legal services.
2. Enhance supports and resources available for members to acquire and maintain these competencies.
3. Increase the effectiveness of professional development regulation and programming.

GOAL 3: INCREASE EQUITY, DIVERSITY AND INCLUSION

The Law Society promotes equity, diversity and inclusion within the legal profession to strengthen access to legal services and the legitimacy and responsiveness of the administration of justice.

OBJECTIVES:

1. Increase diversity within the Law Society to better reflect the diversity of the public in Saskatchewan.
2. Increase the competency of the Law Society Board, staff and members in relation to human rights, equity, diversity and inclusion.
3. Strengthen the Law Society's commitment to human rights, equity, diversity and inclusion in its regulatory structure, policies and initiatives.
4. Reduce barriers to entry, advancement and retention in the legal profession faced by equity-seeking/equity-deserving groups.[2]

GOAL 4: ADVANCE TRUTH AND RECONCILIATION

The Law Society demonstrates commitment to Truth and Reconciliation and acts to support the unique needs of Indigenous peoples and Indigenous-led solutions to strengthen: (i) access to legal services; and (ii) the legitimacy and responsiveness of the administration of justice.

OBJECTIVES:

1. Increase diversity within the Law Society Board, staff and members to reflect Indigenous perspectives.
2. Increase the cultural competency of the Law Society Board, staff and members in line with the Calls to Action and Calls to Justice.
3. Reduce barriers to entry, advancement and retention in the legal profession faced by Indigenous peoples.
4. Advance the areas of priority and focus as recommended by the Law Society's Truth and Reconciliation Advisory Group.
5. Advance the Truth, Reconciliation and Treaty Implementation Action Plan prepared in partnership with the Office of the Treaty Commissioner.

GOAL 5: INCREASE ACCESS TO LEGAL SERVICES AND JUSTICE

The Law Society demonstrates commitment to access to justice and supports accessible legal services to improve legal outcomes for the public.

OBJECTIVES:

1. Reduce barriers to access caused by the Law Society's regulatory framework.
2. Increase the competency of the Law Society Board, staff and members in relation to access to justice issues.
3. Increase support to members to diversify the methods used to deliver legal services, particularly to underserved segments of the public.
4. Increase support for initiatives that address unmet legal needs and advance access to justice.

GOAL 6: INCREASE WELLNESS

The Law Society promotes a culture of wellness in the legal profession to facilitate the delivery of quality legal services to the public.

OBJECTIVES:

1. Increase awareness and understanding of mental illnesses, addictions and other health concerns to support members in identifying and addressing issues to mitigate risk to the public.
2. Reduce the stigma associated with mental illnesses, addictions and other health concerns to encourage members to seek appropriate supports.
3. Provide regulatory options to address mental illnesses, addictions and other health concerns experienced by members.

[1] Members of the Law Society include licensees entitled to practice law in Saskatchewan and firms as referenced in The Legal Profession Act, 1990.

[2] See the Government of Canada Guide on Equity, Diversity and Inclusion Terminology.

Strategic Plan Progress in 2023

Goal One: Strengthen Regulation

Decision-making that is transparent, informed, fair and timely supports stakeholder confidence in the regulation of the practice of law.

Progress Towards This Goal

Objective 3: Increase dialogue with stakeholders and the use of data to regulate proactively and better inform decisions.

- Stakeholder Services Working Group

In 2023, the Law Society initiated a cross-functional Stakeholder Services Working Group to approach stakeholder inquiries effectively and provide consistent and streamlined service to all stakeholders who contact the Law Society. Work during 2023 included reviewing data for quality assurance and lessons, making improvements to frequently used content, and developing approaches for complex inquiries.

Objective 4: Increase timeliness and quality of regulatory processes and decisions.

- Investigations and Adjudication

In 2023, amendments to Part 11 of the Law Society of Saskatchewan Rules were approved to address inefficiencies caused by complaints that are repetitious. Additionally, the Law Society developed data analytics capabilities to better inform caseload and resourcing decisions and improve efficiencies in the management of professional responsibility matters.

To enhance the quality of Law Society adjudications, the Law Society added two additional modules to the training provided to members of the Hearing Committee Adjudicator Roster: Trauma-Informed Adjudication and The Gladue Principles: From Criminal Law to the Regulation of Professions.

- Firm Regulation – Registration, Appointment of a Designated Representative and Annual Reporting

The Law Society continued to strengthen implementation of Part 9 of the Law Society of Saskatchewan Rules which supports risk identification and management for law firms and organizations.

Beginning in January 2020, all law firms in Saskatchewan completed a firm registration form and appointed a Designated Representative. All new firms and approved pro bono organizations complete this same process. In 2023, a new annual report was developed and moved online to streamline reporting. All firms continue to complete the online annual report, allowing for proactive identification and early resolution of issues.

- Trust Safety – Unified Year-End

To improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the Trust Safety program, amendments were approved to Parts 16 and 23 of the Law Society of Saskatchewan Rules to streamline the approach to trust safety. This included the creation of a uniform trust reporting period. The shift to a uniform year-end allows for increased timeliness of the audit processes, enabling the Law Society and members to be more proactive in identifying issues and risks. This change also facilitates the identification of potential trends in trust safety compliance.

Objective 5: Enhance effectiveness of Law Society governance.

- Policy Enhancements

The Law Society approved amendments to Part 4 of the Law Society of Saskatchewan Rules to provide clarity around member resolutions presented at a meeting of the members. The amendments assure that members voting on a resolution have sufficient information to reasonably inform their decision, that resolutions presented are within the mandate of the Law Society, and that only those resolutions that are consistent with the duties of the Law Society are implemented.

Additionally, amendments to the governance policy on committees were approved to advance effective and efficient decision-making. The amendments provide guidelines for the creation of new committees and the review and discontinuation of existing committees, where appropriate. Based on implementation of these guidelines, the Firm Regulation Committee has assumed the ongoing responsibilities of the Trust Safety Committee.

Goal Two: Enhance Competency

Regulating professional competence is central to the Law Society's mandate of serving the public interest, necessitating continuous commitment to enhancing and creating opportunities for legal professionals to strengthen their skills and knowledge to effectively meet the evolving needs of the public.

Progress Towards This Goal

Objective 1: Increase awareness and understanding of the current and evolving range of competencies required to deliver quality legal services.

- Western Canada Competency Profile

In 2023, the Law Society partnered with the western law societies of British Columbia, Alberta and Manitoba to develop a set of common competencies to be demonstrated at entry to practice. Known as the Western Canada Competency Profile, this will inform lawyer training and education, including bar admission program development and articling standards, following validation by lawyers in all four provinces.

Importantly, substantive legal knowledge is only one aspect of competence, which encompasses a broader set of skills including interpersonal skills, technological capabilities, cross-cultural understanding, and personal well-being. The Competency Profile fosters a holistic understanding of the range of competencies required to deliver quality legal services. It was developed through a rigorous, industry-standard process, led by expert consultants and a representative task force from the four participating provinces.

Objective 2: Enhance supports and resources available for members to acquire and maintain these competencies.

- Cloud Computing Guide

During 2023, a working group completed a review and update of checklists and good practices to assist with evaluating and implementing cloud services within legal practice.

- Practice Management Assessment Tool

The Assessment Tool assists firms and legal organizations in assessing the strength of their organizational policies and processes to proactively identify and manage risks. This includes detailed lists of practice examples that highlight regulatory requirements and provide guidance. The second year of a three-year roll-out concluded in 2023 with 204 firms having successfully completed the self-assessment process.

Competency Supports and Tools

- Continuing Professional Development: Educational programming covering a wide range of topics
- Informal Ethics Opinions: Guidance on ethical issues
- Legal Resources: Access to bulk-purchased resources and research services
- Practice Advisor Program: Complaint reviews and recommendations to members in addition to
  - Expanded Practice Advisor Program: Access to advisors for issues related to practice management
  - New Solo and Small Firm Practice Reviews: Assistance for new solo or small law firms
- Practice Resources: A range of publications and tools for effective practice
- Successor Listing: Supports for developing a succession plan

Feedback on the Practice Management Assessment Tool

Designated Representatives offered the following reflections on use of the Assessment Tool during 2023:

- "The questions prompted discussions in our firm."
- "It was a great opportunity to review our firm's policies and to expand on them where necessary."
- "For me, it was good to do a review of our existing practices, and to see some areas for improvement."
- "Going through the exercise as a reminder of important issues/topics that are not always top of mind due to busyness of practice."
- "I am now getting cybersecurity training for all staff. I also think I should join some pro bono boards. I help pro bono clients, but I believe I could contribute to a committee/board."
- "It was a good tool to reflect on current operations and contemplate how improvements may be made."

• Principal Training Course

In 2022, the Law Society piloted a course to provide every principal with baseline training before undertaking the responsibility of supervising and teaching an articling student. The course consists of six self-directed lessons covering topics such as principal and student obligations and responsibilities, effective mentorship, setting and managing expectations, providing feedback and communicating in a culturally sensitive manner. Following a positive pilot, the course became mandatory for all principals beginning in 2023 with 100 percent compliance.

• Successor Listing

During 2023, the Law Society supplemented resources and supports to assist members to develop succession plans for their practices. This included an online listing to assist members to volunteer and indicate need for a successor. A functional successor arrangement allows for more secure planning for significant professional and life events. Agreeing to be a successor also creates opportunities for members to build their practice and their professional network.

Objective 3: Increase the effectiveness of professional development regulation and programming.

• Continuing Professional Development Renewal

In 2023, the Law Society began exploring options for improvement and renewal of continuing professional development regulation and programming to better reflect and support the needs of legal service providers and their clients. An initial change that came into effect on January 1, 2024, was the discontinuance of the pre-accreditation requirement for reported professional development hours. Members may select and report learning activities that suit their circumstances, subject to otherwise complying with the Continuing Professional Development Policy. This includes attaining and reporting 12 hours (including two ethics hours) during a year.

Goal Three: Increase Equity, Diversity and Inclusion

Equity, diversity and inclusion within the legal profession are important to strengthen access to legal services and the legitimacy and responsiveness of the administration of justice.

Progress Towards This Goal

Objective 2: Increase the competency of the Law Society Board, staff and members in relation to human rights, equity, diversity and inclusion.

• Learning Opportunities

The Law Society offered three continuing professional development sessions during 2023 focused on equity, diversity and inclusion themes, bringing the total sessions offered since 2011 to 16. Themes in 2023 focused on women in the law and the first Black woman lawyer in Canada, as well as estate planning for the 2SLGBTQQIA+ community.

• Practice Management Assessment Tool – Equity, Diversity and Inclusion

In 2023, additions focused on equity, diversity and inclusion were introduced into the Assessment Tool for use by firms and legal organizations. Areas for consideration relate to equity-seeking/equity-deserving groups, human resource obligations, accessibility measures, discrimination and harassment, Truth and Reconciliation, and human rights education. In 2023, 31 sole practitioner firms and 66 multi-lawyer firms completed self-assessment. Many of the participating firms provided thoughtful feedback and reflection related to equity, diversity and inclusion, with several indicating the establishment of an internal working group or committee to continue to evaluate progress.

Objective 3: Strengthen the Law Society's commitment to human rights, equity, diversity and inclusion in its regulatory structure, policies and initiatives.

• Addressing Discrimination and Harassment

In 2023, the Law Society amended section 6.3 of the Law Society of Saskatchewan Code of Professional Conduct relating to issues of discrimination and harassment. Through amendments to the Code, the Law Society has provided guidance and education in response to data identifying discrimination and harassment as significant concerns. The legal profession is an important public institution that must uphold human rights to advance the administration of justice.

Objective 4: Reduce barriers to entry, advancement and retention in the legal profession faced by equity-seeking/equity-deserving groups.

• Mentorship Program

To advance a mentorship program for members, the Law Society undertook a review of existing literature and key findings on mentorship in 2023, specifically in the equity, diversity and inclusion context. This included the importance and benefits of mentorship, barriers to effective mentorship opportunities and equitable mentorship good practices.

The literature review substantiated the benefits of mentorship and identified pitfalls to avoid. The Law Society also undertook a trial mentorship program during 2023. Trial participants indicated a positive experience and all participants responding to a survey indicated support for a formal mentorship program to advance.

Equity, Diversity and Inclusion Supports and Tools

- Continuing Professional Development: Programming to support an inclusive legal profession
- Equity Office: Support for legal service providers should equity issues arise
- Practice Management Assessment Tool: Guidance for effective legal practice including equity, diversity and inclusion

Truth and Reconciliation Supports and Tools

- Continuing Professional Development: Programming to support advancement of the Calls to Action, Calls to Justice and Treaty implementation
- Gladue Rights Database: Resources to strengthen understanding of the Gladue principles in partnership with Legal Aid Saskatchewan and the University of Saskatchewan
- Legal Resources: Indigenous titles and resources about residential schools and Indigenous perspectives

Goal Four: Advance Truth and Reconciliation

Advancing Truth and Reconciliation is important to recognize the unique needs of Indigenous people and to strengthen access to legal services and the legitimacy and responsiveness of the administration of justice.

Progress Towards This Goal

Objective 1: Increase diversity within the Law Society Board, staff and members to reflect Indigenous perspectives.

• Participation

The Law Society benefits from a Truth and Reconciliation Advisory Group of nine members, which includes Elder Sidney Fiddler from Waterhen Lake First Nation. During 2023, Elder and Knowledge Keeper Doug Pee-Ace from Yellow Quill First Nation also supported the Law Society through work with the Office of the Treaty Commissioner on Truth and Reconciliation through Treaty Implementation.

In 2023, four members (8.51%) of the Board and staff of the Law Society self-identified as Indigenous (Métis).

Objective 2: Increase the cultural competency of the Law Society Board, staff and members in line with the Calls to Action and Calls to Justice.

• Learning Opportunities

During 2023, the Law Society Board and staff participated in the second of a three-part series on anti-racism training. The Law Society also offered three continuing professional development sessions focused on Truth and Reconciliation themes, bringing the total sessions offered since 2011 to 41. Themes in 2023 focused on the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples in the context of resource development, Gladue submissions and the experiences of Indigenous colleagues in the legal profession.

Objective 3: Reduce barriers to entry, advancement and retention in the legal profession faced by Indigenous peoples.

• Becoming a Lawyer

In 2022, the Law Society initiated a project with Pro Bono Students Canada and the Public Legal Education Association of Saskatchewan to raise awareness regarding law as a career path. The project helps dispel myths about becoming a lawyer and gives high school students an opportunity to engage with the Law Society and current law students. In 2023, a virtual component to the project was developed and 129 youth participated in school workshops.

• Support for Indigenous Law Students

The Law Society financially supported attendance of Indigenous law students at the Indigenous Bar Association Conference and sponsored the 2023 conference. The Law Society also provided a donation for kwayeskāstasowin (setting things right) at the University of Saskatchewan College of Law. This donation contributes to mutual learning, personal and professional supports and reconciliation, and research.

Objectives 4 and 5: Advance the areas of priority and focus as recommended by the Law Society's Truth and Reconciliation Advisory Group; Advance the Truth, Reconciliation and Treaty Implementation Action Plan prepared in partnership with the Office of the Treaty Commissioner.

- Truth and Reconciliation through Treaty Implementation

To advance a framework for action as a first area of priority, the Law Society completed the second phase of a Truth and Reconciliation through Treaty Implementation exercise with the Office of the Treaty Commissioner in 2023. This resulted in an Action Plan that evolved the 38 recommendations identified during the first phase into key goals and actions that fall into five areas of focus:

- Policy Review and Reform
- Capacity Building
- Service and Accessibility
- Collaboration and Engagement
- Communication

The Law Society also co-presented with the Office of the Treaty Commissioner at a national workshop titled Unlearn and Learn: Truth and Reconciliation with the Canadian Network of Agencies of Regulation in support of the National Day for Truth and Reconciliation.

Goal Five: Increase Access to Legal Services and Justice

Commitment to access to justice supports accessible legal services to improve legal outcomes for the public.

Progress Towards This Goal

Objective 1: Reduce barriers to access caused by the Law Society's regulatory framework.

- Exemptions from Unauthorized Practice

In 2023, several amendments to Part 10 of the Law Society of Saskatchewan Rules were approved. These included an update to the exemption for university law students which introduced terms and conditions and clarified direct supervision requirements. A clarifying amendment to the exemption for lobbyists was also approved following consultation with the Office of the Registrar of Lobbyists Saskatchewan.

Analysis of Truth and Reconciliation through Treaty Implementation Training

The content of the 41 sessions offered by the Law Society in support of Truth and Reconciliation as at the end of 2023 were considered in the context of the Office of the Treaty Commissioner's recommendations to the Law Society related to training. At the end of 2023, the Law Society has provided at least one continuing professional development session in all recommended areas of focus.

Office of the Treaty Commissioner Training Recommendations for Truth and Reconciliation through Treaty Implementation

Training Recommendation	Total sessions offered
16 – Treaty relationship, Treaty promises, and the consequences of broken Treaty promises	10
17 – United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples	4
20 – Trauma, intergenerational narratives of the history and policies of Residential Schools and how the consequences are being seen today at all levels	8
21 – Anti-racism theory and practice, and the foundations of microaggressions, stereotypes, discrimination and biases	5
23 – Cultural competency, Indigenous spirituality, protocols, and/or intent for ceremony	6
24 – Intersectionality in Truth, Reconciliation and Treaty Implementation	1
31 – Foundations of power, privilege, and white supremacy and how it relates to the oppression of Indigenous peoples in Canada	7
32 – Differences between heritage, culture, and worldview and how these terms relate to reconciliation	1
37 – Content of the Calls for Justice for Murdered and Missing Indigenous Women, Girls and 2SLGBTQQIA+ People	1
38 – Indigenous views of sustainability, stewardship of the land, relationships with the land, and environmental protection	1

Access to Legal Services and Justice Supports and Tools

- Continuing Professional Development: Programming to support an accessible legal system for all
- Find Legal Assistance Directory: A database to connect the public with legal service providers
- Pro Bono Organizations: Registration and support for approved organizations to facilitate delivery of pro bono legal services to the public and host members in the Active Pro Bono registration category
- Practice Management Assessment Tool: Guidance for effective legal practice including strengthening access to legal services

• Legal Information Guidelines

The Law Society continued to provide presentations on the deregulation of legal information and accompanying Legal Information Guidelines and through three presentations connected with 41 legal information service providers in 2023.

• Limited Licensing Pilot

Through the Future of Legal Services Initiative, the Law Society continued implementation of the 13 recommendations in the Legal Services Task Team Final Report, a joint project with the Ministry of Justice of Saskatchewan. During 2023, progress focused on the Limited Licensing Pilot, which was initiated in early 2022 and allows individuals not otherwise authorized to deliver legal services to assist with unmet legal needs. Lessons from 2023 highlight that the Pilot continues to:

- receive significant interest from consumers of legal services;
- have a positive impact on affordability of legal services based on average legal fees for Western Canada;
- reach locations outside of Regina and Saskatoon; and
- increase consumer choice.

Objective 2: Increase the competency of the Law Society Board, staff and members in relation to access to justice issues.

• Learning Opportunities

During 2023, the Law Society hosted two workshops on access to justice themes, bringing the total sessions offered since 2013 to 11. The first focused on limited scope legal services as a follow-up to an earlier bootcamp providing tips and guidance on how to deliver this type of representation effectively. At the end of the bootcamp, participants were asked if they would make changes in their practice based on what they learned. From 47 responses, 66% said they would make changes in their practice including updating retainer letters, better communication with clients, and letting clients know about limited scope options.

The second workshop focused on the Saskatchewan Legal Needs Assessment, a research project with the College of Law and Centre for Forensic Behavioural Science and Justice Studies at the University of Saskatchewan supported by the Law Foundation of Saskatchewan and Law Society to better understand perspectives on legal needs in Saskatchewan. The surveys of 67 community organizations and 272 lawyers revealed key insights. Community organizations reported that the legal system is difficult to navigate for those looking for legal support for their justice-related problem and communities in which they operated did not offer adequate legal supports and services. Lawyer respondents reported that the eligibility criteria for free, subsidized, or low-cost legal services are too restrictive and there are not an adequate number of services available to support the legal needs of their communities.

• Practice Management Assessment Tool – Access to Legal Services

In 2023, additions focused on access to legal services were introduced into the Assessment Tool for use by firms and legal organizations. Areas for consideration include facilitating access to legal services, providing volunteer services, encouraging innovation and offering a variety of unbundled or limited scope services.

Objective 3: Increase support to members to diversify the methods used to deliver legal services, particularly to underserved segments of the public.

- Approved Pro Bono Organizations

The Law Society implemented a process to approve pro bono organizations for the effective delivery of pro bono legal services to the public in 2023. This also supports an Active Pro Bono registration category to facilitate the delivery of legal services by members who would otherwise be retired or inactive. At the end of 2023, there were five approved pro bono organizations providing services in the province.

Objective 4: Increase support for initiatives that address unmet legal needs and advance access to justice.

- Assistance for Incarcerated Persons

The Law Society worked with partners throughout 2023 to better connect the incarcerated population with legal information and options for legal assistance. Presentations were provided to over 50 correctional centre managers and staff and meetings with the Ministry of Corrections identified ways to meet the legal information and assistance needs of incarcerated persons. In 2023, the Law Society connected 330 incarcerated persons with legal information and assistance options.

- Portal for the Public

In 2023, the Law Society developed an online portal through its website to centralize legal information and assistance sources. This portal makes it easier for members of the public to learn about the law, research the law, find options for legal assistance and obtain legal information assistance.

- Saskatchewan Access to Justice Week

From October 23-27, 2023, the Law Society and CREATE Justice co-hosted an annual Access to Justice Week, which engages communities across the province in a conversation about improving access to justice. In 2023, the focus was on inclusivity and data-informed change and the public, law students and members of the justice community participated in eight events with 362 attendees.

Goal Six: Increase Wellness

Supporting the well-being of legal service providers by promoting a culture of wellness in the profession through appropriate education, member resources and regulation is key to ensuring that high quality legal services are available to the public.

Progress Towards This Goal

Objective 1: Increase awareness and understanding of mental illnesses, addictions and other health concerns to support members in identifying and addressing issues to mitigate risk to the public.

Limited Licensing Pilot insights at the end of 2023

PILOT PARTICIPANTS

33
Applicants

26
Approved participants

3
Not approved participants

1
Removed participant

3
Applications pending review

CLIENTS

12,459
Client inquiries regarding Pilot services*

3,750
Clients served via Pilot

87 Positive consumer reviews

7
Negative consumer reviews

* In some Pilot service contexts there is a high volume of inquiry regarding legal services, but not all clients will elect or be candidates for services.

Wellness Supports and Tools

- Continuing Professional Development: Educational programming focused on wellness
- Health and Wellness Resources: A range of publications and tools for developing wellness practices
- Lawyers Concerned for Lawyers: A program offered with Saskatchewan Lawyers' Insurance Association Inc. available to any Saskatchewan lawyer, articling student, law student or eligible family member for confidential assistance 24 hours a day and 7 days a week

• Learning Opportunities

In 2023, the Law Society offered four continuing professional development sessions focused on wellness, bringing the total sessions offered since 2011 to 18. One session, co-hosted with the Canadian Bar Association – Saskatchewan Branch, discussed the recommendations and findings of the National Study on the Psychological Health Determinants of Legal Professionals in Canada. A panel of lawyers, judges and legal educators shared personal experiences and spoke about reducing stigma in the profession, power dynamics for new and Indigenous lawyers, and implementing the study's recommendations.

A series of two sessions centered on building better boundaries. The first session focused on types of boundaries and creating and communicating healthy boundaries. In the second session, participants explored emotional aspects and roadblocks to boundary setting and received practical tips and exercises for having difficult conversations and regulating emotions. The final wellness session covered concrete strategies for supporting well-being and creating healthy resiliency, including exercising self-compassion.

Objective 2: Reduce the stigma associated with mental illnesses, addictions and other health concerns to encourage members to seek appropriate supports.

• Practice Management Assessment Tool – Wellness

As a component of a proactive approach, the Assessment Tool recognizes that the ability to deliver competent legal services can be affected by a person's well-being. Addictions, mental and physical health issues, and stress are often ignored in the legal profession. When left unaddressed, the impacts can be profound in one's personal and professional life. The Assessment Tool encourages reflection on the well-being of all staff and lawyers by considering a series of questions related to structured time away, available resources and programs, workplace health and safety, and response to addictions and illnesses and associated policies. Identified gaps are addressed with suggested resources and continuing professional development options.

Objective 3: Provide regulatory options to address mental illnesses, addictions and other health concerns experienced by members.

• Wellness and Health Crisis Working Group

In 2023, the Law Society established a Wellness and Health Crisis Working Group to provide a focused forum to advance recommendations from the 2022 National Study on the Psychological Health Determinants of Legal Professionals in Canada. In 2023, initial efforts focused on discussing existing scenarios and review of an environmental scan on initiatives advanced by law societies.

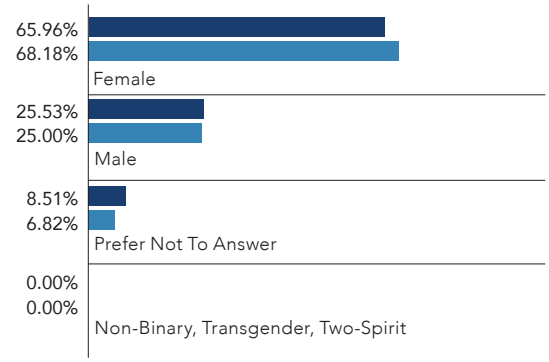
Demographics in 2023

Board and Staff Demographics

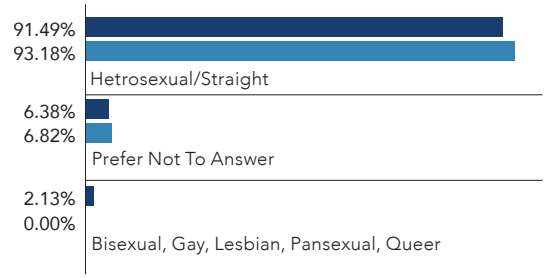
On December 31, 2023, there were 53 Board (21) and staff (32) members at the Law Society. Demographic data is reported for 47, as 6 did not complete the data collection.

For 2023, demographic trends demonstrate increased diversity as compared to 2022 in the percentage of Law Society Board and staff members self-identifying as belonging in the following equity-seeking/equity-deserving groups: bisexual, gay, lesbian, pansexual or queer (2.13%), one or more racialized or ethnic groups (7.49%) and Métis (1.69%). Trends also demonstrate an increase in the percentage of Board and staff identifying as speaking a first language other than or in addition to English or French (1.69%).

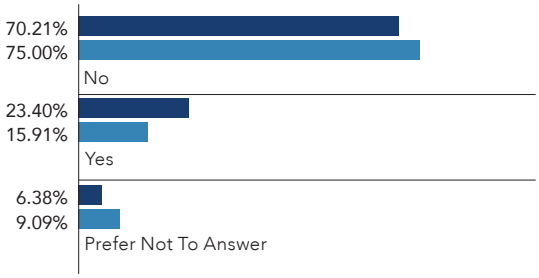
Gender Identity



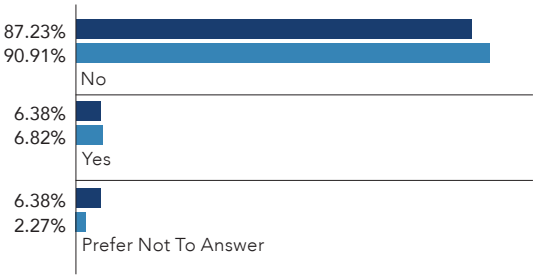
Sexual Identity



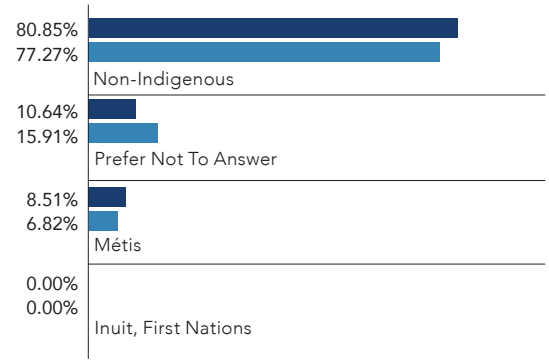
Race/Ethnicity



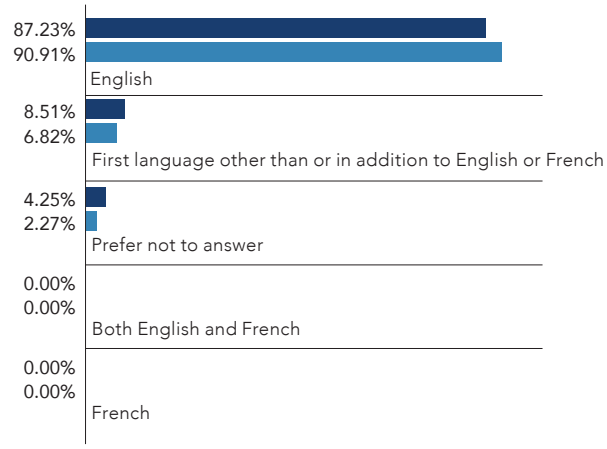
Disability



Indigeneity



First Language



Demographics in 2023

Membership Demographics

The Law Society has several membership categories and data is reported on two primary categories:

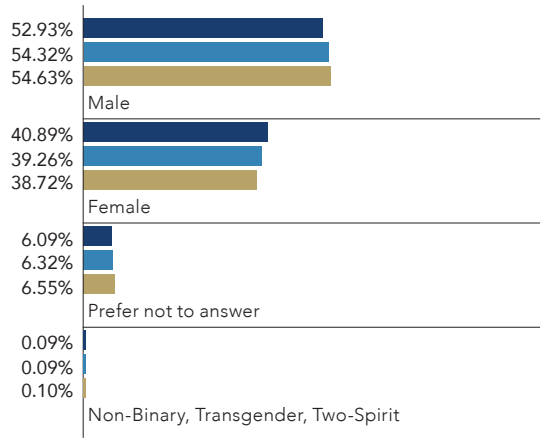
- Active: a member with a valid practising certificate entitled to practise law.
- Inactive: a member qualified to practise but electing not to maintain an Active membership and not currently permitted to practise law.

Active Member Demographics

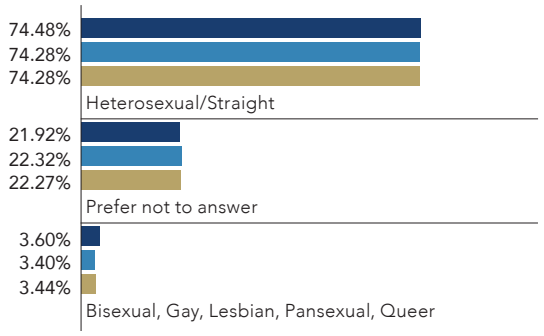
On December 31, 2023, there were 2,174 Active members residing within (1,917) and outside of (257) Saskatchewan. Demographic data is reported for 2,167 Active members, as 7 did not provide demographic information due to change in status/reinstatement.

During 2023, demographic trends demonstrate an increase since 2021 in the percentage of Active members self-identifying as belonging to the following equity-seeking/equity-deserving groups: female (1.63%), bisexual, gay, lesbian, pansexual, or queer (0.16%), one or more racialized or ethnic groups (2.14%), persons with a disability (0.10%), Inuit and/or First Nations (0.42%) and Métis (0.5%). Trends also demonstrate an increase in the percentage of Active members identifying as speaking a first language other than or in addition to English or French (0.64%).

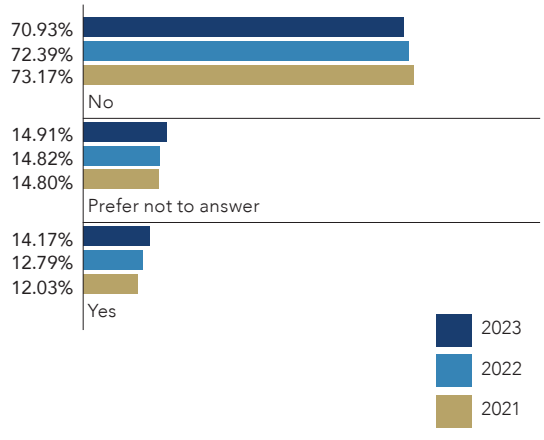
Gender Identity



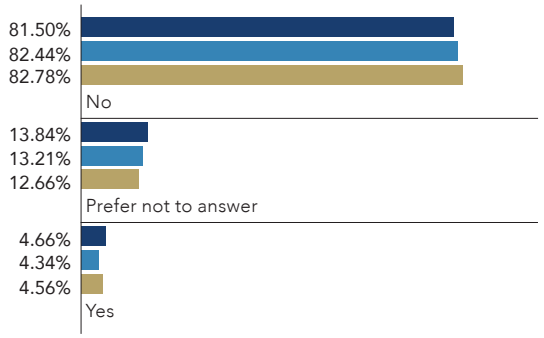
Sexual Identity



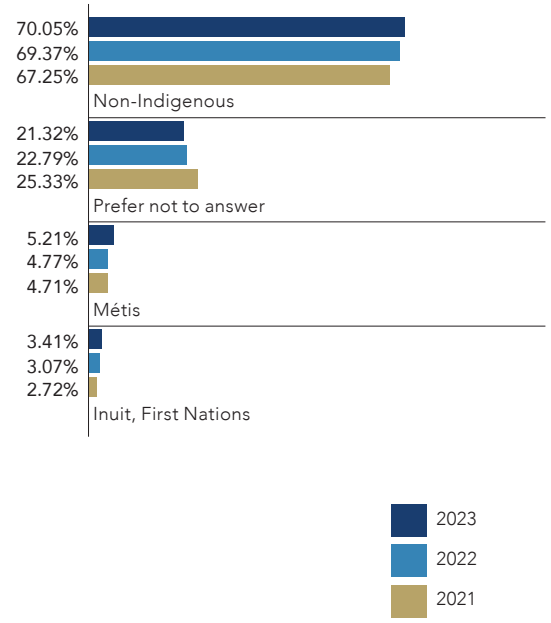
Race/Ethnicity



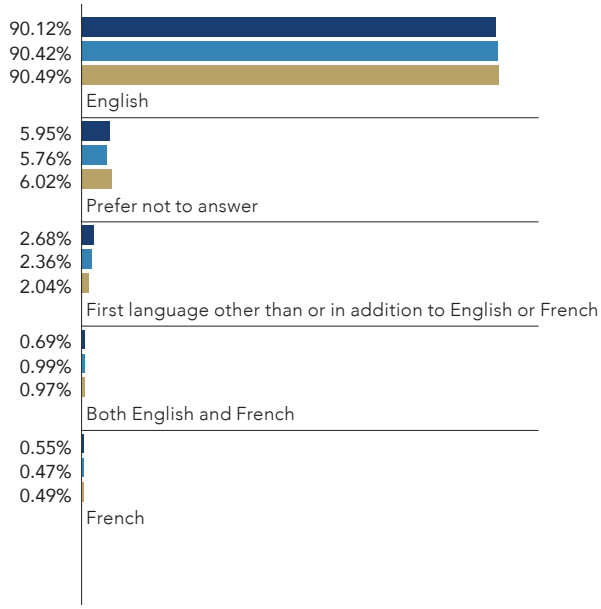
Disability



Indigeneity



First Language

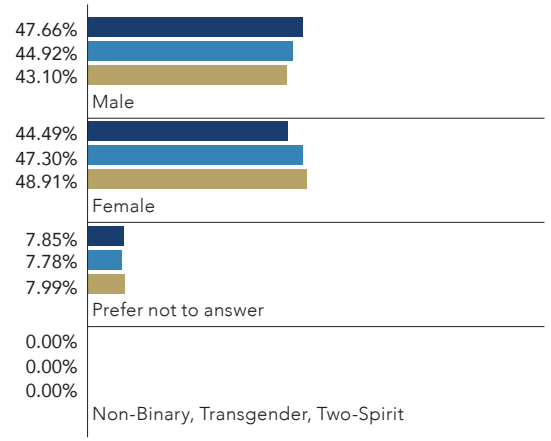


Inactive Member Demographics

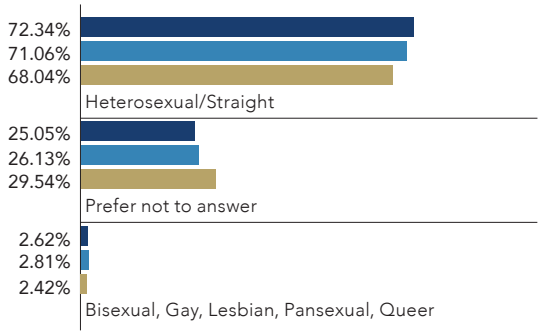
On December 31, 2023, there were 537 Inactive members residing within (272) and outside of (265) Saskatchewan. Demographic data is reported for 535 members, as 2 did not provide demographic information due to change in status/reinstatements.

The percentage of Inactive members self-identifying as belonging to equity-seeking/equity-deserving groups increased in 2023 as compared to 2021, with the exception of persons identifying as female and Inuit and/or First Nations. The percentage of Inactive members identifying as female decreased by 4.42% with an increase to the percentage of Inactive members self-identifying as male of 4.56%. The percentage of Inactive members identifying as Inuit and/or First Nations decreased by 0.77%.

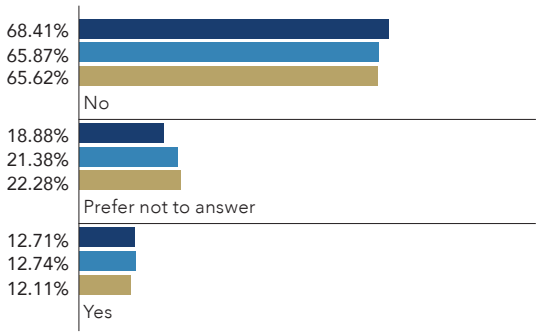
Gender Identity



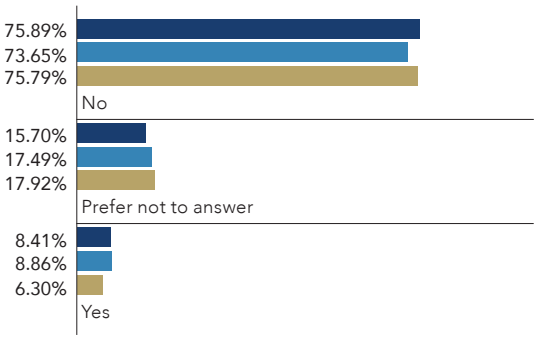
Sexual Identity



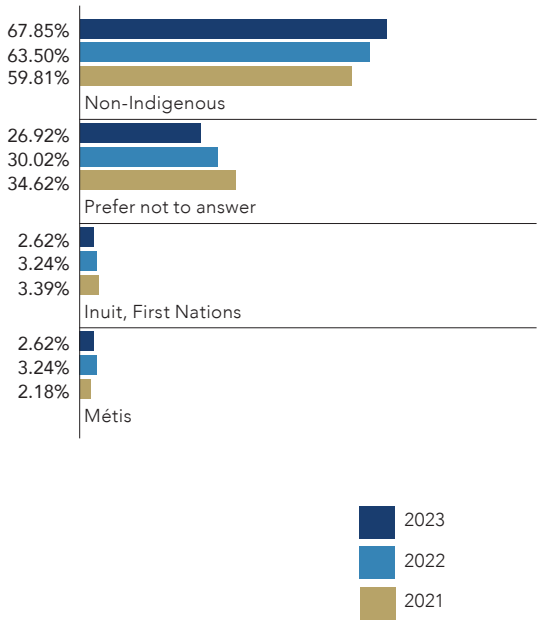
Race/Ethnicity



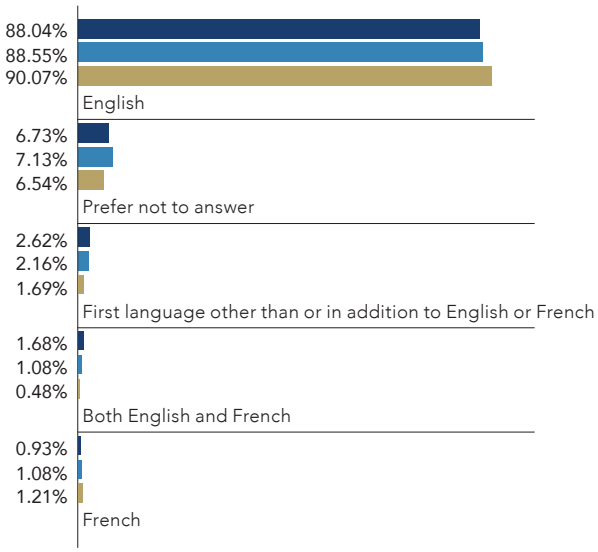
Disability



Indigeneity



First Language



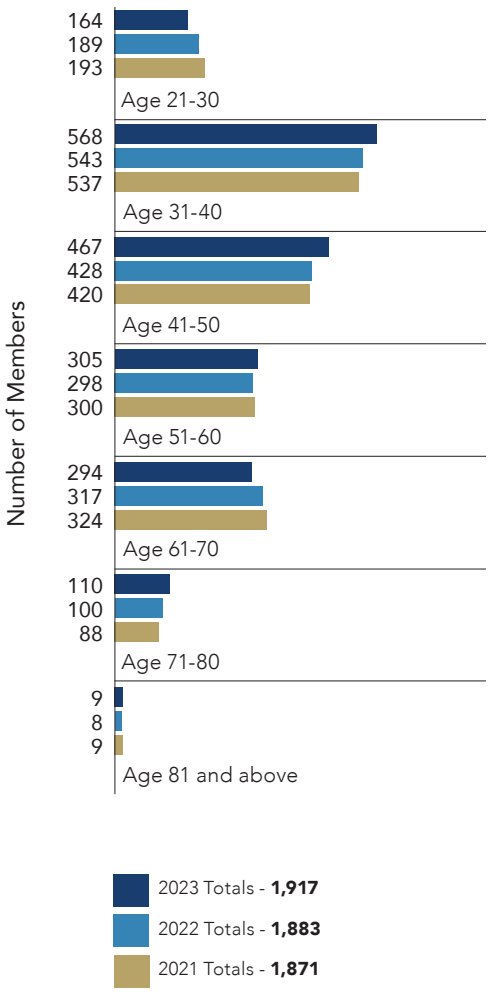
Data in 2023

Active Members

As of December 31, 2023, membership data is reported related to age, years as a member, type of practice and private practice for the 1,917 Active members residing within Saskatchewan. Geographic location is reported for the 1,876 Active members with a Saskatchewan firm or organization indicated in their Law Society employment profile.

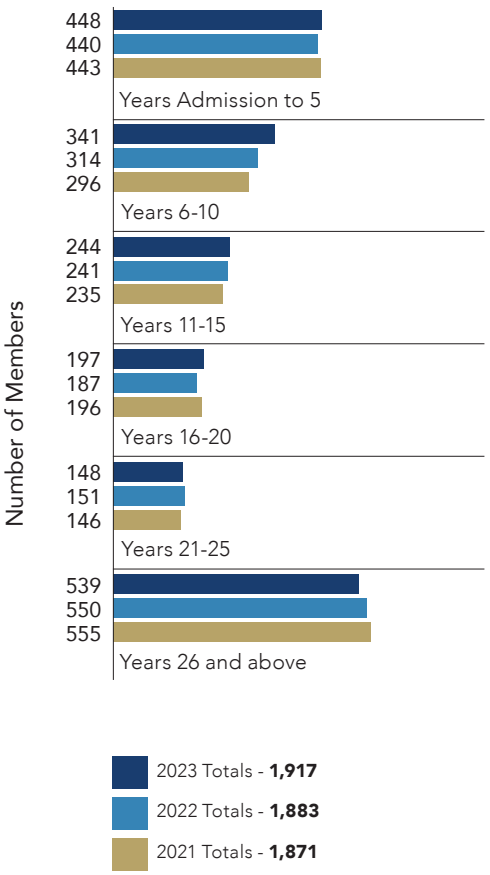
Ages

- Active Members Residing Within Saskatchewan



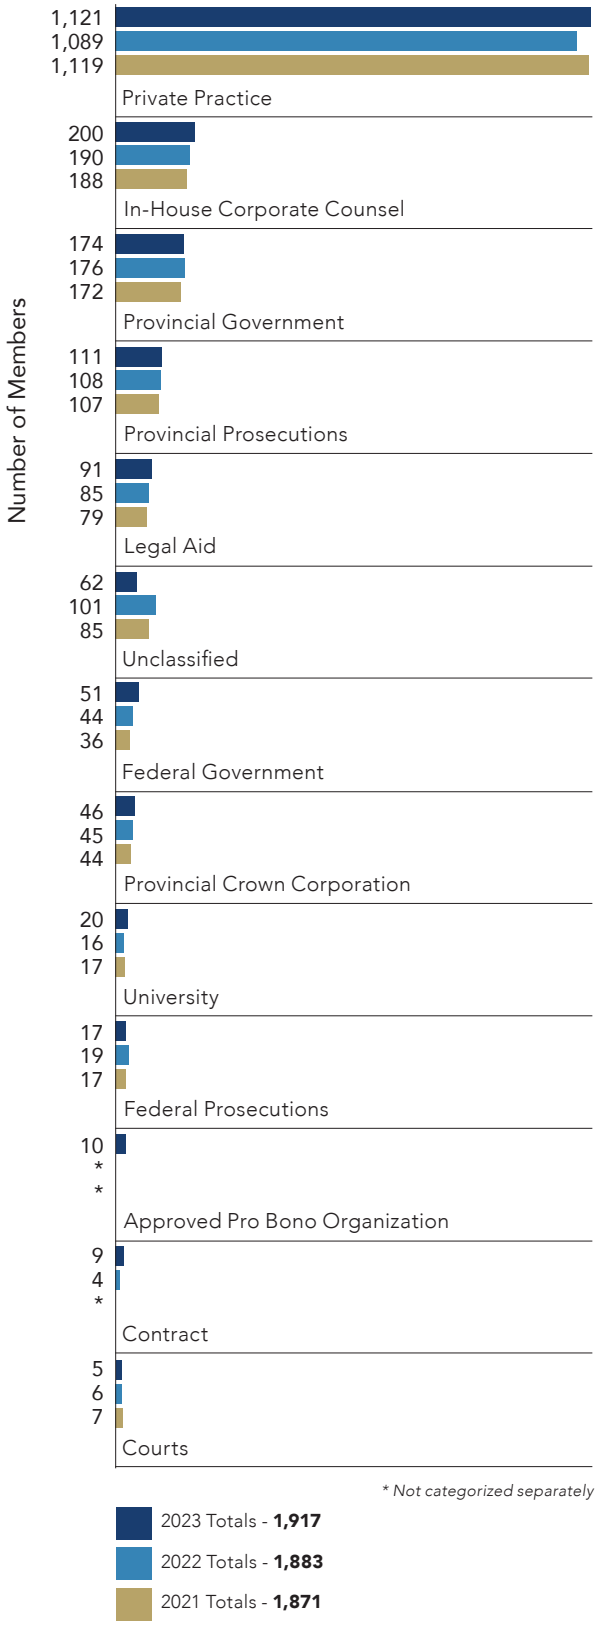
Years as a Member

- Active Members Residing Within Saskatchewan



Type of Practice

- Active Members Residing Within Saskatchewan



Private Practice

- Active Members Residing Within Saskatchewan

Number of Members in Firm	Number of Firms	Total Members
1	180	180
2	47	94
3	32	96
4	17	68
5	8	40
6	5	30
7	3	21
8	2	16
10	5	50
11	1	11
12	1	12
14	2	28
17	2	34
18	3	54
19	1	19
24	2	48
25	1	25
30	1	30
77	1	77
89	1	89
99	1	99
Total	316	1,121

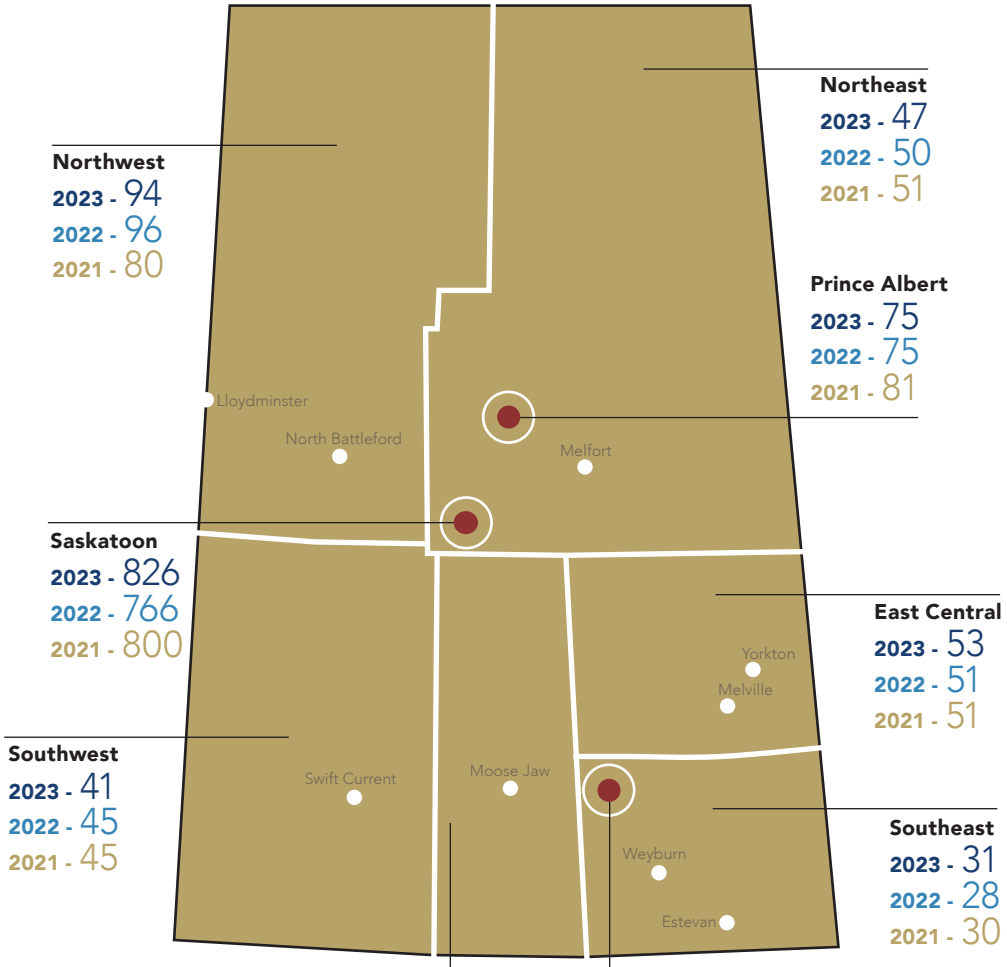
Geographic Location

- Active Members Practising Within Saskatchewan

Geographic location data in 2023 is reported for 1,876 Active members based on their employment profile indicating a Saskatchewan firm or organization or practice within Saskatchewan.

- Practising within Saskatchewan: Refers to an Active member who has indicated a Saskatchewan firm or organization in their Law Society employment profile. In some circumstances, an Active member may not list a firm or organization of employment in Saskatchewan: for example, an Active member who works at an out-of-province firm, or an Active member who is not employed with a firm or organization but retains Active member status.



TOTAL

2023 - 1,876
2022 - 1,802
2021 - 1,871

Data in 2023

Admissions

The Law Society has established rules and standards for assessing applicants who apply for admission to the legal profession. Applicants have the onus of proving that:

- they are suitable to practise;
- they are competent to perform the required duties, as applicable; and
- granting admission would not be inimical to the public interest or members and would not harm the standing of the legal profession generally.

The Law Society assesses the suitability of applicants in a variety of ways, but the following factors are particularly relevant:

- respect for the rule of law and administration of justice;
- honesty;
- governability; and
- financial responsibility.

When assessing an applicant, the Law Society considers the historical and social factors that have affected the applicant.

During 2023, 74 students-at-law, 86 lawyers and 65 transfer applicants were admitted in Saskatchewan.

Student Data	2023	2022	2021
Students admitted to the Practice Readiness Education Program	69	89	92
• Students admitted to the Practice Readiness Education Program with a Canadian law degree	62	73	80
• Students admitted to the Practice Readiness Education Program with a Certificate of Qualification from the National Committee on Accreditation (internationally trained)	7	16	12
Applicants admitted as students-at-law	74	98	97
Applicants not admitted as students-at-law	0	0	0
Students-at-law who secured articles	70	90	89
Principals approved (including secondments)	88	106	101

Bar Admissions Data	2023	2022	2021
New lawyers admitted	86	79	82
Transfer lawyers admitted	65	57	47
Applicants not admitted as a lawyer	0	0	0

Data in 2023

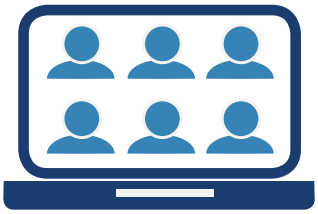
Competency

Continuing Professional Development

The Law Society provides educational programs to assist with the delivery of ethical and competent legal services to the public. In planning continuing professional development (CPD) programs, the Law Society is guided by a holistic understanding of competence and the Law Society's mission and strategic goals and objectives. The Law Society delivers programs in a variety of formats to facilitate learning and to enhance availability and convenience of learning opportunities. During 2023, 82 online courses, live programs or videos were delivered.

By Format

34
Live Programs



1
Online Course
(Principal Training)

47
Bite Size Videos

By Selected Topics for Live Programs

TOTAL HOURS 74.5 hours

TOTAL ETHICS HOURS 35 hours (47%)

THEMES IN FOCUS:

Access to Justice
2 hours

Civil Litigation
20 hours

Criminal Law
2 hours

Equity, Diversity and Inclusion
3.5 hours

General Practice
12.5 hours

Family Law
6.5 hours

Law Reform
3 hours

Practice Management
6.5 hours

Truth and Reconciliation
3 hours

Wellness
10 hours

Wills and Estates
6 hours

Technology
9 hours

Skills
26 hours

Data in 2023

Continuing Professional Development Registration and Top Programs in 2023

Total Registration for Live Programs – 2,785

Total Views for Bite Size Videos – 2,752

TOP FIVE PAID PROGRAMMING

1. CPD 368
When Estates Go to Court: Recent Saskatchewan Decisions
118

2. CPD 370
Managing Your Electronic Files
106

3. CPD 348
Boundaries for Lawyers
99

4. CPD 373
How to Better Manage Your Workload and Your Time
94

5. CPD 349
Excel for Family Lawyers
85

TOP FIVE FREE PROGRAMMING

1. CPD 366
Indigenous Judges Speak: Indigenous Experience in the Legal Profession and Beyond 294

2. CPD 367
Mental Health and the Legal Profession: Improving Lawyer Well-being 269

3. CPD 350
Violet King Henry First Black Woman Lawyer in Canada
195

4. CPD 365
Introducing the Gladue Submission Guide: A Practical Resource for Indigenous Clients and their Legal Counsel 177

5. CPD 371
Discover YOUR vLex: Artificial Intelligence, eBooks and Case Law
174

TOP FIVE BITE SIZE VIDEOS

1. Episode 115
Must Lawyers Store Wills Forever?
129

2. Episode 79
Should Lawyers Fear ChatGPT?
112

3. Episode 91
Email Tricks
84

4. Episode 128
AI Tools for Lawyers
81

5. Episode 100
OneNote for Meetings
79

Data in 2023

Legal Resources

The Law Society supports access to high quality and affordable legal services by providing Active members with access to one of Canada's best online legal resource collections, cost-effective and free legal publications, information expertise, and a library. In 2023, Law Society staff responded to 808 questions from lawyers over 316 hours.

Legal Resources Indicators

Indicator	Volume
	2023	2022	2021
Case digests published *	386	469	529
Lawyer inquiries responded to	808	722	676
Time assisting lawyers (hours)	316	330	291
Member Resource section website visits (as reported by Google Analytics)	131,283	185,031	182,731

The drop in the number of case digests published from 2021 to 2023 reflects backlog in publishing related to the COVID-19 pandemic.*
 The drop in website visits beginning in 2023 reflects an update to reporting in a new version of Google Analytics (GA4).*

Practice Supports

The Law Society provides each new solo or small law firm with a Practice Advisor to conduct a practice review to assist in developing an efficient and low-risk practice. This includes a series of resources and checklists for effective practice.

	Volume
	2023	2022	2021
New Solo or Small Firm Practice Review	22	34	31

Data in 2023

Professional Responsibility

Among the Law Society's responsibilities are the investigation and determination of complaints regarding the conduct and competence of members and law firms operating in the province. All complaints are taken seriously and handled as expeditiously as possible.

Any person may submit to the Law Society a complaint against a member or firm. Most complaints are received from the public, but complaints may also be received from other members, the judiciary or through self-reporting by a member. The Law Society may also initiate a complaint after becoming aware of incompetence, conduct unbecoming, lack of cooperation or deficiencies raising concerns regarding ethical obligations. A Special Fund is maintained by the Law Society to respond to claims where a member has misappropriated client funds.

Complaint Matters

During 2023, the Law Society received

379
CONTACTS RELATED TO COMPLAINT MATTERS:

Year-Over-Year Comparisons for Complaint Matters

Information is provided on the year-over-year comparison of incoming complaint files within the year and the outcome/status of those files at the end of the calendar year in which they were received. Given that processing time for some files can take several months, some matters (especially those received later in a calendar year) are commonly carried over to the following year.

Complaint Matters as at December 31	2023	2022	2021
Ruling request from member	0	1	1
Bankruptcy self-report by member	1	0	0
Special Fund (defalcation) claim	1	0	2
Contacts remaining as potential complaint matters	128	125	114
Complaint files opened	249	232	155

Complaint Files Opened in 2023 - Outcomes/Status to December 31	2023	2022	2021
Mediated	1	N/A	N/A
Referred to Ethics Committee	2	0	1
Referred to Competency Committee	3	N/A	N/A
Issued Formal Caution	4	9	2
Referred to Conduct Investigation Committee	6	3	5
Appointed a Practice Advisor	7	1	4
Placed in abeyance due to ongoing related court matter	7	2	N/A
Closed after being withdrawn, determined as incomplete or repetitive of a prior complaint	14	27	N/A
Dismissed with no further action after investigation	43	60	45
Dismissed summarily	57	N/A	N/A
Remained open and carried forward to completion after December 31	107	130	98
Totals	251	232	155

Total outcomes reported are higher than the number of complaint files opened, as some files may have more than one outcome. For example, a file may be referred to a committee and have a Practice Advisor appointed.*

Complaints Resolved or Referred and Outcomes

275 complaints (received in 2023 or earlier) were resolved or referred for further disciplinary or remedial response during 2023.

85% resolved or referred within 12 months from the date received

95% resolved or referred within 18 months from the date received

The outcomes were as follows:

1 referred to Ethics Committee

3 referred to Competency Committee

7 referred to Conduct Investigation Committee

12 closed after being withdrawn, determined as incomplete or repetitive of a prior complaint

19 issued formal caution

21 appointed a Practice Advisor

66 dismissed summarily

146 dismissed with no further action after investigation

Practice Supports

The Law Society offers informal ethics assistance to members and provides confidential assistance in interpreting the Law Society of Saskatchewan Code of Professional Conduct.

Informal Ethics Opinions

Volume

2023 - 151 | 2022 - 170 | 2021 - N/A

Data in 2023

Trust Accounts

The Law Society regulates the trust accounts of members through accounting and reporting standards that are set out in Parts 15 and 16 of the Law Society of Saskatchewan Rules. To support adherence to the Rules and provide proactive oversight, the Law Society receives annual reporting from all firms providing legal services to the public. The Law Society also conducts compliance audits on law firms located in Saskatchewan that are selected on a risk or random basis throughout the year. The focus is on identifying rule breaches and ensuring good office procedures are in place.

During 2023

44

compliance audits were conducted

32 compliance audits required follow-up

2

files were referred to Professional Responsibility

Finances in 2023

The 2023 financial statements are available on the Law Society website.

Active Member Fees

The annual Active member fee for 2023 was $2,675. These funds were allocated as follows:

• Regulation and governance of the legal profession	$ 1,850
• Legal Resources	$ 447
• Special Fund Assessment	$ 200
• Practice Readiness Education Program	$ 111
• Pro Bono Law Saskatchewan	$ 30
• Federation of Law Societies of Canada	$ 27
• Lawyers Concerned for Lawyers	$ 10

Funding Support

In 2023, contributions were made to partner organizations to support the Law Society's strategic goals and objectives, especially as related to competency, equity, diversity and inclusion, Truth and Reconciliation, access to justice and wellness.

Contributions to Partner Organizations
Gladue Rights Research Database	Goal 4
Indigenous Bar Association National Conference	Goals 3 and 4
Indigenous Law Students Association	Goals 3 and 4
Pro Bono Law Saskatchewan	Goal 5
Saskatchewan Law Review	Goal 2
University of Saskatchewan Scholarship (kwayeskāstasowin)	Goals 3 and 4

People in 2023

Board

Front row (L-R): James Korpan, K.C., Suzanne Lalonde, K.C., Andrea Argue, K.C. and Adam Touet

Middle row (L-R): Tiffany Paulsen, K.C., Martin Phillipson, Christopher Triggs, William Lane, Laura Klemmer and Julie Ann Wriston

Back row (L-R): Idowu Adetogun, Nolan Kondratoff, Keith Amyotte and Rochelle Wempe

Absent: Jonathan Bodvarson, Sonia Eggerman, James Fyfe, K.C., Foluke Laosebikan, K.C., Jeff Lee, K.C., James Morrison, K.C. and Lynda Kushnir Pekrul

Board Executive

Andrea Argue, K.C.,
President

Suzanne Lalonde, K.C.,
Vice-President

James Korpan, K.C.,
Past President

Board Members

Idowu Adetogun (appointed April 28, 2023)

Keith Amyotte (appointed April 28, 2023)

Jonathan Bodvarson

Sonia Eggerman

James Fyfe, K.C.

Laura Klemmer (appointed April 28, 2023)

Nolan Kondratoff

Lynda Kushnir Pekrul

William Lane

Foluke Laosebikan, K.C.

Jeff Lee, K.C.

James Morrison, K.C.

Tiffany Paulsen, K.C.

Martin Phillipson

Zachery Solomon (to February 2023)

Adam Touet

Christopher Triggs (appointed April 28, 2023)

Rochelle Wempe

Julie Ann Wriston

Executive Leadership Team

Tim Brown, K.C.,
Executive Director

Tim Huber, K.C.,
Deputy Executive Director and General Counsel

Kara-Dawn Jordan, K.C.,
Deputy Executive Director and Director of Strategy and Governance

Laurie Johnson,
Director of Human Resources

Andrea Johnston,
Director of Admissions and Education

Jody Martin,
Director of Regulation

Staff

Alma Aldana Pinto,
Administrative Assistant

Ruth Armstrong,
Office Administrator (to October 2023)

Laura Cahill,
Stakeholder Relations Liaison

Cheryl Eberle,
Membership Officer

Pamela Elford,
Professional Responsibility Investigator

Jenna Faris,
Administrative Assistant

Savanna Fisher,
Professional Responsibility Assistant

Ken Fox,
Co-Director of Legal Resources

Pamela Harmon,
Director of Finance and Chief Financial Officer

Amanda Irvine,
Library Technician

Christine Johnston,
Admissions and Education Counsel

Alan Kilpatrick,
Co-Director of Legal Resources

Stephanie Kievits,
Director of Trust Safety

Pamela Kovacs,
Senior Policy Counsel

Liz Lynchuk,
Corporate Executive Assistant

Kiran Mand,
Admissions and Education Counsel

Christine Muldoon,
Resource Coordinator

Chinye Nwanze,
Communications and Project Coordinator

Michelle Owolagba,
Professional Responsibility Counsel

Shane Parker,
Professional Responsibility Counsel (to April 2023)

Valerie Payne,
Director of Professional Responsibility

Pamela Slessor Hay,
Professional Responsibility Assistant

Julie Sobowale,
Director of Communications (to March 2023)

Sara Stanley,
Library Technician

Jennifer Van Der Velden,
Administrative Assistant

Bonnie Wagman,
Accounting Analyst

Melissa Warren,
Continuing Professional Development Program Coordinator

Paul Westgate,
Project Director

Allison Williamson,
Manager of Member Services

People in 2023

Indigenous Elders and Knowledge Keepers

Elder Sidney Fiddler, Waterhen Lake First Nation
Elder and Knowledge Keeper Doug Pee-Ace, Yellow Quill First Nation

Advisory Groups

Truth and Reconciliation Advisory Group

Members:
Sidney Fiddler (Elder and Co-Facilitator)
Mary Culbertson (Facilitator)
Foluke Laosebikan, K.C. (Facilitator) (ex officio - Chair of Equity and Access Committee)
Keith Amyotte (Co-Facilitator)
Nordika Dussion (Co-Facilitator)
Dr. Jaime Lavallee (Co-Facilitator)
Cara-Faye Merasty (Co-Facilitator)
Stephen Mussell (Co-Facilitator)
Riva Farrell Racette (Co-Facilitator)
Eleanore Sunchild, K.C. (Co-Facilitator)

Staff:
Kara-Dawn Jordan, K.C. (Staff Lead)
Pamela Kovacs (Staff Lead)
Christine Johnston

Committees – Ad Hoc

Firm Regulation

Members:
Lynda Kushnir Pekrul (Chair)
Erin Kleisinger, K.C. (Vice-Chair)
James Morrison, K.C. (Vice-Chair)
Kathryn Gilliss
William Lane

Staff:
Jody Martin (Staff Lead)
Michelle Owolagba

Future of Legal Services

Members:
Gerald Tegart, K.C. (Chair)
Jeff Lee, K.C. (Vice-Chair)
Idowu Adetogun
Jonathan Bodvarson
James Fyfe, K.C.
Laura Klemmer
Nolan Kondratoff
William Lane
Martin Phillipson
Christopher Triggs
Rochelle Wempe

Staff:
Pamela Kovacs (Staff Lead)
Jody Martin (Staff Lead)
Tim Brown, K.C.
Tim Huber, K.C.
Andrea Johnston
Kara-Dawn Jordan, K.C.
Julie Sobowale (to March 2023)

Trust Safety

Members:
Nolan Kondratoff (Chair)
Idowu Adetogun
Keith Amyotte
Sonia Eggerman

Staff:
Jody Martin (Staff Lead)
Pamela Harmon
Tim Huber, K.C.
Stephanie Kievits

Committees – Standing

Executive Committee

Members:
Andrea Argue, K.C., President
Suzanne Lalonde, K.C., Vice-President
James Korpan, K.C., Past President
Tim Brown, K.C., Executive Director

Staff:
Tim Huber, K.C.
Kara-Dawn Jordan, K.C.

Audit Committee

Members:
Sonia Eggerman (Chair)
Jeff Lee, K.C.
Tiffany Paulsen, K.C.
Craig Zawada, K.C.

Staff:
Pamela Harmon (Staff Lead)
Tim Brown, K.C.
Kara-Dawn Jordan, K.C.

Competency Committee

Members:
Jonathan Bodvarson (Chair)
Idowu Adetogun (Vice-Chair)
Laura Klemmer (Vice-Chair)
William Lane (Vice-Chair)
James Morrison, K.C. (Vice-Chair)
Tiffany Paulsen, K.C. (Vice-Chair)
Martin Phillipson (Vice-Chair)
Adam Touet (Vice-Chair)
Rochelle Wempe (Vice-Chair)

Staff:
Andrea Johnston (Staff Lead)
Christine Johnston
Kiran Mand

Conduct Investigation Committee

Members:
Adam Touet (Chair)
Jeff Lee, K.C. (Vice-Chair)
Keith Amyotte
Jeff Baldwin
James Fyfe, K.C.
Laura Klemmer
James Korpan, K.C.
Suzanne Lalonde, K.C.
Julie Ann Wriston

Staff:
Tim Huber, K.C. (Staff Lead)
Valerie Payne (Staff Lead)
Michelle Owolagba
Shane Parker (to April 2023)

Discipline Policy Committee

Members:
Rochelle Wempe (Chair)
James Korpan, K.C. (Vice-Chair)
Keith Amyotte
James Fyfe, K.C.
Lynda Kushnir Pekrul
James Morrison, K.C.
Adam Touet (ex officio – Chair of Conduct Investigation Committee)

Staff:
Tim Huber, K.C. (Staff Lead)
Valerie Payne (Staff Lead)
Jody Martin (Staff Lead)
Michelle Owolagba
Shane Parker (to April 2023)

Equity and Access Committee

Members:
Foluke Laosebikan, K.C. (Chair)
Martin Phillipson (Vice-Chair)
Adam Touet (Vice-Chair)
Keith Amyotte
Sonia Eggerman
James Fyfe, K.C.
Habibat Kasim
Stephen Mussell
Christopher Triggs
Dr. Stephen Yusuff

Staff:
Kara-Dawn Jordan, K.C. (Staff Lead)
Pamela Kovacs (Staff Lead)
Kiran Mand
Julie Sobowale (to March 2023)

Ethics Committee

Members:

Jeff Lee, K.C. (Chair)
Jonathan Bodvarson (Vice-Chair)
Laura Klemmer
Lynda Kushnir Pekrul
James Morrison, K.C.
Tiffany Paulsen, K.C.
Christopher Triggs
Julie Ann Wriston

Staff:

Michelle Owolagba (Staff Lead)
Shane Parker (to April 2023)
Valerie Payne

Governance Committee

Members:

Nolan Kondratoff (Chair)
Rochelle Wempe (Vice-Chair)
William Lane
Jeff Lee, K.C.
Tiffany Paulsen, K.C.
Adam Touet
James Korpan, K.C.
Christopher Triggs
Julie Ann Wriston

Staff:

Kara-Dawn Jordan, K.C. (Staff Lead)
Tim Brown, K.C.
Tim Huber, K.C.

Nominations Committee

Members:

William Lane (Chair)
Sonia Eggerman (Vice Chair)
Andrea Argue, K.C.
Jonathan Bodvarson
Nolan Kondratoff
Rochelle Wempe

Staff:

Tim Huber, K.C. (Staff Lead)
Tim Brown, K.C.
Kara-Dawn Jordan, K.C.

Law Society of Saskatchewan

1100-2002 Victoria Avenue
Regina, Saskatchewan S4P 0R7
1-833-733-0133 or 306-569-8242
reception@lawsociety.sk.ca

Annex: Saskatchewan Lawyers' Insurance Association Inc. Report

Saskatchewan Lawyers' Insurance Association Inc. (SLIA) is a non-profit corporation and a wholly owned subsidiary of the Law Society of Saskatchewan. SLIA provides mandatory errors and omissions insurance to the members of the Law Society pursuant to The Legal Profession Act, 1990. SLIA is a member of the Canadian Lawyers Insurance Association (CLIA). CLIA is a reciprocal insurance exchange, which offers mandatory liability insurance and cyber insurance to lawyers licenced by law societies in nine Canadian jurisdictions, and a voluntary excess insurance program. The SLIA program is run by in-house counsel and a claims coordinator, who report to a board of directors composed of both Bencher and non-Bencher members.

2023 Committee Members

Board

James Morrison, K.C. (Chair)
Tiffany Paulsen, K.C. (Vice-Chair)
Idowu Adetogun
Perry Erhardt, K.C.
Michael Milani, K.C.
Tom Schonhoffer, K.C.
Craig Zawada, K.C.

Staff

Dave McCashin
Stephen McLellan
Linda-Marie Straza

By establishing local control of files within the limits of the group deductible, lawyers insured through SLIA are assured that:

- their files are being both assessed and litigated by local counsel;
- their interests are being represented as stakeholders on the advisory board of their insurer;
- profits following any given claims years are retained locally for their benefit.

SLIA has continued to maintain one of the lowest insurance levies across all Canadian jurisdictions.

The 2022-2023 policy period saw a slight decrease in the number of claims opened over the year before and an increase in the severity of the claims to an average of $53,000 per claim. As the frequency and severity of claims has a direct impact on the amount of the levy, SLIA continues to stress the importance of loss prevention and continues to work to support its members to avoid or reduce claims.

SLIA, together with the Law Society, fund the Practice Advisor Program, which in addition to complaint reviews and recommendations to members, also facilitates advisors to meet with each new solo practitioner and new small firm to provide assistance and recommendations to assist members in developing a low-risk practice. The Expanded Practice Advisor Program has been made available to any members who need help working through practice management issues. Members are encouraged to contact practice advisors with questions or concerns about practice standards or management issues. Under this confidential program, the practice advisor and member will work together to address the issue at no cost to the member and no formal report will be provided to the Law Society or SLIA.

SLIA also contributes to the Trusteeship Program which provides oversight to members who do not have a succession plan in place. The Trusteeship Program is a loss prevention measure which allows early detection of matters which could become potential clams and allows an opportunity to remedy those matters before they progress.

SLIA has annually made a grant to the Law Society's Legal Resources department to support member competency and help ensure that members have access to the practice resources they need. Access to mental health resources and assistance continues to be a priority for SLIA. Members are encouraged to make use of the free confidential assistance offered through Lawyers Concerned for Lawyers for personal counselling, as well as online learning and resources through HomeWeb. Highlights of resources available are provided to members bi-monthly through SLIA News.

SLIA manages the Law Society Outside Directorship Liability Insurance Policy for members involved as a Director or Officer of an outside organization. This Policy covers various types of claims made by reason of such services.

2022-2023 Policy Period Data

New Claims: 119 (77 full claims and 42 pre-claim files)

Insurance Assessment: $1,303

Severity of the claims: $53,000 per claim

New Claims by Area of Practice:

Total: 77 Full Claims

New Claims by Error Category:

Total: 77 Full Claims

New Claims by Cause Category:

Total: 77 Full Claims

SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

ANNUAL REPORT 2023

TABLE OF CONTENTS

The expansion of the Court's online booking service is part of the Court's work to expand its digital services.

REPORT OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND THE ASSOCIATE CHIEF JUSTICE

INTRODUCTION

The Supreme Court of British Columbia is a court of inherent jurisdiction and the superior trial court in the province. Through its day-to-day work, the Court fulfills its constitutional role in our democracy as a neutral and impartial arbiter of disputes in a wide range of subject areas, ensuring that the law is upheld, applied to all persons equally, and respected. The judges, associate judges, and registrar of the Court preside over chambers applications of numerous types, various conferences involving counsel and parties, appeals from decisions of judges of the Provincial Court of British Columbia and from some administrative tribunals, and, of course, trials. It is often necessary for the judges, associate judges, and registrar to write rulings or reserved judgments to explain the result of the proceeding and to set precedents for future litigants. The Court also works with other bodies and organizations in the justice system to strengthen respect for and understanding of the importance of the rule of law.

THE WORK OF THE COURT

Change of Title from Master to Associate Judge

Amendments to the Supreme Court Act to change the title of master to associate judge were brought into force on January 15, 2024. Accordingly, judicial officers formerly known as masters are referred to as associate judges in this annual report. The modernization of this title more accurately captures the important role of associate judges and promotes a more inclusive and accessible justice system.

On January 15, 2024, Chief Justice Hinkson issued Practice Direction 64 - Form of Address which updated the form of address for judges, associate judges, the registrar and district registrars. Necessary updates were made to other practice directions, administrative notices, policies, and other content on the Court's website.

Online Booking for Civil and Family Matters

Since 2020, counsel and parties have had the option of booking case planning conferences, judicial case conferences, and trial management conferences through the Supreme Court's online booking system. In 2023, the Court continued its work to expand the availability of online booking for trials and long chambers hearings in civil and family matters. The Court expects to transition to a fully online booking system in the Fall of 2024. The expansion of the Court's online booking service is part of the Court's work to expand its digital services. In addition, online booking will free up significant staff time, both for the Court and for law firms booking hearings. The online scheduling tool will ensure that all parties and counsel who are seeking to book trials and lengthy chambers hearings have an equal opportunity to do so.

In order to provide better support and information for French and bilingual criminal proceedings, the Court published French translations of its criminal practice directions, other procedural notices and some information sheets on its website.

Trial Management Conferences

In September 2023, the Supreme Court Civil Rules and Supreme Court Family Rules were amended to provide that trial management conferences are no longer mandatory in all cases. Prior to the amendments, trial management conferences were required for all scheduled trials, and a significant amount of judicial time was expended managing trials that ultimately did not proceed. It is anticipated that reducing the amount of judicial time spent on trial management conferences will free up time for the hearing of other types of matters. The amended rules provide that a trial management conference will be held at the request of a party, or by order of the Court. A trial management conference is also required if a trial is set for longer than 15 days, if a party is not represented by a lawyer, or if a trial is to be heard by a jury.

Associate Judges Chambers Pilot Project Expands Electronic Delivery of Materials

The Associate Judges Chambers Pilot Project allows for the submission of electronic application records for some matters using Court Services Online. The Project applies to applications scheduled for 30 minutes or less in associate judges chambers. The Project, which commenced in August 2022, was rolled out gradually and is now available in all registries with associate judges sittings.

French and Bilingual Criminal Proceedings

Associate Chief Justice Holmes issued Criminal Practice Direction 5 – French or Bilingual Criminal Jury Trials effective September 1, 2023, expanding the locations available for French or bilingual criminal jury trials to include Vancouver. Previously, such trials were only available in New Westminster. The expansion reflects the availability of French-speaking potential jurors. In order to provide better support and information for French and bilingual criminal proceedings, the Court published French translations of its criminal practice directions, other procedural notices and some information sheets on its website. The Court also prepared French versions of memoranda that provide procedural information about criminal trials and are used by trial judges assigned to criminal proceedings with self-represented accused.

Criminal Jury Selection in One Stage

Between September 2020 and September 2023, the Court held criminal jury selections in two stages. The two-stage selection process allowed the Court to conduct jury selections in a safe way during the COVID-19 pandemic, while preserving the essential legal aspects of a criminal jury selection. After the pandemic related public health restrictions were lifted, the Court decided it was no longer necessary to retain the two-stage process, and in September 2023, the Court adopted a one-stage jury selection process that completes within a day.

Increasing Number of Criminal Jury Trials

There has been a general increase in the number of criminal jury trials booked over the past five years, with 218 criminal jury trials booked to start in 2023, 202 in 2022, 154 in 2021, 172 in 2020, and 127 in 2019. A large number of criminal jury trials do not proceed as scheduled for various reasons, however, the rate at which they do proceed has remained roughly consistent over the past five years, at about 22%, leading to an increase in the over all number of criminal jury trials proceeding in the Court during this period. In 2023 there were 54 criminal jury trials, compared with 39 in 2022, 38 in 2021, 21 in 2020 (lower than normal due to the temporary suspension of criminal jury trials from March to September 2020 as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic), and 35 in 2019.

Length of Trials Increasing

There appears to be a general increase in the length of trials booked over the past two years, with a larger proportion of trials being booked for more than five days. Longer trials result in judges not being available to preside over additional matters.

Transition Away from Remaining COVID-19 Processes

Over the course of 2023, the Court continued to review its remaining COVID-19 Notices, which were issued between 2020-2023 as temporary measures to respond to the procedural challenges of the pandemic. Nearly all of the remaining COVID-19 notices have been rescinded, and various practice directions and an administrative notices have been developed for practices and procedures that will continue indefinitely. The COVID-19 notices remaining in effect at the end of 2023 were:

- COVID-19 Notice 44 - Notice to the Public and Profession regarding Use of the File Transfer Server – Insolvency and Other Proceedings; and
- COVID-19 Notice 2 - Affidavits for Use in Court Proceedings.

Courthouse Closures

Golden Law Courts

A fire on March 13, 2023 destroyed the Golden Law Courts. In response, court registry services were provided from the Ministry of Children and Family Development Office in Golden, and trials, chambers applications and other appearances were relocated to Cranbrook Law Courts. Facilities staff from the Ministry of Attorney General and the Real Property Division of the Ministry of Citizens' Services have begun to work on the replacement of the Golden Law Courts.

Impact of Wildfires on Court Service Across the Province

Wildfires in a number of locations across the province during the summer of 2023 temporarily disrupted court services. Similar or increasing disruptions are expected in the future. When these occur, the Court works with the Attorney General's Court Services Branch to arrange alternative ways to provide access to court registry services and court proceedings, including by providing remote or virtual hearing options for court participants, rescheduling hearings, and arranging for temporary registry services at other locations.

Artificial Intelligence and the Court

The Court expects litigants, lawyers, and others who participate in court proceedings to inform themselves of the current issues and advice regarding artificial intelligence in relation to court proceedings, and to ensure that the materials they produce to the Court are authentic and accurate.

The Court is closely monitoring the significant developments in artificial intelligence technology which may assist court processes and increase access to justice, but which also present potential risks, including to accuracy and transparency in court proceedings. The Court expects litigants, lawyers, and others who participate in court proceedings to inform themselves of the current issues and advice regarding artificial intelligence in relation to court proceedings, and to ensure that the materials they produce to the Court are authentic and accurate.

Bumping of Long Chambers Applications and Trials

The Court continues to struggle with having too few judges to meet the demand for hearings and trials, and continues to have to bump unacceptably large numbers of long chambers applications and trials. A scheduled hearing or trial is considered "bumped" if it cannot be rescheduled within a week of its original date because no judge is available to preside. The Court recognizes the burden on litigants when cases do not proceed as scheduled, including stress and the expense of wasted preparation time, and travel costs for witnesses and experts. The main cause of bumping continues to be the shortage of judges available to assign to scheduled proceedings.

In 2023, 16.3% of all long chambers applications in British Columbia were bumped. This is the highest bumping rate that the Court has experienced since 2019, and is a significant increase from the bumping trends from 2020-2022. In Vancouver, which has the highest volume of long chambers applications, the bumping rate in 2023 was 15.8%. This is the worst bumping rate since 2019 and is significantly higher than the 10 year average bumping rate of 8.7%.

The bumping of trials is also concerning. In 2023, 15.9% of trials were bumped across the province. While this rate is lower than in 2022, when the rate was 17.1%, it is significantly higher than the 10-year provincial average bumping rate of 10.6%.

The Lower Mainland continued to be the region with the most trials heard at 499 and the most bumped trials at 85, which accounted for 63% of the province's bumped trials. The Southern Interior region, which includes Kamloops, Kelowna, Vernon, and several other locations, had the most bumped trials after the Lower Mainland. In 2023, that region accounted for 19% of the bumped trials in the province, which is essentially the same as in 2022; however, it is considerably higher than in 2021 when it was 8%. For more detailed information on bumping rates, please see Figures 7-11 in Appendix A.

The Court has been chronically short of its full complement of judges for several years. This has a significant impact on access to timely and effective justice for all British Columbians.

Judicial Vacancies

At the end of 2023, the Court had 82 full-time justices and 11 judicial vacancies. A judicial vacancy is created when a full-time judge retires, elects to become a supernumerary judge, or is appointed to the Court of Appeal. Judges who are retiring or electing to go supernumerary provide at least six months notice of their intention to the federal government. The Court has been chronically short of its full complement of judges for several years. This has a significant impact on access to timely and effective justice for all British Columbians. As noted in previous annual reports, the high rate of judicial vacancies continues to impact the Court's capacity to provide hearing dates for litigants in a timely manner, resulting in bumping and rescheduling of trials and long chambers applications. For a number of years, many civil and family law litigants have had to wait approximately 18 months for a trial date. Further, the ongoing issue of judicial vacancies increases the already heavy burden on the Court's existing judges who are assigned more work in order to make up the shortfall. The chronic nature of this problem risks undermining public confidence in the judicial process, poses serious risks to the administration of justice, and over time threatens the quality of the justice system.

COURT GOVERNANCE

The Chief Justice and Associate Chief Justice, in their roles as administrators of the Court, rely on the assistance of a number of internal court committees. In addition to the Court's three substantive law committees (the Criminal Law Committee, the Family Law Committee, and the Civil Law Committee), the Chief Justice and the Associate Chief Justice are supported by the Executive Committee, which addresses matters of court administration, and a number of specialized committees including the Education Committee, the Law Clerks Committee, the Public Affairs Committee and the Courthouse Facilities Committee. In addition, a number of committees support the work of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeal including the Joint Courts Technology Committee and the Library Committee, and committees which also include representatives of the Court Services Branch. The mandates of these committees vary; however, they all share a common purpose: to consider matters of general importance to the Court within their subject matter expertise, and to provide advice and guidance to the Chief Justice and the Associate Chief Justice generally. The Court membership of these committees is drawn from the judges, associate judges, registrars, legal counsel, and judicial staff. Through their work, the committees strengthen and enhance the Court's effective and efficient management. Reports from the Court's committees begin on page 18 of this report.

SUPREME COURT PRACTICE DIRECTIONS & ADMINISTRATIVE NOTICES

The Court issued four new practice directions and one administrative notice in 2023:

PD-63 – Trial Management Conferences, Trial Briefs, and Trial Certificates – Transitional Guidance

Practice Direction 63 provided transitional guidance to parties about filing trial briefs and trial certificates, and adjourning trial management conferences, in light of changes to the Supreme Court Civil Rules and the Supreme Court Family Rules that took effect on September 1, 2023. PD-63 was rescinded on January 15, 2024.

FPD-19 – Applications made by Requisition – Supreme Court Family Rules 22-1(3) and (4) – Judicial Case Conference

Family Practice Direction 19 replaces Family Practice Direction 18 - Applications made by Requisition pursuant to Supreme Court Family Rules 7-1(4), 14-3(4), 22-1(3) and (4) and 22-6(4). It sets out the procedure for applying to attend a judicial case conference remotely, and for seeking directions with respect to the manner in which a judicial case conference is to be conducted.

CPD-5 – French or Bilingual Criminal Jury Trials

Criminal Practice Direction 5 expands the locations available for French or bilingual criminal jury trials to include Vancouver. Previously, these were available only in New Westminster. Criminal Practice Direction 5 rescinds and replaces the December 1, 2000, Notice Re: Criminal Jury Trials in French.

CPD-6 - Appearances by Counsel and Accused Persons in Criminal Proceedings

Criminal Practice Direction 6 sets out the current and ongoing "default" methods of appearance by counsel and accused persons for various types of court appearances in criminal proceedings, subject to the discretion of the presiding judge to direct a different method of appearance. CPD-6 replaces COVID-19 Notice 51 (Method of Attendance for Criminal Proceedings) and COVID-19 Notice 30 (Applications under s. 490 of the Criminal Code (Further Detention of Things Seized)), which provided guidance on these matters during the pandemic.

AN-18 – General Requirements for Microsoft Teams Hearings

Administrative Notice 18 sets out requirements for participating in a hearing by Microsoft Teams video and provides information on how members of the media and the public can attend such proceedings. This information was previously included in the Court's COVID-19 Notice No. 47, which was rescinded as part of the Court's transition away from the temporary guidance issued during the pandemic.

The Court also revised a number of practice directions in 2023:

PD-27 – Communicating with the Court

Practice Direction 27 was revised to confirm that the appropriate way to communicate with the Court is through its formal processes, and to update the guidelines parties and counsel are to follow in the limited circumstances when corresponding with the Court is permitted.

PD-58 – Sealing Orders in Civil and Family Proceedings

Practice Direction 58 was revised to provide that a draft sealing order must be vetted by the registry and to clarify the process for applying to amend a sealing order. The revisions also set out steps the applicant must take after obtaining a sealing order.

PD-61 – Applications to Commence Proceedings Anonymously

Practice Direction 61 was revised to update the requirements regarding materials filed in support of an application.

PD-28 – Chambers Practice

Practice Direction 28 was revised to remove the limit on the earliest time that application records and petition records may be provided to the registry, in light of changes to the Supreme Court Civil Rules and the Supreme Court Family Rules that took effect on September 1, 2023.

PD-4 – Judicial Management and Early Assignment of a Trial Judge or Hearing Judge in Civil and Family Proceedings Practice Direction 4 was revised on September 1, 2023 to clarify that case planning is available in family actions. It was further revised on October 17, 2023 to update the procedure for requesting judicial management and/or early assignment of a trial judge, and to include proceedings commenced under the Class Proceedings Act.

PD-5 – Class Proceedings

Practice Direction 5 was updated to clarify the process for setting a certification application for hearing, and to reflect that a party may seek judicial management of a proceeding by following the process in Practice Direction 4.

PD-55 – Canadian Judicial Protocol for the Management of Multi-jurisdictional Class Actions and the Provision of Class Action Notice Practice Direction 55 was updated to note that it should be read together with Practice Direction 4 and Practice Direction 5.

CPD-4 – Procedure for Detention Reviews Under s. 525 of the Criminal Code

Criminal Practice Direction 4 was amended to improve certain aspects of the procedure based on experience with the existing process. Amendments of note include:

- a new procedure to apply to end the s. 525 detention review process due to ineligibility;
- a limit on the use of the Adjournment Form to adjourn the Scheduling Hearing; and
- a new process to expedite the transcript ordering process at the Scheduling Hearing.

EXTRA-JUDICIAL ACTIVITIES

In addition to the normal workload of hearing cases and applications, deciding issues, writing and issuing reasons for judgment, issuing desk order divorces and electronic orders, and presiding at case conferences, members of the Court participate in a wide variety of other activities in their communities. Some judges also regularly preside at moot court competitions, and speak at educational programs and lay and professional conferences.

Members of the Court welcome opportunities to engage in public education and to contribute to a greater understanding of the justice system and its role in Canadian society. In 2023, the judges, associate judges, and registrars of the Court continued to volunteer their time with local, provincial, federal and international organizations, including the following:

Aboriginal Lawyers' Forum
Access Pro Bono
Allard School of Law, UBC Alumni Association
American College of Trial Lawyers.
Amici Curiae Friends of Court Society
Annual Review of Insolvency Law and Society
BGuiled Debate Society
Black Law Students' Association of Canada - Julius Alexander Isaac Moot

British Columbia Bankruptcy Practice Committee
British Columbia Council of Administrative Tribunals
British Columbia Law Schools Moot Program
British Columbia Model Insolvency Order Committee
Canadian Association of Insolvency and Restructuring Professionals
Canadian Bar Association, BC Branch
Canadian Insolvency Judges - Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act/Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act Working Group
Canadian Institute for the Administration of Justice
Canadian Judicial Council
Canadian Judicial Council, Model Criminal Jury Charges Working Group
Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association
Capilano University
Commonwealth Lawyers Association
Continuing Legal Education BC
Courthouse Libraries
Department of Justice National Litigation Symposium
Federation of Asian Canadian Lawyers
Fraser Valley Bar Association
Gale Cup Moot
Immigration and Refugee Board, Immigration Appeal Division
Inns of Court
Insolvency Institute of Canada
International Association of Women Judges
International Insolvency Institute
International Organization of Judicial Training
International Society for the Reform of Criminal Law
International Society of Barristers
International Women's Insolvency & Restructuring Confederation
Judging: Rule of Law Committee LSBC
Justice Education Society
Kamloops Bar Association
Kelowna Bar Association
L'Association des juristes d'expression française de la Colombie-Britannique
Law Society of British Columbia
Law Students Legal Advice Program
Medical Legal Society of B.C.
National Advisory Committee on Judicial Ethics
National Judicial Institute
National Judicial Institute, Criminal Jury Charge Program
National Judicial Institute, Criminal Law Program
National Judicial Institute, Sexual Assault Trial Program
New Westminster Bar Association
Osgoode Hall Law School
Rise Women's Legal Centre
Sedona Canada Steering Committee
Selkirk College
Sopinka Cup Moot
Superior Court Judges Association
The Advocates' Society
Thompson Rivers University, Faculty of Law
Trial Lawyers Association of British Columbia
Turnaround Management Association
University of British Columbia Allard School of Law
University of Victoria, Faculty of Law
Vancouver Bar Association
Vancouver Foundation
Wilson Moot
Women's Probus Club of Vancouver
Young Insolvency Professionals

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The Chief Justice and the Associate Chief Justice would like to acknowledge the hard work, many and diverse contributions, and continued dedication of the Court's staff including the Judicial Administrative Assistants, the Document Management Clerks, the Judicial Law Clerks, the Library Staff, and the Judicial Administration team. The Court relies on their professionalism, diligence and commitment to facilitating, supporting and managing the delivery of justice for British Columbians on a daily basis.

The Chief Justice and Associate Chief Justice are particularly grateful to Heidi McBride, Executive Director and Senior Counsel of the Superior Courts Judiciary, for her work overseeing many aspects of the Court's operations; to Supreme Court Legal Counsel, for their legal advice and support; to Supreme Court Scheduling Director Cindy Friesen and her staff, who tirelessly manage the scheduling of all of the Court's hearings; and to the Superior Courts Director of Information Technology, Ryan Wirth, and the Court's IT department for their support of the Court's technology needs.

The Court is also appreciative of the Attorney General and Ministry staff including the court clerks, the registry staff, the sheriffs and other Court Services Branch staff for their dedication to supporting the Court's work including maintaining and managing the court record, supporting the work of the registries, providing security for anyone attending a courthouse, and for their ongoing assistance in developing solutions and efficiencies in court processes to improve access to justice for British Columbians.

Finally, the Chief Justice and the Associate Chief Justice wish to express their thanks to the judges, associate judges, and registrars of the Court, for their unfailing support and advice with respect to the Court's administration.

Christopher E. Hinkson
Chief Justice

Heather J. Holmes
Associate Chief Justice

As of December 31, 2023, the Supreme Court had 104 justices: the Chief Justice, the Associate Chief Justice, 83 full-time justices, and 19 supernumerary justices.

JURISDICTION OF THE COURT

Superior Court

The Supreme Court of British Columbia has jurisdiction to hear and decide any matter that comes before it, unless a statute or rule limits that authority or grants exclusive jurisdiction to some other court or tribunal. The Supreme Court's inherent jurisdiction allows it to control its own processes and procedures in order to ensure fairness and to prevent abuses of process. The Supreme Court hears civil, family, and criminal cases, as well as appeals from the Provincial Court. The Supreme Court also reviews the decisions of certain administrative tribunals, including the Labour Relations Board, Workers Compensation Appeal Tribunal, the British Columbia Human Rights Tribunal, and residential tenancies arbitration decisions.

Supreme Court Registries and Locations

The Supreme Court is a circuit court in which all the judges and associate judges travel throughout the province to preside over cases. The Supreme Court sits in seven judicial districts and has resident judges in Abbotsford, Chilliwack, Kamloops, Kelowna, Nanaimo, Nelson, New Westminster, Prince George, Prince Rupert, Vancouver, Vernon, Victoria, and Williams Lake. The Supreme Court also sits as required in other locations where there is no resident judge or associate judge, including Campbell River, Cranbrook, Courtenay, Dawson Creek, Duncan, Fort St. John, Golden, Penticton, Port Alberni, Port Coquitlam, Powell River, Quesnel, Revelstoke, Rossland, Salmon Arm, Smithers, and Terrace.

Chief Justice and Associate Chief Justice

The Chief Justice is responsible for the management and direction of matters related to judicial functions, which includes matters related to the preparation, management, and adjudication of proceedings in the Court, as well as the assignment of judges. From time to time, these responsibilities are delegated to the Associate Chief Justice.

Supreme Court Justices

As of December 31, 2023, the Supreme Court had 104 justices: the Chief Justice, the Associate Chief Justice, 83 full-time justices, and 19 supernumerary justices. As of December 31, 2023, 12 of the full-time judicial positions on the Supreme Court were vacant.[1] This represents approximately 13% of the Supreme Court's judicial complement.

[1] Section 2(2) of the Supreme Court Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 443 provides that the Supreme Court consists of 95 full time justices in addition to the Chief Justice and the Associate Chief Justice. A judicial vacancy is created when a full time judge retires, elects to become a supernumerary judge or is appointed to a different court; the retirement of a supernumerary judge does not create a judicial vacancy.

[The] new title of associate judges more accurately reflects the important role of associate judges in the conduct of civil and family litigation in the province and promotes a more inclusive and accessible justice system.

Section 2(2) of the Supreme Court Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 443 provides that the Supreme Court consists of 95 full time justices in addition to the Chief Justice and the Associate Chief Justice. A judicial vacancy is created when a full time judge retires or elects to become a supernumerary judge. The retirement of a supernumerary judge does not create a judicial vacancy on the Supreme Court.

Supreme Court Associate Judges

The Supreme Court has 14 associate judges who are resident in Abbotsford, Kamloops, Kelowna, Nanaimo, New Westminster, Vancouver, and Victoria. Associate judges sit in all of the registries throughout the province on a regular basis and also conduct hearings using audio and videoconferencing.

Associate judges are judicial officers appointed by the provincial government by Order in Council after it has received recommendations from an ad hoc committee consisting of the Chief Justice, the Deputy Attorney General, the President of the Law Society of British Columbia, and the President of the B.C. Branch of the Canadian Bar Association.

Associate judges preside in civil chambers and registrar hearings. They hear applications in chambers on a wide variety of matters, including interim orders in family proceedings, interlocutory applications in civil proceedings such as production of documents, and foreclosure proceedings. Associate judges also have the jurisdiction of registrars and preside as registrars throughout the province as required.

Prior to January 2024, associate judges were known as masters. In 2024, the Supreme Court Act was amended to create the new title of associate judge to more accurately reflect the important role of associate judges in the conduct of civil and family litigation in the province and to promote a more inclusive and accessible justice system.

Supreme Court Registrar

The Supreme Court has one registrar who is resident in Vancouver but regularly sits in other registries. Like judges and associate judges, the registrar also conducts hearings using audio and videoconferencing.

The registrar is appointed pursuant to s. 13 of the Supreme Court Act and is under the general direction of the Chief Justice. The registrar hears a wide variety of matters, including reviews of lawyers' accounts, bankruptcy discharge applications and bankruptcy taxations, assessments of bills of costs, subpoenas to debtors, passing of accounts, and references of various types. The registrar also settles orders.

The registrar is also responsible for overseeing the province's deputy district registrars, who work in court registries across the province. The registrar serves as a liaison between the Court and the Ministry of Attorney General Court Services Branch in regard to registry issues including practice, procedure and policy.

CHANGES TO THE COURT'S COMPLEMENT

In 2023, the Court welcomed the appointment of four new judges and acknowledged the retirement of four judges and one associate judge. Additionally, one judge of the Supreme Court was appointed to the Court of Appeal.

APPOINTMENTS

The Honourable Justice Bradford F. Smith

Justice Smith, formerly a sole practitioner in Kamloops, was appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia at Kamloops on June 1, 2023. Justice Smith's appointment fills the vacancy created by Justice S.D. Dley (Kamloops), who elected to become a supernumerary judge effective November 1, 2021.

Justice Smith was born in South Africa and moved to Canada at age 20. He received a Bachelor of Laws from Osgoode Hall in 1999, followed by a Master of Laws in Criminal Law and Procedure in 2009. While attending Osgoode, he led the law school's community legal aid clinic and was a member of the inaugural Innocence Project group. Justice Smith was called to the bar in 2000 and went on to spend 13 years as Crown counsel, prosecuting cases involving clandestine synthetic drug labs, complex drug conspiracies, and organized crime. After leaving the Crown in 2013, he established his own defence practice based in Kamloops, defending clients in a variety of criminal cases and working as amicus curiae in two murder cases. Justice Smith was appointed King's Counsel in 2019.

In addition to his work as counsel, Justice Smith has been a member of the Organizing Committee of the Kamloops Inns of Court Program and at Thompson Rivers University's Faculty of Law. He has also served on the Board of the Association of Legal Aid Lawyers and with the Overlander Ski Club.

The Honourable Justice David K. Jones

Justice Jones, formerly partner at Bernard LLP in Vancouver, was appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia at Vancouver on August 14, 2023. Justice Jones' appointment fills the vacancy created by Justice G.C. Weatherill (Vancouver), who elected to become a supernumerary judge effective August 7, 2022.

Justice Jones was born and raised in Vancouver, earning a B.A. and M.A. from Simon Fraser University before obtaining his LL.B. from the University of Victoria and subsequently an LL.M. from the University of Wales. He was called to the bar in 1995. Justice Jones began his career at Campney & Murphy before joining Bernard LLP, where his civil and commercial litigation practice focused on maritime law, environmental law, and occupational health and safety. During his time as counsel, he appeared before all levels of court in British Columbia, at various administrative tribunals, and the Federal Court.

Justice Jones has been actively involved in the Canadian Maritime Law Association and the National Maritime Law Section of the Canadian Bar Association, serving on the Executive for both for many years. He has also shared his expertise as a contributor to CLEBC's Due Diligence Deskbook, annually updating the Fisheries and Oceans chapter, and authored numerous articles on various marine and environmental issues for local marine industry publications. In addition to his work, Justice Jones is an avid sailor with extensive offshore experience, and a dedicated skier and cyclist.

The Honourable Justice Jennifer L. Whately

Justice Whately, formerly Manager, Litigation, Enforcement at the British Columbia Securities Commission in Vancouver, was appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia at Vancouver on August 14, 2023. Justice Whately's appointment fills the vacancy created by Justice R.A. Skolrood (Vancouver), who was elevated to the Court of Appeal effective October 20, 2022.

Justice Whately was born in Victoria and grew up in Smithers, eventually returning to Victoria to receive a B.A. in English from the University of Victoria followed by a J.D. in 2002. After graduating, she moved to Vancouver to clerk at the Supreme Court of British Columbia before being called to the bar in 2004 Justice Whately began her career as a civil litigator in Vancouver before joining the BC Securities Commission in 2010, where she worked in the Enforcement division. Her files included insider trading, fraud, and other securities misconduct, and she appeared as counsel for the Commission at the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court of Canada. Justice Whately also served as internal advice counsel for the Commission's Investigation division and as legal counsel in Corporate Finance Legal Services, eventually becoming Manager of Litigation at the Commission.

Outside of her legal career, Justice Whately has been a board member for Growing Chefs, a not-for-profit organization that connects school-aged kids, chefs, and growers to foster food knowledge and sustainable food practices. She has also stayed involved with the University of Victoria, where she sat on a Senate committee for several years, and presented guest lectures on securities enforcement at the Peter A. Allard School of Law at the University of British Columbia.

The Honourable Justice J. Gareth Morley

Justice Morley, formerly senior counsel at the Ministry of Attorney General of British Columbia in Victoria, was appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia at Vancouver on August 28, 2023. Justice Morley's appointment fills the vacancy created by Justice J. Steeves (Victoria), who retired effective June 11, 2022.

Justice Morley was born in Toronto and grew up in Victoria. After receiving a B.A. from the University of Victoria, Justice Morley obtained his LL.B. from the University of Toronto and an LL.M. from Osgoode Hall. He was called to the bar in 1999, and began his career at the Ministry of Attorney General of British Columbia's Legal Services Branch, where he spent more than 20 years. His work involved litigation, providing advice, and legislative drafting. Prior to his judicial appointment, Justice Morley acted as Senior Counsel, representing the provincial government in constitutional matters.

Justice Morley was an active member of the BC Government Lawyers Association for two decades, serving as its President from 2019 until his appointment, and taught Canadian constitutional law at Thompson Rivers University in Kamloops. He also published a number of law review articles and co-edited Government Liability: Law and Practice with Justice Karen Horsman of the Court of Appeal.

APPOINTMENTS TO THE COURT OF APPEAL

The Honourable Justice Janet Winteringham

Justice Janet Winteringham was appointed a Justice of the Court of Appeal for British Columbia on December 4, 2023. Justice Winteringham replaces Justice G.M. Dickson (Vancouver), who elected to become a supernumerary judge effective December 1, 2022. Justice Winteringham was appointed to the Supreme Court in Vancouver on August 15, 2017.

RETIREMENTS

The Honourable Mr. Justice James Williams

Mr. Justice James Williams retired from the Supreme Court of British Columbia at Vancouver on January 18, 2023. He was appointed to the Supreme Court on October 10, 2002.

The Honourable Mr. Justice Brian MacKenzie

Mr. Justice Brian MacKenzie retired from the Supreme Court of British Columbia at Victoria on March 21, 2023. He was appointed to the Supreme Court on October 23, 2009.

The Honourable Mr. Justice George Macintosh

Mr. Justice George Macintosh retired from the Supreme Court of British Columbia at Vancouver on April 30, 2023. He was appointed to the Supreme Court on December 17, 2013.

The Honourable Mr. Justice Robert Punnett

Mr. Justice Robert Punnett retired from the Supreme Court of British Columbia at Prince Rupert on November 30, 2023. He was appointed to the Supreme Court on June 19, 2009.

Associate Judge Peter Keighley

Associate Judge Peter Keighley retired from the Supreme Court of British Columbia at New Westminster on December 31, 2023. He was appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court on March 8, 2004.

COMMITTEE REPORTS

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Members

Justice Maisonville (Chair)
Chief Justice Hinkson (ex officio)
Associate Chief Justice Holmes (ex officio)
Justice Caldwell
Justice Devlin
Justice Donegan
Justice Jackson
Justice MacNaughton
Justice Thompson
Justice Warren
Justice Wilson
Associate Judge Harper
Associate Judge Muir
Heidi McBride, Executive Director and Senior Counsel (ex officio)
Brenda Belak, Legal Counsel
Jennifer Millerd, Legal Counsel

Mandate

The Executive Committee of the Supreme Court of British Columbia meets monthly to assist the Chief Justice and Associate Chief Justice in formulating and implementing policy initiatives and in coordinating the work of Court committees.

Membership

The judicial membership of the Committee represents their regions (Vancouver, New Westminster and the Fraser Valley, Vancouver Island, Okanagan/Kootenays, Kamloops/North), with the Associate Judges and Registrars also having a representative. Members are elected to three-year terms, with a two-term limit.

Work of the Committee

In 2023, the Committee's work included the ongoing liaison of the Court with government and external organizations such as the Canadian Bar Association and the Law Society. Issues addressed by the Committee included the membership of Court committees, enhancing the Court's readiness to conduct French language criminal trials and proceedings under the Divorce Act, the possible use of the File Transfer Server system for acceptance of submissions on draft jury charges outside of court hours, sheriff staffing issues as they impact courtroom availability and security, and legislative changes likely to impact court operations.

The Committee is grateful to Brenda Belak and Jennifer Millerd for their support of its work.

CIVIL LAW COMMITTEE

Members

Justice Warren (Chair)
Justice Baker
Justice Beames
Mr. Justice Caldwell
Justice Gomery
Justice Matthews
Justice Milman
Justice Smith
Justice Stephens
Justice Thompson
Justice Veenstra
Justice Verhoeven
Mr. Justice Walker
Associate Judge Vos
Lisa Phillips, Legal Counsel

Mandate

The role of the Civil Law Committee is to consider developments in civil practice and procedure and to provide input on these matters to the Chief Justice, Associate Chief Justice and other members of the Court.

Work of the Committee

In 2023, the Committee considered a wide range of civil law matters. The Committee provided feedback to the Chief Justice and Associate Chief Justice regarding changes to Practice Direction 4 (Judicial Management and Early Assignment of a Trial Judge or Hearing Judge in Civil and Family Proceedings) and Practice Direction 5 (Class Proceedings). The Committee also recommended revisions to Practice Direction 61 (Applications to Commence Proceedings Anonymously). It provided input to the Chief Justice about lengthy chambers proceedings and consulted on a proposal regarding hearings in regular chambers. In collaboration with the Family Law Committee, the Committee developed an informational memorandum about trial procedure for judges to provide to self-represented litigants.

Other issues the Committee considered include changes to the enforcement of money judgments in Bill 27 – Money Judgment Enforcement Act, the use of endorsements and the procedure for receiving submissions on jury charges.

The Committee continued to support the work of the Court through providing guidance about significant appellate decisions and developments in civil law.

The Committee is grateful to Lisa Phillips for her support of its work.

COURTHOUSE FACILITIES COMMITTEE

Members

Justice A. Ross (Chair)
Mr. Justice Baird
Justice Betton
Madam Justice Church
Justice Douglas
Justice Mayer
Heidi McBride, Executive Director and Senior Counsel

Mandate

The mandate of the Committee is to provide facilities-related assistance, support and advice to the Chief Justice and the Associate Chief Justice.

Work of the Committee

In 2023, the Committee's work included discussions about three courthouses, Victoria Law Courts, Williams Lake Law Courts and Ft. St. John Law Courts, which are all in need of replacement, expansion or serious renovations. Progress on these priority locations depends on capital funding and the Committee continues to advocate for the provincial government to provide the needed funding.

The Committee also worked on a number of smaller, but no less important facilities issues at a number of courthouse locations including the Abbotsford Law Courts (ongoing issues with the water supply), the Kamloops Law Courts (a lifecycle extension projects involving security enhancements and improvements to courtroom accessibility, courtroom and registry technology infrastructure updates), the New Westminster Law Courts (replacement of the exterior cladding and windows, curtain walls and skylights and significant repairs to the concrete and electrical services in the secure parking areas) and the Vancouver Law Courts (renovations to the space formerly occupied by the Law Courts Inn as well as upgrades and repairs to some of the large building systems including mechanical and electrical upgrades, and escalator modernization, concrete repair work, Great Hall glass replacement and millwork repairs).

Finally, the Committee considered renovations to the Port Coquitlam Law Courts which will support the use of excess courtroom and chambers capacity in that location by the Supreme Court. These renovations also include the creation of a criminal jury courtroom and renovations in the registry so that litigants can receive full Supreme Court registry services in Port Coquitlam.

CRIMINAL LAW COMMITTEE

Members

Justice Devlin (Chair)
Mr. Justice Riley (Vice Chair)
Associate Chief Justice Holmes
Justice Brundrett
Madam Justice Church
Mr. Justice Crossin
Justice Dley
Justice Donegan
Madam Justice Duncan
Mr. Justice Gaul
Justice Ker
Justice Maisonville
Justice Tammen
Madam Justice Watchuk
Justice Wedge
Justice Winteringham
Claire Wilson, Legal Counsel
Natasha Edgar, Legal Counsel

Mandate

The role of the Criminal Law Committee is to consider developments in criminal practice and procedure and to provide input on these matters to the Chief Justice, the Associate Chief Justice, and other members of the Court.

Work of the Committee

In 2023, the Committee provided support and advice to the Associate Chief Justice regarding the impact of Criminal Code amendments, including amendments to provisions regarding bail, publication bans, and orders to comply with the Sex Offender Information Registration Act made at the sentencing stage. The Committee also developed resources for judges in relation to these changes and updated the Supreme Court picklists. The Committee consulted on revisions to CPD-4 - Procedure for Detention Reviews Under s. 525 of the Criminal Code, on a new process for ordering transcripts for detention review hearings under s. 525 of the Criminal Code, and on the development of CPD-7 - Procedure for Applications to Vary or Revoke a Publication Ban Under s. 486.51 of the Criminal Code. The Committee also provided advice to the Associate Chief Justice regarding emerging issues in criminal procedure at the Court, including the timing of scheduling pretrial conferences in sexual offence cases and the return to conducting criminal jury selections in one stage.

Madam Justice Duncan stepped down as Chair in September after two years of service.

The Committee is grateful for her valuable contributions as Chair. Justice Devlin was appointed as Chair and Mr. Justice Riley was appointed as Vice-Chair. Justice Dley stepped down from the Committee at the end of 2023 after many years of service and Justice Winteringham resigned from the Committee as a result of her appointment to the Court of Appeal. The Committee is grateful for the many contributions of both Justice Dley and Justice Winteringham to the Committee's work.

The Committee is grateful to Supreme Court Legal Counsel, Claire Wilson and Natasha Edgar, for their support of its work.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE

Members

Justice MacNaughton (Chair)
Mr. Justice Ball
Justice Burke
Justice Crerar
Madam Justice Francis
Justice McDonald
Justice Mayer
Madam Justice Morellato
Madam Justice Murray
Mr. Justice Riley
Justice Tammen
Associate Judge Keim
Leah Pence, Legal Counsel

Mandate

The Education Committee's mandate is to organize and present continuing education programs in order to assist the judges, associate judges and registrars of the Court to stay on top of current developments in substantive law, enhance judicial skills, and learn about social context and philosophical and ethical issues which relate to the Court's work.

Work of the Committee

The Committee delivers its main programs at judicial education conferences held in May and November of each year. These conferences are developed and presented in partnership with the National Judicial Institute (NJI). The Committee is grateful for the assistance received from the staff at the NJI who support the development of our programs and also provide administrative, logistical and technical support for the conferences.

2023 Conferences

The May 2023 conference was held in Whistler and included sessions about: complex financial issues in family matters, the admissibility and treatment of surreptitious recordings, chambers practice, and various pre-trial matters. In addition, there was discussion with senior members of the bench on a variety of criminal matters, and presentations from various Indigenous justice organizations on innovative approaches to sentencing. The conference also included a judicial wellness component providing judges with tools to aid in understanding and building resilience, especially when dealing with difficult family and criminal matters.

The November 2023 British Columbia All Courts Education Conference was held in Vancouver. The theme for this conference was The New Era of Judging. The conference is an opportunity for dialogue among the Provincial and Supreme Court and the Court of Appeal and we heard from speakers from across Canada and other countries. The conference addressed questions relevant for all three levels of court including: how courts can contribute to increasing access to justice; how courts and the judiciary should engage with social media in order to contribute to respect for the administration of justice; what challenges and opportunities artificial intelligence poses for the judiciary; what role courts play in reconciliation with Indigenous peoples in Canada; New Zealand's approach to reconciliation and what lessons we can learn from it; and what issues are emerging in criminal, civil and family law. Optional training was provided on the use of DivorceMate software for calculating child and spousal support.

New Judges Training

Starting in 2017, the Committee developed a program for newly appointed judges and associate judges designed to support them as they transition to our court from their prior legal careers. The new appointees training program is in addition to the opportunity provided to newly appointed judges to shadow one or more judicial colleagues for five days prior to beginning to sit and to the ongoing mentorship program.

In November 2023, the Committee delivered the eighth session of new judges training. Eight of our new appointees attended. The training covered a wide variety of topics including: writing and delivering decisions and managing reserve lists, managing chambers, the unique challenges presented in family law proceedings, tips, resources for being on the road, and an "ask us anything" session. The Committee is grateful to the senior members of the Court who agreed to serve as faculty again in 2023.

In addition, in 2021, the Criminal Law Committee and the Education Committee developed a multi-day self study course focusing on the law of sexual assault. Drawing on materials prepared by the Ontario Superior Court and the NJI, the course covers the substantive law of sexual assault, interim motions, procedure, common myths and stereotypes, social context, decision making, and sentencing. In 2023, 15 judges completed the course bringing the total number of judges to have done so to over 60.

Law at Lunch

The Committee facilitated regular online lunchtime seminars on topics including: section 7 of the Charter, civil jury trials, publication bans and anonymity orders, independent medical examinations, the law of hearsay, judicial reviews of Residential Tenancy Board decisions and interim stays, as well as post hearing and post-judgment matters.

Mentoring

Finally, the Committee has organized various online networking events to introduce the Court's newest appointees and provide opportunities for informal discussion and mentoring.

The Committee is grateful to members of the Court for their enthusiastic participation as speakers and facilitators in its programs, and for their receptiveness to its programs.

The Committee also thanks Leah Pence for supporting its work.

FAMILY LAW COMMITTEE

Members

Justice Tindale (Chair)
Justice Fleming (Vice-Chair)
Justice Armstrong
Justice Shergill
Justice Brundrett
Justice Lamb
Justice Caldwell
Justice Francis
Associate Judge Dick
Associate Judge Harper
Associate Judge Hughes
Nikki Hair, Legal Counsel
Line B. Williams, Legal Counsel

Mandate

The role of the Family Law Committee is to consider developments in family law practice and procedure and to provide input relating to these matters to the Chief Justice and other members of the Court.

Work of the Committee

The Committee dealt with a variety of family law issues in 2023. The Committee provided recommendations and comments to Chief Justice Hinkson, the Attorney General, and the British Columbia Supreme Court Civil & Family Rules Committee with respect to significant amendments to the Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance Act, the Family Law Act and the Supreme Court Family Rules.

In collaboration with the Civil Law Committee, the Committee developed an informational memorandum about trial procedure for judges to provide to self-represented litigants. The Committee also updated the Supreme Court Family Picklist of Orders, which is available on the court's website. The Committee provided information and recommendations to the Court on both internal and external resources, as well as on issues of law.

In 2023, the Committee bid farewell to Associate Judge Harper and welcomed Justice Caldwell, Justice Francis and Associate Judge Hughes as new members of the Committee.

The Committee is grateful to Nikki Hair and Line Williams for their support of its work.

LAW CLERKS COMMITTEE

Members

Mr. Justice Blok (Chair)
Justice Basran
Justice Iyer
Justice D. MacDonald
Madam Justice Murray
Brenda Belak, Legal Counsel
Jennifer Millerd, Legal Counsel

Mandate

The Law Clerks Committee is responsible for the management of the Judicial Law Clerks Program, which provides both a valuable resource for judges and a unique learning opportunity for new law school graduates who have achieved a high academic standard. The Committee is directly involved in the recruitment and hiring of judicial law clerks each year. The Committee is assisted in its work by the Court's legal counsel, to whom the day-to-day management and administration of the program is delegated. The Committee is also assisted by the 22 judges of the Court who act as principals to the law clerks.

Work of the Committee

The recruitment process begins two years before the start of the clerking term when the Committee sends materials to all Canadian law schools. The application and interview process takes place about 18 months before the start of the clerking term. In the early spring, Committee members interview up to 40 applicants from a group that has been shortlisted through screening interviews conducted by the Court's legal counsel.

At present, there are 17 law clerks in Vancouver, three in New Westminster and two in Victoria. In 2023, the following clerks began their clerkships with the Court:

Vancouver	Michaela Aeberhardt, Myim Bakan Kline, Lisa Chaudhry, Tom Gilmour, Merran Hergert, Stephanie Lee, Melissa Liauw, Frances Miltimore, Whitney Morrison, Verukah Poirier, Olga Shaporenko, Reed Smith, Spencer Taylor-Robins, Alie Teachman, Thea Udwadia, Adam Walsh and Maddison Zapach.
New Westminster	Claire Qiu, Siobhán Rempel and Patrick Sheppard
Victoria	Chloe Ducluzeau and Ben Turner

One of the Committee's continuing priorities is to increase diversity in our law clerk group. Through various outreach initiatives we have greatly improved both the number of diverse applicants and the number of diverse persons we have hired. This year, about half of our law clerks identify as racialized, Indigenous or 2SLGBTQI+, or as a person with a disability.

The Committee wishes to extend its gratitude and appreciation to the Court's law clerks for the assistance that they provide to the judges of the Court. The enthusiasm, commitment, and dedication they bring to their work and to the work of the Court are invaluable.

The Committee would also like to express its gratitude to the judges of the Court who serve as principals to the law clerks. They provide great mentorship to our law clerks and allow the Judicial Law Clerks Program to continue to provide a rich educational experience.

Finally, the Committee expresses its thanks to Brenda Belak, Jennifer Millerd and the Court's other legal counsel for their efforts in recruiting, training and supervising the law clerks.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Members

Justice N. Smith (Chair)
Chief Justice Hinkson
The Honourable Bruce Cohen, Superior Courts Communications Officer
Mr. Justice Gaul
Justice Milman
Justice Tindale
Justice Wedge
Associate Judge Vos
Heidi McBride, Executive Director and Senior Counsel
Jennifer Millerd, Legal Counsel
Diana Foxall, Communications Coordinator

Mandate

In keeping with the open court principle, the mandate of the Committee is primarily to promote activities that enhance public and media understanding of the Court's processes and to address matters concerning public legal education, media and public relations. The PAC is also involved in initiatives respecting Supreme Court Policies and Practice Directions relating to such matters as access to court records, communications with the Court, cameras in the courtroom, and the use of electronic devices in courtrooms.

Work of the Committee

In 2023, the Committee's work involved meeting with the media, engaging with court communications officers from across Canada, and continuing with projects aimed to assist media in obtaining access to court proceedings and court records. The Committee was also involved in initiatives respecting Supreme Court policies and practice directions relating to court records, communications with the Court, cameras in the courtroom, and the use of electronic devices in courtrooms.

The Committee is grateful for the court communications, and media and public relations services performed by the Superior Courts Communications Officer, the Honourable Bruce Cohen, and the Communications Coordinator, Diana Foxall, who interact with members of the Superior Courts, judicial administration staff, courts legal counsel, registry staff and members of the media and public as well as government representatives, other courts across the country and bar organizations. The Committee is also appreciative of the support it receives from the Court's legal counsel and other judicial staff whose assistance and advice have been indispensable in communicating with the public and media. As well, the Committee expresses its thanks to Miki Lee who maintains the list of accredited media.

LIBRARY COMMITTEE

Members

Justice Ker (Chair)
Justice Skolrood
Justice Edelmann
Sylvia Ranspach, Head Librarian
Heidi McBride, Executive Director and Senior Counsel

Work of the Committee

In 2023, library staff, under the leadership of head librarian Sylvia Ranspach, advanced a number of key projects, including implementing a new Sharepoint library site and updated library catalogue, developing subject matter resource guides, working with legal publishers, and redirecting budget funds to continue the transition from print to electronic resources. Ms. Ranspach also continues to provide regular training to judges, law clerks, and other judicial staff. The Library also continues to cull old and unused print volumes from various courthouses. Throughout the summer, our co-op student, Shelby Colling, catalogued historical photographs and assisted with the Judicial History Project.

The judiciary continues to be very well served by Ms. Ranspach, along with library technician, Connie Kang.

JOINT COURTS TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE

Members

Mr. Justice Masuhara (Chair)
Mr. Justice Hunter
Justice Branch
Justice Edelmann
Justice Myers
Madam Justice Fitzpatrick
Mr. Justice Punnett
Associate Judge Nielsen
Timothy Outerbridge, Registrar, Court of Appeal
Heidi McBride, Executive Director and Senior Counsel
Cindy Friesen, Director, Supreme Court Scheduling
Ryan Wirth, Director, Information Technology
Brenda Belak, Legal Counsel
Line B. Williams, Legal Counsel

Mandate

The Committee's mandate is to review developments in technology and their impacts on the work of the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court.

Work of the Committee

In 2023, the Committee considered the impacts of the rapid development and expansion of functionality of artificial intelligence and, specifically, large language models on the Courts' work. The Committee is concerned about professional and ethical issues arising with the use of AI-based tools.
The Committee continued to be involved in supporting the move to a new VOIP phone system for the judiciary and judicial staff, which provides high quality audio that is easily incorporated into the Courts' infrastructure. Work is also ongoing to upgrade computer screens for the judiciary.

The Committee was involved in, and supportive of, ongoing work to expand electronic document management, electronic filing of documents, and online booking in both the Court of Appeal and Supreme Court. Following strong public support, the Court of Appeal returned to broadcasting appeals publicly by Zoom on January 3, 2023.

In collaboration with Court Services Branch, the Supreme Court expanded the Associate Judges Chambers Pilot Project to all registries outside Vancouver with associate judge sittings, except for Vancouver Law Courts, in 2023. The Project permits electronic submission of application records for applications scheduled for 30 minutes or less in associate judges' chambers.

The Committee was involved in a pilot project on digital signatures being trialed in the Court of Appeal. If successful, the pilot will be expanded to the Supreme Court to further evaluate the use of digital signatures.

Work is ongoing through Court Services Branch to update microphones in courtrooms to improve audio recordings.

JUDICIAL ACCESS POLICY WORKING COMMITTEE

Members

Shirley Smiley, Legal Counsel, Court of Appeal (Chair)
Leah Pence, Legal Counsel, Supreme Court
Karen Leung, Legal Counsel, Provincial Court
Trevor Fik, Legal Counsel, Provincial Court
Grant Marchand, Manager, Judicial Resource Analysis & Management Information Systems, Provincial Court
Dan Chiddell, Executive Director, Corporate Support, Court Services Branch (CSB)
Stephanie Delacretaz*, Director, Strategic Information & Business Applications, Corporate Support, CSB*
Erin Turner, Director, Policy, Legislation and Planning, Policy and Service Reform Unit, CSB
Shelley Gin, Senior Policy Analyst, Policy, Legislation and Planning, Policy and Service Reform Unit, CSB
Robert Richardson, Secretariat and Senior Policy Analyst, Policy, Legislation and Planning, Policy and Service Reform Unit, CSB
Margot Tubman, CSB Consultant

Mandate

The Chief Justices and Chief Judge of British Columbia's courts have responsibility for the supervision and control of court records and judicial administration records. The Judicial Access Policy Working Committee (APWC) is a joint committee consisting of representatives from all three courts and Court Services Branch employees. The APWC reviews applications for bulk and/or electronic access to court record information.

The APWC is not a decision making-body, but rather a review and discussion forum for judicial representatives and CSB senior staff involved in policy, legislation, data custodianship, statistics and court systems management. Final decisions on access applications made to the APWC for access to court records or court record information are made by the judiciary and communicated to the applicant through the APWC.

In addition, the APWC develops and revises policies relating to access to court records, particularly those in bulk and electronic format, and seeks guidance and approval for such policies. The Chief Justices and Chief Judge give approval before a policy is adopted.

Work of the Committee

In 2023, the work of the APWC included the following:

Access Applications

In 2023, the APWC received, considered, and made recommendations in respect of applications for access to court record information from a variety of government, public and private agencies and departments related to their statutory mandates, operations, or legal research and analysis services. The Three Courts Policy on Bulk and Electronic Access to Court Records, approved in September 2021, guided consideration of these requests. The policy describes protocols for administering bulk access to court records and electronic information that is not available at the registry counter. Access agreements were created for applications approved by the judiciary.

Policy Work

In 2023, the APWC reviewed and updated its protocols and processes for logging and tracking applications as well as existing access agreements. Members of the Committee also contributed to the Canadian Judicial Council's Pilot Project on bulk access to published reasons for judgment.

MEMBERS OF THE SUPREME COURT

CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT

THE HONOURABLE CHIEF JUSTICE CHRISTOPHER E. HINKSON

- Appointed to the Supreme Court March 2, 2007
- Appointed to the Court of Appeal March 18, 2010
- Appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court November 7, 2013

ASSOCIATE CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT

THE HONOURABLE ASSOCIATE CHIEF JUSTICE HEATHER J. HOLMES

- Appointed to the Supreme Court March 21, 2001
- Appointed Associate Chief Justice of the Supreme Court - June 21, 2018

JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE ALISON J. BEAMES ► (Kelowna)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court August 7, 1996

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE CAROL J. ROSS ► (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court March 21, 2001

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE CATHERINE A. WEDGE ► (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court April 4, 2001

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE BRENDA BROWN ► (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court April 18, 2002

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE JAMES W. WILLIAMS ▼ (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 10, 2002
- Retired January 18, 2023

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE DAVID M. MASUHARA ►(Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 11, 2002

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE LANCE W. BERNARD ► (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court July 24, 2003

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE J. MIRIAM GROPPER ► (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court April 14, 2005

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE NATHAN H. SMITH ► (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court May 19, 2005

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE JOEL R. GROVES ► (Vancouver)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court May 4, 2000
- Appointed to the Supreme Court May 19, 2005

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE ELLIOTT M. MYERS ► (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court November 22, 2005

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE GEOFFREY R.J. GAUL (Victoria)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court January 31, 2008

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE PAUL W. WALKER ► (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 18, 2008

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE KATE KER (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 18, 2008

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE JOHN S. HARVEY ► (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court January 22, 2009

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE FRITS VERHOEVEN (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court January 22, 2009

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE TERENCE A. SCHULTES (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court May 15, 2009

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE ROBERT D. PUNNETT ▼ (Prince Rupert)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 19, 2009
- Retired November 30, 2023

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE BRIAN D. MACKENZIE ▼ (Victoria)

- Appointed to the Provincial Court October 30, 1990
- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 23, 2009
- Retired March 21, 2023

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE ANTHONY SAUNDERS (Victoria)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court November 27, 2009

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE S. DEV DLEY ► (Abbotsford)

- Appointed to the Provincial Court June 23, 2008
- Appointed to the Supreme Court March 19, 2010

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE MIRIAM A. MAISONVILLE (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court March 19, 2010

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE SHELLEY C. FITZPATRICK (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 18, 2010

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE JENNIFER A. POWER (Victoria)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court August 6, 2010

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE TREVOR C. ARMSTRONG ► (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 1, 2010

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE JEANNE E. WATCHUK ►(Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Provincial Court October 3, 1994
- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 28, 2010

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE MURRAY B. BLOK (New Westminster)

- Appointed District Registrar March 25, 2002
- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 28, 2010

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE D. ALLAN BETTON (Vernon)

- Appointed to the Provincial Court March 19, 2007
- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 24, 2011

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE RONALD S. TINDALE (Prince George)

- Appointed to the Provincial Court February 15, 2010
- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 20, 2011

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE GORDON C. WEATHERILL ► (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court May 31, 2012

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE ROBIN A.M. BAIRD (Nanaimo)

- Appointed to the Provincial Court August 22, 2011
- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 5, 2012

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE GORDON S. FUNT ► (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 5, 2012

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE KENNETH W. BALL ► (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Provincial Court January 6, 2003
- Appointed to the Supreme Court November 2, 2012

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE DOUGLAS W. THOMPSON (Nanaimo)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court December 13, 2012

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE SHERI ANN DONEGAN (Kamloops)

- Appointed to the Provincial Court October 4, 2010
- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 6, 2013

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE LISA WARREN (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 6, 2013

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE MARGOT L. FLEMING (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 6, 2013

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE GARY P. WEATHERILL ► (Kelowna)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 2, 2013

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE GEORGE K. MACINTOSH ▼ (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court December 17, 2013
- Retired April 30, 2023

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE NIGEL P. KENT (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court December 17, 2013

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE JENNIFER M.I. DUNCAN (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court December 17, 2013

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE NEENA SHARMA (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court December 17, 2013

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE EMILY M. BURKE (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court May 13, 2014

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE MARTHA M. DEVLIN (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court December 11, 2014

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE BARBARA M. YOUNG (Victoria)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court December 6, 2006
- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 19, 2015

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE MARGUERITE H. CHURCH (Williams Lake)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 16, 2016

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE MARIA MORELLATO (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 16, 2016

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE HEATHER MACNAUGHTON (Vancouver)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court June 1, 2011
- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 19, 2016

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE CATHERINE MURRAY (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 19, 2016

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE ANDREW P.A. MAYER (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court April 12, 2017

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE W. PAUL RILEY (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court May 11, 2017

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE WARD K. BRANCH (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 8, 2017

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE CARLA FORTH (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 14, 2017

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE MICHAEL J. TAMMEN (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 14, 2017

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE WARREN B. MILMAN (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 14, 2017

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE NITYA IYER (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 14, 2017

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE PALBINDER KAUR SHERGILL (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 23, 2017

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE MICHAEL J. BRUNDRETT (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 21, 2017

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE JANET WINTERINGHAM ▲ (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court August 15, 2017
- Appointed to the Court of Appeal December 4, 2023

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE E. DAVID CROSSIN (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court September 29, 2017

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE FRANCESCA MARZARI (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court December 19, 2017

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE JASVINDER S. (BILL) BASRAN (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court January 19, 2018

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE DIANE C. MACDONALD (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court February 7, 2018

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE BARBARA NORELL (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court February 22, 2018

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE WENDY A. BAKER (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court February 22, 2018

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE SHARON MATTHEWS (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court February 22, 2018

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE THOMAS CRABTREE (Chilliwack)

- Appointed to the Provincial Court February 15, 1999
- Appointed to the Supreme Court May 4, 2018

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE GEOFFREY B. GOMERY (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 15, 2018

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE CHRISTOPHER J. GIASCHI (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court September 4, 2018

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE VERONICA JACKSON (Victoria)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 9, 2018

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE STEPHEN WILSON (Kelowna)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court November 23, 2015
- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 19, 2018

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE DENNIS HORI (Kamloops)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court February 8, 2019

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE KAREN DOUGLAS (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court March 8, 2019

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE AMY FRANCIS (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court March 8, 2019

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE ELIZABETH MCDONALD (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 4, 2019

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE ALAN ROSS (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 24, 2019

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE SHEILA TUCKER (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 24, 2019

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE DAVID CRERAR (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 24, 2019

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE PETER EDELMANN (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court December 20, 2019

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE MATTHEW TAYLOR (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court March 16, 2020

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE ANDREW MAJAWA (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court March 16, 2020

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE SANDRA WILKINSON (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court May 1, 2020

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE WILLIAM VEENSTRA (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 23, 2020

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE LYNDSAY LYSTER (Nelson)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court July 3, 2020

THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE IAN CALDWELL (Abbotsford)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court March 24, 2005
- Appointed to the Supreme Court September 9, 2020

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE JASMIN AHMAD (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court September 9, 2020

THE HONOURABLE MADAM JUSTICE ARDITH WALKEM (Chilliwack)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court December 14, 2020

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE SIMON COVAL (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court December 21, 2020

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE F. MATTHEW KIRCHNER (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court March 24, 2021

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE JULIANNE K. LAMB (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court April 27, 2021

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE LAUREN BLAKE (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court April 27, 2021

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE JAN BRONGERS (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court April 27, 2021

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE BRUCE ELWOOD (New Westminster)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court February 19, 2019
- Appointed to the Supreme Court February 7, 2022

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE K. MICHAEL STEPHENS (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court February 7, 2022

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE MICHAEL G. THOMAS (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court February 7, 2022

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE BALJINDER KAUR GIRN (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court February 7, 2022

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE JOHN GIBB-CARSLEY (New Westminster)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court February 7, 2022

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE JACQUELINE D. HUGHES (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court February 7, 2022

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE BRIANA HARDWICK (Kelowna)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court February 7, 2022

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE JOSEPH M. DOYLE (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 24, 2022

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE KEVIN D. LOO (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 24, 2022

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE ANITA CHAN (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court October 24, 2022

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE BRADFORD F. SMITH (Kamloops)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court June 1, 2023

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE DAVID K. JONES (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court August 7, 2023

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE JENNIFER L. WHATELY (Vancouver)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court August 14, 2023

THE HONOURABLE JUSTICE J. GARETH MORLEY (Victoria)

- Appointed to the Supreme Court August 28, 2023

▲ Appointed to the Court of Appeal
► Supernumerary Justice
▼ Retired

ASSOCIATE JUDGES OF THE SUPREME COURT

ASSOCIATE JUDGE SHELAGH SCARTH ► (Vancouver)

- Appointed District Registrar August 17, 1998
- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court November 6, 2000

ASSOCIATE JUDGE PETER KEIGHLEY ▼ (New Westminster)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court March 8, 2004
- Retired December 31, 2023

ASSOCIATE JUDGE CAROLYN P. BOUCK ► (Victoria)

- Appointed District Registrar April 2, 2002
- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court December 11, 2009

ASSOCIATE JUDGE LESLIE MUIR ► (Vancouver)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court May 7, 2012

ASSOCIATE JUDGE SANDRA HARPER (Vancouver)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court August 5, 2014

ASSOCIATE JUDGE SANDRA DICK (Nanaimo)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court January 1, 2016

ASSOCIATE JUDGE TERRY VOS (Vancouver)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court March 20, 2017

ASSOCIATE JUDGE STEVEN SCHWARTZ (Kelowna)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court February 19, 2019

ASSOCIATE JUDGE JENNIFER KEIM (Kamloops)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court July 31, 2019

ASSOCIATE JUDGE JOHN BILAWICH (Vancouver)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court December 21, 2020

ASSOCIATE JUDGE KIMBERLEY ROBERTSON (New Westminster)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court December 21, 2020

ASSOCIATE JUDGE RORY KRENTZ (Abbotsford)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court April 8, 2022

ASSOCIATE JUDGE SCOTT NIELSEN (New Westminster)

- Appointed District Registrar July 14, 2014
- Appointed Registrar December 1, 2018
- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court April 8, 2022

ASSOCIATE JUDGE SUSANNA HUGHES (Vancouver)

- Appointed Associate Judge of the Supreme Court May 2, 2022

▲ Appointed Judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia
► Senior Associate Judge
▼ Retired

REGISTRAR OF THE SUPREME COURT

REGISTRAR MEG GAILY (Vancouver)

- Appointed Registrar of the Supreme Court October 12, 2022

JUDICIAL STAFF

Office of the Chief Justice and Associate Chief Justice

Judicial Coordinator, Chief Justice Hinkson	Carrie Wilke
Judicial Coordinator, Associate Chief Justice Holmes	Linda Peter
Supreme Court Legal Counsel	Brenda Belak, Natasha Edgar, Nikki Hair, Jennifer Millerd, Leah Pence, Lisa Phillips Line Williams, Claire Wilson

Judicial Administration

Executive Director and Senior Counsel	Heidi McBride
Director, Information Technology	Ryan Wirth
Manager, Finance	Caroline Nguyen
Manager, Human Resources	Tracy Norman
Accounting Coordinator	Cheryl Steele
Accounting Clerks	Gurjot Kaur, Simran Sangha
Communications Coordinator	Diana Foxall
Document Management Clerks	Elle Collman, Jas Dosanj, Nav Dosanj, Daniel Kuster, Aaron Wong
Facilities Officer	Ryan Jongenburger
Human Resources Recruitment Coordinator	Michelle Sam
Human Resources Coordinator	Charles Manuel
Office Manager	Andrea Mueller
Office Clerk	Ethan McMullen
Website Support and Business Information Analyst	Cynthia Dale
Manager, Provincial Registrar's Program	Kristen Day

Supreme Court Scheduling

Director, Supreme Court Scheduling	Cindy Friesen
Deputy Director, Supreme Court Scheduling	Trevor Woo
Assistant to Director, Supreme Court Scheduling	Katherine Castaneda Arenas
Scheduling Training Manager	Ben Bautista
Vancouver
Manager, Supreme Court Scheduling, Civil	William Gallagher
Manager, Supreme Court Scheduling, Family	Rebecca Stock
Manager, Supreme Court Scheduling, Criminal	Rhona Ogston
Team Leaders	Elsa Peralta, Leah Walden
Scheduling Coordinators	Mikayla Bischoff, Kate Curry, Jennie Ho, Jay Nguyen, Trevor Woo, Debbie Pham, Wynne Li

Scheduling Clerks	Amani Abukhadra, Min Jee, Emely Tadena, Jerry Ku, Nav Dosanjh

New Westminster *(includes Abbotsford, Chilliwack and Port Coquitlam)

Manager, Supreme Court Scheduling	Tanya Dixon
Team Leader	Leslie Martin
Scheduling Coordinators	Allison Donnelly, Renuka Pumbhak, Owen Li, Rapinder Mehat, Angelina Slootweg, Cynthia Ferrer, Carly Lafave
Scheduling Clerk	Kirby Harris

Kamloops (includes Cranbrook, Golden, Nelson, Revelstoke, Rossland, Salmon Arm)

Manager, Supreme Court Scheduling	Brenda Strain
Scheduling Coordinators	Marnie Manula, Beckie Allen

Kelowna (includes Penticton, Vernon)

Manager, Supreme Court Scheduling	Janine Benson
Scheduling Coordinators	Sandeep Johal, Dyllan Siebert, Eryn Dumonte, Alisa Anthony

Nanaimo (includes Campbell River, Courtenay, Port Alberni and Powell River)

Manager, Supreme Court Scheduling	Michelle Schley
Scheduling Coordinators	Leanne Cyr, Katherine Marriott

Prince George (includes, Dawson Creek, Fort St. John, Quesnel, Williams Lake)

Manager, Supreme Court Scheduling	Pamela Wallin
Scheduling Coordinators	Tara Bleich, Kelly Parmar

Victoria (includes Duncan, Prince Rupert, Terrace, Smithers)

Manager, Supreme Court Scheduling	Claudia Turner
Scheduling Coordinators	April Castillo, Sandra Skene

Section 525 Detention Reviews

Detention Review Coordinator	Kendra Kirkwood

Judicial Support Services

Manager, Judicial Support Services	Jessica Gill, Samantha Servis
Judicial Administrative Assistants
Vancouver	Irem Akcan, Radovan Burdej, Antonia Chen, *Kirsten Floyd, Diane Goyengko, ^Diana Hatley, ^Bonnie Healy, Sasha Ionova, Raji Johal, Jaspreet Kaur, Simran Kooner, ^Wanda Lam, Queen Lee, ^Amanda Li, Israel Mbenza, Melissa Mendoza Alcocer, Akhtar Mohammed, Meena Puhl, Chelsea Salindong, Chiraz Sisrian, ^Vickie Siu, Lindy Tucker
Abbotsford	Christina Campbell
Chilliwack	^Yvonne Samek
Kamloops	Beckie Allen, *Jane Raggatt
Kelowna	Lana Pardue, ^Shannon Zorn
Nanaimo	^Melissa Lund
New Westminster	^Barbara Gourlay, Rasmeet Kaur, *Jesse Rathor, Andrea Walker
Prince George	Kelly Parmar
Victoria	Kathy Cook, ^Karen Gurney, Michelle McNeill
Judicial Administrative Clerks	Pedro Costa, Shivali Singla
One Judgment Office	Mandie Dhesi, Miki Lee

Team Lead*
^Senior Judicial Administrative Assistant

Judges Library

Librarian	Sylvia Ranspach
Library Technician	Connie Kang
Co-Op Student	Shelby Colling

IT Services*

Service Delivery Manager	Lawrence Ho
Infrastructure Project Analyst	David Chow, Billy Huang
Help Desk and Operations Analyst	William Huang
Help Desk Technician	Priya Bageja, Guilherme Gianjope, Mike Larm, Ami Osame, Wayland Szeto
Senior Business Analyst and Project Manager	Lorne Lovett
Business Analyst	Joanne Chong
Software Developer	Jojo Ho

IT services are provided by Microserve Business Computer Services*

APPENDIX - COURT STATISTICS

Figure 1: New Criminal, Family and Civil Filings

	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023
Civil	54,662	55,445	58,500	60,334	66,185	69,140	61,497	48,168	42,462	39,550
Family	11,682	12,085	12,130	12,038	12,062	12,152	11,043	11,737	11,351	11,995
Criminal	1,396	1,362	1,336	1,348	1,642	3,665	2,297	2,200	2,292	2,507

Data Source: Courthouse Activity Cube and Criminal BI Database, extracted February 16, 2024
Historical numbers are updated to current information. Data may change due to data settling and corrections.

Note: On May 1, 2021, the ICBC Enhanced Care program (no-fault insurance) came into effect. New filings, involving accidents that occurred before May 1, 2021, are expected to continue until April 30, 2023. After this date, only exceptional claims will be filed with the court. Exceptional claims include collisions involving drivers charged with certain criminal code offences and non-motorists who contribute to injuries.

Figure 2: New Filings by Category in 2023

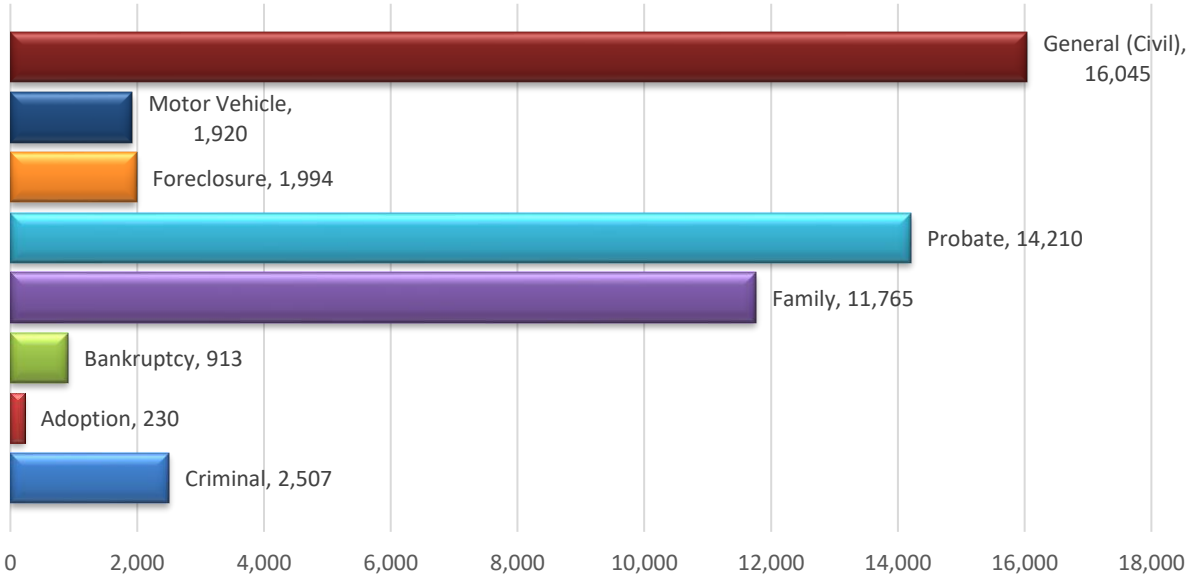

Figure 3: Number of Conferences by Type

Number of Conferences per Type, 2014 – 2023

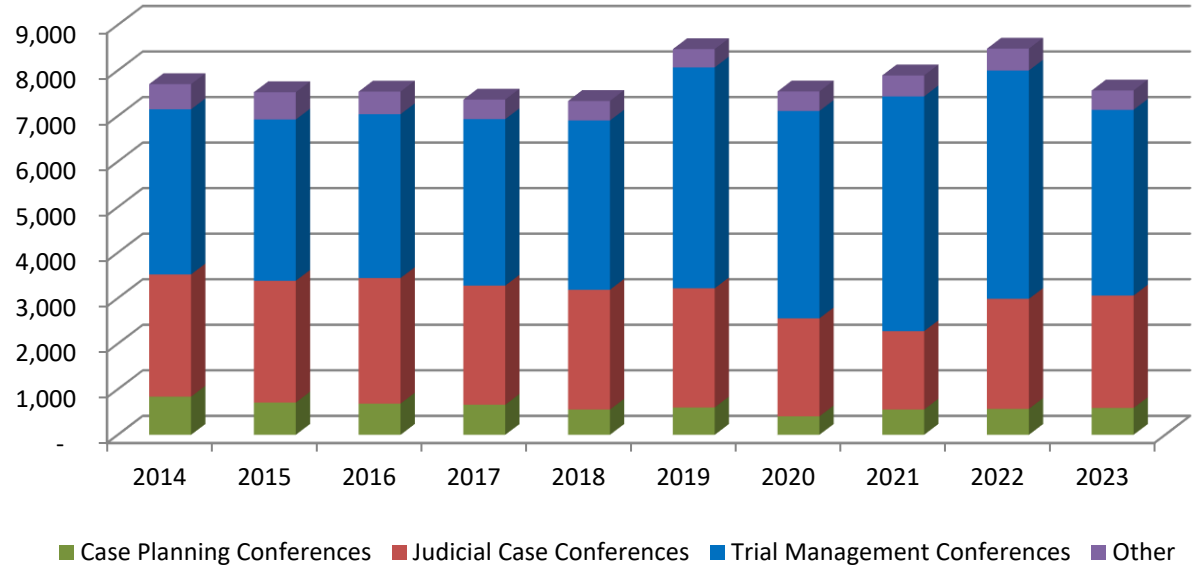

Figure 4: Hearing Hours by Conferences Type

Hours per Conference Type, 2014 - 2023

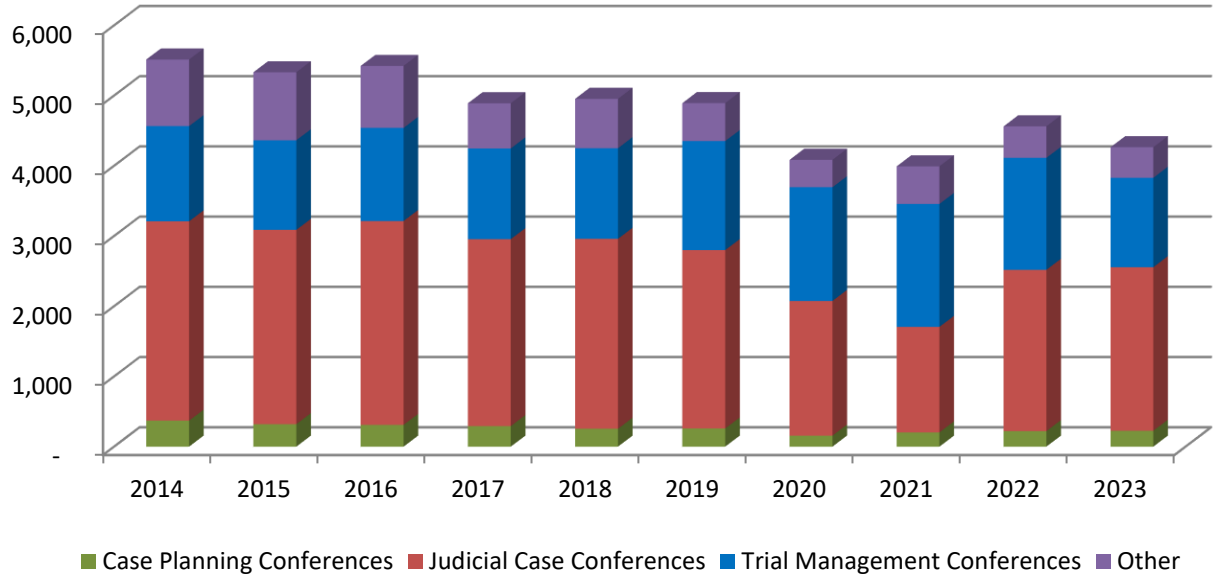

Figure 5: Civil Trials and Long Chambers Applications Scheduled in Vancouver

	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023
Trials	7,319	6,880	6,464	7,573	7,163	7,765	7,795	7,194	7,227	7,386
Long Chambers	2,409	2,431	2,428	2,406	2,894	2,324	1,993	2,374	2,492	2,524

Figure 6: Long Chambers Applications Scheduled and Heard in Vancouver

	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023
Scheduled	2,409	2,431	2,428	2,406	2,894	2,324	1,993	2,374	2,492	2,524
Heard	1,039	1,033	1,123	1,005	1,426	972	822	1,020	1,013	1,083
% Heard v. Scheduled	43	42	46	42	49	42	41	43	41	43

Figure 7: Long Chambers Applications Heard and Bumped in British Columbia

	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023
Heard	1,673	1,773	1,850	2,126	2,231	1,753	1,441	1,946	1,976	1,955
Bumped	123	97	72	218	100	281	168	259	214	318
% Bumped v. Heard	7.4	5.5	3.9	10.3	4.5	16.0	11.7	13.3	10.8	16.3

Figure 8: Long Chambers Applications Heard and Bumped in Vancouver

	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023
Heard	1,039	1,033	1,123	1,005	1,426	972	822	1,020	1,018	1,083
Bumped	52	44	32	106	45	142	71	120	107	171
% Bumped v. Heard	5.0	4.3	2.8	10.5	3.2	14.6	8.6	11.8	10.5	15.8

Figure 9: Trials Heard and Bumped in British Columbia

	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023
Heard	1,061	969	887	873	870	1,020	773	946	823	854
Bumped	61	43	21	98	33	140	142	128	141	136
% Bumped v. Heard	5.7	4.4	2.4	11.2	3.8	13.7	18.4	13.5	17.1	15.9

Figure 10: Trials Heard and Bumped in Vancouver

	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023
Heard	405	343	327	308	298	387	270	321	286	304
Bumped	19	20	5	34	6	56	75	52	75	46
% Bumped v. Heard	4.7	5.8	1.5	11.0	2.0	14.5	27.8	16.2	26.2	15.1

Figure 11: Trials Heard and Bumped by Type and Location in 2023

	HEARD 2023				BUMPED 2023
	Civil	Criminal	Family	Total	Civil	Criminal	Family	Total
LOWER MAINLAND
Abbotsford	8	10	12	30	4	0	1	5
Chilliwack	2	8	5	15	2	0	2	4
New Westminster	62	45	27	134	26	0	4	30
Port Coquitlam	6	0	10	16	0	0	0	0
Vancouver	183	44	77	304	37	1	8	46
Region Totals	261	107	131	499	69	1	15	85
Region %	82%	33%	61%	58%	70%	0%	63%	63%
VANCOUVER ISLAND
Campbell River	0	4	3	7	0	0	0	0
Courtenay	2	7	4	13	0	1	0	1
Duncan	2	5	2	9	1	0	0	1
Nanaimo	5	21	10	36	3	3	0	6
Port Alberni	0	5	2	7	0	0	0	0
Powell River	2	4	0	6	0	0	0	0
Victoria	20	38	20	78	7	4	3	14
Region Totals	31	84	41	156	11	8	3	22
Region %	10%	26%	19%	18%	11%	0%	13%	16%
NORTHERN INTERIOR
Dawson Creek	1	3	0	4	0	0	0	0
Fort St. John	1	2	3	6	1	0	0	1
Prince George	0	21	6	27	1	0	0	1
Prince Rupert	0	1	2	3	0	0	0	0
Quesnel	0	2	0	2	0	0	0	0
Smithers	2	5	2	9	1	0	0	1
Terrace	0	3	1	4	0	0	0	0
Williams Lake	0	5	3	8	0	0	0	0
Region Totals	4	42	17	63	3	0	0	3
Region %	1%	13%	8%	7%	3%	0%	0%	2%

	HEARD 2023				BUMPED 2023
	Civil	Criminal	Family	Total	Civil	Criminal	Family	Total
SOUTHERN INTERIOR
Kamloops	2	22	9	33	4	0	1	5
Kelowna	16	25	10	51	10	0	1	11
Vernon	1	9	3	13	0	1	0	1
Nelson	2	6	0	8	0	0	1	1
Cranbrook	0	9	1	10	2	0	0	2
Penticton	2	8	0	10	0	3	1	4
Salmon Arm	0	1	2	3	0	0	2	2
Rossland	0	7	0	7	0	0	0	0
Golden	0	1	0	1	0	0	0	0
Revelstoke	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Region Totals	23	88	25	136	16	4	6	26
Region %	7%	27%	12%	16%	16%	0%	25%	19%
TOTAL	319	321	214	854	99	13	24	136
TOTAL %	37%	38%	25%		73%	10%	18%

Figure 12: Trials Heard By Registry in 2023

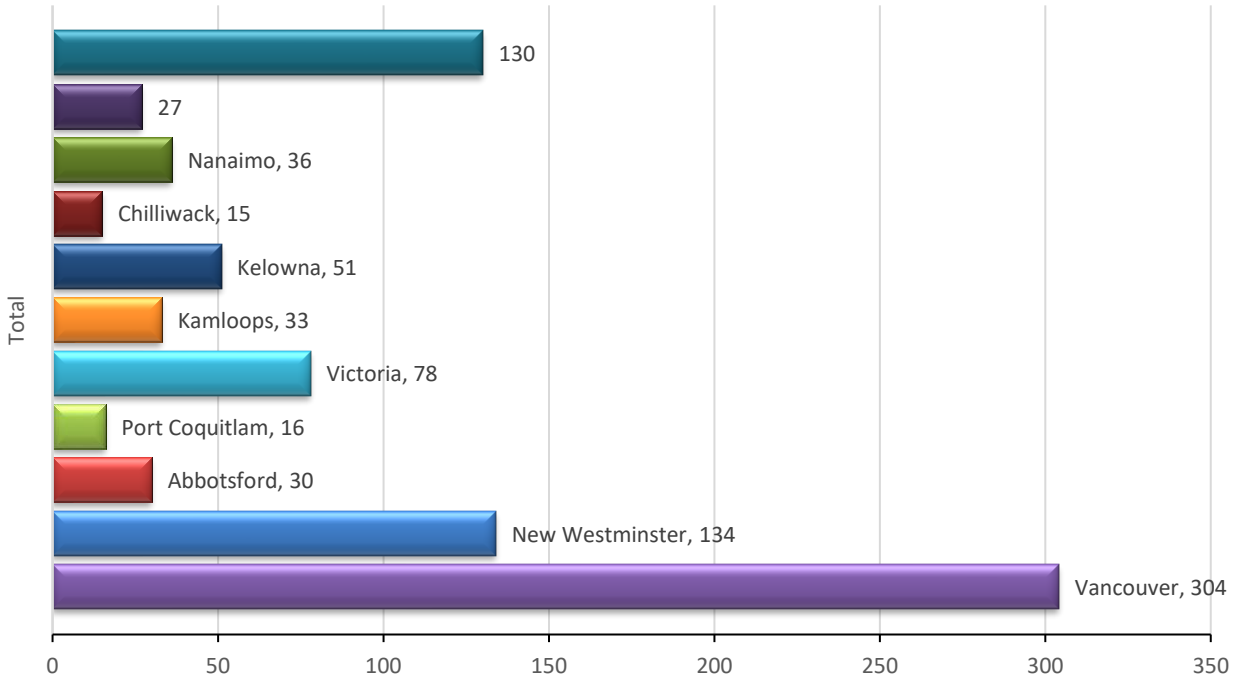

Figure 13: Trials Heard By Region in 2023

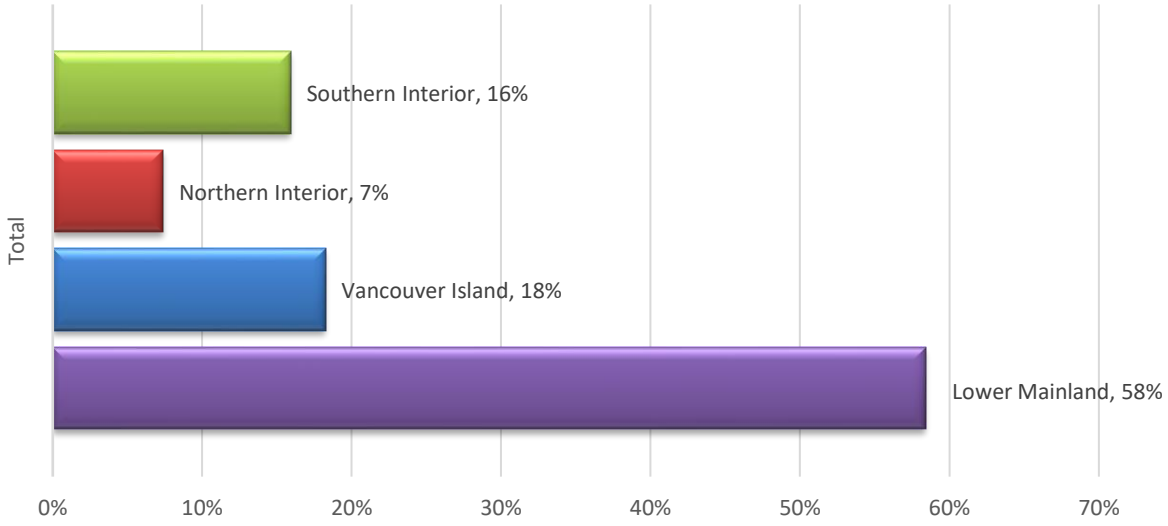

Figure 14: Published Reasons for Judgment by Subject, Type, and Year

	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023
CIVIL
Oral	285	316	306	340	305	309	267	379	327	389
Written	1,181	1,050	1,009	868	895	905	868	1069	948	927
Total	1,466	1,366	1,315	1,208	1,200	1,214	1,135	1,448	1,275	1,316
CRIMINAL
Oral	348	354	280	344	377	371	248	314	163	246
Written	120	114	63	113	109	78	58	97	48	67
Total	468	468	343	457	486	449	306	411	211	313
FAMILY
Oral	66	96	94	86	95	64	76	108	94	114
Written	299	300	267	272	275	242	235	293	259	256
Total	365	396	361	358	370	306	311	401	353	370
TOTAL	2,299	2,230	2,019	2,023	2,056	1,969	1,752	2,260	1,839	1,999

Figure 15: Published Reasons for Judgment by Year, 2014 – 2023

	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023
Civil	1,466	1,366	1,315	1,208	1,200	1,214	1,135	1,448	1,275	1,316
Criminal	468	468	343	457	486	449	306	411	211	313
Family	365	396	361	358	370	306	311	401	353	370

Figure 16: Published Reasons for Judgment by Subject, Type, and Year

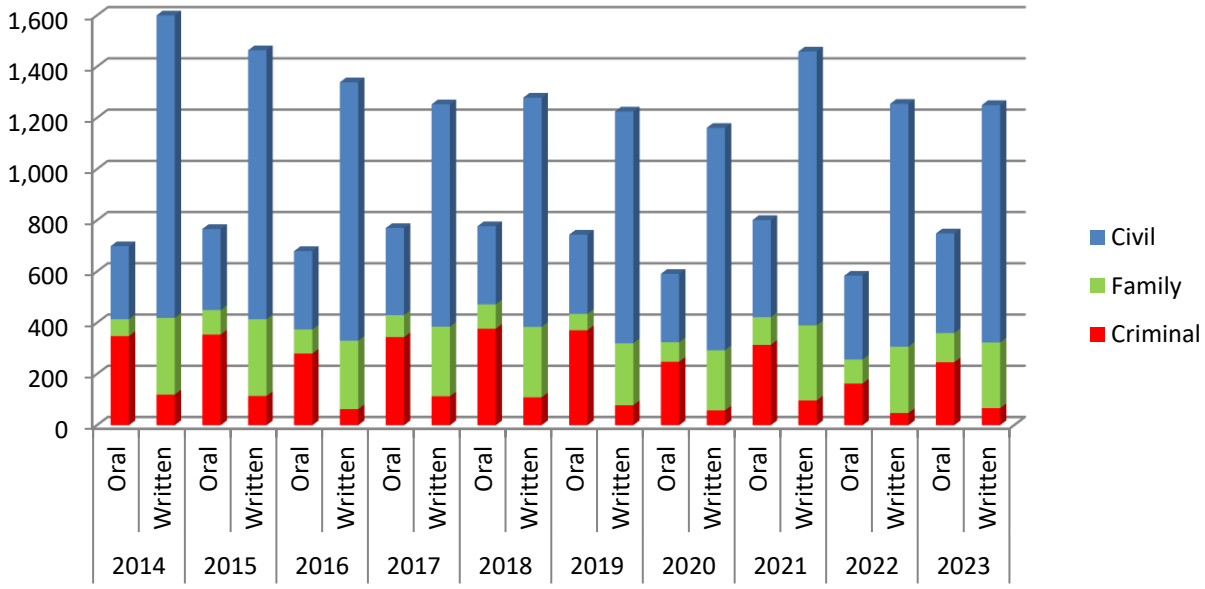

Figure 17: E-Filed Documents in Supreme Court

	2014/15	2015/16	2016/17	2017/18	2018/19	2019/20	2020/21	2021/22	2022/23
Documents Filed	595,496	593,068	595,228	595,811	591,039	616,514	555,657	577,943	559,759
Documents E-Filed	218,788	232,974	246,026	259,148	262,846	279,645	346,203	314,293	297,546
% E-Filed	37%	39%	41%	43%	44%	45%	62%	54%	52%

Figure 18: E-Orders Processed in the Supreme Court

	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023
E-Orders Processed	8,920	9,427	9,622	10,987	10,902	11,206	13,535	14,014	14,669	17,613

British Columbia
Judicial Compensation Commission
2022

FINAL REPORT

To the Attorney General and the Chief Judge of the Provincial Court

April 28, 2023

1 Overview

1.1 Introduction

The 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission ("2022 JCC") makes this report with our recommendations to the Attorney General and the Chief Judge of the Provincial Court. We have been mandated to make independent and objective recommendations regarding the remuneration, allowances, and benefits of British Columbia's Provincial Court judges and judicial justices. We have considered all the information placed before us[1] and assessed it with respect to each of the statutory factors (described below), and as a whole. We have looked back at the work of past judicial compensation commissions, and forward in making recommendations for the four fiscal years ahead.

Compensation of the judiciary—and the process by which changes to compensation occur—must respect the constitutional principle of judicial independence. The courts must "be free and appear to be free of political interference through economic manipulation by other branches of government" including the legislature.[2] While the legislative branch of government must authorize all public spending and may reduce, increase, or freeze judicial salaries, "the imperative of protecting the courts from political interference through economic manipulation requires that an independent body—a judicial compensation commission—be interposed between the judiciary and the other branches of government."[3]

The executive and legislative branches of government may decide on the "exact shape and powers" of such a commission; nevertheless, a judicial compensation commission must be independent, objective, and effective.[4] Its constitutional function is to depoliticize the process of determining judicial remuneration.

In British Columbia, the Judicial Compensation Act (the "Act") sets out the process for selecting an independent commission to make recommendations on all matters respecting the remuneration, allowances and benefits of Provincial Court judges and judicial justices.[5] The commissioners must

---

[1] See Appendices A, B, D, F, and G. The full citations for abbreviations used in the footnotes to this report are found in Appendices A, B, and D.

[2] Reference re Remuneration of Judges of the Provincial Court of PEI; Reference re Independence and Impartiality of Judges of the Provincial Court of PEI, [1997] 3 SCR 3 ["PEI Reference"], para. 131.

[3] PEI Reference, para. 147.

[4] PEI Reference, paras. 167, 170, 173, and 174.

[5] Judicial Compensation Act, SBC 2003, c. 59 [the "Judicial Compensation Act"], ss. 2(2), and 5(1).

make recommendations with reference to objective criteria—not political expediencies.[6] The Act provides objective criteria for the commission's use in the form of six factors for consideration:[7]

(a) the need to maintain a strong court by attracting highly qualified applicants;

(b) changes, if any, to the jurisdiction of judges or judicial justices;

(c) compensation provided in respect of similar judicial positions in Canada, having regard to the differences between those jurisdictions and British Columbia;

(d) changes in the compensation of others paid by provincial public funds in British Columbia;

(e) the generally accepted current and expected economic conditions in British Columbia; and

(f) the current and expected financial position of the government over the 4 fiscal years that are the subject of the report.

The commission may also consider other factors it considers relevant.[8]

In addition to being independent and objective, "most importantly, the commission must also be effective."[9] For the commission process to be effective, the government must not make changes to judicial compensation until it has received a report from a judicial compensation commission, and the commission must convene at regular intervals to protect against the reduction in judicial salaries due to inflation.[10] Further, the commission's report "must have a meaningful effect on the determination of judicial salaries."[11] "Meaningful effect" does not mean the commission's report is binding on government; the government retains the power to depart from the commission's recommendations as long as it justifies its decision to do so with "rational reasons."[12] However, the commission's recommendations must be given weight.[13]

---

[6] PEI Reference, para. 173.

[7] Judicial Compensation Act, s. 5(5).

[8] Judicial Compensation Act, s. 5(5.2).

[9] PEI Reference, para. 173.

[10] PEI Reference, para. 174.

[11] PEI Reference, para. 175.

[12] Provincial Court Judges' Association of New Brunswick v. New Brunswick (Minister of Justice); Ontario Judges' Association v. Ontario (Management Board); Bodner v. Alberta; Conférence des juges du Québec v. Quebec (Attorney General); Minc v. Quebec (Attorney General), 2005 SCC 44, [2005] 2 SCR 286 ["Bodner"], paras. 20-22; PEI Reference, paras. 182-184.

[13] Bodner, para. 23.

1.2 Summary of Recommendations

1. Salaries: The Government should set the Provincial Court judges' and judicial justices' salaries for the next four fiscal years as follows:

Fiscal Year:	2023-24	2024-25	2025-26	2026-27
Provincial Court Judges	$343,000	$360,000	$360,000 + a percentage increase equivalent to the annual average percentage change in BC CPI for 2024[14]	2025-26 salary + a percentage increase equivalent to the annual average percentage change in BC CPI for 2025
Judicial Justices	$172,000	$177,000	$182,000	$187,000

2. Salary Differentials: Administrative judges should continue to receive the following percentages of a puisne judge's salary: Chief Judge 112%; Associate Chief Judges 108%; and Regional Administrative Judges 106%. Administrative Judicial Justices should receive 106% of judicial justice compensation.

3. Judges' Pensions: The 3% accrual rate for judge's pensions should be maintained.

4. Non-judicial Pensions for Judges: The Judicial Compensation Act should be amended to align the non-judicial pensionable service provisions with the Public Service Pension Plan rule changes made in 2018 and 2022, as detailed in Appendix F, in respect of the following:
   i. the benefit accrual rates for service between April 1, 2018 - March 31, 2022, and after April 1, 2022;
   ii. the past service benefit enhancement and the bridge benefit for the period of April 1, 2006 - March 31, 2018 and after April 1, 2018; and
   iii. the early retirement factor for non-judicial service earned on or after April 1, 2018.

5. Flexible Benefits Program: Effective January 1, 2024, Provincial Court judges should receive the enhancements to the flexible benefits program that were offered to excluded public sector employees on January 1, 2023. Future enhancements to the flexible benefits plan for excluded employees and appointees should be automatically implemented for the Provincial Court judges, with the judiciary having recourse to seek changes through future judicial compensation commissions.

[14] See footnote 261, infra, for remarks about the calculation of BC CPI.

6. Part-time Judicial Justice Amount in lieu of Benefits: The amount in lieu of benefits added to the per diem pay for part-time judicial justices should be increased from 20% to 22%.

7. Shift Premiums for Judicial Justices: As set out in Appendix G, new holidays should be added to the list of the holidays that attract a $245 shift premium, the shift premium for Christmas Day should be increased by $75, a weekend shift premium of $75 should be implemented and a court closure day shift premium of $75 should be implemented.

8. Overhead Amount for Part-time Judicial Justices: The overhead amount added to the per diem pay for part-time judicial justices should be increased from $75 to $100.

9. Professional Development Allowance: For the next four fiscal years, the professional development allowance for judges should remain at $4,500 per year, and the professional development allowance for judicial justices should remain at $3,250 per year.

10. Travel Allowance: The current travel allowance (or travel per diems) for judges and judicial justices should be maintained.

11. Interest on Retroactive Salary Increases: For retroactive salary increases, the Government should pay judges or judicial justices pre-judgment interest from April 1, 2023 to the date on which the increase is established and post-judgment interest thereafter until payment is made.

12. Costs: The Government should, by regulation pursuant to section 7.1(3) of the Judicial Compensation Act, reimburse 100% of the reasonable costs and disbursements, including expert witness costs, of the Provincial Court Judges Association (PCJA) and the Judicial Justices Association (JJA) for their participation in the 2022 Commission process.

2 The 2022 Commission and Its Process

2.1 Who Are We and What Was our Mandate?

The 2022 JCC consists of five Commissioners tasked with preparing a report to the Attorney General and the Chief Judge on "all matters respecting the remuneration, allowances and benefits of judges and judicial justices." The Commissioners make recommendations on those matters for each of the fiscal years 2023-24, 2024-25, 2025-26, and 2026-27.[15] The need to provide reasonable compensation for judges and judicial justices guides this mandate.[16]

The statutory appointment process resulted in the following appointments:[17]

1. Vern Blair, FCPA, FCA, FCBV, FRICS, is a Chartered Professional Accountant and a Chartered Business Valuator. He negotiates for and advises owners and management and is an arbitrator and mediator.

2. Lisa Castle is a part-time consultant specializing in supporting organizations to become stronger with their people. She worked in higher education for 28 years, with the majority of those holding the most senior Human Resources role including UBC's first Vice-President, Human Resources.

3. Eric Gottardi, KC, is a Vancouver lawyer and former chair of the CBA National Criminal Law Section and the Criminal Section of the Uniform Law Conference of Canada. He sits as a non-bencher adjudicator with the Law Society's Discipline Tribunal and on the Faculty (and as a planner) of the Federation of Law Societies' Criminal Law Program.

4. Robert Lapper, KC, is a lawyer and law professor. Currently Faculty Chair in Law and Public Policy at the University of Victoria, he previously served as CEO of the Law Society of Ontario, and in several Deputy Minister and Assistant Deputy Minister positions in the BC Government.

5. Lynn Smith, OC, KC, Commission Chair, is a retired Justice of the Supreme Court of British Columbia and a former law Professor and Dean of Law at the University of British Columbia.

The Commissioners retained Kathy L. Grant as their counsel.

---

[15] Judicial Compensation Act, ss. 2(2), and 5(1).

[16] Judicial Compensation Act, s. 5(5).

[17] Judicial Compensation Act, s. 2(2).

Independent of both government and the judiciary, the Commissioners strove to produce an objective report, based on evidence, and taking into account all the factors set out in section 5(5) of the Act.

2.2 What Did We Do?

After holding pre-hearing conferences with the main participants—the Government, the PCJA, the JJA, and the Chief Judge—we received written submissions from them and others, we held oral hearings, we visited several courts, and we deliberated and prepared this report.

As set out in Appendix A, we received written submissions from the main participants as well as the Judicial Council, Canadian Bar Association BC Branch, and the Law Society of British Columbia. The Government has made these submissions publicly available through the Commission's webpage, online: https://www2.gov.bc.ca/gov/content/justice/about-bcs-justice-system/judicial-compensation/2022-judicial-compensation-commission. Appendix B describes the books of documents from the main participants, most of which were jointly compiled.

We held four days of in-person oral hearings in Vancouver in mid-February 2023. We held two additional virtual oral hearings, through Zoom, on March 10, 2023 and March 13, 2023, to hear submissions about the provincial budget that was delivered on February 28, 2023 and to complete submissions on the issue of costs. During oral hearings, we heard submissions from the PCJA, the JJA, the Chief Judge (who also spoke for the Judicial Council), and the Government.

We also heard from three witnesses, as set out in Appendix C. Both Mr. Ian McKinnon, a consultant with Pacific Issues Partners, and Ms. Heather Wood, Deputy Minister of Finance for British Columbia, provided evidence concerning the current and expected economic conditions in British Columbia and the current and expected financial position of the government. Mr. André Sauvé, an actuary in private practice, provided us with a comparative analysis of judicial pension plans in Canada.

Documents provided to the Commission during the oral hearing were marked as exhibits, as set out in Appendix D.

To inform our understanding of the work of the Provincial Court, we visited various court locations (see Appendix E). A representative of the Government attended all the court visits. We were impressed by the wide range of cases coming before the court and the fast pace of the work. We saw many instances of the judges dealing with unrepresented litigants and observed the judges' and judicial justices' abilities to find the delicate balance between ensuring equal access to justice for unrepresented persons and maintaining judicial impartiality. We also witnessed the impressive innovations of the Provincial Court through, for example, the Indigenous Court and the Downtown Community Court.

We considered all the submissions, documents, witness evidence, and other information described above during our deliberations and report writing. In this report, we highlight the information that is most pertinent to understanding our recommendations.

2.3 What Challenges Did We Face?

We begin by acknowledging the extraordinary work of the participants and their counsel in preparing for and organizing the hearings, and then providing us with evidence, documentation, and detailed and careful submissions—all in an unforgiving timeframe, as described below.

However, we did face certain challenges in completing our mandate.

First, recent statutory amendments extended the timeline for the Commission's recommendations from three fiscal years to four fiscal years. The inherent uncertainty in forecasting future conditions, particularly with respect to the "expected" elements of the factors set out in subsections 5(5)(d) and 5(5)(e) of the Act, increases with the addition of another year to a commission's mandate.

Second, the Government delayed the appointment and reporting of the 2022 JCC such that, instead of the Commission operating in the March 1 to October 31 timeframe, it operated over the September 1 to April 30 timeframe.[18] The logical timing for hearings—midway during the commission process—could not be utilized as it fell during the December holiday season. Unfortunately, participants, counsel for the participants, and the Commissioners had prior commitments in January and early February that pushed the dates for oral hearings into mid-February 2023. This left only six weeks for the Commissioners to produce a preliminary report by April 1, 2023, instead of the 2.5 to three months usually available to judicial compensation commissions.

Third, this tight timeline became even more challenging due to the delivery of the 2023-24 provincial budget on February 28, 2023—after the Commission's oral hearings. As the budget contained forecasting of economic conditions and the Government's financial position through to later years of the Commission's mandate, it was important for the Commissioners to hear submissions on the budget. The Commission held additional virtual hearings on March 10 and March 13, 2023. Consequently, the Commissioners had only three weeks after final submissions to prepare their preliminary report.

In addition, in the late afternoon of March 30, 2023, the day before we delivered our Preliminary Report, we were advised that the Lieutenant Governor in Council had increased the maximum amounts for participation costs for the Provincial Court Judges' Association and the Judicial Justices' Association.[19]

---

[18] Bill 30 – 2021 Attorney General Statutes Amendment Act, 2021, third reading, s. 9.

[19] B.C. Reg. 83/2023, approved and ordered on March 30, 2023. Order in Council No. 194 sets higher amounts for the purposes of section 7.1(2) of the Judicial Compensation Act and effectively revises that section to read as follows:

> (2) The maximum amount that may be paid under subsection (1), which maximum amount applies separately to the Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia and the Judicial Justices Association of British Columbia, is as follows:
> (a) the first $40,000 in costs;
> (b) 85% of the costs over $40,000 but under $150,000.

We were, however, able to consider whether this new regulation changed our conclusions regarding costs prior to issuing our Final Report.

The results of the 2019 Judicial Compensation Commission ("2019 JCC") with respect to Provincial Court judges' compensation were unknown at the time we delivered our Preliminary Report. A decision from the Supreme Court of British Columbia on judicial review was then outstanding.As it happens, that Supreme Court decision was delivered on April 3, 2023, two days after we delivered our Preliminary Report on the 2022 JCC.[20] The Supreme Court quashed two motions of the Legislative Assembly rejecting the salary and costs recommendations of the 2019 JCC. The matter has been remitted back to the Legislative Assembly for its reconsideration. Thus, the question of compensation for Provincial Court judges for the period covered by the 2019 JCC is still unsettled, as is the question of costs for the 2019 JCC.

Unfortunately, these timing issues are not unique to the 2022 JCC. For several cycles, judicial compensation commissions have had to deal with the same problem: not knowing the final result of the previous commission process. We do not yet know the "final" compensation that will be paid to judges over the 2019 JCC's mandate.

Finally, the issue of whether and in what circumstances a commission may make a recommendation that departs from the costs formula set out in section 7.1 of the Judicial Compensation Act was—at the time the Commission conducted its hearing and wrote its Preliminary Report—before the Supreme Court of British Columbia in the judicial review proceeding following the 2019 JCC. This Commission had to consider whether its recommendations on costs risked conflicting with the (then) anticipated court decision. Additionally, the Government delayed providing submissions on costs until the evening of March 4, 2023 to allow more time for the Court to deliver judgment.[21] (As it transpired, in our view our recommendations on costs in the Preliminary Report of April 1, 2023, are fully consistent with the April 3, 2023 Supreme Court decision.)

While understandable, this delay put further stress on the timing for the 2022 JCC's report.

Some of these challenges were unavoidable, but we make the following suggestions to aid future commissions in their work:

- Any change to the statutory timing for a judicial compensation commission should allow for hearings midway through the commission's process (and should only be made after consultation with the PCJA, JJA, and Chief Judge). This will ensure adequate time for report preparation following the hearings;

- Counsel for the Government, JJA, and PCJA, as well as the Chief Judge should come to the process with significant flexibility in their schedules for a mid-process hearing. In the normal process this would mean hearings at the end of June or early July;

[20] Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2023 BCSC 520.

[21] Main Submission of Government, para. 71; Costs Submission of Government.

- Potential commissioners should be pre-screened, prior to their appointment, for their ability to participate in hearings midway through the process;

- The time frame for the commission's work should not overlap with a provincial budget; and

- Submissions on all substantive issues should be delivered to the commission prior to oral hearings. If necessary, the commission has the discretion to seek additional submissions or information if required.

3 The Role and Work of Provincial Court Judges and Judicial Justices

3.1 Jurisdiction and Composition of the Provincial Court

The Provincial Court's judges and judicial justices are the face of justice to most British Columbians. The Court has broad jurisdiction and operates at over 80 locations.

The Provincial Court is one of two trial courts in the province—the other being the Supreme Court of British Columbia. The Provincial Court is a statutory court, with broad jurisdiction.[22] The Court and every judge exercise "power" and "perform all the duties" conferred on them under federal and provincial legislation.[23] The Court exercises jurisdiction in six primary subject areas: adult criminal, youth criminal, family, child protection, civil (small claims), and traffic, ticket, and bylaw matters.

Previous judicial compensation commissions aptly described the Provincial Court as the "People's Court."[24] The Provincial Court hears 95% of the criminal cases in British Columbia. The only significant exceptions are where an accused elects to be tried by a Supreme Court Justice with or without a jury, murder cases, and extradition cases. In many such cases, a preliminary hearing may be held in Provincial Court. The Provincial Court has exclusive jurisdiction over child protection proceedings. It exercises concurrent jurisdiction with the Supreme Court under the Family Law Act over matters of guardianship, parenting arrangements and child and spousal support. It has broad civil jurisdiction over claims between $5,001 and $35,000, and it hears applications for exceptions from the Civil Resolution Tribunal (concerning matters of $5,000 or less).[25]

Certain matters before the court may only be heard by a Provincial Court judge.[26] Aside from these, the Chief Judge may assign the matters to be heard by either judges or judicial justices.[27] Currently, judicial justices hear the following: bail hearings outside court sitting hours, judicial [22] Main Submission of Government, para. 31; Submissions of Chief Judge, paras. 15-20; Main Submission of PCJA, paras. 79-80; Submission of Judicial Council, para. 19.

[23] Provincial Court Act, RSBC 1996, c. 379 [Provincial Court Act], s. 2(3).

[24] See for example, Judicial Compensation Commission 2019 Final Report, October 24, 2019, JBD, Vol. 1, Tab 18, p. 10.

[25] See descriptions of jurisdiction in Main Submission of PCJA paras. 79-103; Main Submission of Government, paras. 29-31, 42; and Submission of Chief Judge, paras. 17-20.

[26] Provincial Court Act, s. 2.1.

[27] Provincial Court Act, s. 11.

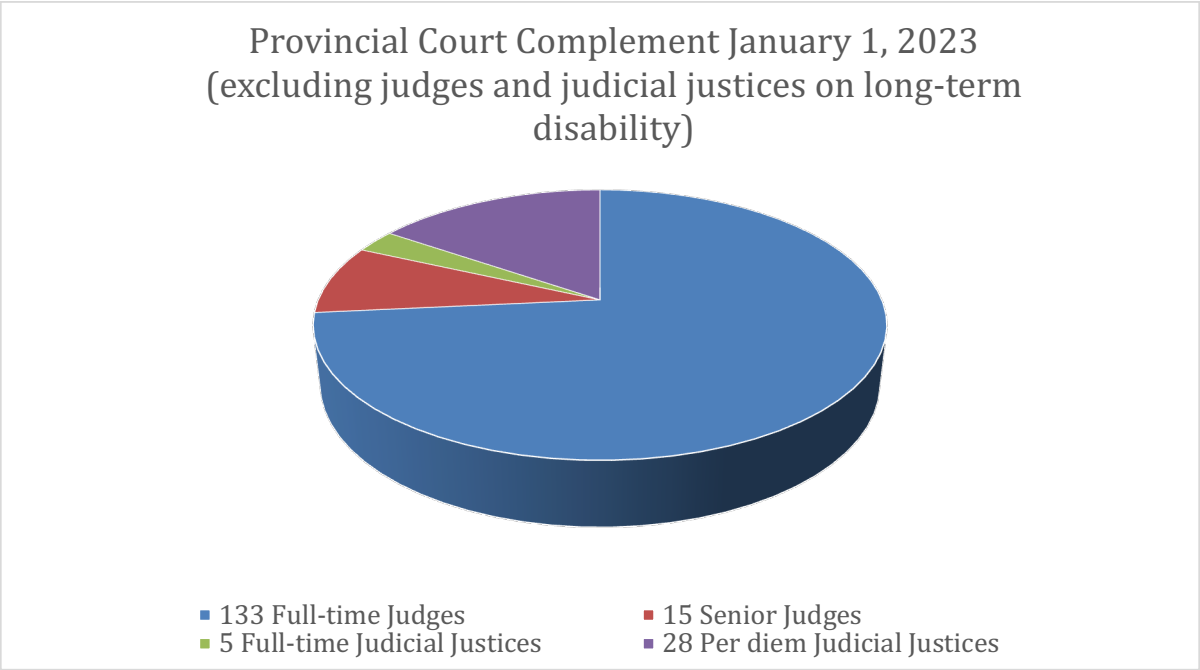
authorization applications (including for search warrants and production orders), payment hearings, ticket violation hearings, and traffic offences hearings.[28]

In short, most people who come to court in British Columbia, do so before a judge or judicial justice of the Provincial Court. These judges and judicial justices are the face of justice to most British Columbians.

As of January 1, 2023, there were 131 full-time Provincial Court judges and 15 senior judges (0.45 of a full-time judge) for a complement of roughly 138 full-time equivalent judges.[29] Five full-time judicial justices and 28 part-time or "per diem" judicial justices make a total of 33 judicial justices.[30]



The judges and judicial justices work at over 80 physical locations across the province, in five regions, as depicted in the figure below.[31] Full-time registries operate at 44 of these locations. Additionally, since the fall of 2020, the Court sits in six virtual bail courts that do not have a [28] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 137; Main Submission of JJA, paras. 40, 48, 58, 70, 74, and 78; Main Submission of Government, para. 60; Judicial Justices Assignment of Duties Pursuant to s. 11 of the Provincial Court Act, January 14, 2023, Supplemental Book of Documents of the JJA, Tab 7.

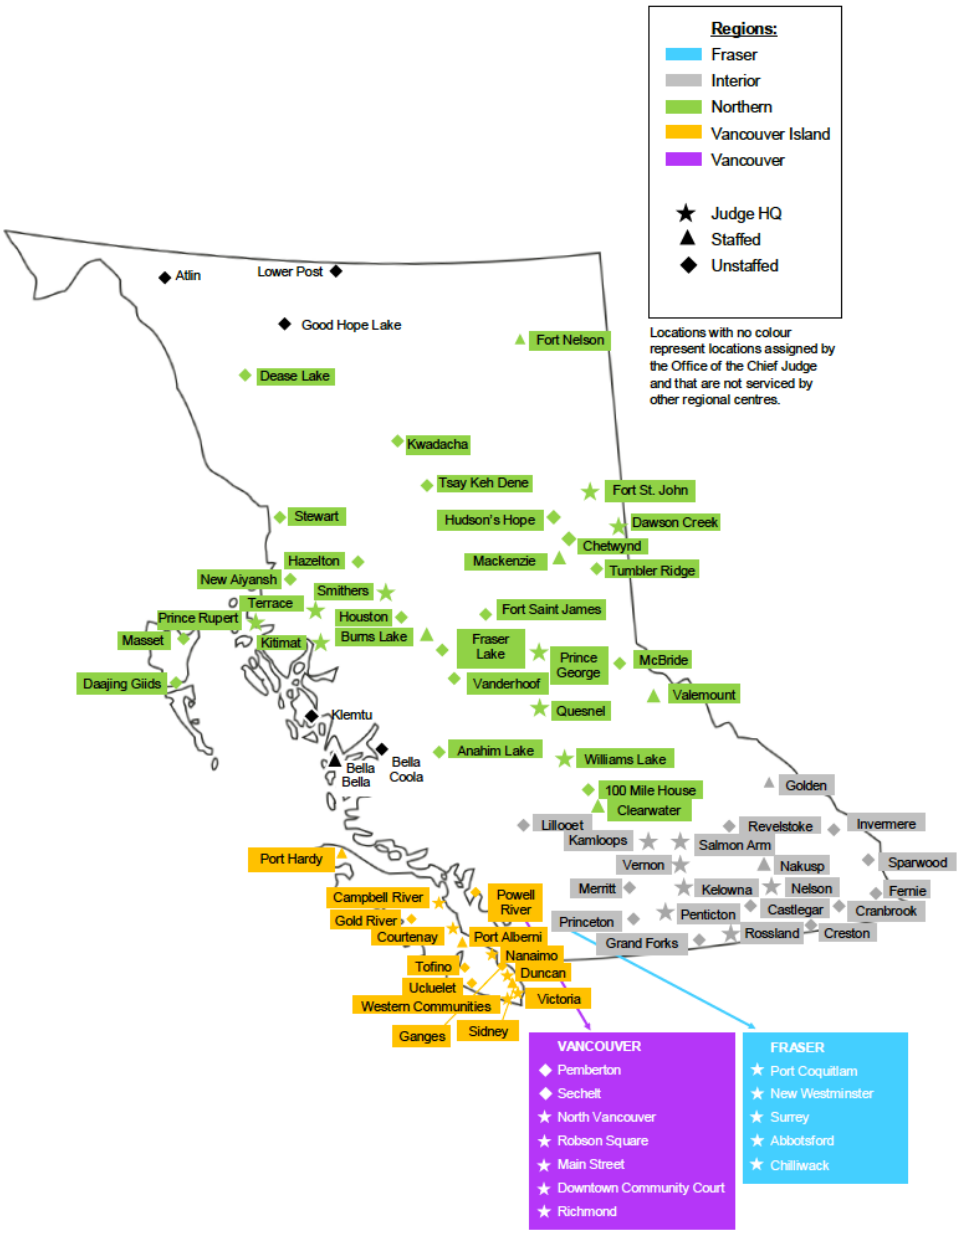
[29] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 31. Note these numbers do not include judges on long-term disability. The Chief Judge explained that these numbers are "constantly in flux" and that the number is expected to decline this year due to senior elections and retirements that are coming up: TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 162, ll. 15-19.

[30] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 135. Note these numbers do not include judicial justices on long-term disability. One of the full-time judicial justices is currently sitting part-time. Per diem judicial justices are guaranteed 40 working days per year under s. 30.2(4) of the Provincial Court Act, RSBC 1996, c. 379.

[31] This figure was taken from Submission of the Chief Judge, p. 12.

physical building and that are staffed by clerks and judges (or judicial justices) who may be working in any location in the province. Similarly, the counsel and accused in these virtual bail courts may be at any location in the province.[32]



Some judges hold administrative roles within the court. An administrative judge is paid more than a puisne judge because of their extra duties:

- The Chief Judge receives 112% of the puisne judge salary;

[32] TR, February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 136, l. 1 to p. 137, l. 6.

- Two Associate Chief Judges receive 108% of the puisne judge salary; and
- Five Regional Administrative Judges receive 106% of the puisne judge salary.[33]

Similarly, two Administrative Judicial Justices receive 106% of a judicial justice's remuneration.[34]

3.2 Current Work of the Court

On average, 65% of the Provincial Court's work is criminal, 25% is family law (including child protection), and 10% is civil.[35]

In 2021-22, the court received the following numbers of new or incoming cases:

- 79,458 new or incoming cases in the five subject areas heard by judges (adult criminal, youth criminal, family, child protection and small claims); and
- 69,346 new or incoming traffic, ticket and bylaw offences dealt with by judicial justices.[36]

These numbers are the lowest in the last five years. However, both the Chief Judge and the Government told us to view the numbers since 2020 with caution due to the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic.[37]

From 2017-18 to 2021-22, much of the drop in criminal cases—the largest portion of the Court's work—is explained by drops in property offences and administration of justice offences (e.g., failure to appear or breaches of conditions). The pandemic closures and restrictions on travel, the reduction in in-person hearings, and the shift to working from home all resulted in reduced opportunity to commit these types of offences.[38] However, violent crime and offences against the person—including sexual assaults—have increased slightly over the period from 2017-18 to 2021-22. Increased reporting of sexual assault cases likely accounts for this increase.[39] Offences against the person are among the most complicated cases heard by the Provincial Court. Sexual assault cases can involve multiple applications and complicated rulings on voir dires. They may require the appointment of legal aid counsel to assist the complainant, and commonly experience scheduling delays and lengthy trials.[40]

The number of self-represented litigants has declined over the last two years. However, again, the numbers need to be approached with caution due to the court shut-down and modifications made during the COVID-19 pandemic. Still, in 2021, there were close to 70,000 appearances made by

[33] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 124.

[34] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 165.

[35] TR, February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 138, ll. 20-24.

[36] Main Submission of Government, para. 44; Submission of Chief Judge, paras. 16 and 150.

[37] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 16; Main Submission of Government, paras. 46 and 48.

[38] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 149, ll. 4-14; Exhibit 8 pp. 10 and 19-20.

[39] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 149, ll. 15-21; Exhibit 8 pp. 10 and 19-20.

[40] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 150, ll. 4-23.

self-represented litigants in the small claims, family, and criminal divisions[41]—that is hundreds of appearances by self-represented litigants every day the court is open. The Chief Judge told us that "the number of self-represented litigants has an impact on every step of the court process."[42]

Provincial Court Judges

The Chief Judge explained that the workload of judges is affected by several factors in addition to the volume of new cases.[43] BC Provincial Court judges do not specialize as they do in some other provinces.[44] Judges in British Columbia hear all types of cases—criminal, family, and civil—sometimes all in the same day. Judges need to come to the court with either "a diverse practice or the ability to learn and be conversant in multiple areas of the law quickly."[45] Sometimes, a judge may be the only judge at a court location and therefore must be capable of dealing with all subject matters and providing reasons on those matters in relatively quick order.[46] Judges working in the Northern Region often travel long distances in all types of weather to reach remote court locations. Judges assigned to chambers in the Northern Region may spend up to 30-40% of their sitting time on travel status.[47]

While Provincial Court judges may reserve judgment in a longer matter, most decisions are delivered orally at the end of the case following a brief opportunity to consider the material. The judges have little research assistance.[48] Still, where cases are appealed to the Court of Appeal, the judges' decisions face the same standard of appellate review as decisions of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, creating "a tension between the volume of the work and the desire to serve the public in a timely manner and to 'get it right'."[49]

Technological innovations, particularly the ability of judges to sit virtually, have affected how judges work. As the Chief Judge told us, "It used to be your day was not completed as a judge until the work in your courthouse was completed. Now your day may not be completed until the work in the province is completed because you can be hearing virtual matters, case conferences, taking matters from bail lists all over the province."[50] In 2021-22, 79% of all court appearances (excluding

[41] Main Submission of Government, para. 47.

[42] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 27.

[43] See full list of factors in Submission of Chief Judge, para. 21.

[44] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 139, l. 1 to p. 140, l. 6; Submission of Judicial Council, para. 19.

[45] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 140, l. 7 to p. 141, l. 4.

[46] Ibid.

[47] Submission of Judicial Council, para. 20.

[48] Submission of Judicial Council, para. 20.

[49] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 30.

[50] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 156, l. 22 to p. 157, l. 7.

traffic and bylaw) were "technology enabled appearances" where one or more of the participants appeared remotely by audio- or video-conferencing or telephone.[51]

The Provincial Court has taken an innovative approach to the administration of justice, leading to national recognition for some of its specialized courts:[52]

- Vancouver's Downtown Community Court;
- Victoria's Integrated Court;
- Drug Treatment Court of Vancouver;
- Indigenous Courts (in eight locations);
- Aboriginal Family Healing Court Conferences (New Westminster);
- Domestic Violence Courts (Cowichan Valley, Nanaimo, Surrey, Kelowna, Penticton, and Kamloops); and
- Kelowna Integrated Court.

Judicial Justices

Judicial justices work in two areas: [53]

a. Traffic Division: these Judicial Justices sit in courthouses around the province, hearing disputed violation tickets, small claims payment hearings, disputed municipal bylaw tickets and applications for judicial authorizations brought in person before the court. These Judicial Justices work weekdays when the courthouses are open.

b. Justice Centre: located in Burnaby, the Justice Centre provides access to Judicial Justices from anywhere in the province using telephone and video conferencing. Twenty-three Judicial Justices work through the Justice Centre, either on site or remotely (those working remotely will "sit" at home). These Judicial Justices conduct bail hearings daily outside of court sitting hours, including on weekends and statutory holidays. They also consider judicial authorization applications such as those for search warrants and production orders 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

For traffic, ticket, and bylaw work, as noted above, total case numbers have declined over the last five years—though the numbers need to be understood in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic. The work of a judicial justice in traffic court can be very demanding, with court lists in the range of 60 matters per day, and without the assistance of support staff, a court clerk, or a sheriff.[54] The large number of self-represented litigants contributes to the intensity of the workload. Judicial [51] Appendices for Submission of Government, Tab 1: Provincial Court of British Columbia Annual Report 2021/22, p. 34.

[52] See generally, Submission of Chief Judge, paras. 72-106.

[53] Main Submission of Government, para. 61, based on Provincial Court of British Columbia Annual Report 2021/22 p. 33.

[54] Submission of Chief Judge, paras. 151-152; Submission of Judicial Council, paras. 40-41.

justices often need to inform self-represented litigants about procedural matters.[55] Payment hearings can be very stressful for all concerned as the judgment debtor often has little financial resources but is legally obligated to satisfy a judgement.[56]

The number of bail hearings heard through the Justice Centre has declined somewhat over the last five years, with judicial justices conducting just over 18,000 bail hearings in 2021-22.[57] While judicial justices heard fewer search warrant/production order applications in 2021-22 than 2020-21, the total for 2021-22 (18,711) was considerably higher than for 2019-20 (16,297) and follows an upward trend in cases since 2015-16.[58]

Almost all of the Justice Centre's work is "unscheduled and is performed in 'real time', in a fast-paced environment with high expectations for timely decisions."[59] Bail hearings often proceed without the accused person having a lawyer. This makes the determination of whether to release an individual and, if so, under what conditions, more challenging.[60] Despite the "Crown-led bail" initiative, discussed in section 3.3, police-led bail hearings continue to occur. Because the police officers are not lawyers and may have difficulty shedding their investigative role for the purpose of the hearing, the judicial justice must be particularly vigilant to the requirements of the administration of justice including fairness to the person detained. In judicial authorization applications, judicial justices must "balance an individual's security against unreasonable search or seizure, weighed against the interest of the state to investigate crime."[61]

We heard evidence about how the federal Bill S-4[62] makes changes to the way in which judicial authorization applications are received and considered. More specifically, we heard about how this change is increasing the workload of judicial justices and how it is creating staffing challenges for the Chief Judge. This evidence is discussed in section 4.2.

3.3 Resilience and Resourcefulness of the Court

We heard much about the Provincial Court's resilience and resourcefulness in delivering access to justice. We also observed some of the court's innovations during our court visits.

In the area of family law, in collaboration with the Justice Services Branch of the Ministry of the Attorney General, the court has expanded an early resolution process, which launched in Victoria in 2019, to Surrey in 2020. This model provides families with early access to information and an [55] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 153; Submission of Judicial Council, paras. 40-41.

[56] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 154.

[57] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 140.

[58] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 140.

[59] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 148.

[60] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 145; Submission of Judicial Council, para. 40-41.

[61] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 147.

[62] Bill S-4, An Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Identification of Criminals Act and to make related amendments to other Acts (COVID-19 response and other measures) received Royal Assent on December 15, 2022. It came into force on January 14, 2023.

opportunity to mediate. It has significantly reduced the cases that proceed to trial. In 2021, the court implemented new Provincial Court Family Law Rules, which are easier for litigants to understand, and which allow for streamlined appearances. Under the new Rules, the court launched the Informal Trial Pilot Project in Kamloops in 2022. If parties agree to the informal process, the judge may allow evidence that is relevant, material, and reliable, even if it might not be allowed under the strict rules of evidence. The judge may also help the parties settle issues.[63]

The court has implemented a desk order process under the new Family Law Rules, enabling applicants to apply for an order without having to make a court appearance. These applications are processed within two days, adding to the workload of judges outside of court sitting hours. Every rejected application requires reasons. Since the desk order process started in 2022, the court has received about 314 per month (roughly equating to 3,700 per year).[64]

On the criminal side, technological innovation, especially video technology and remote attendance, has enabled the court to optimize the deployment of judicial resources. It connects the Justice Centre to remote regions for bail hearings and allows for remand appearances and bail hearings from remand and custody centres.[65]

According to the Chief Judge, the British Columbia Provincial Court is a leader in the collection and reporting of court related data,[66] including data on "time to trial." These data enable the Chief Judge to make decisions about where in the province to send judicial resources. Currently "time to trial" delays are roughly the same as those experienced prior to the COVID-19 pandemic (but were longer during the pandemic). The Chief Judge said that, while there are declining caseloads, those declines need to be viewed in the context of increases in cases involving offences to the person, which take more time to proceed to trial. She suggested that the most significant reason for the reduction in case backlogs that occurred during the pandemic was "the innovative methods that were undertaken by this court during COVID to reduce times to trial delays, including virtual bail."[67] For example, at the beginning of the COVID pandemic, the delay to trial in Fort St. John was more than 18 months. Now it is down to 11 months. The Chief Judge attributed this reduction to the fact that bail has been moved to the virtual bail court, which started in 2020. Bail applications occurring within court sitting hours are assigned to be heard virtually by judges from within the Region or at another location, thereby freeing up local Provincial Court judges to do the trial work at a particular court location without interruption. Outside of court sitting hours bail applications are heard by judicial justices at the Justice Centre.[68]

[63] Submission of Chief Judge, paras. 49-54.

[64] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 56; TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 157, l. 8 to p. 158, l. 4.

[65] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 62.

[66] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 152, ll. 2-3.

[67] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 153, ll. 6-12.

[68] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 153, ll. 21-24.

The implementation, in May 2020, of mandatory criminal pre-trial conferences has also reduced time to trial and been successful in resolving some cases or narrowing the issues in others.[69]

At the Justice Centre, since 2018, significant work and inter-agency collaboration has enabled transition of the bail system from "police-led" bail (where police represent the Crown) to "Crown-led" bail proceedings in which all bail matters are heard in clerked courts, with Crown Counsel conducting the charge assessment, and with duty counsel available to assist those in custody. The change has resulted in an increase in consent releases because Crown and defence counsel have an opportunity to discuss reasonable release terms. [70] Despite this initiative, some instances of police-led bail still occur.

The court has also been exploring technology to allow a clerk (or a judicial justice working without a clerk), to capture the official court record for proceedings, allowing the proceeding to be recorded from anywhere there is internet.[71]

Other initiatives underway to improve access to justice in traffic court include creating an online option for initiating traffic disputes; creating digital case files for traffic and ticket matters; enabling judicial justices to adjudicate online requests for time to pay and fine reductions that do not require in-person hearings; and to notify parties of hearings by email.[72] The court has also piloted a project in which parties volunteer to attend remote traffic hearings at certain court locations.[73] As well, judicial justices contributed to the government's 2021 online information tool called "Understand Your Ticket."[74]

[69] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 163, ll. 8-17; Submission of Chief Judge, para. 68.

[70] Submission of Chief Judge, paras. 168-169.

[71] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 173.

[72] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 175.

[73] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 176.

[74] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 174.

4 Assessment of Reasonable Compensation

The Supreme Court of Canada describes the role of a judicial compensation commission in this way: "The commission must objectively consider the submissions of all parties and any relevant factors identified in the enabling statute and regulations. Its recommendations must result from a fair and objective hearing. Its report must explain and justify its position."[75]

In British Columbia, sections 5(1), 5(5) and 5(5.2) of the Act[76] set out our mandate and the specification of relevant factors as follows:

> (1) Not later than April 1, 2023 following its formation, the commission must, in a preliminary report to the minister and chief judge,
>
> (a) report on all matters respecting the remuneration, allowances and benefits of judges and judicial justices, and
>
> (b) make recommendations with respect to those matters for each of the next 4 fiscal years.
>
> …
>
> (5) In preparing a report, the commission must be guided by the need to provide reasonable compensation for judges and judicial justices in British Columbia over the 4 fiscal years that are the subject of the report, taking into account all of the following:
>
> (a) the need to maintain a strong court by attracting highly qualified applicants;
>
> (b) changes, if any, to the jurisdiction of judges or judicial justices;
>
> (c) compensation provided in respect of similar judicial positions in Canada, having regard to the differences between those jurisdictions and British Columbia;
>
> (d) changes in the compensation of others paid by provincial public funds in British Columbia;
>
> (e) the generally accepted current and expected economic conditions in British Columbia; and
>
> (f) the current and expected financial position of the government over the 4 fiscal years that are the subject of the report.
>
> (5.1) The report of the commission must demonstrate that the commission has considered all of the factors set out in subsection (5).
>
> (5.2) The commission may consider factors it considers relevant that are not set out in subsection (5), but if it relies on another factor, the report of the commission must explain the relevance of the factor.
>
> [Emphasis added.]

[75] Bodner, para. 17; PEI Reference, para. 173: "the objectivity of the commission be ensured by including in the enabling legislation or regulations a list of relevant factors to guide the commission's deliberations."

[76] As amended by Attorney General Statutes Amendment Act, 2021, concerning the date in s. 5(1).

Reasonable compensation is not merely "adequate" compensation, nor is it "generous" compensation. It is reasonable total compensation for the work performed. Reasonableness is measured against objective factors. The factors set out in sections 5(5)(a) to (f) provide us with useful objective markers indicating whether the compensation for judicial officers in British Columbia is reasonable. No single one of these factors is overriding, and these factors are not exclusive. Instead, considered together, along with other relevant factors as contemplated in section 5(5.2), they assist us in assessing the current state of judicial compensation in British Columbia and, importantly, guide us in determining what constitutes reasonable compensation for judges and judicial justices over the next four years.

The statute requires us to take a proactive, future-oriented approach to judicial compensation. Our job is to look at the current conditions, as well as what can be predicted about the future. We must make the best assessment we can about reasonable compensation for judges and judicial justices for the next four years.

In the sections that follow, we consider the evidence in relation to each of the statutory factors and determine what each factor tells us about the reasonable compensation of judges and judicial justices for their work over the next four fiscal years.

4.1 Factor 1: The need to maintain a strong court by attracting highly qualified applicants

The compensation offered judges and judicial justices must be at a level to attract highly qualified applicants and keep those who are appointed motivated to stay with the court in the face of other options or the prospect of early retirement.

The Provincial Court is the face of justice for the vast majority of British Columbians who engage with the justice system. As described above, judges and judicial justices work in a fast-paced environment with long court lists. They often face complex matters. They must consider the issues before them with care and attention, yet they must also do it with speed. Sometimes the subject matter is emotionally challenging and traumatic, such as cases involving child pornography and sexual assaults against children. The Provincial Court needs "highly qualified applicants" so that highly qualified judges and judicial justices will be appointed to do this work.

Provincial Court Judges

We begin by assessing whether the Provincial Court can attract highly qualified applicants in sufficient numbers to maintain a strong court.

The Need for Highly Qualified Applicants

As described by the Judicial Council,

> To move into the role of a provincial court judge requires lawyers with a wide breadth of skills (including effective case management and mediation skills) and the ability to render > high quality justice in all divisions of the court (family, civil, criminal, and youth). … This is a demanding job that must be carried out in a respectful and impartial manner, dealing with emotionally draining issues, and still getting through an often overwhelming court list for the day.[77]

The criteria for appointment include at least 10 years in the practice of law; superb legal reputation and a professional record review from the Law Society of British Columbia; experience in mediation or alternative dispute resolution; respect in the community; good health; appreciation of and experience with diversity; and a willingness to travel and to sit in all subject areas.[78] Applicants must also demonstrate a number of competencies in the areas of knowledge and technical skills, decision-making, communication and authority, professionalism and temperament, effectiveness, and leadership and management for those in administrative positions.[79]

The PCJA points out that the standard set out in Factor 1 is not "qualified applicants" but "highly qualified applicants" and quotes from several past commissions (some under previous legislation) using words like "outstanding candidates," "exceptional candidates," and "best candidates." It also notes the Judicial Council's requirement that candidates have a superb legal reputation.[80] The Chief Judge expressed the need to ensure that the remuneration is reasonable and sufficient to attract the "most qualified applicants."[81] The Government, however, points out that the statutory standard looks at what is needed to maintain a "strong court" by attracting "highly qualified applicants." The Government submits that applicants need not be the "most qualified" or "superior" to maintain a strong court.[82] Since the Judicial Council has been making appointments every year, the Government submits that there must exist sufficient candidates who meet the Council's standard.[83]

Aside from the fact of appointments being made and the standards set by the Judicial Council, there was no evidence before the Commission about the quality of candidates for appointment as judges, and no way to know whether the court is attracting the best possible candidates.[84]

No participant suggested that existing members of the court, including recent appointments, are less than high quality. The Government submitted that because the court attracts excellent candidates, some from the private bar where higher salaries exist, it follows that something more than salaries motivates candidates to apply to become a judge.[85]

---

[77] Submission of Judicial Council, para. 19.

[78] Criteria and Competencies for Appointment, JBD, Vol. 1, Tab 10.

[79] Criteria and Competencies for Appointment, JBD, Vol. 1, Tab 10.

[80] Main Submission of PCJA, paras. 166-168.

[81] Submission of Chief Judge, para. 120.

[82] Reply Submission of Government, para. 111.

[83] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 28, ll. 1-10.

[84] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 30, ll.14-22. Main Submission of PCJA, para. 173: "It is difficult to comment upon the quality of the applications" [emphasis in original].

[85] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 34, ll. 21-24 and p. 35, ll. 3-22.

The only competition for those seeking judicial positions in British Columbia comes from the Supreme Court of British Columbia, whose judges are federally appointed. A candidate may apply to either court, and an existing Provincial Court judge or justice may move to the Supreme Court upon a successful application. The Government told us there have been no appointments to the Supreme Court from the Provincial Court since 2019, and only two in the last five years (one in 2017 and one in 2018).[86] As there is no way to know how many potential applicants decided to apply to the Supreme Court instead of the Provincial Court in the first place, this data point does not provide complete information on competition from the Supreme Court.

Diversity of the Court

The Government submitted that a strong court will have a diverse bench that reflects the population of British Columbia in terms of characteristics like "age, gender, ethnicity, residential region and type of practice."[87] The PCJA agreed but focussed its submissions on "legal diversity."

Consistent with 10-year averages, the average age of women applying to the bench in 2021 was 51, and for men was 54. Applicants had an average of 23 years of experience in the practice of law.[88] Numbers of applications from women decreased in 2021, while applications from men increased. However, more women than average were appointed in 2021 and conversely, less men were appointed in 2021. As of March 31, 2022, 52.7% of full-time judges were women, and the proportion of women has increased in recent years.[89]

From 2012 to 2021, the numbers of applications received from candidates originating in different regions and the numbers of appointments in different regions are as follows:[90]

Region	Vancouver	Fraser	Northern	Vancouver Island	Interior
Applications Received	120	75	48	71	59
Appointments Made	7	42	21	11	16

These numbers show that the court is attracting applications from all areas of the province with a higher proportion from the Lower Mainland. It is impossible to know whether the appointments made to a region came from applicants originating in that region or whether applicants in one region were appointed to another. As described below, the Chief Judge told us the Northern Region

[86] Main Submission of Government, para. 97.

[87] Main Submission of Government, para. 80.

[88] Main Submission of Government, para. 88, based on Judicial Council of British Columbia Annual Report 2021, p. 18, JBD, Vol. 1, Tab 2. Note: gender data is based on binary statistics for men and women; it does not yet include numbers of non-binary individuals. Note the 10-year average for years of practice was 22 years.

[89] Main Submission of Government, paras. 89-91.

[90] Judicial Council of British Columbia Annual Report 2021, JBD, Vol. 1, Tab 2, p. 18.

is hard to staff and that judges appointed to the North from other regions often transfer back to their "home" region when a position becomes available.

We have little information on ethnic, cultural, or other diversity of judicial applicants. Since 2014, applicants may provide this information on a voluntary basis, but the numbers of applicants who do so varies from year to year, and there is no information for those who choose not to provide it. In 2021, of the 24 applicants, two identified themselves as indigenous, four as ethnic or visible minority, and four as a diverse group.[91]

The discussion about "legal diversity" stemmed from the large representation of Crown Counsel in the pool of applicants for Provincial Court judgeships. We heard that in 2021, 50% of applicants came from private practice, 37% came from Crown Counsel, and 13% from other areas of law.[92] These percentages are based on the positions held by applicants at the time of their applications, and do not reflect prior experience in other areas. These numbers have been roughly consistent over the last seven years.[93] In contrast, Crown prosecutors comprise only 4.3% of the practising lawyers in British Columbia.[94]

The PCJA characterizes this as an overrepresentation of Crown Counsel,[95] and says the court would benefit from greater legal diversity (i.e., criminal defence counsel in private practice and lawyers in private practice with civil and family law backgrounds). Further, the PCJA says the rate of renumeration is at least one factor in this overrepresentation, as "all Crown counsel will receive at minimum a 15 percent pay increase in appointment [sic]" while "Many lawyers in private practice would incur a loss in salary upon appointment."[96]

The Government says the "total universe of practicing lawyers" is not the "best metric against which to measure the proportion of crown counsel" applying for judicial positions since the "total universe" includes solicitors and many other lawyers who do not have significant litigation or Provincial Court experience. Crown Counsel comprise "a significant portion of the practising lawyers who have both litigation experience and experience in the Provincial Court."[97] Additionally, many Crown Counsel have legal experience prior to joining the Crown, and some [91] Both "visible minority" and "diverse group" may include individuals who are LGBTQ+, as well as First Nations persons or people of colour.

[92] Main Submission of PCJA, para. 178, fn 138 indicates that "Crown Counsel" includes only prosecutors; the "other areas" includes other lawyers employed by government.

[93] Main Submission of Government, para. 93; Judicial Council of British Columbia Annual Report 2021, JBD, Vol. 1, Tab 2, p. 18. The Judicial Council records the position last held by the applicant and therefore do not reflect any prior experience of a candidate in other areas of law: see Main Submission of Government, para. 94; TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 42, ll. 25 to p. 43, ll. 1-9.

[94] Reply Submission of PCJA, Appendix A: Letter from Law Society of British Columbia dated January 25, 2023.

[95] Main Submission of PCJA, para. 181.

[96] TR February 14, 2023, Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 154, ll. 6-11; p. 157, l. 23 to p. 158, l. 2.

[97] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 42, ll. 6-19.

judicial appointments that come from the Crown may have broader experience than just being Crown counsel—as demonstrated by some of the recent Provincial Court appointments.[98]

Application and Appointment Statistics

Over the last 11 years, there has been a decline in the number of incoming applications.[99]

Year	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022
No. of applicants	35	46	50	27	43	63	27	37	30	24	23

Candidates apply through the Provincial Court's website. The applicants go through extensive scrutiny including a confidential bar report prepared by the Canadian Bar Association, a report from the Law Society of British Columbia, and discreet inquiries to current judges who are familiar with the applicant. Based on this information, the nine-member Judicial Council votes on whom to interview; a candidate needs three votes to be granted an interview. At least five (but usually all nine) Council members conduct the interviews. After an interview, if two or more Council members vote to not approve an applicant, the applicant is not placed on the approved list. Otherwise, the applicant is placed on the approved list. Applicants are not notified of the outcome. If placed on the approved list, an applicant remains there for up to three years from the date of their interview. The Attorney General may then appoint judges from the "approved list." An applicant who was not interviewed may reapply three years from the date of their previous application. An applicant who was interviewed but not appointed may reapply 2.5 years from the date of their previous interview.[100]

The figure below from the Judicial Council's 2021 Annual Report shows the application and appointment statistics for 2021 along with the 10-year average. [101]

The Government accepts that the decreasing number of applications is a trend that needs to be monitored, but says the "trend is not cause for alarm."[102] The Government suggests the COVID-19 pandemic may have impacted applications for judicial appointment.[103] It says the court is "still attracting a sufficient number of highly qualified applicants to allow ten appointments per year, as [98] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 44, ll. 16-25; Appendices for Submission of Government, Tabs 8 and 9.

[99] Information taken from Submission of Chief Judge, para. 121. Note "the number of applications in 2017 was significantly higher due to the influx of paper applications being submitted before the launch of a new online application system": Submission of Chief Judge, fn 8.

[100] See description of the application and appointment process in Judicial Council Submission, paras. 4-9.

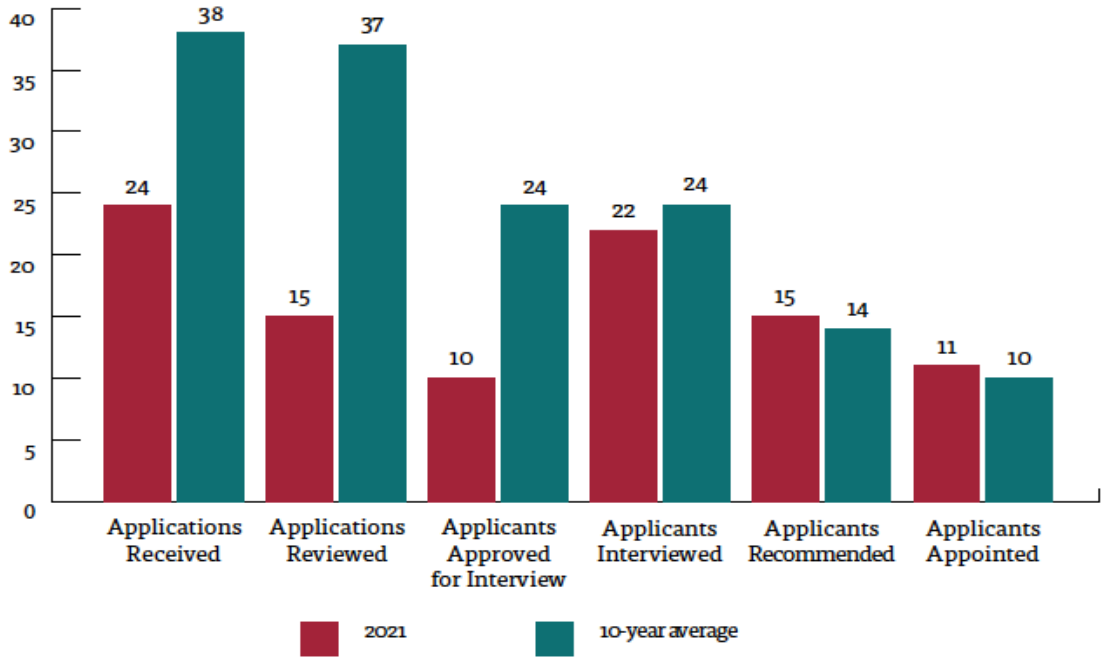
[101] JBD, Vol. 1, Tab 2 p. 15.

[102] Reply Submission of Government, paras. 113-114; Main Submission of Government, para. 101; TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 21, l. 19 to p. 22, l. 5.

[103] Reply Submission of Government, para. 114.

the Chief Judge anticipates will continue."[104] Also, the Government points out that the number of applicants recommended for appointment in 2021 (i.e., 15) was higher than in 2020 when only five were recommended, and slightly higher than the 10-year average of 14.[105]

Figure 1: Applications and Outcomes (2021 and 10-Year Average)[1]



As shown in the table below, 2022 has the lowest average number of candidates on the approved list since 1999.[106]

Year	1999 2000 2001	2002 2003	2004 2005 2006	2007 2008	2009 2010	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016
Average No. on approved list	36	39	31	20-25	24	25	23	19	20	28	26

Year	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022
Average No. on approved list	25	23	23	25	20	15

While the court is currently meeting its needs in terms of appointments, the appointment of an average of 10 judges per year speaks to the "high demand the court has for judges."[107] The Chief

[104] Reply Submission of Government, para. 115.

[105] Reply Submission of Government, para. 116.

[106] This table is created from Exhibit 9.

[107] TR February 13, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 162, ll. 22-24.

Judge characterized the decline in the number of candidates on the approved list as "quite alarming" and "significant."[108] Some of the 15 candidates currently on the approved list will likely "time out" when they reach three years on the list. Approximately 37% of applicants are approved for appointment. That means "you get about nine candidates a year out of 24 applicants." If the application number remains around 24 per year, this would equate to 36 approved candidates over the next four years (which the Chief Judge rounded up to 40). Over that same period, the court will need approximately 40 new judges.[109] But it is not as simple as matching 40 approved candidates to 40 new positions: "The vast majority of applicants apply for the Lower Mainland but there are a large number of positions in other places around the province in the north, in the northern part of the Island and in certain parts of the interior where it is difficult to attract candidates to that place."[110]

Further, judges who are appointed to serve in, for example, the Northern Region but who come from other regions of the province often transfer back to their home region when positions become available, leaving vacancies in the North. Even judges who come from the North have moved to other locations because the travel demands in the North are so difficult or for other personal reasons. The Chief Judge said she is "very concerned" about the ability to staff the court generally, and specifically in locations outside the Lower Mainland.[111]

While acknowledging that the average number of candidates on the approved list is low, the Government said the number "goes up and down."[112] Also, the lower number in 2022 follows slightly higher than average appointments in 2021 (11 appointments) and 2022 (13 appointments), which may, in part, account for the lower average number on the approved list in 2022.[113]

Conclusions

Our review of the evidence shows a startlingly low level of interest in the Provincial Court, with a low and declining rate of applications for appointment to it. There is serious difficulty in filling judicial vacancies outside the Lower Mainland. While it is not surprising that a significant portion of applicants come from a Crown Counsel background, the court would benefit from greater legal diversity given the nature of the court's work overall. The evidence shows a good gender balance in applicants and appointments to the court, but there is little information about other areas of diversity. The trends described above in terms of applications to the court, and the low numbers of candidates on the current approved list, indicate that there may well be insufficient highly qualified candidates to fill vacancies that are likely to arise before the next judicial compensation commission. While those appointed to the bench are "highly qualified" if measured by their average years of legal experience, which is well over the minimum, this is but one relevant measure for assessing the qualities of a prospective judge. To consistently appoint highly qualified judges

[108] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 160, l. 25 to p. 161, l. 6.

[109] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 165, ll. 3-20.

[110] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 165, l. 24 to p. 166, l. 5.

[111] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 165, l. 24 to p. 166, l. 21; and p. 167 ll. 21-24.

[112] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 23, ll. 1-4.

[113] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 23, ll. 6-19.

to this court, the appointing body should be able to draw from a much deeper pool of applicants than has been available in recent years.

Overall, this factor supports an increase in pay sufficient to attract more applicants for Provincial Court appointment from highly qualified lawyers of diverse legal backgrounds.

Judicial Justices

The Judicial Council describes the work of a judicial justice as "demanding and challenging and requires, at its foundation, a legally grounded, professional approach." Judicial justices must apply all the same principles as those applied by a judge: "principles of natural justice, procedural fairness, legislation, rules of criminal evidence, and common law."[114] Indeed, aside from only requiring five years of legal practice instead of 10, the criteria and competencies for appointment as a judicial justice are almost identical to those of a judge.[115]

The JJA notes the words "highly qualified applicants" in section 5(5)(a) are "particularly instructive," given the serious liberty and privacy issues judicial justices deal with, along with their role as the "face of justice" for ordinary citizens.[116]

The appointment process for judicial justices mirrors that for judges.[117] Again, once recommended by the Judicial Council, an applicant stays on the "approved list" for three years. The following table shows the numbers of judicial justice applications received, interviews conducted, applicants recommended, and applicants appointed over the last 6 years:[118]

Year	Applications Received	Interviews Conducted	Applicants Recommended	Applicants Appointed
2017	2	0	0	0
2018	9	2	4[119]	0
2019	15	4	3	3
2020	5	3	2	3
2021	8	6	2	3
2022	4	4	2	1

[114] Submission of Judicial Council, para. 37.

[115] JBD, Vol. 1, Tab 13.

[116] Main Submission of JJA, para. 96.

[117] Submission of the Judicial Council, para. 27.

[118] Main Submission of Government, para. 111; TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 169, ll. 11-20; Main Submission of JJA, para. 89. In respect of applicants for the position of judicial justice, we have no information on their ages, genders, regional area of origin, ethnic or cultural background, or legal diversity.

[119] Two candidates were recommended without interviews in 2018 as they had previously been judicial officers.

The Government submits the salary increase and legislative amendments following the 2019 JCC "appear to be addressing the previous recruitment and retention problems."[120] It notes the number of applicants recommended since 2018 is higher than the number of appointments, and "If these trends continue, it should be possible to address the upcoming retirements over the next four years."[121] The Government also said that, without knowing what a sufficient complement is for judicial justices, it is difficult to know whether needs are being met.[122] Further, the Government submits its proposed salary recommendation and other proposed recommendations are "collectively sufficient to assist with recruitment and retention needs."[123]

In contrast, the Chief Judge described judicial justice recruitment as keeping "our head barely above water."[124] She said she was not "sitting on big approved lists." She could not tell us the number currently on the approved list because it is so small that revealing it "would be revealing to candidates who is and who is not on that list."[125] The Chief Judge said the current complement of judicial justices is not large enough, given the increased numbers of production orders that judicial justices are dealing with due to the impact of Bill S-4 (described further below), and the increased evening bail shifts. Starting in March 2023, five shifts per week (260 shifts per year) will be added to meet these needs. The Chief Judge said that "at least" a couple more part-time justices are required to do that work.[126] The JJA also submitted that, while no one can currently answer how many judicial justices are needed, there clearly are not enough to meet current requirements.[127]

Twelve of the current judicial justices will reach age 75 (mandatory retirement) between now and 2027. That is 36% of the judicial justice division. Further, the Chief Judge noted that half the judicial justices are older than 66 and "you have to be thinking on some level that some of those people are not going to stay until 75."[128]

The age demographics of the current judicial justices are shown in the figure below.[129]

[120] Main Submission of Government, para. 113.

[121] Reply Submission of Government, para. 94.

[122] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 52, l. 24 to p. 53, l. 13.

[123] Supplemental Submission of Government, March 6, 2023, para. 15.

[124] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 169, ll. 9-10.

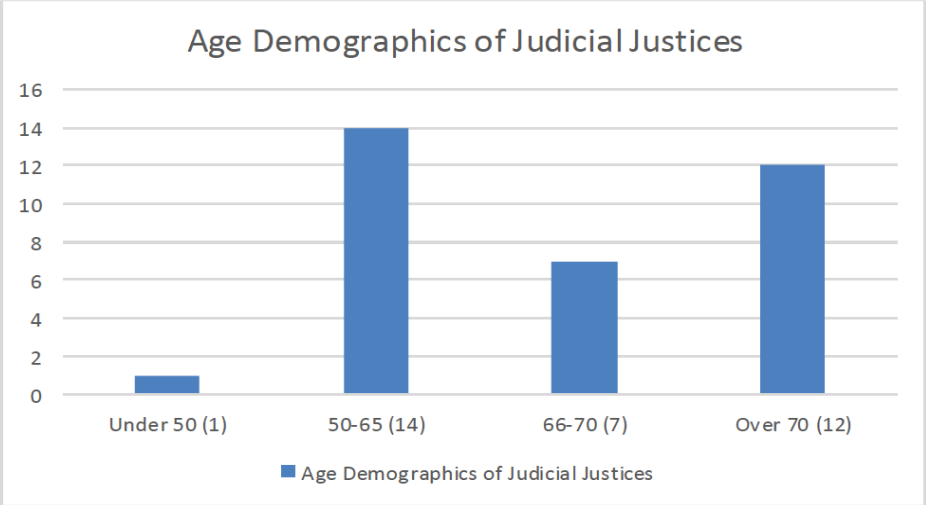
[125] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 169, ll. 20-25.

[126] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 171, ll. 2-5.

[127] TR February 15, 2023, Mr. Bernstein for JJA, p. 36, l. 23 to p. 37, l. 1.

[128] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 169, ll.1-8.

[129] Submission of Chief Judge, p. 38, Figure 10.



When judicial justices are not able to cover shifts at the Justice Centre, the Chief Judge must assign judges to cover that work. Judges are currently paid more than twice as much as judicial justices. Further, they are offered "two for one holiday time" to take a shift at the Justice Centre. This builds up a "leave liability" because "those judges aren't able to sit in court as much because they can only carry over a certain amount of holidays." The Chief Judge compared the situation to robbing Peter to pay Paul.[130] The JJA advised that in 2022, Provincial Court judges filled 42 shifts at the Justice Centre. Twenty-three of these shifts occurred during judicial justices' educational conferences. Of the remaining shifts, all but one were on weekends or holidays.[131] The JJA also advised that judges filled eight judicial justice shifts so far in February and March 2023, and that 10 shifts remained unfilled for April 2023. All these shifts fall on weekends or holidays.[132]

The Chief Judge has made efforts to recruit more judicial justices, speaking to many different bar groups. The Judicial Council made two recent calls for applicants (September 13, 2021, and November 18, 2022). These efforts have not resulted in any noticeable increase in applications.[133]

In response to a question about why recruitment is aimed only at filling part-time judicial justice positions, the Chief Judge explained, "frankly, full-time lawyers will not work for the amount that we pay full-time judicial justices."[134]

Consideration of this factor reveals a looming crisis in attracting and maintaining a strong complement of judicial justices. Given the foreseeable retirements, older age demographics of the current complement, and very low application and approved candidate numbers, it is highly likely

[130] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 171, ll. 15-22.

[131] Main Submission of JJA, paras. 93-94.

[132] Reply Submission of JJA, paras. 19-20.

[133] Submission of Chief Judge, paras. 178-179.

[134] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 168, ll. 8-10.

that the court will not have a sufficient complement of judicial justices to meet the workload of the judicial justice division unless steps are taken immediately to improve recruitment.

This factor militates in favour of significant compensation increases for judicial justices.

4.2 Factor 2: Changes, if any, to the jurisdiction of judges or judicial justices

Provincial Court Judges

> As no new changes in jurisdiction significantly impacted judges over the last three years, and we were not advised of predicted changes over the next four years, Factor 2 supports neither an increase nor decrease in the compensation paid to judges.

The PCJA submitted there have been no significant changes to the jurisdiction of Provincial Court judges since 2016.[135] The impact of changes that occurred prior to the last judicial compensation commission (i.e., the shift of small claims files under $5001 to the Civil Resolution Tribunal, and changes to the number of hybrid offences in the Criminal Code) are difficult to assess due to the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic.[136] Similarly, the Government says it is difficult to assess if the new offences related to the COVID-19 pandemic had any effect on the court.[137]

Neither participant argued that a change in jurisdiction was relevant to this Commission's work concerning judges. As the Government pointed out, however, we must still take this statutory factor into account. The fact that there was no change in jurisdiction should be assessed along with the other factors in determining whether this factor supports an increase or supports compensation staying the same."[138]

We conclude that, on its own, this factor supports neither an increase nor decrease in compensation for Provincial Court judges.

Judicial Justices

> Recent changes to the Criminal Code concerning judicial authorizations by telewarrant will significantly increase the collective workload of judicial justices. This factor supports an increase in compensation to judicial justices.

The JJA submits that Bill S-4's changes to the Criminal Code constitute a change in the jurisdiction of judicial justices because these changes allow applications for judicial authorizations that previously had to be made in person (to either a judge or judicial justice) to now be made through

[135] Main Submission of PCJA, para. 184.

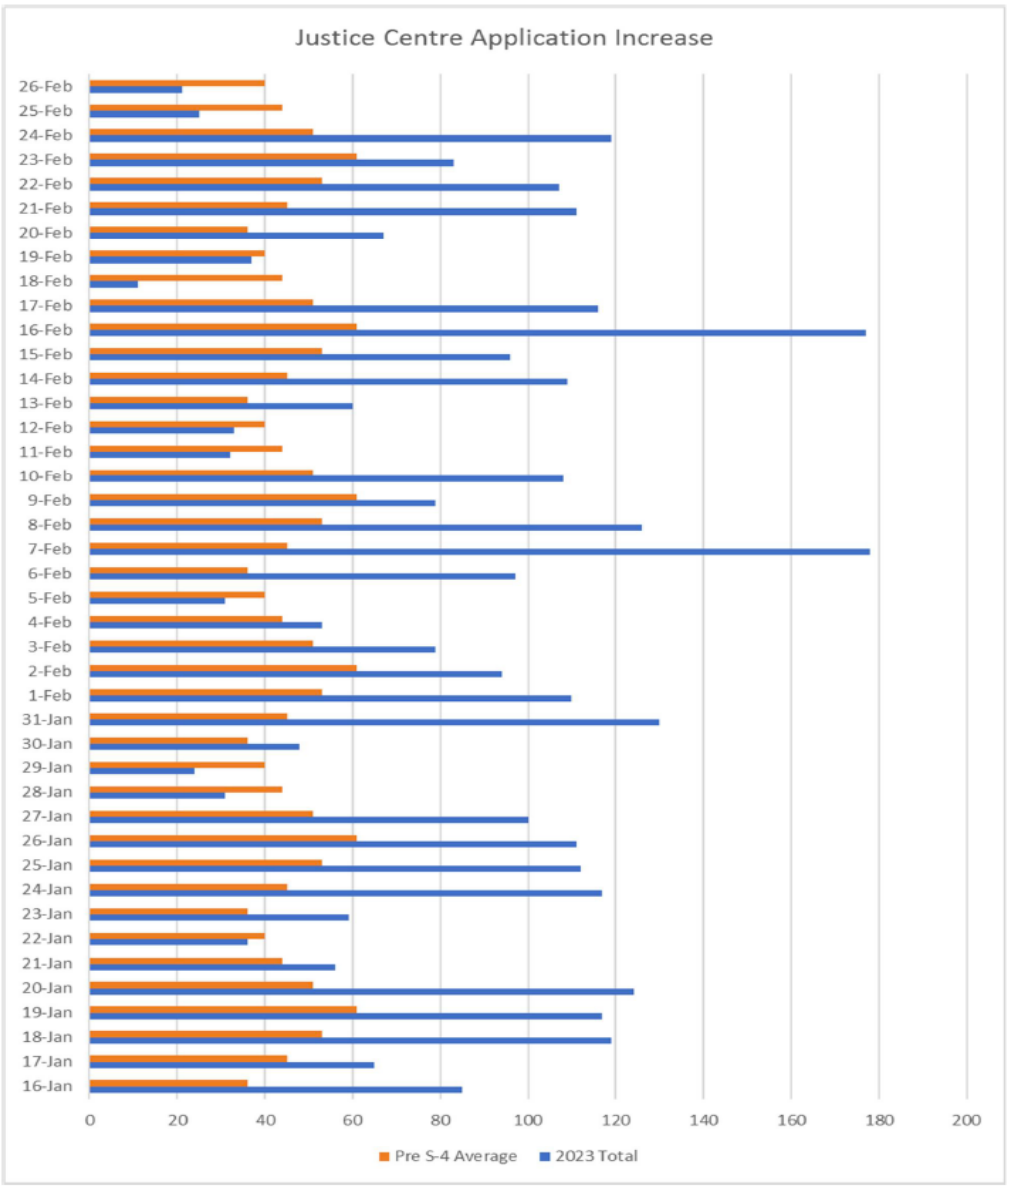
[136] Main Submission of PCJA, para. 184; Main Submission of Government, paras. 116-118.

[137] Main Submission of Government, para. 119.

[138] TR February 15, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 205, ll. 20-24.

telecommunications.[139] Stated differently, judicial justices now have jurisdiction to hear the vast majority of judicial authorization applications throughout the province by way of telecommunication. The changes took effect on January 16, 2023.

Data for the first 42 days since the change took effect show an increased number of applications per day to the Justice Centre (dark blue lines) compared to the average number of applications for the same day of the week (light orange lines, averaged over October, November, and December 2022), as shown in the figure below:[140]



[139] Main Submission of JJA, para. 97.

[140] Figure taken from Supplementary Submission of JJA, para. 7.

The JJA told us that, as of March 6, 2023, the number of unfilled shifts at the Justice Centre "continues to grow" with 27 unfilled shifts from March 29 to May 31, 2023. As well, in response to both Bill S-4 and the anticipated opening of a new virtual bail court commencing March 13, 2023, over 230 new shifts have been created at the Justice Centre.[141] The JJA submits there is no reason to expect that the number of applications received will decrease over time, noting that Bill S-4 was intended to introduce lasting changes to the criminal justice system in order to improve flexibility and efficiency.[142]

The Government submitted that Bill S-4 is not a true change in jurisdiction since many of the authorizations now allowed to be heard by telecommunications could previously be heard by judicial justices in person. It said these shifts in workflow are of a different nature than the changes in jurisdiction that have been considered by previous commissions.[143] The Government says changes in the workload to judicial justices should be monitored over the 2022 cycle, but that it would be premature to recommend any significant adjustments (to compensation) until there is concrete evidence to determine the magnitude of the change.[144] The Government "doesn't deny that there may be an impact," but more time and data are needed to know whether this new process will "continue at the current level or is going to level off a bit."[145] It says its proposal concerning shift premiums may help to address the need to fill new shifts.[146] It recognizes that "there may be a need to increase the overall complement of Judicial Justices in response to Bill S-4" but that it is "still too early to conclude that S-4, by itself, warrants an increase in salaries."[147]

The Chief Judge noted that whether this is a change in jurisdiction depends on how you define "jurisdiction." In any event, "It results in an increase in their workload which is something I think jurisdiction is meant to address."[148]

The figure above shows a clear pattern: the days with the lowest numbers of applications (i.e., January 21, 22, 28 and 29, February 4, 5, 11, 12, 18, 19, 25 and 26) are weekend days; the higher application numbers are on weekdays, only one of which was a holiday (Family Day). While the data only reflect six weeks, they suggest the increased workload is coming on weekdays, and therefore would not be addressed in any way by a weekend shift premium. While we agree the available data about the impact from Bill S-4 are limited, they show a current, growing, significant increase to the workload of judicial justices. This increased workload, combined with the evidence that 230 to 260 new shifts per year will be needed at the Justice Centre, in part to cover this increased workload, is compelling. There is no logical reason to suspect that use of this new [141] Supplemental Submission of JJA, paras. 10-11. Note the Chief Judge's evidence was that 260 shifts would be added: TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 171, ll. 2-5.

[142] Supplemental Submission of JJA, para. 8.

[143] TR February 15, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 239, ll. 1-6.

[144] Reply Submission of Government, para. 99.

[145] TR February 15, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 239, l. 22 to p. 240, l. 4.

[146] TR February 15, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 241, ll. 5-10.

[147] Supplemental Submission of Government, March 6, 2023, para. 14.

[148] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 173, l. 11 to p. 174, l. 6.

process will drop off; indeed, it seems likely to increase as police seeking authorizations become familiar with the new process. In any case, as Commissioners we are required to look ahead to the next four fiscal years. The evidence shows a real risk that the workload of judicial justices will increase significantly over the next four years in comparison to the last year.

We appreciate the Government's submission that the nature of the change presented by Bill S-4 is different from the sorts of jurisdictional changes addressed by previous commissions. There is no caselaw in this context to help us in determining what "changes to the jurisdiction" of judicial justices means. We agree with the Chief Judge that, in including this factor, the legislature must have intended to capture changes in the workload of judicial justices that flow from changes to the legislation that gives them jurisdiction. This is such a change. This change stems directly from federal legislation that now permits judicial officers—in this case BC judicial justices—to hear matters (virtual applications for authorizations) that they were not permitted to hear previously. It is different from other possible changes in workload that might occur owing to factors unrelated to legislation.

Nevertheless, even if Bill S-4 does not amount to a "change in jurisdiction," it does increase the workload on judicial justices and is another factor that we consider relevant to this Commission's mandate under section 5(5.2) of the Judicial Compensation Act.[149] This change in workload is relevant because it increases the need for judicial justices to fill shifts at the Justice Centre or to take on greater workloads during their shifts. Further, it compounds the anticipated problems arising from an insufficient judicial justice complement and the apparent low interest in judicial justice positions, described above.

Whether the changes in workload arising from Bill S-4's amendment of the Criminal Code are viewed as a jurisdictional change or as "another relevant factor," these changes militate in favour of increases to judicial justice compensation.

4.3 Factor 3: Compensation provided in respect of similar judicial positions in Canada, having regard to the differences between those jurisdictions and British Columbia

Provincial Court Judges

Examining similar judicial positions in Canada reveals British Columbia's Provincial Court judge salaries are out of step and well below the average of best comparators.

While this factor must be considered along with all the other statutory factors, we agree with the 2016 JCC and the 2019 JCC that the compensation of other judges in Canada is an important consideration in determining the reasonable compensation paid to BC judges.[150] We have looked at all other judges, including federally appointed and provincially appointed judges across Canada.

[149] We advised Government, JJA, PCJA, and Chief Judge that we may consider the effects of Bill S-4 as another relevant factor under s. 5(5.2) and those participants had an opportunity to make submissions on this issue.

[150] 2019 JCC Report, JBD, Vol. 1, Tab 18, p. 20; 2016 JCC Report, JBD, Vol. 1, Tab 21, p. 47.

The Government submits the federally appointed judges are not useful comparators because superior court judges have broader, and inherent, jurisdiction to hear civil, family, and criminal cases, and the superior court judges hear appeals from the Provincial Court and conduct judicial reviews.[151] While the types of cases differ, and the Provincial Court judges are limited to their statutory jurisdiction, the judicial roles are similar in both courts. As noted by the PCJA, "the same qualities of judicial temperament, legal knowledge, and an abiding sense of fairness are required of all judges" and all judges make decisions that will greatly affect people's lives, including the potential loss of freedom.[152]

The BC Supreme Court logically competes with the BC Provincial Court for applicants by drawing from the same pool: BC lawyers with at least 10 years of experience. While some lawyers will apply to one court over the other for reasons other than compensation (e.g., because of differences in the nature of the cases heard), compensation will be an important consideration, as it is in applying for any position. Federally appointed judges currently receive $83,700 more in salary per year than Provincial Court judges in British Columbia, and the compensation value of pension benefits for a federally appointed judge (expressed as a level of percentage of pay over the working lifetime of a typical judge) is 66.4% compared to 43.1% for a Provincial Court judge.[153]

In short, while recognizing differences (including the type of work done in the superior courts of general jurisdiction compared with that done in statutory provincial courts), we also see similarities sufficient to include federally appointed judges as one element in the group of Canadian comparators.

While provincial courts in other provinces are less likely to compete with the BC Provincial Court for applicants, judges in provincial courts across Canada are important comparators because of the similarity in roles and subject matters dealt with by the other provincial courts.

The Government says the method of determining compensation in other jurisdictions is a "difference" that must be considered when comparing the salaries of provincial court judges in other Canadian jurisdictions to BC salaries.[154] Some provincial governments (Ontario, Saskatchewan, and New Brunswick) have chosen to set their judges' salaries at a fixed percentage of superior court judges' salaries. The Government says British Columbia has made a different policy choice that does not contemplate a fixed relationship, and that we must take account of this "difference" and "give effect to the choices made here."[155] In Government's submission, because Ontario, Saskatchewan, and New Brunswick use fixed percentages of superior court salaries to determine their provincial court salaries, these provinces do not make good comparators.[156]

---

[151] Main Submission of Government, paras. 128 and 130.

[152] Main Submission of PCJA, para. 191.

[153] PCJA BD, Tab 3, p. 5.

[154] Main Submission of Government, paras. 132-135.

[155] Main Submission of Government, para. 134-135.

[156] Main Submission of Government, paras. 132, 145, 146

The wording of section 5(5)(c) seems aimed at directing commissions to consider substantive differences in either (a) the nature of judicial work, or (b) the economic or social characteristics of the region or "jurisdiction" where the work is done. The language of section 5(5)(c) does not naturally suggest that a commission should delve into the processes by which governments in other regions of Canada have chosen to make decisions about judicial compensation. Comparing judicial salaries to other similar positions is intended to provide an objective measure of the reasonableness of salaries that have been implemented by the BC Government. If we eliminate from comparison all the provinces whose governments have not made the same policy choices as the BC Government in respect of the process for setting judicial compensation, we will not have an objective comparative view of what is being paid for similar judicial work across the country. We will have a view that is biased to be as close as possible to the policy choices of the BC Government. Accordingly, we reject the Government's contention that Ontario, Saskatchewan, and New Brunswick are inappropriate comparators.

In short, we agree with the 2019 JCC. In looking at provincial court salaries across the country, it considered both differences in the positions ("markers of similarity: the qualifications for the positions, the core qualities required for them and the nature of the judicial work, including jurisdiction"), and differences among regional jurisdictions ("performance of their respective economies and relative debt levels, populations, [and] budgets").[157]

The participants acknowledge the broad jurisdiction of BC Provincial Court judges.[158] Not all other provincial courts in Canada hear cases from the diverse subject areas represented before BC judges. In Alberta and Ontario, urban areas have specialized criminal, family, and civil divisions while rural areas have non-specialized judges. In Quebec, specialized courts exist in almost all areas of the province and judges are assigned exclusively to those divisions.[159]

With respect to differences in economic indicators, the Government submits that Alberta and Quebec are the notable comparators for British Columbia, saying these are the closest to British Columbia in terms of GDP and population. It says the current salaries received by BC Provincial Court judges are "within a reasonable range" of these comparators.[160] The PCJA submits the best comparators are Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario, as these jurisdictions are, like British Columbia, "in favourable economic positions" as measured by GDP per capita. [161]

While Quebec is close to British Columbia in terms of unemployment rate and provincial GDP, it is 63% larger in population, resulting in a lower GDP per capita. Nevertheless, the PCJA concedes that, comparing the six largest provinces, GDP per capita would be "broadly similar." However, looking only at GDP per capita obscures the relative costs of living in different provinces such as the cost of buying a home. The only other province with comparable home prices to British

[157] 2019 JCC Report, JBD, Vol. 1, Tab 18, pp. 19-20

[158] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 16, ll. 12-14; Main Submission of Government, p. 31; Main Submission of PCJA, para. 79.

[159] TR February 15, 2023, Chief Judge Gillespie, p. 139, l. 1 to p. 140, l. 6.

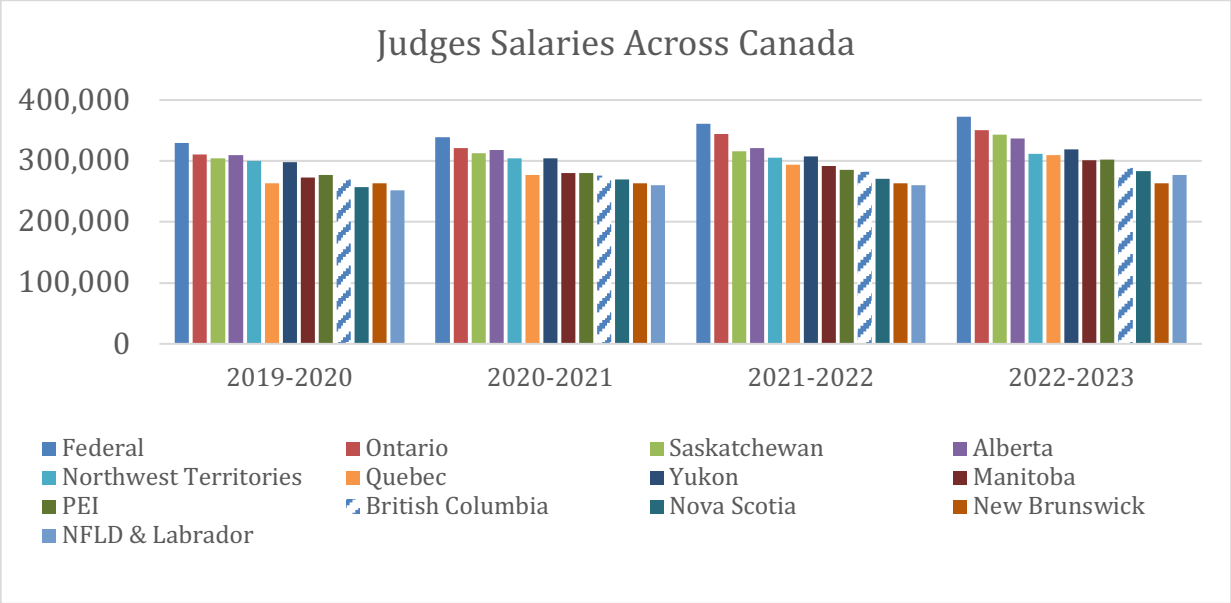
[160] Main Submission of Government, paras. 148-149.

[161] Main Submission of PCJA, para. 208; Reply Submission of PCJA, para. 37; TR February 13, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 77, ll. 9-13.

Columbia is Ontario.[162] Other economic factors, such as debt as a percentage of GDP, make Alberta and Saskatchewan comparable to British Columbia.[163] Saskatchewan has the closest unemployment rate to British Columbia, and is also similarly diverse in its export destinations.[164]

Taking these points into account, the closest comparators to BC Provincial Court judges are provincially appointed judges in Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario. While some urban courts in Alberta and Ontario are more specialized than in British Columbia, the rural judges have comparatively broad jurisdiction—unlike the more specialized judges in Quebec. Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario have similarly healthy economies. Ontario is most similar to British Columbia in terms of housing costs. Alberta and Saskatchewan are similar to British Columbia in terms of debt as a percentage of GDP. Alberta is similar in terms of population size, and Saskatchewan in terms of diverse export destinations.

The figure below shows annualized judicial salaries across Canada for the last four fiscal years.[165]



[162] Reply Submission of PCJA, paras. 38-39.

[163] Exhibit 1, slide: BC – Provincial Comparisons Taxpayer-Supported Debt (% of GDP).

[164] Exhibit 1, slide: Export Destinations; slide: Unemployment Rate by Province and Region.

[165] Data for this figure come from JBD, Vol. 2, Tab 34. For Alberta in 2021/22 and 2022/23 and Yukon 2022/23, the actual compensation is unknown. We assumed that these jurisdictions will be given at least an increase to account—in some way—for CPI. To provide an estimate of the 2021/22 salary for Alberta, the 2020/21 salary was increased by the amount equal to the change in "all items" monthly CPI for Alberta from January 2020 to January 2021: 0.8%. To provide an estimate of the 2022/23 salary for Alberta, the estimated 2021/22 salary was increased by the amount equal to the change in "all items" monthly CPI for Alberta from January 2021 to January 2022: 4.8%. To provide an estimate of the 2022/23 salary for the Yukon, the 2021/22 salary for Yukon was increased by the amount equal to the change in "all items" CPI for Yukon from January 2021 to January 2022: 3.7%. The "all items" monthly CPI numbers for these provinces were generated from Statistics Canada. Table 18-10-0004-02 Consumer Price Index by geography, all-items, monthly, percentage change, not seasonally adjusted, Canada, provinces, Whitehorse, Yellowknife and Iqaluit.

British Columbia's Provincial Court judge salaries currently rank 10th out of all judicial salaries in Canada (9th if only considering provincial/territorial courts). We also note that, while the judicial salaries in most other provinces for the 2023-24 fiscal year are currently unknown, those that are known have increased from the 2022-23 values shown in the figure above.

The table below shows judicial salaries across Canada for the current year (2022-23), along with averages for comparison:[166]

Jurisdiction	Salary for 2022-23
Federal	372,200
Ontario	350,212
Saskatchewan	343,045
Alberta	336,458 (estimate)
Yukon	319,107 (estimate)
Northwest Territories	311,723
Québec	310,000
Prince Edward Island	302,010
Manitoba	301,345
British Columbia	288,500
Nova Scotia	283,075
Newfoundland & Labrador	277,357
New Brunswick	263,920
AVERAGES
All salaries (excluding BC)	314,204
All provinces/territories (excluding BC)	308,932
Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario	343,238
Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario, and Quebec	334,928

For 2022-23, the average salary of all judges (federal and provincial) across Canada, excluding BC judges, is $314,204. British Columbia's judges' salary is over $25,000 below the national average.

If we look only at British Columbia's closest comparators (Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario) and exclude federal judges, the average salary is $343,238. British Columbia's economy is comparably healthy to their economies. With respect to BC's financial position, independent bond rating agencies give British Columbia the highest rating in Canada (see discussion under section [166] See ibid. for calculation of values for Alberta and Yukon.

4.5). Despite that, a BC Provincial Court judge's salary is currently $54,738 below the average of its closest comparators. This objective measure strongly suggests that BC judges' salaries are unreasonably low.

Additionally, considering compensation as a whole (as described below in section 6.2), Mr. Sauvé's undisputed evidence was that the estimated compensation value of the judicial pension arrangement in British Columbia is 43.1% of salary compared to an average compensation value of 54.6% for the other four jurisdictions he considered (federal, Alberta, Ontario, and Saskatchewan)—for a difference of 11.5% of salary.[167]

In our view, British Columbia is not paying salaries to its Provincial Court judges that are within a reasonable range of the province's comparators. This factor militates in favour of a significant increase in compensation.

Judicial Justices

British Columbia's judicial justices are paid below average salaries for work similar to other judicial justices or justices of the peace in Canada, despite British Columbia's strong economy and more favourable fiscal position.

Only Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec have judicial justice or justice of the peace positions (collectively "judicial justices") that are comparable or analogous to those in British Columbia.[168]

However, there are some differences. In British Columbia and Alberta, a judicial justice must have a law degree and have practised for five years, but in Ontario no legal training is required to hold the position. In Quebec, 10 year's legal practice is required.[169] The Government also points to some differences in the jurisdiction of judicial justices among the six provinces,[170] but aside from Manitoba (where judicial justices conduct trials and sentencing hearings for summary convictions) and Quebec (where judicial justices rule on contested applications relating to the disposal of seized property), the differences in jurisdiction are relatively minor. All deal with significant liberty and privacy issues, and the Government acknowledged that the jurisdiction of judicial justices across Canada is "largely analogous."[171]

The Government argues that we should consider the difference between the processes for determining compensation for judicial justices. It points to the fact that in Saskatchewan, Ontario, and Manitoba the salaries are set as a percentage of provincial judges' salaries. For the same

[167] Comparative Analysis of Judicial Pension Plans, Prepared by Andre Sauvé, December 2022, PCJA BD, Tab 3, p.5.

[168] Main Submission of Government, para. 154; Main Submission of JJA, para. 101.

[169] Reply Submission of JJA, para. 61

[170] Main Submission of Government, para. 154.

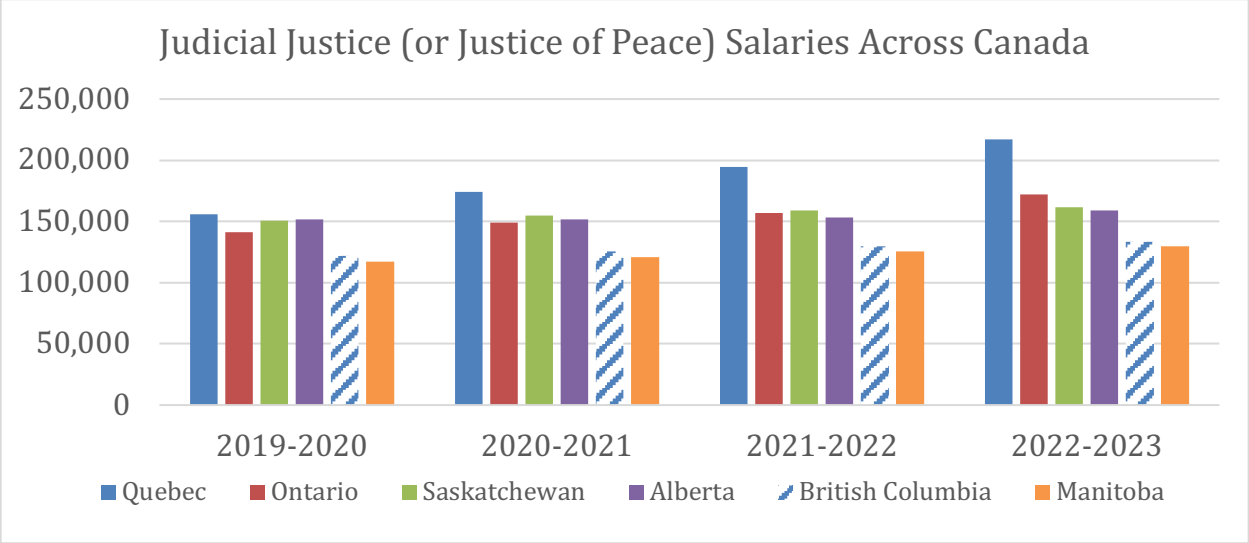
[171] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 13, ll. 1-20; Main Submission of Government, paras. 152 and154.

reasons described above in the section on judges, we do not find differences in the processes for determining compensation to be relevant considerations under this factor.

The Government says Alberta is the most appropriate comparator for judicial justice salaries in terms of "GDP, GDP growth, geographic location and population." It says Quebec is not an appropriate comparator given differences in jurisdiction.[172] The JJA adopted the 2019 JCC's finding that Alberta and Ontario are the best comparators.[173]

We find the roles of judicial justices across Canada to be roughly comparable, acknowledging some differences. As with the analysis above for judges, we find Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario to be the closest to British Columbia with respect to the health of their economies, housing costs or provincial debt burdens. For consistency and given slight variations in the judicial justice roles in Quebec and Manitoba, we have determined that Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario are the best comparators.

The figure below shows the annualized salaries of BC judicial justices and similar positions across Canada for the 2019-20 to 2022-23 fiscal years.[174]



The current salary for BC judicial justices is $34,366 below the average of all the other provinces. Despite British Columbia having a strong economy and an independently-ranked stronger financial position than any other province, BC judicial justice salaries are $30,751 below the average of its closest comparators, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario.

[172] Main Submission of Government, para. 156.

[173] Main Submission of JJA, para. 102. TR February 15, 2022, Mr. Bernstein for JJA, p. 91, ll. 12-23; p. 93, ll. 3-10. p. 121, ll. 7-23.

[174] Data for this figure come from JBD, Vol. 2, Tab 35. For Alberta in 2021/22 and 2022/23, the actual compensation is unknown, but the participants provided us with an unconfirmed number for 2021/22 of $151,813. Assuming at least an increase to account for CPI in the previous year, to provide an estimate of the 2022/23 salary for Alberta, the 2021/22 salary was increased by the amount equal to the change in "all items" CPI for Alberta from January 2021 to January 2022: 4.8%. The "all items" CPI numbers were generated from Statistics Canada. Table 18-10-0004-02 Consumer Price Index by geography, all-items, monthly, percentage change, not seasonally adjusted, Canada, provinces, Whitehorse, Yellowknife and Iqaluit.

The current salaries and averages for comparison are found in the following table:[175]

Jurisdiction	Salary for 2022-23
Québec	217,000
Ontario	172,000
Saskatchewan	161,655
Alberta	159,100 (estimate)
British Columbia	133,500
Manitoba	129,578
AVERAGES
All provinces (excluding BC)	167,866
Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario	164,251
Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario, and Quebec	177,438

Within British Columbia, the position of a judicial justice may also be compared with that of a Provincial Court judge. The two positions have some overlapping jurisdiction such that Provincial Court judges fill shifts normally assigned to judicial justices. The qualifications for the positions are nearly identical. As noted by the JJA, "To the public, there is generally no discernible difference between a judicial justice and a Provincial Court judge."[176] However, as described above, the statutory jurisdiction of a Provincial Court judge is much broader than that of a judicial justice. The judicial justice's jurisdiction is further limited by the assignment of specific duties by the Chief Judge.

Currently, the salary of a full-time judicial justice is 46.3% of the annual salary of a judge: $133,500 compared to $288,500. In 1978, when judicial justices did not have to be lawyers, the salary of a judicial justice was 64.7% of a judge's salary.[177] While judicial justices are much more specialized, have narrower jurisdiction, and do not conduct trials (other than in traffic court), it strikes us as remarkable that BC judicial justices are now paid less than half the salary of Provincial Court judges.

As with Provincial Court judges, this factor militates in favour of significant compensation increases for judicial justices.

[175] See ibid. for the estimate of Alberta Judicial Justice salary.

[176] Main Submission of JJA, para. 140.

[177] Main Submission of JJA, paras. 142-143.

4.4 Factor 4: Changes in the compensation of others paid by provincial public funds in British Columbia

The Government's current approach to compensation of the public sector is relatively generous compared to recent history. The Government has shown its willingness to address specific problems such as recruitment and retention with increases in compensation.

This factor directs us to look at changes in the compensation of others paid out of the public purse. It is the change in compensation that is important—not a dollar-for-dollar comparison of compensation between different groups of public employees or public office-holders.[178] Under this factor, it is important to look at trends, and consider what those trends might say about a reasonable approach to judicial compensation, noting the unique, constitutional role of the judiciary. For example, looking at the changes to the compensation of others paid from the public purse might "support the inference that the Province had exercised moderation in dealing with other public salaries."[179] Conversely, it might support an inference that the government has acted more expansively.

Under this factor we look at what the government has considered "to be a reasonable change in compensation for the rest of the public service."[180] The Government acknowledged that a strict application of its public sector bargaining mandate to changes in compensation by the judiciary would not be appropriate.[181]

The Government rightly conceded that "we are in a different world" compared to the situation before past commissions.[182] The 2022 Shared Recovery Mandate is the most generous bargaining mandate that the BC Government has put forth in over 12 years.[183] It guarantees, over a three-year period, wage increases to the public sector of 11.5% to 13.75%, depending on whether cost of living adjustments need to be made.[184] The Government said the mandate was designed, in part, to respond to inflation. The PCJA pointed out that under this bargaining mandate, the BC

[178] Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2021 BCCA 295, JBA, Vol. 1, Tab 14, para. 59.

[179] Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2021 BCCA 295, JBA, Vol. 1, Tab 14, para. 61.

[180] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 61, ll. 2-4.

[181] Main Submission of Government, para. 162, citing Provincial Court Judges Association of British Columbia v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2012 BCSC 1022.

[182] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 61, l. 23 to p. 62, l. 2.

[183] For comparison, see the government's public sector bargaining mandates from 2019, 2014, 2012, and 2010 at https://www2.gov.bc.ca/gov/content/employment-business/employers/public-sector-employers/public-sector-bargaining/mandates-and-agreements. The 2010 and 2012 mandates were for zero net increases. The 2014 mandate was for 0, 1, 1.5, 1.5 and 1.5% increases over 5 years. The 2019 mandate was for 2% increases in each of 3 years.

[184] Main Submission of Government, para. 177; 2022 Shared Recovery Mandate, JBD, Vol. 2, Tab 43.

Government is also offering "a flexibility allocation to target additional wage adjustments—over and above the general wage increases—that are needed to address, among other things, specific recruitment and retention challenges."[185]

The PCJA also described instances where small groups of employees receive certain bonuses or stipends.[186] In addition, some employees in the public sector receive step increases as they progress through "levels" of their positions. In contrast, all Provincial Court judges or judicial justices receive the same compensation regardless of years served; there are no salary increases or stipends or bonuses, and no promotion levels for a judge to move through (with the exception of the small number of administrative positions of Chief Judge, Associate Chief Judge, etc. referred to above). The Government submits such step increases are irrelevant to this Commission as members of the judiciary already receive the maximum salary for their position.[187] We accept that point, and in any event, on the evidence before us it is impossible to assess whether there has been a change in the compensation received by employees in the public sector as a result of changes in bonuses or the system of progression through position levels.

One conclusion is clearly supported by the evidence: in exceptional circumstances, the government has shown itself willing to depart from bargaining mandates and to implement greater compensation increases for specific groups. The PCJA says these exceptions demonstrate there are "circumstances in which government may need to offer increases over and above the bargaining mandate" to address problems.[188]

For example, in 2019, when the government's bargaining mandate was 2%, it increased legal aid tariff rates by 35% after the legal aid lawyers working for tariff rates threatened to strike. The context for this raise included that the tariff rates had not been raised in 13 years.[189]

The PCJA and the Government referred to a current example: family physicians, who may receive changes in compensation greater than the 2022 Shared Recovery Mandate, to ensure that the "take home pay of family doctors will be roughly comparable to equivalent hospital physicians going forward."[190] The context here includes a health care system in crisis and "a recruitment and retention" problem for family doctors.

The Commission requested and the Government provided further details about the increased compensation for physicians. It appears that all physicians will see across the board increases to the rates and fees they may charge of 6-8.25% over three years (2022/23 to 2024/25), depending on whether a Cost of Living Protection Adjustment is triggered.[191] On top of this, approximately

---

[185] Main Submission of PCJA, para. 331.

[186] TR February 14, Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 215, ll. 1-19.

[187] Reply Submission of Government, para. 34.

[188] TR February 14, 2023, Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 216, ll. 17-20.

[189] Main Submission of PCJA, para. 228; Reply Submission of Government, para. 37.

[190] Main Submission of PCJA, para. 231; Reply Submission of Government, para. 37.

[191] Information Respecting Increases in Compensation for Family Physicians in British Columbia, prepared for 2022 JCC, p. 4. (See Appendix B, item 8.)

$428 million dollars are available to address specific priority areas "such as increasing the Business Cost Premium to offset overhead costs of a physician's practice."[192] There is also a new compensation model for family physicians which is intended to be competitive with compensation for hospitalists (physicians who work in hospitals). The actual compensation varies based on how individual family physicians "respond to various incentives in the model."[193]

From the information provided,[194] it is difficult to know exactly how much of an increase these combined compensation methods provide to an "average" family physician. However, the PCJA referred to documents from the Ministry of Health and statements made by the government to the media, both of which indicate that a full-time family doctor (meeting certain parameters set out in the compensation model) could receive an increase in pay from $250,000 per year to $385,000 per year under the new model. This potentially represents a 54% increase in gross income per year for those physicians meeting all the parameters and responding to the incentives in the model.[195] The Government agreed that the change in the compensation model for family doctors is meant to address recruitment and retention problems. [196]

The evidence before us clearly shows the BC Government currently taking a generous approach to increases in compensation in the public sector when compared to the recent past. The evidence also shows that government is willing to allocate significant funding in order to correct specific problems like the recruitment and retention of family doctors.

Overall, this factor supports an increase in compensation for both judges and judicial justices.

4.5 Factors 5 and 6: The generally accepted current and expected economic conditions in British Columbia; and the current and expected financial position of the government over the four fiscal years that are the subject of the report

The BC economy is sound and solid. The government is currently embarked on a number of spending programs due to its fiscal surplus. British Columbia receives the highest credit ratings of any province. While a short-term economic slowdown is expected this year, the economy is expected to rebound to normal levels. The economic and fiscal position of British Columbia permits significant increases in compensation for Provincial Court judges and judicial justices.

[192] Information Respecting Increases in Compensation for Family Physicians in British Columbia, prepared for 2022 JCC, pp. 3-4. (See Appendix B, item 8.)

[193] Information Respecting Increases in Compensation for Family Physicians in British Columbia, prepared for 2022 JCC, p. 4. (See Appendix B, item 8.)

[194] Information Respecting Increases in Compensation for Family Physicians in British Columbia, prepared for 2022 JCC. (See Appendix B, item 8.)

[195] Supplemental Submission of PCJA, para. 11 and Tabs D, E, and F.

[196] TR March 10, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 98, ll. 11-25.

Although Factors 5 and 6 are discrete factors, the "current and expected economic conditions" obviously affect the "current and expected financial position of the government." Therefore, we have chosen—like the participants did in the oral hearings—to discuss these factors together.

Two witnesses gave evidence to help us understand these factors. We heard from Mr. Ian McKinnon, a consultant with Pacific Issues Partners, who provided us with a report, a supplementary report, and two PowerPoint presentations.[197] His evidence was presented by the PCJA. Ms. Heather Wood, Deputy Minister of Finance for British Columbia, was tendered by the Government. She provided a report, testified before us, and provided us with two PowerPoint presentations.[198] We also had before us considerable information regarding the 2023 Provincial Budget ("Budget 2023").[199]

Both witnesses spoke about the state of the BC economy. Mr. McKinnon told us the following:

- Canada has a considerable advantage over other G7 countries arising from lower debt levels. The IMF expects Canada's economic growth forecast to be slightly above the average for advanced economies. International events are expected to have a positive effect on Canada's economy, such as China's relaxation of COVID restrictions, which is expected to improve supply chain issues, and the conflict in Eastern Europe, which has increased demand for Canadian grain and energy.[200]
- In response to inflation, over the last year the Bank of Canada increased interest rates "rapidly and fairly dramatically." Inflation is now stabilizing and beginning to move down.[201] Since the summer of 2022, the consumer price index (CPI) has been trending down.[202]
- Canadian Real GDP is above where it was pre-COVID-19, by a "significant percent."[203] Similarly, Canadian employment levels have been fully restored to pre-pandemic levels and "have been growing since."[204]
- In British Columbia, "the GDP has grown faster, unemployment has tended to be below the national average and we've got a diversified economy. Diversified economy means that you don't have the terrific ups, the booms … but nor do we have the declines."[205] The BC economy is sound and solid.[206]

---

[197] PCJA BD Tab 1; Exhibit 1; Supplementary Submission of PCJA, Tab B; and Exhibit 14.

[198] Exhibit 2; and Exhibit 17.

[199] Budget Submission of Government, Appendices; and Supplemental Submission of PCJA, Appendices.

[200] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 12, l. 20 to p. 14, l. 8; Exhibit 14, p. 2.

[201] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 15, ll. 4-15.

[202] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 17, ll. 15-18.

[203] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 15, ll. 16-23; Exhibit 14, p. 4.

[204] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 15, l. 24 to p. 16, l. 4; Exhibit 14, p. 5.

[205] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 18, ll. 17-21; Exhibit 14, p. 7.

[206] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 25, ll. 18-22.

Ms. Wood similarly testified to the strength and resilience of the BC economy, but cautioned about an economic slowdown over the next year:

- The BC economy has proven to be resilient in facing the pandemic and geopolitical disruptions.[207]
- Economic growth was "very strong" in 2021 and 2022, slowing towards the end of 2022, and a slower growth in GDP is expected in the 2023-24 fiscal year as higher interest rates start to cool domestic and global demand.[208]
- BC real GDP growth in 2023 is forecast to be 0.4%, which is lower than the previous forecast of 1.5% from the First Quarterly Report.[209] In the near and medium term, the economy is forecast to "expand by 1.5 percent in 2024" and to be in the range of 2.2 to 2.4 percent annually by 2025-2027.[210]
- While economic growth is not strong every year, the "underlying fundamentals of BC's economy are very strong."[211] Overall, British Columbia has a "sound, solid economy."[212]

With respect to the financial position of the BC government, Mr. McKinnon told us the following:

- The government's strong financial position reflects British Columbia's strong economy and the government's "prudence" in budgeting.[213]
- The government has been using the recent budgetary estimates to "spend as much of the surplus as they can."[214] Given time constraints, this spending cannot go through normal processes and is subject to less reporting and evaluation.[215]
- The current budget shows deficits over the next three years, largely due to increased spending.[216]
- British Columbia has significant fiscal capacity due to its relatively low personal tax burden.[217]

---

[207] TR February 14, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 34, ll. 13-17.

[208] Ibid. and see TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 6, l. 15 to p. 8, l. 3.

[209] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 20, ll. 11-14; Budget Submission of Government, para. 7.

[210] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 8, ll. 11-21.

[211] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 20, ll. 8-15.

[212] TR February 14, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 88, l. 1.

[213] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 19, ll. 4-15; Exhibit 14, p.8 (Quote from Ms. Wood's Letter of February 28, 2023, in Budget 2023, p. v).

[214] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 20 ll. 17-24.

[215] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 21, ll. 7-15.

[216] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 21, l. 16 to p. 22, l. 2; Exhibit 14, p. 10.

[217] Exhibit 1, slide: Fiscal Capacity.

- It is "highly probable" that no other province in Canada builds the same level of prudence into its budgets as does British Columbia. British Columbia's bigger margins are an "appropriate response" to uncertainty.[218]

- British Columbia has the highest credit ratings (from independent rating agencies) of any province in the country. The strength of the rating influences the interest rate a debt-holder is charged.[219] The rating agencies' "core mission" is similar to that of this Commission in terms of looking at the future of the economy and the fiscal prospects of the government—they look at these factors in determining the prospect that the government's debt will be paid back.[220] As shown in the figure below,[221] these ratings view British Columbia's fiscal performance as better than any other province.[222]

Ratings Agencies Give BC Highest Provincial Rating

	S&P	DBRS	Moody's
B.C.	AA+	AA high	Aaa
Alberta	A	AA low	Aa3
Sask.	AA	AA low	Aa1
Manitoba	A+	A high	Aa2
Ontario	A+	AA low	Aa3
Quebec	AA-	AA low	Aa2
N.B.	A+	A high	Aa2
Nova Scotia	A	A high	Aa2
Nfld.	A	A low	A1

Ms. Wood also told us about increased levels of government spending, the expected deficits, and the prudence in the budget. She also referred to lower expected revenues and increased debt levels:

- The third quarterly report for 2022-23 shows a surplus of $3.6 billion, which is lower than the surplus noted in the second quarterly report because the Province has used $2.1 billion of the formerly reported surplus to fund priorities in this fiscal year, including infrastructure grants to local governments, BC Ferries affordability, rental protections, and an [218] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 27, ll. 5-12; TR February 13, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 70, ll. 1-7.

[219] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 23, l. 15 to p. 24, l. 11; p. 32, ll. 2-15; Exhibit 14, p. 12.

[220] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 23, l. 21 to p. 24, l. 5.

[221] Exhibit 14, slide: Rating Agencies Give BC Highest Provincial Rating. See, TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 24, ll. 12-20, where Mr. McKinnon explains that the S&P (Standard and Poor's) rating was updated in December 2022, leaving BC's ratings exactly where they were in the spring of 2022.

[222] Exhibit 1, slide: B.C.'s Ratings; TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 23, ll. 2-8.

affordability tax credit.[223] In relation to the $1 billion dollar grant to municipalities for infrastructure, she said the Province does not maintain control over how the municipalities spend the money, but can indicate the categories of funding that local governments should be using and require public reporting on the use of the funds.[224]

- Any budgetary surplus from 2022-23 that is not spent before the end of the fiscal year will be applied against the province's debt as a matter of law and accounting practice.[225]
- The government projects lower revenue for the next two years owing to tax revenues returning to "more normal levels from the highs of 2022."[226]
- The operating surplus in 2022-23 "brought down the debt level but the forecasted deficits and capital spending forecasted in budget will result in increased debt and somewhat deteriorating debt affordability metrics."[227] While declining deficits are expected in later years of the forecast, provincial debt will "continue to increase as a result of capital spending."[228] However, long term, "BC continues to have relatively affordable levels of debt."[229]
- The budget includes explicit layers of prudence through the economic forecast and forecast allowance and through contingencies (as explained further below). The prudence that is built into the budget makes the Province's fiscal position resilient.[230]
- British Columbia is unique among provinces in that it has "multiple levels of prudence. We have economic prudence; we have contingencies allocation; we have forecast allowance. So BC is unique in that regard, and the credit rating agencies have acknowledged that."[231]

Both witnesses spoke in detail about the prudence measures built into the BC Government's forecasting. Mr. McKinnon compared the monetary sum of the prudence measures incorporated into Budget 2023 for the next three years against the estimated deficits for the same years. Doing so results in a positive balance in the range of $1.5 to $2 billion per year.[232] Mr. McKinnon said one cannot look at multibillion dollar deficits without realizing that amounts are built into the budget to "respond to demand in needs or shortfalls on the income side."[233]

---

[223] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 9, l. 22 to p. 10, l. 9.

[224] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 23, ll. 15-20.

[225] TR February 14, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 72, l. 20 to p. 73, l. 7.

[226] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p.10, l. 24 to p. 11, l. 3; Exhibit 17, p. 5 (Budget 2023 Fiscal Plan).

[227] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 12, ll. 10-15.

[228] Exhibit 17, p. 8.

[229] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 13, ll. 4-7.

[230] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 28, ll. 3-15.

[231] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 31, ll. 3-8.

[232] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 22, ll. 3-24; Exhibit 14, p. 11.

[233] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. McKinnon, p. 23, ll. 9-14.

Ms. Wood told us the government's "prudence measures" in Budget 2023 fall into various categories: general contingencies, a forecast allowance, priority spending initiatives and caseload pressures, and specific contingencies.[234] The bulk of the prudence measures ($5.5 billion of $6.2 in 2023-24) are general or specific contingencies, which are allocated expenses. She said it was not possible to "offset" the contingency measures against the forecast deficit as Mr. McKinnon had done.[235] They "reflect actual expenses that are anticipated"—they are for "specific items such as the wage mandate costs, pandemic related spending and climate related disasters."[236] The "priority spending initiatives and caseload pressures" is a prudence measure built into the fiscal budget for 2025-26, acknowledging that, in later years of the fiscal plan, there will be a need to fund core government programs.[237] It is only the "forecast allowance" that could "perhaps late in the fiscal year" be removed to get an assessment of the "bottom line" of the budget.[238]

We accept that, as Ms. Wood stated, it is unusual to compare the monetary sum of the prudence measures incorporated into Budget 2023 for the next three years against the estimated deficits for the same years, and we are not placing any weight on that comparison. Instead, we rely on the evidence from both Mr. McKinnon and Ms. Wood that the government's prudence measures serve British Columbia well in times of uncertainty.

In submissions, the PCJA pointed out that the economy and the government's financial position are so strong that the government has been able to make the largest infrastructure investment in the province's history, spending very large sums "outside the normal budgeting processes and the analysis that is usually entailed in those financial decisions." It says such actions are not those of "a government that sees significant fiscal risks in the next few years."[239] Further, the PCJA argued that a recent agreement with the federal government on healthcare spending is another positive change to the government's fiscal position and "another reason to have confidence" in the government's fiscal position.[240] Ms. Wood testified that these agreements are not reflected in the forecasts in Budget 2023.[241] However, part of that funding will not help to offset costs until after 2025/26, and the other part of it will be for new costs and will not offset existing costs.[242]

---

[234] Budget Submission of Government, Appendices (Budget 2023, p. 30).

[235] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 15, ll. 14-19.

[236] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 12, ll. 16-24; p. 17, ll. 20-25.

[237] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 16, ll. 8-17.

[238] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p.18, ll. 1-9.

[239] Supplemental Submission of PCJA, para. 5; TR March 10, 2023, Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 41, l. 22 to p. 42, l. 6.

[240] TR March 10, 2023, Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 42, l. 15 to p. 43, l. 5.

[241] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 24, ll. 12-16.

[242] TR March 13, 2023, Ms. Wood, p. 32, ll. 2-13.

The JJA adopted the PCJA's submissions, noting that a positive outlook for British Columbia is consistent with increases to judicial compensation.[243]

The Government's submissions emphasized that the BC economy has slowed over 2022, and that forecasts call for further slowing or a recession in 2023.[244] In the longer term, "British Columbia is expected to experience steady employment growth, solid investment activity, and higher international migration" resulting in "a higher real GDP growth range between 2025 and 2027."[245] Risks to the economy include persistent high inflation, uncertainty over the impact of higher interest rates on borrowing and the housing market, lingering supply chain disruptions, a weaker than expected global economy, the impacts of geopolitical conflicts on trade, and aging demographics leading to tighter labour markets.[246]

On its financial position, the Government noted increased spending measures aimed at British Columbians struggling with cost of living pressures, and debt metrics calling for fiscal prudence.[247] The Government noted that the budget's prudence measures account for a number of risks.[248]

We have considered all this evidence. Despite some disagreements, for example in the characterization of future risks to the economy (and consequently, the financial outlook of the government), by and large Mr. McKinnon's and Ms. Wood's evidence painted a consistent picture. The disagreements are not material to our conclusions about this factor.

We conclude that British Columbia's economy is sound, solid, and resilient. Independent bond rating agencies have confidence in the province, giving it the highest ratings of any province in the country. The government builds layers of prudence into its budgets—more than other provinces—and this prudence makes for a resilient fiscal position. British Columbia is well-positioned financially to weather risks over the next few years. The rapid and record level spending of 2022-23's budget surplus demonstrates the Government's confidence in its own financial position. The short-term outlook is for an economic slowdown or recession in 2023-24, but then a recovery to normal levels of growth in 2024-25 and beyond.

In our view, the strength and resilience in the economy and the financial position of government are each compatible with significant increases in judicial compensation. However, the forecasted economic slowdown for 2023-24 indicates the need for some moderation in the next fiscal year.

---

[243] Main Submission of JJA, para. 130; Reply Submission of JJA, para. 68; Supplemental Submission of JJA, para. 28; TR March 10, 2023, Mr. Bernstein for JJA, p. 54, ll. 4-6.

[244] Budget Submission of Government, paras. 6-12. TR March 10, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 64, l. 15 to p. 65, l. 21.

[245] Budget Submission of Government, para. 14.

[246] Budget Submission of Government, para. 15.

[247] Budget Submission of Government, paras. 22-23.

[248] Budget Submission of Government, paras. 25-26.

5 Recommendations on Salaries

Both the PCJA and the JJA submitted that a significant "correction" to judicial salaries is needed to bring the compensation of judges and judicial justices up to the level of "reasonable compensation."[249] That correction, they say, should not just account for inflation but address the fall in ordinal rank in comparison to other judicial officers across Canada.[250] The Government recommended modest increases to current salaries, incorporating "a level of catch-up" with inflation and then increases to address anticipated inflation over the 2022 cycle.[251]

We heard different views about whether it is necessary for us to have a notional "starting point" from which to recommend increases (or decreases) to the salaries of judicial officers. The "starting point" would have to be notional (for judges) because, at the time of making our Final Report, the Legislative Assembly's implemented salary for 2022-23 has been quashed and remitted back to the Legislative Assembly for reconsideration.[252] Thus, though the current judicial salary is $288,500, the "final" salary—for at least the judges—for 2022-23 remains unknown. [253]

The Government argued that the legislature is responsible for approving public expenditures and, given it has approved the current salaries of judges, those current salaries have "to be the starting point of this commission's work."[254] Further, it says the statutory factors that we are required to account for all involve changes in conditions in some form or another, so all need a starting point.[255] More specifically, the Government submitted that to understand the magnitude of an increase that is being requested you need a starting point, especially when taking into account the changes in the compensation of others.[256]

---

[249] TR February 15, 2023, Mr. Bernstein for JJA, p. 36, ll. 8-16.

[250][250] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 101, ll. 3-10, p. 124 l. 17 to p. 125, l. 3; Mr. Bernstein for JJA p. 114, ll. 7-20. Also, see JBD, Vol. 2, Tab 34 which provides provincial court salary details for all the provinces and territories. These data show British Columbia's fall in salary "rank" since 2010.

[251] Main Submission of Government, para. 9.

[252] Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2023 BCSC 520.

[253] The PCJA cautioned us to avoid the situation where, as happened in 2013, the commission recommends a percentage increase on what is currently paid to judges, only to have the starting point changed by a subsequent court decision: TR February 14, 2023, Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 139, ll. 11-23; Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2017 BCCA 63 at paras. 4, 6, 8, and 9. See also the discussion of starting point in the 2016 JCC Report, JBD, Vol. 1, Tab 21, p. 59.

[254] TR February 15, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 202, l. 21 to p. 203, l. 6.

[255] TR February 15, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 207, ll. 7-13.

[256] TR February 15, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 208, l. 18 to p. 209, l. 6; February 16, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 56, ll. 16-19.

The PCJA asked us to focus on a dollar amount rather than a percentage increase based on a notional starting point, as this will focus us on the appropriate question—the reasonable renumeration that should be paid to judges.[257] It said the starting point is not particularly important with respect to changes to the compensation paid to others because we do not need to find that judges should receive identical increases to others paid by public funds.[258] It urged us to focus on what changes in the compensation of others tell us about government's approach to compensation generally, and to consider that evidence along with all the other statutory factors.[259]

In considering some of the statutory factors, it is obviously relevant and useful to look at what judges and judicial justices are currently being paid. However, we are not expressing our recommendations in terms of a percentage increase. Our focus is on what is reasonable compensation for the next four years—not only on what is a reasonable increase in compensation.

5.1 Provincial Court Judges

Our recommendation for Provincial Court judges' salaries for the next four fiscal years appears in the table below along with the salaries proposed by the PCJA and the Government. Although the PCJA proposed a salary for 2023-24 and then requested an increase by the amount of CPI for each of the subsequent three years, we have expressed the subsequent years of its proposal in dollar terms for ease of comparison.

Provincial Court Judges	Current Salary	2023 - 2024	2024 - 2025	2025 - 2026	2026 -2027
Government Submission	$288,500	$311,000	$323,000	$332,000	$338,000
PCJA Submission	$288,500	$350,860	$364,547 ($350,860 + est. 3.9% CPI increase)[260]	$373,296 ($364,547 + est. 2.4% CPI increase)	$381,509 ($373,296 + est. 2.2% CPI increase)
RECOMMENDATION:		$343,000	$360,000	$360,000 + a percentage increase equivalent to the annual average percentage change in BC CPI for 2024[261]	2025-26 salary + a percentage increase equivalent to the annual average percentage change in BC CPI for 2025

[257] TR February 14, 2023, Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 138, ll.15-24.

[258] TR February 15, 2023, Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 6, ll. 3-11.

[259] TR February 15, 2023, Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 6, ll. 13-22; p. 7, ll. 4-17.

[260] These estimates for CPI are taken from Reply Submission of Government, para. 109.

[261] For clarity, "BC CPI" refers to CPI for the whole province of British Columbia (not CPI that may be experienced in a particular region of the province), and it refers to "all items" CPI (not CPI calculated on a subset

It must be remembered that "reasonable compensation" speaks to total compensation. For judges, pensions comprise a significant part of their total compensation. No participant proposed any changes to the overall value of pensions. Where increases in compensation are needed, we have determined that those increases should, at this time, come in the form of increased salary.

In arriving at our salary recommendations, we have considered what each statutory factor tells us about the reasonable compensation for judges:

- Factor 1 supports a salary increase sufficient to attract greater numbers of highly qualified applicants from diverse legal backgrounds to apply to become Provincial Court judges. There is currently low interest in this court, shown by declining applications, coupled with a serious difficulty in filling judicial vacancies outside the Lower Mainland. The court could benefit from more diversity in applicants' previous legal practice. The appointing body needs a deeper pool of applicants from which to draw.
- Factor 2 supports neither an increase nor decrease in the compensation paid to judges.
- Factor 3 reveals BC Provincial Court judges' salaries are out of step and well below the average of best comparators, which are objective indicators of reasonable judicial salaries. The ranking of current provincial/territorial court judges' salaries across Canada shows British Columbia in 9th of 12 places. Provinces with comparable economies or costs of living (particularly housing) occupy the top three spots. Ontario, Saskatchewan, and Alberta are each close to $50,000 above the current level of BC judges' salaries. This gap, which grows larger if pension values are considered (see section 6.2 below), militates in favour of a significant increase in judges' salaries.
- Factor 4 supports an increase in compensation for judges. The government has taken a relatively generous approach to compensation of the public sector and has shown a willingness to increase wages when needed to address recruitment and retention problems for others paid from the public purse.
- Factor 5 supports an increase in judges' salaries. The BC economy is solid and resilient. While there is a forecasted economic slowdown that indicates the need for a degree of moderation in the next fiscal year, the overall and longer-term outlooks for the BC economy are both positive and strong.
- Factor 6 supports an increase in judges' salaries. The financial position of government is strong, and arguably the best in Canada. British Columbia is well-positioned through its budgetary prudence to remain financially strong over the next four years.

Considered together, these factors overwhelmingly indicate the need for an increase in compensation. While Factor 2 is neutral, the alignment of all other factors shows that the time is ripe to correct the significantly below average pay earned by BC Provincial Court judges compared of particular goods and/or services). BC CPI calculations should be made on the basis of the previous calendar year (e.g., for the 2025-2026 salary, use the annual average percent change from January 1, 2024 to December 31, 2024). BC Stats is to be relied on as the source for reporting BC CPI, using Stat Can data. BC CPI percentage changes should be calculated to one decimal place. If the annual average percentage change in the BC CPI over the previous calendar year is less than 0%, it should be treated as a 0% change and the judges' salary will remain the same rather than being reduced.

---

to all other judges in Canada, and especially to their closest comparators. Given the healthy economy of British Columbia, and the strong financial position of the government, BC judges should receive compensation that puts them closer to the top group of courts on the table found on page 40 of this report and within the range of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario judges.

A significant correction in salary should help to address the Provincial Court's challenge in recruiting judges. For one thing, it would reduce the current gap in pay between Provincial Court and Supreme Court judges. A pay correction also aligns with the government's current approach to sharing the success of British Columbia's strong financial position with others paid from public funds. Government's actions in the past six months, and its approach in Budget 2023, show that it is able, while remaining commendably prudent, to give robust support to valuable public activities—such as the work of family physicians. We recognize that access to justice is not universally seen as equivalent to access to health care. However, a justice system that may struggle over the next four years with a declining court complement deserves support. The Government is clearly in a position to provide such support at this time.

We agree with the PCJA that a significant correction is required to judges salaries. However, we have determined that a lesser amount in the first year than what the PCJA has proposed would still meet the requirement for reasonable compensation so long as it is followed by a further corrective increase in the second year.

We also heard the Government's submission that its proposed salaries "take into account the need to remain economically and fiscally prudent, given the anticipated initial decline and weakening of the economic and financial position that is reflected in budget 2023," (with a forecast of a return to average growth, with some deficits and increased debt over the subsequent three years.)[262] While we disagree that the amounts proposed by the Government are reasonable when taking into account all the factors discussed above, we accept that an economic slowdown is expected for 2023-24 before a return to normal economic levels. In recognition of this, we have split the correction in judges' salaries over the first two years of our mandate: 2023-24 and 2024-25. We recommend the judges receive increases in salary over and above rates of inflation for those two years. After the full correction is implemented, for the last two years of our mandate, we recommend inflationary increases equal to BC's Consumer Price Index.[263] By tying the later increases to CPI, we intend to keep judicial salaries stable against the cost of living.

Our salary recommendation will still likely put BC judges behind its closest comparators in 2023-24, but will likely place BC judges above the national average.

5.2 Judicial Justices

Our recommendation for judicial justices' salaries for the next four fiscal years appears in the table below along with the salaries proposed by the JJA and Government.

[262] TR March 10, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 71 ll. 10-22.

[263] See footnote 261, supra, for remarks about the calculation of BC CPI.

Judicial Justices	Current Salary	2023 – 2024	2024 – 2025	2025 - 2026	2026-2027
Government Submission	$133,500	$143,915	$149,527	$153,564	$156,636
JJA Submission	$133,500	$175,000	$180,000	$185,000	$190,000
RECOMMENDATION:		$172,000	$177,000	$182,000	$187,000

We note that most judicial justices work part-time and they will be paid pursuant to a per diem formula, based on the full-time salary.

We recognize that benefits factor into the total compensation of judicial justices, and accordingly we have recommended (below) an increase to the amount paid to part-time judicial justices in lieu of benefits, as well as an increase in the amount paid for "overhead" to part-time judicial justices. Further, in making our salary recommendation, we have considered that shift premiums factor into the total compensation of part-time judicial justices. Still, salary (or the per diem equivalent) remains the largest component of judicial justice compensation.

In arriving at our salary recommendations, we have considered what each statutory factor tells us about the reasonable compensation for judicial justices:

- Factor 1 reveals a looming crisis in attracting and maintaining a strong complement of judicial justices. It is very likely the court will not have a sufficient complement of judicial justices to meet the workloads of the Judicial Justice Division over the next four years unless steps are taken immediately to improve recruitment. This factor strongly militates in favour of significant salary increases for judicial justices.
- Whether the changes in workload arising from Bill S-4's amendment of the Criminal Code are viewed as a jurisdictional change (Factor 2) or as "another relevant factor" under section 5(5.2), these changes militate in favour of increases to judicial justice compensation. The evidence clearly shows an impact to judicial justice workload and a current problem in finding judicial justices to do this work—a problem that is likely to worsen over time.
- Factor 3 shows BC judicial justice salaries are well below the average of those in other provinces, and over $30,000 below BC's closest comparators, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario. This factor supports significant salary increases.
- Factor 4 supports an increase in compensation for judicial justices. The government has taken a relatively generous approach to compensation of the public sector and has shown a willingness to increase wages when needed to address recruitment and retention problems for others paid from the public purse.
- Factor 5 supports an increase in compensation for judicial justices. The economy is solid and resilient. While there is a forecasted economic slowdown that indicates some moderation in salaries for the next fiscal year, the overall and longer-term outlook for the BC economy is one of strength.

- Factor 6 supports an increase in judicial justices' salaries. The financial position of government is strong and arguably the best in Canada. British Columbia is well-positioned financially through its budgetary prudence to remain in a strong position over the next four years.

Considered together, these factors overwhelmingly support the need for increased compensation for judicial justices. The staffing impact of federal Bill S-4—whether considered under Factor 2 or as another relevant factor under section 5(5.2) of the Act—combined with the crisis in recruiting new judicial justices and the impending retirements over the next four years suggest that a significant bump in judicial justice salary must occur immediately.

The current salary is not reasonable when compared with that of other judicial justices in Canada; it is currently $30,000 below the average of the closest comparators. In light of British Columbia's healthy economy and its strong financial position, BC judicial justices should be paid at least the average of their Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario counterparts. And, in our view, given the historic underpayment of these judicial officers and the crisis in recruitment that has ensued, a salary slightly above the average of those comparators is warranted. Our recommendation will put judicial justices' salary at approximately 49% of our salary recommendation for a Provincial Court judge, which is an improvement over the current 46%, but still nowhere near the historical highs. A pay correction to address the unreasonably low pay of BC judicial justices also aligns with the government's current approach to sharing the success of British Columbia's strong financial position with others paid from public funds.

While we agree with the JJA that a significant correction to judicial justice salaries is required, we recommend a slightly lesser amount than what the JJA proposed as sufficient to meet the goal of reasonable compensation. We heard the Government's submission that its proposed salaries take into account the need to remain economically and fiscally prudent, given the anticipated short-term decline and weakening of the economic and financial position that is reflected in Budget 2023. Still, we find the amounts proposed by the Government to be unreasonable given our assessment of all the factors discussed above.

Rather that dividing the corrective increase over two years, as we have recommended for judges, we conclude that the bulk of the salary correction needs to come in the first year of our mandate. The judicial justice division could soon be on life support if recruitment efforts continue to fail, and we think that a delay is too risky. We recommend the judicial justices receive a significant increase as of April 1, 2023. Recognizing that both the JJA and the Government told us they prefer the certainty of defined dollar amounts over increases linked to increases in CPI, we have recommended a fixed increase of $5,000 in each of the following years of our mandate.

Our salary recommendation will likely put BC judicial justices near the national average, and somewhere in the range of judicial justices in Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario.

6 Recommendations on Other Aspects of Judicial Compensation

6.1 Salary Differentials for Administrative Positions

RECOMMENDATION: Administrative judges should continue to receive the following percentages of a puisne judge's salary: Chief Judge 112%; Associate Chief Judges 108%; and Regional Administrative Judges 106%. Administrative Judicial Justices should receive 106% of judicial justice compensation.

We agree with the main participants that the current salary differentials for administrative positions within the court should remain as follows: the Chief Judge (112% of puisne judge), Associate Chief Judges (108% of puisne judge), Regional Administrative Judges (106% of puisne judge), and Administrative Judicial Justices (106% of judicial justice compensation). The higher compensation reflects the added responsibilities and workload that accompany these roles. Agreement among the participants indicates that the current salary differentials are reasonable and do not need to be changed.

6.2 Pensions for Provincial Court Judges

Accrual Rate

RECOMMENDATION: The 3% accrual rate for judge's pensions should be maintained.

Both the PCJA and the Government agree that the current accrual rate for judges' pensions should be maintained at 3%.

The only information before us about judicial pensions came from André Sauvé, Consulting Actuary, who prepared a report for the PCJA. His report compared the pension arrangements of the federal courts and provincial courts in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Ontario. Aside from age-related accrual rate adjustments in Saskatchewan, both Alberta's and Saskatchewan's pension plans have 3% accrual rates. The Ontario and federal pensions have no fixed annual accrual rates; pension amounts in Ontario and for federally appointed judges use different formulas.[264] Overall, Mr. Sauvé concluded that:

[264] Comparative Analysis of Judicial Pension Plans, Prepared by Andre Sauvé, December 2022, PCJA BD, Tab 3, p.2.

> The compensation value of the judicial pension arrangement in British Columbia is estimated to be 43.1% of salary compared to an average compensation value of 54.6% for the other four jurisdictions for a difference of 11.5% of salary.[265]

This evidence shows the pension of BC's Provincial Court judges to be less valuable than the pensions of other courts. Still, the PCJA and the government have not made any arguments about changes to the judge's pension arrangement. Instead, the PCJA uses this difference in pension value between jurisdictions to argue that their salary proposal is "modest" when considered in the context of the "combined value of both the salary and pension paid to judges in BC and the comparator jurisdictions."[266]

Given the agreement of the PCJA and the Government to maintain the current 3% accrual rate, as well as the fact that it is the same rate as in Alberta and Saskatchewan, we recommend maintaining the 3% accrual rate for judges' pensions.

Non-judicial Pensions

RECOMMENDATION: The Judicial Compensation Act should be amended to align the non-judicial pensionable service provisions with the Public Service Pension Plan rule changes made in 2018 and 2022, as detailed in Appendix F, in respect of the following:

i. the benefit accrual rates for service between April 1, 2018-March 31, 2022, and after April 1, 2022;

ii. the past service benefit enhancement and the bridge benefit for the period of April 1, 2006-March 31, 2018 and after April 1, 2018; and

iii. the early retirement factor for non-judicial service earned on or after April 1, 2018.

Some Provincial Court judges earned pensionable service in the Public Sector Pension Plan ("PSPP") as public servants prior to appointment to the bench. However, once an individual is appointed to the bench, both the judicial and the "non-judicial" portions of their pension are governed by Part 3 of the Judicial Compensation Act. Historically, many aspects of the non-judicial pension benefit provisions under the Act were aligned with the PSPP rules; however, amendments to the PSPP rules in April 2018 and April 2022 have brought them out of alignment. The result is "a divergence between non-judicial pension benefits earned while working as a regular member of the PSPP … and what would ultimately be received by a judge in respect of the non-judicial component of their pension upon retirement from the bench."[267]

---

[265] Ibid., p.5.

[266] Main Submission of PCJA, para. 287

[267] Joint Submission on Non-Judicial Pensions, para. 4.

To correct this divergence, the Government and the PCJA, with the support of the Chief Judge, jointly proposed that we make the following recommendation:

> That the Act be amended to align the non-judicial pensionable service provisions with the Public Service Pension Plan rule changes made in 2018 and 2022, as detailed in the attachment to the joint proposal, in respect of the following:
>
> i. the benefit accrual rates for service between April 1, 2018-March 31, 2022, and after April 1, 2022;
>
> ii. the past service benefit enhancement and the bridge benefit for the period of April 1, 2006-March 31, 2018 and after April 1, 2018; and
>
> iii. the early retirement factor for non-judicial service earned on or after April 1, 2018.

The attachment to the joint proposal is found in Appendix F to this report. The participants advise us that the proposed recommendation would be cost neutral for both the PSPP and for the judges to which the change would apply.[268]

Given that all affected participants support this proposed recommendation, and that it is cost neutral to them, we agree to make this recommendation.

6.3 Benefits

Enhancements to the Flexible Benefits for Judges and Full-time Judicial Justices

> RECOMMENDATION: Effective January 1, 2024, Provincial Court judges should receive the enhancements to the flexible benefits program that were offered to excluded public sector employees on January 1, 2023. Future enhancements to the flexible benefits plan for excluded employees and appointees should be automatically implemented for the Provincial Court judges, with the judiciary having recourse to seek changes through future judicial compensation commissions.

The Government notes that modest enhancements were made to the flexible benefits plan for public sector excluded employees on January 1, 2023. The Government suggests that these benefits could be made available for judges and full-time judicial justices. The Government also proposes that "future enhancements to the flexible benefits plan for excluded employees and appointees be automatically implemented for the judiciary." This would not preclude the judiciary from seeking other changes to the flexible benefits plan through future commission processes, but it would ensure that there is no lag time for the judiciary to access benefit enhancements to which other excluded employees become entitled.[269] Examples of the enhancements are an increase in the [268] Joint Submission on Non-Judicial Pensions, para. 7.

[269] Reply Submission of Government, paras. 59-60; JBD, Vol 2, Tab 46, p. 4 and Appendix "A".

annual maximum for counselling services from $500 to $750, and an increase in the employee basic life insurance from $80,000 to $100,000.[270]

The PCJA supports these changes.[271]

The JJA "does not wish for there to be any changes to its flexible benefits" and does not agree with the changes proposed by government.[272] The JJA opposes the changes based on its understanding that the changes include an annual cap on physiotherapy treatments, which are currently unlimited. The JJA says unlimited physiotherapy treatments are "a valuable benefit given the rigors of the job including the many hours spent at a desk, using a computer and looking at a screen."[273]

Despite the possible cap on physiotherapy treatments, overall, these changes or "enhancements" seem reasonable and are in line with the benefits provided to public sector excluded employees. However, we also note that there are only five full-time judicial justices who are affected by changes to the flexible benefits plans, some of whom may retire during this commission cycle, and that the JJA opposes these changes.

We recommend that, effective January 1, 2024, Provincial Court judges receive the enhancements to the flexible benefits program that were offered to excluded public sector employees on January 1, 2023, and that future enhancements to the flexible benefits plan for excluded employees and appointees be automatically implemented for Provincial Court Judges. We make no recommendation in respect of full-time judicial justices.

Part-time Judicial Justices Per Diem in Lieu of Benefits

RECOMMENDATION: The amount in lieu of benefits added to the per diem pay for part-time judicial justices should be increased from 20% to 22%.

Part-time judicial justices do not receive any benefits as part of their compensation. They currently receive an additional 20% in lieu of benefits, calculated on the amount of a full-time judicial justice salary divided by 207 days. For example, based on the current full-time judicial salary, the amount in lieu of benefits added to the part-time per diem rate would be as follows: ($133,500/207) x 20% = 128.98. The JJA initially sought to increase the percentage amount to 25.4% as this is the government "charge-back" rate for budgeting the cost of benefits for full-time employees, including full-time judicial justices.[274]

The Government proposed an increase in the percentage amount in lieu of benefits to 22%, on the basis that the 25.4% chargeback rate includes a component for administration of the benefits

[270] JBD, Vol. 2, Tab 46, Appendix "A".

[271] TR February 16, 2023, Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 97, ll. 15-20.

[272] TR February 16, 2023, Mr. Bernstein for JJA, p. 109, ll. 10-17.

[273] Supplemental Submission of JJA, paras. 14-15. Note that the Submission uses the words "physical therapy", but the flexible benefits plan provides for "physiotherapy": JBD, Vol. 2, Tab 39, p. 1, Column for Option 3.

[274] Main Submission of JJA, paras. 150- 155.

regime. The Government provided a breakdown of the value of benefits paid for by government that actually go to a full-time judicial justice (expressed in terms of a percentage of full-time salary) as follows: pension contributions 15.9%; ETA/MSP 1.95%; health and dental benefits 3.08%; LTD 1.10%. These total 21.93%, which the Government rounded up to 22%.[275] After considering this information, the JJA agreed that an increase in the percentage amount in lieu of benefits to 22% would be appropriate.[276]

We agree with the participants and recommend that the percentage amount added in lieu of benefits to the per diem for part-time judicial justices be increased to 22%. This increase is needed to keep the compensation of part-time judicial justices in line with that of their full-time colleagues.

Chief Judge's Request for Increased Base Budget Funding to the Court to Cover Long-term Disability Plan Costs

The 2022 JCC makes no recommendation concerning funding to the court for long-term disability plan costs for judges and full-time judicial justices.

The Chief Judge sought a recommendation from us that government's base budget funding to the Court be increased by $1,000,000 per fiscal year to cover the cost for long-term disability benefits for judges and full-time judicial justices, with the court having access to contingency funds should the cost exceed $1,000,000.[277]

In response, the Government says it has chosen to fund some of these expenditures associated with the plan through contingencies rather than an increase in base budget funding. Instead of accessing the available contingency funds, since 2020-21, the Office of the Chief Judge has been able to absorb the costs of the long-term disability plan that exceed the base budget amount. There has been no shortfall, and the Office of the Chief Judge has "not demonstrated any need to access the available contingencies earmarked for long-term disability expenditures for the last three fiscal years."[278] In these circumstances the Government requests the commission refrain from making any recommendation.[279]

We agree with the Government that there is no need for any recommendation on this issue. Funds appear to be available to the Office of the Chief Judge if necessary to make up any shortfall resulting from the costs of the long-term disability program.

[275] TR February 15, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 220, ll. 1-23; Exhibit 12.

[276] Supplemental Submission of JJA, para. 12.

[277] Submission of Chief Judge, paras. 3 and 183.

[278] Reply Submission of Government, para. 137.

[279] Reply Submission of Government, paras. 132-138.

6.4 Shift Premiums for Judicial Justices

RECOMMENDATON: As set out in Appendix G, new holidays should be added to the list of the holidays attracting a $245 shift premium, the shift premium for Christmas Day should be increased by $75, a weekend shift premium of $75 should be implemented and a court closure day shift premium of $75 should be implemented.

Judicial justices currently receive a $245 shift premium for taking shifts on certain holidays. The JJA asked that additional holidays be added to the list that attract the $245 shift premium.[280] The JJA also asked for the Christmas Day shift premium to be increased by $75, noting that judges have had to fill Christmas Day shifts for the last four years.[281] The JJA also sought to establish a weekend premium of $75, noting that weekend shifts are often difficult to fill.[282] As well, the JJA asked for a "court closure" premium of $75 for shifts that fall on a court closure day (such as where a court closure occurs on a weekday to make up for a holiday that falls on a weekend).[283]

The Government supports adding additional holidays to the list that attracts the $245 shift premium, and the increased premium for Christmas Day.[284] The Government also supports implementing a weekend shift premium to address the evidence of staffing challenges at the Justice Centre. However, the Government proposes that a $25 premium would be "proportionate to weekend shift premiums paid elsewhere in the public sector."[285] Similarly, for court closure days, the Government supports a $25 premium.[286]

The JJA proposes specific language to describe the shift premiums, to avoid uncertainty over whether a shift attracts a premium and what that premium should be. The Government agrees with all the language proposed, except for the amount of the weekend and court closure premiums, which it submits should be $25.[287] The proposed language is set out in Appendix G.

We agree with both the JJA and the Government that adding the days proposed to the list of holidays attracting a $245 premium, and increasing the premium for Christmas Day, will enhance the court's capacity to staff shifts on these holidays. We also agree with the language proposed to describe the shift premiums.

With respect to weekends and court closure days, the evidence shows Provincial Court judges staffing shifts at the Justice Centre, particularly on weekends. (While we do not have specific information before us concerning court closure days, it is logical to treat them similarly to weekend

[280] Main Submission of JJA, para. 167.

[281] Main Submission of JJA, para. 168-169.

[282] Main Submission of JJA, paras. 173, 93.

[283] Supplementary Submission of JJA, para. 18.

[284] Reply Submission of Government, para. 71; Exhibit 13.

[285] Reply Submission of Government, para. 72.

[286] Exhibit 13.

[287] Supplemental Submission of JJA, paras. 19-21; Exhibit 13.

days as they usually result in a "long weekend.") It is not clear to us whether either a $25 or a $75 shift premium will be sufficient to address the staffing problem; neither may be enough on their own. More judicial justices are required in the staffing pool, which our salary recommendation above is intended to address. Still, in the shorter term, given the much greater cost of having a Provincial Court judge fill a vacant weekend shift, adding a $75 premium to encourage the current judicial justices to pick up these shifts seems reasonable, and that is what we recommend.

6.5 Overhead Amount for Judicial Justices

RECOMMENDATION: The overhead amount added to the per diem pay for part-time judicial justices should be increased from $75 to $100.

Since 2007, part-time judicial justices receive $75 per shift to account for overhead costs. This amount has not been increased in over 15 years. The JJA sought an increase of this amount to $100 per shift, arguing that it is required to keep up with inflation, and to attract highly qualified applicants to the judicial justice position.[288] The Government supports this increase as "logical" given the increase in overhead costs that judicial justices would have incurred since 2007.[289]

We agree it is time to increase the overhead amount for part-time judicial justices to $100 per shift in order to maintain the purchasing power intended when the overhead amount was implemented in 2007. We so recommend.

6.6 Professional Development Allowance

RECOMMENDATION: For the next four fiscal years, the professional development allowance for judges should remain at $4,500 per year, and the professional development allowance for judicial justices should remain at $3,250 per year.

The PCJA requests no changes to the judges' professional development allowance ("PDA") and the Government agrees that no change is necessary. As there is no evidence before us that an increase (or decrease) is required, we recommend this amount remain the same ($4500 per year) for the next four fiscal years.

The JJA seeks an increase in judicial justices' PDA from $3,250 to $4,500 to be at parity with the judges. It also seeks to increase the portion of a judicial justice's PDA that can be used for "Expenses Reasonably Incurred in the Execution of the Office of a Judicial Justice and Approved Other Expenses" from the current $1,500 to $2,500. The JJA says judicial education is important and that the cost of attending conferences that are popular with judicial justices exceeds the current budget.[290]

---

[288] Main Submission of JJA, paras. 157-160.

[289] Reply Submission of Government, para. 65.

[290] TR February 15, 2023, Mr. Bernstein for JJA, p. 124, ll. 3-15, l. 18 to p. 126, l. 17.

The Government does not support either of these proposed changes. It says no evidence demonstrates that recent increases in the PDA budget for judicial justices (implemented April 1, 2020) are ineffective.[291] The Government understands that PDA spending since 2020 has likely been impacted by the pandemic and is therefore not a good measure of need. However, judicial justices' PDA spending for the 2019-20 fiscal year—which occurred mostly prior to the pandemic—was less than one third of the total PDA budget available.[292] As well, during the 2019-20 fiscal year, the per justice PDA was lower at only $2,500. While four justices exceeded that limit, as can be seen by the global numbers, overall, judicial justices only spent half the annual allotment in that year.[293]

On this evidence, we decline to recommend an adjustment to the PDA of judicial justices at this time.

6.7 Travel Allowance

RECOMMENDATION: The current travel allowance or per diems for judges and judicial justices should be maintained.

Neither the PCJA or the JJA seek changes to the current travel reimbursement and the Government asks that the current travel per diems be maintained.[294] Judges and judicial justices both fall within government's "group 4" expense category, meaning they receive the same travel per diems as Members of the Legislative Assembly, which is the highest level.[295] As there is no evidence before us showing a need to increase (or decrease) current travel allowances, we agree with the parties that current travel per diems, whereby judges and judicial justices receive the same travel per diems as Members of the Legislative Assembly, should be maintained.

[291] Reply Submission of Government, para. 80.

[292] Judicial justices spent only $39,722 of the available $124,330, comprised of the 2019-20 allowance of $78,958 and $45,372 carried over from the previous year: Exhibit 10.

[293] Exhibit 10.

[294] The JJA stated that "To the extent that changes are made, the JJABC seeks the same policy as Provincial Court Judges" though it did not ask for any changes be made: Main Submission of JJA, para. 23(c).

[295] TR February 15, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 193, ll. 1-9.

7 Recommendations on Interest and Costs

7.1 Interest on any Retroactive Salary Adjustments

RECOMMENDATON: For retroactive salary increases, the Government should pay judges or judicial justices pre-judgment interest from April 1, 2023 to the date on which the increase is established and post-judgment interest thereafter until payment is made.

In respect of any retroactive salary increases that occur after April 1, 2023, both the PCJA and the JJA seek pre-judgment interest for judges and judicial justices from April 1, 2023 to the date on which the increase is established, and then post-judgment interest thereafter until the payments are made. The Government does not oppose these interest requests. In our view, interest on retroactive payments will ensure that judges and judicial justices receive the full benefit of any salary adjustments that are delayed. The use of the pre-judgment and post-judgement rates is appropriate for this purpose.

7.2 Costs of Participation in Commission Proceedings

RECOMMENDATION: The Government should, by enacting a regulation pursuant to section 7.1(3) of the Judicial Compensation Act*, reimburse 100% of the reasonable costs and disbursements, including expert costs, of the PCJA and JJA for their participation in the 2022 commission process.

Both the PCJA and JJA ask us to recommend that the Government pay 100% of their reasonable legal fees and disbursements, including—for the PCJA—100% of the cost of its expert evidence.[296] The JJA asks, in the alternative, for a recommendation for "a significant increase to the ceiling of reimbursed costs" by way of a regulation or amendment to the Act.[297] The Government's position is that the Commission should leave costs to be dealt with under section 7.1 of the Act.

In the late afternoon of March 30, 2023, the day before we delivered our Preliminary Report, we were advised that the Lieutenant Governor in Council had increased the maximum amounts for participation costs for the Provincial Court Judges' Association and the Judicial Justices' Association. Order in Council No. 194[298] sets higher amounts for the purposes of section 7.1(2) of [296] Main Submission of PCJA, para. 355; Main Submission of JJA, para. 23(d).

[297] Main Submission of JJA, para. 23(d).

[298] B.C. Reg. 83/2023, approved and ordered on March 30, 2023.

the Judicial Compensation Act. Pursuant to that revision, the legislation effectively provides as follows:

> 7.1 (1) Subject to subsection (2), the government may pay out of the consolidated revenue fund the reasonable costs, incurred by the Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia and the Judicial Justices Association of British Columbia, of participating in the commission.
>
> (2) The maximum amount that may be paid under subsection (1), which maximum amount applies separately to the Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia and the Judicial Justices Association of British Columbia, is as follows:
>
> (a) the first $40 000in costs; [299]
>
> (b) 85% of the costs over $40 000 but under $150 000.[300]
>
> (3) Despite subsections (1) and (2), the Lieutenant Governor in Council may, by regulation, set higher amounts for the purposes of subsection (2).

The JJA tells us its anticipated total legal costs for this process will be approximately $80,000 (including taxes), which is an increase of about $20,000 over the 2019 JCC. It attributes most of the increase to a substantial increase in pre-hearing discussions and preparations.[301] We note the small number of members in the JJA, meaning that it likely has very limited resources.[302] If the JJA were responsible for one third of its legal costs over $30,000, that could impose a $500 to $1000 burden on each individual member—up to 0.7% of a current full-time judicial justice salary.

The PCJA tells us its costs will be approximately $90,000 for legal fees, and disbursements including expert reports, but not including junior counsel's attendance at the hearings. In 2019, the total costs were about $85,000.[303] The PCJA attributes the increase in fees this year to higher expert fees.[304] While the PCJA has a larger pool of potential members with higher salaries than the JJA, it argues it is "manifestly unfair that the judiciary should be burdened by personally funding its participation in the process." In contrast, it says the Government "uses any number of civil servants paid from the public purse and who are presumably capable of utilizing Government resources as they see fit in order to advance the Government's position."[305]

The Government submits the costs formula under the Act has not been found unconstitutional and remains good law.[306] We make no comment here on the constitutionality of those provisions. We speak instead to their effect on the 2022 Commission process.

---

[299] Previously, $30,000.

[300] Previously, two-thirds of the costs over $30,000 but under $150,000.

[301] Supplementary Submission of JJA, para. 29.

[302] Main Submission of JJA, para. 188.

[303] Supplemental Submission of PCJA, para. 23.

[304] Supplemental Submission of PCJA, para. 23.

[305] Main Submission of PCJA, para. 385.

[306] Costs Submission of Government, para. 7.

The Government says the Commission should not make any recommendations on costs, arguing that costs do not fall within the broad jurisdiction of the Commission because costs are not "remuneration, allowances and benefits" of judges and judicial justices and do not "implicate" remuneration, allowances or benefits.[307] The Government refers to a decision of Chief Justice Hinkson, in a judicial review of the Government's response to the 2016 JCC. He upheld the validity of the Government's rejection of the 2016 JCC's decision on costs, and his decision was not appealed.[308] The Government says, consistent with that decision, it may be open to a commission to make a recommendation on costs only "where it is necessary to ensure the approach to costs is 'fair, equitable and reasonable'."[309] The Government says, "A recommendation to alter a legislated norm cannot be justified on the basis of matters the Legislature must have understood at the time the norm was established. Instead, a Commission's recommendation to alter such a norm can only be justified on the basis of exceptional circumstances or a significant evolution in the Commission process."[310] It submits the disparity of resources between the government and the judicial officers, the importance of judicial officer participation in the process, and the potential impact of inflation were all known to the Legislature and therefore do not justify departure from the statutory norm.[311]

The PCJA submits that the legislation sets out no requirement for "exceptional circumstances" before a commission may make recommendations respecting costs.[312] It says section 5(1) of the Act gives a commission broad jurisdiction to report on "all matters respecting the remuneration, allowances and benefits of judges." The PCJA says that the costs of participation in the hearings falls within this broad jurisdiction.[313] Further, it says, "There is no principled difference between recommendations made in the face of the statutory provisions concerning costs and a myriad of other issues that the commissions must consider and which may also require legislative change."[314] Indeed, in these proceedings, the Government and the PCJA have jointly asked us to recommend an amendment to the Act concerning non-judicial pensions. Further, as the PCJA points out, it is difficult to imagine a bar to the commission recommending that government, by regulation, set higher amounts than those set out in the Act, as such regulations are expressly contemplated in section 7.1(3) of the Act.[315]

We agree with the PCJA that we have jurisdiction to make a recommendation on costs.

First, while reimbursement for the cost of participating in a commission may not be "remuneration, allowances and benefits of judges and judicial justices" per se, it is "a matter respecting remuneration, allowances and benefits." Participation in the commission process is the only way

---

[307] TR March 10, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 88, ll. 17-20.

[308] Costs Submission of Government, para. 9; Provincial Court Judges' Association v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2020 BCSC 1264.

[309] Costs Submission of Government, para. 18.

[310] Costs Submission of Government, para. 19.

[311] Costs Submission of Government, para. 12.

[312] Supplemental Submission of PCJA, para. 14.

[313] Main Submission of PCJA, paras. 356-357.

[314] Supplemental Submission of PCJA, para. 15.

[315] Supplemental Submission of PCJA, para. 18.

for judicial officers to seek changes to their compensation. Accordingly, the costs of that participation are very much a matter respecting remuneration.

Second, nothing in Chief Justice Hinkson's decision prohibits us from making recommendations concerning costs; his ruling speaks to the rationality of the government's rejection of the 2016 JJC's recommendation on costs, not to the ability of a commission to make such a recommendation. While Chief Justice Hinkson noted departures from the "legislative norm" were for the legislative branch of government to consider, not the judiciary upon judicial review, he did not suggest that commissions cannot make recommendations that depart from the legislative norm.[316] He noted that the statutory formula may be overridden by the government through regulation. In our view, that is most likely to happen following a recommendation from a judicial compensation commission.

Third, there is no legislated requirement for exceptional circumstances to exist before a commission may make a recommendation on the costs of participation in the commission process. The legislature may establish a statutory formula for costs (as it has in BC since 2015), the government may agree to pay the participatory costs of the judiciary (as it did historically in BC), or the commission may determine costs. The Supreme Court of Canada has said that, irrespective of the approach to the payment of costs, "it should be fair, equitable and reasonable."[317] If the statutory costs formula set out in section 7.1 of the Act results in an approach to the payment of costs that is not fair, equitable and reasonable, that is a "matter respecting remuneration" upon which this Commission may make recommendations. And, in assessing what is fair, equitable and reasonable, this Commission is not limited to the consideration of matters that could not have been known to the legislature at the time it enacted section 7.1. If it were so limited, the legislature could, knowingly, enact an unfair, inequitable, and unreasonable approach to costs without any recourse by the judicial officers who must engage through the commission process on matters respecting their remuneration.

The question for us is whether the application of the section 7.1 formula for costs in the circumstances of the 2022 JCC constitutes an approach to costs that is fair, equitable and reasonable.

As described in the introduction to this report, this Commission exists in fulfilment of a constitutional imperative. Judges and judicial justices alike must participate in this process to seek any changes to their compensation. They may not negotiate with the other branches of government over their compensation.[318] In our hearings, counsel for the JJA told us, "the current allowance for legal fees is insufficient to cover the costs of the association's participation" such that "judicial justices carry some of the costs themselves."[319] He said that the "concern about legal fees "really inhibits participation in this constitutionally mandated process,"[320] and that his clients must think about how much it is going to cost them personally to participate, and consequently, how much [316] Provincial Court Judges' Association v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2020 BCSC 1264, at para. 99.

[317] R. v. Campbell, [1999] 2 SCR 956, para. 5.

[318] PEI Reference, paras. 186 to 191.

[319] TR February 15, 2023, Mr. Bernstein for JJA, p. 128, ll. 9-13.

[320] TR February 15, 2023, Mr. Bernstein for JJA, p. 129, ll. 14-21.

time he can spend in preparing for the hearing.[321] This indicates to us a significant problem with the current costs formula. It creates a deterrent to the level of participation by judges and judicial justices that is reasonably necessary for this Commission to complete its mandate.

We agree with the PCJA that the approach to costs is not equitable. While the Government has resources for this process paid by the taxpayer, the judiciary must pay any amount over the statutory limits out of their own pockets. Further, the statutory formula does not treat different members of the judiciary equitably in that the financial burden on individual judicial justices to participate in the commission process is much greater than the burden on individual judges.

The costs approach is not fair. Section 7.1 does not account for inflation. Thus, with each passing commission cycle, it compensates the JJA and the PCJA less for their participation. We heard from the JJA that, based on inflation alone, the (former) $30,000 amount, for full reimbursement, would need to be increased to $36,000 to cover the same amount of participation costs.[322]

Most importantly, the costs approach is not reasonable. Section 7.1(1) of the Act speaks to government paying the "reasonable costs" of the PCJA's and the JJA's participation in the commission. But the maximum amounts set in subsection (2) are unreasonably low when considered against the amount of work involved in the commission process and the information required by the Commission to complete its mandate.

As noted by the PCJA, the Act does not prescribe a process for the commission.[323] The commission is not a commission of inquiry with resources to retain counsel or other staff to produce evidence; that work is left to the participants. We were told that the amount of work has increased over the last three commissions since section 7.1 came into force, particularly in relation to document production and preparation for the commission hearings.[324] The commission process entails—as described by the PCJA—"multiple days of hearings, expert evidence, experts being recalled and so on and a sufficiently complex process that the government sees fit that it needs to have two counsel presents [sic]."[325] We note that the PCJA also had two counsel present at the hearings, and the JJA had a second counsel appear at one of the virtual hearings. The point is: significant work was required of all the main participants.

To be clear, the commission needs the work of the PCJA, the JJA, and the Government to enable it to do its job. All three of these participants need to be adequately funded. The commission also needs expert evidence, tested through well-informed cross-examination where necessary. The costs of leading, and responding to, expert evidence need to be adequately funded.

We have considered whether the March 30, 2023 change to the formula affects our recommendation on costs or the rationale for it.

---

[321] TR February 15, 2023, Mr. Bernstein for JJA, p. 130 l. 17 to p. 131, l. 6.

[322] Main Submission of JJA, para. 185.

[323] Judicial Compensation Act, s. 5(6); TR March 10, 2023, Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 47, ll. 14-21.

[324] TR March 10, 2023, Mr. Bernstein for JJA, p. 53, l. 10 to p. 54, l. 3; Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 47, l. 21 to p. 48, l.3.

[325] TR March 10, 2023, Ms. Latimer for PCJA, p. 47, l. 24 to p. 48, l. 3.

While the higher amount of $40,000 in section 7.1(2)(a) does remedy the negative inflationary impact that we note in our discussion (above) concerning the former $30,000 amount for full reimbursement, nothing in the revised amounts in OIC No. 194 detracts from our core reasons for recommending that the Government should reimburse 100% of the reasonable costs and disbursements, including expert costs, of the PCJA and the JJA for participation in the 2022 commission process.

We have also considered whether the April 3, 2023 judgment by The Honourable Justice Sharma on judicial review of the legislative response to the 2019 JCC[326] requires us to revisit our analysis of the costs issue. We have concluded that it does not; the approach taken by the Court there is consistent with the one we have taken here in our Report.

In summary, the current statutory formula for costs does not lead to a fair, equitable or reasonable result in the context of the 2022 JCC. The result places financial burdens on individual judicial officers. The statutory formula also does not provide for inflationary increases that have occurred since the legislation was passed. Importantly, the current limits on reimbursement deter reasonably full participation in this constitutionally-mandated process.

Consequently, we recommend that Government enact a regulation pursuant to section 7.1(3) to reimburse 100% of the reasonable costs and disbursements of the PCJA and JJA for their participation in the 2022 Commission. If there is controversy about the reasonableness of the costs and disbursements claimed, the participants can come back to us through written submissions or at a hearing.

[326] Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2023 BCSC 520.

8 Confidence in the Commission Process

We heard from participants about their levels of confidence in this process. We have also reflected on the judicial compensation process and its history in British Columbia. We hope these comments prove useful to future commissions and to the government in considering our recommendations.

The Recent History of Judicial Compensation Processes

As we noted in our salary recommendations above, salary comprises the largest component of judicial compensation. It has also proven to be the most contentious. The Government provided useful tables summarizing the salary recommendations, responses of the government, ensuing litigation, and outcomes of the last four commissions as shown below:[327]

Year	JCC recommendations (Provincial Court Judges)	Government (Govt) Initial Response	Further Developments
2010	• 2011/12: 0% • 2012/13: 0% • 2013/14: cumulative CPI over prior 3 years	• Rejected salary (and pension) • Substituted 0% salary increase (consistent with net-zero public sector mandate)	• Response challenged • BCSC set aside initial response; remitted back • Second response substituted 1.5% increase for 2013/14 • Second response set aside by BCCA and Govt ordered to accept 2010 JCC recommendations, resulting in 2013/14 salary of $242,464
2013	• 2014/15: $241,500 • 2015/16: $245,122 • 2016/17: $250,024 As 2010 litigation still outstanding, JCC used	• Rejected salary (and pension) • Substituted: 2014/15: $236,950 2015/15: $240,504 2016/17: $244,112	• Response challenged • BCSC set aside initial response; remitted back

[327] These tables are recreated from Main Submission of Government, paras. 66 and 72. We corrected typographic errors to the dates in the middle column of the 2016 rows. See also "Judicial Compensation Commissions 2010 to 2019 – Summary of Submissions and Results," JBD, Vol. 1, Tab 17.

Year	JCC recommendations (Provincial Court Judges)	Government (Govt) Initial Response	Further Developments
	Govt's second response as starting point ($234,605)		• Govt appealed; Judges cross-appealed • BCCA dismissed appeal; ordered Govt to reconsider response without attributing fault to any party or the legislature (as outcome of 2010 litigation changed the starting point) • Second response not challenged; set at: 2014/15: $244,889 2015/16: $248,562 2016/17: $252,290
2016	• 2017/18: $273,000 • 2018/19: $277,095 • 2019/20: $281,251 • 100% of reasonable costs	• Rejected salary (and costs) • Substituted: 2017/18: $262,000 2018/19: $266,000 2019/20: $270,000	• Response challenged • BCSC set aside initial response on salaries but upheld rejection of costs; remitted back • Govt appealed on salaries • BCCA allowed appeal, upholding Govt's initial response
2019	• 2020/21: $287,000 • 2021/22: $297,000 • 2021/23: $307,000 • Regulation be enacted to permit 100% of reasonable costs	• Rejected salary (and costs) • Substituted: 2020/21: $276,000 2021/22: $282,250 2022/23: $288,500	• Response challenged • Litigation ongoing – petition argued September 2022 and decision reserved

Year	JCC recommendations (Judicial Justices)	Government (Govt) Initial Response	Further Developments
2010	• 2011/12: 0% • 2012/13: 0% • 2013/14: 8% ($107,487)	• Rejected salary and per diem • Substituted 0% salary increase (consistent with	• Response to 2010 and 2013 challenged • Govt later agreed to place motion

Year	JCC recommendations (Judicial Justices)	Government (Govt) Initial Response	Further Developments
	• Change to per diem formula (FT salary/219 days + 24.5% in lieu of benefits +$80 overhead)	net-zero public sector mandate)	before legislature to increase salary by 4.9% from previous fiscal • Legislature adopted motion in July 2016, resulting in 2013/14 salary of $104,402 • Court case discontinued
2013	• 2014/15: $104,501 • 2015/16: $106,591 • 2016/17: $108,723 • Change to per diem formula (change number of days to 207 to account for chambers days allowed to FT JJs)	• Rejected salary; accepted per diem change • Substituted: 2014/15: $101,018 2015/16: $103,038 2016/17: $105,099	• Resulting motion of legislature in July 2016; salaries set at: 2014/15: $105,968 2015/16: $108,087 2015/17: $110,249
2016	• 2017/18: $125,000 • 2018/19: $126,875 • 2019/20: $128,778 • 100% of reasonable costs	• Rejected salary (and costs) • Substituted: 2017/18: $118,000 2018/19: $120,000 2019/20: $122,000	• Salaries implemented per Govt response • Costs paid per statutory formula
2019	• 2020/21: $138,000 • 2021/22: $142,000 • 2022/23: $146,000 • Regulation be enacted to permit 100% of reasonable costs	• Rejected salary (and costs) • Substituted: 2020/21: $125,750 2021/22: $129,500 2022/23: $133,500	• Salaries implemented per Govt response • Costs paid per statutory formula

These tables show the repeated history of commissions making salary recommendations, governments rejecting those recommendations, and the PCJA petitioning the court for judicial review, followed by one or more of the parties appealing the judgment to the Court of Appeal, occasionally resulting in an amended response and further litigation.

Disillusionment with the Commission Process

The PCJA set out the ideal view of judicial compensation commissions in its submissions, stating that their very existence attracts qualified applicants to the court because a commission provides candidates with the "legitimate expectation that compensation will be regularly, meaningfully, and effectively reviewed, and adjusted in good faith." This expectation, the PCJA says, reduces the "risk that only those lawyers whose current level of compensation is less than that of a judge will be attracted [to applying for the position]."[328] Further, the existence of a commission and the prospect of increases in compensation that at least keep pace with inflation may explain why judges remain as judges after appointment.[329]

In the oral submissions, we heard a disheartened view of the actual commission process over time. Counsel for the JJA described its members' strong feelings of disillusion.[330] This is perhaps unsurprising, given the history set out above. Repeatedly, judges and judicial justices have participated in time-consuming processes in good faith before independent commissions. The commissions' resulting recommendations for salary increases are then rejected by the government. For the last four commission cycles, the government's rejection of the salary recommendations has led to the judges seeking judicial review of those decisions. The Court of Appeal commented in 2021 that while the commission process in British Columbia "has avoided the unseemly involvement of judges of the British Columbia Provincial Court in the negotiation of their remuneration, it has done so at the cost of constant litigation."[331] (It appears that judicial justices have not been involved in the same amount of litigation simply because they cannot afford it.[332])

This repeated pattern risks compromising the commission process itself. Participation in commissions can seem pointless and ineffective to those whose livelihoods are at stake. This problem is compounded where the costs of participation are not covered.

It must be recalled that judicial compensation commissions are constitutionally required to be independent, objective, and "most importantly, the commission must also be effective."[333] The commission's report "must have a meaningful effect on the determination of judicial salaries."[334] This does not mean the commission's report is binding on government; the government retains power to depart from the commission's recommendations as long as it justifies its decision to do so with "rational reasons."[335] However, the commission's recommendations must be given weight.[336] The pattern of almost routine rejection of the salary recommendations of independent and objective commissioners seriously undermines the effectiveness of the commission process.

We also note that this pattern creates uncertainty around judicial compensation that could well affect the ability of the Provincial Court to recruit new judges and judicial justices. The legislature has specified that commissioners must consider the need to attract highly qualified applicants in [328] Main Submission of PCJA, paras. 155 and 157.

[329] Main Submission of PCJA, para. 158.

[330] TR February 13, 2023, Mr. Bernstein for JJA, p. 20, ll. 10-23.

[331] Provincial Court Judges' Association of British Columbia v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2021 BCCA 295, JBA, Vol. 1, Tab 14, para. 7.

[332] As counsel for the JJA noted in his opening remarks at the Commission hearing: "The judicial justices are not involved in litigation, …That isn't to say that they necessarily agree with previous outcomes, but there's resource issues involved in litigation." See: TR February 13, 2023, Mr. Bernstein for JJA, p. 22 ll. 2-7.

[333] PEI Reference, para. 174.

[334] PEI Reference, para. 175.

[335] Bodner, paras. 20-22; PEI Reference, paras. 182-184.

[336] Bodner, para. 23.

order to maintain a strong court. To say the least, perpetual litigation and uncertainty about salary—the largest component of compensation—is not a feature that would attract highly qualified candidates to apply for appointment to this court; it is much more likely to be a deterrent.

The pattern could also lead to a decline in morale due to the repeated cycle of commission recommendation, government rejection, judicial review, appeal, and eventual resolution of a salary, possibly years after it has been earned. So far as we are aware, no other group of people paid from the public purse is subject to this constant cycle of uncertainty over their salaries.

The Government argued that the disillusion spoken of in the submissions of the PCJA and JJA—concerning whether the work of this Commission would meaningfully affect the outcome—stems from the incorrect view that the legislature is intended to simply accept the recommendations of the commission in order for them to have meaningful effect.[337]

While the Government is correct that commissions' recommendations are not binding, they do need to be given "meaningful effect." Any single rejection of a salary recommendation does not necessarily undermine the constitutional process for judicial compensation. However, the repeated pattern of government receiving, rejecting, and substituting lower numbers for the salaries recommended by multiple independent commissions at the very least raises doubt about the effectiveness of the process in the minds of participants (and the commissioners who undertake this work).

When Chief Justice Lamer wrote in the PEI Reference that government must be prepared to justify—if necessary in a court of law—"one or more" recommendations it chooses not to accept, he likely did not envision what has ensued in British Columbia over the last 13 years. Independent commissioners have worked hard to review the evidence and to make impartial recommendations for salaries that reflect reasonable compensation in consideration of the statutory factors. They have arrived at recommendations after submissions from the Government, from the judges and judicial justices, and from external organizations such as the Canadian Bar Association and the Law Society, and after giving serious consideration to all of those submissions. There has been no suggestion that previous commissions were anything but impartial. If this process is working properly, rejection should be the exception, not the norm. The government should have confidence in the process that it set up. It should have confidence in the commissioners who are appointed through that process.

We hope that our recommendations will receive careful consideration, followed by implementation, and that this 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission will mark a change in the unfortunate pattern that has been established over the previous decade. Such an outcome would begin to restore confidence in the commission process.

[337] TR March 10, 2023, Ms. Wolfe for Government, p. 94, ll. 2-7.

9 Conclusions

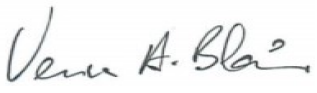
Despite the concerns about the process identified in the preceding section, we remain hopeful that the work we have done to develop recommendations for the reasonable compensation of British Columbia's Provincial Court judges and judicial justices for the next four fiscal years will be useful and that this Commission's work will prove to be not only independent and impartial, but also effective.

The work of the 2022 JCC was shared by many people. We thank counsel for the Government, PCJA, and JJA, and the participants themselves, for the thoughtful work that went into compiling information and providing useful submissions. We could not have done our job without you. We also thank the witnesses who took time to appear at our hearings—two of them more than once. Your testimony helped us understand some of the factors we needed to consider in making our recommendations. We thank government officials and counsel for making all the arrangements for our hearings at UBC Robson Square, and for handling the administration of the hearings. We recognize the contributions of the Chief Judge's staff and the judicial justices who organized court tours for us in conjunction with our counsel. We thank the Chief Judge and the other judges and judicial justices who took the time to speak with us during our court visits. We also appreciate the written submissions of the Law Society and the Canadian Bar Association – BC Branch.

The Commission particularly thanks Commission Counsel, Kathy Grant, for her invaluable assistance, advice, and support. As not only Commission Counsel, but also as the Commission's only administrative support, Ms. Grant played many roles, all effectively and with aplomb.

Lynn Smith, OC, KC, Commission Chair

Eric Gottardi, KC



Vern Blair, FCPA, FCA, FCBV, FRICS

Robert Lapper, KC

Lisa Castle

Appendix A: List of Submissions

1. Submission of the Provincial Court Judges Association of British Columbia to the 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission, January 12, 2023, Counsel: Alison M. Latimer, KC ["Main Submission of PCJA"]

2. Submission of the Judicial Justices Association of British Columbia, 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission, January 12, 2023, Counsel: Danny Bernstein ["Main Submission of JJA"]

3. Submission of the Government of British Columbia to the 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission, January 12, 2023, Counsel: Karrie Wolfe and Steven Davis ["Main Submission of Government"]

4. Submission of the Canadian Bar Association, BC Branch to the 2022 Judicial Compensation Committee [sic], January 23, 2023

5. Submission of the Law Society of British Columbia, 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission, January 24, 2023

6. Submission of the Chief Judge of the Provincial Court of British Columbia to the 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission, January 25, 2023 ["Submission of Chief Judge"]

7. Submission of the Judicial Council of British Columbia to the 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission, January 25, 2023 ["Submission of Judicial Council"]

8. Reply Submission of the Provincial Court Judges Association of British Columbia to the 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission, February 3, 2023, Counsel: Alison M. Latimer, KC ["Reply Submission of PCJA"]

9. Reply Submission of the Judicial Justices Association of British Columbia, Compensation Commission 2022, February 3, 2023, Counsel: Danny Bernstein ["Reply Submission of JJA"]

10. Reply Submission of the Government of British Columbia to the 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission, February 3, 2023, Counsel: Karrie Wolfe and Steven Davis ["Reply Submission of Government"]

11. Joint Proposed Recommendation to the 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission respecting Non-Judicial Pensions for Provincial Court Judges, March 3, 2023 ["Joint Submission on Non-Judicial Pensions"]

12. The Government of British Columbia's Submissions to the 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission respecting participation costs, March 4, 2023 ["Cost Submission of Government"]

13. Supplemental Submission of the Government of British Columbia to the 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission regarding matters specific to the Judicial Justices Association, March 6, 2023 ["Supplemental Submission of Government, March 6, 2023"]

14. Supplemental Submission of the Government of British Columbia to the 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission on Budget 2023, March 7, 2023 ["Budget Submission of Government"]

15. Supplemental Submission of the Provincial Court Judges Association of British Columbia to the 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission, March 7, 2023 ["Supplemental Submission of PCJA"]

16. Supplemental Submission of the Judicial Justices Association of British Columbia, Compensation Commission 2022, March 7, 2023 ["Supplemental Submission of JJA"]

Appendix B: Documents and Authorities

1. Joint Book of Documents of the Parties, Volumes 1 and 2, with revised Tab 34 (revised March 9, 2023) ["JBD"]

2. Book of Documents of the Provincial Court Judges Association of British Columbia ["PCJA BD"]

3. Book of Documents of the Judicial Justices Association of British Columbia

4. Appendices for the Submission of the Government of British Columbia ["Appendices for Submission of Government"]

5. Appendices to the Reply Submission of the Government of British Columbia (in same volume as the Government's Reply Submissions)

6. Supplemental Book of Documents of the Judicial Justices Association of British Columbia

7. Joint Book of Authorities of the Parties, Volumes 1 and 2 ["JBA"]

8. Package of seven documents prepared or compiled by the Government concerning recent pay increases to family physicians.

9. Executive Council of Nova Scotia, OIC 2023-71, March 7, 2023, adopting recommendations of the Nova Scotia Provincial Judges' Salaries and Benefits Tribunal for period of April 1, 2023 to March 31, 2026.

10. Transcripts of Oral Hearings for February 13, 2023, February 14, 2023, February 15, 2023, February 16, 2023, March 10, 2023, and March 13, 2023 ["TR"]

Appendix C: Witnesses

Monday, February 13, 2023

Mr. Ian McKinnon, Pacific Issues Partners

Mr. André Sauvé, actuary in private practice

Tuesday, February 14, 2023

Ms. Heather Wood, Deputy Minister of Finance for British Columbia

Friday, March 10, 2023

Mr. Ian McKinnon, Pacific Issues Partners

Monday March 13, 2023

Ms. Heather Wood, Deputy Minister of Finance for British Columbia

Appendix D: Hearing Exhibits

Exhibit	Description
1	The Current Financial Position of the Government: A report for Submission to the Judicial Compensation Commission Prepared by Ian McKinnon – Presentation Material
2	Point in Time Report on the Current and Expected Economic Conditions in British Columbia and the Current and Expected Financial Position of Government as of December 2022, prepared by Heather Wood; and Presentation to the Judicial Compensation Commission, February 14, 2023
3	Times Colonist Article, February 6, 2023 "B.C. throne speech forecasts slowdown but says it's not time to cut back on spending"
4	British Columbia News Release, office of the premier, dated February 12, 2023 "B.C. building stronger communities with $1-billion Growing Communities Fund"
5	Vancouver Sun, February 13, 2023 "Vaughn Palmer: Why B.C.'s premier is in a rush to spend, spend, spend"
6	British Columbia Construction Association, BC Construction Industry Statistics (Fall-2022)
7	The Cambridge Lectures 2023 Registration Form, and the 2023 NCLP Registration Form
8	BC Prosecution Service Annual Report 2021/22
9	Memo to Judicial Compensation Commission from Chief Judge Melissa Gillespie, February 14, 2023 Re: Judicial Applicant Information
10	2019-20 table of expenditures of Judicial Justice Professional Development Expenses
11	Replacement for p. 3 of Government Reply Submissions (Blue Coloured Table)
12	Email from Mr. Davis, February 16, 2023 concerning "22% for pay in lieu of benefits - part-time Judicial Justices"
13	Email from Ms. Wolfe, March 7, 2023 concerning "2022 JCC – Government's position re: JJABC modified shift premium proposal"

14	Ian McKinnon Presentation, "The Current Financial Position of the Government Post-Budget Update" March 2023
15	Vancouver Sun, News Article, March 6, 2023, "Surrey might reduce property tax hike, but only if RCMP remains, mayor says"
16	Vancouver Sun, News Article, February 23, 2023, "2021 B.C. floods recovery: Federal government provides $557 million to help address devastation"
17	Heather Wood, Presentation to the Judicial Compensation Commission re: Budget and Fiscal Plan 2023/24 – 2025/26, March 10, 2023

Appendix E: Court Tours and Site Visits

1. November 21, 2022[338]
    a. Robson Courthouse, 800 Hornby St, Vancouver, BC
        - ACJ Wishart spoke about virtual family management conferences and settlement conferences
        - Commissioners and participant representatives watched traffic court, and civil law hearings
    b. Vancouver Criminal Court, 222 Main St, Vancouver, BC
        - Commissioners and participant representatives watched disposition court
    c. Downtown Community Court, 211 Gore Ave, Vancouver, BC
        - Commissioners and participant representatives watched the Downtown Community Court
        - Judge Doherty provided an overview of the Court
    d. Surrey Courthouse, 14340 – 57 Ave, Surrey, BC
        - ACJ Wishart provided an overview of virtual bail
        - Commissioners and participant representatives watched virtual bail, in-person bail and other criminal matters
2. February 10, 2023
    a. Indigenous Court, Inn at the Quay, 900 Quayside Dr, New Westminster, BC
        - Judge Brown provided an overview of the court, prior to sitting
        - Commissioners and participant representatives watched the court, including client updates and sentencing
3. February 11, 2023
    a. Justice Centre
        - Chief Judge Gillespie, Judicial Justice Brown, and Judicial Justice Blackstone provided an overview of work at the Justice Centre
        - Commissioners and participant representatives watched bail hearings
        - Commissioners and participant representatives viewed how a judicial justice deals with an electronic search warrant application

[338] Commissioner Castle was unable to attend on this day due to illness. Commissioner Gottardi was only able to attend at Surrey Courthouse.

Appendix F: Attachment to Joint Proposed Recommendation Re: Non-judicial Pensions

ECKLER

MEMO

TO	Paul Craven, ADM, Justice Service Branch, Ministry of Attorney General Melissa Gillespie, Chief Judge, Provincial Court of British Columbia
FROM	Catherine Robertson, Eckler Ltd.
CC:	Chris Skillings, Director, Reporting & Analysis, Provincial Treasury Stuart Morgan, Executive Director, Public Service Pension Board of Trustees
DATE	February 24, 2023
RE	2022 Judicial Compensation Commission ("JCC") proposal to recommend amendments to the Judicial Compensation Act to incorporate non-judicial pension benefit plan design changes

Further to the letter of February 15, 2023 from the Public Service Pension Board, this memo sets out the requested analysis on potential cost implications from the proposal to recommend amendments to the Judicial Compensation Act ("JCA") to incorporate non-judicial pension benefit plan design changes.

Background

The background document provided to us is attached to this memo for reference. In summary, the Public Service Pension Plan (the "PSPP") has been amended twice recently. Firstly, effective April 1, 2018, the benefits for general PSPP members were amended to introduce a flat accrual rate of 1.85%, eliminate the bridge benefit and the rule of 85, provide an early retirement reduction of 6.2% per annum below age 60, as well as providing a retroactive benefit improvement to increase the below YMPE accrual rate from 1.35% to 1.65%, with a corresponding reduction in the bridge benefit, for service accrued from April 1, 2006 to March 31, 2018. We refer to these amendments in this memo as the "2018 PSPP amendments". Secondly, effective April 1, 2022, the benefits for general PSPP members were amended to increase the flat accrual rate to 1.95% for future service, "the 2022 PSPP amendments".

In the absence of a change to the JCA, currently when any PSPP plan member is appointed as a judge, any non-judicial service under the PSPP reverts back to the PSPP benefits prior to the 2018 and 2022 PSPP amendments. This memo considers the cost implications, if any, of the proposed amendments to apply the 2018 and 2022 PSPP amendments to non-judicial service for judges (the "JCC non-judicial proposed amendments"). No changes are being proposed, or have been considered, for judicial service.

The request is for us to consider any cost implications from the JCC non-judicial proposed amendments both for PSPP and for Judges.

ECKLER

PSPP Cost Implications

We have reviewed the impact of the JCC non-judicial proposed amendments on the PSPP, and conclude there is no cost impact to PSPP.

As noted in our valuation reports for PSPP, we ignore the enhanced benefits which are provided to certain member e.g. judges in the valuation, and report separately to the Board on the additional contributions required for such members. As a result, when costing both the 2018 PSPP amendments and the 2022 PSPP amendments, we assumed the amendments would apply to all members, including judges. This means we have already reflected the cost of providing the 2018 and 2022 PSPP amendments to non-judicial service for judges within the 2018 and 2022 PSPP amendments. Generally, where these amendments resulted in a cost to the PSPP, these costs were met out of surplus. The surplus arose on all PSPP members, so has been allocated appropriately. The appropriate contributions have also been made for the benefits provided.

Judges Cost Implications

We have reviewed the impact of the JCC non-judicial proposed amendments on the contributions currently being paid by judges, and conclude there is no cost increase to judges.

We establish the contributions due from judges based on a separate valuation. Judges are a relatively small group of members, who are on average older than the general PSPP active population, and with more generous benefit provisions. Due to the size of the group, and the potential spread of ages at which judges are appointed, it is not appropriate to use the entry age normal cost method that is used for the regular plan. Accordingly, we use the projected unit credit method, which estimates the cost of benefits accruing following the valuation and therefore accurately allows for the age profile of the judges and the increasing cost of accrual over time.

Although there are no changes being proposed to the current benefits for judicial service, the JCC non-judicial proposed amendments may slightly reduce the current judges contributions. The reason for this is that where the JCC non-judicial proposed amendments have an impact on the accrued pension, they will, in aggregate across all judges, increase the total accrued pension. As a result, where a judge is projected to meet the current maximum accrual of 70% of the member's highest average salary, then they may meet this limit sooner allowing for the JCC non-judicial proposed amendments. On reaching this maximum, the valuation assumes that contributions cease, resulting in a lower required contribution. The data we have includes the total non-judicial service, so we have had to approximate how that service is split between April 1, 2006 to March 31, 2018 and from April 1, 2018 (to March 31, 2020, the date of the last valuation). The estimated contribution reduction is marginal. Given that the magnitude of the reduction is not material, the approximations involved in the estimate, and the upcoming valuation as of March 31, 2023 (which may lead to contribution changes dues to experience or data changes), we would recommend that the current contributions are maintained until the 2023 valuation is completed.

With respect to any increase in accrued benefits that may apply to individual judges as a result of the JCC non-judicial proposed amendments, as noted above, these increases were already costed in the 2018 and 2022 PSPP amendments, with any increased cost largely being met from surplus. Hence, the judges should not be charged again for any benefit improvements to accrued service as a result of the JCC non-judicial proposed amendments. In addition, the appropriate contributions have been paid to the PSPP for any post March 31, 2018 non-judicial service accrued by any current judge.

We would be pleased to discuss this further.

2022 Judicial Compensation Commission ("JCC") proposal to recommend amendments to the Judicial Compensation Act to incorporate non-judicial pension benefit plan design changes

Background

The Judicial Compensation Act ("JCA") includes provisions for judges' pension benefits for both judicial service and non-judicial service (if any). At retirement, judges will receive a blended lifetime pension benefit if they earned any pensionable service as a regular member under the Public Service Pension Plan ("PSPP") prior to being appointed to the provincial court (for example, working as a government lawyer).

Historically, the JCA's non-judicial pension benefits provisions have been harmonious with the PSPP rules in many respects. This harmony ensured the pension benefit earned and paid for while serving as a regular member is maintained despite the change in employment status. However, plan design changes made by the PSPP in recent years have not been incorporated into the JCA, resulting in a divergence in the benefits for impacted judges in relation to non-judicial service.

The changes proposed for recommendation to the 2022 JCC intend to incorporate the plan design changes to ensure impacted judges receive benefits in harmony with the current PSPP plan design (i.e., the benefit that was earned prior to judicial appointment). If ultimately implemented through subsequent JCA amendments, it is expected the changes will result in improved lifetime benefits for virtually all existing active and retired impacted judges.

Proposed Amendments to be Recommended

The proposal is to pursue incorporating plan design changes into the JCA for those elements where the JCA and PSPP have been historically harmonious (an overview of pension benefits is provided in Appendix A). These elements include the benefit accrual rates, the bridge benefit, and the early retirement factor. If implemented, the proposed changes would apply to non-judicial service only; there would be no changes to the judicial benefit. Specifically, the proposed changes are as follows:

1. Moving from 1.35%/2% integrated benefit accrual rates to the following flat benefit accrual rates:
    a. 1.85% for service from April 1, 2018 – March 31, 2022
    b. 1.95% for service after April 1, 2022
2. Past service benefit enhancement ("benefit enhancement") to the lifetime portion of the pension of 1.35% up to 1.65% for service on earnings up to Yearly Maximum Pensionable Earnings ("YMPE") for the period of April 1, 2006 – March 31, 2018
3. Corresponding elimination / reduction to the bridge benefit payable until the earlier of age 65 and death:
    a. Elimination of bridge benefit for service after April 1, 2018; and
    b. Reduction of bridge benefit from 0.65% to 0.35% on earnings up to the YMPE for service between April 1, 2006 and March 31, 2018 (offset by the benefit enhancement to the lifetime portion above)

4. Increasing the Early Retirement Factor (ERF) from 5% to 6.2% for the non-judicial benefit portion of service earned on or after April 1, 2018, for judges that do not qualify for an unreduced pension.

Individual judges' pensionable service will likely cross over the timeframes shown above.

There are other pension elements that have not been historically harmonious between the two regimes and would therefore not be changed by this proposal if ultimately implemented. They include:

1. Shorter three year Highest Average Salary (HAS) calculation for both judicial and non-judicial service, compared to five years for regular members;
2. More favourable "Rule of 55/5" (no reduction in pension if retire at age 55 with at least 5 years of service) for all service (both judicial and non-judicial). Depending on the service period, regular members must meet the rule of 85 (for service pre-plan design), have 35 years of service or reach age 60 with at least 2 years of service to qualify for an unreduced pension; and
3. Enhanced 'normal form' of pension that includes a joint life 60 per cent normal form option with no reduction for married members. Regular members are only provided a single life with a 10-year guarantee normal form, regardless of their spousal status.

In each case, the features above result in a more favourable pension benefit for judges compared to benefits earned by regular members of the plan. The continuation of these more favourable features is an important factor in support of the 'net benefit' outcomes for impacted judges under the proposal for recommendation.

Determination of Impacted Judges

The plan design changes were applied to all regular members that still had an entitlement in the plan at the time of implementation, regardless of status: all active, inactive/deferred and retired members were impacted to the extent pensionable service was earned during the periods noted above. However, because the non-judicial component of judges' pensions is prescribed by the JCA, the plan design changes did not apply to judges.

The proposal will apply the changes in a consistent manner for judges with non-judicial service earned during the effective dates if those judges still have an entitlement in the plan[1]. This is true regardless of status under the plan: e.g. active, inactive/deferred, or retired. This application is the most equitable approach to implementing plan design changes, including because it ensures the past service benefit enhancement is awarded consistently to all members.

Pension Corporation has confirmed there are a total of 54 impacted judges with non-judicial service earned in the timeframe that would be affected by the plan design changes, if implemented: 47 active judges and 7 retired judges[2].There are no inactive/deferred members impacted. An assessment of the population of impacted judges is provided in Appendix B.

[1] Any member who remains in the pension plan, whether actively employed, retired, or deferred but with benefits left in the plan, holds an entitlement.

Effective dates

The proposal for recommendation would, if implemented, apply the new provisions retroactively to the effective dates of the plan design changes. This retroactivity ensures impacted judges receive the benefits of plan design changes consistent with what would have applied to their previous earned time if they had not been appointed, creating equity with continuing regular members of the plan.

Importantly, the past service benefit enhancement was provided to members with an entitlement under the plan on or after October 1, 2019. All members, whether active, inactive/deferred, or retired that were in the plan on or after this date received the benefit enhancement for time served during the April 1, 2006 to March 31, 2018 period. The proposal for recommendation would, if implemented, retroactively award the benefit to eligible judges (including retired judges) with an entitlement as of the October 1, 2019 date.

For judges that are not eligible for an unreduced pension (i.e. members who receive a reduced pension), the higher ERF would apply to the non-judicial pension component at the time of retirement for non-judicial service earned after April 1, 2018 (being the start date of the new flat accrual structure). However, Pension Corporation advises there have been no reduced pensions put into pay over the last 15 years. As a result, this change has no impact on the existing retired judge population and is not anticipated to impact active judges as a population in the future.

The October 1, 2019 effective date for the benefit enhancement would also be relevant in the following specific circumstances.

Commuted values

The October 1, 2019 effective date was relevant for calculating a commuted value in the event a member elects to leave the plan or a lump sum payout is required due to a member's death[3]. A member/beneficiary who took their commuted value prior to this date did not receive the benefit enhancement.

Pension corporation has confirmed there have been no commuted values calculated for impacted judges since October 1, 2019, and therefore there is no impact for existing judges (and no recalculations required). Assuming the parties agree to propose, and the JCC recommends, these changes, it is proposed that, rather than using the October 1, 2019 date for purposes of determining a member's entitlement for commuted values, the date the JCC recommendations in this regard are either accepted by the Lieutenant Governor in Council or approved by the legislative assembly be used instead. This approach would avoid the complexity of having to recalculate the amount if a commuted value payment is made to a judge between today and the effective date of the JCA amendments. If a judge is paid a commuted value after the date of the JCA amendments, the benefit enhancement would be included.

[2] In addition to the 54 impacted judges, there are also 5 impacted masters: 2 active master and 3 retired masters. While masters' pensions are tied to those of provincial court judges under the Supreme Court Act, the 2022 JCC will not deal with masters directly, so the remainder of this document omits reference to the 5 impacted masters.

Adjustments to the normal form

For members who are currently receiving a pension and chose a pension option with a greater value than the normal form pension, the proposal will ensure that member's pension prior to age 65 does not decrease. This means that for members currently receiving a pension who chose a single life pension guaranteed for 15 years or a 100% joint survivor pension, there would be a slight reduction in their lifetime pension increase in order to maintain the same pension prior to age 65[4]. This is the same principle that was applied for regular members at the time plan design was implemented.

Pension Corporation has confirmed there are two existing retired judges who would be impacted by this issue if the changes are ultimately implemented. These members would see no impact to their pre-65 payments and would still receive an increase to lifetime benefits after age 65, albeit on a slightly reduced basis for the reason noted above.

Refund of overcontributions

The JCA permits a lifetime pension benefit up to a maximum 70% of HAS. When an active judge's benefit accrual reaches 70%[5], contributions cease. If proposed plan design changes result in a judge exceeding the 70% maximum, or reaching the maximum more quickly, the judge will have made an over-contribution retrospectively. Under the proposal, overcontributions would have to be calculated and returned to any judge in this situation who has an entitlement on or after October 1, 2019.

Pension Corporation has confirmed there are three judges (two active, one retired) that have reached the 70% maximum and would require a refund of overcontributions if the changes are implemented. There are no inactive/deferred judges impacted.

Cost implications to the Plan

The plan design changes were developed and implemented within a 'cost neutral', or 'fully funded' framework; the benefit of new flat accrual rates was funded by foregoing the bridge benefit and increased early retirement factor on future service. As well, the estimated cost related to the past service benefit enhancement was funded from a portion of the plan's surplus identified in the 2017 actuarial valuation. In combination, both changes were fully funded and did not result in a change to contribution rates.

---

[4] An optional form factor is applied to the lifetime pension when a greater pension form is provided than the normal form. This factor is not applied to the temporary bridge benefit, therefore this can result in a small reduction in the net payment before age 65.

[5] For example, for a judge that works 100% in a judicial capacity (I.e. has no non-judicial service), the 70% max is reached after 23.33 years (70% / 3% accrual per year).

It is expected that the proposal, if implemented, will have no incremental cost to the plan: as members of the pension plan, costs associated with the benefits accrued were considered at the time the actuarial work was performed. This is expected to be true even with anticipated retroactive benefit enhancements and/or overcontributions that result in lump sum payments to impacted judges. The proposal here simply ensures the benefits are awarded to judges with non-judicial service during the relevant timeframes as the plan design changes originally contemplated.

Pension Corporation's internal actuary has reviewed the proposal and agrees with this conclusion. The plan's actuary will be engaged to confirm this understanding. The ability to move forward with the proposal for recommendation to the 2022 JCC is contingent on the actuary's confirmation of no cost outcome. If a cost is identified, funding sources and/or modifications will need to be identified.

Next steps

- Confirm a clear understanding with all parties of the proposal, respond to any additional questions, and agreement to proceed
- Liaise with Pension Corporation for additional information and/or modelling, if needed
- Confirm the 'no cost' implications with plan actuary
- Confirm JCC submission approach

Appendix A – Overview of Defined Benefit Pension Benefit

Judicial pensions are a defined benefit (DB) pension arrangement. The amount of the lifetime pension benefit is calculated based on a benefit accrual rate, years of service under the plan, and the salary earned by the member.

While judges are members of the Public Service Pension Plan (PSPP), their enhanced pension rules for judicial service are contained in the Judicial Compensation Act (JCA). The JCA also contains the pension rules for non-judicial service.

Glossary of Key Terms

Benefit Accrual Rate: The multiplier used in the pension formula, along with a member's pensionable service and earnings, to calculate the member's lifetime pension.

Bridge Benefit: A temporary monthly amount paid in addition to the lifetime pension. It is payable from the member's retirement date until the member turns 65 or dies, whichever comes first. For regular members, the bridge benefit applies only to service up to March 31, 2018.

Commuted Value: A lump-sum value based on the amount of money the pension plan would need to put aside today, at current interest rates, to pay for a member's future pension at retirement.

Highest Average Salary (HAS): The average of a member's three highest years of pensionable salary for judges (compared to a five year average for regular members). To calculate this average, the plan uses the best three years of full-time-equivalent earnings from the member's entire time with the plan. When a member retires, their pension is based on a formula that uses the member's highest average salary.

Normal Form of pension: Is the single life or joint life amount of a pension set by the Board or as specified in the Judicial Compensation Act, before any actuarial factors are applied to calculate the various pension option amounts.

Year's maximum pensionable earnings (YMPE): A salary limit set by the federal government each year for the purposes of determining the maximum annual contributions workers make to the Canada Pension Plan. It is also used as part of the pension formula to calculate contributions and pension benefits for certain periods.

Existing JCA terms

Accrual Rates
Non-judicial service:

- Lifetime: 1.35% up to the YMPE, 2.0% over the YMPE
- Bridge Benefit: 0.65% up to lesser of HAS or YMPE

Judicial service:

- Lifetime: flat 3.0%
- Bridge Benefit: No bridge benefit

Highest Average Salary (HAS)

- 3-year HAS applied to both non-judicial and judicial service

Early retirement reduction rates

- 5.0% per year from age 60, for non-judicial and judicial service, subject to unreduced rule below
- Judges qualify for an unreduced pension at age 55 if they have at least 5 years of contributory service (55/5 rule)

Sample Calculation (under existing JCA pension benefits):

- Assume the following:
  - 10 years of non-judicial service and 10 years as a judge
  - HAS of $290,000
  - YMPE $64,900
  - Retirement age: 65 (no bridge benefit or early reduction applied)
- Non judicial service:
  - 1.35% x 10 years x $64,900 = $ 8,762 plus
  - 2.0% x 10 years x $225,100 = $45,020
- Judicial service:
  - 3.0% x 10 years x $290,000 = $87,000
- Total Annual Pension = $140,782

Plan Design Changes for Regular Members

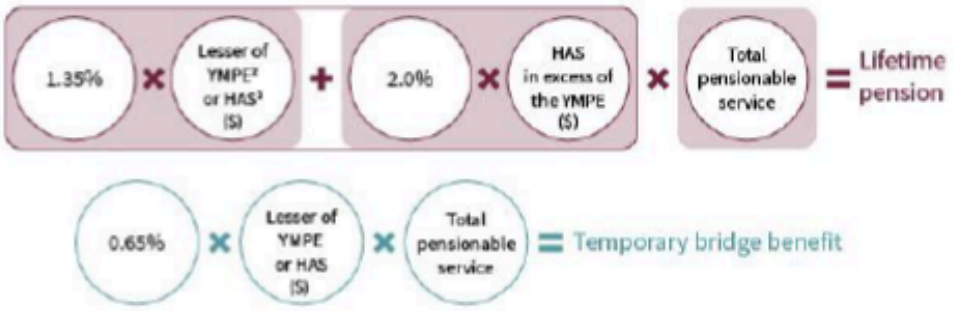
- Past service benefit enhancement (increased the below YMPE accrual rate from 1.35% to 1.65%, corresponding decrease in bridge benefit from 0.65% to 0.35%) for service earned between April 1, 2006 and March 31, 2018, effective October 1, 2019)

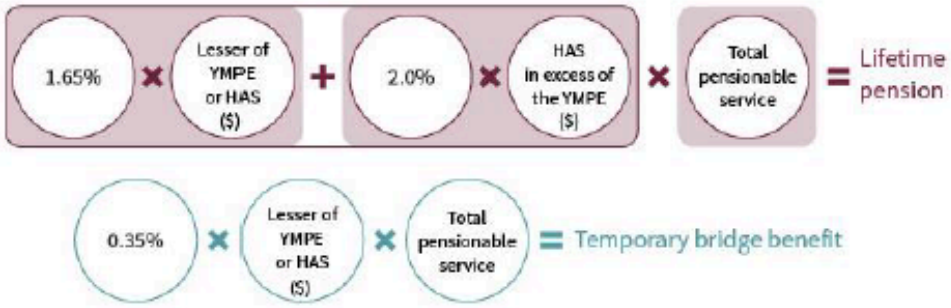
- Flat 1.85% accrual rate, effective April 1, 2018

- Flat 1.95% accrual rate, effective April 1, 2022

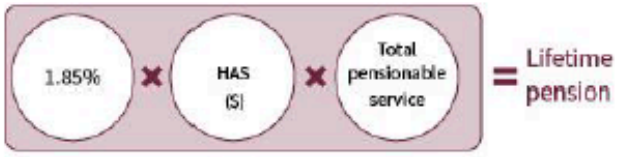
For pensionable service earned before April 1, 2006:



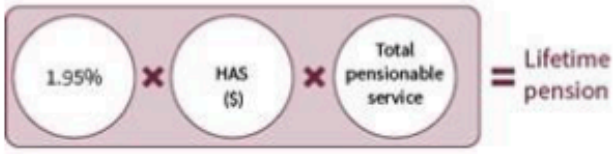
For pensionable service earned between April 1, 2006 and March 31, 2018, inclusive:



For pensionable service earned on and after April 1, 2018, to March 31, 2022, inclusive:



For pensionable service earned on or after April 1, 2022:



Appendix B – Assessment of implications for Impacted Judges

Pension Corporation have confirmed there are a total of 54 active and retired judges impacted by the proposal. Of the 54 total, 47 are active judges and 7 are retired judges. There are no inactive/deferred members impacted.

The following table provides an overview of the identified population by group based on timeframe of non-judicial service. Individual judges' experience will vary depending on the duration and timespan of the time earned, retirement age, HAS, and YMPE - final outcomes for active members cannot be known in advance of a specific retirement date being identified.

Scenario	Plan design changes applied	Comments on impacts
Of the 47 active judges:
30 judges have April 1, 2006 to March 31, 2018 service only	past service benefit enhancement with offsetting bridge benefit reduction to age 65	No change to net pensions paid up to age 65, increased lifetime pensions paid beyond. All judges are better off
2 judges have April 1, 2018 March 31, 2022 service only	change from 2%/1.35% accrual rate to flat 1.85% for duration of non-judicial service	Impact depends on HAS and YMPE at time of retirement. Using current YMPE and a HAS of $288.500, members will see marginal reduction in lifetime pension [note members identified have only 2.22 and 0.6 years of non-judicial service.]
14 judges have both April 1, 2006 to March 31, 2018 and April 1, 2018 to March 31, 2022 service	Both: i) change from 2%/1.35% accrual rate to flat 1.85% for duration of non-judicial service, and ii) past service benefit enhancement with offsetting bridge benefit reduction to age 65	Impact will depend on duration of time between the two periods, age of retirement, and HAS and YMPE at time of retirement. The past service benefit enhancement will offset time at 1.85% to some degree. The net impact will vary on a case by case basis. Average judge experience supports a net benefit outcome in most cases. The amount of the lost/reduced bridge benefit will be paid back over a period of time depending on the factors noted above.

1 judge has service through all three periods; April 1, 2006 to March 31, 2018 and April 1, 2018 to March 31, 2022 service as well as post-April 1, 2022 service	All: i) change from 2%/1.35% accrual rate to flat 1.85% for duration of non-judicial service, ii) 1.95% on time after 2022 iii) past service benefit enhancement with offsetting bridge benefit reduction to age 65	Impact will depend on duration of time between the two periods, age at retirement, and HAS and YMPE at time of retirement. For one judge identified, Pension Corporation has confirmed time spanning pre-2018 and post-2022 is expected to offset period at 1.85% resulting in net benefit after age 65. The amount of the lost/reduced bridge benefit will be paid back over a period of time depending on the factors noted above.
Of the 7 retired judges:
7 retired judges have time earned only in the 2006 – 2018 period	past service benefit enhancement with offsetting bridge benefit reduction to age 65	No change to net pensions paid up to age 65, increased lifetime pensions paid beyond. Judges will receive a lump sum benefit enhancement for pensions paid after October 1, 2019 All judges are better off

Other factors assessed:

- 3 judges (two active, 1 retired) have hit the 70% maximum accrual such that contributions ceased. These individuals would receive an overcontribution refund to the extent changes accelerated reaching 70%.

- There have been no commuted value asset transfers out of the plan (due to leaving or lump sum payout due to member death) on or after the effective date – there are no situations where the issue of a commuted value recalculation is currently needed.

- There is one terminated judge who has post-April 1, 2006 non-judicial service, but that individual was paid out in 2013, prior to the October 1, 2019 effective date and is therefore not affected.

- There are two retired members who retired prior to age 65 and elected a Joint Survivor 100% form for lifetime pension. These two individuals will be subject to the mechanism discussed above to ensure net payments prior to age 65 are not impacted and will receive a slightly lower increase to the lifetime pension.

- An assessment of marriage breakdown is still required: if there are any instances, the limited member's benefit will be treated the same way as the member's benefit.

Appendix G: Changes to Shift Premiums for Judicial Justices

(a) Definitions:

(i) "Shift" means an 8-hour scheduled Shift.

(ii) "Weekend" includes any Shift where any portion of the Shift falls on a Saturday or Sunday, but does not include Holidays.

(iii) "Court closure day" means any Shift where any portion of the shift falls on a Monday or Tuesday that is not a holiday, on which day courts are generally closed for provincial court judges in BC (for example, when July 1 falls on a Saturday or Sunday and courts are generally closed on the following Monday).

(iv) "Holidays" include:

(A) New Year's Day, Family Day, Good Friday, Easter Monday, Victoria Day, Canada Day, British Columbia Day, Labour Day, National Day for Truth and Reconciliation, Thanksgiving Day, Remembrance Day, Christmas Day, Boxing Day; or

(B) Any Shift where any portion of the Shift falls on a Holiday.

(b) Weekend Shift premium: $75

(c) Holiday Shift premium: Remain at $245 but with an additional $75 for any Christmas Day Shift

(d) Court closure day premium: $75

(e) A judicial justice may only claim the Holiday premium once for the same Holiday. For example, if a night judicial justice works June 30th from 11pm to 7am, as well as July 1st from 11pm to 7am, that judicial justice may only claim the Holiday premium for one of these shifts. As another example, if one judicial justice works June 30th from 11pm to 7am and a different judicial justice works July 1st from 11pm to 7am, each judicial justice will receive the Holiday premium.

(f) Any Shift worked by a judicial justice will attract the highest applicable premium for that Shift, and only that premium.

2022 Judicial Compensation Commission Final Report in Respect of Provincial Court Judges and Judicial Justices
November 28, 2023

The Judicial Compensation Commission is an independent, constitutionally required body mandated by the Judicial Compensation Act (the Act) to report on and make recommendations respecting remuneration, allowances, and benefits of Provincial Court judges and judicial justices. The recommendations of the 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission (the 2022 Commission) cover the period from April 1, 2023 to March 31, 2027.

The 2022 Judicial Compensation Commission

In accordance with section 2 of the Act, as modified for the 2022 Commission by Bill 30-2021, the members of the 2022 Commission were appointed on or before September 1, 2022. The 2022 Commission members were the Honourable Lynn Smith, OC, KC (Chairperson); Vern Blair, FCPA, FCA, FCBV, FRICS; Eric Gottardi, KC; Lisa Castle; and Robert Lapper, KC.

Legislative Assembly Outcome

As the Legislative Assembly did not reject the recommendations of the 2022 Commission within the statutory time limits set out in section 6(2) of the Act, pursuant to section 6(3) of the Act, Provincial Court judges and judicial justices are entitled to receive the remuneration, allowances and benefits recommended by the 2022 Commission for the period from April 1, 2023 to March 31, 2027.

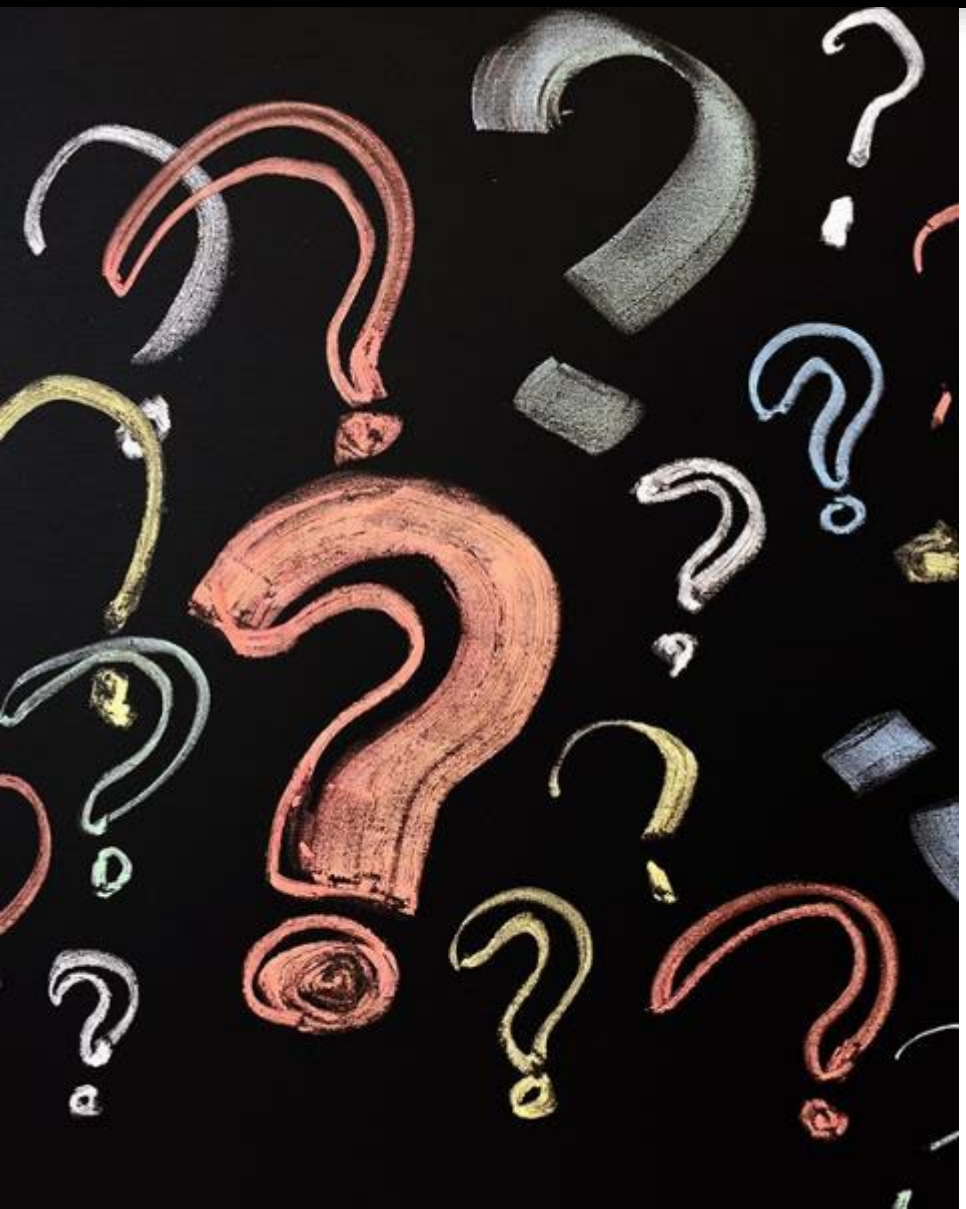
2023 CSCJA Member Research Report

THE PORTAGE GROUP

Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association

November 2023

Table of Contents



Introduction

- Study Background & Methodology
- Important Study Context

Study Background & Methodology

- The Canadian Superior Court Judges Association's (CSCJA) Judicial Independence Committee commissioned the Portage Group Inc. to carry out research in support of a review of Government support of Superior Courts on judicial independence, effectiveness and impartiality.
- To support this process, the CSCJA's Independence of the Judiciary Committee determined that there was a need to undertake a comprehensive survey. The essence of this survey is to capture firsthand experiences from members regarding the impact of resource provision in critical areas. The key objectives of the survey are:

1. Understand Resource and Support Availability: Obtain insights into members' experiences with the availability and adequacy of resources and support in:
   - Facilities, Infrastructure, and Technology.
   - Human Resources, and;
   - Security
2. Capture Experiences of Traveling Judges: Understand the experiences of judges who travel or serve in courts other than their primary work location in terms of resources, technology, human resources, and security.
3. Identify Impacts on Judicial Independence: Assess how resourcing constraints might impact the timely administration of justice, perceptions of the judicial system, and the personal well-being of the judges.
4. Influence Advocacy Efforts: Provide CSCJA leaders with empirical data and insights to guide their advocacy initiatives for improved support and resources.

- Invitations to participate in the survey were sent to 1,035 Superior Court Justices (including Chief Justices) across Canada in September 2023. Four-hundred and thirty-three (433) responses had been received by the cut-off date for an overall response rate of 42%.
- The responses gathered from this survey are more than just data points; they represent the voices and concerns of members that will be instrumental in the CSCJA's advocacy efforts. By offering a clearer understanding of the current state of affairs and highlighting areas that require attention, the findings of this survey will guide future initiatives and policy directions. The following report summarizes the findings from this research.

Important Study Context

- When reviewing the findings of this study, the results should be viewed and interpreted as opinions and perceptions of Canadian Superior Court Justices.
- The study did not include a formal review or evaluation of the actual facilities and/or resources available to Canadian Superior Court Justices and should not be interpreted as such.

Description of the Sample

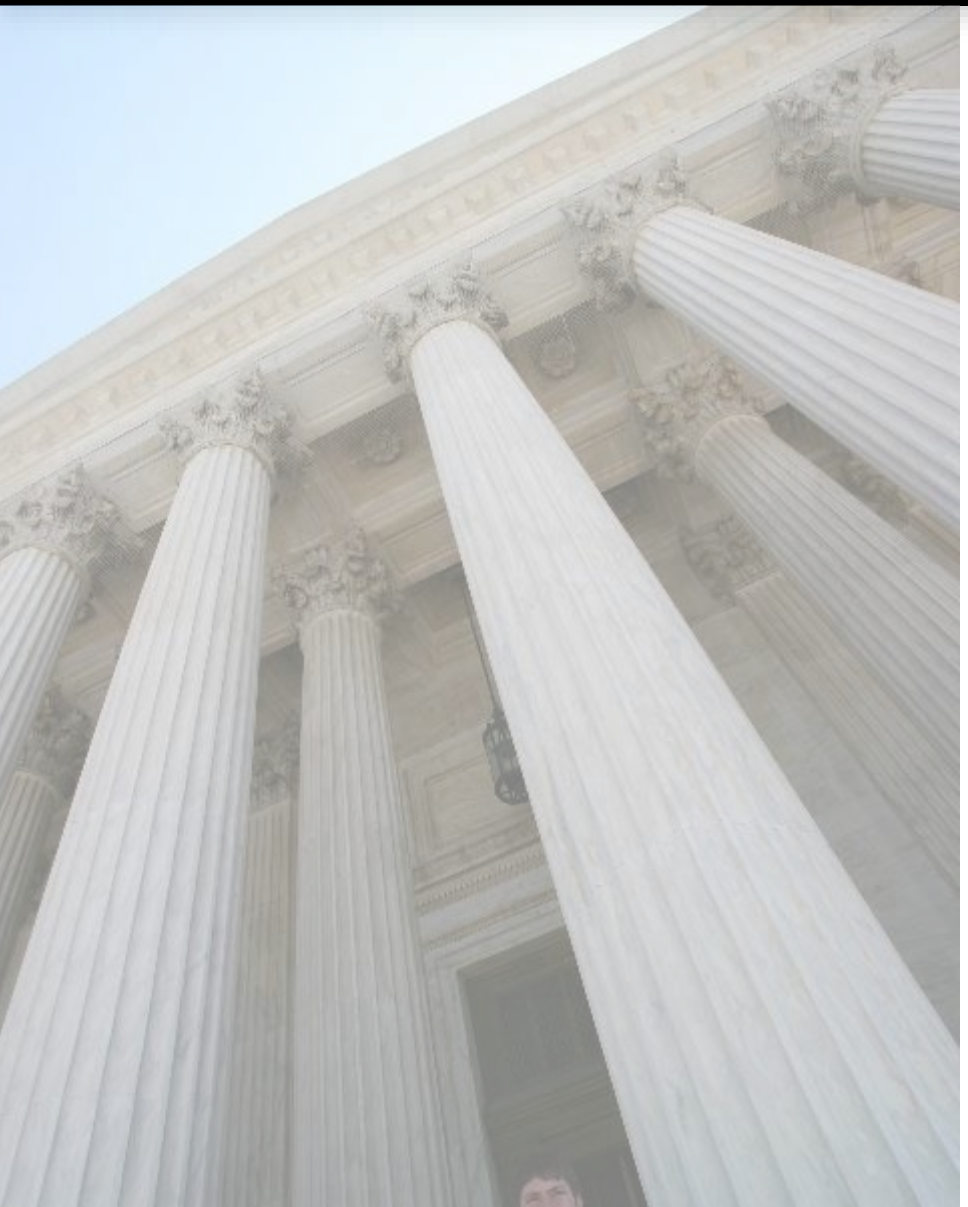
- Participant Characteristics

Participant Characteristics

- The following tables present a summary of the demographic characteristics of the respondents to help provide context to the results in the report.

	ALL RESPONDENTS
PROVINCE WORKED IN (N=432)
Ontario	32%
Quebec	22%
British Columbia	12%
Alberta	8%
Newfoundland & Labrador	6%
Nova Scotia	6%
Manitoba	5%
Saskatchewan	4%
New Brunswick	3%
Northwest Territories	1%
Prince Edward Island	1%
Yukon	0.2%
Nunavut	0%
FUNDING SOURCE (N=399)
Provincially funded	73%
Federally funded	27%
GENDER (N=408)
Male	51%
Female	49%

	ALL RESPONDENTS
AGE (N=416)
Under 40	0.2%
40 to 49	4%
50 to 59	43%
60 to 64	22%
65 to 69	18%
70 or older	13%
YEARS OF EXPERIENCE AS CANADIAN SUPERIOR COURT JUSTICE (N=418)
Less than 1 year	3%
1-2 years	9%
3-5 years	24%
6-10 years	27%
11-20 years	26%
More than 20 years	11%



Facilities and Infrastructure

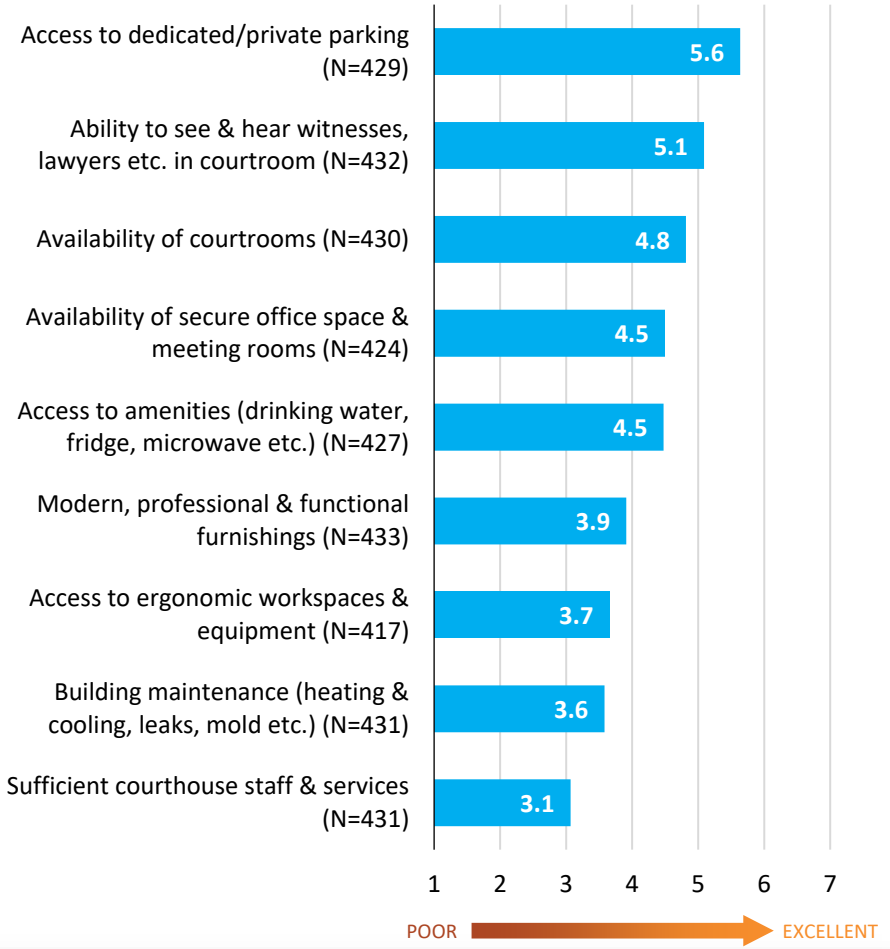
- Evaluation of Workplace Facilities
- Shared Judicial Workspaces
- Impact of Facility Resources on Judicial Duties

Evaluation of Workplace Facilities

- Participating justices were asked about the quality of their workplace facilities. Respondents were given nine facilities attributes and were asked to award a rating on a scale from 1 (poor) to 7 (excellent).
- Top rated attributes include access to dedicated/private parking at 5.6, ability to see and hear participants like witnesses and lawyers in the courtroom at 5.1, and the availability of courtrooms with a rating of 4.8.
- On the other hand, buildings and furniture are poorly rated and may be areas that require more immediate attention in the eyes of Justices. More specifically, failing grades were awarded to modern, professional, and functional furnishings (3.9), access to ergonomic workspaces and equipment (3.7) and building maintenance (3.6).
- A significant concern was the adequacy of courthouse staff and services, which received the lowest rating of 3.1

> My Courthouse, located in the provincial capital, is a disgrace. It is aged, dirty, minimally maintained, and far below current standards. The working conditions are deplorable. What an embarrassment.

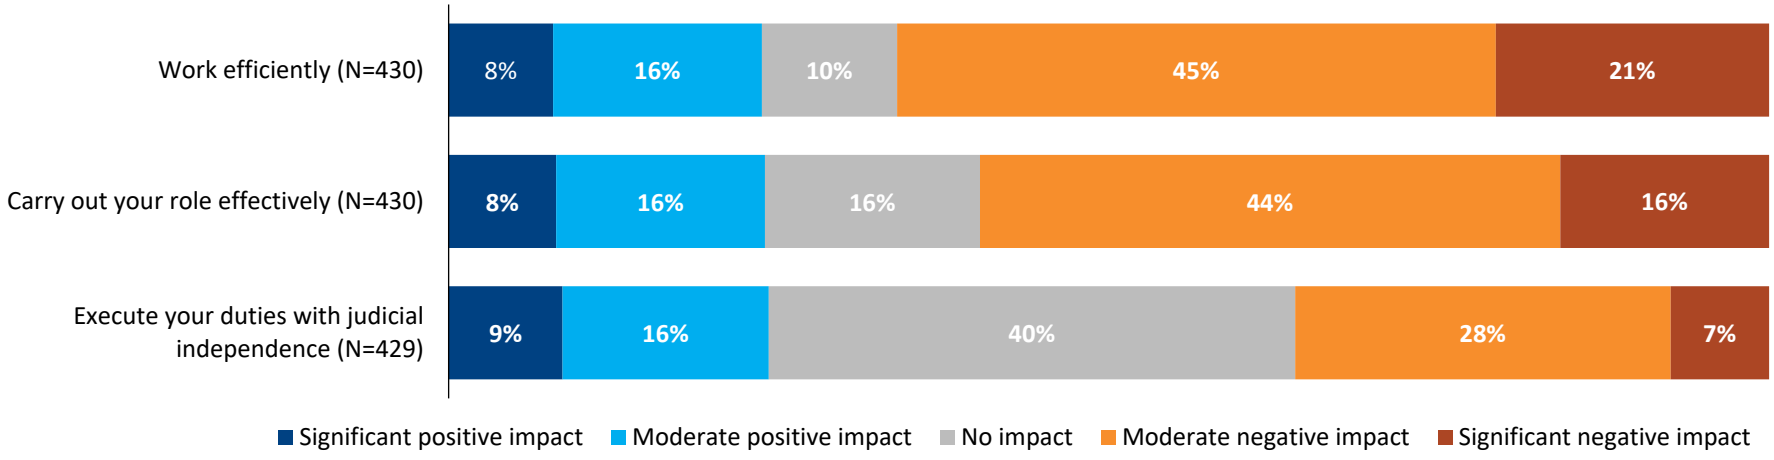
Rating of Workspace Amenities and Features

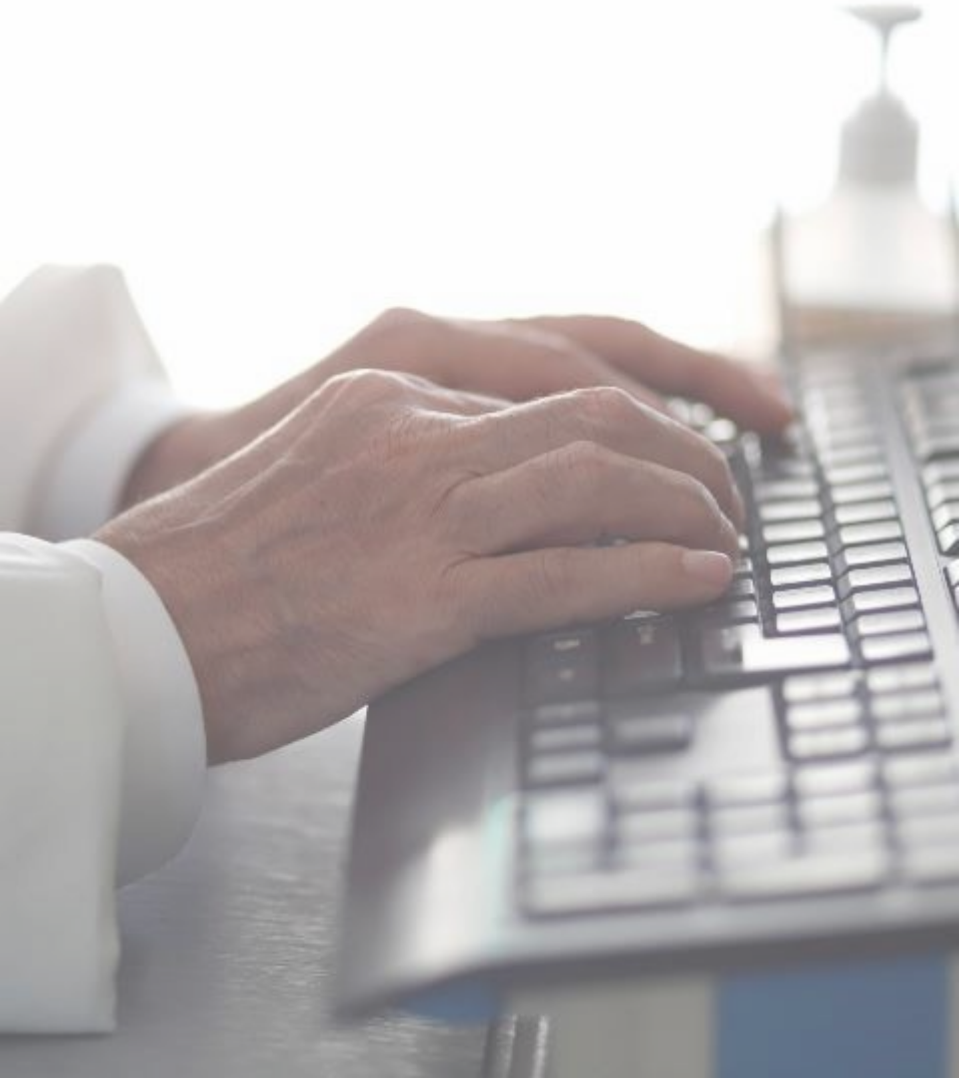


Impact of Facility Resources on Judicial Duties

- Participating justices were asked the extent to which the availability of facility resources impact their ability to carry out their judicial duties efficiently, effectively, and with judicial independence.
- The results indicate that a significant portion face challenges when it comes to carrying out their role. Specifically, 66% and 60% believe there's at least a moderate negative impact on their efficiency and effectiveness, respectively, in role execution. Within this, one in five (21%) indicated the impact is significantly negative on efficiency while 16% indicated the same about the impact on effectiveness.
- When it comes to judicial independence, a notable 40% indicate that facility resources have no bearing on their duties. However, while lower, the 35% that expressed that the facility resources have at least a moderate negative impact on executing duties with judicial independence is still significant.

Impact of Facilities on Efficiency, Role Execution, and Independence





Technology

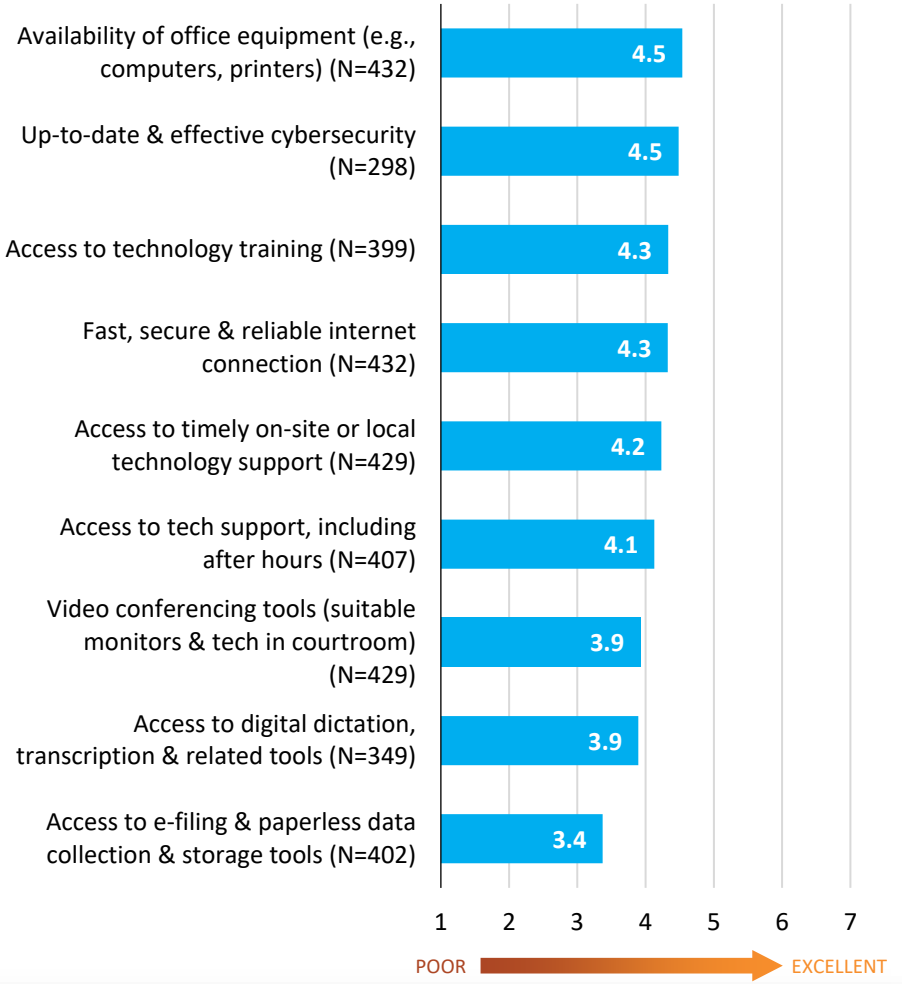
- Evaluation of Technology Infrastructure
- Impact of Technological Resources on Judicial Duties

Evaluation of Technology Infrastructure

- Participating justices were asked about the quality of the technology-related infrastructure at their workplace. Respondents were given a list of nine attributes and were asked to award a rating on a scale from 1 (poor) to 7 (excellent).
- While six of nine technology related attributes were awarded a passing grade, there were no technology attributes that rated particularly high. The highest rated aspects were up-to-date and effective cybersecurity and availability of standard office equipment (computers/laptops, printers, etc.), both scoring 4.5 out of 7.
- At the other end of the spectrum, three attributes received a failing grade. The most deficient area in the eyes of respondents is availability and access to e-filing and other paperless data collection and storage applications, which was rated at only 3.4. Other subpar attributes include video conferencing equipment and platforms and availability, and access to digital dictation, transcription and other similar tools and applications. They were both rated at 3.9.
- While the technology-related infrastructure received varied ratings, it's important to note that overall, the scores hovered around the mid-range, suggesting a mediocre level of satisfaction among participants. This indicates that while certain areas are being addressed adequately, there is significant room for improvement across the board to ensure optimal workplace efficiency and satisfaction.

Our access to technology is FAR behind what the lawyers who appear before us enjoy. The technology gap is increasing.

Ratings of Key Technological Amenities and Features

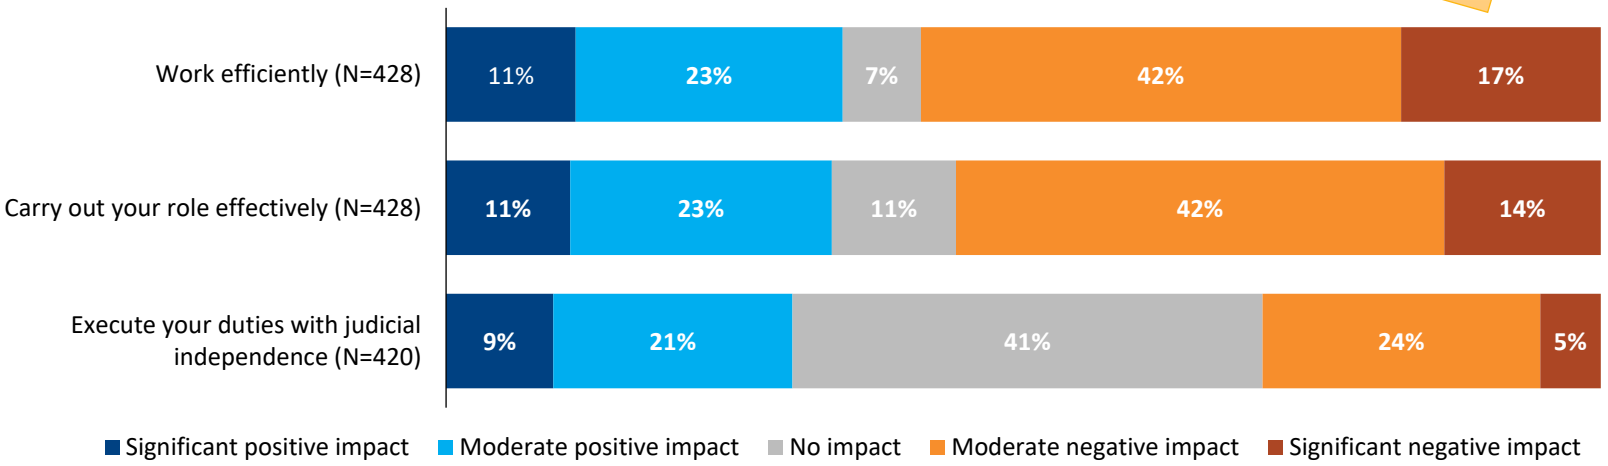


Impact of Technological Resources on Judicial Duties

- Participating justices were asked to indicate the extent to which the availability of technology resources and support impacts their ability to work efficiently, carry out their role effectively, and execute their duties with judicial independence.
- The results are similar to those for facilities presented earlier.
- A discernible trend emerges indicating challenges faced by the Justices due to technological resource constraints. Specifically, when examining efficiency and role effectiveness, a combined 59% and 56% respectively believe there's at least a moderate negative impact due to technology resource limitations. The portion indicating that the impact is significant sits at 17% and 14%, respectively.
- When it comes to judicial independence, a significant 41% indicate that technological resources have no bearing on their duties. However, it is again significant that 29% indicated that the availability of technology has at least a moderate negative influence on their ability to execute duties with judicial independence.

In Ontario we have been forced to use Caselines in place of court services staff. It has added 2 hours to each workday, causes no end of delays due to lack of materials, is not secure and has completely eroded our independence in the way we work.

Impact of Technology on Efficiency, Role Execution, and Independence



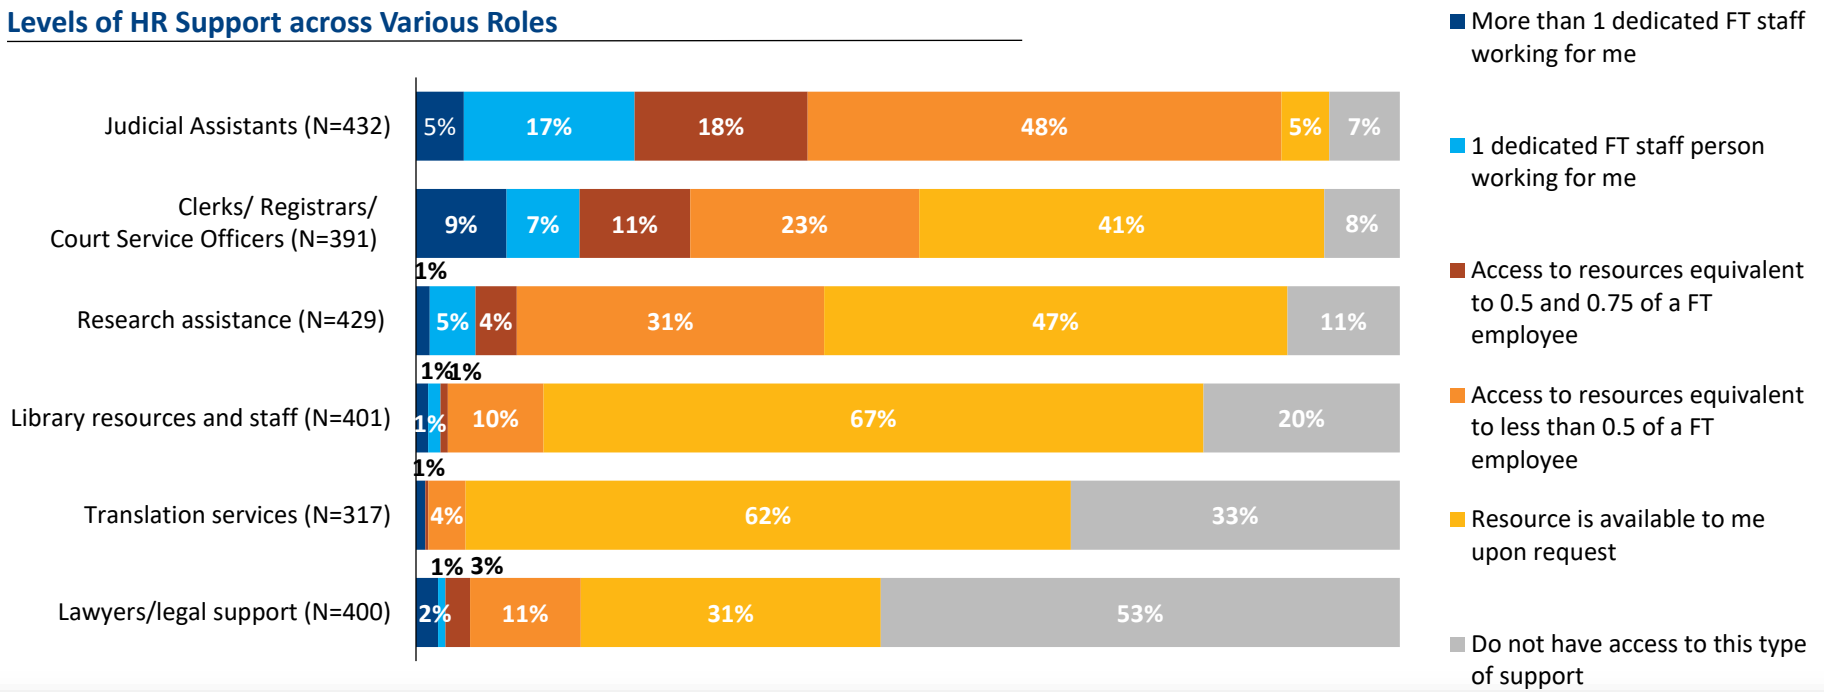
Human Resources

- Availability of HR Support in Judicial Roles
- Adequate Access to HR Support
- Impact of HR Support on Judicial Duties

Availability of HR Support in Judicial Roles

- With the exception of lawyers/legal support, the majority of Justices report having each type of HR resource available to them, whether on their staff or upon request. For lawyers/legal support, only 47% have them available with only 17% indicating they are on staff.
- At the other end of the spectrum, over nine in ten (93%) report having access to judicial assistants with 88% indicating they are on staff. Clerks/registrars/court service officers are the next most common with 92% having access, but only 51% indicated they are on staff. This is followed by research assistants at 88% for access and 41% on staff.
- For the remaining two levels, only a handful have library resources and personnel (13%) or translation services (5%) on staff, while 67% and 62% have access on demand.

Levels of HR Support across Various Roles

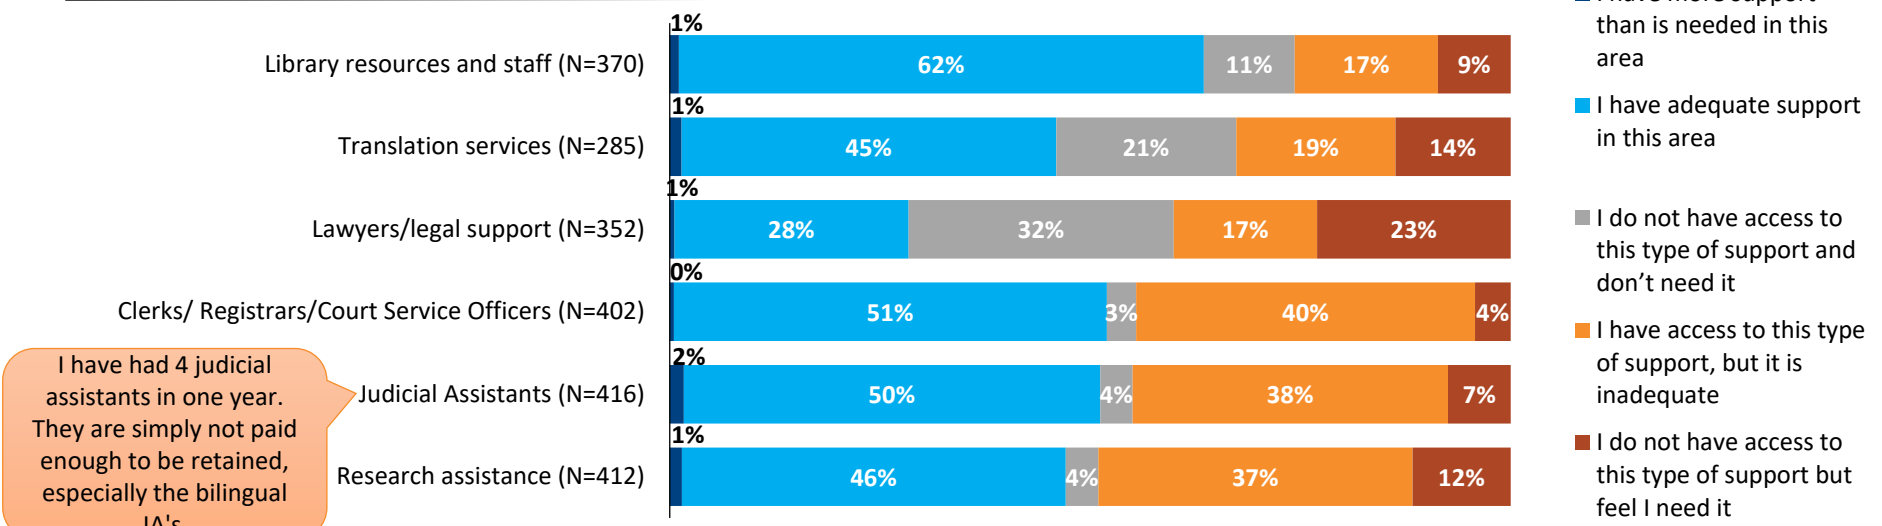


Adequate Access to HR Support

- When asked about the adequacy of HR support, only 1% to 2% indicated that they had more than they need in each area.
- At least half of respondents confirm receiving adequate support (including those with more than enough) in the areas of library resources (63%), clerks/registrars/court service officers (52%), and judicial assistants (52%). However, for the latter two, while half feel resources are adequate, just under half (45% for both) indicated that resources are inadequate or not offered but needed.
- For research assistant support, less than half, at 47%, believe they have what they need while 49% find it lacking or need it but don't have it but need it.
- When it comes to translation services, 46% feel their needs are met or exceeded. However, there's a marked split: 19% find their support inadequate, and 14% don't have it but need it. However, 21% see no need for this support.
- As for lawyers/legal support, only 29% feel sufficiently supported, while a notable 23% would like it but lack access and 17% feel their resources are inadequate. However, the most significant proportion, at 32%, don't see a need for it at all.
- Overall, while many justices acknowledge a baseline of support, there are areas where support could be improved particularly when it comes to judicial administrative staff as well as both judicial and research assistants.

We are in desperate need of additional court support staff. Existing staff are overwhelmed by the current workload. Mistakes happen as a result. Court files are not updated in a timely way, resulting in incomplete files coming before the court.

Level of Access to HR Support



I have had 4 judicial assistants in one year. They are simply not paid enough to be retained, especially the bilingual JA's.

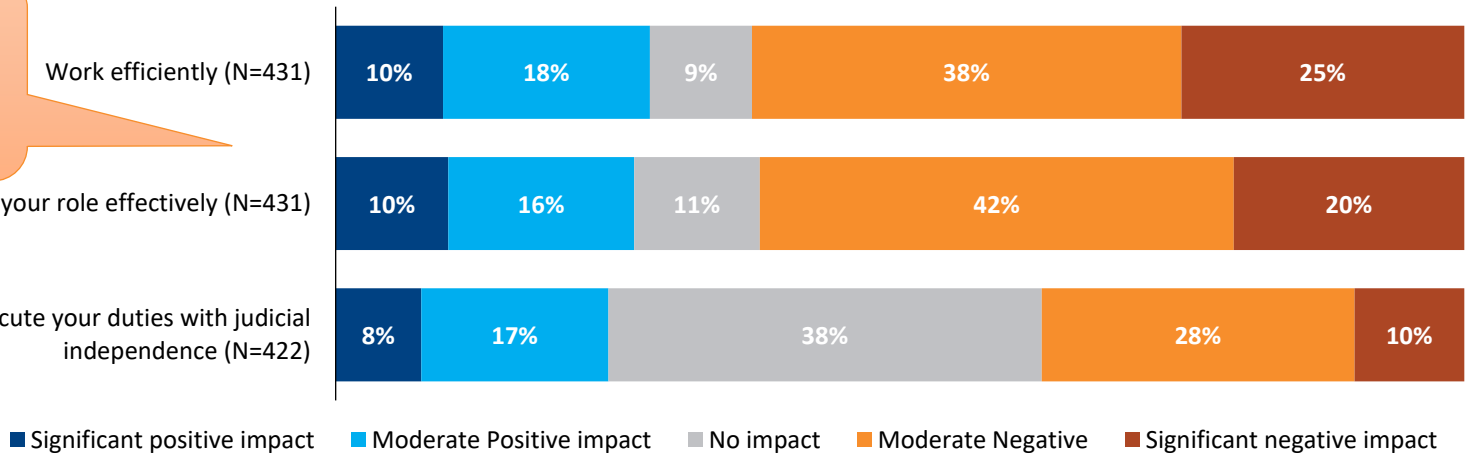
Impact of HR Support on Judicial Duties

- Participating justices were asked to indicate the extent to which the availability of HR support impacts their ability to work efficiently, carry out their role effectively, and execute their duties with judicial independence.
- Results are again similar to those for other resources presented earlier
- When asked about the influence of human resource support on their professional duties, 63% of the justices believe it has a negative impact on working efficiently, and 62% believe the same about carrying out their role effectively. For working efficiency, one quarter (25%) indicated the impact is significant while 20% indicated a significant impact on effectiveness.
- Concerning judicial independence, 38% indicated there is no impact. However, results again show a significant 10% indicating there is a significant negative impact.

> The most critical issue for me is use of a law clerk and secretarial assistant. I share a law clerk with 9 other judges and a secretary with 3 other judges. I could be substantially more efficient with a dedicated law clerk or a shared clerk with one other judge.

Impact of HR Support on Efficiency, Role Execution, and Independence

> The scarce judicial resources are wasted by having judges do their own clerical work; efficiency is dragged down by lack of clerical and administrative support.

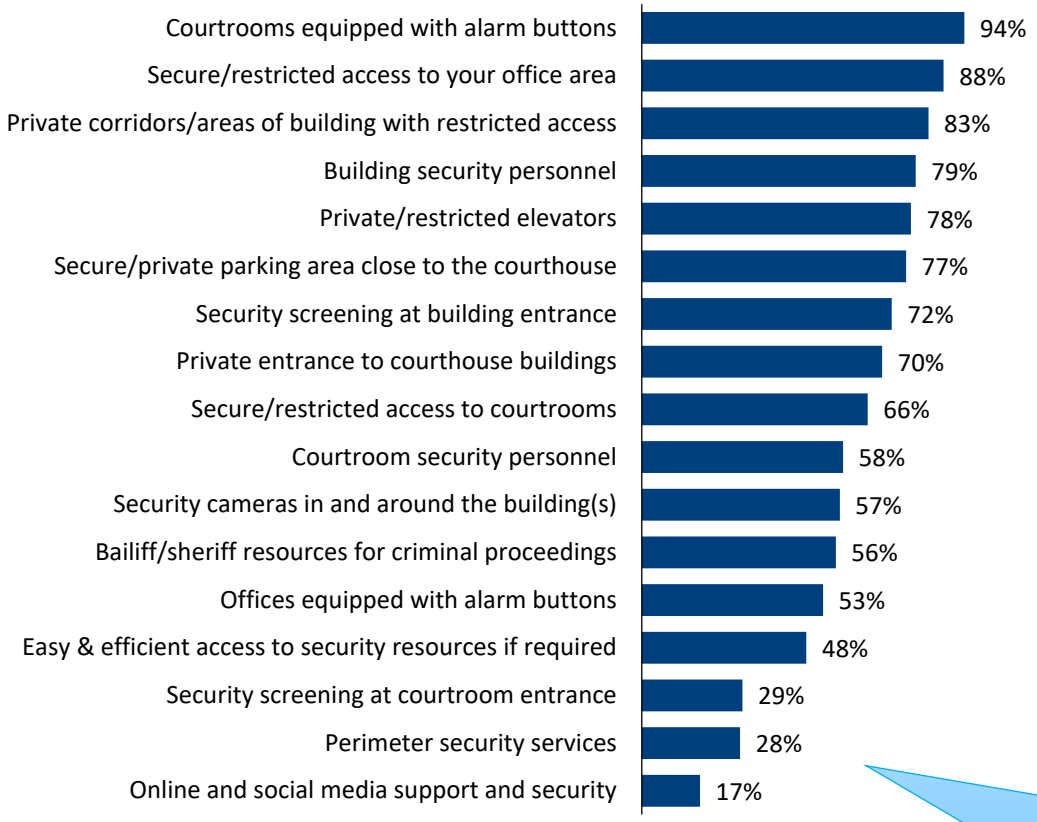


Security

- Security Measures in Place for Judges
- Perceived Adequacy of Security Measures and Supports
- Perceived Need for Absent Security Measures
- Impact of Security Support and Safety Measures on Judicial Duties

Security Measures in Place for Judges

Availability of Specific Security Measures and Supports



Base n = 432
Percentages do not sum to 100% due to multiple responses

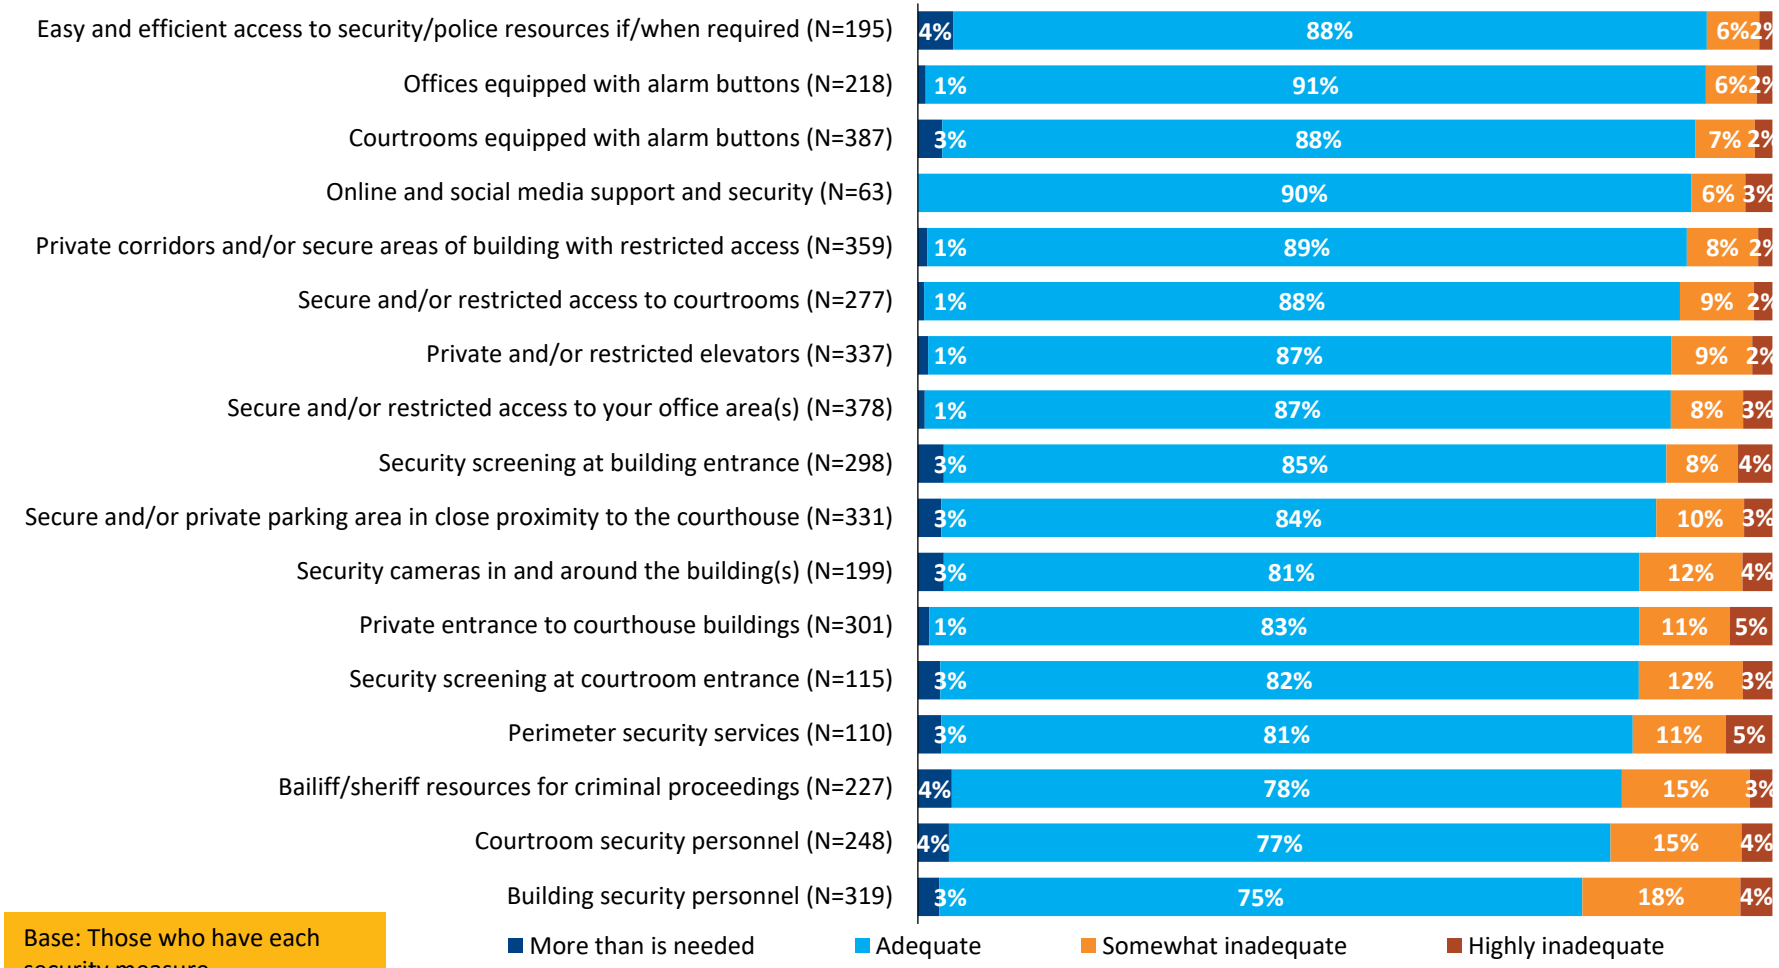
- Justices were asked to indicate which security measures/supports (from a list of 17) were available to them.
- At the forefront, a notable 94% of respondents confirm the presence of alarm buttons in courtrooms. This is followed closely by having secure and/or restricted access to their office areas at 88% followed by private corridors or secure building areas with restricted access (83%), building security personnel (79%), private or restricted elevators (78%) and secure and/or private parking area in close proximity to the courthouse (77%). Each of these is available to more than three-quarters of justices.
- On the flip side, security screening at the courtroom entrance is available for just 29% of participants while only 28% report the provision of perimeter security services. Online and social media support and security is the least common, with only 17% having access to such resources.
- The data show a strong inclination towards immediate response and access control measures, while areas like digital security and entry point screening at courtrooms remain comparatively underrepresented.

I have access to private parking close to a secure private entrance to my courthouse, but there is no security in the parking area. There should be SECURE parking for judges at every courthouse. Also, I have a distress/panic button in my chambers, but it does not work.

Perceived Adequacy of Security Measures and Supports

- Justices who indicated that each of the security measures or supports are in place were asked to indicate the degree to which the measures or supports are adequate. Their responses are summarized in the graph on the next page.
- The results reveal that among those who have each security measure, a significant majority rated them as either adequate or more than is needed. In fact, between 78% and 92% combined awarded one of these to ratings.
- Additionally, a very low proportion rated any of the security measures as highly inadequate (between 2% and 5%).
- However, there are some security measures that were rated as somewhat or highly inadequate by a larger proportion of respondents, including: building security personnel (22%), courtroom security personnel (19%), bailiff/sheriff resources for criminal proceedings (18%), security cameras in and around the buildings (16%), and perimeter security services (16%).

Perceived Adequacy of Security Measures and Supports (cont'd)

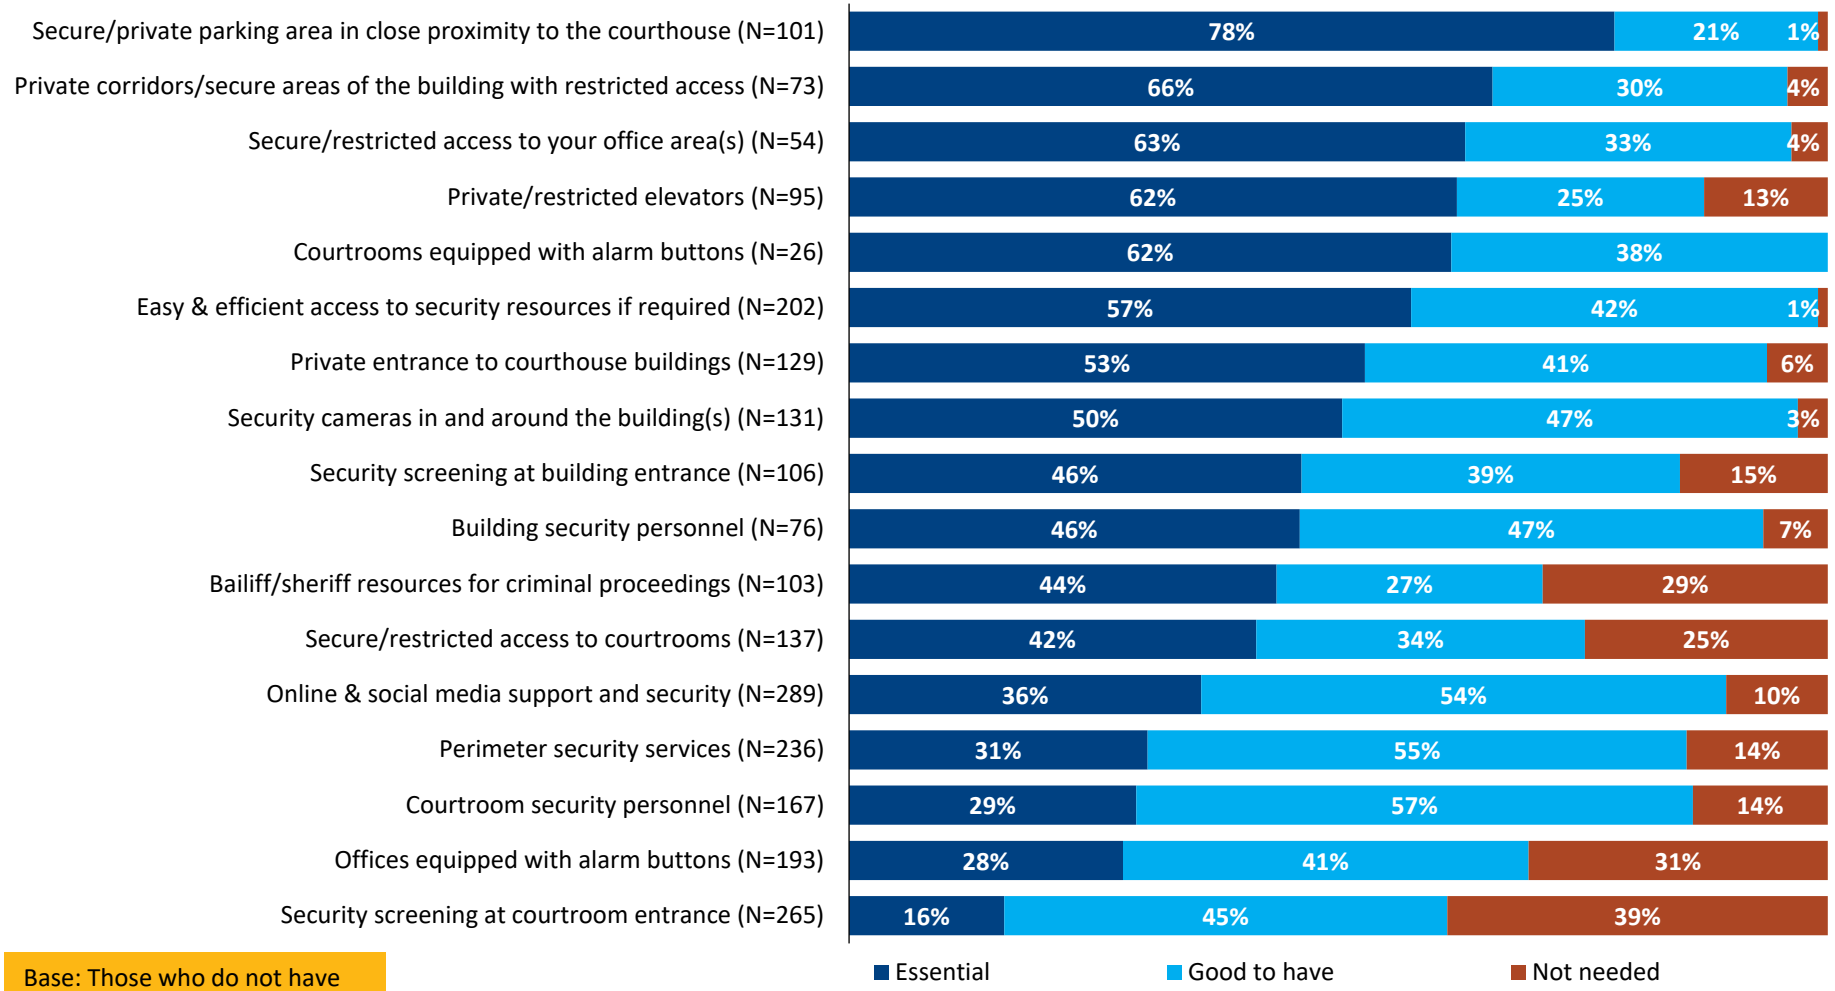


Base: Those who have each security measure.

Perceived Need for Absent Security Measures

- Justices who indicated that each of the security measures or supports is NOT in place were asked to indicate the extent to which each is needed. Their responses are summarized in the graph on the next page.
- While the graph shows the portion who feel each measure would be "good to have“ or not needed, the analysis focuses on the portion indicating measures are essential. Among the 17 measures, eight were ranked as essential by half or more of those who do not currently have it.
- The most essential security measures, where they are not currently provided, include parking and access control. 78% (of those who don't have it) felt that a secure or private parking area close to the courthouse was essential while 66% considered private corridors or secure zones with limited access in buildings to be essential and 63% viewed restricted access to their office spaces as essential as well.
- Other significant gaps where more than half of those without feel it is essential include alarm buttons in courtrooms (62%), private or restricted elevators (62%), easy and efficient access to security/police resources if/when required (57%), private entrance to courthouse buildings (53%) and security cameras in and around the building(s) (50%).
- At the other end of the spectrum, only 16% deem security screening at courtroom entrance as essential.
- For all other measures, between 28% and 46% of those who do not have them indicated that they are essential.

Perceived Need for Absent Security Measures (cont'd)

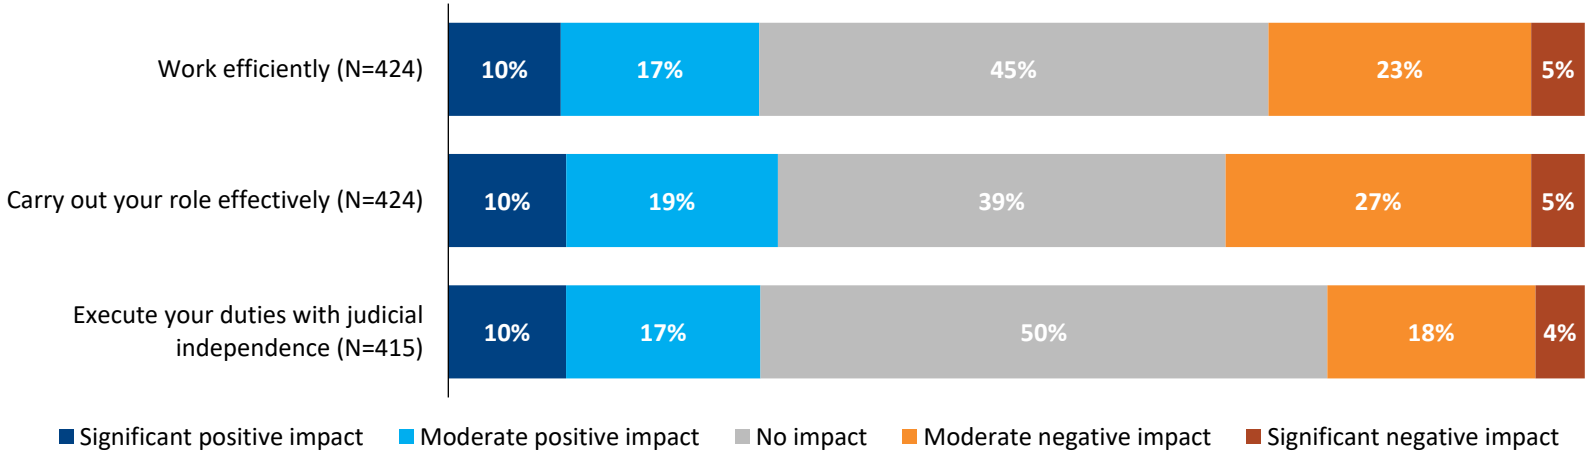


Base: Those who do not have each security measure.

Impact of Security Support and Safety Measures on Judicial Duties

- Participating justices were asked to indicate the extent to which the availability of security measures and support impacts their ability to work efficiently, carry out their role effectively, and execute their duties with judicial independence.
- Results are somewhat different than for other resources presented earlier.
- Moreover, respondents were far more likely to indicate no impacts on work efficiency (45%) and effectiveness (39%). Despite this shift, the portion indicating a negative impact is still sizable at 28% and 32% respectively.
- While half (50%) indicated there is no impact on their ability to execute duties with judicial independence, a significant one in five (22%) indicated there is a negative impact.

Impact of Security Support and Safety Measures on Judicial Duties

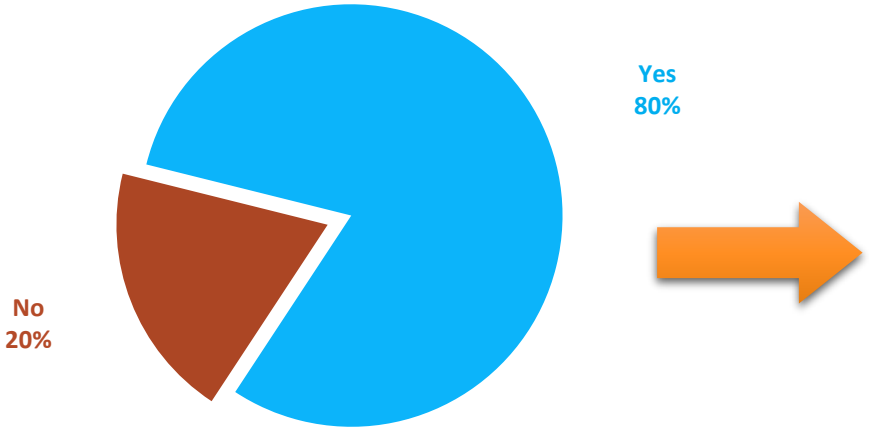


Visiting Judge

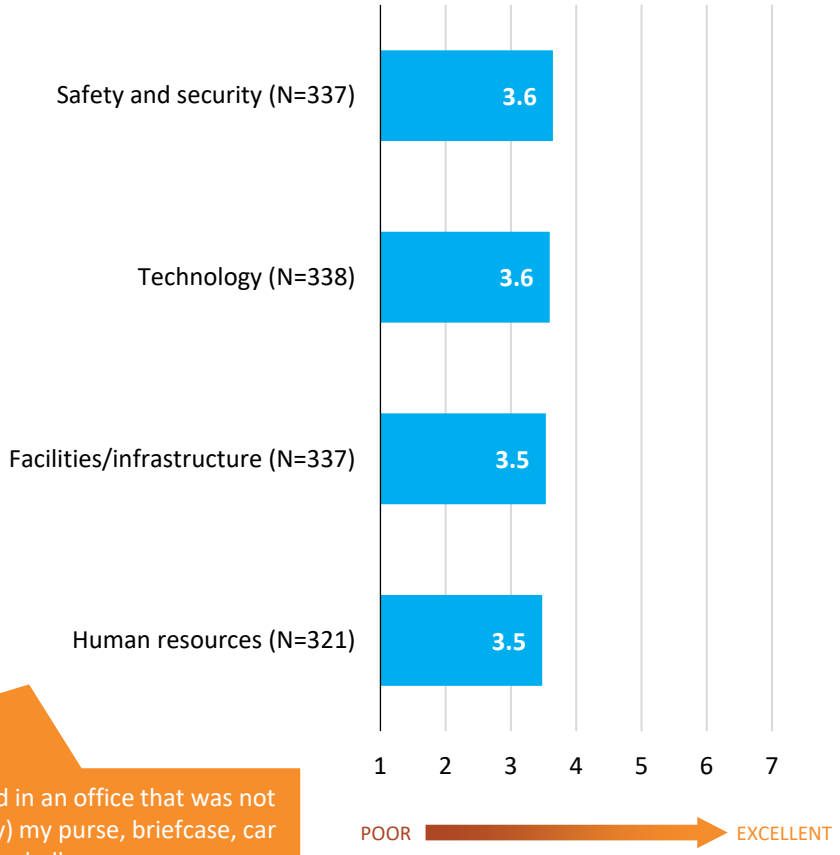
- Visiting Judge and Rating of Resources as Visiting Judge

Visiting Judge and Rating of Resources as Visiting Judge

Travel to Courts Other than Primary Work Location (N=433)



Ratings of Resources as a Visiting Judge



- The research indicates that four in five (80%) justices travel or circuit to serve in courts other than their primary work location.
- Visiting judges seem to have consistent feelings about the resources provided to them while away from their home court with all ratings hovering below the mid-point of the scale at 3.5 to 3.6. Clearly resources while travelling or circuiting are an issue as all resource categories received a failing grade.

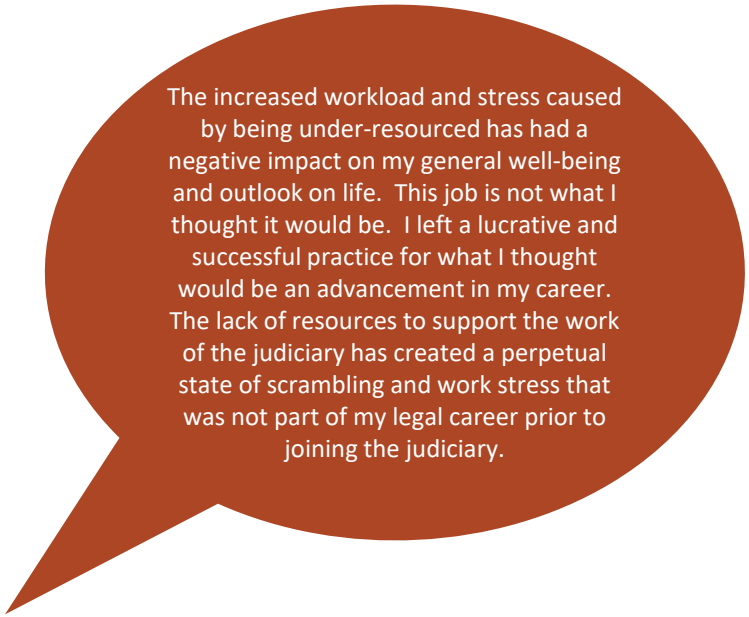
A recent example: I was assigned to a Courthouse that was not my home Court. I was placed in an office that was not secured and opened off the main hallway. When I went into Court (through a public hallway) my purse, briefcase, car keys, robes and all other personal belongings were in an unlocked office in the hallway.

Impacts of Resourcing

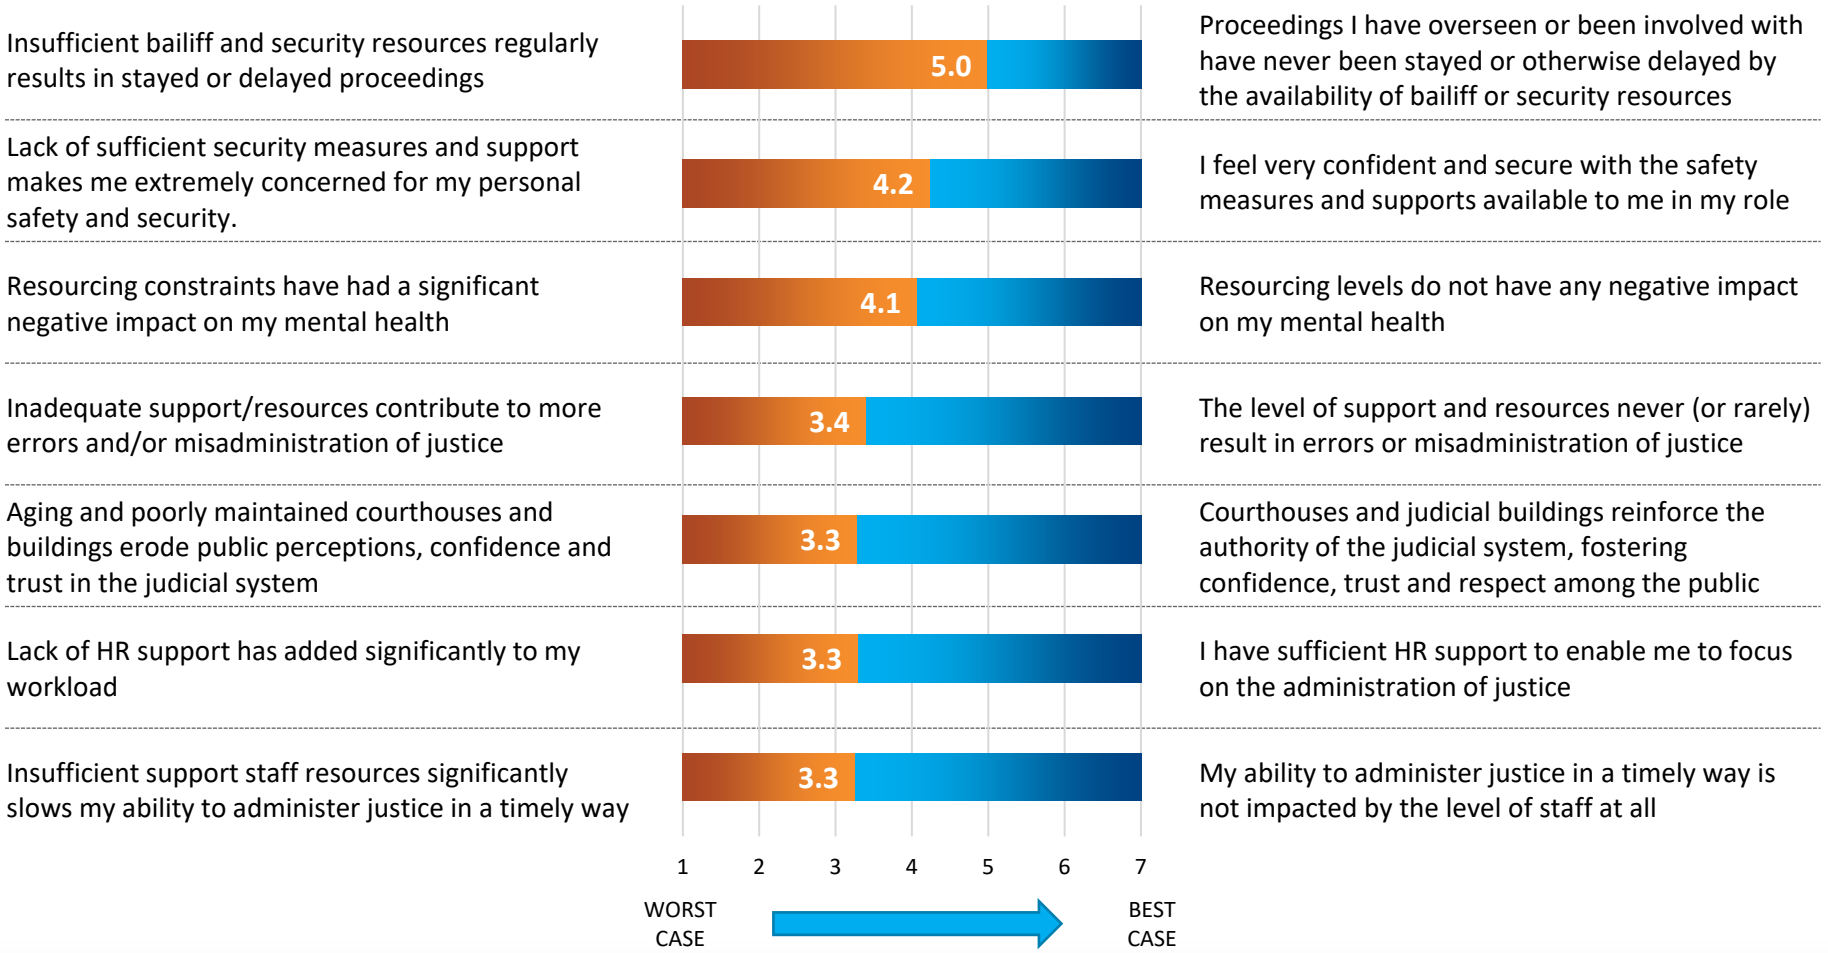
- Impacts of Resourcing on Judicial Independence
- Judges' Retirement Projections Versus Intentions
- Impacts of Resourcing on Decision to Retire Early

Impacts of Resourcing on Judicial Independence

- Participating justices were asked to evaluate a series of contrasting statements describing their current workplace environment on a scale of 1 to 7. A score of 4 signifies a neutral stance. Scores below this mark represent a negative workplace perception, while those above it suggest a positive view. To interpret the chart, a higher score is favorable.
- The only real positive observation from the results is that justices generally feel that proceedings are not affected by security bailiff or security resources, as evidenced by a score of 5.0 out of 7.
- Areas that scored close to the midpoint are borderline and include confidence in the existing measures and supports available to justices to allow them to perform their role (4.2) and the belief that resource levels do not adversely affect mental health (4.1).
- Areas of concern that received a failing grade include: The belief that levels of support rarely lead to errors in the administration of justice (3.4), adequate HR support enabling justices to concentrate solely on the administration of justice (3.3), the sentiment that courthouses and judicial buildings effectively uphold the authority of the judicial system (3.3), and the perception of the impact on delivering timely justice administration (3.3).

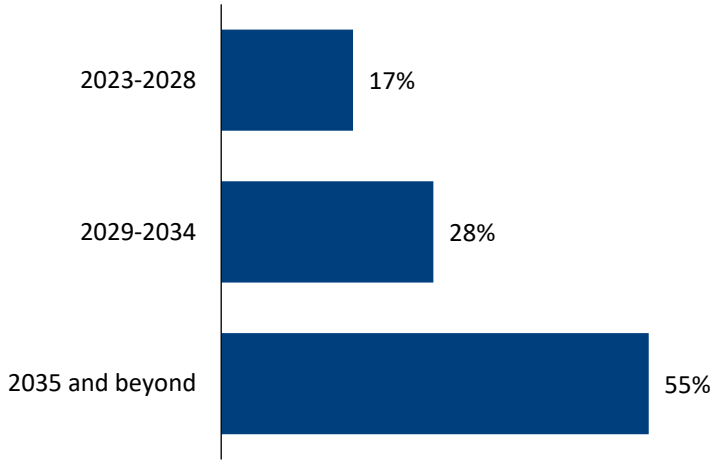


Impacts of Resourcing on Judicial Independence (Cont'd)

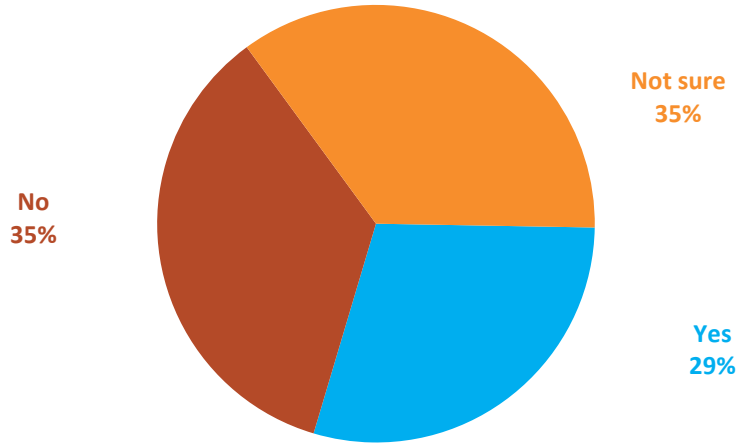


Judges' Retirement Projections Versus Intentions

Year when Mandatory Retirement Reached (N=415)



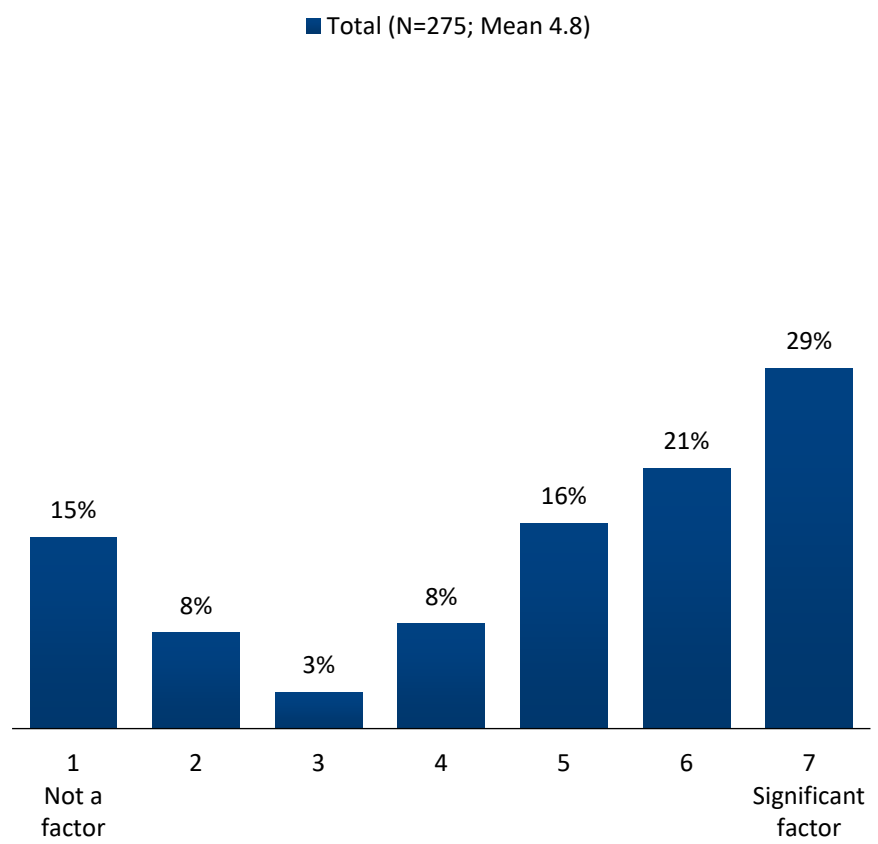
Planning to Serve Until Mandatory Retirement Date (N=416)



- While only 17% of judges are set for mandatory retirement within the upcoming five years (spanning from 2023 to 2028), a significant 55% won't reach their mandatory retirement until 2035 or later.
- When exploring their intentions to serve until that stipulated retirement date, only 29% express a commitment to do so. Equally, 35% either have decided against serving up to that date or remain uncertain about their decision.

Impacts of Resourcing on Decision to Retire Early

Impacts of Resourcing on Decision to Retire Early



Base: Those who so not plan to serve to the end of their term or who are unsure.

- The results indicate that among those who do not plan to serve to the end of their term or who are unsure, the current level of resourcing and support plays a role in the decision of many to retire or potentially retire early.
- A substantial 29% of respondents consider the current level of resourcing and support to be a significant factor (7 out of 7) in their decision to retire or potentially retire early while a further 37% of respondents rate its impact at a 5 or 6.
- The mean score of 4.8 indicates that, on average, the level of resourcing and support is viewed as moderately significant in influencing the decision to retire early among the participants.

The impact the lack of attention to the human and physical infrastructure required to administer justice in the province is significant for judges, judicial assistants, and individuals who work in the courtroom and in courts administration. I am very concerned that this significant (negative) impact will increase the rate at which judges retire as soon after the 10 year mark as they feel is reasonable.

Roles for the CSCJA

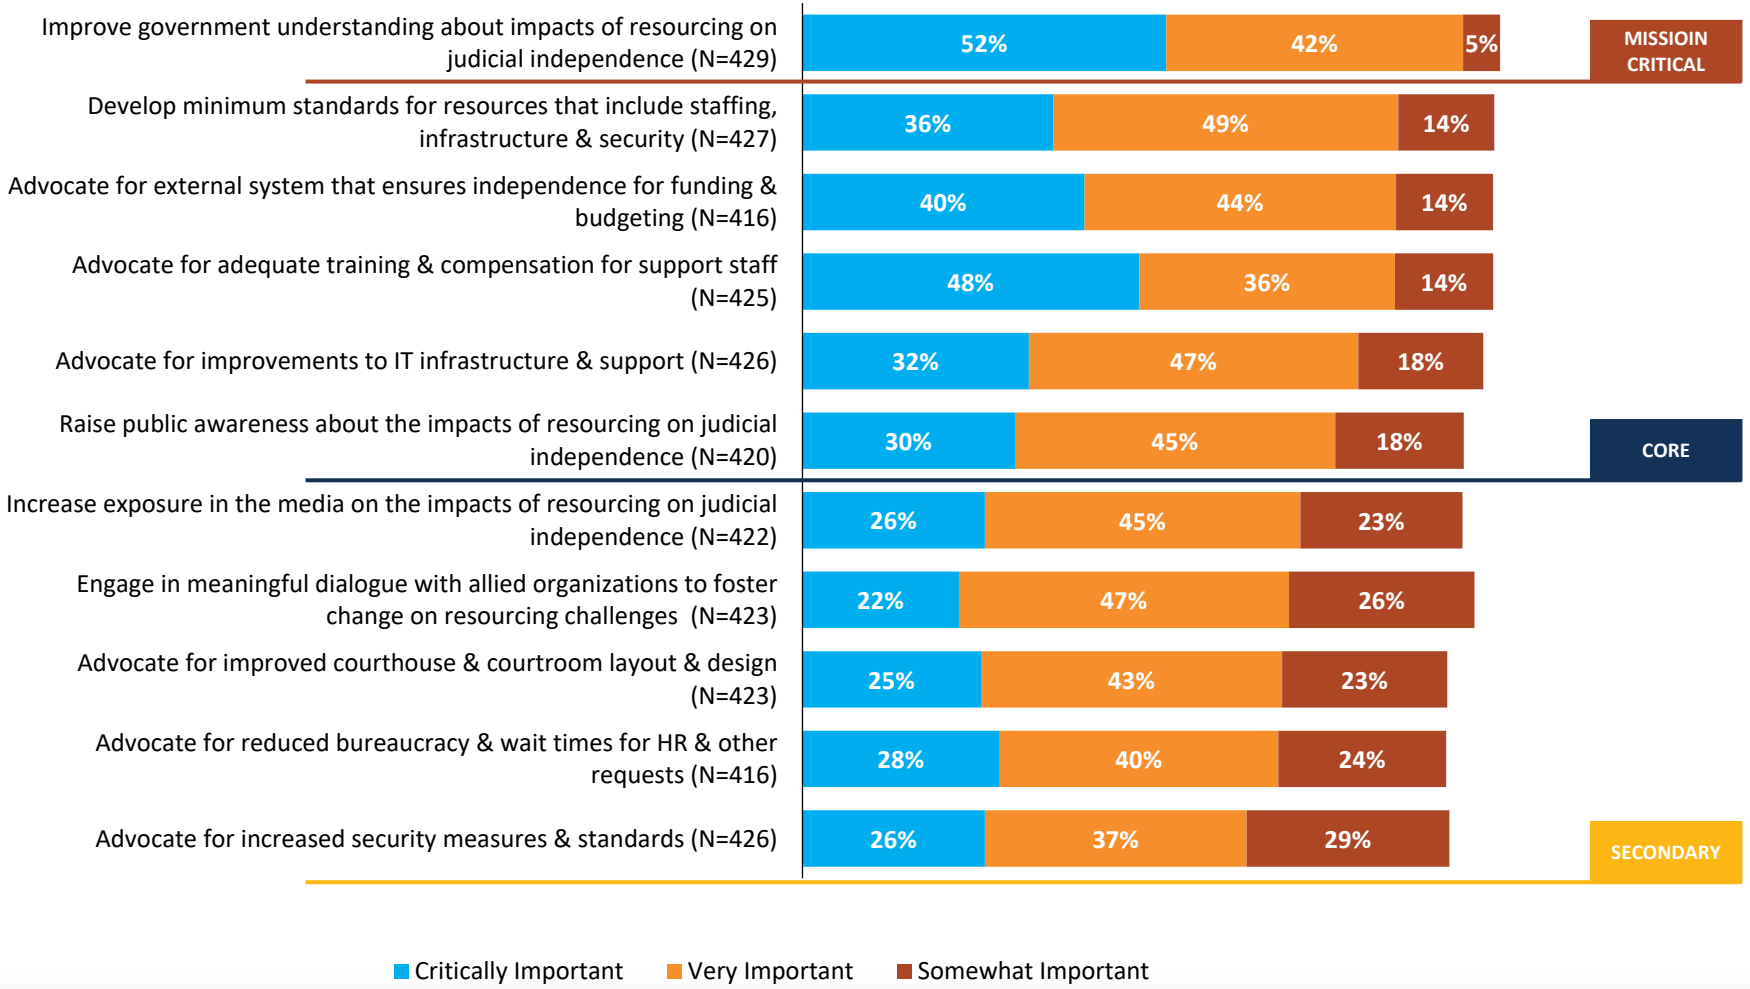
- Potential Roles for CSCJA to Address Resourcing Issues
- Order of Importance for Focus Areas

Potential Roles for CSCJA to Address Resourcing Issues

- Justices were asked to indicate how important eleven areas were for CSCJA to focus on when addressing resource issues that may impact judicial independence. All of the areas were rated as at least somewhat important by 92% of respondents or more, indicating that these all roles are important on some level to most members. However, looking at those that rated the focus areas as critically or very important combined, they can be divided into four categories as follows:
- Mission Critical: Mission critical focus areas are those that are ranked as at least very important by most members and critically important by more than 50% of members. For these areas, it is critical that CSCJA goes above and beyond in delivering them. Improving government understanding and awareness about the impacts of resourcing on judicial independence was the only areas rated as a mission critical, with 52% indicating that it's critically important and 94% rating as at least very important.
- Core Roles: These focus areas are rated at least very important by more than 75% of justices, but with fewer than half indicating they are critically important. These are areas where it is very important for CSCJA to deliver in the eyes of Justices. Core focus areas include: developing minimum standards for resources across areas that include staffing, infrastructure and security (85% critically plus very important), advocating for an external system that ensures independence when it comes to funding and budgeting for superior court justices (84%), advocating for adequate training and compensation for support staff (84%), advocating for improvements to IT infrastructure and support (79%), and raising public awareness about the impacts of resourcing on judicial independence (75%).
- Secondary Roles: Secondary focus areas are those that are important for justices, but they are not necessarily 'must-haves'. Areas in this category are rated as critically or very important by 50% to 74% of justices. Attributes in this group include: increasing exposure in the media on the impacts of resourcing on judicial independence (71%), engaging in meaningful dialogue with allied organizations to foster change on resourcing challenges that impact judicial independence (69%), advocating for improved courthouse and courtroom layout and design (68%), advocating for reduced bureaucracy and wait times for HR and other requests (68%) and advocating for increased security measures and standards (63%).
- Niche Roles: The final tier are only critically important to a small portion of judges. There were no areas that were rated as 'niche' by participating justices.

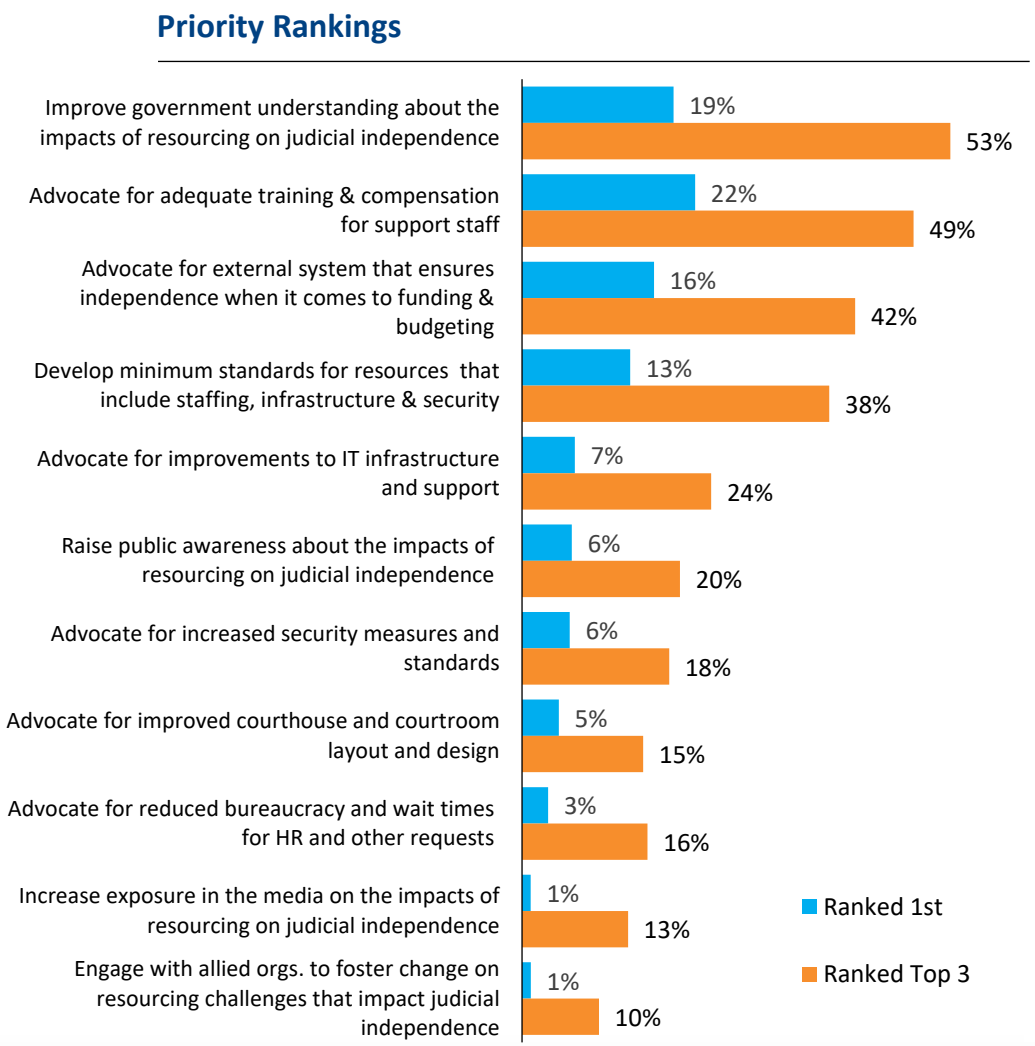
Potential Roles for CSCJA to Address Resourcing Issues (Cont'd)

Importance of Focus Areas



Order of Importance for Focus Areas

- In addition to rating importance, participating justices were also asked to rank the focus areas in order of importance.
- Improving government understanding and awareness about the impacts of resourcing on judicial independence is again the top role with just over half (53%) ranking it in their top three and one in five (19%) ranking it first. Advocating for adequate training and compensation for support staff is a close second with 49% picking it in their top three and 22% selecting it first overall.
- While the priority rankings show a clear top tier, they also show a second tier that is not far behind. Specifically, advocating for an external system that ensures independence when it comes to funding and budgeting for superior court justices (16% top choice and 42% top three) and developing minimum standards for resources across areas that include staffing, infrastructure and security (13% top choice and 38% top three) represent the second-tier areas of focus.
- Combined, the top four represent 70% of all first-place rankings.
- The remaining focus areas were rated within their top three by less than a quarter of justices, with increasing exposure in the media on the impacts of resourcing on judicial independence and engaging in meaningful dialogue with allied organizations to foster change on resourcing challenges that impact judicial independence as the bottom two.



Key Results by Segment

- Region
- Funding Source
- Experience

Results by Funding Source

Facilities

- Although justices from both provincially and federally funded courts report similar ratings for facilities and amenities, those from provincially funded courts are more likely to indicate a significant negative impact on their work efficiency, effectiveness in their roles, and ability to execute duties with judicial independence due to their facilities and amenities.

Technology

- Federally funded justices are more likely to provide a lower rating to a fast, secure, and reliable internet connection.
- Provincially funded justices are more likely to provide a lower rating to availability of standard office equipment, up-to-date and effective cybersecurity, availability and access to e-filing and other paperless data collection and storage applications, access to timely on-site or local technology support, and access to tech support, including after hours.

HR Support

- Provincially funded justices are more likely to have clerks/registrars/court service officers available upon request when compared to justices whose courts are federally funded. Meanwhile federally funded justices are more likely to have library resources and staff available upon request.
- Provincially funded justices are less likely to have access to lawyers/legal support when compared to justices whose courts are federally funded.
- Provincially funded justices are more likely to indicate that their support from clerks/registrars/court service officers as well as translation services is inadequate, while the reverse is true for federally funded justices.
- Justices whose courts are provincially funded are more likely to indicate that there is a negative impact on their work efficiency, effectiveness in their roles, and ability to execute duties with judicial independence due to their level of HR support when compared to justices whose courts are federally funded.

Security

- There are no material differences on security measures available based on funding source.
- Among justices who currently have building security personnel and bailiff/sheriff resources for criminal proceedings available to them, federally funded justices are more likely to indicate that these measures are adequate.
- Among justices who currently do not have this measure in place, provincially funded justices are more likely to indicate that perimeter security is not needed while federally funded justices are more likely to indicate that it is good to have.
- Provincially funded justices are also more likely to indicate that security cameras in and around the building, private corridors and/or secure areas of the building with restricted access and bailiff/sheriff resources are essential, while federally funded justices are more likely to indicate that the latter is not needed.
- There are no material differences when it comes to the impact of security on justices' ability to carry out their duties efficiently, effectively, and with judicial independence.

Visiting Judges

- Justices whose courts are federally funded are more likely to travel or circuit to serve courts other than their primary work location when compared to provincially funded justices, however there are not material differences when it comes to ratings of facilities, technology, human resources, and security while travelling.

Impacts of Resourcing on Judicial Independence

- Federally funded justices are more likely to have higher scores on ability to administer justice in a timely way due to level of staff, proceedings not being stayed or delayed by the availability of bailiff or security resources, level of support and resources never (or rarely) resulting in errors or misadministration of justice, and having sufficient HR support that enables focus on the administration of justice.

Intentions for Retirement

- Justices whose courts are federally funded are less likely to serve until their mandatory retirement date and are more likely to indicate that their current level of resourcing and support is a significant factor in that decision.

Results by Region

Facilities

- Justices residing in Quebec were more likely to give a lower average rating to the availability of courtrooms, whereas those in BC provided the highest average rating.
- Justices in the Atlantic region tended to rate building maintenance lower, while those in Ontario gave it the highest average rating.
- In Quebec, justices gave lower average ratings for access to amenities like drinking water, fridges, and microwaves.
- Justices who reside in the Atlantic region were more likely to provide a lower rating to access to dedicated/private parking while Justices in Alberta and BC had the highest average rating.
- Quebec justices provided lower average ratings regarding the sufficiency of courthouse staff and services compared to others.
- Justices in the Atlantic were more likely to report sharing courthouses or courtrooms with other judges or organizations.
- In BC, justices were less likely to report a negative impact on work efficiency due to facilities. No significant regional differences were noted in terms of carrying out roles effectively or maintaining judicial independence.

Technology

- Justices in the Prairies (incl. the Territories) gave a lower average rating to up-to-date and effective cybersecurity, while BC justices provided the highest ratings.
- Justices who reside in BC awarded a higher average rating to availability of standard office equipment.
- Justices in both the Prairies (incl. the Territories) and the Atlantic regions gave lower ratings to availability and access to e-filing and other paperless data collection and storage applications, availability and access to digital dictation, transcription and other similar tools and applications, access to technology training, and availability of secure office space and meeting rooms. BC justices, however, were more likely to provide a higher rating for the latter area.
- Justices in BC and Alberta gave higher average ratings for timely on-site or local technology support. In contrast, those in the Atlantic region rated this aspect lower.
- Regarding technology, BC justices were less likely than those in other regions to report negative impacts on work efficiency, role effectiveness, and judicial independence.

HR Support

- Justices in Quebec and the Atlantic region were less likely to report having direct access to judicial assistants.
- Direct access to clerks, registrars, or court service officers was reported to be less common among justices in Alberta and the Atlantic region.
- Justices in the Prairies (incl. the Territories) reported having less direct access to research assistance.
- Access to lawyers/legal support and library resources and staff was less common for justices in both the Prairies (incl. the Territories) and the Atlantic region.
- Justices who reside in BC were less likely to have direct access to translation services.
- Justices residing in BC were more likely to indicate that they have research assistance and lawyers/legal support but that it is inadequate while those in the Atlantic region were more likely to indicate that they do not have access to these supports but feel they need both.
- Those residing in Quebec were more likely to indicate that they either don't have access to translation services but need it or that they have this type of support, but it is inadequate. Those in Ontario were also more likely to indicate that their translation service support is inadequate.
- When it comes to library and resources staff, those residing in Prairies (incl. the Territories) were more likely to indicate that they either don't have access to this support but feel they need it or have access to this support, but it is inadequate.
- There were no material difference on work efficiency, carrying out role effectively, or on judicial independence due to HR support.

Results by Region (Cont'd)

Facilities Security  Interpret with caution due to low sample sizes.

- Justices residing in Alberta were more likely to have all security measures listed available to them aside from security cameras in and around buildings for which Prairies (incl. the Territories) was the highest, bailiff/sheriff resources for criminal proceedings for which BC was the highest, and easy and efficient access to security/police resources if/when required for which Ontario and Quebec were the highest.
- Justices who reside in BC were less likely to have perimeter security services, security screening at building entrance, courtroom security personnel, security screening at courtroom entrance, building security personnel, easy and efficient access to security/police resources if/when required, offices equipped with alarm buttons, and Secure and/or restricted access to courtrooms available to them.
- Justices residing in Prairies (incl. the Territories) were less likely to have courtrooms equipped with alarm buttons, private corridors and/or secure areas of the building with restricted access, private and/or restricted elevators and online and social media support and security available to them.
- Justices residing in Ontario were least likely to have bailiff/sheriff resources for criminal proceedings available to them.
- Justices residing in Quebec were less likely to have security cameras in and around the building(s), security screening at courtroom entrance, courtroom security personnel, bailiff/sheriff resources for criminal proceedings, and offices equipped with alarm buttons available to them.
- Judges residing in the Atlantic region were less likely to have perimeter security services, private entrance to courthouse buildings, private and/or restricted elevators, secure and/or restricted access to your office area(s), and secure and/or private parking area in close proximity to the courthouse available to them.
- Of those who have the listed security measures available to them, the only material differences in terms of adequacy was for offices equipped with alarm buttons and online social media support and security for which Quebec provided the lowest average rating, as well as for perimeter security services for which the Atlantic region was the lowest.
- Of justices who do not currently have this measure in place, those residing in BC were most likely to indicate that security and screening at building entrances is not needed. While those in Alberta were most likely to indicate that this measure is essential.
- Security screening at courtroom entrance was more likely to be not needed by justices residing in Alberta while courtroom security personnel was more likely to be deemed essential.
- Easy and efficient access to security/police resources if/when required was more likely to be deemed essential by justices residing in Quebec who do not currently have this measure in place.
- Offices equipped with alarm buttons, private entrance to courthouse buildings, private corridors and/or secure areas of the building with restricted access, and secure and/or restricted access to courtrooms were more likely to be deemed essential by justices residing in Quebec who do not currently have these measures in place.
- Private and/or restricted elevators and secure and/or restricted access to your office area(s) and online and social media support and security were more likely to be deemed essential by justices residing in Quebec and the Atlantic. Secure and/or private parking area in close proximity to the courthouse was also more likely to be deemed essential by justices residing in the Atlantic.
- Justices residing in the Atlantic were more likely to indicate a negative impact on efficiency and on judicial independence due to current security measures. There were no material difference for region on carrying out work effectively.

Visiting Judges

- Justices residing in Alberta, BC, and Quebec were more likely to travel or circuit to serve in courts other than their primary work locations than those in the other regions.
- Visiting judges whose primary work location is in BC provided lower ratings for facilities/infrastructure, human resources, and safety and security while giving a higher rating to technology when it comes to resources as a visiting judge.
- Visiting judges whose primary work location is the Atlantic provided a higher rating for facilities/infrastructure safety and security. Safety and security was also given a higher rating by justices whose primary work location is in Alberta.

Results by Region (Cont'd)

Impact on Judicial Independence

- The ability to administer justice in a timely way was given the lowest score by those residing in BC.
- Resourcing levels impact on mental health was given the lowest score by judges residing in Ontario.
- Courthouses and judicial buildings reinforcing the authority of the judicial system, fostering confidence, trust and respect among the public was given the lowest rating by those residing in the Atlantic region.

Importance of Focus Areas

- Justices residing in Quebec were more likely to give a higher importance score to advocating for adequate training and compensation for support staff.
- Justices residing in BC were more likely to give a lower importance score to increase exposure in the media on the impacts of resourcing on judicial independence, advocate for reduced bureaucracy and wait times for HR and other requests (supplies, equipment etc.), advocate for improved courthouse and courtroom layout and design, advocate for improvements to IT infrastructure and support, and engage in meaningful dialogue with allied organizations to foster change on resourcing challenges that impact judicial independence. Quebec was more likely to provide a higher importance score for the latter.
- Justices residing in Alberta were more likely to give a lower importance score to advocating for increased security measures and standards.
- Justices residing in BC were more likely to rank improve government understanding and awareness about the impacts of resourcing on judicial independence as their primary focus area.
- Justices residing in Quebec were more likely to rank advocate for adequate training and compensation for support staff as their primary focus area.
- Justices residing in Alberta were more likely to rank advocate for improved courthouse and courtroom layout and design as their primary focus area.

Retirement Intentions

- Justices residing in Ontario are least likely to indicate that they will not be serving until their mandatory retirement date.
- Justices residing in the Atlantic region and Prairies (incl. the Territories) are more likely to indicate that resourcing and support is not a factor in their decision to retire or potentially retire early, while Ontario is most likely to indicate that it is a factor.

Results by Years of Experience

Facilities

- As years of experience increases the average rating for availability of courtrooms decreases.
- Those with more than 20 years of experiences provided the highest rating for building maintenance.
- Those with 2 years or less of experience provided the highest rating for sufficient courthouse staff and services.
- Justices with more than 20 years of experience were less likely to indicate a negative impact on their ability to carry out their role effectively. There were no material differences for years of experience on the ability to work efficiently or execute duties with judicial independence.

Technology

- Up-to-date and effective cybersecurity was given the lowest rating by those with 2 years of experience or less.
- Availability and access to e-filing and other paperless data collection and storage applications and availability and access to digital dictation, transcription and other similar tools and applications was given the highest rating by the those with more than 20 years of experience.
- Those with more than 20 years of experience are more likely to indicate that technology has had a positive impact on their ability to work efficiently and carry out their role effectively. There was no material difference for executing duties with judicial independence.

HR Support

- There are no material differences for access to HR support or adequacy of HR support when it comes to years of experience.
- Those with more than 20 years of experience were more likely to indicate that HR support has had a positive impact on their ability to work efficiently, carry out their role effectively, and on executing duties with judicial independence.

Security

- As years of experience increases, justices were more likely to indicate that they have perimeter security services available to them.
- Those with more than 20 years of experience were most likely to indicate having secure and/or private parking area in close proximity to the courthouse and online social media support and security available to them.
- Of those who have the security measures listed available to them, there were no material differences based on years of experience when it comes to their adequacy.
- Among justices who do not currently have this measure, there is a tendency for those with more years of experience to be less likely to consider perimeter security services essential. There were no other material differences based on years on experience when it comes to security supports needed.
- There were no material differences for impact of security measures on work efficiency, carrying out role effectively or on judicial independence.

Visiting Judges

- There were no material differences for traveling or circuiting to serve in courts other than primary work location or for ratings for resources as a visiting judge based on years of experience, aside for technology where those with more than 20 years of experience provided a higher rating.

Impact on Judicial Independence

- Ability to administer justice in a timely way not being impacted by the level of staff at all, having sufficient HR support to enable focusing on the administration of justice, feeling very confident and secure with the safety measures and supports available in their role, and resourcing levels not having any negative impact on mental health were given the highest score by those with more than 20 years of experience.
- Level of support and resources never (or rarely) result in errors or misadministration of justice was given the lowest score by those with 2 years of experience or less and the highest score by those with more than 20 years of experience.

Results by Years of Experience

Importance of Focus Areas

- Advocate for an external system that ensures independence when it comes to funding and budgeting for superior court justices and advocate for adequate training and compensation for support staff were given a lower importance score by those with more than 20 years of experience.

Retirement Intentions

- While those with more than 20 years of experience are most likely to serve until their mandatory date for retirement, those with 2 years or less are most likely to be unsure, however, there is no material difference based on years of experience for whether resourcing and support is a factor in this decision.

Conclusions

Conclusion

The comprehensive member survey commissioned by the Canadian Superior Courts Judges Association (CSCJA) to assess the implications of government resource allocation towards Superior Courts yielded some significant insights.

Feedback regarding facilities and infrastructure was varied. While attributes like dedicated/private parking, clear visibility, and audibility in courtrooms, and the overall availability of courtrooms received strong ratings, there were areas of concern. Specifically, the adequacy of courthouse staff was flagged as a significant issue as evidenced by the dismal rating of 3.1 out of 7. Modern furnishings, ergonomic equipment, and building maintenance also received failing grades indicating the need for attention.

While there are some bright spots with respect to technology infrastructure, there are no areas that are outstanding. Top rated technology infrastructure includes up-to-date cybersecurity measures and the availability of standard office equipment. However, more modern utilities like e-filing and paperless data storage applications lag behind with a failing grade. Other areas with failing grades include video conferencing tools and access to digital dictation, transcription and related tools.

Conclusion Cont'd

On the human resources (HR) Support front, there are gaps for all positions tested, some bigger than others. Almost half of justices report inadequate or not having, but needing judicial assistants and clerks/registrars/court service officers. This rises to half reporting shortcomings for research assistance.

When it comes to security, a vast majority confirmed the presence of many essential safety measures like alarm buttons in courtrooms, secure/restricted office access, private corridor/areas of buildings with restricted access, building security personnel, private/restricted elevators and secure/private parking close to the courthouse. Yet, measures like digital security, perimeter security and courtroom entrance screening are only provided for a minority of justices.

Among those who have the various security measures in place, most feel they are adequate. Among those who do not have the security support, secure/private parking close to the courthouse is the most essential to provide. Other significant security resource gaps include private corridors/secure areas of the building with restricted access, secure/restricted access to your office area(s), courtrooms equipped with alarm buttons, private/restricted elevators and easy and efficient access to security resources if required.

Conclusion Cont'd

While the portions are different by resource type, the story is generally the same in terms of the impact resource availability has on justices' work efficiency, effectiveness and ability to execute their role with judicial independence. Justices report a high level of negative impact on their work efficiency (59% to 67% negative) and effectiveness (56% to 63% negative) and moderate negative impact on executing duties with judicial independence (29% to 38% negative). The exception is security measures where only 22% to 32% indicated a negative impact in each of the three areas.

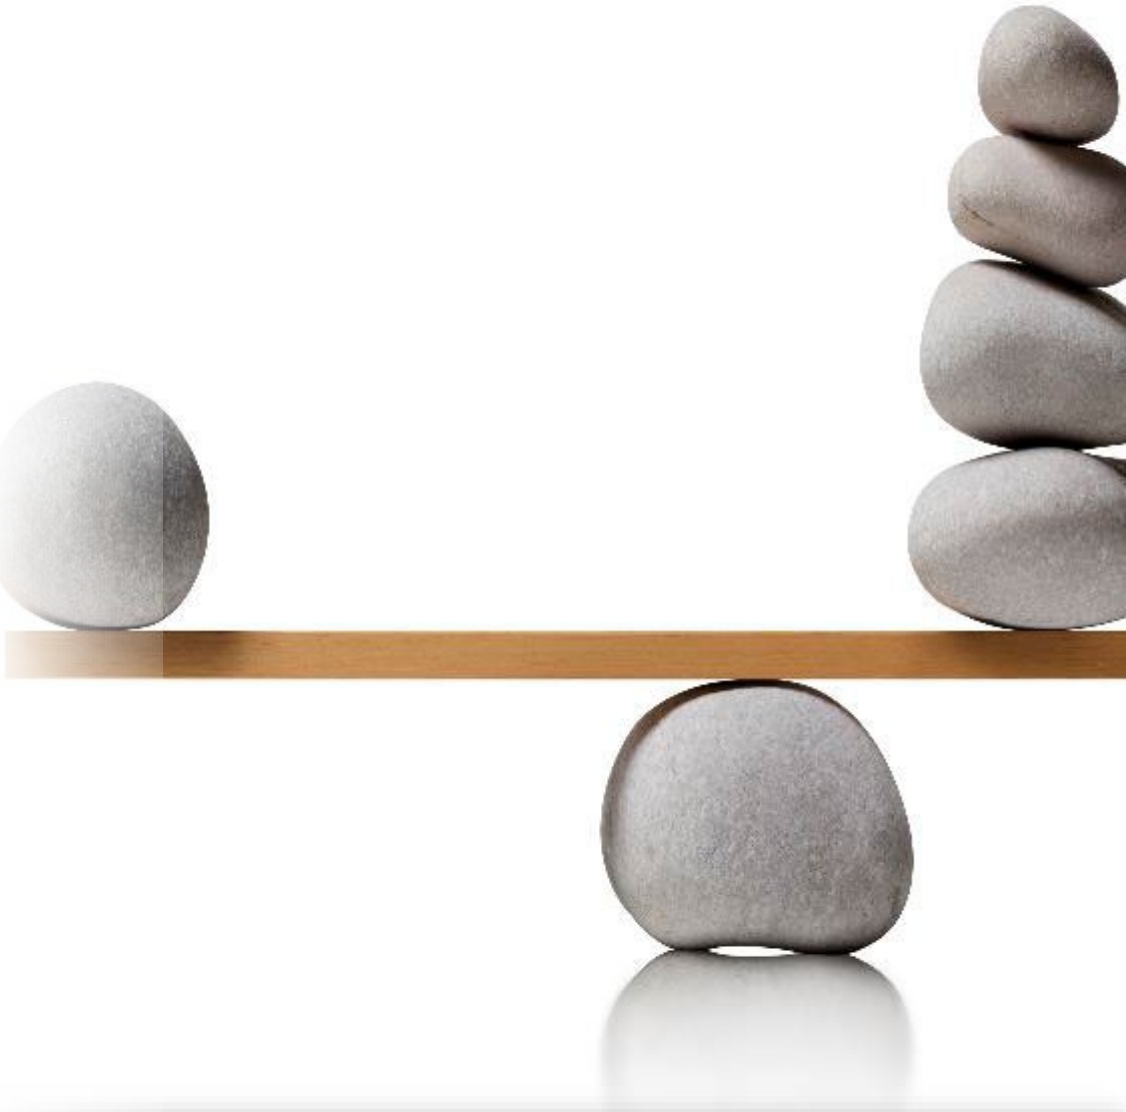
According to members, the top potential roles for CSCJA related to resource challenges were to improve government understanding of resourcing impacts on judicial independence, which rated as mission-critical, and advocacy for support staff training and compensation. Advocating for an external funding system and developing minimum standards for resources that include staffing, infrastructure and security also emerged as key areas of focus.

Conclusion Cont'd

Only 30% intend to serve until their stipulated retirement age. The balance are split between those who aren't sure and those who plan to retire early. Importantly, the results suggest that the current resource environment is influencing many justices' retirement considerations.

On the whole, the survey findings underscore many of the themes articulated through the in-depth interviews completed during the initial phase of this study. Justices articulate several areas where resource limitations are having varying degrees of impact on judicial independence, effectiveness, and impartiality. Likewise, while the impacts of resource constraints differ based on factors like region and funding sources, the impacts are clear: A reduced capacity to fulfil the judicial mandate, resulting in negative impacts on juridical effectiveness and impartiality.

The findings shed light on the challenges faced by Superior Court Justices in Canada. While certain areas received commendation, gaps in resource provisions, technological infrastructure, HR support, and security could impact judicial efficiency, effectiveness, and independence.



DELAY NO LONGER. THE TIME TO ACT IS NOW.

A CALL FOR ACTION ON DELAY IN THE CIVIL JUSTICE SYSTEM

2023

Table of Contents

DELAY NO LONGER. THE TIME TO ACT IS NOW.

The Advocates' Society calls on the federal, provincial and territorial governments to urgently dedicate additional resources to the civil and family justice system, and calls on all stakeholders in the justice system, including governments, the courts, the bar and the public, to take immediate and concerted action to solve the endemic delays plaguing the delivery of civil and family justice across Canada.

Introduction

Canada's civil and family justice system is in crisis. Many Canadians – separating spouses, small business owners, and others who need help enforcing their rights – wait months or years to have basic civil disputes scheduled and heard by the courts. This crisis pre-dates the COVID-19 pandemic, but was also exacerbated by it.

Lengthy delay in the delivery of civil justice is a critical barrier to access to justice for Canadians. Delays increase costs, deny timely relief, create opportunities for injustice, squeeze people out of the system, or discourage them from accessing it in the first place. Access to timely justice can be the difference between having a roof over one's head, putting food on the table, being safe from a violent ex-spouse, keeping a business going – or not. Justice delayed is justice denied, and for many, the consequences of justice being delayed are life-altering.

The civil justice system is foundational to the well-being of our constitutional order, our economy, and the lives of thousands and thousands of Canadians. Governments must dedicate greater resources to the civil justice system and concerted, urgent action must be taken by all justice stakeholders to prevent the system from failing entirely and losing the confidence of the public.

Why does the civil justice system matter?

The justice system, and the civil and family justice system in particular, does not generally receive attention and scrutiny from the media, the public or policymakers to the same extent as healthcare or education, despite being in a crisis of comparable severity. The harmful effects of the justice crisis are not felt until someone needs the system, at which point the effects are felt acutely. We, who work within the justice system and feel these effects every day, therefore begin our call to action with a broad reminder of why the civil justice system matters – to all of us.

The civil justice system resolves disputes between people, businesses and governments in a just and fair way. The civil justice system is critical to every person, family, organization and business in Canada, and to the peaceful and democratic society in which we live.

Nearly all Canadians will experience at least one civil or family justice issue in their lifetime.[1] The resolution, or lack thereof, of these issues by the civil justice system can alter the course of an individual's life – affecting their health, their family, their work or their finances.

A court's decision in a particular case may also become precedent, establishing and reinforcing norms for the community and shaping the law for future litigants. The existence of an open, impartial and trusted dispute resolution system ensures the rule of law and the maintenance of an orderly society.

The types of disputes that the civil justice system may address are vast and can be highly complex. And many of them require timely resolution — at the very minimum, on an interim basis. Some of the issues addressed by the civil justice system include:

- Family law. Families need timely access to the civil justice system to deal with all child-related matters, including child protection, parenting time, medical and other important decisions, and even child abduction; financial matters including child and spousal support, vacating or selling the home, and property division; and to protect victims of family violence.
- Protection of vulnerable persons and estates law. When a loved one falls ill or lacks capacity, families need timely access to the civil justice system to assist with powers of attorney and guardianship. After death, surviving dependants require timely access to the civil courts for financial support and wills and estates matters.
- Compensation for injuries. Individuals need timely access to the civil justice system to obtain compensation for injuries caused by the negligence of others, including to replace lost income and defray medical and other expenses.
- Employment law. Employers and employees need timely access to the civil justice system to resolve employment disputes, for example to obtain compensation in cases of discrimination.
- Business disputes. Small, family-owned businesses and multinational corporations alike need prompt access to the civil courts to protect their legitimate business interests, enforce contracts or restructure or liquidate in an orderly manner.
- Holding government accountable. The civil justice system holds federal, provincial and municipal governments to account when a government exceeds its lawful power or negligently harms citizens.

The civil justice system resolves these human differences in a reliable, open, impartial and consistent way. The alternative to a civil justice system that holds the confidence of the public is civil unrest and disorder, and the disintegration of the rule of law. As Dame Hazel Genn has aptly written,

> [T]he machinery of civil justice sustains social stability and economic growth by providing public processes for peacefully resolving civil disputes, for enforcing legal rights and for protecting private and personal rights. The civil justice system provides the legal architecture for the economy to operate effectively, for agreements to be honoured and for the power of government to be scrutinised and limited. The civil law maps out the boundaries of social and economic behaviour, while the civil courts resolve disputes when they arise. In this way, the civil courts publicly reaffirm norms and behavioural standards for private citizens, businesses and public bodies. [...] If the law is the skeleton that supports liberal democracies, then the machinery of civil justice is some of the muscle and ligaments that make the skeleton work.[2]

"Nothing is more important than justice and the just society. It is essential to flourishing of men, women, and children and to maintaining social stability and security. In this country, we realize that without justice, we have no rights, no peace, no prosperity."[3]

The Right Honourable Beverly McLachlin, Former Chief Justice of Canada

Delay in the civil justice system has become endemic across Canada

Although backlogs and delay in Canada's civil and family justice systems are universally acknowledged as problematic, reliable data about the magnitude and characteristics of the delay are challenging to find and even more challenging to interpret. As the Court of Appeal for Ontario recently commented:

> It is an unfortunate state of affairs that neither the Superior Court of Justice in Ontario nor the Court of Appeal for Ontario publishes information about how they manage and dispose of their caseload. The lack of detailed, consistent operational data from those courts and the resulting lack of transparency, impedes the ability to understand and then improve the performance of those courts.[4]

Similar comments apply to other jurisdictions across Canada.

Despite the lack of quantitative data, the day-to-day experiences of members of The Advocates' Society and the litigants we serve convince us that delay in scheduling and hearing matters before the courts is a standard feature of civil and family justice across the country. Some examples of the magnitude of this delay include:

- In Quebec, it was estimated that in 2021-2022, litigants would wait an average of 593 days between the filing of their claim in the Small Claims Division (for claims of less than $15,000) and trial.[5]

- In British Columbia in 2022, the Supreme Court "bumped" (i.e. delayed hearings because of the lack of judicial resources) 10.9% of all long chambers applications, 24.6% of civil trials (102 bumped compared to 312 heard) and 14.4% of family trials (26 bumped compared to 154 heard).[6]

- In Alberta, it routinely takes more than 9 months for an application longer than 20 minutes to be heard by a judge in Edmonton or Calgary; and 2 to 3 years for a trial longer than 5 days to be scheduled from the date the parties certify readiness.

- In Ontario, it currently takes almost 1.5 years for a motion longer than 2 hours to be heard by a judge in Toronto; more than 1.5 years after the trial management conference (or more than 4 to 5 years from the issuance of the original application) for a 3-week family law trial to be heard by a judge in Brampton; and more than 4 to 5 years for a civil action to proceed from commencement to trial.

Anecdotal evidence about the impacts of delay in Canada's civil and family justice system is plentiful.[7]

These are some of the stories we heard from our members about the impact of delay on their clients…

"I was interviewed by a potential client, a major international corporation, for an arbitration retainer. They told me they wanted to go to arbitration because the delay they encountered in litigation in Ontario was the worst they had ever encountered in their worldwide operations."

"A colleague of mine had fully prepared for a weeklong trial, and clients and witnesses had already flown in for the trial. The first day of the trial was cancelled because there was no judge available, but the court told the parties to stay in town and wait to see if one could be found. The next day, the rest of the trial was cancelled for lack of a judge. The costs of counsel's preparation for the trial and for participants' travel were completely wasted. This is not even that unusual, unfortunately."

"As a family lawyer, I have to tell my newly-separated clients that I cannot get court orders that will help them leave intolerable (and, in some cases, abusive) home situations for many months or more than a year, such as orders for temporary parenting or support. If they need the court's help on multiple issues in order to move out, it is considered a 'long motion', which are booking well over a year away — and this is for temporary relief, never mind a trial. Clients often start court applications earlier than they would otherwise, just to start the clock rolling. The financial and personal costs are unbearable for most family litigants."

"In May 2021, we issued a claim on behalf of a commercial property owner in relation to an overholding tenancy. We attempted to schedule a summary judgment motion in Fall 2021, and after several court attendances and case conferences, the motion was finally heard in October 2022, after an earlier adjournment because no judge was available to hear the matter. We still do not have a decision. While waiting for a court order evicting the tenant, our client had to find other space to lease."

"The plaintiff obtained a Certificate of Pending Litigation (CPL) in December 2022, shortly before the closing date of a real estate transaction. As counsel for the seller, my firm sought to bring a motion to set aside the CPL and close the transaction promptly, but was advised that the earliest hearing date was October 2023, some 10 months later. As a result, our firm's client was forced to settle the issue. Settlement should be encouraged, but the inability to bring a timely motion should not be the primary reason for a settlement."

"Timely resolution of Aboriginal law cases – which are often complex and expensive, and require aggressive case management – facilitates reconciliation. In contrast, when Indigenous litigants are forced to abandon meritorious cases due to delay-associated costs, Aboriginal rights have no more force than mere words on paper, and Indigenous Canadians are still denied access to justice in this country's courts. For example, in one time-sensitive case regarding ongoing negative impacts of industrial activity, there are no two-day court hearing dates available for more than a year — and in the meantime, the First Nation's traditional territory continues to be degraded."

"My client separated from their partner in 2019. The action was brought in the spring of 2020 and has been ready for trial since 2022. We could not get a trial scheduling conference until April 2023, and then set the earliest possible trial date —more than one and a half years down the road. We will have to re-do all of the financial disclosure and update all of the expert reports before the trial, at great expense to the parties, because the information will be stale by the time of the trial. In the meantime, my client is bearing a temporary monthly support order that significantly favours their ex-spouse, which means the other party has no motivation to settle."

"A member of my firm recently appeared before the senior scheduling judge to arrange a date for a special application to resolve various document and production issues. The court advised that due to vacancies on the court and judicial leaves of absence, the earliest available date was in 18 months."

The impact of delays in civil and family justice are severe and far-reaching Lengthy delays have severe negative consequences not only for the litigants, but for the justice system as a whole.

1. Delay compromises access to justice

The right to access the civil justice system is a fundamental pillar of the protection of the rights of Canadians. Delays in having civil and family legal issues heard and decided by courts across Canada mean that litigants are unable to have their rights determined or enforced for years on end, effectively rendering their rights non-existent in the interim. This state of affairs leads litigants to make decisions they would not otherwise have to make, and to suffer consequences that would not otherwise arise. As Chief Justice Wagner observed in 2018,

> It can take a year or more even to get a date for a trial that might last two months. In the meantime, parties suffer financial losses or family disharmony; physical and mental health issues remain unresolved. An injured person might be persuaded to take a lower settlement because he can't work and needs to pay the bills. Delays cause people to make difficult, and life-altering, choices.[8]

As the Supreme Court stated in Hryniak v. Mauldin, "[p]rompt judicial resolution of legal disputes allows individuals to get on with their lives. But, when court costs and delays become too great, people look for alternatives or simply give up on justice."[9]

2. Delay damages the rule of law

The Supreme Court of Canada has held that the rule of law "is a highly textured expression, [...] conveying, for example, a sense of orderliness, of subjection to known legal rules and of executive accountability to legal authority"[10] and that "[a]t its most basic level, the rule of law vouchsafes to the citizens and residents of the country a stable, predictable and ordered society in which to conduct their affairs."[11]

The alternative to the rule of law is "anarchy, warfare, and constant strife."[12] If the public views the civil justice system as failing to prosecute and enforce a person's rights and obligations in a timely manner, there is a greater risk of a lack of accountability, and parties will act accordingly. Potential litigants may be tempted to take matters into their own hands when resolution of a dispute by the justice system is a remote and unattainable option.

The public may further feel disenfranchised from the justice system when it is not responsive to citizens' needs, which weakens the legitimacy of the entire justice system – and by extension, the legitimacy of our democracy as a whole.

3. Delay makes wars of attrition into a successful litigation strategy

Delay in the context of civil litigation does not just extend the litigation process; often, it determines the outcome in a way that is manifestly unjust and perpetuates inequality.

Delay drives costs, as lengthier civil proceedings often result in more correspondence, more disclosure updates, more motions, more case management conferences, and more procedural steps.[13] When litigants cannot access courts in a timely fashion, civil cases often become wars of attrition, in which success is determined not on the merits of the case but by the resources of the parties. As a result, many meritorious cases never even reach the trial stage; litigants (typically plaintiffs) run out of money and are forced to either accept unfair settlements or no resolution at all. Delay also forces lawyers who work on a contingency fee basis to be more selective in taking on cases, because delays inflate the cost of prosecuting or defending a matter; this reduces access to justice for people who simply cannot afford to pay a lawyer up front.

For cases with public interest dimensions – such as those involving Aboriginal or Charter rights, or with potential precedential value – the negative impacts of the court system's delay extend beyond the individual case and may affect broad segments of the population.

4. Delay undermines substantive results for parties

Delay can also unfairly diminish the actual substantive relief to which a party is entitled, simply by virtue of the passage of time and the changing of an individual's life circumstances over the course of a delayed proceeding. For example, the damages owing to personal injury claimants may reduce substantially over time due to statutory provisions applicable to the calculation of damages.

For parties who need real-time financial relief, such as child support or salary continuance, delay can mean the difference between an individual or family keeping a roof over their head – or not. In family law, delay can deprive children of time with a parent, contrary to their best interests and resulting in possible long-term harm to the child's well-being.

5. Delay risks the privatization of civil justice

When litigants cannot access the courts in a timely manner, they increasingly rely upon private alternative dispute resolution (ADR) mechanisms, such as mediation and arbitration. While there can be many benefits to using ADR, a systemic overreliance on it – coupled with an abandonment of the courts – can have negative effects on the justice system as a whole.

First, the courts' central role in upholding the rule of law is diminished. Second, ADR processes are almost always carried out in private and on a confidential basis. While this is often a benefit to the immediate parties, justice cannot be seen by the public to be done between parties. No legal precedents that are public and binding can develop from such a process, which, combined with limited rights to appeal, prevents the law from evolving. Third, a systemic overreliance on ADR mechanisms can create a two-tier legal system, in which litigants with deeper pockets can avail themselves of a speedy alternative to the backlogged public court system and less economically advantaged litigants are relegated to the public system.[14]

It also bears emphasis that ADR requires the consent of the parties. Parties that benefit from delays often decline to engage in ADR. This is another way in which litigants with greater power and resources can wage a war of attrition at the expense of justice.

6. Delay diminishes public confidence in the justice system

The negative impacts of delay described above all diminish public confidence in the civil justice system. As the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal noted in 2022,

> Delay in civil proceedings tends to have deleterious effects on the parties. Witnesses die, become unavailable or simply forget things. Documents disappear. Costs soar. However, the consequences of delay go beyond the parties to an action. [... U]nnecessary delay inevitably saps public confidence in the judicial process as a method for dispute resolution.[15]

CALL TO ACTION

The Advocates' Society calls on the federal, provincial and territorial governments to urgently dedicate additional resources to the civil and family justice system, and calls on all stakeholders in the justice system, including governments, the courts, the bar and the public, to take immediate and concerted action to solve the endemic delays plaguing the delivery of civil and family justice across Canada.

Potential ideas to explore

The Advocates' Society calls upon justice system stakeholders across Canada to come together as soon as possible and dedicate resources to developing solutions that will diminish the delay in civil and family justice, and, in particular, diminish the time between when a matter is ready to be determined by a judge (either at a conference, motion, application, or trial) and when it can be heard by a judge.

Below we set out some ideas that stakeholders may wish to explore, to determine their feasibility and helpfulness in a particular jurisdiction. The Advocates' Society emphasizes that none of these ideas will, alone, fix the problem of delay in the delivery of civil justice. While we believe the current crisis situation calls for immediate action to lessen delay as much as possible in the short term, we caution that a piecemeal approach will not solve delay over the long term. The civil justice system must be the subject of global and comprehensive consideration, with a view to developing a multi-pronged and coordinated plan of action that targets the root causes of delay.

The below ideas are offered as starting points for discussions about effective solutions to the problem of delay.

1. Measure delay and set targets

Data collection and analysis can help locate pain points in a system and develop remedies. The Advocates' Society believes that collecting data about delay in the justice system is an essential first step to developing and targeting policies to improve access to justice over the long term.[16] While we are advocates and not data scientists, the collection of the metrics listed in Appendix A, and other data, by courts and governments may help us understand the source and magnitude of the delay problem better and develop effective solutions to permanently diminish delay.

Measurement of relevant data also makes it possible to work towards targets and to measure the progress made toward hitting those targets. The Advocates' Society suggests that it would be reasonable to work towards a civil and family justice system in which you can always book a long motion within 90 days of the request and a trial within a year of the request. Urgent motions, such as some family law motions and other time-sensitive matters, should be triaged and addressed on a prompt target timeline as well.

2. Increase resources and deploy them flexibly

(i) Greater overall funding for the justice system

The civil and family justice system has been chronically underfunded for decades. The Advocates' Society believes it is time for governments to remedy this longstanding neglect and make real, forward-looking investments in the civil and family justice system to bring it on par with other critical democratic institutions. Delay and backlogs simply cannot be remedied, and will continue to grow, without allocating more dollars to justice. Below, we identify some key funding priorities for consideration.

(ii) Judicial resources

The experiences of members of The Advocates' Society strongly indicate that there are simply not enough judges at present to handle the caseload before the courts – to manage matters, hear matters, and issue decisions after hearings in a timely fashion. We need more judges and more support for judges in the form of court staff and law clerks.

The Advocates' Society has long encouraged the federal government to fill judicial vacancies on superior courts across the country in a timely manner to decrease delays in scheduling and hearing matters before the courts.[17] As of June 1, 2023, there remained 79 judicial vacancies on Canadian superior courts and courts of appeal.[18] We continue to recommend that the government establish and adhere to a policy mandating that judicial vacancies be consistently filled within a reasonably brief period of time after they arise.

Moreover, there is currently no publicly available formula for determining the adequacy of Canada's federal judicial complement (the number of judicial positions) in relation to its population. The baseline for the current complement of federally appointed judges was established in 1990 when the population of Canada was approximately 27.5 million, and individual judicial positions have since been added from time to time. Given that the Canadian population is now estimated at over 39 million people (representing an almost 42% increase in population over the past 32 years), it is hard to imagine that the current judicial complement is sufficient to meet the justice needs of Canadians. The Government of Canada, in cooperation with provincial and territorial governments, ought to consider whether it is time to undertake an assessment of the current federal judicial complement as part of a larger commitment to correcting court delay.

Attention should also be paid to the adequacy of other judicial resources, and whether current processes create a bottleneck in the system that can be remedied. In some courts, associate judges, applications judges, masters, or special clerks have jurisdiction over important matters in civil actions. For example, in Alberta, applications judges are the gatekeepers for an average of 110,000 active civil actions per year. In Edmonton and Calgary, the two most populous cities in the province, there are currently only 6 full-time applications judges and 2 part-time applications judges, exacerbating significant delay.

(iii) Court staff

Courts across the country are suffering from high turnover and shortages in court staff, which slows down every aspect of the civil litigation process. Court staff are essential to the proper functioning of all levels of court. Their work includes providing information about policies and procedures to the public, processing court filings, collecting fees, maintaining court records, scheduling court cases, managing the jury system, providing administrative and courtroom support to judges, organizing court interpretation services, and court reporting. Adequate human resources to support the courts, judges, and parties, including thorough training, are crucial to the optimal functioning of the civil and family justice system.

(iv) Flexibility

The recent implementation of technology and virtual proceedings presents an unprecedented opportunity to efficiently mobilize the courts' judicial and other human resources across a given jurisdiction to support busier or more backlogged regions. Technology can be used to redeploy judicial resources to areas within a province or territory where they are most needed, without having to incur the significant cost and disruption of travel or permanent relocation. The Advocates' Society encourages courts to continue to explore this potential, in particular to support backlogged courts in addressing shorter civil matters such as pre-trials or motions, so local judges are free to focus on longer motions or trials.

3. Improve the use of technology

Courts across Canada pivoted in record time to adopt the use of technology to permit virtual hearings as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic. Unfortunately, in other areas, the courts have not made full use of technology that could reduce costs and delay. The Advocates' Society encourages governments and the courts to continue to commit the necessary resources, monetary and otherwise, for the thoughtful integration of technology into the administration of justice. In particular, The Advocates' Society recommends the implementation of technology to improve court filing and scheduling systems across the country as an essential step towards curing the delay crisis.

While some Canadian courts developed electronic filing systems either before or during the COVID-19 pandemic, others still require litigants to file paper materials, either in person or by fax. The Advocates' Society urges these courts, and their respective provincial governments, to explore e-filing solutions to alleviate the delay occasioned by the need to move, file and store paper materials.

Another area where the use of technology can diminish delay is in scheduling court dates. There are many software solutions that would permit court users to schedule their own dates, automatically send reminders and automatically strike matters from the list if deadlines are not met. More sophisticated software might be able to predict the likelihood of certain types of cases resolving or proceeding and use that information to maximize the effective use of court time. To our knowledge, apart from some small pilot projects, this software is not being used by Canadian courts, and scheduling is still done manually via email, fax or telephone. The implementation of online scheduling applications that centralize and automate the scheduling of appearances before the court could greatly reduce inefficiencies and errors, and save money by freeing up court staff to focus on other important tasks.[19]

4. Review and revise procedural rules that are roadblocks

At the opening of the Ontario courts in 2014, then-Chief Justice George Strathy observed as follows:

> We have built a legal system that has become increasingly burdened by its own procedures, reaching a point that we have begun to impede the very justice we are striving to protect. With the best of intentions we have designed elaborate rules and practices, engineered to ensure fairness and achieve just results. But perfection can be the enemy of the good, and our justice system has become so cumbersome and expensive that it is inaccessible to many of our own citizens.[20]

The Advocates' Society welcomes comprehensive overhauls of antiquated and overly complex rules of civil procedure that do not account for modern realities.[21] The nature of how parties before the court conduct their lives and affairs has changed dramatically, and some rules have not kept pace. In addition, experience has shown that certain rules allow the parties to introduce significant delay in the pre-trial phase without sanction, which requires reform. Complete rewrites of rules of procedure should and will take thought to avoid unintended consequences, however. These types of projects will require broad consultation with stakeholders, changes to administrative processes and infrastructure, and education for the judiciary, court staff and counsel.

In the meantime, the rewriting of rules of civil procedure should not prevent more discrete changes to rules and legislation from being made now, keeping in mind the need to consider the impacts on the system as a whole. Some possible examples include:

- Consider setting trial dates early. In many jurisdictions, owing to certain rules of procedure, a trial date is not set until after the discovery process is complete. Setting an early trial date (and ordering a realistic timetable to ensure the case is ready for trial) might prevent cases from getting dragged out for months or years in the discovery process, and can avoid the months- or years-long delay that now often occurs between completing discoveries and trial. Associated rules may be required to encourage parties to continue to try to resolve the matter and narrow the issues in dispute while waiting for their trial date; and to ensure parties cannot easily adjourn an early trial date unless the justice of the case demands it.

- Expand the use of applications and summary trials. Many cases may be determined without the need for viva voce evidence on all issues. Applications, "trials of an issue" and summary trials should be used more often (and where necessary, rules should be amended to permit their use) to ensure the just determination of disputes on their merits in a proportionate way.

- Reduce discovery-related disputes and deal with them efficiently when they arise. The discovery process is often the most costly and time-consuming part of civil litigation, and in some jurisdictions, discovery-related motions clog up the civil justice system. Changes to rules of procedure may help to streamline the discovery process and avoid using scarce resources on discovery-related motions: for example, encouraging or requiring discovery questions to which an examinee objects to be answered (unless privilege is at issue or the question is blatantly irrelevant or an abuse of process) and reserving the question of relevance for the trial judge;[22] stipulating an adverse inference for failure to answer discovery questions; strictly enforcing time limits on discoveries; or providing for presumptive awards of substantial indemnity costs if a party acts unreasonably or abusively in the discovery process. In addition, courts may wish to consider establishing weekly motions lists to deal with simple procedural issues that can be heard in a short period of time, such as discovery disputes.[23]

- Increase the availability of case management. Case management can be an effective way to reduce the number of contested hearings before a court. Having one judge assigned to a civil case from the outset, as envisioned in single-judge case management models frequently used in the United States and piloted in certain jurisdictions in Canada,[24] can go even further towards encouraging parties to act efficiently and proportionately throughout the proceeding. Also, having a judge that is familiar with the case would save significant court time, as parties would not need to bring a different judge up to speed each time a motion or application is brought. The Advocates' Society recommends that courts explore ways to implement greater case management. Judges must be trained in case management techniques, and empowered by the rules of procedure to make tough decisions as case managers.[25]

5. Ensure lawyers continue to support the efficient use of court resources

Lawyers have several roles to play in reducing the delays plaguing the civil and family justice system.

A number of sources conclude that lawyers assist in the functioning of an efficient civil justice system. Studies have found that early access to legal advice increases the opportunity for the early resolution of disputes;[26] judges believe self-represented litigants slow the court process;[27] court staff report that self-represented litigants in family law matters use greater court staff resources;[28] lawyers and judges report that self-represented litigants in family cases "take up more court time, are less likely to settle, and that when one party is represented, the legal costs for that party increase";[29] lawyers help move matters through the courts more quickly and reduce the burdens on the courts; [30] and legal representation has positive impacts on court processes.[31] In addition, the participation of lawyers in the civil justice system ensures meaningful access to justice for litigants, acting as the guardians of the client's best interests and ensuring the client is aware of their legal rights. On a principled basis, an independent bar is fundamental to ensuring an effective civil justice system.

Lawyers can ensure they contribute to diminishing pre-trial delay by resisting any efforts by clients to use delay as a tactic, resolving or narrowing the issues for decision by the court, being accountable to the court, abiding by timelines, informing the court of any expected delays, keeping adjournments to a minimum, and overall ensuring each case progresses effectively to disposition. [32] Courts can encourage this accountability on the part of lawyers by refusing to enable complacency or unreasonableness on the part of parties or their counsel, and when warranted, sanctioning conduct that unreasonably delays or extends proceedings. Hearing dates must be available in the reasonably near future to ensure the court's oversight, however; parties may take unreasonable positions when they know the other side has little meaningful recourse.

Lawyers can also support the efficiency of the civil justice system by remaining up-to-date on new technology and best practices.[33]

It is clear that in these ways, lawyers can play a key role in making the civil justice system work more effectively and efficiently.

Conclusion

Delay in the civil justice system is negatively impacting the rights of thousands of Canadian individuals, families, businesses and other organizations. The Advocates' Society calls on the federal, provincial and territorial governments to urgently dedicate additional resources to the civil and family justice system, and calls on all stakeholders in the justice system, including governments, the courts, the bar and the public, to take immediate and concerted action to solve the endemic delays plaguing the delivery of civil and family justice across Canada.

The Advocates' Society looks forward to working with other stakeholders to facilitate meaningful change.

The Advocates' Society Task Force on Civil Justice Delay

Hilary Book, Chair, Book Law (Toronto)

Daniel Baum, Langlois Avocats, S.E.N.C.R.L. (Montreal)
Sheree Conlon, K.C., Nijhawan McMillan & Conlon Barristers (Halifax)
Scott R. Fairley, Dooley Lucenti LLP (Barrie)
Craig A.B. Ferris, K.C., Lawson Lundell LLP (Vancouver)
Sheila Gibb, Epstein Cole LLP (Toronto)
Jennifer Hunter, Lerners LLP (Toronto)
Leona Kung, Koskie Minsky LLP (Toronto)
Aria Laskin, JFK Law LLP (Vancouver)
Robin A. Lepere, Petrone & Partners (Thunder Bay)
Douglas A. McGillivray, K.C., Burnet, Duckworth & Palmer LLP (Calgary)
Tamara Prince, Cassels Brock & Blackwell LLP (Calgary)
Jeffrey Robinson, Rush Ihas Hardwick LLP (Kelowna)
Stephen G. Ross, Rogers Partners LLP (Toronto)
Tara Sweeney, Soloway Wright LLP (Ottawa)

Appendix A: Data to Collect about the Civil Justice System

- Number of civil and family cases in the system in a given year, and their age
- Number of civil and family cases entering and exiting the system in a given year
- Time between when a motion is sought and when it is scheduled
- Time between when a motion is scheduled and when it is heard
- Time between motion hearing and issuance of decision
- Time between commencement of matter and when it is set down for trial
- Time between when a matter is set down for trial and trial
- Time between trial and issuance of decision (if judge-alone trial)
- Time between commencement of matter and final disposition
- Percentage of actions that get set down for trial
- Percentage of actions that proceed to trial
- Percentage of actions in which motions are brought (and types of motions)
- Length of trial
- Number and length of adjournments of hearings, broken down by reason for the adjournment, e.g.:
    - Plaintiff request/default
    - Defendant request/default
    - Judicial discretion
    - Lack of court resources (e.g. no judge, no clerk)
    - Exceeding allotted time
- Final disposition type, e.g.:
    - Default judgment
    - Settlement
    - Withdrawal
    - Dismissal for delay
    - Summary judgment motion
    - Decision after trial

It may assist to be able to break down these metrics further, for example by case type and proceeding type.

Of course, data ought to be collected and recorded in a manner that makes aggregate and disaggregate analysis relatively straightforward to conduct. The Advocates' Society suggests that the ongoing development and implementation of new technology for the courts, in particular online platforms for filing, scheduling and case management, create excellent opportunities to build in data collection and analysis at the front end.

[1] Trevor C. W. Farrow et al., "Everyday Legal Problems and the Cost of Justice in Canada: Overview Report" (2016), online: <https://www.cfcj-fcjc.org/sites/default/files/Everyday%20Legal%20Problems%20and%20the%20Cost%20of%20Justice%20in%20Canada%20-%20Overview%20Report.pdf>.
[2] Hazel Genn, Judging Civil Justice (Cambridge University Press, 2009), pp. 3-4 [references omitted].
[3] Supreme Court of Canada, "The Challenges We Face*:* Remarks of the Right Honourable Beverley McLachlin, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada" (March 8, 2007), online: <https://www.scc-csc.ca/judges-juges/spe-dis/bm-2007-03-08-eng.aspx>.
[4] Moffitt v. TD Canada Trust, 2023 ONCA 349, at footnote 2.
[5] Kathryne Lamontagne & Pascal Dugas Bourdon, « Petites créances: les délais ont triplé depuis l'arrivée de la CAQ » Le Journal de Montréal (18 mai 2022), en ligne : <https://www.journaldemontreal.com/2022/05/18/les-delais-explosent-aux-petites-creances>.
[6] Supreme Court of British Columbia, 2022 Annual Report, online: <https://www.bccourts.ca/supreme_court/about_the_supreme_court/annual_reports/2022_SC_Annual_Report.pdf>.
[7] See Jacques Gallant, "'Your whole life on hold': As feds fail to fill judicial vacancies, Ontarians are waiting years for civil hearings" Toronto Star (May 24, 2023), online: <https://www.thestar.com/news/gta/2023/05/24/your-whole-life-on-hold-as-feds-fail-to-fill-judicial-vacancies-ontarians-are-waiting-years-for-civil-hearings.html>.
[8] "Access to Justice: A Societal Imperative", Remarks of the Right Honourable Richard Wagner, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, 7th Annual Pro Bono Conference (Vancouver, British Columbia) (October 4, 2018), online: <https://www.scc-csc.ca/judges-juges/spe-dis/rw-2018-10-04-eng.aspx?pedisable=true>.
[9] Hryniak v. Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 87, at para. 24.
[10] Re: Resolution to amend the Constitution, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 753, at pp. 805-806.
[11] Reference re Secession of Quebec, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217, at paras. 70-71.
[12] Quoted in Re Manitoba Language Rights, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 721, at para. 60.
[13] Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, Delaying Justice is Denying Justice: An Urgent Need to Address Lengthy Court Delays in Canada (August 2016), >, at p. 8, online: Senate of Canada, <https://sencanada.ca/content/sen/committee/421/LCJC/Reports/CourtDelaysStudyInterimReport_e.pdf; Roy Weinstein et al., "Efficiency and Economic Benefits of Dispute Resolution through Arbitration Compared with U.S. District Court Proceedings" (March 2017) Micronomics Economic Research and Consulting, online <https://go.adr.org/rs/294-SFS-516/images/Economic%20Impact%20of%20Delay%20Micronomics%20Final%20Report%20%282017-03-07%29.pdf>.
[14] Trevor C. W. Farrow, "Privatizing our Public Civil Justice System" News & Views on Civil Justice Reform (2006), Volume 9, p. 16, online: <https://digitalcommons.osgoode.yorku.ca/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=2929&context=scholarly_works>.; Barbara A. Billingsley, "Book Review: Civil Justice, Privatization, and Democracy by Trevor C. W. Farrow" Osgoode Hall Law Journal 54.1 (2016): 317-323, online: <https://digitalcommons.osgoode.yorku.ca/ohlj/vol54/iss1/11/>.
[15] Huard v. The Winning Combination Inc., 2022 SKCA 130, at para. 86.
[16] Action Committee on Court Operations in Response to COVID-19, "Roadmap to Recovery: Orienting Principles for Reducing Court Backlogs and Delays", online: <https://www.fja.gc.ca/COVID-19/Orienting-Principles-Reducing-Backlog-and-Delays-Principes-d-orientation-reduire-les-engorgements-et-delais-eng.html>.
[17] See The Advocates' Society Letter to The Honourable David Lametti, P.C., M.P., Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada re: Judicial Vacancies and Access to Justice in Canada, dated December 12, 2022, online: <https://www.advocates.ca/Upload/Files/PDF/Advocacy/Submissions/JudicialVacancies/The_Advocates_Society_Letter_to_Minister_of_Justice_re_Judicial_Vacancies_December_12_2022.pdf>.
[18] Office of the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs Canada, "Number of Federally Appointed Judges as of June 1, 2023", online: <https://www.fja.gc.ca/appointments-nominations/judges-juges-eng.aspx>.

[19] Action Committee on Court Operations in Response to COVID-19, "Roadmap to Recovery: Orienting Principles for Reducing Court Backlogs and Delays", online: <https://www.fja.gc.ca/COVID-19/Orienting-Principles-Reducing-Backlog-and-Delays-Principes-d-orientation-reduire-les-engorgements-et-delais-eng.html>. See Section 10. "Optimizing Case Flow Processes and Eliminating Administrative Inefficiencies".
[20] "Opening of the Court of Ontario for 2014: Remarks of the Honourable George R. Strathy, Chief Justice of Ontario" (September 9, 2014), online: <https://www.ontariocourts.ca/coa/about-the-court/archives/opening-of-the-courts-of-ontario-for-2014/>.
[21] At the 2022 Opening of the Ontario Courts, Chief Justice Geoffrey Morawetz of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice called for Ontario's Rules of Civil Procedure to be overhauled for the first time in 40 years, explaining that civil proceedings have become bogged down by process, and there is an opportunity to create a new, simpler path forward: "Opening of the Courts – Remarks of Chief Justice Geoffrey B. Morawetz" (October 3, 2022), online: <https://www.ontariocourts.ca/scj/opening-of-the-courts-remarks-2022/>.
[22] See e.g., Federal Courts Rules, SOR/98-106, rule 95(2) ("A person may answer a question that was objected to in an oral examination subject to the right to have the propriety of the question determined, on motion, before the answer is used at trial."); Nova Scotia Civil Procedure Rules, rule 18.17(1) ("Making no objection to a question, or making an objection but giving an answer, at a discovery is not an admission that the subject of the question, or the answer, is admissible."). In Nova Scotia, courts have made clear that counsel are expected to act reasonably and streamline the discovery process as much as possible; as such, where a discovery question is objected to on the basis of relevance, it is accepted that the best practice is to object but allow the witness to answer.
[23] This solution has been effective in multiple jurisdictions. See e.g. Superior Court of Justice, Notice to the Public and the Profession Regarding Civil Matters in Ottawa as of April 19, 2022, online: <https://cdn.ymaws.com/www.ccla-abcc.ca/resource/resmgr/pp-civlit/OttawaCivilScheduling_revMar.pdf> (section 2 regarding "Express motions"); Nova Scotia Civil Procedure Rules, Rule 24 (regarding "Appearance Day Chambers").
[24] See Superior Court of Justice, Practice Advisory Concerning the Provincial Civil Case Management Pilot – One Judge Model, online: <https://www.ontariocourts.ca/scj/practice/civil-case-management-pilot/>.
[25] See the Action Committee on Court Operations in Response to COVID-19, "Roadmap to Recovery: Orienting Principles for Reducing Court Backlogs and Delays", online: <https://www.fja.gc.ca/COVID-19/Orienting-Principles-Reducing-Backlog-and-Delays-Principes-d-orientation-reduire-les-engorgements-et-delais-eng.html>.
[26] "White Paper on Justice Reform, Part Two: A Timely, Balanced Justice System" British Columbia Ministry of Justice, (2013) at pp. 6, 9, online: <https://www2.gov.bc.ca/assets/gov/law-crime-and-justice/about-bc-justice-system/justice-reform-initiatives/whitepapertwo.pdf>.
[27] Linda Klein, "Report on the Survey of Judges on the Impact of the Economic Downturn on Representation in the Courts (Preliminary)" ABA Coalition for Justice (July 12, 2010), at pp. 14-15, online: <https://legalaidresearch.org/2020/02/04/report-on-the-survey-of-judges-on-the-impact-of-the-economic-downturn-on-representation-in-the-courts/>. This is a report documenting the conclusions of a 2009 survey of judges across the United States. 78% of judges surveyed said the courts were negatively impacted when parties are not well represented. 90% of those judges said that one of the negative impacts was that court procedures were slowed.
[28] Government of Canada Research and Statistics Division, "JustFacts: Self-Represented Litigants in Family Law" (June 2016), online: <https://www.justice.gc.ca/eng/rp-pr/fl-lf/divorce/jf-pf/srl-pnr.html>.
[29] Ibid.
[30] Lisa Moore & Trevor C. W. Farrow, "Investing in Justice: A Literature Review in Support of the Case for Improved Access to Justice" Canadian Forum on Civil Justice (2019), online: <https://cfcj-fcjc.org/wp-content/uploads/Investing-in-Justice-A-Literature-Review-in-Support-of-the-Case-for-Improved-Access-by-Lisa-Moore-and-Trevor-C-W-Farrow.pdf>; Sharon Matthews, "Making the Case for the Economic Value of Legal Aid – Supplemental Briefing Note" Canadian Bar Association British Columbia Branch (2012), at pp. 1, 5, online: <https://www.cbabc.org/CBAMediaLibrary/cba_bc/pdf/ForThePublic/LegalAid/ReportsResearchPapers/Economic_Value_of_Legal_Aid.pdf >.
[31] "Judicial Council Report to the Legislature: Sargent Shriver Civil Counsel Act" Judicial Council of California (2017).

[32] Action Committee on Court Operations in Response to COVID-19, "Roadmap to Recovery: Orienting Principles for Reducing Court Backlogs and Delays", online: <https://www.fja.gc.ca/COVID-19/Orienting-Principles-Reducing-Backlog-and-Delays-Principes-d-orientation-reduire-les-engorgements-et-delais-eng.html>. See Section 4. "Promoting the Accountability of Parties and their Counsel".

[33] The Advocates' Society has published a number of best practices to assist lawyers in using court resources effectively, including Best Practices for Civil Trials (2015), Principles of Civility and Professionalism for Advocates (2020), and Best Practices for Remote Hearings (2nd ed. 2021). See The Advocates' Society's Best Practice Publications page for these publications and more, online: <https://www.advocates.ca/TAS/Publications/Best_Practices_Publications/TAS/Publications_Resources/Best_Practices_Publications.aspx?hkey=12ee9725-d4e8-408d-93bc-462a365c7d82>.

Presented By

ZSA

2024 Private Practice Lawyer Salary Guide

PUBLISHED: JUNE 2024

Total Compensation by Location

TORONTO

Private Practice

YEARS OF EXPERIENCE	LARGE FIRM	MEDIUM FIRM	SMALL FIRM
1 year	$130,000	$110,000	$90,000
2 years	$150,000	$120,000	$105,000
3 years	$175,000	$140,000	$115,000
4 years	$195,000	$156,000	$130,000
5 years	$215,000	$172,000	$140,000
6 years	$235,000	$188,000	$155,000
7 years	$255,000	$204,000	$175,000+

Want to know more about legal salaries in Toronto?

Contact us at info@zsa.ca

MONTREAL

Private Practice

YEARS OF EXPERIENCE	LARGE FIRM	MEDIUM FIRM	SMALL FIRM
1 year	$110,000	$80,000	Varies
2 years	$120,000	$90,000
3 years	$135,000	$105,000
4 years	$150,000	$120,000
5 years	$165,000	$130,000
6 years	$175,000	$140,000
7 years	$190,000	$150,000

Want to know more about legal salaries in Montreal?

Contact us at montreal@zsa.ca

VANCOUVER

Private Practice

YEARS OF EXPERIENCE	LARGE FIRM	MEDIUM FIRM	SMALL FIRM
1 year	$115,000	$92,000	Varies
2 years	$125,000	$100,000
3 years	$140,000	$112,000
4 years	$155,000	$124,000
5 years	$175,000	$140,000
6 years	$190,000	$152,000
7 years	$200,000	$160,000

Want to know more about legal salaries in Vancouver?

Contact us at vancouver@zsa.ca

CALGARY

Private Practice

YEARS OF EXPERIENCE	LARGE FIRM	MEDIUM FIRM	SMALL FIRM
1 year	$100,000	$80,000	Varies
2 years	$115,000	$92,000
3 years	$145,000	$116,000
4 years	$165,000	$135,000
5 years	$190,000	$150,000
6 years	$205,000	Varies
7 years	$225,000

Want to know more about legal salaries in Calgary?

Contact us at calgary@zsa.ca

Please note that the salary information provided pertains to base salaries only, and does not include additional guaranteed or anticipated compensation, including signing or retention bonuses, equity-related compensation or other incentives, allowances or expenses.

First-Year Lawyer

First-Year Lawyer Job Description

First year lawyers in Canada typically assist more experienced and senior lawyers with various aspects of client matters within your designated practice area (e.g., corporate law, family law, criminal law).

Typical First Year Lawyer Duties:

- Conducting legal research and analysis of case law and relevant legislation.
- Drafting legal documents such as contracts, letters, and memoranda.
- Assisting with client communication and file management.
- Preparing for client meetings, court appearances, and other legal proceedings (under supervision).
- Develop your legal research and writing skills through assigned projects and tasks.
- Stay up-to-date on legal developments within your practice area.

Looking for a first year lawyer or a first year lawyer job?

Submit your resume or request talent now and our expert recruiters will be with you shortly.

Robert Half can assist you with your lawyer first year staffing needs.

Salary for First-Year Lawyer

$80,000 - $120,250

25TH PERCENTILE

$80,000

The candidate is new to the role and building the needed skills, experience and autonomy.

50TH PERCENTILE

$95,750

The candidate has the experience to perform core responsibilities without direct supervision and is comfortable with the role's processes and subject matter.

75TH PERCENTILE

$120,250

The candidate delivers value beyond the stated job duties, has advanced qualifications and experience, and is ready for the next career level.

First-Year Lawyer in Edmonton, AB

First-Year Lawyer Job Description

First year lawyers in Canada typically assist more experienced and senior lawyers with various aspects of client matters within your designated practice area (e.g., corporate law, family law, criminal law).

Typical First Year Lawyer Duties:

- Conducting legal research and analysis of case law and relevant legislation.
- Drafting legal documents such as contracts, letters, and memoranda.
- Assisting with client communication and file management.
- Preparing for client meetings, court appearances, and other legal proceedings (under supervision).
- Develop your legal research and writing skills through assigned projects and tasks.
- Stay up-to-date on legal developments within your practice area.

Looking for a first year lawyer or a first year lawyer job?

Submit your resume or request talent now and our expert recruiters will be with you shortly.

Robert Half can assist you with your lawyer first year staffing needs.

Salary for First-Year Lawyer in Edmonton, AB

$82,000 - $123,256

25TH PERCENTILE

$82,000

The candidate is new to the role and building the needed skills, experience and autonomy.

50TH PERCENTILE

$98,144

The candidate has the experience to perform core responsibilities without direct supervision and is comfortable with the role's processes and subject matter.

75TH PERCENTILE

$123,256

The candidate delivers value beyond the stated job duties, has advanced qualifications and experience, and is ready for the next career level.

First-Year Lawyer in Vancouver, BC

First-Year Lawyer Job Description

First year lawyers in Canada typically assist more experienced and senior lawyers with various aspects of client matters within your designated practice area (e.g., corporate law, family law, criminal law).

Typical First Year Lawyer Duties:

- Conducting legal research and analysis of case law and relevant legislation.
- Drafting legal documents such as contracts, letters, and memoranda.
- Assisting with client communication and file management.
- Preparing for client meetings, court appearances, and other legal proceedings (under supervision).
- Develop your legal research and writing skills through assigned projects and tasks.
- Stay up-to-date on legal developments within your practice area.

Looking for a first year lawyer or a first year lawyer job?

Submit your resume or request talent now and our expert recruiters will be with you shortly.

Robert Half can assist you with your lawyer first year staffing needs.

Salary for First-Year Lawyer in Vancouver, BC

$83,200 - $125,060

25TH PERCENTILE

$83,200

The candidate is new to the role and building the needed skills, experience and autonomy.

50TH PERCENTILE

$99,580

The candidate has the experience to perform core responsibilities without direct supervision and is comfortable with the role's processes and subject matter.

75TH PERCENTILE

$125,060

The candidate delivers value beyond the stated job duties, has advanced qualifications and experience, and is ready for the next career level.

First-Year Lawyer in Montreal, QC

First-Year Lawyer Job Description

First year lawyers in Canada typically assist more experienced and senior lawyers with various aspects of client matters within your designated practice area (e.g., corporate law, family law, criminal law).

Typical First Year Lawyer Duties:

- Conducting legal research and analysis of case law and relevant legislation.
- Drafting legal documents such as contracts, letters, and memoranda.
- Assisting with client communication and file management.
- Preparing for client meetings, court appearances, and other legal proceedings (under supervision).
- Develop your legal research and writing skills through assigned projects and tasks.
- Stay up-to-date on legal developments within your practice area.

Looking for a first year lawyer or a first year lawyer job?

Submit your resume or request talent now and our expert recruiters will be with you shortly.

Robert Half can assist you with your lawyer first year staffing needs.

Salary for First-Year Lawyer in Montreal, QC

$81,600 - $122,655

25TH PERCENTILE

$81,600

The candidate is new to the role and building the needed skills, experience and autonomy.

50TH PERCENTILE

$97,665

The candidate has the experience to perform core responsibilities without direct supervision and is comfortable with the role's processes and subject matter.

75TH PERCENTILE

$122,655

The candidate delivers value beyond the stated job duties, has advanced qualifications and experience, and is ready for the next career level.

First-Year Lawyer in Ottawa, ON

First-Year Lawyer Job Description

First year lawyers in Canada typically assist more experienced and senior lawyers with various aspects of client matters within your designated practice area (e.g., corporate law, family law, criminal law).

Typical First Year Lawyer Duties:

- Conducting legal research and analysis of case law and relevant legislation.
- Drafting legal documents such as contracts, letters, and memoranda.
- Assisting with client communication and file management.
- Preparing for client meetings, court appearances, and other legal proceedings (under supervision).
- Develop your legal research and writing skills through assigned projects and tasks.
- Stay up-to-date on legal developments within your practice area.

Looking for a first year lawyer or a first year lawyer job?

Submit your resume or request talent now and our expert recruiters will be with you shortly.

Robert Half can assist you with your lawyer first year staffing needs.

Salary for First-Year Lawyer in Ottawa, ON

$80,400 - $120,851

25TH PERCENTILE

$80,400

The candidate is new to the role and building the needed skills, experience and autonomy.

50TH PERCENTILE

$96,229

The candidate has the experience to perform core responsibilities without direct supervision and is comfortable with the role's processes and subject matter.

75TH PERCENTILE

$120,851

The candidate delivers value beyond the stated job duties, has advanced qualifications and experience, and is ready for the next career level.

First-Year Lawyer in Calgary, AB

First-Year Lawyer Job Description

First year lawyers in Canada typically assist more experienced and senior lawyers with various aspects of client matters within your designated practice area (e.g., corporate law, family law, criminal law).

Typical First Year Lawyer Duties:

- Conducting legal research and analysis of case law and relevant legislation.
- Drafting legal documents such as contracts, letters, and memoranda.
- Assisting with client communication and file management.
- Preparing for client meetings, court appearances, and other legal proceedings (under supervision).
- Develop your legal research and writing skills through assigned projects and tasks.
- Stay up-to-date on legal developments within your practice area.

Looking for a first year lawyer or a first year lawyer job?

Submit your resume or request talent now and our expert recruiters will be with you shortly.

Robert Half can assist you with your lawyer first year staffing needs.

Salary for First-Year Lawyer in Calgary, AB

$83,600 - $125,661

25TH PERCENTILE

$83,600

The candidate is new to the role and building the needed skills, experience and autonomy.

50TH PERCENTILE

$100,059

The candidate has the experience to perform core responsibilities without direct supervision and is comfortable with the role's processes and subject matter.

75TH PERCENTILE

$125,661

The candidate delivers value beyond the stated job duties, has advanced qualifications and experience, and is ready for the next career level.

First-Year Lawyer in Toronto, ON

First-Year Lawyer Job Description

First year lawyers in Canada typically assist more experienced and senior lawyers with various aspects of client matters within your designated practice area (e.g., corporate law, family law, criminal law).

Typical First Year Lawyer Duties:

- Conducting legal research and analysis of case law and relevant legislation.
- Drafting legal documents such as contracts, letters, and memoranda.
- Assisting with client communication and file management.
- Preparing for client meetings, court appearances, and other legal proceedings (under supervision).
- Develop your legal research and writing skills through assigned projects and tasks.
- Stay up-to-date on legal developments within your practice area.

Looking for a first year lawyer or a first year lawyer job?

Submit your resume or request talent now and our expert recruiters will be with you shortly.

Robert Half can assist you with your lawyer first year staffing needs.

Salary for First-Year Lawyer in Toronto, ON

$83,440 - $125,421

25TH PERCENTILE

$83,440

The candidate is new to the role and building the needed skills, experience and autonomy.

50TH PERCENTILE

$99,867

The candidate has the experience to perform core responsibilities without direct supervision and is comfortable with the role's processes and subject matter.

75TH PERCENTILE

$125,421

The candidate delivers value beyond the stated job duties, has advanced qualifications and experience, and is ready for the next career level.

Department of Finance Canada | Ministère des Finances Canada

2024 Fall Economic Statement

Canada

2024
Fall Economic
Statement

This document is available at canada.ca/fall-economic-statement

Cette publication est aussi disponible en français.

Cat No.: F1-52E-PDF

ISSN 2370-5418

In case of discrepancy between the printed version and the electronic version, the electronic version will prevail.

Committee on Canada-U.S. Relations, ensuring a coordinated, whole-of-government approach to managing the bilateral relationship. This initiative also facilitates ongoing engagement with business leaders and workers across key economic sectors, ensuring that Canada's economic interests are effectively represented.

To facilitate prudent economic and fiscal planning, the Department of Finance has developed scenarios that incorporate uncertainties around the outlook and consider slower and faster growth tracks.

The incoming U.S. administration's economic agenda could have different impacts for the economic outlook for both North America and the rest of the world. Such outcomes are only partly accounted for in the scenarios; on the upside through stronger U.S. growth; and on the downside through lower business and consumer confidence and investment due to geopolitical tensions. Given the importance of trade to the Canadian economy, the uncertainty surrounding North American and global trade policies suggests that the balance of risks to growth are tilted to the downside. This is reflected in the scenarios, where the downside risks result in a larger drag on growth compared to the boost in the upside scenario.

The downside scenario sees a prolonged period of subdued growth in Canada as the impact from lower interest rates takes longer to support growth, consumer and business sentiment remain subdued, and the labour market weakens further. Confidence is further weighed down by heightened uncertainty globally around geopolitics and renewed disruptions to global trade, creating a chill on investment. These factors lead to weaker consumption and a smaller rebound in housing market activity. Lower global demand also leads to lower oil prices. These developments result in slower economic growth in Canada (Chart 39). Overall, the level of nominal GDP in Canada is $42 billion below the survey, on average per year, in the downside scenario (Chart 40).

In contrast, the upside scenario sees further improvement in the supply side of the economy both globally and in Canada, including a greater reversal of Canada's recent decline in real GDP per capita. This allows central banks, including the Bank of Canada, to increase the pace of monetary policy easing thereby getting rates to unrestrictive territory faster, leading to stronger demand and improved growth. Higher consumer confidence, along with generally resilient household finances, and a normalization of higher saving rates, supports robust consumer spending, while lower rates lift business investment. Globally, these developments translate into higher commodity prices, which Canadian producers benefit from on global markets. These developments result in economic growth picking up faster than expected. Overall, the level of nominal GDP is $34 billion above the survey, on average per year, in the upside scenario.

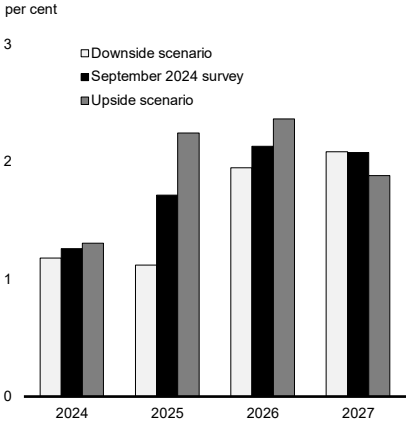
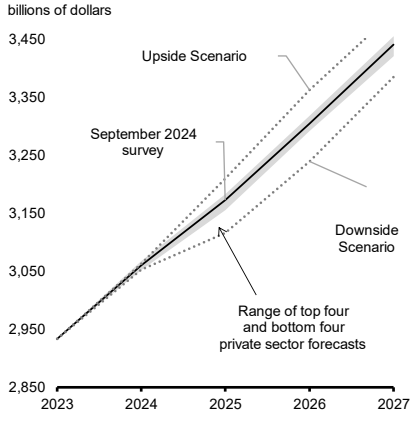
Chart 39
Real GDP Growth



Source: Department of Finance Canada September 2024 survey of private sector economists, which has been adjusted to incorporate the historical revisions and the actual results of the National Accounts for the third quarter of 2024 released on November 29, 2024; Department of Finance calculations.

Chart 40
Nominal GDP Level



Source: Department of Finance Canada September 2024 survey of private sector economists, which has been adjusted to incorporate the historical revisions and the actual results of the National Accounts for the third quarter of 2024 released on November 29, 2024; Department of Finance calculations.

3. Fiscal Outlook

Canada's Responsible Economic Plan

Careful and responsible fiscal management has put Canada in an enviable fiscal position relative to our global peers. The government's responsible economic plan has delivered tangible results—supporting the Bank of Canada's effort to bring down first inflation, and now interest rates, and enabling important investments in housing, child care, health care, dental care, and pharmacare to support Canadians, while also making critical investments in an innovative economy, including more power generation, that will boost long-term prosperity.

The 2024 Fall Economic Statement upholds the government's commitment to responsible fiscal management, through targeted investments that will provide short-term relief, while laying the groundwork for a more productive economy in the years to come. With new measures in the 2024 Fall Economic Statement, policy actions taken since Budget 2024, and incorporating the results of the September 2024 survey of private sector economists, a deficit of $48.3 billion, or 1.6 per cent of GDP, is projected in 2024-25. In 2026-27, the deficit is expected to fall below 1 per cent of GDP, fulfilling the government's ongoing fiscal objective. By the end of the forecast horizon in 2029-30, a smaller deficit of $23 billion, or 0.6 per cent of GDP, is projected (Table 3).

An important fiscal sustainability metric—and the government's fiscal anchor—is to maintain a declining federal debt-to-GDP ratio. The 2024 Fall Economic Statement respects this anchor, with a debt-to-GDP ratio projected to decline in each and every year of the forecast horizon, from 41.9 per cent in 2024-25, down to 38.6 per cent in 2029-30.

Table 3
Economic and Fiscal Developments, Policy Actions and Measures billions of dollars

	Projection
	2023–2024	2024–2025	2025–2026	2026–2027	2027–2028	2028–2029	2029–2030
Budgetary balance - Budget 2024	-40.0	-39.8	-38.9	-30.8	-26.8	-20.0
Economic and fiscal developments since Budget 2024	-21.8	-3.0	1.4	2.9	-2.6	-3.0
Budgetary balance before policy actions and measures	-61.9	-42.8	-37.4	-27.9	-29.4	-23.0	-18.7
Policy actions since Budget 2024		-3.4	-1.1	-0.2	1.3	0.8	0.4
2024 Fall Economic Statement* measures (by chapter)
1. Reducing Everyday Costs		-1.7	-0.6	-0.3	-0.2	-0.2	-0.2
2. Investing to Raise Wages		-0.1	-2.7	-2.8	-2.4	-5.6	-4.9
3. Safety, Security, and Fair Governance		-0.3	-0.4	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.4
Subtotal - 2024 Fall Economic Statement Measures		-2.1	-3.7	-2.8	-2.3	-5.5	-4.7
Total – Policy actions since Budget 2024 and 2024 Fall Economic Statement measures		-5.5	-4.7	-3.1	-1.0	-4.7	-4.3
Budgetary balance	-61.9	-48.3	-42.2	-31.0	-30.4	-27.8	-23.0
Budgetary balance (per cent of GDP)	-2.1	-1.6	-1.3	-0.9	-0.9	-0.8	-0.6
Federal debt (per cent of GDP)	42.1	41.9	41.7	41.0	40.2	39.5	38.6
Budgetary balance - upside scenario	-61.9	-46.0	-34.8	-19.5	-16.5	-15.8	-14.9
Budgetary balance (per cent of GDP)	-2.1	-1.5	-1.1	-0.6	-0.5	-0.4	-0.4
Federal debt (per cent of GDP)	42.1	41.8	40.9	39.7	38.6	37.8	37.0
Budgetary balance - downside scenario	-61.9	-49.7	-51.6	-41.6	-36.8	-32.0	-27.0
Budgetary balance (per cent of GDP)	-2.1	-1.6	-1.7	-1.3	-1.1	-0.9	-0.7
Federal debt (per cent of GDP)	42.1	42.0	42.8	42.5	41.7	40.8	39.9
Budgetary balance - Budget 2024	-40.0	-39.8	-38.9	-30.8	-26.8	-20.0
Budgetary balance (per cent of GDP)	-1.4	-1.3	-1.2	-0.9	-0.8	-0.6
Federal debt (per cent of GDP)	42.1	41.9	41.5	40.8	40.0	39.0

Note: Totals may not add due to rounding. A negative number implies a deterioration in the budgetary balance (lower revenue or higher expenses). A positive number implies an improvement in the budgetary balance (higher revenue or lower expenses).

THE 1994 YEAR BOOK of

The Canadian Bar Association and the Minutes of Proceedings of its

Seventy-Sixth Annual Meeting held in Toronto, Ontario

August 21-24, 1994

ANNUAIRE 1994

de L'Association du Barreau canadien et procès-verbal de sa

Soixante-seizième Assemblée annuelle

tenue à Toronto (Ontario)
du 21 au 24 août 1994

CBA PROCEEDINGS 1994 PROCÈS-VERBAL-ABC
VOL. 77

The 1994 Year Book of the Canadian Bar Association and the unedited minutes of Proceedings of its 76th Annual Meeting held in Toronto, Ontario, August 21-24, 1994

Annuaire 1994 de l'Association du Barreau canadien et procès-verbal non publié des délibérations de sa 76e Assemblée annuelle tenue à Toronto (Ontario) - Du 21 au 24 août 1994

ISSN 0318-4935

Published by The Canadian Bar Association
Publié par l'Association du Barreau canadien
November 1994/Novembre 1994

Price/Prix $45.00

The other thing that I want to mention in particular is that you may have heard by now that we have the pleasure of the company of Janet Reno, the Attorney General of the United States, who will be joining us for lunch on Wednesday. So, if you do not have a ticket for that lunch, the awards lunch on Wednesday, or if you would like to bring a guest, a friend, a colleague from the office with you, there are special event tickets available. You can buy a ticket just for that lunch, they are available at the registration desk.

We are expecting a very large turnout. The media have indicated that they want to cover Ms. Reno's remarks to us, and we think that it is going to be one of the highlights of the week. So, if you have not made plans to be there and you would like to be there, please speak to the people upstairs at the registration desk.

Emile.

M. E. KRUZICK (Co-président du comité, Toronto): Merci, Michelle.

Bienvenue, encore une fois, à Toronto. C'est avec joie et fierté que la ville de Toronto et la province d'Ontario accueillent les délégués à l'Assemblée annuelle à Toronto.

We are indeed very happy to have you all here to join us in what we think and we hope will be a pleasurable experience for all of you. Michelle has already mentioned some of the things that we wanted to highlight. I simply wanted to add that our exhibitors are going to be on this floor starting on Monday and through to Wednesday.

N'oubliez pas de jouer Lotto ABC. This year, we are going to have CBA Lotto at the exhibitors. Nous avons plus de 10 000 $ en prix. The rules are in your kits and I invite all of you to play. The grand prize is two tickets anywhere that Air Canada flies in North America. Le grand tirage aura lieu mercredi. You do not have to be in attendance for the grand prize which will be drawn on Wednesday.

I also wanted to urge you to attend the CLE. Michelle had already alluded to the CLE. The CLE programs begin on Monday and go through until Wednesday. Brian Bucknall, Lynda Tanaka and Peter Cullen from the National Sections Council have put together what is perhaps one of the most ambitious programs that we have put on at an Annual Meeting. I urge you to attend. There are not only topical issues on that menu, but also programs that I think will be of benefit to all of us in the profession.

Enfin, avec Michelle et notre comité local, nous profiterons de cette occasion pour vous souhaiter une excellente assemblée et un séjour très agréable ici à Toronto. Merci.

CHAIRPERSON: Thank you both.

It is an honour for me to introduce our next speaker. As you know, we have a very, very busy but very accessible Chief Justice of Canada. He has blessed us with his presence at every one of our Council meetings. We are very fortunate and we will never take that for granted in terms of how he shares his message with us at this meeting. So, with great pride, I introduce the Chief Justice of Canada, the Right Honourable Antonio Lamer.

RAPPORT DU JUGE EN CHEF DU CANADA

LE TRÈS HON. A. LAMER (Juge en chef du Canada, Ottawa): Mes chers amis, pour le bénéfice de ceux qui voudraient suivre mes remarques en français, j'ai plusieurs copies de mes remarques en français qui sont sur la table en arrière. Vous pouvez me suivre et voir si je quitte mon texte ou pas. C'est ce que je fais d'habitude, mais je me console à la pensée que vous avez aussi la traduction simultanée. Alors, voilà.

Madam President, honoured guests, members of Council, I intend to depart from what has become my usual format. Instead of reviewing in some detail each of my areas of judicial responsibility, I will address one theme which, I believe, is timely and important: judicial independence. I know that you have heard about it very often, but from what I read in the press and from what I hear, I think it has to be reiterated and explained and explained and explained again, not only to the general public but to some judges also, what it is not.

But let me just very briefly speak of the Supreme Court of Canada. As you know, having been told so by myself in the past, the Court, for the last three years, has completely eliminated its backlog of cases to be heard. If you want delay, about the worst place to go is the Supreme Court of Canada because you cannot get any, it is impossible. Without the cooperation and dedication of my colleagues and indeed also my colleagues for the two or three years before I became Chief Justice, this would not have been achieved.

We have also reduced, in the vast majority of cases, the time between reserving judgments and the delivery of judgment. It is now, on the average, around three months. When considering these three months, you must remember that as a matter of law, save a few exceptions where urgency may dictate otherwise, all of our judgments are in both official languages, and that included in this time, this average of about three months, one must realize that a minimum of six weeks is there for translation and revisions. So we are turning them out as fast, as decently as we can.

Some of you might have noticed that more frequently than a few years ago, we hand down a judgment immediately or very shortly after the hearing with reasons to follow. Now, this is something that I have encouraged. This is in order to accommodate one group of our two clients. We have two clients. We have the litigants. They do not care why they win; they just want to know if they win or lose. Then we have the other clients. It is the profession, the legal community. So the litigants, while taking a desirable time to pronounce upon the law adequately in order to fulfil our duty to the legal system, which is our other client.

We have now turned our minds to the delays in the leave process. It is taking too much time. Actually, it presently roughly takes as much time to get leave as it takes to be heard and, on average, get judgment. This, to me and to my colleagues, is to be remedied. There is no reason for this. It should not be so. We already enjoy an excellent relationship with a joint committee. We have a joint committee of the Bar and the Court. It works fine and I know that together we will find a solution.

However, we must realize the obvious. We judges and you lawyers are going to have to stop doing certain things that we are currently doing and do certain other things differently. Though I do not know what has to be done, we have already taken steps as regards our end of the thing so that we are shortening the process. As of the moment, everything is in. Starting September 1, we will be doing our end of things differently.

I think we are going to have to put in place mechanisms to sort of have the Bar meet the times that are set down. I think especially respondents are not putting in their materials in a timely fashion. While we do not want to dispose of a matter without reading or having the benefit of the views of the respondent, I do not know what the solution can be, but we will see.

So I will go no further today in this regard, but I will get back to you at your next meeting. By that time, I am sure that we will have a solution or maybe we will no longer have a problem.

Now, for judicial independence. As Chief Justice of Canada, I am concerned that the principle of judicial independence is not well understood and that its importance is not sufficiently appreciated. I am not just saying not understood by the general public or the Bar, I am saying that I get the impression that it is not really understood by some judges. I am not sure that the public and perhaps even the legal profession fully understand what is at stake.

Unfortunately, judicial independence is often linked with situations in which judges are seen as wanting something, and I cannot blame people for thinking that. I do not want to and in fact cannot address any specific situation; you can understand that. What I do want is to begin the process of reminding some of and for others explaining the basic principle of judicial independence, and then to touch on some important questions as examples of the complex and important issues involved.

One of the reasons that judicial independence is not well understood is that it is so fundamental. It is hard to imagine our system of government without it. Judicial independence is part of our culture, like the rule of law or the presumption of innocence, but, like all fundamental concepts, it is worthwhile, now and then, to go back to the root of the matter. We need to do this to keep our fundamental principles alive and current.

Judges must rule upon the important matters affecting people and sometimes the country as a whole. One person wishes to take another's property; the government takes away a licence necessary to earn a livelihood; the state wants to punish someone for a crime; one level of government seeks to exceed its legislative authority.

The rule of law, interpreted and applied by impartial judges, is the guarantee of everyone's rights and freedoms. We cannot expect judges to be superhuman; we can expect them to be as impartial as it is humanly possible to be and to allow them, indeed require them to work in institutions where the conditions promote and protect that impartiality.

Otherwise, how could the system work? How could the accused get a fair trial if the judge is not independent and seen to be independent of the prosecution? How could one government in a dispute with another have confidence in the absence of actual and perceived impartiality?

Judicial independence is, at its roots, concerned with impartiality, in appearance and in fact, and these of course are elements essential to an effective judiciary. Independence - and I have been saying this to judges to the point that they now hate me, I think - is not a perk of judicial office. It is a guarantee of the institutional conditions of impartiality.

We hear much about "accountability" - a buzzword these days, "accountability." But what is meant by accountability in the context of the judiciary? If what is meant is that an arm of the Executive Branch of government will tell a judge how to be a judge, you can count me out, and there will be a hell of a fight. If what is meant is that a judge's conduct should be subject to public scrutiny, I fully and wholeheartedly agree, provided that the scrutiny does not undercut the judge's capacity to be a judge.

I find it hard to think of any public servant whose official actions are more public than those of a judge. The judge presides at public hearings, makes rulings in public and gives reasons which are public. These reasons are subject to minute scrutiny by appellate courts, who similarly give public reasons for their decisions. The decision of courts stand or fall on their justice and wisdom. They are subject to intense public scrutiny and often media attention. A federally-appointed judge is ultimately responsible to the representatives of the people - Parliament - for his or her fitness to be a judge. I do not understand how any of this makes a judge unaccountable.

Put yourself in the position of a judge sentencing an accused after a conviction for a serious crime. On one side of the courtroom, you have the accused and his or her family; on the other, the victim. Perhaps there are members of support groups or special interest groups monitoring the hearing. The jury, which wrestled with the case and brought in a guilty verdict, may still be there. The press is present and members of the public, of your community. Your decision will be seen and known by all. It is not a committee decision; it is yours alone. It is subject to community discussion, media coverage, and appellate review. You, as this imaginary judge, may feel many things as you impose that sentence, but unaccountable is surely not one of them.

If everybody always thought that judges were right and always liked what they did, judicial independence would not be so important. But it is inherent in the job of the judge that at least half of the litigants will be disappointed or worse. But we need judges who conscientiously do their best to apply the law as they believe it to be. In fact, we do not need any other kind of judge.

So much for what is not controversial. But there is lots of evidence that judicial independence gives rise to difficult, practical questions which require very, very careful consideration. I know, I know, I have looked at your programs and I urge you to give some thought to that with some caution.

In what follows, I do not want to offer my opinion, but to explain what is at stake. We need to be open to change. God knows, if I have been accused of anything, it has been of being too open to too much change. So I am open to change, but we must be careful not to water down our fundamental principles.

Consider the area of judicial conduct. It is easy to say that judges need to be "accountable" - that buzzword - that they should be disciplined, that judicial conduct should not be the preserve of judges. Now, it is easy to say that. As I said to you last year, I can see merit in many proposals for change and I have not changed my mind about that. Sometimes, however, in our rush to be progressive, we overlook some important issues.

There must be a mechanism to review judicial conduct. I think that we all agree on that. Independence brings with it great responsibility. It is crucial that the judiciary be and be seen to be the most skilled and committed persons possible. The present system for federally-appointed judges leaves the ultimate decision about the judge's conduct to Parliament. The Canadian Judicial Council can make recommendations for removal of a judge, but the removal can be done only by Parliament. While there may be great merit in changing this approach, there are also some important questions.

There is a first and fundamental question: how do we ensure that the review of judicial conduct does not undermine the conditions of independent decision-making? This is not a philosophical or hypothetical question. Many complaints - I really can say most if not nearly all - about federally-appointed judges are in fact complaints about the judge's decision on the merits of the case, not about the conduct apart from that decision.

I have looked through them. They say "My case was an obvious case. This judge obviously is incompetent because I did not win." Now, that is the equation. When you read about 90 complaints against judges in Canada - we put it in our annual report - 87 or 86 of those complaints are that, in different forms or fashions, it is about that. So we are not dealing with a haemorrhage here, we are not dealing with a great big problem. We have 975 federally-appointed judges who, day in and day out, are handing out judgments and hearing cases and they are doing it very well. I do not have to tell you, you are there.

Obviously, the remedy for these complaints is appeal. Those are the letters that are being sent to these people, saying "Look, speak to your lawyer and go to appeal if you think he..."

Not an investigation of judicial conduct. Such investigation has the potential to undermine the independent decision-making which is the core of the judicial function.

Drawing the line between error and misconduct is not always easy. Sure, because there are certain situations where it is a hybrid, where the judge's conduct is involved, and where there is a perception that the judge, let us say, was biased. So it is an appeal problem, but it also maybe. It depends on how the bias has been conveyed. Drawing the line between error and misconduct, as I said, is not always easy, but drawing it is fundamentally important to the rule of law and the independent decision-making of the judge.

We had a case recently where the line was so difficult. We had a very, very irate judge, and I could understand his point of view. You know, "How the hell do you people dare interfere in my judicial independence?" I think he was right. We made a close call and I am not sure that we made the right one. So it is not easy. Do not forget, we are experts at it.

I throw this out because it is nice to say, "Let us bring in some lay person." I do not know, there is no virtue in not being trained for the job that you are going to do. And I should add that, upon becoming a chief justice, you do not appoint a chief justice by lobotomizing a judge - chief justices are judges - and say, "We will have a judge." Well, I am a judge and the other 36 chief justices in Canada are all judges. The only problem is that maybe we have been around long enough to know more about what we are doing than when we started. Some of us maybe have been around too long, but you will let me know when that happens.

A second question is more institutional or structural. Assuming that there is to be judicial discipline, that is that judges should be subject to sanctions short of removal, who is to do this?

I do not mean the identity of the people, but the nature of the institution. Is it problematic to have an arm of the Executive Branch carrying out such a role? Judicial independence is, in large part, to insulate the judiciary from pressure from the other branches of government. Are those who will be doing the disciplining an arm of the Executive? To whom and for what are those doing the disciplining to be accountable?

Right now, and I reminded my colleagues on the Canadian Judicial Council - some of them did not realize that because we are all chief justices, when we sit and we look at each other, we think we are in court - but we are a creation of the Executive. The Canadian Judicial Council is an arm of the Executive.

Right now, that is tolerable for two reasons. One, we are all judges. Secondly, we are not disciplining anybody, we are recommending; we are not removing, we are recommending removal to Parliament. But, as soon as you move away from that into disciplining, it is a different ball game.

Thirdly, I would note that there is a constitutional dimension to this discussion. Is discipline short of removal of a federally-appointed judge constitutional by any mechanism other than by both Houses of Parliament? I do not think that many people have thought about this. Is a judge who has been, say, suspended for 30 days removed from office for those 30 days? If so, how do you accomplish the suspension in view of Section 99 of the Constitution which says that a judge is removable by the Governor General on address of both Houses of Parliament? We may be looking at a constitutional amendment. I will be long retired before we can get an amendment to our Constitution, as far as I have experienced in the last few years.

Finally, quite apart from the legality of these ideas, is disciplining judges wise? Maybe it is; I am not saying it is not. Can parties legitimately complain that they do not wish their case heard by a judge who has been disciplined? While I can see considerable, practical merit and appeal - and I said that much a year ago - in having the power to impose sanctions short of removal, we must not turn a blind eye to the problems.

These are some of the examples of the practical issues of judicial independence which arise in the field of judicial conduct. I, for one, do not find them easy. I know in saying this that I run the risk of appearing to be a judge sticking up for judges. But I am most certainly not sticking up for judges in the sense of wanting to insulate them from criticism or, in the popular jargon, to make them "unaccountable." I am sticking up for the institution of an independent judiciary. I do so because an independent judiciary is a fundamental constitutional safeguard of the rights and liberties of everyone and an essential element in a federal democratic state. It is part of my job, that is what I am paid for, so that is why I am sticking up for it.

The field of judicial conduct, by no means, exhausts the practical issues of judicial independence. There is also the large question of how the judiciary and the Executive should interact on questions where each has its legitimate areas of responsibility and concern. For example, the elected representatives of the people justly exercise ultimate budgetary responsibility, but the resources made available to the judiciary also may touch on areas of judicial independence. More significantly, the judiciary must be able to stay out of the political fray, but at the same time be assured that the public interest in a properly functioning judiciary is being fairly responded to by government.

In this regard, I think that we need to work much harder at finding acceptable mechanisms that keep judges out of the political process, while at the same time fairly and promptly dealing with the legitimate requirements of an effective judiciary. We have had many examples, over the last year or so, showing why such mechanisms are badly needed. Of course, ultimate budgetary authority, in the sense of making large policy decisions about society's priorities, must stay where it belongs: with the elected representatives.

An example of one such mechanism is the Federal Triennial Commission process established by the Judges Act. Its objective is to keep judicial compensation and benefits out of the political arena while preserving proper political accountability for the expenditure of public funds. It looks good on paper, but it has one problem: it just does not work. Why? Because the Executive and Parliament have never given it a fair chance.

While I favour giving it a fair chance - and the process will be repeated in 1995, so there will be an opportunity soon to make it work - maybe over the long term there are some other models that could be studied, and indeed this is an area where the Bar could be of great help. We need a mechanism that would have the confidence of the legislature, the judiciary and the public. It must be capable of meeting the legitimate and important expectations of each. This would be a tremendous achievement in the practical application of judicial independence to the day-to-day work of the judiciary.

The Canadian Judicial Council, which I chair, is concerned about these and many other issues related to judicial independence. Members of Council, as judges and chief justices, live with these issues. We understand their importance, we also understand their difficulty. That is why we have commissioned a detailed study of these matters. The study is only a step in what must be a painstaking and rigorous analysis. This must be done in the knowledge that we are working at the very heart of democracy based upon the rule of law. We must not take the easy way out and react in an ad hoc way to perceive problems with vague or careless solutions. The cure must not be worse than the disease.

Judicial independence is one of our core values. We must treat it with great care and enormous respect. We must not put judicial independence aside too easily. On the other hand - and this I have been telling some judges - we must not risk trivializing it by invoking it inappropriately. I will not say much more about that, given my position.

Let me turn to judicial education, because judicial education is linked in very practical ways to the notion of judicial independence. The independence conferred upon judges is a great responsibility. It requires that judges be as well trained as is possible. Moreover, judicial education, like the courts, requires resources. Government has to supply the money and legitimately wants it spent well, but there is also the need to ensure that judicial independence is respected. Judges need to have ultimate control over judicial education.

How would the defence lawyers here like judges being required to attend courses on sentencing put on by the Attorney General? This is not a farfetched, hypothetical situation. In 1962, the Attorney General of a province - I will not identify the province, but you will guess it - tried it. At the time, I was active in the Criminal Law Section of the Canadian Bar Association and I called a press conference. That was the end of that, but I am not sure the public really understood the danger of such an initiative.

The National Judicial Institute is the vehicle in Canada to take the lead in responding to the educational needs of the judiciary. It is an independent body, answerable to a Board of Governors, which I chair. Government funds the Institute and is kept up to date on its activities.

The Institute, in its relatively short existence, has accomplished a great deal. The Institute offers over 30 courses each year to both federally and provincially-appointed judges. Over 1,000 judge registrants participated last year in courses dealing with substantive law, judicial skills and sensitivity training.

One must add to that - and I said this at the Mid-Winter Meeting - there are other bodies giving training to judges. Some of them not only to judges, but to lawyers and judges; others have specific programs for judges. So when I say that there are 1,000, that is only at the Judicial Institute. But my guess would be that it is closer to 2,000 judges last year who attended courses at some point in time. As I said at your Mid-Winter Meeting, you know, the main job of a judge is to hear cases and sit. We cannot always be training. So there is training going on. When we say that we must train our judges, we are being trained.

The Institute has high-quality, training videos in the areas of family violence, child abuse, gender bias and race relations. Every newly-appointed judge in Canada receives an orientation kit from the Institute which includes videos on gender equality and race relations. These topics are addressed in the Institute's courses on early orientation for newly-appointed judges. The Institute also offers programs on family violence and child sexual abuse which have been attended by a large number of judges at a variety of locations across Canada.

Over and above the material and training for newly-appointed judges, approximately two thirds of the federally-appointed judiciary have participated in gender equality training through programs organized by the Institute. More than half have participated in programs dealing with cultural awareness. These numbers are going up almost every month. Since 1990, race and/or gender issues have been dealt with in 20 courses offered by the Institute.

I recently announced the appointment of the new Associate Director of the Institute, a position that has been vacant since Judge Dolores Hansen left that position to become the Institute's Executive Director. The new Associate Director is Madam Justice Louise Charron of the Ontario Court, General Division, in Ottawa. She brings to the job extensive practice, academic and judicial experience. I believe that we have in place at the Institute a superb team, headed by our two very capable and committed leaders, Judge Hansen and Justice Charron. The judiciary and the public are very fortunate to have such fine leadership in the area of judicial education.

There are challenges though. One is the precarious financial arrangements for the institution. The help of the federal government and most provinces and territories has been exemplary. But there are exceptions. Indeed, two provinces do not contribute at all, although, surprisingly, they continue to send their judges to the courses. The level of funding is barely adequate. It is not guaranteed on a long-term basis, making planning very difficult.

As regards those two provinces, I have written to the Premier of each of those two provinces with the hope that we will solve the problem. I do not think we will, getting the response of one and the acknowledgement of receipt of the other. In fairness to all, I will identify the provinces: Quebec and Manitoba. It is on the agenda of the next meeting of the Board of Governors of the Institute, we will not see the other provinces subsidize these two provinces on legal education, as long as I am Chair. So we will settle that problem. It will not be a pleasant settlement, but at least we will settle it for the future.

I say this because it is unfortunate. Everybody is asking that judges be trained more and more, but yet our budgets are being cut. We are asked to cut by 10%, and some people are not coughing up, they are not paying at all. I do not know how you give more education with less money. It is just impossible. Unless people start making donations, I do not see any solution to the problem. We are going to have to reduce. We pay our bills, so we are going to have to find the money somewhere.

No doubt the public has trouble understanding the importance of the principle of judicial independence and the things that flow from it. What is happening in judicial education is probably not ever going to be the subject of discussion by most people at their office or plant coffee break, but these issues are vitally important to everyone. I believe the judiciary can do a better job of communicating on these sorts of issues.

I also believe that you, the Bar, could help. In fact, I raise these matters here not to complain. I could give a press conference. I raise them because I and my colleagues chief justices, we need your help, and it has always been that way. You can inform yourselves about these matters, share your considered views, and above all help your clients and the people in your communities to understand better what is at stake.

Judicial independence is not about money or power or privilege. I have said it until I am blue in the face, although some papers keep printing the contrary of what I say. I am in favour of the freeze. In fact, I go further, and the judges hate me for saying this: had we not been frozen, I would have invited the government to freeze us. Yet, they will still print that what I am talking about here is money, that I want a raise for judges. That is not what we are talking about. The vast majority of your judges in Canada accept the freeze, understand that there has to be one and understand the financial situation.

So I say it - I know it will not come out that way, but anyway - I will still say that we are not talking here about money. It is about justice under the law, the resolution of disputes through reasoned argument, and the respect of every person's rights. I would certainly not urge unquestioning acceptance of the status quo - it is not in my nature - but I would urge that all judges, lawyers and members of the public treat this fundamental principle with care and respect when considering change.

I wish you all the very best in your upcoming deliberations. It is always, Madam President, a pleasure for me to visit with you. I have been doing it now twice a year, Mid-Winter and Annual. I hope that I will be doing this for many years to come, as long as you keep inviting me, and I wish you a very good week.

I am sorry that I cannot stay with you, I have other duties awaiting me and I will be flying back this afternoon. But I wish you well and, as you know, you are always welcome into my chambers if and when you come to the Supreme Court of Canada. I usually have the losing side up with the winning side also whenever it is possible. So thank you, good luck.

CHAIRPERSON: Thank you, Chief Justice. Rest assured that the Canadian Bar stands ready, guarded to defend the vital issue and safeguard judicial independence.

I also, Chief Justice, want to advise you that we have also advised the Minister of Justice that we are poised to help and assist in terms of review of the Triennial Commission. In conjunction with that, we deliberated yesterday and have determined that the Standing Committee on Pensions and Judges' Salaries will review, as part of our submission, there will be a review of the Triennial Commission as we make our submission for the 1995 Triennial Commission.

So thank you very much indeed for your kind words.

I now have the honour of introducing the federal Minister of Justice, the Honourable Allan Rock Q.C.

I must thank him in advance of his speaking because he has been available to us on many fronts during the course of this meeting. He will attend the bear pit session tomorrow, he will be attending the Government Lawyers Conference. He has been very supportive of this initiative. He has been very supportive of the Canadian Bar this year. He has, as I told you over and over again, as I spoke across this country, been one of the most successful Ministers of Justice that we have encountered. He has set up biannual meetings with the President. His door is always open and, as a result of that, I believe that he is convincing the federal government of the importance of the priority of the administration of justice and justice issues in this country.

We are honoured and delighted to have him in attendance to address you today. Please warmly welcome the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada, Allan Rock, Q.C.

REPORT OF THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA

THE HON. A. ROCK (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada, Ottawa): Good morning. Thank you, Cecilia, for the very warm introduction. Good morning to all of you.

It is delightful to see so many old friends again and familiar faces. Just this morning, in the half hour that I was here and outside in the hall, I renewed acquaintances with a lot of people whom I had practised with and saw in court over the years. It is hard to believe that it is now a year since I left practice for my new line of work. In fact, I would not have believed it myself except that some of my former partners pointed out that my receivables are now in the 365-day column, so it must be right.

This summer has been a nice break from the session of Parliament that finished at the end of June. I am sure that it has been a great relief for everybody. Who was it who said that "the liberty of the subject is never in greater jeopardy than when the legislature is in session"?

For my part, I have spent the summer travelling across Canada. I have been, in fact, in nine of the provinces in the weeks since the House adjourned, speaking with members of the Liberal caucus, meeting Canadians directly on a variety of justice issues, including but not limited to gun control, although gun control has figured prominently in a lot of those public meetings. I must say that it is nice to come into a meeting without having to pass through a metal detector first. It is a nice change.

The meetings on gun control have produced sort of a mixed response. You know, people have strong feelings on that subject one way or the other. Coming back from the tour, I feel sort of like the coach of the team that came back from a road trip with a record of four and four and said, "Well, you know, it could just as easily have gone the other way."

But one thing about that trip and this job is that it does diminish the time available to spend at home with my family. I think in recent weeks there is accumulating evidence that I have to spend more time there. I came home about three weeks ago, went into the house and Debbie was there. The children were upstairs, so she said, "Kids, come and say hello to your father." So Andrew ran across the floor and picked up the phone. But I think that now that things are getting onto a more regular footing, that will sort itself out and we will get things organized for the fall.

I do want to congratulate Cecilia and the CBA for yet another extraordinary convention, and particularly Michelle Fuerst and Emile Kruzick whose hard work with the Organizing Committee has produced a really well-organized, interesting, thought-provoking week.

Statement of Principles on Self-represented Litigants and Accused Persons

Adopted by the Canadian Judicial Council
September 2006

CANADIAN JUDICIAL COUNCIL

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES ON SELF-REPRESENTED LITIGANTS AND ACCUSED PERSONS*

PREAMBLE

Whereas the system of criminal and civil justice in Canada is predicated on the expectation of equal access to justice, including procedural justice, and equal treatment under the law for all persons;

Whereas the achievement of these expectations depends on awareness and understanding of both procedural and substantive law;

Whereas access to justice is facilitated by the availability of representation to all parties, and it is therefore desirable that each person seeking access to the court should be represented by counsel;

Whereas those persons who do remain unrepresented by counsel both face and present special challenges with respect to the court system;

Therefore, judges, court administrators, members of the Bar, legal aid organizations, and government funding agencies each have responsibility to ensure that self-represented persons are provided with fair access and equal treatment by the court; and Therefore, it is desirable to provide a statement of principles for the guidance of such persons in the administration of justice in relation to self-represented persons.

*Notes:

1. Throughout this document, the term “self-represented” is used to describe persons who appear without representation. The use of this term is not meant to suggest inferences about the reasons the individual is without representation, nor the quality of their self-representation, and recognizes that some individuals prefer to represent themselves.

2. The Statements, Principles and Commentaries are advisory in nature and are not intended to be a code of conduct.

A. PROMOTING RIGHTS OF ACCESS

STATEMENT:

Judges, the courts and other participants in the justice system have a responsibility to promote opportunities for all persons to understand and meaningfully present their case, regardless of representation.

PRINCIPLES:

1. Access to justice for self-represented persons requires all aspects of the court process to be, as much as possible, open, transparent, clearly defined, simple, convenient and accommodating.

2. The court process should, to the extent possible, be supplemented by processes that enhance accessibility, informality, and timeliness of case resolution. These processes may include case management, alternative dispute resolution (ADR) procedures, and informal settlement conferences presided over by a judge.

3. Information, assistance and self-help support required by self-represented persons should be made available through the various means by which self-represented persons normally seek information, including for example: pamphlets, telephone inquiries, courthouse inquiries, legal clinics, and internet searches and inquiries.

4. In view of the value of legal advice and representation, judges, court administrators and other participants in the legal system should:
   (a) inform any self-represented parties of the potential consequences and responsibilities of proceeding without a lawyer;
   (b) refer self-represented persons to available sources of representation, including those available from Legal Aid plans, pro bono assistance and community and other services; and
   (c) refer self-represented persons to other appropriate sources of information, education, advice and assistance.

COMMENTARY:

1. Informed opinion and research suggests that the numbers of self-represented persons in the courts are increasing. However, the average person may be overwhelmed by the simplest of court procedures.

2. Self-represented persons are generally uninformed about their rights and about the consequences of choosing the options available to them; they may find court procedures complex, confusing and intimidating; and they may not have the knowledge or skills to participate actively and effectively in their own litigation.[1]

3. Many self-represented persons have limited literacy skills, and many speak Canada's official languages as a second language, if at all. As a result, many self-represented persons tend to access information about the courts through means other than the written word. For this reason, it is essential that information be provided using other means, including videos and pictures. Further, having an official available to answer questions posed by self-represented persons should, to the extent possible, supplement pre-packaged materials.

4. Given these factors, it is important that judges, court administrators and others facilitate, to the extent possible, access to justice for self-represented persons.

5. Providing the required services for self-represented persons is also necessary to enhance the courts' ability to function in a timely and efficient manner.

[1] Hann, Robert et al. A Study of Unrepresented Accused in Nine Canadian Courts. Ottawa: Department of Justice, 2003.

B. PROMOTING EQUAL JUSTICE

STATEMENT:

Judges, the courts and other participants in the justice system have a responsibility to promote access to the justice system for all persons on an equal basis, regardless of representation.

PRINCIPLES:

1. Judges and court administrators should do whatever is possible to provide a fair and impartial process and prevent an unfair disadvantage to self-represented persons.

2. Self-represented persons should not be denied relief on the basis of a minor or easily rectified deficiency in their case.

3. Where appropriate, a judge should consider engaging in such case management activities as are required to protect the rights and interests of self-represented persons. Such case management should begin as early in the court process as possible.

4. When one or both parties are proceeding without representation, non-prejudicial and engaged case and courtroom management may be needed to protect the litigants' equal right to be heard. Depending on the circumstances and nature of the case, the presiding judge may:
   (a) explain the process;
   (b) inquire whether both parties understand the process and the procedure;
   (c) make referrals to agencies able to assist the litigant in the preparation of the case;
   (d) provide information about the law and evidentiary requirements;
   (e) modify the traditional order of taking evidence; and
   (f) question witnesses.

COMMENTARY:

1. It is consistent with the requirements of judicial neutrality and impartiality for a judge to engage in such affirmative and non-prejudicial steps as described in Principles 3 and 4. A careful explanation of the purpose of this type of management will minimize any risk of a perception of biased behaviour.

2. Judges must exercise diligence in ensuring that the law is applied in an even-handed way to all, regardless of representation. The Council's statement of Ethical Principles for Judges (1998) has already established the principle of equality in principles governing judicial conduct. That document states that, "Judges should conduct themselves and proceedings before them so as to ensure equality according to law."

3. However, it is clear that treating all persons alike does not necessarily result in equal justice. The Ethical Principles for Judges also cites Eldridge v. British Columbia (Attorney General)[2] on a judge's duty to "rectify and prevent" discriminatory effects against particular groups.

4. Self-represented persons, like all other litigants, are subject to the provisions whereby courts maintain control of their proceedings and procedures. In the same manner as with other litigants, self-represented persons may be treated as vexatious or abusive litigants where the administration of justice requires it. The ability of judges to promote access may be affected by the actions of self-represented litigants themselves.

[2] [1997] 3 S.C.R. 624 per LaForest, J. for the court at 667.

C. RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE PARTICIPANTS IN THE JUSTICE SYSTEM

STATEMENT:

All participants are accountable for understanding and fulfilling their roles in achieving the goals of equal access to justice, including procedural fairness.

PRINCIPLES:

For Both the Judiciary and Court Administrators

1. Judges and court administrators should meet the needs of self-represented persons for information, referral, simplicity, and assistance.

2. Judges and court administrators should develop forms, rules and procedures, which are understandable to and easily accessed by self-represented persons.

3. To the extent possible, judges and court administrators should develop packages for self-represented persons and standardized court forms.

4. Judges and court administrators have no obligation to assist a self-represented person who is disrespectful, frivolous, unreasonable, vexatious, abusive, or making no reasonable effort to prepare their own case.

For the Judiciary

1. Judges have a responsibility to inquire whether self-represented persons are aware of their procedural options, and to direct them to available information if they are not. Depending on the circumstances and nature of the case, judges may explain the relevant law in the case and its implications, before the self-represented person makes critical choices.

2. In appropriate circumstances, judges should consider providing self-represented persons with information to assist them in understanding and asserting their rights, or to raise arguments before the court.

3. Judges should ensure that procedural and evidentiary rules are not used to unjustly hinder the legal interests of self-represented persons.

4. The judiciary should engage in dialogues with legal professional associations, court administrators, government and legal aid organizations in an effort to design and provide for programs to assist self-represented persons.

For Court Administrators

1. Court administrators should seek to provide self-represented persons with the assistance necessary to initiate or respond to a case and to navigate the court system.

2. In particular, court administrators should be given sufficient resources to be able to:
   (a) provide, on request, all public information contained in dockets or calendars, case files, indexes and existing reports;
   (b) provide, on request, access to or a recitation of relevant common, routinely employed rules, court procedures, and fees and costs;
   (c) provide, on request, information about where to find applicable laws and rules
   (d) identify and provide, on request, applicable forms and written instructions;
   (e) answer questions about how to complete forms, but not about how answers should be phrased;
   (f) define, on request, terms commonly used in court processes;
   (g) provide, on request, phone numbers for Legal Aid, lawyer referral services, local panels, or other assistance services, such as Internet resources, known to court staff; and
   (h) provide, to the extent possible, and in compliance with applicable law, appropriate aids and services for individuals with disabilities.

3. Court administrators shall not provide legal advice.

4. Court administrators should educate court personnel regarding the importance of public access to the courts and should provide training to court personnel as to how they should assist self-represented persons.

5. Court administrators should allocate the necessary resources to allow court personnel to provide meaningful assistance.

For Self-Represented Persons

1. Self-represented persons are expected to familiarize themselves with the relevant legal practices and procedures pertaining to their case.

2. Self-represented persons are expected to prepare their own case.

3. Self-represented persons are required to be respectful of the court process and the officials within it. Vexatious litigants will not be permitted to abuse the process.

For the Bar

1. Members of the Bar are expected to participate in designing and delivering legal aid and pro bono representation to persons who would otherwise be self-represented, as well as other programs for short-term, partial and unbundled legal advice and assistance as may be deemed useful for the self-represented persons in the courts of which they are officers.

2. Members of the Bar are expected to be respectful of self-represented persons and to adjust their behaviour accordingly when dealing with self-represented persons, in accordance with their professional ethical obligations. For example, members of the Bar should, to the extent possible, avoid the use of complex legal language. Members of the Bar may be guided by the Canadian Bar Association's Code of Professional Conduct and the codes of each jurisdiction (see Guiding Principle XIX (8))and references therein.

For Others

1. Government departments with overall responsibility for court administration should provide Legal Aid plans with sufficient resources to provide a proper range of required services for financially eligible persons, including: education, short-term information and advice, and representation.

2. In addition to providing representation, Legal Aid organizations should be encouraged to create flexible options and models for addressing the challenges of self-represented persons, including programs providing education and short-term information and advice.

3. Providers of judicial education should develop educational programs for judges and court administrators on broad-based methods of assisting and managing the cases of self-represented persons.

4. Government agencies with overall responsibility for court administration should provide courts with the resources and assistance necessary to train court administrators and to provide the funding necessary for them to provide meaningful, broad-based assistance to self-represented persons, including awareness and communications training.

5. Government agencies with overall responsibility for court administration should provide funding for self-help programs for self-represented persons, as well as for programs of assistance to self-represented persons, which falls short of representation.

COMMENTARY:

1. The adoption of these principles in individual courts should be guided, as much as possible, by statistical information about self-represented persons and their cases in each particular court jurisdiction.

2. The design of programs to assist self-represented persons should be a collaborative effort among the judiciary, the courts, the Bar, Legal Aid providers, the public, and relevant governmental agencies.

3. A key requirement is that court personnel understand the distinction between legal information and legal advice, which they are forbidden from providing. Legal advice would include, among other things, advising someone on whether or how to best pursue a case, and explaining the law (as opposed to the process, or distributing information on how to access the law). Research suggests that many court officials may be uncomfortable with providing assistance to self-represented persons for reasons that include uncertainty about how far they may go in answering questions from self-represented persons. Training of court personnel helps them to give meaningful assistance without giving legal advice. Training packages may include such elements as multi-step "protocols" for court personnel and scripts for answering frequently asked questions.

4. Education packages for judges may also include multi-step "protocols" which may include possible scripts for commonly experienced situations. Suggested language for judges typically covers the need to explain the process, the elements and potential consequences, the burden of presenting evidence, the types of evidence which may be presented, the rules governing non-lawyers assisting self-represented persons, and so on.

5. Self-help support for self-represented persons may include such elements as conveniently accessible (e.g., online) forms; "virtual libraries" containing Rules of Court, relevant law, and guidelines to the judiciary in issuing key types of orders or rulings; directions to courthouses; summaries of key areas of law; e-filing; clearinghouses for access to legal services; how-to pamphlets on how to prepare and present a case; and the like.

6. Scheduling should take into account the special challenges and needs of self-represented persons.

Ethical Principles for Judges

Principes de déontologie judiciaire

CJC
CCM
Canadian Judicial Council
Conseil canadien de la magistrature

Foreword

As the Canadian Judicial Council marks its 50th anniversary of service to Canadians, it is timely that we have revised and modernized Ethical Principles for Judges. From their first publication in 1998, these principles have laid out the ethical frame of reference to which all judges aspire: judicial independence, integrity and respect, diligence and competence, equality and impartiality.

Canada is fortunate to be served by a highly competent and skilled judiciary. Judges can face ethical questions as we go about our personal and professional lives. While the 1998 document served us well, and indeed was the model on which other judicial systems around the world relied, we understand that ethical considerations evolve and need to keep pace with society's expectations.

When I was appointed Chief Justice of Canada, I was pleased to learn that the Canadian Judicial Council had embarked on a public consultation exercise to hear firsthand from Canadians and our valued partners, what they expect of our judges. From those extensive consultations, and the tireless work of the Council's Judicial Independence and Appointment Process Committee, co-chaired by Chief Justice Martel D. Popescul and Chief Justice Deborah K. Smith, a new and refreshed document emerged.

Préface

L'édition revue et actualisée des Principes de déontologie judiciaire arrive à point nommé, alors que le Conseil canadien de la magistrature célèbre 50 ans de service à la population canadienne. Depuis la parution de la première édition en 1998, ces principes constituent le cadre de référence déontologique auquel tous les juges aspirent : l'indépendance judiciaire, l'intégrité et le respect, la diligence et la compétence, l'égalité et l'impartialité.

Le Canada a la chance d'être servi par une magistrature hautement compétente et qualifiée. Les juges sont parfois confrontés à des questions déontologiques dans leur vie personnelle et professionnelle. Bien que l'édition de 1998 nous ait bien servi, et qu'elle ait été prise pour modèle par d'autres systèmes judiciaires du monde entier, nous comprenons que les considérations d'ordre déontologique évoluent et qu'elles doivent s'adapter aux attentes de la société.

Lorsque j'ai été nommé juge en chef du Canada, j'ai été heureux d'apprendre que le Conseil canadien de la magistrature avait amorcé un processus de consultation publique pour entendre directement ce que la population canadienne et nos partenaires estimés attendent de nos juges. À la suite de ces vastes consultations et du travail inlassable du Comité sur l'indépendance judiciaire et le processus de nomination du Conseil, coprésidé par le juge en chef Martel D. Popescul et la juge en chef Deborah K. Smith, un nouveau document actualisé a pris forme. Je sais que le comité a examiné attentivement tous les commentaires qu'il a reçus, et je remercie personnellement toutes les personnes qui ont fait connaître leurs points de vue.

I know that the Committee carefully considered every comment received and I personally extend my thanks to every person who provided his or her views.

The revised Ethical Principles build on the original publication, and explore new and emerging issues relevant to our modern times: case management and settlement conferences, social media, interacting with self-represented litigants, professional development and the post-judicial role. While these principles are intended to assist judges with the ethical and professional questions they may confront, they are also written to provide the public with a better understanding of the judicial role.

I am proud of this document and proud of the dedication of those who developed it. It is my sincere hope that Ethical Principles will be consulted regularly by judges for years to come.

Sincerely,

The Right Honourable
Richard Wagner, P.C.

Chief Justice of Canada and Chairperson of the Canadian Judicial Council

Cette version révisée des Principes de déontologie judiciaire s'appuie sur l'édition originale et traite de questions nouvelles et naissantes qui ont rapport à nos temps modernes : la gestion des instances et les conférences de règlement, les médias sociaux, l'interaction avec les parties non représentées par un avocat, le perfectionnement professionnel, et le rôle des juges après leur départ de la magistrature. Ces principes visent à aider les juges à trouver réponse aux questions déontologiques et professionnelles qui peuvent se poser à la magistrature, mais ils sont aussi rédigés pour permettre au public de mieux comprendre le rôle des juges.

Je suis fier de ce document et fier du dévouement des personnes qui y ont travaillé. J'espère sincèrement que les juges consulteront régulièrement les Principes de déontologie judiciaire dans les années à venir.

Je vous offre mes meilleures salutations.

Le très honorable
Richard Wagner, c.p.

Juge en chef du Canada et Président du Conseil canadien de la magistrature

Table of Contents

Table des matières

Introduction

Purpose

1. Ethical Principles for Judges [Ethical Principles] provides ethical guidance for federally appointed judges. In doing so, it expresses a vision of what it means to be a judge. Taken together, the principles of independence, integrity and respect, diligence and competence, equality and impartiality define the judicial role. Ethical Principles was drafted with confidence that it would be read by judges and the public as an expression of the judiciary's highest ethical aspirations in the service of justice and the rule of law.

2. An independent and impartial judiciary is the right of all and constitutes a fundamental pillar of democratic governance, the rule of law and justice in Canada. Everyone needs and deserves impartial, competent, and respectful judges. All members of the judiciary commit to perform their role in such a manner so as to maintain the confidence of the public. The guidance that follows describes the high ethical standards that all judges strive to maintain in their professional and personal lives. While the overarching principles that guide the judiciary are largely immutable, evolving expectations of the public, societal developments and new understandings of issues relevant to the judiciary will serve to constantly inform the interpretation of Ethical Principles in the future.

Introduction

Objet

1. Les Principes de déontologie judiciaire [Principes de déontologie] offrent des conseils d'ordre déontologique aux juges de nomination fédérale. Ce faisant, ils expriment une vision de ce que cela représente que d'être un juge. Le rôle des juges est défini par les principes d'indépendance, d'intégrité et de respect, de diligence et de compétence, d'égalité et d'impartialité. Les Principes de déontologie se veulent l'expression des idéaux d'ordre déontologique les plus élevés auxquels aspirent les juges, au service de la justice et de la primauté du droit; c'est l'intention que devraient y lire les juges et le public.

2. Piliers fondamentaux de la gouvernance démocratique, de la primauté du droit et de la justice, l'indépendance et l'impartialité de la magistrature sont des droits reconnus à chacun. Toute personne doit et mérite d'être entendue par des juges impartiaux, compétents et respectueux. Tous les membres de la magistrature s'engagent à exercer leur charge de manière à préserver la confiance du public. Les recommandations qui suivent exposent les normes d'ordre déontologique élevées que les juges s'efforcent d'observer dans leurs fonctions professionnelles et dans leur vie personnelle. Si les grands principes qui guident les juges demeurent largement immuables, en revanche les attentes du public, la société elle-même et notre compréhension des questions qui touchent la fonction judiciaire évoluent, et cette évolution éclairera de façon constante l'interprétation des Principes de déontologie à l'avenir.

3. A judge must be and be seen to be free to decide honestly and impartially on the basis of the law and the evidence, without external pressure or influence and without fear of interference from anyone. Nothing in Ethical Principles can or is intended to limit or restrict this judicial independence in any manner. Judges have the duty to uphold and defend judicial independence, not as a privilege of judicial office but as the constitutionally guaranteed right of everyone to have their disputes heard and decided in a fair way by impartial and independent judges.

4. The ethical principles articulated in this document are aspirational. They are not intended to be a code of conduct that sets minimum standards. They are advisory in nature and are designed to (i) describe exemplary behaviour which all judges strive to maintain; (ii) assist judges with the difficult ethical and professional issues that confront them; and (iii) help members of the public better understand the judicial role. The guidance provided in Ethical Principles does not preclude reasonable disagreements about their application in particular cases or imply that any departure from them necessarily warrants disapproval. The ethical principles are intended to be applied in light of all of the relevant circumstances and consistently with the requirements of judicial independence and the law. They should not be viewed as an exhaustive expression of the ethical considerations that judges may face in their professional or personal lives.

3. Les juges doivent être libres et paraître libres de juger avec intégrité et impartialité sur le seul fondement du droit et de la preuve présentée, sans pressions ni influences extérieures et sans crainte d'ingérence de la part de qui que ce soit. Les Principes de déontologie ne sauraient limiter ou restreindre en aucune façon cette indépendance de la magistrature et ils ne visent pas à le faire. Les juges sont tenus de soutenir et de défendre l'indépendance de la magistrature, non parce qu'elle constitue un privilège rattaché à leur charge, mais parce que la Constitution garantit à quiconque le droit de voir son litige entendu et tranché de façon équitable par des juges impartiaux et indépendants.

4. Les principes d'ordre déontologique exposés dans ce document articulent un idéal à atteindre. Ils ne constituent pas un code de conduite imposant des normes minimales à suivre. Ce sont des recommandations ayant pour objectif (i) de décrire la conduite exemplaire que les juges s'efforcent d'observer; (ii) d'aider les juges à résoudre les épineuses questions d'ordre déontologique et professionnel auxquelles ils sont confrontés; et (iii) d'aider les membres du public à mieux comprendre la fonction judiciaire. Il n'est pas exclu que les recommandations énoncées dans les Principes de déontologie puissent faire l'objet d'interprétations divergentes raisonnables quant à leur application dans un cas donné; de plus, le fait d'énoncer ces recommandations n'implique pas qu'il y aurait nécessairement matière à réprobation si on s'en écartait. Les principes de déontologie doivent être appliqués au regard de toutes les circonstances pertinentes ainsi qu'en conformité avec le principe de l'indépendance de la magistrature et avec le droit. On ne saurait y voir l'énumération complète des questions éthiques auxquelles les juges peuvent faire face dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions ou dans leur vie personnelle.

Context

5. The Canadian Judicial Council [the CJC] has been attentive to judicial ethics for decades. It published Commentaries on Judicial Conduct in 1991. This was followed by Ethical Principles for Judges [Ethical Principles 1998]. It provided ethical guidance to judges aligned with a set of central principles and better informed the public about the high ideals which judges embrace and toward which they strive. While drawing heavily on existing resources, Ethical Principles 1998 was the most comprehensive treatment of the subject at that time in Canada. Further, it was uniquely the work of Canadian judges. An extensive process of consultation within the judiciary and beyond ensured that Ethical Principles 1998 was the subject of painstaking examination and vigorous debate. The intention was that Canadian judges would accept Ethical Principles 1998 as reflective of their high ethical aspirations and would find it worthy of respect and deserving of careful consideration when facing ethical issues

Contexte

5. Le Conseil canadien de la magistrature [le Conseil] s'intéresse aux questions de déontologie judiciaire depuis des décennies. En 1991, il a publié des Commentaires sur la conduite des juges. Puis, a suivi les Principes de déontologie judiciaire [Principes de déontologie de 1998] qui a proposé un ensemble de principes fondamentaux pour guider les juges sur des questions d'ordre déontologique et mieux renseigner le public sur les normes élevées auxquelles les juges adhèrent et qu'ils s'efforcent d'observer. Les Principes de déontologie de 1998, qui puisaient abondamment aux sources existantes, représentaient néanmoins l'exposé le plus complet en cette matière jamais publié au Canada. De plus, ils étaient entièrement le fruit du travail de juges canadiens. De vastes consultations menées auprès de la magistrature et du public avaient permis de soumettre les Principes de déontologie de 1998 à un examen minutieux et à un débat vigoureux. Cette démarche avait pour but d'assurer que les juges du Canada verraient dans les Principes de déontologie de 1998 le reflet de leurs aspirations élevées en matière de déontologie, qu'ils les considéreraient comme un document digne de respect et leur accorderaient une attention soutenue lorsqu'ils seraient confrontés à des questions d'ordre déontologique.

6. Over the past twenty years Ethical Principles 1998 has provided valuable ethical guidance to federally appointed judges in a broad range of complex circumstances. It has become a crucial resource in the training provided to judges upon appointment, and forms part of ongoing discussions in professional development settings throughout a judge's career. In addition, the publication of Ethical Principles 1998 coincided with the establishment of an Advisory Committee on Judicial Ethics [Advisory Committee] to which specific ethical questions have been submitted by judges. The Advisory Committee continues to respond to these queries with advisory opinions that contribute to the ongoing review and elaboration of the subjects dealt with in Ethical Principles 1998. These opinions may also identify new issues that this version of Ethical Principles does not directly address. The Advisory Committee continues to ensure that help is readily available to judges looking for guidance.

6. Depuis deux décennies, les Principes de déontologie de 1998 ont fourni aux juges de nomination fédérale des conseils précieux en matière déontologique dans un éventail de situations complexes. Les Principes de déontologie sont au cœur de la formation offerte aux juges à la suite de leur nomination, et ils sont examinés et discutés dans les programmes de perfectionnement professionnel auxquels participent les juges tout au long de leur carrière. Par ailleurs, la publication des Principes de déontologie de 1998 a coïncidé avec la création d'un comité consultatif sur la déontologie judiciaire [le Comité consultatif] auquel les juges soumettent depuis des questions précises touchant la déontologie. Les avis que le Comité consultatif fournit en réponse à ces demandes contribuent à l'examen et à l'approfondissement continus des questions traitées dans les Principes de déontologie de 1998. Ils peuvent également contribuer à mettre en lumière des problèmes qui ne sont pas abordés directement dans la présente version des Principes de déontologie. Le Comité consultatif continue de veiller à ce que les juges qui recherchent des conseils puissent aisément recevoir de l'aide.

7. A document of this nature can never be viewed as the "final word" on such an important and complex subject. After more than twenty years from its initial publication, Ethical Principles 1998 needed modernization to address significant societal changes, changes in the role of the judiciary, and the social context in which judges serve. In 2016, the revision of Ethical Principles 1998 was commenced by the Judicial Independence and Appointment Process Committee of the CJC [Independence Committee], with input from Chief Justices and puisne judges from across Canada. As was done in 1998, broad consultations were conducted within the judiciary and beyond to ensure that Ethical Principles is responsive to the needs of judges and takes community expectations into account. The consultations included an on-line survey of issues relevant to judicial ethics and a series of meetings and dialogue with organizations representing the judiciary and other interested parties. Once a draft document was prepared it was made public and judges, judges' organizations, other professional organizations and members of the public were invited to provide comments and feedback. Throughout the project, the Independence Committee reviewed every submission and every proposed amendment, and incorporated into the final version of Ethical Principles many of the proposals and suggestions submitted to it.

7. De par sa nature, un document comme celui-ci ne saurait prétendre apporter une réponse définitive sur un sujet aussi important et complexe. Plus de vingt ans après leur publication, les Principes de déontologie de 1998 étaient mûrs pour une mise à jour qui permette de traiter d'enjeux importants soulevés par l'évolution de la société, de la fonction judiciaire et du contexte social dans lequel les juges s'acquittent de leur charge. À partir de 2016, le Comité sur l'indépendance judiciaire et le processus de nomination du Conseil [Comité sur l'indépendance] s'est attelé à la tâche de réviser les Principes de déontologie de 1998, avec l'apport des juges en chef et des juges puînés de partout au Canada. Comme ce fut le cas en 1998, de vastes consultations ont été menées au sein de la magistrature et auprès du public afin que les Principes de déontologie répondent aux besoins des juges et tiennent compte des attentes du public. Ces consultations ont compris, entre autres, un sondage en ligne sur des questions de déontologie judiciaire, de même qu'une série de rencontres et d'échanges avec des organisations représentant la magistrature et d'autres parties intéressées. L'ébauche rédigée à la suite de ces consultations a été rendue publique, et les juges, les associations qui les représentent, des organismes professionnels et les membres du public ont été invités à présenter des commentaires. Tout au long du projet, le Comité sur l'indépendance s'est penché sur chacun des commentaires reçus et chacune des modifications proposées et a intégré dans la version définitive des Principes de déontologie bon nombre des propositions et suggestions qui lui avaient été soumises.

8. Today, judges' work includes case management, settlement conferences, judicial mediation, and frequent interaction with self-represented litigants. These responsibilities invite further consideration with respect to ethical guidance. In the same manner, the digital age, the phenomenon of social media, the importance of professional development for judges and the transition to post-judicial roles all raise ethical issues that were not fully considered twenty years ago. Judges are expected to be alert to the history, experience and circumstances of Canada's Indigenous peoples, and to the diversity of cultures and communities that make up this country. In this spirit, the judiciary is now more actively involved with the wider public, both to enhance public confidence and to expand its own knowledge of the diversity of human experiences in Canada today.

9. The format of Ethical Principles 1998 is preserved. Each chapter is organized hierarchically, beginning with a Statement, followed by a set of Principles and then a series of Commentaries aligned with each Principle. At the highest level of abstraction, each Statement expresses a fundamental value or theme of judicial ethics. The Principles identify components of each Statement and articulate behaviours that would constitute the highest aspirations of an ethical judge with respect to that Principle. With occasional exceptions, the Statements and Principles are stated in 'declarative' language – essentially statements of what an ethical judge does or how an ethical judge acts, consistent with the goal of describing the attributes of an ethical judge. The Commentaries associated with each Principle provide explanations, context and further elucidation of the Principles, almost always in aspirational language, often using concrete examples.

8. De nos jours, les responsabilités des juges s'étendent à la gestion des instances ainsi qu'aux conférences de règlement et aux séances de médiation judiciaires. De plus, il arrive fréquemment que les juges doivent interagir avec des parties non représentées. Ces responsabilités appellent une nouvelle réflexion sur le soutien à apporter en matière déontologique. Parallèlement, d'autres phénomènes soulèvent des enjeux déontologiques qui n'avaient pas été pleinement considérés il y a vingt ans : l'arrivée de l'ère numérique, l'émergence des médias sociaux, l'importance du perfectionnement professionnel des juges et le passage de certains de ceux-ci à une autre carrière après leur départ de la magistrature. On attend des juges qu'ils soient sensibles et au fait de l'histoire, du vécu et de la réalité des peuples autochtones au Canada, ainsi que de la diversité des cultures et des communautés qui composent le pays. C'est dans cet esprit que la magistrature joue un rôle plus actif qu'auparavant auprès du public, aussi bien pour soutenir la confiance que le public accorde à la magistrature que pour approfondir sa connaissance de la diversité des expériences humaines au Canada.

9. L'organisation générale des matières établie dans les Principes de déontologie de 1998 a été préservée. Structuré de façon hiérarchique, chaque chapitre commence par un Énoncé, suivi par des Principes auxquels succèdent une série de Commentaires liés à chacun des Principes. L'Énoncé exprime une valeur ou un thème fondamental de la déontologie judiciaire, à un niveau élevé d'abstraction. Les Principes exposent les éléments qui découlent de l'Énoncé et décrivent la conduite idéale vers laquelle tendrait le juge éthique au regard de ceux-ci. En règle générale, les Énoncés et les Principes sont rédigés de manière déclarative, énonçant essentiellement ce que fait un juge éthique ou comment il agit, l'objectif étant de décrire la conduite exemplaire d'un juge éthique. Quant aux Commentaires, ils servent à expliquer les Principes et à les mettre en contexte, presque toujours sous la forme de recommandations, et présentent souvent des exemples concrets.

10. When an ethical issue arises for a judge more than one principle may be relevant. The approach taken in Ethical Principles is to discuss the aspects of each Principle discretely, recognizing that multiple Principles and chapters of Ethical Principles may need to be considered in obtaining comprehensive guidance in the resolution of the ethical issue. The comprehensive Index, as well as links within electronic versions of Ethical Principles, will enable the reader to identify and access associated Principles and Commentaries.

11. The language adopted in this edition of Ethical Principles provides greater consistency of meaning between the English and French versions. Ethical Principles was co-drafted in English and French and each version is equally authoritative. As well, the document is written in gender-neutral language. Whenever pronouns are used, they are intended to be inclusive of all genders.

12. This edition of Ethical Principles also addresses circumstances associated with judges contemplating or undertaking post-judicial legal careers. In particular, it discusses unique ethical issues that may arise in the transition to post-judicial legal careers and those that continue after judges leave office. This guidance is provided to present and former judges for their benefit and with a view to maintaining public confidence in the judiciary.

10. Lorsqu'un juge fait face à une question d'ordre déontologique, il se peut que plus d'un principe entre en jeu. L'approche retenue dans les Principes de déontologie consiste à aborder de façon distincte les différents aspects de chaque principe; il est donc possible qu'il faille considérer plusieurs principes et consulter plus d'un chapitre des Principes de déontologie pour obtenir des conseils sur l'ensemble des éléments permettant de résoudre une question. L'index détaillé et les hyperliens insérés dans les versions électroniques des Principes de déontologie permettront au lecteur de repérer les principes pertinents et les commentaires qui s'y rapportent, et d'y accéder facilement.

11. La présente édition des Principes de déontologie assure une meilleure harmonisation des versions française et anglaise. Les Principes de déontologie ont fait l'objet d'une corédaction, et les versions anglaise et française ont la même valeur. De plus, le présent document est rédigé sans distinction de genre. L'utilisation d'un genre inclut tous les genres.

12. La présente édition des Principes de déontologie traite également de la situation des juges qui envisagent ou amorcent une nouvelle carrière après leur départ de la magistrature. Ainsi, elle examine certaines des questions particulières qui sont susceptibles de se poser sur le plan déontologique à l'occasion du passage à une nouvelle carrière, ainsi que les principes qui continuent de s'appliquer après le départ de la magistrature. Ces conseils s'adressent aussi bien aux juges en poste qu'aux anciens juges et visent à préserver la confiance du public envers la magistrature.

I. Judicial Independence

Statement

An independent judiciary is indispensable to impartial justice under law. Judges uphold and exemplify judicial independence in both its individual and institutional aspects.

Principles

A. Judges exercise their judicial functions independently and free of extraneous influence.

B. Judges firmly reject improper attempts to influence their decisions in any matter before the court.

C. Judges exhibit and promote high standards of judicial conduct so as to reinforce public confidence in the independence of the judiciary.

D. Judges encourage and uphold arrangements and safeguards to maintain and enhance the institutional and administrative independence of the judiciary.

I. Indépendance de la magistrature

Énoncé

L'indépendance de la magistrature est indispensable à l'exercice d'une justice impartiale sous un régime de droit. Les juges soutiennent l'indépendance de la magistrature et l'incarnent tant dans ses éléments individuels qu'institutionnels.

Principes

A. Les juges exercent leurs fonctions judiciaires de façon indépendante, à l'abri de toute influence extérieure.

B. Dans les affaires dont la cour est saisie, les juges repoussent fermement toute tentative inappropriée visant à influencer leur décision.

C. Les juges observent des normes élevées de conduite judiciaire et en favorisent l'application, afin de renforcer la confiance du public envers l'indépendance de la magistrature.

D. Les juges encouragent et soutiennent les mesures et les garanties qui visent à préserver et à accroître l'indépendance de la magistrature, tant sur le plan institutionnel qu'administratif.

Commentary

General

1.A.1 Judicial independence refers to the liberty and responsibility of judges to hear and decide cases that come before them in accordance with their conscience, without interference from others. The guarantee of judicial independence aims to make judges impervious to improper external intervention in the exercise of their functions. Judges are, and must reasonably be perceived to be, independent, both individually and institutionally. Judicial independence is not the private right of judges. It is the foundation of judicial impartiality and a constitutional right of all. The right to be tried by an independent and impartial tribunal is an integral principle of fundamental justice protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

1.A.2 Judges are called upon to resolve a wide array of disputes and generally to determine legal rights and obligations. Public confidence in the judiciary rests on the fact that their decisions are made according to law.

1.A.3 Judicial independence refers to a state of mind or attitude in the actual exercise of judicial functions. It also connotes a status or relationship with others, including the executive branch of government and other judges. Judicial independence is the foundation for impartial decision-making. The first qualification of a judge is the ability to make independent and impartial decisions. Judges apply the law without fear or favour and without regard to whether the decision is popular. This is a cornerstone of the rule of law, and it is secured through respect for the principle of judicial independence.

Commentaires

Général

1.A.1 L'indépendance judiciaire s'entend de la liberté et de la responsabilité du juge d'instruire et de trancher une affaire donnée selon sa conscience, sans l'intervention d'autres personnes. La garantie d'indépendance judiciaire vise à rendre les juges imperméables aux interventions extérieures indues dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions. Les juges sont indépendants et doivent être raisonnablement perçus comme tels, tant sur le plan individuel que sur le plan institutionnel. L'indépendance judiciaire n'est pas un droit qui appartient en propre à chaque juge. Elle constitue le fondement de l'impartialité judiciaire et est un droit constitutionnel qui appartient à chacun. Le droit d'être jugé par un tribunal indépendant et impartial est un principe essentiel de justice fondamentale garanti par la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés de la personne.

1.A.2 Il incombe aux juges de trancher une large gamme de litiges et, de manière générale, de déterminer les droits et obligations juridiques. La confiance du public envers la magistrature s'appuie sur le fait que les décisions des juges sont rendues en fonction du droit.

1.A.3 L'indépendance judiciaire désigne un état d'esprit ou une attitude dans l'exercice concret des fonctions judiciaires. Elle connote aussi un statut ou une relation à l'égard d'autrui, y compris le pouvoir exécutif et les autres juges. L'indépendance judiciaire est le fondement permettant la prise de décisions impartiales. La qualité première du juge réside dans sa capacité de rendre des décisions de manière indépendante et impartiale. Les juges appliquent la loi, sans crainte de représailles ni favoritisme, et indépendamment de l'accueil, favorable ou non, de leur décision. C'est là une des pierres angulaires de la primauté du droit, garantie par le respect du principe d'indépendance de la magistrature.

1.A.4 Judicial independence is fundamental to ensuring that decisions are made without external influence and to maintaining individual and public confidence in the administration of justice. Preserving the constituent elements of judicial independence is critical to the public's perception of the impartiality of judges. In that sense, judicial independence is an important means to a fundamental end. Judicial independence ensures that judges are impartial in fact, and also that they are perceived to be so.

1.A.5 Judges protect judicial independence not for their own benefit but for the benefits of all Canadians. Solely self-interested claims for judicial independence risk undermining public confidence in the judiciary.

1.A.6 Informing the public with respect to the role of the judiciary and judicial independence is an important judicial function. It is in the public interest for judges to take advantage of appropriate opportunities to enhance the public's understanding of the fundamental importance of judicial independence.

Avoiding and Rejecting Improper Influence

1.B.1 Judges should avoid all communications with anyone external to a case that might raise reasonable concerns about judicial independence. Judges must firmly reject improper attempts to influence their decisions. Communications intended to influence a specific judicial decision can only be received within the judicial process.

1.A.4 L'indépendance de la magistrature est fondamentale afin d'assurer que les décisions sont rendues sans influence extérieure et de soutenir la confiance individuelle et collective dans l'administration de la justice. Le maintien des conditions de l'indépendance de la magistrature est essentiel à la perception qu'a le public de l'impartialité des juges. En ce sens, l'indépendance de la magistrature constitue un moyen crucial d'atteindre cet objectif fondamental. L'indépendance de la magistrature garantit l'impartialité objective des juges et fait en sorte qu'ils soient perçus comme des personnes impartiales.

1.A.5 Les jugent protègent l'indépendance de la magistrature dans l'intérêt de tous, et non par intérêt personnel. Revendiquer la protection de l'indépendance de la magistrature par pur intérêt personnel risquerait de miner la confiance du public à l'endroit des juges.

1.A.6 L'une des fonctions importantes des juges consiste à renseigner le public sur le rôle de la magistrature et sur son indépendance. Il est dans l'intérêt public que les juges profitent d'occasions appropriées pour aider le public à mieux comprendre l'importance fondamentale de l'indépendance de la magistrature.

Éviter et repousser les tentatives d'influence indue

1.B.1 Les juges devraient éviter toute communication – avec quiconque est étranger à l'affaire dont ils sont saisis – qui pourrait soulever des craintes raisonnables en ce qui concerne l'indépendance de la magistrature. Les juges doivent fermement repousser toute tentative inappropriée d'influencer leurs décisions. Les communications ayant pour objet d'influencer une décision dans une affaire donnée doivent s'inscrire dans le cadre du processus judiciaire.

1.B.2 Attempts to influence judges may come from many sources, including social media. Judges should be cautious in their communications on social media relating to matters that could come before the court. Also, their social media activities should be undertaken in ways that avoid compromising public confidence in the judiciary.

Public Confidence

1.C.1 Judicial independence and judicial ethics are interrelated. Judges should exemplify and promote high standards of judicial conduct as one element of assuring the independence of the judiciary. In turn, the independence and integrity of the judiciary preserves public confidence in the rule of law and acceptance of court decisions. Unethical conduct by judges erodes that confidence. Thus, judges share a collective responsibility to promote and observe high standards of conduct.

Institutional and Administrative Independence

1.D.1 Judicial independence is secured by institutional and operational structures that protect judges and courts from external influence so that judicial decisions are made according to law in a fair process. For example, judges have security of tenure and their remuneration is set through an independent process so that neither fear of sanction nor hope of reward stands in the way of rendering justice. For the same reasons, judges also have immunity from liability in relation to their decisions.

1.B.2 Les tentatives d'influencer les juges peuvent provenir de plusieurs sources, y compris les médias sociaux. Les juges devraient se garder de diffuser dans les médias sociaux des communications qui concernent des affaires dont la cour pourrait être saisie. De plus, l'activité des juges dans les médias sociaux ne devrait pas avoir pour effet d'affaiblir la confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature.

Confiance du public

1.C.1 L'indépendance judiciaire et le respect des principes déontologiques sont interdépendants. Les juges devraient observer des normes de conduite élevées contribuant à assurer l'indépendance de la magistrature et en favoriser l'application. En retour, l'indépendance et l'intégrité des juges préservent la confiance du public dans la primauté du droit et l'acceptation par celui-ci des décisions des tribunaux. Une conduite contraire à l'éthique de la part d'un juge mine cette confiance. C'est pourquoi les juges ont la responsabilité collective de favoriser et d'observer des normes de conduite élevées.

Indépendance institutionnelle et administrative

1.D.1 L'indépendance de la magistrature est garantie par des structures institutionnelles et opérationnelles qui protègent les juges et les tribunaux contre toute influence extérieure afin qu'ils puissent rendre leurs décisions judiciaires conformément au droit, dans le cadre d'un processus équitable. Ainsi, afin d'assurer que ni la crainte d'une sanction ni l'espoir d'un gain ne puissent nuire à l'application juste du droit, les juges sont inamovibles et leur rémunération est déterminée dans le cadre d'un processus indépendant. Pour les mêmes raisons, les juges jouissent d'une immunité contre les poursuites à l'égard des décisions qu'ils rendent.

1.D.2 In keeping with the principle of judicial independence, professional development for judges is organized, designed and delivered under the authority of the judiciary.

1.D.3 At an institutional level, courts require sufficient autonomy to guarantee that the administration of justice is free from any political or other improper influence.

1.D.4 The judiciary should remain vigilant with respect to any initiative that may have the effect of undermining its institutional or administrative independence. That said, not every proposed change in the administrative arrangements affecting the judiciary constitutes a threat to judicial independence.

1.D.2 Afin de préserver le principe de l'indépendance de la magistrature, les programmes de perfectionnement professionnel destinés aux juges sont organisés, élaborés et prodigués sous l'égide de la magistrature.

1.D.3 Au niveau institutionnel, les tribunaux ont besoin d'une autonomie suffisante pour garantir que l'administration de la justice est libre de toute influence indue, notamment politique.

1.D.4 La magistrature devrait rester à l'affût de toute tentative susceptible de miner son indépendance institutionnelle ou administrative. Cela dit, ce ne sont pas tous les changements qu'on propose d'apporter aux dispositions administratives affectant les juges qui constituent une menace pour l'indépendance judiciaire.

II. Integrity and Respect

Statement

Judges conduct themselves respectfully and with integrity so as to sustain and enhance public confidence in the judiciary.

Principles

A. Judges comply with the law and conduct themselves both inside and outside the courtroom in a manner that is above reproach in the view of reasonable and informed persons.

B. Judges are discreet and do not use or disclose confidential information acquired in their judicial capacity for any purpose not related to judicial duties.

C. Judges treat everyone with civility and respect in the performance of their judicial duties.

D. Judges foster access to justice for all. Judges carry out their duties with appropriate consideration for all the parties, whether or not they are represented, and ensure that they are treated fairly and respectfully, so as to provide them with reasonable access to court processes.

E. Judges avoid all forms of harassment and abuse of authority or status.

F. Judges do not allow their status or the prestige of judicial office to be used to advance a private interest.

G. Judges encourage and support the observance of Ethical Principles by their judicial colleagues.

II. Intégrité et respect

Énoncé

Les juges font preuve, dans leur conduite, de respect et d'intégrité de façon à soutenir et à renforcer la confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature.

Principes

A. Les juges se conforment au droit et adoptent, tant à l'intérieur qu'à l'extérieur de la salle d'audience, une conduite irréprochable aux yeux d'une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée.

B. Les juges font preuve de discrétion et n'utilisent ni ne divulguent les renseignements confidentiels acquis dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires, si ce n'est pour une fin liée à ces fonctions.

C. Les juges traitent toutes les personnes avec courtoisie et respect dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires.

D. Les juges favorisent l'accès à la justice. Dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions, les juges accordent la considération appropriée à toutes les parties, représentées et non représentées, et veillent à ce qu'elles soient traitées avec équité et respect, afin de leur assurer un accès raisonnable aux processus judiciaires.

E. Les juges évitent toute forme de harcèlement et d'abus d'autorité ou de statut.

F. Les juges ne permettent pas que leur statut ou le prestige de la fonction judiciaire soit utilisé au profit d'un intérêt privé.

G. Les juges encouragent et soutiennent le respect des Principes de déontologie par leurs collègues de la magistrature.

Commentary

General

2.A.1 Public confidence in the judiciary is essential to an effective judicial system and, ultimately, the rule of law. Within that system, judges hold positions of significant trust, confidence and responsibility. Conduct, in and out of court, that exhibits integrity ensures public respect for and confidence in the individual judge and, more significantly, contributes to public confidence in the judiciary and the judicial system as a whole. Judges should therefore act with a high degree of decorum, propriety and humanity.

2.A.2 Public expectations of the integrity of judges are understandably high. Behaviour considered acceptable if exhibited by some members of the public may not be appropriate for members of the judiciary. Judges should therefore be mindful of the ways in which their conduct would be perceived by reasonable and informed members of the community and whether that perception is likely to lessen respect for the judge or the judiciary as a whole. Behaviour that would diminish that respect in the minds of such persons should be avoided.

Behaviour in Private Life

2.A.3. Public expectations of judges are not limited to the actions of judges in their judicial capacities. Judges should exhibit respect for the law and act with integrity in their private lives and should avoid the appearance of impropriety.

Commentaires

Général

2.A.1 La confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature est essentielle au bon fonctionnement du système de justice et, en définitive, à la primauté du droit. Les juges occupent une position de grande confiance et de responsabilité au sein de ce système. Les juges qui adoptent, en salle d'audience ou ailleurs, une conduite empreinte d'intégrité s'assurent du respect et de la confiance du public et, surtout, contribuent à soutenir la confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature et du système de justice tout entier. Les juges devraient en conséquence se conduire avec décorum, décence et humanité.

2.A.2 Les attentes du public à l'égard de l'intégrité des juges sont bien entendu élevées. Les comportements qu'on jugerait acceptables pour un membre du public pourraient ne pas convenir à un membre de la magistrature. Les juges devraient donc être conscients de la perception que des personnes raisonnables et bien renseignées pourraient avoir de leur conduite et de la possibilité que cette perception diminue le respect dont jouissent les juges individuellement et la magistrature dans son ensemble. Tout comportement qui porterait atteinte à ce respect dans l'esprit de ces personnes est à proscrire.

Le comportement dans la vie privée

2.A.3 Les attentes du public à l'endroit des juges ne se limitent pas aux actes que ces derniers posent dans l'exercice de leur charge. Les juges devraient faire montre de leur respect pour la loi, agir avec intégrité dans leur vie personnelle et éviter toute apparence d'inconduite.

2.A.4 After appointment, judges are not required to withdraw from the world. They may lead a normal life in the community, while retaining a sense of the dignity of judicial office and realizing that the public expects virtually irreproachable conduct from judges.

2.A.5 A judge's conduct, in and out of court, may be the subject of public scrutiny and comment. At the same time, judges have private lives and are entitled to enjoy, as much as possible, the rights and freedoms generally available to all. Nevertheless, judges accept some restrictions on their activities — even activities that would not elicit adverse notice if carried out by other members of the community. For example, judges should exercise caution in their use of social media. Judges should strive to strike a balance between the expectations of judicial office and their personal lives. In finding this balance, judges should be guided by these Ethical Principles.

2.A.4 Les juges ne sont pas tenus de se tenir à l'écart du monde après leur nomination. Ils peuvent participer à la vie de leur collectivité, tout en gardant à l'esprit la dignité rattachée à leur charge et le fait que le public s'attend à une conduite quasi irréprochable de la part des juges.

2.A.5 La conduite des juges, en salle d'audience ou ailleurs, peut être soumise à l'examen attentif et à la critique du public. Par ailleurs, les juges ont aussi une vie privée et jouissent, dans toute la mesure du possible, des mêmes droits et libertés que ceux qui sont conférés aux autres personnes de manière générale. Néanmoins, les juges acceptent certaines restrictions à l'égard de leurs activités — même celles qui ne susciteraient aucune critique si elles étaient le fait d'autres membres de la collectivité. Par exemple, les juges devraient utiliser les médias sociaux avec prudence. Ils devraient s'efforcer de maintenir l'équilibre entre les attentes associées à leur charge et la conduite de leur vie personnelle. Les Principes de déontologie peuvent les guider à cet égard.

Confidentiality and Discretion[1]

2.B.1 Judges are entrusted with preserving confidentiality. The performance of judicial duties necessarily entails that judges receive or come into possession of confidential information. While justice is, in principle, transparent, open and public, some of the facts, documents, records and circumstances of a dispute may be subject to confidentiality orders, including the identity of one or more parties. Judges should not use or reveal confidential information except where, in the performance of their judicial duties, such disclosure is necessary, or done in accordance with relevant rules on archiving and disclosure. When judges work as a group, their internal discussions remain confidential.

2.B.2 Judges should be discreet when discussing their work, including in contexts in which what they say may be inadvertently overheard by others.

2.B.3 Confidentiality and discretion extend past a judge's departure from judicial office.

Civility and Respect

2.C.1 A hallmark of judicial proceedings is that all participants, including judges, will conduct themselves in a manner that preserves the honour and dignity of both the individual proceedings and the administration of justice more generally. Judges should endeavor to treat all participants in the judicial process with civility and respect.

1 Canadian Judicial Council, Use of Personal Information in Judgments and Recommended Protocol (2005)

Confidentialité et discrétion[1]

2.B.1 Les juges sont les gardiens de la confidentialité. L'exercice des fonctions judiciaires a pour conséquence que les juges, inévitablement, reçoivent des renseignements de nature confidentielle ou entrent en possession de tels renseignements. Même si, en principe, la justice est publique, ouverte et transparente, certains faits, documents, dossiers ou circonstances entourant un litige, y compris l'identité d'une ou de plusieurs parties, peuvent être assujettis à des ordonnances de confidentialité. Les juges ne devraient jamais utiliser ou révéler des renseignements de nature confidentielle, sauf lorsque cela est nécessaire dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires, ou conformément aux règles applicables qui régissent l'archivage et la divulgation. Lorsqu'ils travaillent en groupe, leurs discussions demeurent confidentielles.

2.B.2 Les juges devraient faire preuve de discrétion lorsqu'ils discutent de leur travail, y compris dans des contextes où leurs propos peuvent être entendus par inadvertance.

2.B.3 La confidentialité et la discrétion demeurent importantes pour les juges même après leur départ de la magistrature.

Courtoisie et respect

2.C.1 L'une des caractéristiques du processus judiciaire est que toutes les personnes qui y participent, y compris les juges, se comportent de manière à préserver l'honneur et la dignité tant des instances individuelles que de l'administration de la justice en général. Les juges devraient s'efforcer de traiter chaque personne qui intervient dans le processus judiciaire avec courtoisie et respect.

1 Conseil canadien de la magistrature, L'usage de renseignements personnels dans les jugements et protocole recommandé (2005)

2.C.2 The commitment of judges to civility and respect is not limited to judicial proceedings. Judges should attempt, in all of their engagements with others, including their judicial colleagues, to act in accordance with these values. By showing dignified consideration for others, judges enhance public respect for and confidence in the judiciary as an institution.

2.C.3 The circumstances of some cases and the conduct of counsel and parties sometimes require judges to act with an appropriate measure of firmness and to emphasize decisiveness, promptness, the prevention of abuse of process or improper treatment of participants in the adjudicative process. Maintaining civility and respect requires judges to ensure a proper balance between upholding the right of parties to be heard and ensuring the efficiency of the process.

2.C.4 It is often necessary for judges in the adjudication process to make findings of credibility and to rule on the propriety of a person's conduct. That being said, in court proceedings or in their judgments, judges should not make inappropriate remarks about a person's conduct or motives. Furthermore, judges should not make comments about persons who are not before the court unless, in the judge's opinion, it is necessary for the proper disposition of the case.

2.C.5 Judges should be alert to the possibility that ill-considered, comical or facetious remarks, often made spontaneously and intended to be humorous, may give offence or diminish the dignity of the proceedings.

2.C.2 Cet engagement des juges envers la courtoisie et le respect ne se limite pas au processus judiciaire. Les juges devraient s'efforcer de respecter ces valeurs dans tous leurs rapports avec autrui, y compris les autres membres de la magistrature. Les juges contribuent au respect de la magistrature et à la confiance que le public lui accorde en tant qu'institution en se comportant de manière digne et respectueuse avec autrui.

2.C.3 Les aspects particuliers d'une affaire et la conduite des avocats et des parties peut parfois obliger les juges à utiliser une certaine fermeté et à privilégier l'efficacité dans la prise de décision, la célérité ainsi que la prévention des abus de procédure et des comportements répréhensibles envers les participants au processus judiciaire. Le maintien d'une attitude courtoise et respectueuse exige des juges qu'ils préservent un juste équilibre entre le droit des parties d'être entendues et l'efficacité du processus.

2.C.4 Il arrive souvent aux juges de devoir se prononcer sur la crédibilité ou la conduite de certaines personnes pour trancher un litige. Cela étant, les juges devraient s'abstenir, au cours du processus judiciaire ou dans leurs jugements, de formuler des commentaires inappropriés concernant la conduite d'une personne ou ses motivations. Les juges devraient aussi s'abstenir de formuler des commentaires concernant des personnes qui ne comparaissent pas devant le tribunal, à moins que cela ne soit nécessaire au règlement de l'affaire du point de vue du juge.

2.C.5 Les juges devraient être sensibles au fait que les commentaires inconsidérés, humoristiques ou facétieux, qui sont souvent formulés spontanément et se veulent drôles, peuvent être offensants et miner la dignité des procédures.

2.C.6 It is a delicate question whether and in what circumstances a judge should report, or cause to be reported, a lawyer's conduct to the lawyer's professional governing body. Taking such action may affect the ability of the judge to continue in the proceeding in which that lawyer is appearing, given that the judge's view of the lawyer's conduct may give rise to a reasonable apprehension of bias against the lawyer or the lawyer's client. On the other hand, a judge is in a special position to observe lawyers' conduct before the court. Judges should remain alert to the lawyer's legal and ethical duty of resolute advocacy on behalf of a client and commitment to the client's cause.
A judge should take, or cause to be taken, appropriate action where the judge becomes aware of misconduct by a lawyer or incompetence that seriously compromises the interests of justice. Where a judge intends to take action, the judge should follow court protocols and consider whether the interests of justice require that such action await the end of the proceeding or whether the circumstances require earlier action.

Access to Justice and Self-Represented Litigants[2]

2.D.1 Judges have a responsibility to promote and foster access to justice. In fulfilling their role, judges should be aware of the different ways in which disputes can be resolved fairly and efficiently.

2.C.6 La question de savoir si les juges devraient signaler ou faire signaler certains agissements d'un avocat à l'ordre professionnel de celui-ci, et dans quelles circonstances ils devraient le faire, est délicate. Les juges qui prennent ce genre de mesures risquent de ne plus être aptes à entendre la cause dans laquelle agit l'avocat dénoncé, puisque l'opinion exprimée sur la conduite de l'avocat peut susciter une crainte raisonnable quant à l'existence d'un parti pris contre l'avocat ou son client. Il reste que les juges occupent une position privilégiée pour observer la conduite des avocats devant le tribunal. Les juges devraient demeurer attentifs au fait que les avocats ont une obligation déontologique et légale de représenter leur client avec vigueur et de se dévouer à sa cause. Lorsque des juges sont témoins de l'inconduite d'un avocat ou d'une incompétence qui porte gravement atteinte à l'intérêt de la justice, ils devraient prendre ou faire prendre les mesures qui s'imposent conformément aux protocoles en vigueur dans leur cour s'il en est. Avant de prendre de telles mesures, les juges devraient déterminer si l'intérêt de la justice commande d'attendre la fin de l'audience ou si des circonstances spéciales justifient une action immédiate.

L'accès à la justice et les parties non représentées[2]

2.D.1 Les juges ont la responsabilité de promouvoir et de favoriser l'accès à la justice. Ce rôle impose aux juges d'être sensibles aux différents processus qui permettent une résolution juste et efficace des différends.

2 Canadian Judicial Council Statement of Principles on Self-represented Litigants and Accused Persons (2006)

2 Conseil canadien de la magistrature, Énoncé de principes concernant les plaideurs et les accusés non représentés par un avocat (2006)

2.D.2 Passive neutrality and treating everyone in the same manner may not always be appropriate. Parties often appear before the court as self-represented litigants. Judges should provide information and reasonable assistance, proactively where appropriate, on procedural and evidentiary rules, while being alert not to compromise judicial impartiality and the fairness of the proceeding.

Conduct Towards Others

2.E.1 The conduct of judges towards others is an important aspect of their commitment to integrity and respect. Judges should be attentive to the ways in which offensive remarks, or conduct, or inappropriate behaviour may adversely affect or intimidate others, particularly those in subordinate positions to the judge. A judge's conduct in this respect affects their individual reputation and that of the judiciary as a whole.

2.E.2 A common concern in the modern workplace is the possibility that authority may be used in inappropriate ways. The workplace of the judiciary is no exception. Judges refrain from any form of harassment in the workplace. It is also important for judges to avoid relationships with others with whom they work or associate that could be reasonably perceived as the judge taking advantage of their position or authority.

2.D.2 Il se pourrait que la neutralité passive et le traitement identique de toutes les parties ne soit pas toujours approprié. Il arrive souvent que des parties agissent devant les tribunaux sans être représentées. Les juges devraient informer les parties non représentées et leur fournir une aide raisonnable, de manière proactive lorsque les circonstances s'y prêtent, en ce qui concerne les règles de preuve et de procédure, tout en se gardant de compromettre leur impartialité et l'équité des procédures.

Comportement à l'égard d'autrui

2.E.1 La conduite des juges à l'égard d'autrui est un aspect important de leur engagement envers l'intégrité et le respect. Les juges devraient se montrer sensibles aux propos désobligeants et aux comportements offensants ou inappropriés qui pourraient atteindre ou intimider les personnes qu'ils côtoient, en particulier celles sur lesquelles s'exerce leur autorité. La conduite des juges à cet égard est susceptible d'affecter tant leur réputation individuelle que celle de la magistrature dans son ensemble.

2.E.2 La possibilité que l'autorité soit utilisée à des fins inappropriées est souvent source de préoccupation dans les milieux de travail contemporains. Le milieu de travail où exercent les juges ne fait pas exception. Les juges s'abstiennent de toute forme de harcèlement au travail. Il est également important que les juges évitent les relations avec les personnes avec lesquelles ils travaillent ou qu'ils côtoient, lorsqu'une telle relation pourrait être raisonnablement perçue comme un abus de fonction ou d'autorité.

Use of Status or Authority

2.F.1 Judges should not use their status or authority, or the status of their office, to seek, for themselves or others, an advantage or benefit to which they would not otherwise be entitled.

Fundraising

2.F.2 Judges should not allow the prestige of judicial office to be used in aid of fundraising for particular causes, however worthy. They should not solicit funds (except from judicial colleagues or from family members) or lend the prestige of their judicial office to such solicitations.

Letters of Reference

2.F.3 Judges may be called upon to provide letters of reference. It is important that the prestige of judicial office not be used to advance another person's private interests or create an impression that certain persons stand in a particular position of influence or favour with the judge. Factors for the judge to consider include whether: (i) providing the reference will not compromise the integrity of judicial office; (ii) it is the judge's personal knowledge of the individual that is called for; and (iii) the judge has an important perspective about the individual to contribute such that it would be unfair to the individual were the judge to refuse. Judges should keep in mind that letters of reference may be made public. Such letters may also be rendered inappropriate or inaccurate by a subsequent change in circumstances, thereby having the potential to reflect adversely on the judge or the judiciary. Judges may assist judicial appointment advisory committees on a confidential basis.

Statut et pouvoir judiciaire

2.F.1 Les juges ne devraient pas utiliser leur statut ou leur pouvoir, ou le prestige de leur fonction, pour rechercher un avantage ou un bénéfice, pour eux-mêmes ou pour autrui, qui ne pourrait être obtenu autrement.

Collecte de fonds

2.F.2 Les juges ne devraient pas permettre que le prestige de la fonction judiciaire contribue à la collecte de fonds pour des causes particulières, si méritoires soient-elles. Ils ne devraient pas recueillir de dons (sauf auprès de collègues juges ou auprès de membres de leur famille), ni associer le prestige de leur fonction à de telles collectes.

Lettres de recommandation

2.F.3 On demande parfois aux juges de fournir des lettres de recommandation. Il est important que le prestige de la fonction judiciaire ne serve pas à promouvoir les intérêts privés d'un tiers ou à donner l'impression que certaines personnes jouissent auprès d'eux d'une influence ou de faveurs particulières. Les facteurs que les juges devraient prendre en considération comprennent, notamment, les suivants : (i) le fait de fournir la recommandation ne mettra pas en péril l'intégrité de la fonction judiciaire; (ii) c'est à leur connaissance de la personne concernée que l'on fait appel; et (iii) lorsqu'ils ont un point de vue important à exprimer sur la personne concernée, un refus de leur part ne serait pas équitable envers cette personne. Les juges devraient garder à l'esprit que les lettres de recommandation peuvent être rendues publiques, que leur contenu peut devenir mal adapté ou inexact par suite d'un changement de circonstances et qu'elles sont donc susceptibles de nuire à leur image ou à celle de la magistrature. Les juges peuvent aider les comités consultatifs sur la nomination des juges de manière confidentielle.

Collegial Support

2.G.1 Judges should encourage and support their judicial colleagues' observance of ethical principles. Judges may become aware of circumstances that indicate a strong likelihood of unethical conduct by a judicial colleague. In such instances, judges should act in a manner that best ensures that action is taken to preserve public confidence in the administration of justice. Depending on the circumstances, such action may include communication with the Chief Justice of the court.

Soutien collégial

2.G.1 Les juges devraient encourager leurs collègues de la magistrature à respecter les principes de déontologie et les appuyer dans cette démarche. Il peut arriver que des juges soient informés de circonstances signalant une forte probabilité que la conduite d'un juge comporte des lacunes d'ordre déontologique. Dans ces cas, les juges devraient agir de manière à s'assurer que des mesures sont prises pour préserver la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice. Selon la situation, de telles mesures pourraient inclure la divulgation du problème au juge en chef de la cour.

III. Diligence and Competence

Statement

Judges perform their duties with diligence and competence.

Principles

A. Judges devote themselves to their judicial duties, broadly defined, which include presiding in court and making decisions, as well as those duties essential to court operations and to the administration of justice. Judges do not engage in activities incompatible with the diligent discharge of judicial duties.

B. Judges perform all judicial duties, including the delivery of reserved judgments, with punctuality and reasonable promptness, having due regard to the urgency of the matter and other special circumstances.

C. Judges maintain and enhance their knowledge, skills, sensitivity to social context and the personal qualities necessary to perform their judicial duties.

D. Judges strive to maintain their wellness to optimize the performance of judicial duties.

III. Diligence et compétence

Énoncé

Les juges exercent leurs fonctions avec diligence et compétence.

Principes

A. Les juges se consacrent à leurs fonctions judiciaires, entendues au sens large, lesquelles englobent le fait de présider les audiences et de rendre des décisions, ainsi que celles qui sont essentielles au bon fonctionnement de leur tribunal et de l'administration de la justice. Les juges s'abstiennent de toute activité incompatible avec l'exercice diligent de leurs fonctions judiciaires.

B. Les juges exercent toutes leurs fonctions judiciaires, et rendent les jugements mis en délibéré, de façon ponctuelle et avec une célérité raisonnable, compte tenu des circonstances propres à chaque affaire, y compris leur caractère urgent.

C. Les juges maintiennent et améliorent les connaissances, les compétences, la sensibilité au contexte social et les qualités personnelles qui sont nécessaires à l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires.

D. Les juges s'efforcent de se maintenir en bonne santé afin d'exercer leurs fonctions judiciaires de manière optimale.

Commentary

General

3.A.1 Diligence is concerned with the performance of judicial duties in a skillful, careful, attentive and timely way.

3.A.2 Judges should exhibit diligence and competence in the performance of all their judicial duties, including adjudication, case management, pre-trial or settlement conferences and participation in court administration.

3.A.3 Section 55 of the Judges Act[3] provides that: "No judge shall, either directly or indirectly, for himself or herself or others, engage in any occupation or business other than his or her judicial duties, but every judge shall devote himself or herself exclusively to those judicial duties". Subject to the limitations imposed by the Judges Act and guided by these Ethical Principles, judges may participate in other activities that do not detract from the performance of judicial duties or compromise their independence or impartiality.

3.A.4 Upon appointment, judges should withdraw expeditiously from professional, commercial and business activities.

3.A.5 Generally speaking, a judge is entitled to have 'passive' investments that do not constitute 'carrying on business', provided that little active management is required and there is no interference with the diligent performance of judicial duties. For these reasons, judges should undertake a careful examination of their investments.

3 Judges Act, RSC 1985, c J-1

Commentaires

Général

3.A.1 On entend par diligence le fait d'exercer ses fonctions judiciaires de manière compétente, prudente et attentive, de même qu'avec une célérité raisonnable.

3.A.2 Les juges devraient faire preuve de diligence et de compétence dans l'exercice de toutes leurs fonctions judiciaires, y compris les fonctions décisionnelles, la gestion d'instance, les conférences préparatoires ou de règlement et la participation à l'administration de la justice.

3.A.3 L'article 55 de la Loi sur les juges[3] prévoit que « Les juges se consacrent à leurs fonctions judiciaires à l'exclusion de toute autre activité, qu'elle soit exercée directement ou indirectement, pour leur compte ou celui d'autrui ». Sous réserve des restrictions imposées par la Loi sur les juges et des recommandations formulées dans les Principes de déontologie, les juges peuvent participer à d'autres activités qui ne nuisent pas à l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires ou mettent en péril leur indépendance ou impartialité.

3.A.4 Après leur nomination, les juges devraient se retirer rapidement de leurs activités commerciales et professionnelles, ainsi que de leur intérêts d'affaires.

3.A.5 De manière générale, les juges peuvent avoir des placements « passifs » qui ne constituent pas la « poursuite d'une entreprise », exigent peu de gestion active et ne les empêchent pas d'exercer leurs fonctions judiciaires avec diligence. Pour cette raison, les juges devraient effectuer une analyse serrée de leurs placements.

3 Loi sur les juges, L.R.C. (1985), ch. J-1

3.A.6 On occasion, judges are asked by governments to serve on commissions, inquiries or in other public roles. In considering such a request, in addition to the limitations imposed by the Judges Act and the guidance provided by Ethical Principles, judges should consider all implications and discuss the matter with their Chief Justice to ensure that acceptance of an appointment will not unduly interfere with the effective functioning of the court. The terms of reference and other conditions such as time and resources should be examined carefully so as to assess their compatibility with the judicial function.[4]

3.A.7 Judges are uniquely placed to make a variety of contributions to the administration of justice. Subject to the limitations imposed by judicial office, judges are encouraged, for example, to take part in legal education programs for students, lawyers and judges, and in activities to make the law and the legal process more understandable and accessible to the public, such as giving lectures, participating in moot courts or through legal writing.

Timeliness

3.B.1 Judges should perform all assigned judicial duties in a timely manner.

3.A.6 Il arrive que les gouvernements demandent à des juges d'exercer des fonctions publiques, notamment au sein d'une commission ou à l'occasion d'une enquête. Avant de répondre à une telle demande, outre les restrictions imposées par la Loi sur les juges et les recommandations formulées dans les Principes de déontologie, les juges devraient prendre en considération l'ensemble des conséquences et en discuter avec leur juge en chef afin de s'assurer que l'acceptation de la charge proposée ne nuira pas indûment au bon fonctionnement du tribunal. Le mandat et d'autres facteurs tels que la durée et les ressources devraient entrer en ligne de compte lorsqu'il s'agit d'évaluer la compatibilité de la charge proposée avec les fonctions judiciaires.[4]

3.A.7 Les juges sont particulièrement bien placés pour contribuer de diverses manières à l'administration de la justice. Sous réserve des restrictions qui leur sont imposées par leur charge, les juges sont encouragés, par exemple, à prendre part à des programmes de formation juridique à l'intention des étudiants, des avocats et des juges, et à participer à des activités destinées à mieux faire comprendre le droit et la procédure judiciaire au grand public, notamment en donnant des conférences, en participant à un tribunal-école ou en rédigeant des articles ou des livres de droit.

Célérité

3.B.1 Les juges devraient exercer toutes les fonctions judiciaires qui leur sont assignées avec une célérité raisonnable.

4 Canadian Judicial Council Protocol on the Appointment of Judges to Commissions of Inquiry (2010)

4 Conseil canadien de la magistrature, Protocole sur la nomination de juges à des commissions d'enquête (2010)

3.B.2 The preparation of judgments is frequently difficult and time consuming. Judges are expected to produce their decisions and reasons for judgment as soon as reasonably possible, having regard to the urgency of the matter and the length or complexity of the case. In this respect, the CJC has resolved that reserved judgments should be delivered within a maximum of six months after hearings, except in special circumstances.[5] Judges must also comply with legal requirements associated with timeliness of judgments applicable in their jurisdiction.

3.B.3 While judges strive to be diligent in the performance of their judicial duties, their ability to do so may be affected by various factors, including illness, exceptionally heavy burdens of work or the inadequacy of resources supporting their work.

Professional Development[6]

3.C.1 A well-educated and informed judiciary that adheres to high standards of competence is essential to preserving public confidence.

3.C.2 Judges should have and maintain knowledge of the law. Knowledge extends not only to substantive and procedural law but also to an understanding of the impact of the law on those it affects.

3.B.2 L'élaboration d'un jugement est souvent longue et ardue. Les juges sont censés prononcer leurs jugements et les motifs qui les accompagnent dès qu'il est raisonnablement possible de le faire, compte tenu de l'urgence de l'affaire, de sa longueur ou de sa complexité. En cette matière, le Conseil a, par voie de résolution, exprimé l'avis que, sauf s'il existe des circonstances particulières, les juges qui ont mis une affaire en délibéré devraient rendre leur jugement dans les six mois qui suivent l'audience.[5] Les juges doivent aussi respecter les délais imposés par la loi dans leur juridiction, le cas échéant.

3.B.3 Bien que les juges s'efforcent d'agir avec diligence dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires, il peut leur être difficile de le faire en raison de différents facteurs, comme la maladie, une charge de travail exceptionnellement lourde ou l'insuffisance des ressources qui appuient leur travail.

Perfectionnement professionnel[6]

3.C.1 Afin de préserver la confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature, il est essentiel que les juges adhèrent à des normes élevées en matière de formation et de compétence.

3.C.2 Les juges devraient connaître le droit et se tenir à jour à cet égard. Cette connaissance s'étend non seulement aux règles de fond et de procédure, mais également à leur compréhension de l'impact qu'elles ont sur les personnes touchées.

5 Canadian Judicial Council Resolution on Reserved Judgments (1985)
6 Canadian Judicial Council Professional Development Policies and Guidelines (2018)

5 Résolution du Conseil canadien de la magistrature sur les jugements pris en délibéré (1985)
6 Conseil canadien de la magistrature, Politiques et lignes directrices sur le perfectionnement professionnel (2018)

3.C.3 Judges are responsible for maintaining and enhancing their knowledge, skills and personal qualities necessary for effective judging. This important element of judicial diligence and competence involves participation in continuing professional development.

3.C.4 Professional development describes formal and informal learning activities that include education, training and private study. It also covers education on social context issues affecting the administration of justice. Social context encompasses knowledge and understanding of the realities of the lives of those who appear in court. This includes the history, heritage and laws related to Indigenous peoples, as well as matters of gender, race, ethnicity, religion, culture, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, differing mental or physical abilities, age and socio-economic background.

3.C.5 Judges should develop and maintain proficiency with technology relevant to the nature and performance of their judicial duties.

3.C.6 As part of a judge's commitment to continuing professional development, judges should engage in self-assessment and self-development, taking responsibility for their standard of knowledge, skill and the development of personal qualities related to judicial duties.

3.C.3 Il incombe aux juges de maintenir et d'accroître les connaissances, les compétences et les qualités personnelles qui leur sont nécessaires pour bien juger. Cet important volet de la diligence et de la compétence des juges implique la participation à des programmes de perfectionnement professionnel continu.

3.C.4 Le perfectionnement professionnel s'entend des activités d'apprentissage, formelles ou informelles, qui visent l'amélioration des connaissances et des compétences et les études personnelles. Il s'étend aussi à la formation touchant le contexte social pertinent à l'administration de la justice, ce qui comprend la connaissance et la compréhension de la réalité vécue par les personnes qui comparaissent devant le tribunal, y compris l'histoire et le patrimoine des peuples autochtones, le droit relatif aux peuples autochtones, ainsi que les questions liées au genre, à la race, à l'origine ethnique, à la religion, à la culture, à l'orientation sexuelle, à l'identité ou à l'expression de genre, aux différences de capacités physiques ou mentales, à l'âge et à l'origine socio-économique.

3.C.5 Les juges devraient développer et maintenir les habiletés technologiques qui ont rapport à la nature et à l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires.

3.C.6 En lien avec leur engagement envers le perfectionnement professionnel continu, les juges devraient évaluer leur niveau de connaissances et de compétences et les qualités individuelles qui leur permettent de s'acquitter de leurs fonctions judiciaires et s'engager dans un processus continu de perfectionnement professionnel.

3.C.7 To support judges' commitments to their continuing professional development, the CJC and National Judicial Institute, as well as other organizations, have developed relevant, comprehensive, quality educational programs. Judges should participate in these programs in their continuing commitment to acquire, maintain and strengthen their judicial knowledge and skills.

3.C.8 Consistent with their judicial duties, judges are encouraged to take advantage of opportunities to engage with and learn from the wider public, including communities with which the judge has little or no life experience.

Wellness

3.D.1 While judges should exhibit diligence in the performance of their judicial duties, the importance of judges' responsibilities to their families is also recognized.

3.D.2 Judges should set aside sufficient time and make a commitment to the maintenance of physical and mental wellness, and take advantage of judicial assistance programs as appropriate.[7]

3.C.7 Pour soutenir les juges dans cette démarche de perfectionnement professionnel continu, le Conseil et l'Institut national de la magistrature, de même que d'autres organismes, ont élaboré des programmes de formation pertinents, exhaustifs et de qualité. Les juges devraient participer à ces programmes afin de maintenir et d'améliorer leurs connaissances et leurs compétences judiciaires et d'en acquérir de nouvelles.

3.C.8 Lorsque cela est compatible avec leurs fonctions judiciaires, les juges sont encouragés à profiter des occasions de s'intéresser à la collectivité, notamment d'apprendre à mieux connaître les personnes issues de communautés dont l'expérience diffère de la leur.

Bien-être

3.D.1 Bien que les juges soient tenus de faire preuve de diligence dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires, l'on reconnaît par ailleurs l'importance des responsabilités familiales des membres de la magistrature.

3.D.2 Les juges devraient réserver suffisamment de temps au maintien de leur bonne santé physique et mentale et se prévaloir, au besoin, des programmes d'aide qui leur sont offerts.[7]

7 Judges Counselling Program – Confidential Assistance for Judges and their Families

7 Programme de counselling destiné aux juges – Soutien confidentiel aux juges et à leurs familles

IV. Equality

Statement

Judges conduct themselves and the proceedings before them to ensure equality according to law.

Principles

A. Judges carry out their duties with respect for all persons, including parties, counsel, witnesses, court personnel and judicial colleagues, without discrimination or prejudice.

B. Judges refrain from discriminatory behaviour. They disassociate themselves from and disapprove of offensive or discriminatory comments or conduct by court staff, counsel or any other person involved in judicial proceedings.

C. Judges are sensitive to and are not influenced by attitudes based on stereotype, myth or prejudice. They make meaningful efforts to recognize and dissociate themselves from such attitudes.

D. Judges do not belong to any organization that engages in or countenances any form of discrimination that contravenes the law.

IV. Égalité

Énoncé

Les juges adoptent une conduite propre à assurer à tous un traitement égal conformément à la loi et ils conduisent les instances dont ils sont saisis dans ce même esprit.

Principes

A. Les juges exercent leurs fonctions en faisant preuve de respect à l'endroit de toutes les personnes, sans discrimination ni préjugés, qu'il s'agisse des parties, des avocats, des témoins, de membres du personnel de la cour ou d'autres juges.

B. Les juges s'abstiennent de comportements discriminatoires. Ils se dissocient de la conduite ou des propos offensants ou discriminatoires que pourraient avoir les membres du personnel de la cour, les avocats ou les autres personnes participant à une instance judiciaire et expriment leur désapprobation à cet égard.

C. Les juges sont sensibles aux attitudes fondées sur des stéréotypes, des mythes ou des préjugés et ne se laissent pas influencer par celles-ci. Les juges font des efforts concrets pour reconnaître ces attitudes et s'en dissocier.

D. Les juges n'adhérent à aucun organisme qui pratique ou approuve une forme quelconque de discrimination prohibée par la loi.

Commentary

General

4.A.1 The Constitution and a variety of statutes guarantee equality before and under the law and equal protection and benefit of the law without discrimination. The law's commitment to substantive equality seeks to protect members of the community from both direct discrimination and from the impact of laws and policies that, though neutral on their face, produce adverse effects, or adverse impact, discrimination. This approach to equality seeks to acknowledge the equal worth and dignity of all persons and to ensure that discrimination is prevented and rectified as it affects individuals or groups experiencing disadvantage in our society, often on a systemic or structural basis. The law's strong societal commitment places concern for equality at the core of justice according to law.

4.A.2 Equality, according to law, is fundamental to justice and is strongly linked to judicial impartiality and to public confidence in the administration of justice. Accordingly, judges should ensure that their commitment to equality is unwavering and that their conduct is such that any reasonable and informed member of the public would have confidence in the judge's respect for and commitment to equality.

Commentaires

Général

4.A.1 La Constitution et de nombreuses lois garantissent l'égalité devant la loi et sous le régime de la loi, de même que l'égalité en matière de protection et de bénéfice de la loi, sans discrimination. Cet engagement du législateur envers l'égalité réelle vise à protéger les membres de la collectivité contre la discrimination directe et contre les lois et les politiques qui, en apparence neutres, entraînent de la discrimination par suite d'un effet préjudiciable. Cette approche vise à reconnaître une même valeur à tous les êtres humains et la dignité de toutes les personnes, de manière à prévenir la discrimination, souvent systémique ou structurelle, dont sont victimes les personnes ou les groupes défavorisés de notre société et à y remédier. Cet engagement ferme pris par le législateur au nom de la société place l'égalité au cœur de la justice sous le régime de la loi.

4.A.2 Fondamentale pour la justice, l'égalité sous le régime de la loi est aussi étroitement liée à l'impartialité judiciaire et à la confiance du public dans l'administration de la justice. Par conséquent, les juges devraient être inébranlables dans leur engagement envers l'égalité et s'assurer que leur conduite est telle qu'une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée y verrait la manifestation de leur respect pour le principe d'égalité et leur engagement à l'égard de celui-ci.

Equality in Proceedings

4.B.1 Judges should avoid comments, expressions, gestures or behaviour that may reasonably be interpreted as showing insensitivity to or disrespect for anyone. Examples include inappropriate comments based on stereotypes linked to gender, race, ethnicity, religion, culture, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, differing mental or physical abilities, age and socio-economic background, or other conduct that may create the impression that persons before the court will not be afforded equal consideration and respect. Inappropriate statements by judges, in or out of court, have the potential to call into question their commitment to equality and their ability to be impartial.

4.B.2 Judges should avoid engaging in activities on social media that could reasonably reflect negatively on their commitment to equality.

4.B.3 In proceedings before them, judges should intervene when confronted with discriminatory comments or behaviour. The principle of equality does not, however, require that proper advocacy or admissible testimony be curtailed where, for example, matters of gender, race or other similar factors are properly before the court. The adversarial system gives the parties and their counsel considerable leeway, and the relevance and importance of evidence may be difficult to assess accurately as it is being presented. Judges are expected to listen impartially, but, when necessary, should assert control over the proceeding and act with appropriate firmness to maintain an atmosphere of dignity, equality and order in the courtroom. Judges should be alive to the issues before the court and, where appropriate, seek clarification and provide balanced rulings on the relevance of a given line of questioning.

L'égalité dans le processus judiciaire

4.B.1 Les juges devraient éviter les observations, les expressions, les gestes ou les comportements qui pourraient être raisonnablement interprétés comme un manque de sensibilité ou de respect à l'égard d'une autre personne. En sont des exemples les remarques inappropriées fondées sur des stéréotypes liés au genre, à la race, à l'origine ethnique, à la religion, à la culture, à l'orientation sexuelle, à l'identité ou à l'expression de genre, aux différences de capacités physiques ou mentales, à l'âge, et à l'origine socio-économique, et toute autre conduite qui pourrait laisser entendre que des personnes comparaissant devant le tribunal ne seront pas traitées de façon égale et respectueuse. Les commentaires inappropriés formulés par les juges, en salle d'audience ou ailleurs, peuvent soulever un doute quant à leur engagement envers l'égalité, ou quant à leur impartialité.

4.B.2 Les juges devraient éviter d'avoir, sur les réseaux sociaux, des activités qui sont raisonnablement susceptibles de discréditer leur engagement envers le principe d'égalité.

4.B.3 Dans le cadre des affaires dont ils sont saisis, les juges devraient intervenir lorsqu'ils font face à des propos ou à une conduite discriminatoires. Le principe d'égalité n'implique pas, cependant, que l'on doive interdire la défense légitime d'idées, ou empêcher la présentation de témoignages par ailleurs admissibles, lorsque, par exemple, des questions de genre, de race ou d'autres facteurs semblables sont légitimement soulevés devant la cour. Le système contradictoire donne beaucoup de latitude aux parties et à leurs avocats, et il peut être difficile d'évaluer avec justesse la pertinence et l'importance de la preuve au moment de sa présentation. Les juges sont censés écouter le débat en toute impartialité, mais devraient, si nécessaire, le contrôler fermement et faire preuve de toute la rigueur voulue pour maintenir un climat de dignité, d'égalité et d'ordre dans la salle d'audience. Les juges devraient être sensibles aux questions qui sont devant le tribunal et, lorsque cela est utile, obtenir des précisions sur la pertinence des questions posées par les avocats et rendre des décisions équilibrées sur celles-ci.

4.B.4 Judges should not permit court staff or others subject to their authority or control to engage in conduct that may: show disrespect toward others; constitute discrimination; or reasonably reflect negatively on their commitment to equality.

Avoidance of Stereotypes

4.C.1 Judges do not make assumptions based on general characterizations or attach labels to people that invite stereotypical assumptions about their behaviour or characteristics. Stereotypes are simplistic mental short cuts that generate misleading perceptions and cause mistakes and errors in fact and in law.

4.C.2 Reliance on stereotypes may arise for different reasons, often unintentionally. Judges may not properly appreciate that their reasoning is linked to stereotypical thinking. A judge may be unfamiliar with cultural traditions that would, if known, provide a greater understanding of a party's or a witness's appearance, mannerisms or behaviour.

4.C.3 Judges should educate themselves on the extent to which assumptions rest on stereotypical thinking and should become and remain informed about changing attitudes and values. They should take up opportunities to engage with cultures and communities that are different from their own life experiences to expand their knowledge and understanding. In doing this, judges should take care that these efforts enhance and do not detract from their independence and impartiality. In addition, judges should take advantage of educational opportunities and self-study that will assist them in this regard.

4.B.4 Les juges ne devraient pas laisser le personnel de la cour ou d'autres personnes agissant sous leur autorité ou leur contrôle manquer de respect à autrui, ou adopter des comportements qui peuvent constituer de la discrimination ou qui sont raisonnablement susceptibles de discréditer leur engagement envers le principe d'égalité.

La prévention des stéréotypes

4.C.1 Les juges s'abstiennent de formuler des hypothèses fondées sur des caractérisations générales et d'accoler des étiquettes susceptibles d'encourager la formulation d'hypothèses stéréotypées au sujet du comportement ou des caractéristiques de certaines personnes. Les stéréotypes sont des raccourcis dans le raisonnement qui nourrissent des perceptions trompeuses et conduisent à des erreurs de fait ou de droit.

4.C.2 Le recours aux stéréotypes peut résulter d'un ensemble de causes et n'est souvent pas intentionnel. Il est possible que des juges ne soient pas conscients que leur raisonnement est relié à un stéréotype. Il peut aussi arriver que des juges ne connaissent pas certaines traditions culturelles qui, s'ils les connaissaient, leur permettraient de mieux comprendre la façon de se présenter, d'agir et de se comporter d'une partie ou d'un témoin.

4.C.3 Les juges devraient être sensibilisés au fait que les hypothèses peuvent reposer sur des stéréotypes et prendre les moyens appropriés pour demeurer au fait des changements d'attitudes et de valeurs. Ils devraient s'intéresser aux cultures et aux communautés qui diffèrent de celles qu'ils côtoient de par leur expérience de vie, afin d'élargir leurs connaissances et leur compréhension. Toutefois, les juges devraient s'assurer que les efforts déployés en ce sens renforcent leur indépendance et leur impartialité plutôt que de leur nuire. De plus, les juges devraient profiter des activités de formation et des lectures qui permettent d'en apprendre plus sur ces questions.

Association with Discriminatory Organizations

4.D.1 Judges should conduct their personal lives honourably and in ways that would not reasonably be perceived as an endorsement of any invidious form of discrimination. Judges should avoid associations with organizations that engage in or countenance discrimination contrary to law. A judge's membership in such an organization has the potential to call into question the judge's commitment to equality and may erode public confidence in the judiciary. Judges should also be sensitive to the fact that some organizations' activities, policies and public positions, though not unlawful, may still be offensive to legitimate expectations of equality.

4.D.2 Neither the practice of religion nor membership in a religious organization is inconsistent with Ethical Principles.

Association avec des organismes ayant des pratiques discriminatoires

4.D.1 Les juges devraient se conduire de manière honorable dans leur vie personnelle et faire en sorte que leur comportement ne puisse donner à raisonnablement penser qu'ils appuient une quelconque forme de discrimination préjudiciable. Par conséquent, les juges devraient éviter toute association avec un organisme qui pratique ou approuve une forme de discrimination prohibée par la loi. L'adhésion à un tel organisme est susceptible de remettre en cause l'engagement des juges envers le principe d'égalité et de miner la confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature. Les juges devraient aussi être sensibles au fait que l'activité et les politiques de certains organismes ainsi que les opinions qu'ils expriment, quoique licites, peuvent porter atteinte aux attentes légitimes en matière d'égalité.

4.D.2 Ni la pratique d'une religion, ni l'appartenance à un organisme religieux ne sont incompatibles avec les Principes de déontologie.

V. Impartiality

Statement

Judges are impartial and appear to be impartial in the performance of their judicial duties.

Principles

A. Judges ensure that their conduct at all times maintains and enhances confidence in their impartiality and that of the judiciary.

B. Judges avoid conduct which could reasonably cause others to question their impartiality.

C. Judges conduct their affairs so as to avoid real or apparent conflicts of interest between their private interests and their judicial duties.

D. While preserving their impartiality, judges make meaningful efforts to inform and educate the public and the legal profession regarding the law, judicial independence, and the role of judges and the courts in the administration of justice.

E. Judges contemplating retirement and former judges avoid conduct that is likely to bring the judicial office into disrepute or put at risk public expectations of judicial independence, integrity and impartiality.

V. Impartialité

Énoncé

Les juges sont impartiaux et donnent l'apparence d'impartialité dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions judiciaires.

Principes

A. Les juges veillent en toutes circonstances à ce que leur conduite entretienne et accroisse la confiance dans leur impartialité et celle de la magistrature en général.

B. Les juges évitent les comportements pouvant raisonnablement amener autrui à mettre en doute leur impartialité.

C. Les juges mènent leurs affaires de manière à éviter tout conflit réel ou apparent entre leurs intérêts personnels et leurs fonctions judiciaires.

D. Tout en veillant à préserver leur impartialité, les juges s'efforcent d'éduquer le public et la profession juridique et de les informer sur le droit, l'indépendance judiciaire et le rôle des juges et des tribunaux dans l'administration de la justice.

E. Les juges qui songent à quitter ou qui ont quitté la magistrature évitent toute conduite susceptible de jeter le discrédit sur la fonction judiciaire ou de miner les attentes du public quant à l'indépendance, à l'intégrité et à l'impartialité de la magistrature.

Commentary

General

5.A.1 For centuries, adjudication by impartial and independent judges has been recognized as fundamental to the rule of law. Impartiality is a fundamental qualification of a judge and a core attribute of the judiciary.

5.A.2 Impartiality requires not only the absence of bias and prejudgment, but also the absence of any appearance of partiality. This dual aspect of impartiality is captured in the oft-repeated words that justice must not only be done, but manifestly be seen to be done. The test is whether a reasonable and informed person with knowledge of all relevant circumstances, viewing the matter realistically and practically, would apprehend a lack of impartiality in the judge.

5.A.3 While there is a close association between the judge's ethical and legal duties of impartiality, Ethical Principles is not intended to deal with the law relating to judicial disqualification or recusal.

Judicial Duties

5.A.4 Judges have a fundamental obligation to be and to appear to be impartial. This obligation of impartiality does not presuppose that judges are free of life experiences, sympathies or opinions. Rather, it requires judges to be sensitive to their own biases and to consider different points of view with an open mind. Judges should interact with all parties fairly and even-handedly.

Commentaires

Général

5.A.1 Depuis des siècles, on reconnaît que la décision des litiges par des juges impartiaux et indépendants est essentielle à la primauté du droit. L'impartialité est l'une des qualités fondamentales des juges et un attribut central de la fonction judiciaire.

5.A.2 L'impartialité requiert non seulement l'absence de préjugés et de partis pris, mais également l'absence d'apparence de partialité. Ces deux volets de l'impartialité sont bien résumés dans la maxime selon laquelle non seulement justice doit être rendue, mais encore elle doit paraître avoir été rendue. Le critère applicable consiste à se demander si une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée, qui serait au courant de toutes les circonstances pertinentes et étudierait la question de façon réaliste et pratique, craindrait que le juge ne soit pas impartial.

5.A.3 Bien qu'il existe des liens étroits entre les devoirs éthiques et juridiques des juges en matière d'impartialité, les Principes de déontologie ne sont pas destinés à traiter du droit relatif à la récusation des juges.

Fonctions judiciaires

5.A.4 Les juges ont l'obligation fondamentale d'être et de paraître impartiaux. L'obligation d'impartialité ne présuppose pas que les juges n'ont aucune expérience personnelle, sympathie ou opinion. Elle exige plutôt que les juges soient conscients de leurs propres préjugés et accueillent différents points de vue en gardant un esprit ouvert. Les juges devraient traiter toutes les parties avec équité et sur un pied d'égalité.

5.A.5 Judges should avoid using words or conduct, in and out of court, that might give rise to a reasonable perception of bias. The expectations of litigants are high. Disappointed litigants will sometimes perceive bias when neither actual bias nor a reasonable apprehension of bias exists. A judge's remarks or tone may diminish the judge's perceived impartiality. An unjustified reprimand of counsel, an improper remark about a litigant or a witness or a statement evidencing prejudgment or intemperate and impatient behaviour may undermine the appearance of impartiality. Casual conversations or familiarity with counsel or participants in the proceedings may be perceived by others as a form of exclusion. Therefore, judges should ensure that their comments or conduct do not provide reasonable grounds for a perception of bias.

5.A.6 While judges may wish to signal support for causes or viewpoints through words or in the wearing or display of symbols of support, even if they seem innocuous, such communications may be interpreted as reflecting a lack of impartiality or the use of the position of the judge to make a political or other statement. For these reasons, judges should avoid statements or visible symbols of support, particularly in the context of court proceedings.

5.A.7 Judges should ensure that proceedings are conducted in an orderly and efficient manner and that the court process is not abused. An appropriate measure of firmness may be necessary to achieve this end. In the presence of challenging or vexatious litigants, judges should be firm, decisive and at the same time respectful to ensure that litigants' rights are protected.

5.A.5 Les juges devraient éviter de s'exprimer ou de se comporter, en salle d'audience ou ailleurs, de manière à susciter une perception raisonnable de partialité. Les attentes des parties sont élevées. Il peut arriver qu'une partie déçue perçoive l'existence d'un préjugé malgré l'absence de partialité réelle ou de crainte raisonnable de partialité. Des remarques formulées par les juges ou le ton employé pour exprimer celles-ci peuvent miner la perception d'impartialité des juges. Les remontrances injustifiées faites aux avocats, les remarques déplacées au sujet des parties ou des témoins, les déclarations manifestant un parti pris et les comportements immodérés et impatients peuvent saper l'apparence d'impartialité. Les conversations ou comportements empreints de familiarité avec les avocats ou les participants à l'instance peuvent être perçus par d'autres comme une forme d'exclusion. Par conséquent, les juges devraient s'assurer que leurs commentaires ou leur conduite ne donnent pas prise à une perception raisonnable de partialité.

5.A.6 Bien que des juges puissent vouloir exprimer leur appui pour certaines causes ou points de vue, les paroles ou le port d'insignes marquant cet appui, même lorsqu'ils semblent inoffensifs, peuvent être interprétés comme un manque d'impartialité ou être vus comme un moyen d'utiliser la fonction judiciaire pour faire une déclaration politique ou autre. Pour cette raison, les juges devraient éviter de tenir des propos ou de porter des insignes visibles marquant leur appui, en particulier dans le cadre du processus judiciaire.

5.A.7 Les juges devraient veiller à ce que l'instance se déroule de manière ordonnée et efficace, tout en prévenant les abus de procédure. Une certaine fermeté peut s'imposer selon les circonstances. En présence d'une partie difficile ou quérulente, les juges devraient se comporter de manière ferme et décisive, sans renoncer au respect requis pour assurer la protection des droits des parties.

5.A.8 Judges have a responsibility to promote opportunities for all persons to understand the judicial process and to meaningfully present their case, whether or not they have legal representation. Self-represented persons may sometime be uninformed about their rights and about the consequences of the options they choose. Judges should take appropriate and reasonable measures to provide a fair and impartial process and prevent an unfair disadvantage to self-represented persons.[8] Such measures are consistent with impartiality provided that they are fair to other parties.

5.A.9 Judges should be particularly attuned to the perception of bias that might arise in circumstances where one or more parties are self-represented. Appropriate assistance to a self-represented litigant may be perceived by the opposing, represented party as manifesting bias. Accommodations extended to self-represented litigants should not extend to the point where they become unfair to the other party. Clear and transparent communication with all parties is necessary to avoid unwarranted apprehension of bias.

5.A.8 Les juges ont la responsabilité de s'assurer que toute personne, qu'elle soit représentée ou non représentée, ait la possibilité de comprendre le processus judiciaire et de faire valoir sa position. Les personnes non représentées peuvent parfois être mal informées de leurs droits et des conséquences de leurs choix. Les juges devraient prendre des moyens appropriés et raisonnables afin d'établir un processus équitable et impartial et d'empêcher que les personnes non représentées ne soient pas injustement désavantagées.[8] De tels moyens se concilient avec l'impartialité pour autant qu'ils soient équitables envers toutes les parties.

5.A.9 Les juges devraient être particulièrement sensibles à la possibilité d'une perception de partialité dans les situations où l'une des parties ou plusieurs d'entre elles ne sont pas représentées. L'assistance congruente que les juges apportent à une partie non représentée peut être perçue par la partie adverse représentée par avocat comme la manifestation d'un parti pris. Les accommodements accordés aux parties non représentées ne devraient pas rendre le processus injuste pour les parties représentées. Il est nécessaire de communiquer de façon claire et transparente avec toutes les parties afin de dissiper les craintes injustifiées de partialité.

8 Canadian Judicial Council Statement of Principles on Self-represented Litigants and Accused Persons (2006)

8 Conseil canadien de la magistrature, Énoncé de principes concernant les plaideurs et les accusés non représentés par un avocat (2006)

5.A.10 An expanding aspect of judicial responsibility for judges is their work in settlement conferences and the judicial mediation of disputes. Direct engagement with litigants and counsel in these non-adjudicative settings often takes judges outside the confines of their traditional roles and presents additional challenges in relation to impartiality. Given the variety of settings in which this work takes place, it is not possible to articulate bright line rules to provide guidance in every situation. However, there are values and boundaries which judges should respect in these settings. When engaging in non-adjudicative dispute resolution, judges should ensure that: (i) the process and outcomes are acceptable to the parties themselves; (ii) the outcomes are the subject of informed decision-making by the parties; (iii) the process is transparent to the parties; (iv) the outcomes are not coercive, unconscionable, or illegal; and (v) the legitimate interests of known non-involved third parties are considered. Transparency in this context means openness in the broadest sense and is not intended to discourage caucusing in appropriate circumstances.

Restraints

5.B.1 On appointment, judges do not surrender all of the rights and freedoms enjoyed by everyone else in Canada. Nevertheless, the office of the judge imposes restraints that are necessary to maintain public confidence in the impartiality and independence of the judiciary. In defining the appropriate degree of public involvement by a judge there are two fundamental considerations. The first is whether the involvement could reasonably undermine confidence in the judge's impartiality. The second is whether such involvement may expose the judge to criticism or be inconsistent with the dignity and integrity of judicial office.

5.A.10 Les responsabilités des juges s'étendent de plus en plus aux modes alternatifs de règlement des litiges et à la médiation judiciaire. Les interactions directes entre juges, parties et avocats inhérentes à ces processus non juridictionnels s'inscrivent souvent en dehors des cadres traditionnels de l'activité judiciaire et soulèvent des enjeux additionnels en matière d'impartialité. Comme ces cadres de travail varient grandement, il n'est pas possible d'établir des règles claires et précises susceptibles d'apporter des solutions à toutes les éventualités. Néanmoins, les juges devraient respecter certaines valeurs et limites dans ces situations et notamment s'assurer de ce qui suit : (i) le processus et les résultats qui en découleront sont acceptables pour les parties elles-mêmes; (ii) les parties ont consenti en toute connaissance de cause aux résultats; (iii) le processus est transparent pour les parties; (iv) les résultats ne sont pas coercitifs, iniques ou contraires à la loi; et (v) les intérêts légitimes des tiers connus qui ne sont pas parties au litige sont pris en compte. Dans ce contexte, la transparence s'entend d'une ouverture, au sens large, et n'est pas incompatible avec la possibilité de rencontres individuelles, le cas échéant.

Restrictions

5.B.1 Les juges ne renoncent pas, du fait de leur nomination, à l'ensemble des droits et libertés dont jouit chaque personne au Canada. Cependant, la charge de juge impose des contraintes qui sont nécessaires au maintien de la confiance du public dans l'impartialité et l'indépendance de la magistrature. Deux questions fondamentales entrent en ligne de compte lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer le niveau d'intervention publique qui convient à un membre de la magistrature. La première consiste à savoir si l'intervention pourrait raisonnablement saper la confiance dans l'impartialité du juge et la deuxième, si cette intervention est susceptible d'exposer le juge aux critiques ou est par ailleurs incompatible avec la dignité et l'intégrité de la fonction judiciaire.

Political Activity

5.B.2 Judges must cease all partisan political activity upon the assumption of judicial office. Moreover, judges refrain from conduct that, in the mind of a reasonable and informed person, could give rise to the appearance that the judge is engaged in political activity. For this reason, judges must refrain from: (i) membership in political parties and political fundraising; (ii) attendance at political gatherings and political fundraising events; (iii) contributing financially or otherwise to political parties or campaigns; (iv) signing petitions to influence a political decision; and (v) taking part publicly in controversial political discussions, except in respect of matters directly affecting the operation of the courts, the independence of the judiciary or fundamental aspects of the administration of justice.

5.B.3 Like partisan political activity, out of court statements by a judge concerning issues of public controversy may undermine impartiality. They are also likely to lead to public confusion about the nature of the relationship between the judiciary on the one hand and the executive and legislative branches of government on the other. Partisan actions and political statements by definition involve publicly choosing one side of a debate over another. In order to preserve their impartiality, judges should refrain from any political action or involvement. The perception of partiality will be reinforced if the judge's activities attract criticism and/or rebuttal. This in turn tends to undermine public confidence in the judiciary. Judges should not use the privileged platform of judicial office to enter the public arena because it puts at risk public confidence in the impartiality and the independence of the judiciary.

Activités politiques

5.B.2 Les juges doivent se retirer de toute activité politique de nature partisane dès leur entrée en fonction. De plus, les juges évitent toute conduite susceptible de donner à une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée l'impression qu'ils s'adonnent à une activité politique. Pour cette raison, les juges doivent éviter de faire ce qui suit : (i) adhérer à des partis politiques et à des campagnes de financement politique; (ii) participer à des rassemblements politiques ou à des activités de financement politique; (iii) verser des contributions financières à des partis ou à des campagnes politiques ou y contribuer d'autres manières; (iv) signer des pétitions visant à influencer une décision politique; et (v) intervenir publiquement dans des débats politiques, sauf sur des questions concernant directement le fonctionnement des tribunaux, l'indépendance de la magistrature ou des éléments fondamentaux de l'administration de la justice.

5.B.3 Tout comme les activités politiques de nature partisane, les propos hors du cadre judiciaire sur des questions soulevant une controverse publique peuvent miner l'image d'impartialité du juge. En outre, ils risquent de créer de la confusion auprès du public en ce qui concerne les rapports entre le pouvoir judiciaire, d'une part, et les pouvoirs exécutif et législatif, d'autre part. Par définition, les activités partisanes et les déclarations politiques impliquent une prise de position publique à l'égard d'une question particulière. Afin de préserver leur impartialité, les juges devraient éviter toute activité ou participation politique. La perception de partialité sera plus aiguë si les activités auxquelles s'adonnent les juges font l'objet de critiques ou de contestations. Ces réactions, à leur tour, tendront à miner la confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature. Les juges ne devraient pas utiliser le prestige associé à la fonction judiciaire comme levier dans l'arène publique, car, ce faisant, ils mettent en péril la confiance du public dans l'impartialité et l'indépendance de la magistrature.

5.B.4 Chief Justices and other judges with administrative responsibilities will necessarily have contact and interaction with the executive branch of government, including attorneys general, deputy attorneys general and court services officials. These engagements are appropriate provided that the interactions are not partisan in nature.

5.B.5 If a member of a judge's family is politically active, the judge should recognize that such activities of close family members may adversely affect the public perception of the judge's impartiality. In cases where such public perceptions may arise, a judge should consider whether recusal is the appropriate remedy in a given case.

Public Statements

5.B.6 There are limited circumstances in which judges may properly speak out, though with restraint, about a matter that is publicly controversial, namely, when the matter directly affects the operation of the courts, the independence of the judiciary or fundamental aspects of the administration of justice. Chief Justices have particular responsibilities in this regard. Judges should follow any protocol established by their Court on these matters.

5.B.7 If their personal integrity has been called into question in a public context, judges should seek guidance from their Chief Justice and, if appropriate, other trusted advisors.

5.B.4 Les juges en chef et les autres juges qui exercent des responsabilités administratives sont appelés à communiquer et à interagir avec des membres du pouvoir exécutif, dont les procureurs généraux, les sous-ministres ou sous-procureurs généraux et les administrateurs des tribunaux. Ces interactions sont appropriées, en autant qu'elles n'ont pas de dimension partisane.

5.B.5 Les juges devraient être conscients que les activités politiques d'un membre de leur famille immédiate peuvent compromettre leur image d'impartialité auprès du public. Dans les cas où la perception du public pourrait être compromise dans une affaire particulière dont ils sont saisis, les juges devraient considérer s'il y a lieu de se récuser.

Déclarations publiques

5.B.6 Il existe des circonstances où les juges, quoique avec retenue, peuvent exprimer publiquement leur avis sur un sujet controversé, notamment lorsque ce dernier concerne directement le fonctionnement des tribunaux, l'indépendance de la magistrature ou des aspects fondamentaux de l'administration de la justice. Les juges en chef ont une responsabilité particulière à cet égard. Les juges devraient se conformer aux protocoles établis par leur propre cour, le cas échéant.

5.B.7 Dans le cas où leur intégrité personnelle serait publiquement mise en doute, les juges devraient obtenir l'avis de leur juge en chef et, au besoin, d'autres conseillers dignes de confiance.

Judicial Promotion and Opportunities

5.B.8 Leadership positions in courts, opportunities for elevation to a higher court and other opportunities for judges arise from time to time. These decisions are ultimately made by the executive branch of government. Judges are entitled to seek these positions and advance their qualifications, but should exercise reserve in their communication of interest, or the communication of interest by others on their behalf, so as to avoid any conduct that would compromise their impartiality or undermine the integrity of the appointment process.

Public Engagement, Civic and Charitable Activity

5.B.9 Many judges wish to become or continue to be active in various forms of public service to their communities. This involvement benefits the community and judges but also carries risks.

5.B.10 On one hand, there are likely to be beneficial aspects of the judge being active in appropriate forms of public service. Judges administer the law on behalf of the community and are appointed to serve the public. Therefore, unnecessary isolation from the community does not promote wise or just judgments. In order to undertake their work with competence and diligence, and in ways that are consistent with judicial duties, judges are encouraged to take up opportunities to engage with and learn from the wider public, including communities with which they have little or no life experience.

Promotion et autres opportunités pour les juges

5.B.8 Il arrive que des juges soient pressentis pour des fonctions de leadership au sein d'une cour ou en vue de leur accession à une cour de juridiction supérieure, ou que d'autres occasions se présentent à eux. Les décisions finales en cette matière relèvent du pouvoir exécutif. Les juges sont en droit de soumettre leur candidature à ces postes et de faire valoir leurs compétences, mais devraient faire preuve de réserve lorsqu'il s'agit d'exprimer leur intérêt soit directement, soit par l'entremise d'une autre personne, afin d'éviter toute conduite qui mettrait en péril leur impartialité ou minerait l'intégrité du processus de nomination.

Participation à la vie publique et activités sociales ou communautaires

5.B.9 Nombre de juges souhaitent s'impliquer dans des activités sociales ou communautaires ou maintenir leur engagement à cet égard. Cet engagement est bénéfique tant pour la société que pour les juges, mais comporte également des risques.

5.B.10 D'une part, la participation des juges à diverses activités sociales ou communautaires appropriées est sans doute avantageuse. Les juges appliquent la loi au nom de la société et sont nommés pour servir la population. Par conséquent, leur isolement excessif du reste de la collectivité est peu propice à des décisions justes et judicieuses. Afin qu'ils exercent leurs fonctions avec compétence et diligence, dans le respect des devoirs de leur charge, les juges sont encouragés à saisir les occasions qui leur permettent d'interagir avec le public et de mieux comprendre leur société, y compris les groupes qu'ils connaissent peu ou pas de par leur expérience personnelle.

5.B.11 On the other hand, the judge's civic involvement may, in some cases, jeopardize the perception of impartiality. Judges should exercise caution when considering their involvement in community activities and be attentive to the limits that judicial appointment places upon their freedom to undertake these activities. Community involvement on the part of the judge should be assessed in light of the form of public service under consideration, the activities and goals of the organization, the role to be played by the judge within it, the risk that the organization may become engaged in litigation and any other relevant factor.

5.B.12 Generally speaking, judges should refrain from membership in or association with groups or organizations or participation in public discussion which, in the mind of a reasonable and informed person, would undermine confidence in a judge's impartiality with respect to issues that could come before the courts. In service to their communities, judges must not give legal or investment advice, and should avoid involvement in causes or organizations that are likely to be engaged in litigation. Judges should use even greater caution in considering whether to become officers or directors of community organizations.

5.B.13 While, in the past, Canadian judges have served in leadership positions with organizations such as universities and religious bodies, this service is potentially problematic. The risk that such organizations will become involved in litigation or be the subject of public controversy creates the possibility that the judge will be placed in an awkward position, both in relation to public confidence in the judge's impartiality and in the judiciary as a whole. While judges may consider accepting such positions, they should reflect on issues of perceived or actual conflict before doing so, all with a view to determining whether the role can be structured in such a way so as to avoid conflicts and appearances of conflict.

5.B.11 D'autre part, l'engagement social et communautaire des juges peut parfois compromettre leur image d'impartialité. Les juges devraient faire preuve de prudence lorsqu'ils envisagent de participer à des activités sociales ou communautaires et être sensibles au fait que l'accession à la magistrature leur impose des limites à cet égard. L'opportunité d'une participation devrait être appréciée en fonction du type de service public envisagé, des activités et objectifs de l'organisme, du rôle que le juge serait appelé à y jouer, du risque que l'organisme soit partie à un litige et de tout autre facteur pertinent.

5.B.12 En général, les juges devraient s'abstenir d'adhérer ou de s'associer à un groupement ou à un organisme, ou de participer à un débat public, lorsque, du point de vue d'une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée, cette adhésion ou cette participation serait susceptible de miner la confiance dans l'impartialité des juges relativement à des questions susceptibles d'être soumises aux tribunaux. Dans le cadre de leurs activités sociales ou communautaires, les juges doivent s'abstenir de donner des conseils juridiques ou des conseils en matière de placements et devraient éviter de participer à des causes ou à des organisations susceptibles d'être impliquées dans un litige. Les juges ne devraient envisager d'occuper des postes de dirigeant ou d'administrateur d'un organisme social ou communautaire qu'avec la plus grande prudence.

5.B.13 Bien que certains juges du Canada aient dans le passé occupé des fonctions de leadership au sein d'entités telles que des universités ou des organisations religieuses, l'exercice de telles fonctions peut soulever des difficultés. Il existe un risque que ces entités soient parties à un litige, ou qu'elles fassent l'objet d'une controverse publique, ce qui pourrait placer le juge dans une situation délicate du point de vue de la confiance du public, tant à l'égard de son impartialité qu'à l'endroit de la magistrature dans son ensemble. Avant d'accepter de telles fonctions, les juges devraient considérer les risques de conflit réel ou perçu et s'il est possible d'établir une structure permettant d'éviter les conflits et les apparences de conflit.

5.B.14 Involvement with a community organization that at one time was appropriate may become inappropriate. Judges should re-evaluate these associations in light of changing circumstances.

Social Media

5.B.15 Social media activities are subject to the overarching principles that guide judicial behaviour. Judges should be aware of how their activities on social media may reflect on themselves and upon the judiciary and should be attentive to the potential implications for their ability to perform their judicial role. Judges should also be attentive to and may wish to inform family members of the ways in which their social media activities could reflect adversely on the judge.

5.B.16 Communication by social media is more public and more permanent than many other forms of communication. It enables messages to be re-transmitted beyond the originators' control and without their consent. Comments or images intended for a limited audience can be shared, almost instantaneously, with a vast audience and may create an adverse reaction far beyond what one may have considered possible. Social media can also create greater opportunities for inappropriate communications to judges from others.

5.B.14 La participation à un organisme social ou communautaire qui est jugée appropriée à un moment donné peut cesser de l'être par la suite. Les juges devraient réévaluer leurs associations en fonction des changements de circonstances.

Médias sociaux

5.B.15 Les communications dans les médias sociaux sont assujetties aux principes fondamentaux qui guident la conduite des juges. Les juges devraient être conscients du fait que ces communications peuvent ternir leur réputation et celle de la magistrature et se répercuter sur leur capacité d'exercer leurs fonctions judiciaires. Par ailleurs, les juges devraient être conscients que les communications des membres de leur famille pourraient également se répercuter défavorablement sur eux; il pourrait y avoir lieu de les en informer.

5.B.16 Les communications affichées dans les médias sociaux peuvent rarement être effacées et n'ont pas vraiment de caractère privé. Elles peuvent facilement être disséminées sans le consentement de leur auteur et échapper à son contrôle. Les commentaires et les images destinés à être partagés dans un cercle fermé peuvent être rediffusés, parfois instantanément, à un vaste auditoire et provoquer une réaction défavorable qui dépasse largement ce qu'on aurait imaginé. Les médias sociaux ouvrent aussi des avenues additionnelles permettant à un membre du public de transmettre des communications inappropriées à un membre de la magistrature.

5.B.17 Judges' communications and associations with others are commonly used as a basis for claims of lack of impartiality. Judges should be vigilant in minimizing reasonable apprehensions of bias arising from these communications and associations. This is all the more important, and difficult, in the age of social media. Judges who choose to use social media should exercise great caution in their communications and associations within these networks, including expressions of support or disapproval. This includes judges informing themselves about the functioning, and the application, of security and privacy settings appropriate to their use of social media.

5.B.18 In a digital world, out-of-court information is much more accessible and the acquisition of such information by a judge is more readily discoverable. Accordingly, judges should be vigilant to avoid inappropriately acquiring or receiving out-of-court information related to the parties, witnesses or issues under consideration in matters before them. Fairness issues may need to be considered by the judge should this happen.

Gifts and Remuneration

5.B.19 Judges must not accept gifts from litigants, lawyers, law firms or any other person in contexts that give rise to a reasonable apprehension of bias. This does not prevent judges from accepting gifts of nominal value in appreciation for having spoken at or contributed to events or conferences, or have their reasonable expenses reimbursed. Such gifts are acceptable, provided that they do not represent remuneration and their acceptance would not create, in the mind of a reasonable and informed person, a perception of partiality.

5.B.17 Les allégations touchant le manque d'impartialité sont souvent fondées sur des propos des juges ou sur le fait qu'ils entretiennent des rapports avec certaines personnes. Les juges devraient éviter que de telles communications ou de tels rapports donnent prise à une crainte raisonnable quant à leur impartialité. Les médias sociaux compliquent les choses à cet égard. Les juges qui choisissent d'y être présents devraient faire preuve d'une grande prudence dans leurs communications, y compris en ce qui concerne l'usage de symboles d'approbation ou de désaccord. Ils devraient également se renseigner sur le fonctionnement et l'application des paramètres de sécurité et de protection de la vie privée convenant à leur utilisation des médias sociaux.

5.B.18 À l'ère numérique, il est beaucoup plus facile d'accéder à des renseignements extrajudiciaires et de laisser des traces en le faisant. Par conséquent, les juges devraient veiller à éviter d'obtenir ou de recevoir de façon inappropriée des renseignements extrajudiciaires relatifs aux parties, aux témoins ou aux questions dont ils sont saisis. Une telle situation, si elle survenait, pourrait soulever des questions d'équité que le juge pourrait devoir prendre en considération.

Cadeaux et rémunération

5.B.19 Les juges ne doivent pas accepter de cadeaux de la part des parties à un litige, d'avocats ou de leur cabinet ou de toute autre personne lorsque cela est susceptible de susciter une crainte raisonnable de partialité. Cela ne signifie pas qu'il est interdit aux juges d'accepter des cadeaux de valeur symbolique pour leur contribution à la tenue d'événements ou de conférences ou d'obtenir le remboursement de frais raisonnables. De tels cadeaux sont acceptables, en autant qu'ils ne constituent pas une rémunération et que le fait de les accepter ne susciterait pas chez une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée une perception de partialité.

Speeches and Conferences

5.B.20 It is common for judges to be asked to speak in public. Judges' public engagement aimed at educating others is a benefit to the judiciary and the public they serve. Judges are encouraged to attend events as speakers, both to contribute their knowledge and to undertake their own professional development. However, speaking in public carries risks to the public perception of the judge's impartiality and must be approached with care. Judges should give careful consideration to a range of factors when deciding whether to accept a speaking invitation and, if so, what the judge may properly address in a speech. These include: (i) the organization inviting the judge to speak; (ii) the anticipated audience; (iii) the topic or general theme to be addressed in the speech; (iv) the degree to which the topic relates to matters concerning the judiciary or the courts; (v) whether the topic or the judge's remarks relates to a matter of public policy or public controversy; vi) the likelihood that the speech will be reported on, recorded or made available to a broader public; and (vii) the value of the judge's remarks in informing or educating the intended audience. If judges have any doubts regarding the appropriateness of accepting a speaking engagement they should seek the advice of their Chief Justice.

Attendance at Events

5.B.21 Judges may attend social or public events, or conferences provided that such attendance does not compromise their impartiality and the nature of the event, or host, does not raise other concerns related to Ethical Principles.

Discours et participation à des conférences

5.B.20 Il est fréquent que des juges soient invités à prendre la parole en public. La participation des juges à des programmes éducatifs est bénéfique, tant pour la magistrature que pour le public qu'elle sert. Il est souhaitable que les juges donnent des conférences et contribuent par ce moyen à l'avancement des connaissances et à leur propre perfectionnement professionnel. Cependant, la prise de parole en public peut nuire à la perception d'impartialité des juges et devrait être abordée prudemment. Avant d'accepter une invitation à prononcer une conférence, et d'en déterminer le contenu, les juges devraient analyser avec soin un certain nombre d'éléments, dont les suivants : (i) la provenance de l'invitation, (ii) l'auditoire envisagé, (iii) le sujet ou le thème à aborder, (iv) le rapport plus ou moins étroit entre le sujet à aborder et les questions qui touchent la magistrature ou les tribunaux, (v) le rapport entre le sujet à aborder ou l'allocution du juge et des questions de politique publique ou des enjeux controversés, (vi) la probabilité que le discours soit cité dans les médias, enregistré ou autrement mis à la disposition du public et (vii) l'intérêt des propos du juge du point de vue de l'information ou de l'éducation du public. En cas de doute quant à l'opportunité d'accepter une invitation, les juges devraient consulter leur juge en chef.

Présence à des événements

5.B.21 Les juges peuvent participer à des événements sociaux ou publics ou à des congrès ou colloques, pourvu que leur présence ne mette pas en péril leur impartialité, ou que la nature de l'événement ou l'identité de l'hôte ne soulève pas de crainte au regard des Principes de déontologie.

5.B.22 Judges may participate in social programs at conferences provided that they are generally available to attendees or speakers and the sponsorship, nature and extent of social programs would not create, in the view of a reasonable and informed person, a perception of lack of impartiality.

5.B.23 Attendance by a judge at conferences and social events sponsored by businesses or organizations is potentially problematic. Where invited, the judge should consider the organization hosting the event, whether the invitation has also been extended to community leaders, the purpose for which the judge was invited and the potential for adverse public perception as a result of the attendance.

5.B.24 When judges are invited to attend social events associated with the law or the legal profession, or hosted by law firms, they should consider the nature of the social event, its sponsorship, the other invitees and attendees at the event, the purpose for which the judge has been invited, the existence of a previous personal relationship with the host and attendees, as well as the benefit to the judge, the judiciary and the legal profession as a result of the judge's attendance. Judges should avoid attendance at such events if a purpose of the event is to advance a commercial interest, to showcase the host's relationship with the judge, or if clients are in attendance.

5.B.22 Les juges peuvent participer au volet social de congrès ou de colloques, en autant que ces activités soient normalement accessibles aux participants ou aux conférenciers et que le commanditaire, la nature et l'étendue de ces activités sociales soient tels qu'ils ne puissent susciter chez une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée la perception d'un manque d'impartialité.

5.B.23 La participation des juges à des congrès ou colloques ou à des activités sociales qui sont commandités par des entreprises ou des organismes peut soulever des difficultés. Lorsqu'ils sont invités, les juges devraient prendre en compte la nature de l'organisme hôte, le fait que d'autres personnes en vue au sein de la collectivité ont aussi été invitées, l'intention derrière l'invitation faite aux juges et la possibilité que le public perçoive défavorablement la présence de juges à un tel événement.

5.B.24 La participation des juges à des activités sociales liées au droit ou à la profession juridique ou organisées par un cabinet d'avocats devrait aussi être évaluée en fonction de la nature de l'événement, de l'identité des commanditaires, de l'identité des autres participants ou invités, de l'intention derrière l'invitation faite aux juges, de l'existence de liens personnels antérieurs entre le juge et les hôtes ou autres invités, et du bénéfice qui résulterait de la présence du juge d'un point de vue personnel, du point de vue de la magistrature ou de celui de la profession juridique. Les juges devraient s'abstenir de participer à de telles activités si leur objet est lié à des fins commerciales, si l'événement vise à souligner l'existence d'une relation entre le juge et l'hôte ou si des clients de l'hôte sont présents.

Conflicts of Interest

5.C.1 The discussion of conflicts of interest in Ethical Principles is not intended to state the law relating to judicial disqualification or recusal. It is intended to provide guidance to judges as they identify and assess the circumstances in which their personal interests may be reasonably viewed by others as conflicting with their judicial duties. In assessing their ethical duties in this context, judges should remain conscious of the demands of the sound administration of justice and their duty to hear the cases assigned to them.

5.C.2 The potential for a conflict of interest arises when the personal interest of the judge (or of those close to the judge) conflicts with the judge's duty to adjudicate impartially. Judicial impartiality is concerned with impartiality in fact and in the perception of a reasonable and informed person. As a result, judges should be attentive to both actual conflicts between their self-interest and their duty of impartial adjudication, and to circumstances in which a reasonable and informed person would reasonably apprehend a conflict.

5.C.3 Conflicts of interest may arise from: a pecuniary or non-pecuniary interest in the outcome; a close family, personal or professional relationship with a litigant, counsel or witness; or the judge having expressed views evidencing bias regarding a litigant or an issue that is before the court.

Conflits d'intérêts

5.C.1 Les Principes de déontologie n'ont pas pour objet de traiter du droit relatif à la récusation des juges. Dans le présent document, la discussion des conflits d'intérêts vise à offrir aux juges des pistes de réflexion qui leur permettent d'identifier et d'évaluer les circonstances où leurs intérêts personnels pourraient raisonnablement être vus par d'autres comme entrant en conflit avec leurs fonctions judiciaires. Lorsqu'ils évaluent leurs obligations déontologiques dans ce cadre, les juges devraient garder à l'esprit les exigences d'une saine administration de la justice et leur devoir d'entendre les affaires qui leur sont confiées.

5.C.2 Il y a risque de conflit d'intérêts lorsque l'intérêt personnel du juge (ou de ses proches) s'oppose à son devoir de rendre la justice avec impartialité. L'impartialité judiciaire s'entend à la fois de l'impartialité réelle et de l'impartialité apparente, selon la perception d'une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée. Par conséquent, les juges doivent être sensibles non seulement aux conflits réels entre leur intérêt personnel et leur devoir de rendre la justice de manière impartiale, mais également aux situations dans lesquelles une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée éprouverait une crainte raisonnable de conflit d'intérêts.

5.C.3 Un conflit d'intérêts peut survenir lorsque les juges ont un intérêt patrimonial ou extrapatrimonial dans l'issue d'un procès; une relation de parenté, une amitié proche ou une relation professionnelle avec une partie, un avocat ou un témoin; ou lorsque les juges expriment des opinions manifestant de la partialité à l'égard d'une partie ou d'un enjeu débattu devant le tribunal.

5.C.4 Upon appointment, judges must immediately cease practicing law, and should divest themselves and remain divested of their interests in commercial and business activities. Severance of all association with the judge's legal practice should be done as quickly as possible, ideally in an immediate and final way.

5.C.5 Generally speaking, judges are entitled to manage 'passive' investments that do not constitute 'carrying on business', provided that the investment is truly passive with little active management required. Nevertheless, judges should not participate in a case in which they have a financial, property or other interest that could be affected by its outcome or in which their interest would give rise to a potential apprehension of lack of impartiality by a reasonable and informed person. This is true whether the interest is itself the subject matter of the controversy or where the outcome of the case could materially affect the value of any interest or property owned by the judge, the judge's family or close associates. There is no conflict where the judge's financial or property interest is limited to one shared by citizens generally. Owning an insurance policy, having a bank account, using a credit card or owning securities in a widely held enterprise would not, in normal circumstances, constitute a conflict of interest, unless the outcome of the proceedings before the judge could substantially affect such holdings.

5.C.4 Dès leur nomination, les juges doivent immédiatement cesser de pratiquer le droit et devraient se départir, de façon définitive, de leurs intérêts dans toute activité commerciale ou d'affaires. Les liens existant avec leur cabinet devraient être rompus aussi rapidement que possible, idéalement de manière immédiate et définitive.

5.C.5 De manière générale, les juges peuvent détenir des placements « passifs » qui ne constituent pas « la poursuite d'une entreprise », en autant qu'il s'agisse de placements véritablement passifs exigeant peu ou pas de gestion active. Néanmoins, les juges ne devraient pas présider de procès qui mettent en jeu leur propre intérêt pécuniaire ou autre ou leur patrimoine ou dans lesquels leur intérêt pourrait susciter chez une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée la crainte qu'ils pourraient ne pas juger de façon impartiale. Ce principe s'applique aussi bien dans le cas où l'intérêt lui-même est l'objet du litige que dans celui où l'issue du procès pourrait avoir une incidence importante sur la valeur de tout intérêt ou bien appartenant au juge, à sa famille ou à des proches. Il n'y a généralement pas de conflit d'intérêts lorsque l'intérêt financier ou patrimonial du juge est équivalent à celui de la population en général. Ainsi, dans des circonstances normales, ne constituerait pas un conflit d'intérêts le fait de détenir une police d'assurance, d'avoir un compte bancaire, d'utiliser une carte de crédit ou de détenir des titres d'une société inscrite en bourse, à moins que le résultat du litige devant le juge ne puisse affecter substantiellement la valeur de ces intérêts.

Acting as Executors

5.C.6 Judges should not normally act as an executor or fiduciary, unless it concerns the affairs of a close friend or relative and is unlikely to become contentious. Even in that case, judges should not be remunerated for that role and should not act if the executorship may interfere with the performance of judicial duties.

Judges' Former Legal Practice

5.C.7 Judges should be sensitive to the existence of relationships which, to a reasonable and informed person, would give rise to reasonable apprehension of lack of impartiality. In particular, judges will face this issue in relation to cases involving former clients, members of the judge's former law firm or lawyers from the government department or legal aid office in which the judge practiced before appointment. Each case is unique and the apprehension of bias should be assessed in light of all the circumstances. The following general guidelines may be helpful: (i) judges who were involved in private practice should not sit on any case in which the judge or, to their knowledge, the judge's former firm was directly involved in any capacity before the judge was appointed to office; (ii) judges who practised law in government service or legal aid should not sit on cases in which they had any involvement prior to their appointment; (iii) judges should not sit on a matter in which the judge's former law firm is involved until after a 'cooling off period', often established by local law or tradition, of between two and five years; and, (iv) judges should not sit on a matter in which the judge's former law firm is involved for at least as long as there continues to be a financial relationship between the judge and the law firm.

Agir comme liquidateur

5.C.6 De manière générale, les juges ne devraient pas agir comme liquidateur d'une succession ou comme fiduciaire ou fondé de pouvoir, si ce n'est pour le bénéfice d'un ami proche ou d'un membre de leur famille, et à la condition qu'il soit peu probable que la situation devienne litigieuse. Même dans ce cas, les juges ne devraient pas être rémunérés pour cette tâche, laquelle ne devrait pas être acceptée si elle est susceptible de nuire à l'exercice des fonctions judiciaires.

Activités professionnelles antérieures

5.C.7 Les juges devraient être sensibles à l'existence de relations susceptibles de susciter, chez une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée, une crainte raisonnable quant à leur impartialité. Les juges devront parfois se demander s'il convient d'entendre des affaires qui impliquent d'anciens clients, des membres de leur ancien cabinet ou des avocats du ministère ou du bureau d'aide juridique dans lequel ils ont exercé avant leur accession à la magistrature. Chaque cas est unique et la crainte de partialité devrait être appréciée en fonction de toutes les circonstances. Les recommandations suivantes pourraient s'avérer utiles : (i) les juges qui exerçaient en pratique privée ne devraient pas entendre les litiges dans lesquels ils agissaient ou, à leur connaissance, leur ancien cabinet agissait à quelque titre que ce soit, avant leur accession à la magistrature; (ii) les juges qui exerçaient au sein de la fonction publique ou à l'aide juridique ne devraient pas entendre les litiges dans lesquels ils agissaient à quelque titre que ce soit avant leur accession à la magistrature; (iii) les juges ne devraient pas entendre les autres dossiers menés par leur ancien cabinet avant l'expiration d'une certaine période, souvent établie par la loi ou les usages locaux, de deux à cinq ans à compter de leur nomination, et (iv) les juges ne devraient pas entendre les dossiers menés par leur ancien cabinet au moins aussi longtemps que perdurent leurs relations financières avec celui-ci.

Personal Relationships

5.C.8 Frequently judges are faced with situations where the lawyer appearing before the judge is from a law firm where a close friend or member of the judge's immediate family is a partner, associate or employee. It would be inappropriate for a judge to hear a case involving a close friend or family member. Generally speaking, it would not be problematic for a judge to sit on a case involving a lawyer from a firm in which the close friend or family member is a member or employee, provided that the friend or family member has not been involved in the matter. However, there may be circumstances where it would be inappropriate for a judge to hear such a case. For example, where the law firm is very small (such that there is a greater risk of the perception of lack of impartiality) or where the law firm stands to gain or lose significantly by the outcome, such that the judge's decision would result in a monetary or reputational gain or loss to the close family member or friend or former colleague.

Judges in Financial Difficulty

5.C.9 Judges who are in financial difficulty should be particularly vigilant for conflicts of interest, both actual and perceived. Problems arise where judges in these circumstances preside over matters involving their creditors. Serious questions arise if any aspect of the judge's financial difficulties becomes contentious and the possibility of the judge appearing before a judicial colleague as a party or a witness could arise. The actual day-to-day impact of the financial difficulties on the judge's ability to perform the job will obviously vary considerably depending on the circumstances.

Relations personnelles

5.C.8 Il arrive fréquemment que les juges entendent des affaires où l'une des parties est représentée par un cabinet au sein duquel un ami proche ou un membre de leur famille immédiate pratique le droit ou est employé. Il serait inapproprié que des juges entendent des affaires impliquant des membres de leur famille immédiate ou des amis proches. De manière générale, il n'est pas inapproprié qu'un juge entende une affaire où l'une des parties est représentée par un avocat appartenant au même cabinet qu'un ami proche ou un membre de leur famille, pour autant que cette personne n'ait pas participé au dossier. Néanmoins, cette situation pourrait devenir problématique dans certaines circonstances, comme lorsque le cabinet est très petit (accroissant le risque que le juge soit perçu comme manquant d'impartialité) ou lorsque l'enjeu du litige est susceptible de profiter ou de nuire grandement au cabinet, de telle sorte que la décision du juge puisse entraîner un gain ou une perte pécuniaire pour le membre de la famille immédiate, l'ami ou l'ancien collègue ou être favorable ou défavorable à sa réputation.

Les juges en difficulté financière

5.C.9 Les juges qui éprouvent des difficultés financières devraient prendre particulièrement garde aux conflits d'intérêts, tant réels qu'apparents. Des problèmes surviennent lorsque des juges, dans de telles circonstances, président des procès dont l'objet concerne un de leurs créanciers. De graves questions se poseront si un aspect ou un autre des difficultés financières du juge devient litigieux et qu'il est possible que le juge soit forcé de comparaître devant un collègue à titre de partie ou de témoin. Il est difficile de systématiser les conséquences réelles des difficultés financières des juges sur leur capacité d'accomplir quotidiennement leur tâche; ces conséquences varieront selon les circonstances.

Disclosure and Consent

5.C.10 In certain situations, it may be appropriate for a judge to make disclosure of a potential conflict and invite submissions from the parties. However, judges, not the parties or their counsel, bear the burden of ensuring respect for the principle of judicial impartiality. Neither disclosure of a conflict of interest nor the consent of the parties necessarily justifies judges ignoring circumstances which reasonably call into question their ability to hear a case and decide impartially.

Extraordinary Circumstances: Interests of Justice

5.C.11 Extraordinary or urgent circumstances may require judges to weigh the requirements of judicial impartiality against the risk of injustice.

5.C.12 Circumstances which might cause only minor inconvenience to a large court might nonetheless have a significant practical impact on a smaller court. Judges should organize their private affairs to minimize the potential for such conflicts.

Divulgation et consentement

5.C.10 Il peut être approprié pour un juge de divulguer l'existence d'une situation de conflit d'intérêts potentiel et d'inviter les parties à faire des représentations à ce sujet. C'est effectivement aux juges, plutôt qu'aux parties ou à leurs avocats, qu'il incombe de faire respecter le principe d'impartialité. Ni la divulgation du conflit d'intérêts ni le consentement des parties ne permettent forcément aux juges d'ignorer les circonstances dans lesquelles une personne raisonnable pourrait craindre que l'affaire ne puisse être entendue ou jugée de manière impartiale.

Circonstances extraordinaires : intérêt de la justice

5.C.11 Des circonstances extraordinaires ou urgentes peuvent exiger que les juges cherchent un équilibre entre le principe l'impartialité judiciaire et la nécessité d'éviter une injustice.

5.C.12 Les circonstances qui pourraient n'entraîner que de légers inconvénients pour une juridiction de grande taille pourraient avoir de graves répercussions pour un tribunal de moindre envergure. Les juges devraient organiser leurs affaires personnelles de manière à atténuer le risque que surviennent de tels conflits.

Public Education Activities

5.D.1 Judges possess significant knowledge of the law and the legal system. For this reason, they should make reasonable efforts to become engaged in informing and educating the public regarding the rule of law and the role of judges and courts in the administration of justice. Chief Justices have particular responsibilities and opportunities in relation to such public engagement, including public communications on behalf of their courts.

5.D.2 Subject to the limitations imposed by s. 55 of the Judges Act and these Ethical Principles, judicial participation in law reform or other scholarly or educational activities are not discouraged, provided that such involvement does not include participation in campaigns in support of, or the championing of, law reform initiatives.

Éducation du public

5.D.1 Les juges connaissent à fond le droit et le système de justice. Pour cette raison, ils devraient s'efforcer dans la mesure du possible d'informer et de renseigner le public sur la primauté du droit et le rôle des juges et des tribunaux dans l'administration de la justice. À cet égard, les juges en chef ont une responsabilité accrue, y compris pour ce qui concerne les communications qui émanent de leur cour.

5.D.2 Sous réserve des restrictions imposées par l'article 55 de la Loi sur les juges et par les Principes de déontologie, la participation des juges à des travaux de réforme du droit et à d'autres activités de recherche ou d'éducation n'est pas découragée, pour autant qu'elle n'inclue pas la contribution à des campagnes de soutien à des initiatives de réforme du droit ou la promotion de telles initiatives.

Post-Judicial Careers[9]

5.E.1 Judges may choose to move on to another career after leaving the bench. This raises several ethical considerations. One issue relates to the situation of judges prior to departure from judicial office. There may well be circumstances in which planning for one's post-judicial career undermines the perception of impartiality a judge should maintain. Discussions, negotiations or proposals of employment with a law firm, a prospective employer who is a litigant before the judge or a party in a case where the judge has delivered a judgment, may create the impression of a conflict of interest. The same concern exists where a judge is soliciting such opportunities. Whether the overture comes from the judge or the prospective employer, there is a risk that the judge's self-interest and duty would appear to conflict in the eyes of a reasonable and informed person. Accordingly, judges should refrain from engaging in such conversations before their judicial term has come to an end.

9 Canadian Judicial Council Position on Former Judges Returning to Practice (2017)

Carrière post-judiciaire[9]

5.E.1 Il est possible que des juges amorcent une nouvelle carrière après avoir quitté la magistrature. Cette situation soulève plusieurs enjeux éthiques. Un premier type de préoccupation concerne la situation des juges pendant la période qui précède leur départ de la magistrature. Les gestes posés par les juges dans la planification de leur carrière post-judiciaire peuvent, dans certaines circonstances, porter atteinte à l'apparence d'impartialité qu'ils devraient maintenir. Les discussions ou négociations relatives à un emploi avec un cabinet d'avocats ou un autre employeur éventuel qui est partie à une affaire en cours ou à un litige tranché par le juge pourraient susciter une apparence de conflit d'intérêts. La même inquiétude s'attache aux expressions d'intérêt ou propositions qui pourraient être faites par les juges auprès d'employeurs éventuels. Que les invitations discrètes émanent des juges ou de l'employeur éventuel, une personne raisonnable et bien renseignée pourrait y voir un conflit entre l'intérêt personnel du juge et son devoir. Par conséquent, les juges devraient éviter de participer à de telles conversations avant que leurs fonctions judiciaires n'aient pris fin.

9 Conseil canadien de la magistrature, Position sur les anciens juges qui reprennent l'exercice du droit après avoir quitté la magistrature (2017)

5.E.2 The situation of the judge upon leaving judicial office also introduces ethical considerations. Where former judges are professionally active, their conduct can have an impact on the public's perception of the judiciary as a whole. Accordingly, former judges should be attentive to the ways in which their post-judicial actions or activities could undermine public confidence in the judiciary. Former judges are able to return to the legal profession, but there are limits to the types of activities in which they can engage, consistent with the preservation of the principle of impartiality. A former judge could act as an arbitrator, mediator or commissioner. However, former judges should not appear as counsel before a court or tribunal in Canada. Appearance as counsel is broader than physical appearance. While it is appropriate for former judges to review or draft legal arguments and pleadings, to provide advice to counsel and parties, a former judge should not stand, speak or appear as counsel in court or before a tribunal or sign legal documents that are or may be the subject of proceedings before a court or tribunal. This constraint may be subject to exceptions where a judge has left the judiciary after a very short time.

5.E.3 Former judges should exercise appropriate caution in accepting retainers and providing legal advice in high profile or politically contentious matters where it can be anticipated that a client may make use of the judge's former status to advance the client's interests.

5.E.4 Former judges should not disclose the confidential discussions among judges – for example, the deliberations of an appellate court – or discuss anything that gives the appearance of relying on confidential information or judicial confidences.

5.E.2 La situation des juges qui quittent la magistrature soulève également des considérations éthiques. La conduite des juges qui retournent à la vie professionnelle peut affecter la perception qu'a le public de la magistrature dans son ensemble. Les anciens juges devraient être sensibles au fait que leurs activités ou actions pourraient miner la confiance du public à l'endroit de la magistrature. Les juges peuvent réintégrer la profession juridique à l'issue de leur carrière judiciaire, mais certaines restrictions s'appliquent aux types d'activités qui s'ouvrent à eux afin que soit préservé le principe d'impartialité. Les anciens juges peuvent exercer des fonctions d'arbitre, de médiateur ou de commissaire. Néanmoins, ils ne devraient pas comparaître en tant qu'avocat devant une cour ou un tribunal au Canada. La comparution en tant qu'avocat va au-delà de la comparution en personne. Bien qu'il soit approprié pour un ancien juge de rédiger ou de réviser des documents juridiques ou des actes de procédure, ou de donner des conseils aux avocats et aux parties, ils ne devraient pas plaider devant une cour de justice ou un tribunal, ni apposer leur signature sur un document juridique dont l'objet est ou pourrait être lié à une instance. Il est possible que des exceptions à ce principe soient admises à l'égard de juges qui ont quitté la magistrature très peu de temps après leur nomination.

5.E.3 Les anciens juges devraient faire preuve de la prudence requise avant d'accepter un mandat et de donner des conseils juridiques lorsque le client est susceptible d'utiliser l'ancien statut du juge comme levier pour faire avancer ses intérêts dans un dossier controversé sur le terrain politique ou une affaire qui attire beaucoup d'attention sur la scène publique.

5.E.4 D'autre part, les anciens juges ne devraient pas révéler la teneur des discussions confidentielles auxquelles ils ont participé – en tant que membre d'une formation d'une cour d'appel, par exemple – ou révéler quoi que ce soit qui puisse donner à croire qu'ils s'appuient sur des informations confidentielles ou liées au secret judiciaire.

INDEX

B

C

INDEX

A

B

C

I

December 12, 2022

VIA EMAIL

The Honourable David Lametti, P.C., M.P.
Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada
House of Commons
Ottawa, Ontario K1A 0A6

Dear Minister:

RE: Judicial Vacancies and Access to Justice in Canada

Established in 1963, The Advocates' Society is a not-for-profit organization representing approximately 5,500 diverse lawyers and students across the country—unified in their calling as advocates. As the leading national association of litigation counsel in Canada, The Advocates' Society and its members are dedicated to promoting a fair and accessible system of justice, excellence in advocacy, and a strong, independent, and courageous bar. A core part of our mission is to provide policymakers with the views of legal advocates on matters that affect access to justice, the administration of justice, the independence of the bar and the judiciary, the practice of law by advocates, and equity, diversity, inclusion, and reconciliation with Indigenous peoples in the justice system and legal profession.

As courtroom advocates, The Advocates' Society's members have a particular interest in the effective and timely judicial resolution of legal disputes, to ensure matters are resolved justly and to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice. Having a sufficient number of judges available to adjudicate cases in reasonable timeframes is essential to these ends.

Delays in scheduling and hearing matters before the courts have been an issue for many years, with recent delays having reached critical proportions in many jurisdictions. While a number of factors contribute to these delays, they are most certainly caused in part by judicial vacancies. As recently as September 2022, there were 91 vacancies on superior courts across Canada, which represented an approximately 10% vacancy rate. These vacancies severely impair the ability of our courts to function properly and dispense justice to Canadians without undue delay.

The failure to fill judicial vacancies on superior courts and courts of appeal in a timely manner has been a recurring issue of serious concern to The Advocates' Society. We previously raised this issue with the federal government in 2018, specifically in connection with the high rate of judicial vacancies in Alberta.

The Advocates' Society believes that access to justice would be considerably improved by filling the judicial vacancies that currently exist in the superior courts in Canada.[1] We recognize and appreciate the number of judicial appointments your Government has made in recent weeks and months, including appointments to fill new judicial positions authorized in your Government's 2021 and 2022 budgets. That said, The Advocates' Society strongly recommends filling the current vacancies on an urgent basis.

[1] Office of the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs Canada, "Number of Federally Appointed Judges as of December 1, 2022", online: <https://www.fja.gc.ca/appointments-nominations/judges-juges-eng.aspx>.

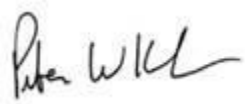
In addition, The Advocates' Society recommends that the Government establish a policy mandating that judicial vacancies be consistently filled within a reasonably brief period of time after they arise. To that end, we recommend that the Government plan in advance for upcoming mandatory retirements to be ready to appoint a replacement when the vacancy takes effect. We further recommend that the Government take immediate steps to be ready to fill upcoming vacancies upon being notified of supernumerary elections or early retirements, rather than waiting for the vacancy to occur. Greater coordination efforts between your office, the Office of the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs, and the Judicial Advisory Committees should aim to factor judges' retirements, resignations, and supernumerary elections into the appointments process at an earlier stage.

We encourage the Government to make a meaningful commitment to making timely judicial appointments as an important aspect of the Government's role in ensuring the healthy functioning of the Canadian justice system.

The Advocates' Society strongly urges the Government to prioritize access to justice and restore public confidence in the justice system by filling the current vacancies in Canada's superior courts, and making judicial appointments on a prompt and timely basis in the future. We thank you for your attention to this important issue and would be pleased to discuss this with you or your officials at your convenience.

Yours sincerely,



Peter W. Kryworuk
President

CC: Marc A. Giroux, Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs
François Giroux, Judicial Affairs Advisor, Office of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada
Vicki White, Chief Executive Officer, The Advocates' Society

The Advocates Society's Task Force on Judicial Vacancies

Daniel Baum*, Langlois Avocats, S.E.N.C.R.L.* (Montreal)
Eric Blay, Pallett Valo LLP (Toronto)
Craig A.B. Ferris, K.C., Lawson Lundell LLP (Vancouver)
Tamara Prince, chair, Cassels Brock & Blackwell LLP (Calgary)
Michael G. Robb, Siskinds LLP (London)

Federation of Ontario Law Associations
Fédération des associations de barreau de l'Ontario

February 13, 2023

"The Voice of the Practising Lawyer in Ontario"

Corporate Mailing Address:
731 9 th Street West,
Owen Sound, ON N4K 3P5

Phone:
(519) 270-4001

Website:
www.fola.ca

Social Media:
@ont_law_assoc

The Right Honourable Justin Trudeau, P.C., M.P.
Prime Minister
Office of the Prime Minister
80 Wellington Street
Ottawa, ON K1A 0A2

Via Email (pm@pm.gc.ca; justin.trudeau@parl.gc.ca)

The Honourable Chrystia Freeland, P.C., M.P.
Minister of Finance
90 Elgin Street
Ottawa, ON K1A 0G5

Via Email (chrystia.freeland@fin.gc.ca; chrystia.freeland@parl.gc.ca)

The Honourable David Lametti, P.C., M.P.
Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada
284 Wellington Street
Ottawa, ON K1A 0H8

Via Email (david.lametti@parl.gc.ca)

Dear Prime Minister Trudeau, Minister Freeland, and Minister Lametti:

Re: 2023 Budget Consultations

We write in respect of your consultation for the 2023 federal budget.

The Federation of Ontario Law Associations (FOLA) represents Ontario's 46 county and district law associations and, through them, their members. Most of these members are lawyers in private practice, in small and medium-size firms across the province. These lawyers are on the front lines of the justice system and see its triumphs and shortcomings every day.

The justice sector is often overlooked in the budget process, and we would like to draw your attention to two priority areas for all Ontarians: funding for legal aid and resources to increase the capacity of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice.

Legal Aid Funding

As a member of the Alliance for Sustainable Legal Aid (ASLA), FOLA echoes the comments made in ASLA's letter to you, dated December 23, 2022 (which, for convenience, you can download at https://bit.ly/3IgcRKT).

ASLA notes that at one time, the federal government contributed half of the funds needed to run Ontario's Legal Aid system. Its share has since diminished over time, and over that period, our legal aid system has fallen into decline and is not meeting the needs of Ontarians – particularly those who find themselves before criminal and family courts. Many of these individuals are from vulnerable communities or find themselves in precarious circumstances that they cannot navigate without the assistance of a legal aid lawyer.

While FOLA adopts as its submission the balance of ASLA's letter on this subject, we underscore the foundational problem of funding. We stress the need for the Government of Canada to commit to working with the provinces to establish a long-term, sustainable funding model for legal aid across Canada that includes a proportional increase and significant legal investment from the federal government in legal aid programs. Without these necessary investments, vulnerable Canadians will simply not have access to legal services in their time of need.

Resources for the Superior Court of Justice

We also want to use this opportunity to encourage the federal budget to account for necessary investments in the Ontario Superior Court of Justice.

First, we want to flag the need to fill judicial vacancies in Ontario. These vacancies are straining the system by increasing pressure on already-scarce judicial resources. This has created challenges for court scheduling, making it difficult for courts to deal with matters in a timely fashion. It also drives up costs to litigants when counsel have to appear only to have their matter not reached because a court sitting is overburdened with an unrealistic list.

Relatedly, it is crucial that federal budgets set aside resources to assist the provincial Attorneys General in their efforts to modernize and invest in courthouse infrastructure and technology. One way that the strain on judicial resources could be alleviated is by better resource allocation across the province, not only among court staff but on the bench. It is unacceptable that the same litigation matter in one region of Ontario might take a year or longer more to get before a judge simply because of the postal code where it originates. Improved technological capabilities and scheduling tools could assist in providing improved equality of access to superior courts so that matters can be disposed of or resolved in a more timely manner.

In considering these comments, we remind you of the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Trial Lawyers Association of British Columbia v. British Columbia (Attorney General), 2014 SCC 59, in which Chief Justice McLachlin concluded that access to justice is fundamental to the rule of law, and rule of law is fostered by the continued existence and availability of the superior courts. On this basis, section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, was found to confer a degree of constitutional protection for access to justice, particularly for civil matters. The courts have also repeatedly concluded (most notably in Hyrniak v. Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7), that timely access to justice is a challenge to the rule of law in Canada. These constitutional requirements cannot be fulfilled without more expedient federal action to fill vacancies and improve efficiency.

Conclusion

We trust that these comments are helpful in your budget deliberations for 2023. We remain available for further discussion or to provide further input or information to your offices. Please feel free to contact me directly at 807-861-3684 or info@douglasjudson.ca, or to email our executive director, Katie Robinette, at katie.robinette@fola.ca.

Thank you for considering our input.

Sincerely,

Douglas W. Judson
Chair

C. Jim Kapches, Senior Policy Advisor, Office of the Prime Minister, Via Email (jim.kapches@pmo-cpm.gc.ca);

County and District Law Association Presidents, Via Email (various);

FOLA Board, Via Email (various);

Lenny Abramowicz, Chair, ASLA, Via Email (lenny.abramowicz@aclco.clcj.ca)

THE CANADIAN BAR ASSOCIATION
L'ASSOCIATION DU BARREAU CANADIEN

May 24, 2023

Via email: Justin.trudeau@parl.gc.ca

The Right Honourable Justin Trudeau, P.C., M.P.
Prime Minister of Canada
Office of the Prime Minister and Privy Council
80 Wellington Street
Ottawa, ON K1A 0A2

Dear Prime Minister,

Re: Canadian Bar Association concerns regarding Judicial Vacancies

We write on behalf of the Canadian Bar Association and its Judicial Issues Subcommittee (CBA Subcommittee) to reiterate our serious concerns about judicial vacancies amongst federally appointed courts in our country. The CBA wholeheartedly agrees with the concerns expressed by Chief Justice Wagner.

THE ISSUE

Some courts in Canada are operating with as much as 10 to 15 percent of their judicial positions vacant. The latest report of the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs shows 88 unfilled vacancies affecting all provinces and one territory. The CBA has frequently stated that the shortage of judges seriously undermined public confidence in our justice system. As early as 2016, Chief Justice McLachlin expressed concerns that civil justice delays drive users with means to private dispute resolution, while adding further strain and indignity to those who have no option but to suffer unnecessarily prolonged proceedings.[1] The CBA president wrote to the Minister of Justice in December 2016, recommending urgent action to deal with judicial vacancies. He described the situation as "an acute access to justice problem" and stated "(w)e remain deeply concerned that current efforts are insufficient to address urgent needs across the country."[2] He offered a variety of measures to address the critical need for judicial vacancies to be filled. Sadly, we have seen little progress in remedying this situation.

1 Remarks to the Council of the Canadian Bar Association at the Canadian Legal Conference (SCC Ottawa, 2016): online

2 Shortage of Judges (CBA Ottawa, 2016): online

The Chief Justice points out that criminal trials are at particular risk due to unfilled judicial positions. The problem goes much further. Family matters cannot be adjudicated with speed. Plaintiffs and defendants wait years to have their day in court in a civil case. Business disputes remain unresolved. Public interest issues, which may affect many Canadians, are not decided in a timely way. According to former Chief Justice Bauman from British Columbia: "The fallout from so many vacancies includes last-minute trial cancellations, consequent wasted time, energy and expense for litigants, long delays for court hearings and increased pressure on the short-staffed benches."[3]

CBA RECOMMENDATIONS

We acknowledge and applaud that more than 600 judges have been appointed to federal office since 2015. However, this has not solved the gap in judicial complements. Not only are judicial positions left vacant, but the Judicial Advisory Committees (JAC) that screen and recommend candidates for office are not operating at full capacity. Six JACs are not filled at present. The JAC for Yukon expired more than a year ago (April 2022), while the JACs for Nova Scotia and P.E.I expired more than seven months ago (September 2022). On April 30, 2023, the JACs for the Greater Toronto Area and for British Columbia — which screen applicants for two of Canada's biggest, busiest and backlogged superior trial courts — became defunct, as did the specialized JAC for the Tax Court of Canada.

There is no shortage of well qualified candidates for judicial office. This deep pool of talent should allow the gap in judicial vacancies to be remedied in a timely fashion.

The CBA remains available to discuss with you or the Minister of Justice some practical solutions, including changes to the appointment process and various pieces of legislation, which would allow the justice system to function more smoothly, and judicial appointments made more quickly, while maintaining the quality of our Bench.

We look forward to a meeting at your earliest convenience to discuss these practical solutions.

Sincerely,

(original letter signed by Julie Terrien for Jacqueline King)

Jacqueline King
Chair, Judicial Issues Subcommittee

cc. The Honourable David Lametti
Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada: mcu@justice.gc.ca

[3] Top judges decry Ottawa's appointment delays; application vetting defunct in B.C., Toronto, N.S. (Law 360 Canada, Toronto): online.

Appendix A – Detailed Work Description

Schedule A: Description of work

The Economic Analysis Division (EAD) of Statistics Canada will examine firm and individual income tax data in the legal industry (Offices of lawyers) to calculate the level and type of professional income reported through professional law corporations (PLCs) for the purpose of the Seventh Quadrennial Commission.

The primary interest for this data request are professional law corporations (PLCs). This project requires manual compilation and merging of data from T1, T2 and T5013 income tax fillings and associated schedules. The work will focus only on corporations and partnerships under NAICS code 541110 - Offices of lawyers. No other NAICS code will be considered. The work will use tax data for four years, 2018-2021.

In its Report and Recommendations, the previous Commission, Quadrennial Commission 2020, identified gaps in data and recommended that preparatory work be done to provide Quadrennial Commission 2024 with "adequate and appropriate additional data from which to work" (Recommendation 8). Recommendations 8(1)-(3) concern data on professional law corporations. Recommendation 8(1) in the Report and Recommendations of the Quadrennial Commission 2020 outlined the data work needed to better understand the "levels of professional income reported through professional corporations." This work aims to produce data that could assist the Quadrennial Commission 2024 in better understanding:

- How much income do self-employed lawyers practising through professional law corporations derive from the practice of law?
- What is the extent to which professional law corporations are used to retain professional income as opposed to pay out or dividend it to the professional?

This request is primarily concerned with PLCs, the income that comes into PLCs, and the income that is paid out of PLCs to the lawyer. In terms of Recommendation 8(1), for PLCs where the lawyer is a partner in a law partnership, the relevant measure of income is the partnership income going into the PLC, not what comes out as salary or dividends (although the latter may inform the second listed point, namely what is the extent to which professional law corporations are used to retain professional income as opposed to pay out or dividend it to the professional. Total personal income of lawyers reported on their T1s is outside the scope of this request.

This project will not analyze or report "on the use of individual pension plans within a lawyer professional corporation" (Recommendation 8(3)) due to data availability issues.

Data sources

The Economic Analysis Division has developed the Canadian Employer-Employee Dynamics Database (CEEDD) and the National Account Longitudinal Microdata File (NALMF). These are sets of linkable microdata files (individual-level and firm-level) maintained by EAD to provide matched data between employees and employers in Canada. The CEEDD provides workers' and owners' information using their T1 tax forms, T2 corporate tax returns and owners Schedule 50 files. It provides job-level information using T4 filings and Record of Employment (ROE) data. Firm-level variables are compiled in the NALMF. These income tax files would still need to be linked to T5013 Statement of Partnership Income and appropriate record linkage approval obtained before the final results tables are released to the Commission. Using CEEDD and Schedule 50, the EAD has developed the Business Owners Module (BOM) which provides an estimate for business ownership share by gender and age.

Some initial data exploration has already been done, but most of the work is expected to be in preparing the data for tabulation of specific variables on lawyers' PLC income.

This Letter of Agreement identifies hereafter the deliverables to be generated, conditional on data feasibility.

Deliverables

EAD will generate tables on:

- Descriptive statistics on professional law corporations (PLCs) (number, mean, median, standard deviation, and 75th percentile values) by age of owner at the end of the tax year according to the following age groups: 35-46 (inclusive), 47-54 (inclusive), 55-69 (inclusive) and 44-56 (inclusive) and by CMA groups and by the low income cut-offs of $80,000 and $90,000.
- Incomes generated by PLCs for 2018-2021 years.
- Conditional on data feasibility, the extent to which income generated by PLCs is retained as opposed to distributed as a salary or as dividends. Only for professional law corporations, not for partnerships.
- Descriptive statistics on legal partnerships (number, size, count of partner types), and the income generated and distributed to partners.
- Conditional on data feasibility, statistics on how much income PLCs that are members of law partnerships derive from the partnership.

All results and table output must conform with confidentiality rules set by Statistics Canada before they are released to the client.

Statistics regarding Judicial Applicants and Appointees

October 29, 2019 – October 28, 2020

On October 20, 2016, the Government of Canada announced reforms to the superior courts judicial appointments process. As part of these changes and in order to increase transparency and rigour, the Government mandated the Office of the Commissioner for Judicial Affairs to collect and publish statistics and demographic information on judicial applicants and appointees. Based on voluntary disclosure by candidates through self-identification in the Questionnaire for judicial appointment, these statistics relate to diversity (see p. 3 of the candidates' Questionnaire) and language proficiency (see p. 6 of the Questionnaire).

	Total	Gender			Diversity						Language Proficiency in both Official Languages
		Male	Female	Other	Indigenous	Visible Minority	Ethnic/Cultural Group or other	Person with Disability	LGBTQ2	Woman	Read court materials	Discuss legal matters	Converse with counsel	Understand oral submissions	Write decisions[2]	Conduct hearings[2]	All 6 abilities[2]
Applications Received	397	190	207	0	12	34	67	9	22	207	161	142	136	147	105	109	104
Candidates Assessed	374	193	181	0	12	51	74	7	23	181	159	125	125	131	84	95	82
Candidates Highly Rec.[1]	76	38	38	0	2	11	10	0	10	38	34	25	26	25	16	18	16
Candidates Recommended[1]	94	48	46	0	2	16	20	1	5	46	43	35	35	37	22	26	21

	Total	Gender			Diversity						Language Proficiency in both Official Languages
		Male	Female	Other	Indigenous	Visible Minority	Ethnic/Cultural Group or other	Person with Disability	LGBTQ2	Woman	Read court materials	Discuss legal matters	Converse with counsel	Understand oral submissions	Write decisions[2]	Conduct hearings[2]	All 6 abilities[2]
Candidates Unable to Rec.[1]	204	107	97	0	8	24	44	6	8	97	82	65	64	69	46	51	45
Judges Appointed	60	21	39	0	2	10	8	0	6	39	22	19	21	21	7	10	7

Please note that in addition to the 60 candidates appointed, 22 other judges were appointed or elevated to other courts during the same period; 12 men and 10 women. For example, this would include judges appointed to courts of appeal from the trial level courts. There were therefore 82 appointments during this period.

---

1. Please note that in their application, candidates may apply to more than one court. A candidate can therefore obtain a rating of "highly recommended" for one court, "recommended" for another and "unable to recommend" for yet another court. For ease of reference, the above statistics reflect the highest rating candidates may have received from the Judicial Advisory Committees.

2. Please note that two questions regarding language proficiency in both official languages were added to the Questionnaire (p. 6) in November 2017. However, some of the candidates were assessed and appointed during this period based on the previous Questionnaire. In fact, of the 60 judges appointed during this period, 30 used the old Questionnaire while 30 used the new one. Of these 60 judges, 15 answered "yes" to all questions related to language proficiency in both official languages in the Questionnaire they completed.

Periods:

- October 28, 2023 – October 28, 2024
- October 29, 2022 – October 27, 2023
- October 29, 2021 – October 28, 2022
- October 28, 2020 – October 29, 2021
- October 28, 2019 – October 29, 2020
- October 28, 2018 – October 28, 2019
- October 28, 2017 – October 27, 2018
- October 21, 2016 – October 27, 2017

Date modified: 2020-10-28

Statistics regarding Judicial Applicants and Appointees

October 29, 2020 – October 28, 2021

On October 20, 2016, the Government of Canada announced reforms to the superior courts judicial appointments process. As part of these changes and in order to increase transparency and rigour, the Government mandated the Office of the Commissioner for Judicial Affairs to collect and publish statistics and demographic information on judicial applicants and appointees. Based on voluntary disclosure by candidates through self-identification in the Questionnaire for judicial appointment, these statistics relate to diversity (see p. 3 of the candidates' Questionnaire) and language proficiency (see p. 6 of the Questionnaire).

	Total	Gender			Diversity						Language Proficiency in both Official Languages
		Male	Female	Other	Indigenous	Visible Minority	Ethnic/Cultural Group or other	Person with Disability	LGBTQ2	Woman	Read court materials	Discuss legal matters	Converse with counsel	Understand oral submissions	Write decisions[2]	Conduct hearings[2]	All 6 abilities[2]
Applications Received	227	113	114	0	6	40	54	6	10	114	95	76	79	81	58	62	58
Candidates Assessed	360	182	178	0	14	36	61	10	23	178	136	118	116	121	86	92	86
Candidates Highly Rec.[1]	85	44	41	0	4	10	8	3	7	41	34	30	28	32	21	21	21
Candidates Recommended[1]	93	42	51	0	4	10	12	0	4	51	35	28	31	30	24	24	24

	Total	Gender			Diversity						Language Proficiency in both Official Languages
		Male	Female	Other	Indigenous	Visible Minority	Ethnic/Cultural Group or other	Person with Disability	LGBTQ2	Woman	Read court materials	Discuss legal matters	Converse with counsel	Understand oral submissions	Write decisions[2]	Conduct hearings[2]	All 6 abilities[2]
Candidates Unable to Rec.[1]	181	95	86	0	6	16	41	7	12	86	67	60	57	59	41	47	41
Judges Appointed	71	31	40	0	4	7	7	0	9	40	28	22	21	24	16	16	16

Please note that in addition to the 71 candidates appointed, 13 other judges were appointed or elevated to other courts during the same period; 8 men and 5 women. For example, this would include judges appointed to courts of appeal from the trial level courts. There were therefore 84 appointments during this period.

---

1. Please note that in their application, candidates may apply to more than one court. A candidate can therefore obtain a rating of "highly recommended" for one court, "recommended" for another and "unable to recommend" for yet another court. For ease of reference, the above statistics reflect the highest rating candidates may have received from the Judicial Advisory Committees.

2. Please note that two questions regarding language proficiency in both official languages were added to the Questionnaire (p. 6) in November 2017. However, some of the candidates were assessed and appointed during this period based on the previous Questionnaire. In fact, of the 71 judges appointed during this period, 14 used the old Questionnaire while 57 used the new one. Of these 71 judges, 20 answered "yes" to all questions related to language proficiency in both official languages in the Questionnaire they completed.

Periods:

- October 28, 2023 – October 28, 2024
- October 29, 2022 – October 27, 2023
- October 29, 2021 – October 28, 2022
- October 28, 2020 – October 29, 2021
- October 28, 2019 – October 29, 2020
- October 28, 2018 – October 28, 2019
- October 28, 2017 – October 27, 2018
- October 21, 2016 – October 27, 2017

Date modified: 2021-10-29

Statistics regarding Judicial Applicants and Appointees

October 29, 2021 – October 28, 2022

On October 20, 2016, the Government of Canada announced reforms to the superior courts judicial appointments process. As part of these changes and in order to increase transparency and rigour, the Government mandated the Office of the Commissioner for Judicial Affairs to collect and publish statistics and demographic information on judicial applicants and appointees. Based on voluntary disclosure by candidates through self-identification in the Questionnaire for judicial appointment, these statistics relate to diversity (see p. 3 of the candidates' Questionnaire) and language proficiency (see p. 6 of the Questionnaire).

	Total	Gender			Diversity						Language Proficiency in both Official Languages
		Male	Female	Other	Indigenous individual	Racialized individual	Ethnic/Cultural Group or other	Individual with disability	2SLGBTQI+ individual	Woman	Read court materials	Discuss legal matters	Converse with counsel	Understand oral submissions	Write decisions	Conduct hearings	All 6 abilities
Applications Received	318	152	166	0	10	48	72	5	10	166	140	108	106	113	87	93	86
Candidates Assessed	227	100	127	0	7	44	58	5	11	127	115	96	95	101	75	82	75
Candidates Highly Rec.[1]	45	23	22	0	1	6	10	2	2	22	25	20	20	22	17	18	17
Candidates Recommended[1]	53	17	36	0	2	9	15	1	1	36	32	29	28	29	24	26	24

	Total	Gender			Diversity						Language Proficiency in both Official Languages
		Male	Female	Other	Indigenous individual	Racialized individual	Ethnic/Cultural Group or other	Individual with disability	2SLGBTQI+ individual	Woman	Read court materials	Discuss legal matters	Converse with counsel	Understand oral submissions	Write decisions	Conduct hearings	All 6 abilities
Candidates Unable to Rec.[1]	129	60	69	0	4	29	33	2	8	69	58	47	47	50	34	38	34
Judges Appointed	58	30	28	0	2	13	6	1	2	28	19	18	20	18	15	15	15

Please note that in addition to the 58 candidates appointed, 13 other judges were appointed or elevated to other courts during the same period; 4 men and 9 women. For example, this would include judges appointed to courts of appeal from the trial level courts. There were therefore 71 appointments during this period.

---

1. Please note that in their application, candidates may apply to more than one court. A candidate can therefore obtain a rating of "highly recommended" for one court, "recommended" for another and "unable to recommend" for yet another court. For ease of reference, the above statistics reflect the highest rating candidates may have received from the Judicial Advisory Committees.

Periods:

- October 28, 2023 – October 28, 2024
- October 29, 2022 – October 27, 2023
- October 29, 2021 – October 28, 2022
- October 28, 2020 – October 29, 2021
- October 28, 2019 – October 29, 2020
- October 28, 2018 – October 28, 2019
- October 28, 2017 – October 27, 2018
- October 21, 2016 – October 27, 2017

Date modified: 2022-10-29

Demographic statistics on diversity in the judiciary

Judicial Applicants and Appointees

On October 20, 2016, the Government of Canada announced reforms to the superior courts judicial appointments process. As part of these changes and in order to increase transparency and rigour, the Government mandated the Office of the Commissioner for Judicial Affairs to collect and publish statistics and demographic information on judicial applicants and appointees. Based on voluntary disclosure by candidates through self-identification in the Questionnaire for judicial appointment, these statistics relate to diversity (see p. 3 of the candidates' Questionnaire) and language proficiency (see p. 6 of the Questionnaire).

October 29, 2022 – October 27, 2023

	Total	Gender			Diversity						Language Proficiency in both Official Languages
		Male	Female	Other	Indigenous individual	Racialized individual	Ethnic/Cultural Group or other	Individual with disability	2SLGBTQI+ individual	Woman	Read court materials	Discuss legal matters	Converse with counsel	Understand oral submissions	Write decisions	Conduct hearings	All 6 abilities
Applications Received	410	207	203	0	15	53	84	8	27	203	187	156	150	161	126	131	125
Candidates Assessed	315	160	155	0	9	37	64	6	12	155	149	120	123	126	99	104	98
Candidates Highly Rec.[1]	73	41	32	0	3	8	12	1	3	32	31	23	23	24	20	20	20
Candidates Recommended[1]	68	29	39	0	3	10	12	2	2	39	30	23	24	23	19	19	18

	Total	Gender			Diversity						Language Proficiency in both Official Languages
		Male	Female	Other	Indigenous individual	Racialized individual	Ethnic/Cultural Group or other	Individual with disability	2SLGBTQI+ individual	Woman	Read court materials	Discuss legal matters	Converse with counsel	Understand oral submissions	Write decisions	Conduct hearings	All 6 abilities
Candidates Unable to Rec.[1]	174	90	84	0	3	19	40	3	7	84	88	74	76	79	60	65	60
Newly Appointed Judges	68	31	37	0	1	9	17	0	4	37	32	28	29	30	27	28	27

Please note that in addition to the 68 newly appointed judges, 19 other judges were appointed or elevated to other courts during the same period; 11 men and 8 women. For example, this would include judges appointed to courts of appeal from the trial level courts. There were therefore 87 appointments during this period.

---

1. Please note that in their application, candidates may apply to more than one court. A candidate can therefore obtain a rating of "highly recommended" for one court, "recommended" for another and "unable to recommend" for yet another court. For ease of reference, the above statistics reflect the highest rating candidates may have received from the Judicial Advisory Committees.

Periods:

- October 28, 2023 – October 28, 2024
- October 29, 2022 – October 27, 2023
- October 29, 2021 – October 28, 2022
- October 28, 2020 – October 29, 2021
- October 28, 2019 – October 29, 2020
- October 28, 2018 – October 28, 2019
- October 28, 2017 – October 27, 2018
- October 21, 2016 – October 27, 2017

Judges currently on the bench

The Government of Canada has committed to tracking data on the diversity of judicial appointees. The Office of the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs therefore publishes annual demographic statistics, not only regarding newly appointed judicial candidates and judges, but also, below, regarding all federally appointed judges. These statistics include judges appointed after 2016, who completed a questionnaire following reforms brought to the appointment process which included specific questions relating to diversity, and also those appointed before 2016, who completed a questionnaire which included a more general question regarding diversity. Following a detailed analysis carried out by the Office of the Commissioner of the responses from each of those judges appointed before 2016, the information has been classified according to the categories established in the current questionnaire.

As of February 1, 2024

	Number of Judges	Indigenous individual	Racialized individual	Ethnic/Cultural Group or other	Individual with Disability	2SLGBTQI+ individual	Woman
Judges appointed before 2016	647	5	16	44	2	1	271
Judges appointed after 2016	533	17	60	80	4	31	281
TOTAL:	1180	22	76	124	6	32	552

Date modified: 2024-03-06

Demographic statistics on diversity in the judiciary

Judicial Applicants and Appointees

On October 20, 2016, the Government of Canada announced reforms to the superior courts judicial appointments process. As part of these changes and in order to increase transparency and rigour, the Government mandated the Office of the Commissioner for Judicial Affairs to collect and publish statistics and demographic information on judicial applicants and appointees. Based on voluntary disclosure by candidates through self-identification in the Questionnaire for judicial appointment, these statistics relate to diversity (see p. 3 of the candidates' Questionnaire) and language proficiency (see p. 6 of the Questionnaire).

October 28, 2023 – October 28, 2024

	Total	Gender			Diversity						Language Proficiency in both Official Languages
		Male	Female	Other	Indigenous individual	Racialized individual	Ethnic/Cultural Group or other	Individual with disability	2SLGBTQI+ individual	Woman	Read court materials	Discuss legal matters	Converse with counsel	Understand oral submissions	Write decisions	Conduct hearings	All 6 abilities
Applications Received	379	169	210	0	15	74	85	7	18	210	150	126	122	132	99	110	98
Candidates Assessed	540	260	280	0	18	88	118	11	35	280	228	192	181	200	153	165	152
Candidates Highly Rec.[1]	95	43	52	0	1	9	18	1	7	52	40	34	30	34	27	29	27
Candidates Recommended[1]	106	45	61	0	4	12	11	0	3	61	49	42	42	46	39	40	39
Candidates Unable to Rec.[1]	339	172	167	0	13	67	89	10	25	167	139	116	109	120	87	96	86

	Total	Gender			Diversity						Language Proficiency in both Official Languages
		Male	Female	Other	Indigenous individual	Racialized individual	Ethnic/Cultural Group or other	Individual with disability	2SLGBTQI+ individual	Woman	Read court materials	Discuss legal matters	Converse with counsel	Understand oral submissions	Write decisions	Conduct hearings	All 6 abilities
Newly Appointed Judges	88	38	50	0	4	11	12	2	4	50	35	26	24	27	20	20	19

Please note that in addition to the 88 newly appointed judges, 36 other judges were appointed or elevated to other courts during the same period; 16 men and 20 women. For example, this would include judges appointed to courts of appeal from the trial level courts. There were therefore 124 appointments during this period.

---

1. Please note that in their application, candidates may apply to more than one court. A candidate can therefore obtain a rating of "highly recommended" for one court, "recommended" for another and "unable to recommend" for yet another court. For ease of reference, the above statistics reflect the highest rating candidates may have received from the Judicial Advisory Committees.

Periods:

- October 28, 2023 – October 28, 2024
- October 29, 2022 – October 27, 2023
- October 29, 2021 – October 28, 2022
- October 28, 2020 – October 29, 2021
- October 28, 2019 – October 29, 2020
- October 28, 2018 – October 28, 2019
- October 28, 2017 – October 27, 2018
- October 21, 2016 – October 27, 2017

Judges currently on the bench

The Government of Canada has committed to tracking data on the diversity of judicial appointees. The Office of the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs therefore publishes annual demographic statistics, not only regarding newly appointed judicial candidates and judges, but also, below, regarding all federally appointed judges. These statistics include judges appointed after 2016, who completed a questionnaire following reforms brought to the appointment process which included specific questions relating to diversity, and also those appointed before 2016, who completed a questionnaire which included a more general question regarding diversity. Following a detailed analysis carried out by the Office of the Commissioner of the responses from each of those judges appointed before 2016, the information has been classified according to the categories established in the current questionnaire.

As of February 1, 2024

	Number of Judges	Indigenous individual	Racialized individual	Ethnic/Cultural Group or other	Individual with Disability	2SLGBTQI+ individual	Woman
Judges appointed before 2016	647	5	16	44	2	1	271
Judges appointed after 2016	533	17	60	80	4	31	281
TOTAL:	1180	22	76	124	6	32	552

Date modified: 2024-10-25